In July, 1862, Congress passed an act setting apart for each State a portion of the public lands, conditioned upon the establishment and maintenance of at least one college "where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life."

The State formally accepted the grant, amounting to 360,000 acres of land, by an act passed April 18, 1863, and in the same year incorporated the "Massachusetts Agricultural College."

Gov. Andrew and others had favored an alliance of the new institution with some one already founded ; but this met with the disapproval of the Board of Agriculture, of which Marshall P. Wilder was president, upon the ground that such connection was not within the intention of Congress. The bill as passed, however, gave one-third of the revenue of the endowment fund to the "Massachusetts Institute of Technology," located at Boston, thus placing the department of "mechanic arts" in charge of that corporation, and making the agricultural college "the only college in the United States designed exclusively for the education of farmers."†

Among the propositions put forth to secure the location of the institution, that of the town of Amherst was deemed most advantageous, and on the 25th of May, 1864, the trustees by a unanimous vote located the college in Amherst, the town having pledged itself to pay the sum of $75,000 for the erection of buildings, and to furnish for a reasonable price a satisfactory tract of land for the uses of the institution. In the October following the present estate of the college was purchased from six different parties. The cost of the land and buildings at that time amounted to about $43,000, the total area being 383½ acres.‡

The buildings were duly provided, and made ready for the reception of students Oct. 2, 1867, at which time the first class, numbering 33, was admitted.

The first president, Hon. Henry F. French, remained only a sufficient time to arrange the several departments and provide a course of study, when he resigned. The mantle of office fell upon the shoulders of Hon. P. A. Chadbourne, then a professor in Williams College, who with characteristic energy and ability completed the arrangements preliminary to the admission of students, as above indicated. After a few months, because of poor health, he too resigned, and moved to the West.

At this critical period Col. W. S. Clark, then a professor in Amherst College, was chosen president, and to the time of this writing has continued to manage its affairs with signal ability. To him, chiefly, the institution owes its wide renown as an agricultural college, for not only Massachusetts, but the world, has profited, directly and indirectly, by the effective work done in its fields, laboratories, and halls of study.§

At this college thorough training and instruction are given in all that pertains to the cultivation of the soil, for the production of field and garden crops, fruits and flowers. Here the student is taught how to treat the various soils, what food to supply for any given crop, how to care for and improve livestock, and, in fact, such training is given as will enable him to increase, economically, the yield of any given acreage now unscientifically tilled. The following studies are embraced in the curriculum, and suggest a thorough, well-rounded, and practical education as the result of the four years' course: botany, horticulture, agriculture, chemistry, geology, veterinary science, zoology, mathematics, physics, engineering, English, French, German, mental and moral science, and military science. All who complete the regular course receive the degree of Bachelor of Science, and, in addition, by an arrangement of the trustees of Boston university, "all students who desire it may become members of the university, and receive its diploma in addition to that of the college."

Of the college structures the most important are the two large dormitories of brick, in which are arranged the geological, ornithological, and other collections ; a large wooden building near by, containing the audience- and lecture-rooms, laboratories, and apparatus ; the "Botanic Museum," containing the office of the president, the "Knowlton Herbarium," and valuable diagrams illustrative of structural and scientific botany. Near the museum is the "Durfee Plant-House," erected by the liberality of Dr. Nathan Durfee, of Fall River, and containing a rare and extensive collection of plants. To the east, upon the hill-side, are the college vineyard and fruit-orchard and the "Massachusetts Garden ;" beyond which, on the crest of the hill,—a northward continuation of Mount Pleasant,—is the president's house, overlooking the entire farm.

The college has now, January, 1879, 162 students.

July 21, 1871, in the first regatta of the Rowing Association of American Colleges, at Ingleside, Mass., Amherst Agricultural beat Harvard and Brown, in university six-oared race with shells, three miles straightaway.

Board of Trustees.||—Members Ex-Officio: President of College, Secretary of Board of Education, Secretary of Board of Agriculture. Members by Election: Marshall P. Wilder, † President W. S. Clark's report, January, 1876.

‡ The Sapporo Agricultural College, in Japan, was organized by President Clark, in 1876-77, at the instance of that government, and the first professors selected therefor were graduates of the Amherst institution.

|| Officers as per report January, 1878.

* Hon. Horace Mann.

† Report of President Clark, 1876.

Boston; Charles G. Davis, Plymouth; Henry Colt, Pittsfield; Phineas Steadman, Chicopee; Allen W. Dodge, Hamilton; George Marston, New Bedford; William B. Washburn, Greenfield; Henry L. Whiting, Cambridge; Henry F. Hills, Amherst; Daniel Needham, Groton; William Knowlton, Upton; John Cummings, Woburn; Richard Goodman, Lenox. Executive Committee: William S. Clark, Wm. B. Washburn, William Knowlton, Henry Colt, Phineas Steadman; Secretary, Charles L. Flint, of Boston; Auditor, Henry Colt, of Pittsfield; Treasurer, George Montague, of Amherst. Board of Overseers, the State Board of Agriculture; Examining Committee of Overseers, O. B. Hadwen, of Worcester; John B. Moore, of Concord; Paul A. Chadbourne, of Williamstown; Charles S. Sargent, of Brookline; J. N. Bagg, of West Springfield. Members of Faculty: William S. Clark, Ph.D., LL.D., President, and Professor of Botany and Horticulture; Levi Stockbridge, Professor of Agriculture; Henry H. Goodell, M.A., Professor of Modern Languages; Charles A. Goessman, Ph.D., Professor of Chemistry; Henry W. Parker, M.A., Professor of Mental, Moral, and Social Science; William B. Graves, M.A., Professor of Physics and Civil Engineering; First Lieut. C. A. L. Totten, 4th Artillery, U. S. A., Professor of Military Science and Tactics; A. S. Packard, Jr., M.D. (State Entomologist), Lecturer on Useful and Injurious Insects; M. Fayette Dickinson, Jr., Lecturer on Rural Law; Charles P. Lyman, V.S., Edin., Lecturer on Veterinary Science and Practice; George Montague, Instructor in Book-keeping. Samuel T. Maynard, B.S., Gardener and Assistant Professor of Horticulture. A. A. Southwick, B.S., Farm Superintendent.

CHURCHES.

THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, AMHERST,* was organized Nov. 7, 1739, after more than four years had elapsed since the first vote of the precinct concerning a meeting-house. Oct. 8, 1735, it was "Voted, to hire a Minister half a yeare; that Jno. Ingram, Jr., Jno. Coles, Nathl Smith be Com^{te} to hire a Minister. Voated, to Build a Meating-House. Voted, sd house forty-five foots in Length and thirty-five in Breadth. Voted, sd meating-house to be covered with quarter boards of spruce. Voted, also, to Cover y^e rooffe with spruce shingles without sap and twenty-one Inches in Lenth. Voated, to set sd house up the Hill, East of Jno. Nash's House, in y^e most Convenient place."

Samuel Boltwood, Ebenezer Dickinson, John Cole, Pelatiah Smith, and John Ingram were made a committee "to order y^e building y^e Meating-House." November 25th, the house was ordered "to be set in the most convenient place neare the Hartling Stake, so called." December 25th, it was voted to set it on "y^e East End of Noah Smith's Lot." March 10, 1735, voted to "Rais fifteen pounds of money to be paid towards y^e menister's Rate. Voted, y^t the Remainder of said Rate be paid out of y^e non-resdent money, and y^e Remainder of sd money to be Improved for y^e Building of y^e Meating-House." Sept. 13, 1736, it was voted to hire a minister six months. March 17, 1737, it was voted "to cover y^e Meeting-House." March 22d, "to frame, raise, and cover y^e Meeting-House this year ensuing," and Samuel Hawley, Ebenezer Kellogg, Ebenezer Dickinson, Jonathan Atharton, and Aaron Smith were made a committee to "se to y^e Building y^e Meeting-House."

April 13, 1737, the precinct voted to give Mr. David Parsons, Jr., a call "to settle in y^e Ministry," and offer him "two lots of land that was granted by the town of Hadley for the settlement of the Gospel in this Precinct," £80 in money, with yearly increase up to £100, and also "towards Building a Dwelling-House, to set him up a frame forty foots in length, in Breth twenty-one foots, and two stories high, and cover said House and Build y^e Chimney and Cellor."

* The principal facts for this sketch were furnished by Mr. Oliver D. Hunt, of Amherst.

November 22d, it was voted to hire a minister for five months, at 40s. a Sabbath. Nov. 14, 1738, the site for the meeting-house was again changed, and it was put in the place first chosen,—a little north and east of the present "Woods Cabinet." December 15th, it was "Voted to raise nineteen pounds for Thomas Temple for framing y^e Meeting-house," and to "Ebenezer Kellogg for rum and sugar, three pounds seventeen shillings," and to "raise one hundred pounds for Mr. David Parsons for preaching the year past." Mr. Parsons was master of the situation, but was finally induced to accept the lots, £175 toward a house, and a salary of £100, with gradual annual increase until it reached £160. In 1739 he accepted in the following laconic style: "Sept. 28. Comply'd with the request of the inhabitants of the third precinct in Hadley. Per me, David Parsons, Jun^r." March 18, 1740, it was voted, "that the committee to build y^e meeting-house go on with y^e work," and, March 16, 1741, "that sd committee build a pue for y^e minister's wife, and said pue where y^e Rev. Mr. David Parsons shall chuse." The building was occupied before 1742, and a person chosen to sweep the meeting-house and give a signal for meetings in 1743. Aug. 25, 1749, Jonathan Smith, Solomon Boltwood, John Nash, Ebenezer Dickinson, and Ebenezer Kellogg were appointed to "seat" the meeting-house, and instructed to place "the males together and the females together." Jan. 23, 1753, £10 were voted to finish the meeting-house.

The church was organized Nov. 7, 1739, with the following members: David Parsons, Pastor; Nathaniel Kellogg, John Ingram, Samuel Hawley, Eleazar Mattoon, John Nash, Pelatiah Smith, Ebenezer Dickinson, John Cows, Aaron Smith, Ebenezer Kellogg, Jonathan Smith, Nathaniel Smith, Joseph Clary, Jonathan Cows, Richard Chauncey. Jan. 1, 1840, David Smith (son of Luke) and 27 females were admitted. Until the admission of the females, among whom were the wives of nearly all of the above, the church cannot have been considered as fully organized. Mr. Parsons continued in the pastorate until his death, Jan. 1, 1781, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

Rev. David Parsons,† D.D., son of the first pastor, was settled Oct. 2, 1782. A division in the church was occasioned by his settlement, which, in spite of the many meetings for the healing thereof, resulted in the organization of the Second Church. The new minister's salary was made equivalent to $333.34 and firewood; the salary was increased in 1807 to $425. Dr. Parsons was dismissed at his own request, Sept. 1, 1819, when, by vote of council, he was allowed $1300. He was a graduate of Harvard; died at Wethersfield, Conn., May 18, 1823, aged seventy-four. During his pastorate, in December, 1787, it was voted to build a new meeting-house, near the old

† "To the Inhabitants of Amherst, in Town-meeting assembled on the 12th Inst., August, 1782:

"GENTLEMEN,—Inasmuch as you have passed sundry votes respecting my encouragement and support in case I should settle with you in the work of the Gospel Ministry; and as it is always expedient that the meaning of parties in Transactions of this nature should be well explained and clearly understood, to prevent any dispute or misunderstanding between them afterward, I beg leave to express to you my sense of the meaning of your proposals as I understand them, which is as follows (viz.): The several sums which you offer me in settlement and salary I understand to be in silver money, Spanish Milled Dollars at six shillings, or other Silver or Gold equivalent. And as to the Payment of my settlement, I understand that you will procure me Real Estate to the value, in case any such can be procured to my acceptance; otherwise, that you will pay me the money according to your first vote. And as to the article of wood, I understand that the most that I am ever to expect is forty cords of fire-wood of good quality in a year, unless the town shall voluntarily make addition on being satisfied that forty cords is not sufficient for my reasonable use. Give me leave further to add that I must understand it to be your intent that no advantage shall ever be taken of any paper Currency Depreciated, or of any act of Government that may be passed, to avoid the fair, honest, and equitable intent of the Contract. If this be your meaning, as I have expressed my sense of it, and if nothing more than I know of shall appear to prevent, you may expect an answer in the affirmative to the Church's Call.

"Your affectionate friend and servant,

"DAVID PARSONS."

one, and that it stand on hewn stone and face the south. The parish also voted that at the raising "the spectators be furnished with cake, cheese, and liquor at parish expense, and the raisers with a good and decent entertainment."

The first bell was purchased for £100 in 1792, and weighed 982 pounds. In 1794 a master was hired to teach a singing-school for four months at a salary of £12.

In November, after the retirement of Dr. Parsons, an effort was made to unite the two churches, but without avail.

Rev. Daniel Clark, the third pastor, was installed Jan. 26, 1820; dismissed Aug. 5, 1824. Rev. Royal Washburn was settled Jan. 5, 1826; died Jan. 1, 1833. During his pastorate, in 1828, the third meeting-house—now the property of the college, and known as "College Hall"—was erected.

The following pastors succeeded, and served for the terms indicated respectively: Matthew T. Adams, Dec. 26, 1833, Dec. 10, 1834; Josiah Bent, April 19, 1837; died Nov. 19, 1839; Aaron M. Colton, June 10, 1840, June 4, 1853; Edmund S. Dwight, August, 1853, Aug. 28, 1860; Henry L. Hubbel, April 24, 1861, April 4, 1865; Jonathan L. Jenkins, Feb. 17, 1867, installed Sept. 24, 1868, February, 1877; Howard Kingsbury, Dec. 6, 1877; died Sept. 28, 1878. The church has now, February, 1879, no settled pastor. During the pastorate of Mr. Dwight, an organ was first obtained, and the stringed instruments were supplanted. The fourth and last church edifice was commenced during the pastorate of Mr. Jenkins, and largely through his efforts. It is built of Munson gneiss, and cost complete, including land and parsonage, $67,000. The pulpit was made from logs of cedar and olive,—from Mount Lebanon,—secured and shipped for the purpose by Rev. Daniel Bliss, D.D., of Beirut. The cedar log was 7 by 2½ feet, and bore marks of great age.

In the nearly one hundred and forty years of its existence, the church has grown from 16, or rather from 43, members to the present number, 433, and "has one offspring in East, one in South, and one in North Amherst, and still contains the names Kellogg, Hawley, Nash, Smith, Dickinson, and Cowles, or all but 5 of the names of the original 16 males."

THE SECOND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

was formed in November, 1782, and composed of 22 members, who had withdrawn from the First Church because of the settlement of the second Dr. Parsons by that body. Capt. Ebenezer Mattoon was of this number.

Simultaneously with the ordination of Dr. Parsons, an advisory council representing "five churches west of the river" was held at Amherst, October 1st, 2d, and 3d, but did not succeed in reconciling the factions. Another council convened October 28th and 29th, and again November 11th and 12th, which finally determined that the offer of the mother-church was "unequal and unjust," and advised the seceders to "proceed to organize and to settle a minister," unless within four weeks the former should accede to a mutual council. A division and much ill feeling followed.* The succeeding year, 1783, the church was incorporated by the Legislature.

The first pastor was Rev. Ichabod Draper, who was installed in the fall of 1785,† and dismissed on account of ill health Oct. 12, 1809. Mr. Draper was from Dedham, and a graduate of Harvard in 1783. The succeeding pastors have been the following: Nathan Perkins, Jr., a native of Hartford, and graduate of Yale, 1795, ordained and installed Oct. 10, 1810, died March 28, 1842; Pomeroy Belden, born at Whately, 1811, graduated at Amherst, 1833, installed Sept. 14, 1842, died in the pastorate, March 2, 1849; Charles L. Woodworth, a graduate of Amherst, 1845, ordained and installed Nov. 7, 1849, dismissed Sept. 2, 1863; J. Clizbee, ordained and installed April 5, 1865, dismissed March 25, 1867; F. P. Chapin, installed Jan. 21, 1868, dismissed Nov. 27, 1871; C. A. Conant, acting pastor, from July 1, 1872, until July, 1876. Rev. C. W. Hawley,‡ the present pastor, was installed Nov. 15, 1876.

The first meeting-house stood in the centre of old East Street, a short distance southeast of the present church, south of the "east and west highway," and was erected in or about the year 1790. The pews were so many pens, like unto most pews of that day, and the children could look only heavenward for light and freedom. Many, of middle age, can recall the raps and significant finger-pointings of the tything-men, in reproof of wayward and uneasy youth. The present church was erected in 1839, and is situated on the north side of Main Street.

The old conch, whose far-reaching bray, more eloquent than the later stage-horn, once summoned young and old to "meeting," has lost its occupation, though not its latent power, and is sacredly preserved in the family of Mr. Clapp.

THE NORTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF AMHERST was organized by an ecclesiastical council, convened for that purpose, Nov. 15, 1826. The original members numbered 47, and three of them are still living. The original name of this body was "The Congregational Union Church in Amherst." The first officers, chosen Dec. 20, 1826, were: Deacons, Daniel Russell, Jr., and Ransom Dickinson; Clerk, Daniel Dickinson; Treasurer, Ransom Dickinson; Church Committee, the deacons and Jonathan Cowles.

Rev. William W. Hunt was called Feb. 7, 1827; ordained as first pastor March 7th following. Mr. Hunt was a native of Belchertown, a graduate of Williams College, and labored faithfully and successfully in the pastorate until his death, Oct. 5, 1837. During his ministry 159 persons united with the church. George Cook, a native of Keene, N. H., and graduate of Dartmouth College, was ordained pastor Jan. 15, 1839, dismissed May 20, 1852, and received 105 persons to membership.

George E. Fisher, of Harvard, graduate of Amherst College, was installed Sept. 16, 1852, dismissed Jan. 6, 1858, and welcomed 131 to membership. A great revival occurred during his pastorate. John W. Underhill, a native of Ipswich, Mass., and a graduate of Amherst College, was ordained and installed Oct. 5, 1859; died Oct. 17, 1862, having received 22 to membership. Daniel H. Rogan, a native of Kingsport, Tenn., and graduate of Amherst College, was installed Oct. 5, 1865; dismissed Nov. 21, 1866. William D. Herrick, a native of Methuen, Mass., and graduate of Amherst College, was installed Sept. 19, 1867; dismissed May 25, 1874. He received 119 to membership. The seventh pastor was George F. Humphreys, whose pastorate was terminated within a year after his ordination, owing to trouble in the church. Since this time the church has been without a settled pastor. The pulpit was, however, supplied for two years and a half by Rev. Dwight W. Marsh, D.D. The present—1879—acting pastor is Rev. George Henry Johnson, a native of Worcester, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard College.

The present and only church edifice of this society was dedicated Nov. 15, 1826, and will seat about 400. It was repaired in 1860. The present number of members is 265. The officers for the year are as follows: Acting Pastor, Rev. George Henry Johnson; Deacons, Edmund Hobart, Samuel E. Harrington, Asa Adams, George L. Cooley; Prudential Committee, the pastor and deacons, Lowell W. Roberts, Ebenezer P. Spear; Assistant Clerk, S. P. Ainsworth; Superintendent of Sunday-school, Deacon George L. Cooley; number of Sunday-school scholars, 210; contributions for benevolent purposes, $601.56.

One of the strange facts—as it seems in this day—connected

* "Warm contentions and unfriendly dispositions, which were lasting, grew out of this division. My grandfather presided in this council, and my father was a delegate, and I heard much about this strife when a boy."—Judd's Hist. of Hadley, page 416 and note.

† According to Judd, he was ordained Jan. 23, 1786.

‡ Some facts for this sketch were furnished by the pastor.

§ Contributed by the Rev. George Henry Johnson.

with the earlier history of the church, was that previous to 1840 every pew-deed had the proviso that if the purchaser "shall let the pew or any part thereof to any negro or mulatto, or in any way admit any negro or mulatto to the possession or occupancy of the same, then the said pew or pews, or such share thereof so let or occupied, shall in every such case be forfeited."

It is said that a goodly amount of liquor was provided for the workmen and visitors at the "raising" of the church in 1826; but the present belief of the church is embodied in the following article: "This church will not sanction the manufacture, sale, or use as a beverage, of intoxicating drinks by any of its members."

THE SOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF AMHERST*

was first organized in 1824, but reorganized in 1858. Its house of worship was dedicated in 1825, remodeled in 1843. Its settled pastors have been as follows: Revs. H. B. Chapin, 1825-29; Aaron Gates, 1832-37; Gideon Dana, 1838-40; Dana Goodsell, 1841-46; James L. Merrick, 1849-64; Walter Barton, 1864-66; George Lyman, 1869-73. Rev. F. B. Pullan supplied the pulpit in 1875. The present acting pastor, Rev. Charles S. Walker, began his labors in April, 1876.

The original number of members was 48; present number, 157. The present officers are: Deacons, R. B. Bridgman and H. C. Dickinson; Standing Committee, C. F. Hayward, A. J. Robinson, and Thomas Read; Superintendent of Sunday-school, F. L. Pomeroy; Parish Committee, Thomas Read, Charles A. Puffer, and Joseph Dana.

ZION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH† (COLORED).

This society, although existing in a crude form as early as the fall of 1862, was not fully organized as a religious body until the settlement of their present minister in 1876.

The first meetings of the colored people of Amherst for religious instruction were held in the fall of 1862, and were attended numerously by their friends of the white race. These meetings had the character of a Sabbath-school, in which the colored members were scholars and some of the whites teachers. These assemblies were first held in the old academy building, and after that was demolished, in 1868, were held in a brick school-house then standing on Pleasant Street. Still later, having passed the winter in the school-house, the society removed to the Methodist chapel, then standing on Northampton Street. The present chapel on Parsons Street was erected in —. This society, now composed of about ten members, has been from the first largely assisted by those attached to the college, and especially by the wives and daughters of the professors. Students of theology from the college sometimes conduct the services. Rev. S. L. Hobbs, a retired missionary, is the pastor of the society.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH IN AMHERST‡ was organized as a branch of the New Salem and Prescott Church, Nov. 8, 1827, removed its connection from the church in New Salem and Prescott to the church in Northampton in October, 1830, and was recognized as an independent church—"The First Baptist Church of Christ in Amherst"—Aug. 3, 1832. The church began its separate life with 40 members, and adopted the Articles of Faith and the Covenant of what was then the Federal Street Baptist Church, in Boston. Its present house of worship was soon erected, and was set apart for the worship of God Nov. 10, 1855. Its original dimensions, 60 by 40 feet, have never been changed, though it has been twice repaired,—once during the pastorate of Rev. E. A. Cummings, and again in 1865. At the latter date the renovation was thorough, and then began for the society a period of increased activity and usefulness, its membership having increased nearly threefold. The church has had to meet more than the ordinary difficulties in establishing itself, but is at the present time (1879) fairly prosperous, having a total membership of 181, of whom 145 are resident members, and the Sunday-school membership is 170, with 15 officers and teachers. Rev. Stephen S. Nelson, a resident clergyman, and Rev. Solomon Peck, professor in Amherst College, were among the earliest members. Of its constituent members only three now remain,—Austin Eastman, Mary Robbins, and Orinda Ball.

The following persons have served the church as pastors, during the periods given, respectively: Mason Ball, July, 1834, to October, 1836, and March, 1846, to —, 1848; N. G. Lovell, November, 1836, June, 1840; Joseph Hodges, August, 1840, August, 1841; George Waters, January, 1843, February, 1846; Elkanah A. Cummings, May, 1850, October, 1852, and January, 1854, January, 1855; Edward Anderson, November, 1852, September, 1853; J. Torrey Smith, November, 1856, April, 1865; A. J. Paddelford, February, 1866, April, 1868; F. E. Tower, December, 1868, December, 1871; Sylvester Burnham, July, 1873, April, 1874. D. W. Hoyt, ordained July, 1874, is the present pastor.

The following have served the church as deacons: Isaac Robbins, Sylvester Andrews, Seth Clapp, Increase Gilbert, Silas Shaw. The present deacons are Lewis Fish, J. L. Lovell, and Samuel Smith.

GRACE CHURCH.§

The first services of the Protestant Episcopal Church ever held in the town and the ultimate establishment of the present church organization were the fruits of a correspondence opened early in the summer of 1864, by Miss Almy Emerson, a prior resident of Amherst, with Dr. F. L. Huntington and Miss Mary H. Jones, a resident friend of the cause. This lady secured the use of the Baptist meeting-house, where, on July 17, 1864, and for five successive Sundays, evening services were held at five o'clock, Rev. G. M. Bradley, of Northampton, officiating the first Sunday, Rev. George T. Converse, of Roxbury, the second, and Dr. Huntington the last four. The first communion was administered by Dr. Huntington, Sunday morning, September 4th, in the same house.

The parish was organized under the above title at a meeting held September 12th the same year, in the presence of Dr. Huntington, at the house of Mrs. Jones. Others present were I. F. Conkey, Henry C. Nash, L. D. Shepard, George Burnham, Dr. Rufus Belden, O. G. Couch, George Graves, John E. White, C. T. Brown, Merrick M. Marsh, Henry O. Pease. George Burnham was chosen Senior Warden; John M. Emerson, of New York City, Junior Warden; O. G. Couch, Clerk and Treasurer; I. F. Conkey, Henry C. Nash, George Ward, Charles Deuel, L. D. Shepard, John C. White, Merrick M. Marsh, M. N. Spear, R. W. Stratton, Vestrymen.

Rev. S. P. Parker, D.D., of St. Paul's Church, Stockbridge, served the parish from Nov. 27, 1864, but was not settled until January 11th following. Services were held in a hall of the academy until March 2, 1866, when the basement of the present church was first occupied. July 17th the church was consecrated, and on the 1st of September of the same year its tower was completed and supplied with a fine clock and bell. These and the tower were the offering of George C. Shepard, D.D. This handsome church edifice is of stone, and cost about $35,000.

Rev. Henry Freeman Allen began his labors as pastor the first Sunday after Easter, 1872; resigned April, 1877. He was succeeded by the present rector, Rev. Frederick Burgess, on the last Sunday of that year. Present membership, 80.

* Contributed by Rev. Charles S. Walker.

† From information given by Mrs. Olive Jackson, of Amherst.

‡ Supplied by the pastor, Rev. D. W. Hoyt.

§ Facts for this sketch were taken from the church records through the courtesy of the pastor, Rev. Frederick Burgess.

WESLEY METHODIST EPISCOPAL SOCIETY, AMHERST.*

In 1868 a Methodist Episcopal Society was formed, and carried on a little more than a year, with Rev. E. Frank Pitcher as pastor. The project of building a church was at this time attempted and abandoned, and the society disbanded. In the winter of 1874, Rev. S. L. Rogers, who was supplying the Methodist Episcopal Church at North Amherst, formed a class at Amherst with twelve members, and appointed Mr. Cummings Fish leader. The church was again organized in the summer of 1875, with thirteen members. Rev. S. L. Rogers was the first pastor of the new society, and served one year. In the spring of 1876, Rev. D. S. Coles was appointed preacher in charge. He also supplied one year. In the spring of 1877, Rev. E. C. Ferguson succeeded, and remained a like period. The church during these three years enjoyed a healthful growth. In the spring of 1878, Rev. Edward P. King was appointed to the charge, and during the ensuing fall work was commenced on a church edifice, on the corner of Main and Whitney Streets. Here a brick church has been erected, known as the "Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church." The vestry was formally dedicated Jan. 26, 1879, and during the ensuing spring the audience-room was ready for worship.

Present membership, 34. The church has 5 trustees and 9 stewards.

THE METHODIST SOCIETY, NORTH AMHERST,† was not regularly organized until March 9, 1849, although preaching was begun by ministers of that denomination more than six years earlier. In the month of August, 1842, Rev. E. S. Potter held services in the school-house in "Amherst City,"—so called,—under the appointment of the presiding elder of Springfield District, New England Conference. He remained, preaching at times also in Hadley, until 1844, having meantime united with the "Wesleyan Connection." James Billings, of the W. M. Conference, served the society from June until October of the same year, and was succeeded by John Pike, as supply, until the close of the conference year, in 1845. The chapel was dedicated January 1st, in that year, E. S. Potter preaching the sermon of dedication.

The succeeding ministers were William Bevins, one year, until April, 1846; J. W. Dadman, supply, November, 1846, to April, 1847; Jonas M. Clark, who found a few friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but no members, April 23, 1848, until 1849. March 9th, of the latter year, an official board was organized. The Quarterly Conference then consisted of Amos Binney, Presiding Elder; Jonas M. Clark, Preacher in Charge; Joab Ingram, Steward. B. Perkins Farnham was chosen as an additional steward.

Then succeeded as preachers, H. M. Nichols, April, 1849, two years, during which period the society suffered the loss of many members by removal, and for the next two years had no regular pulpit services; David Todd, 1853-54; William Hubbard, December, 1854, to April, 1855; John Peterson, local supply, April, 1858, to April, 1860; J. O. Peck, at the same time a student in Amherst College, one year; Robert H. Winslow, one year; Rufus Gerrish, one year; John Jones, of Pelham, who served as a supply nearly all the time from 1863 until 1867; John W. Lee, one year; John Jones, again supply, one year; Lorenzo Dibble, local supply, was then a student at Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, April to August, 1869; William S. Jagger, January, 1870, to 1871; J. Jones, supply, until 1872; D. K. Bannister, who rendered an efficient two years' service; S. L. Rogers, two years, until the spring of 1876, when the present pastor, Rev. C. H. Walter, was appointed.

The church edifice was repaired at considerable expense during the pastorate of Mr. Lee, 1867-68; and during that of Mr. Rogers—1874-76—the building was raised and a vestry made underneath, at a cost, with other repairs, of about $600. Previously—1858—the church had received a legacy of $100 by the will of Mr. Alden Woods, of Leverett.

The church now has about 30 members, and a Sunday-school averaging nearly 40 pupils.

The present stewards are D. W. Adams, William H. Lawton, B. H. Taylor, J. W. Chandler, and James A. Hill.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC SOCIETY, AMHERST,

for some time anterior to the building of their house of worship, held meetings at "Palmer's Hall," under the ministration of the pastors of the church at Northampton, who served them occasionally in a missionary capacity. Their lot on Pleasant Street was purchased in 1869, and the church building—of wood—erected during 1870-71. Its dedication took place June 25th in the latter year.

Rev. Francis Brennan became the first resident pastor, and served until the spring of 1878, a period of six years, when, on account of continued ill health, he returned to Ireland, his early home.

The church has now no settled pastor, but is again under the care of the church at Northampton, and served by Rev. Father Barry, of that parish.

CEMETERIES.

There are three cemeteries in Amherst, all of which are owned by the town. The old cemetery, laid out for the "east inhabitants" in 1730, as mentioned previously, is situated in what was formerly the west highway, west of the lot then owned by Nathaniel Church, and at first contained one acre and twenty rods of land. This cemetery, to which several acres have been added, is situated a short distance north of the present common at Amherst Centre, and east of Pleasant Street, which is about four rods in width, all that remains of the original forty rods known as the "West Highway," separating the first and second divisions.

The cemetery at North Amherst contains three acres.

The cemetery at South Amherst contains about the same.

The compiler of the foregoing history of Amherst gratefully acknowledges his indebtedness to many of her citizens for valuable assistance and information, generously supplied. To Samuel C. Carter—so long the honored keeper of the town's valuable records, and still their watchful custodian—thanks are due for special courtesies extended, officially and otherwise; to Messrs. Henry M. McCloud and John E. Williams, of the Amherst Record, for ready counsel and many favors; to Prof. William S. Tyler and Prof. William S. Clark, for important documents and information; to Prof. H. H. Goodell, for the loan of invaluable papers pertaining to the French-and-Indian and Revolutionary wars; and to Messrs. Edward A. Thomas, E. F. Cook, M. N. Spear, Dr. H. J. Cate, and others, for aid in various ways.

Chief among the authorities consulted were Prof. Tyler's "History of Amherst College," Dr. Holland's "History of Western Massachusetts," and M. F. Dickinson's "Historical Address," pamphlet.

REBELLION RECORD.

The following soldiers, residents of Amherst, enlisted in the army of the United States at the period of the Rebellion. Their record shows that they participated quite as actively and efficiently as any soldiers engaged during that trying period, and suffered proportionately with the bravest and best:

Adams, Sylvester H., 21st Mass.
Allen, Benjamin Potwine, 14th Mass.
Ball, John D., 10th, 37th, and 20th Mass.
Ball, Nelson Roderick, 10th Mass.
Ball, Henry C., 15th Mass.
Barton, Austin, 21st Mass.
Bolio, Charles C., 27th Mass.
Bolio, Levi M., 27th Mass.

* Contributed by the pastor, Rev. Edward P. King.

† Facts for this sketch were furnished by Mr. B. H. Taylor.

Baker, Charles K., 27th Mass.
 Barton, Charles H., 27th Mass.
 Bardwell, Henry J., 27th Mass.
 Boltwood, Edmund, 2d corp., 27th Mass.
 Baker, Asel, 27th Mass.
 Baker, Peter, 27th Mass.
 Baker, Ezra, 27th Mass.
 Bolster, Frank E., 27th Mass.
 Barton, Morrison, 14th Mass.
 Bowman, James, 27th Mass.
 Bowman, Henry, 20th Mass.
 Boynton, Henry E., 14th Mass.
 Butterfield, Francis, 1st Mass.
 Beston, John, 37th Mass.
 Beston, Patrick, 37th Mass.
 Barrows, Ashley W., 27th Mass.
 Bell, Frederick R., 37th Mass.
 Bartlett, Lewis A., 52d Mass.
 Bartlett, Milo A., 52d Mass.
 Barton, George H., 52d Mass.
 Bell, George H., 52d Mass.
 Baker, James A., corp., 52d Mass.
 Bliss, William L., 52d Mass.
 Cook, Benjamin O., 10th Mass.
 Clark, William S., major, 21st Mass.
 Cates, Albert, 27th Mass.
 Cutter, Ptolemy P., 29th Mass.
 Cushman, John E., 27th Mass.
 Crossman, Barton, 27th Mass.
 Coy, Henry, 11th, 9th, and 32d Mass.
 Cook, Austin, 10th Mass.
 Cooke, George E., 37th Mass.
 Cook, Willard S., 37th Mass.
 Cows, Watson W., 52d Mass.
 Clapp, Charles, 52d Mass.
 Calahan, Edward, 52d Mass.
 Calahan, Jeremiah, 52d Mass.
 Dunakin, Charles, 10th Mass.; 1st U. S.
 Dickinson, Francis Howard, 15th Mass.
 Douglass, Henry F., 21st Mass.
 Dennison, Ami R., 1st lieutenant, 27th Mass.
 Dickinson, Baxter E., 3d sergeant, 27th Mass.
 Dickinson, Chester, Jr., 27th Mass.
 Dickinson, David L., 14th Mass.
 Dickinson, Levi P., 37th Mass.
 Dickinson, Willard R., 27th Mass.
 Dickinson, Francis E., 21st, 36th, and 56th Mass.
 Dickinson, George, 52d Mass.
 Draper, George A., 27th Mass.
 Dickinson, Amariah, 52d Mass.
 Dickinson, John W., 52d Mass.
 Edson, Levi, 27th Mass.
 Fisher, Homer L., 31st Mass.
 Fisher, George L., 31st Mass.
 Fish, Francis W., 37th Mass.
 Fahey, William, 37th Mass.
 Franklin, Benjamin R., 37th Mass.
 Fales, William B., 52d Mass.
 Fish, Nelson D. B. L., asst. surg., 27th Mass.
 Finemore, Charles A., colored, 54th Mass.
 Goodell, Charles L., 21st Mass.
 Grover, Joseph, 27th Mass.
 Graves, William O., 37th Mass.
 Gunn, Charles, 37th Mass.
 Gray, Edward P., 1st Mass. Cav.
 Gunn, Cephas W., 2d sergeant, 52d Mass.
 Glazier, John A., 37th Mass.
 Hastings, Willard D., 27th Mass.
 Hawley, Henry E., 27th Mass.
 Haskell, Lewis R., Hancock's Corps.
 Hopkins, William J., 27th Mass.
 Hobart, George Martin, 27th Mass.
 Hawes, James F., 27th Mass.
 Hastings, Henry B., 27th Mass.
 Hills, Nehemiah D., 27th Mass.
 Howland, John W., 1st Mass. Cav.
 Hastings, Joseph C., 52d Mass.
 Howe, George E., 3d sergeant, 52d Mass.
 Howes, Charles O., 52d Mass.
 Holden, Freeman L., 52d Mass.
 Haywood, Charles E., 52d Mass.
 Hardaker, James, 52d Mass.
 Haling, Homer, 52d Mass.
 Hubbard, Henry, 52d Mass.
 Henderson, Thomas, surgeon's mate, Laurens Hospital.
 Johnson, Eli H., 27th Mass.

Johnson, Ebenezer M., 10th Mass.
 Johnson, William F., 53d Mass.
 Johnson, Silas O., 52d Mass.
 Johnson, Dwight H., 52d Mass.
 Jennings, William H. H., 54th Mass.
 Kellogg, Charles F., 2d and 37th Mass.
 Kellogg, James B., 27th Mass.
 Kellogg, Justin P., 2d lieutenant, 52d Mass.
 Kellogg, B. Franklin, 52d Mass.
 Kellogg, Albert H., musician, 37th Mass.
 Lincoln, Rufus B., 2d lieutenant, 37th Mass.; pro. to col.
 Leggett, John A., 37th Mass.
 Lovett, Murray B., 10th Mass.
 Loomis, Richard B., 21st Mass.
 Lovett, Wheaton, 27th Mass.
 Latham, William W., 27th Mass.
 Miles, Marcus T. C., 20th Mass.
 Manley, Edward W., 27th Mass.
 Miles, Reuben, 12th Conn.
 Munsel, Charles E., 37th Mass.
 Maloney, Michael, 52d Mass.
 Mathews, Charles, 31st Mass.
 Mathews, Francis J., 34th Mass.
 Newell, George W., 21st Mass.
 Putnam, George, 10th Mass.
 Plumb, Henry, 21st Mass.
 Parsons, John D., 27th Mass.; pro. to corp.
 Prince, Henry B., 27th Mass.; pro. to corp.
 Preston, James A., 27th Mass.
 Potwine, Edwin H., 27th Mass.
 Preston, Simeon E., 27th Mass.; pro. to corp.
 Packard, Henry Clay, 27th Mass.
 Pierco, James A., 14th Mass.
 Percival, Erasmus Wm., 14th Mass.; pro. to corp.
 Parmenter, George H., 53d Mass.
 Rust, Jacob L., 27th Mass.
 Roberts, Albert, 52d Mass.
 Roberts, Norman, 52d Mass.
 Roberts, George H., 52d Mass.
 Rolph, Edward M., 52d Mass.
 Stanley, Edward H., 10th Mass.; pro. to corp.
 Scott, George W., 21st Mass.
 Stearns, A. Frazier, 1st lieutenant, 21st Mass.; acting adjt.
 Sloan, Timothy W., capt., 27th Mass.
 Skinner, Leander, 1st sergeant, 27th Mass.; pro. to 2d lieutenant, 1st lieutenant, and capt.
 Skinner, Linneus C., musician, 27th Mass.
 Skinner, Lyman W., musician, 27th Mass.
 Stearns, John, 27th Mass.
 Sloan, George W., 4th corp., 27th Mass.
 Salois, Michael, 27th Mass.
 Spaulding, Charles B., 27th Mass.
 Sears, Henry, 27th Mass.
 Storrs, Charles L., 2d sergeant, 27th Mass.; pro. to 1st sergeant and capt.
 Shea, Patrick, 31st Mass.
 Smith, Charles V., corp., 28th Mass.; pro. to lieutenant and to capt.
 Shouls, John, 27th Mass.
 Spear, George P., 52d Mass.
 Spear, Asa Adams, 2d lieutenant, 52d Mass.
 Storrs, Samuel J., capt., 52d Mass.; pro. to lieutenant-col.
 Smith, Charles C., 52d Mass.
 Smith, William J., 37th Mass.
 Sanderson, James K., 37th Mass.
 Spelman, Timothy, 37th Mass.
 Sandling, John, 37th Mass.
 Thayer, Josiah, 10th Mass.
 Thayer, Lyman R., 27th Mass.
 Tufts, George H., 27th Mass.
 Tyler, Mason W., lieutenant, 37th Mass.; pro. to capt., major, lieutenant-col., and col.
 Taft, Ethan A., 37th Mass.
 Thayer, Samuel M., 37th Mass.
 Turner, Charles F., 37th Mass.
 Taylor, Joseph K., 37th Mass.
 Toole, Patrick O., 52d Mass.
 Thompson, James, 54th Mass.
 Vinton, Medad, 27th Mass.
 White, William Henry, 21st Mass.
 Williams, Solomon H., 27th Mass.
 Welch, Farrell, 21st Mass.
 Woodworth, Rev. Chas. L., chaplain, 27th Mass.
 Williams, B. Hartley, 1st Mass. Cav.
 Wilson, Robert, 52d Mass.

Wheelock, James H., 52d Mass.
 Wheelock, John P. West, 52d Mass.
 White, John, 52d Mass.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Horton, Wesley W., 1st Mass. Art.
 Smith, Francis B., 1st Mass. Art.
 Heald, Charles A., 32d Mass.
 Church, Spencer, Jr., 9th and 32d Mass.
 Hervey, Eugene P., 27th Mass.
 Spear, James W., 27th Mass.
 Russell, Dwight, 27th Mass.
 Sears, Arthur, 27th Mass.
 King, Warren F., 27th Mass.
 Mollett, Charles D., 27th Mass.
 Phelps, Lyman D., 21st Mass.
 Kelsey, Ezra, 27th Mass.
 Connor, Cornelius O., 27th Mass.
 Connor, John, 37th Mass.
 Bestin, Dennis, 37th Mass.
 Dickinson, Henry Clay, 29th H. A.
 Uford, Andrew J., 1st Mass. Cav.
 Hobart, William E., 1st Mass. Cav.
 Shattuck, George W., 1st Mass. Cav.
 Bolio, Cephas B.

COLORED.

Freeman, Samuel, bugler, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Jennings, William, 54th Mass.
 Jennings, Francis N., 54th Mass.
 Jackson, Jarvis, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Jackson, Windsor, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Paxton, Howard E., 5th Mass. Cav.
 Solomon, Joseph I., 5th Mass. Cav.
 Singland, Lorenzo, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Thompson, John, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Thompson, Christopher, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Thompson, Henry, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Thompson, Charles, 5th Mass. Cav.

The following enlisted in the Navy. None appear to have been residents of Amherst except the first three:

Cutter, Wm. V., "Merrimack."
 Miles, Wm. B., "Bricknell."
 Newell, Henry L., "Osipee."
 Adams, Edward H., "Wachusett."
 Beman, Frank S.
 Boynton, Charles P.
 Chalmers, William.
 Colter, James A.
 Doyle, Michael, Jr., "Rhode Island."
 Fitzsimmons, John.
 Gleason, Thomas.
 Hudson, John.
 Hay, Samuel.
 Keefe, Thomas, "John Adams."
 Lawry, Uranus, "Constellation."
 Lear, John.
 McCallum, Patrick.
 McGinley, Charles.
 Nelson, John, "Sabine."
 Pierce, James.
 Scott, Stephen C., "Circassian."
 White, Cornelius.

The following is a list of non-residents enlisted at Amherst in the several regiments of infantry:

Adams, Charles B., 1st N. Y. Vols.
 Bowman, Alansford, 20th Mass.
 Bowman, Truman, 52d Mass.
 Brown, Perez R., 52d Mass.
 Burns, Joseph, 52d Mass.
 Cooley, George B., 44th Ill.
 Cooley, Henry M., sergeant, 14th Conn.
 Dyer, Peter, 27th Mass.
 Gilman, Ai, 2d Mass. Cav.
 Hanks, Edward C., 37th Mass.
 Hoyt, Francis A., 1st Mass. Art.
 Homes, J. F., 27th Mass.
 Hitchcock, Henry, 2d Mass. Cav.
 Howe, Joseph, 2d Mass. Cav.
 Johnson, Martin Silas, 53d Mass.
 Kane, James, 20th Mass.
 Latham, Alonzo W., 18th Mass.
 McCloud, Henry M., 12th Conn.
 Moody, Lyman E., 1st Mich. Sharpshooters.
 Montague, George L., capt., 37th Mass.; pro. to maj., and again to lieutenant-col.

Edward Dickinson

Prouty, Edward U., 10th Mass.
 Rose, T. C., 27th Mass.
 Russell, Chas. F., 3d Ill. Cav.
 White, Samuel, 5th Wis.
 Jackson, Sanford, 54th Mass.

The following were obtained by payment of extra bounties:

Kelly, James, 16th Mass. H. Art.
 Rush, John, Vet. Res. Corps.
 Richards, Joseph, 21st Mass.
 Allen, Asa P., 4th Mass. Cav.
 Casson, Henry, 4th Mass. Cav.
 Flanders, Moses L., 21st Mass.
 McSweeney, Dennis, 4th Mass. Cav.
 Gleason, Arthur, 4th Mass. Cav.
 Kelly, James, 4th Mass. Cav.
 Henry, James.
 Rand, Ebenezer, 35th Mass.
 Riley, Charles, 21st Mass.
 Murphy, Thomas F., 2d Mass. H. Art.
 Tierney, Charles, 2d Mass. Cav.
 Kendell, Henry C., 21st Mass.
 Welch, Rodman, 2d Mass. H. Art.
 Williamson, William, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Richards, Samuel W., 4th Mass. Cav.
 Hillis, John, 2d Mass. H. Art.
 Westcott, Stephen K., 11th Mass.
 Hack, Robert, 2d Mass. H. Art.
 Hefferan, William, 35th Mass.
 Wood, Frank, 13th Vet. Res. Corps.
 Moran, John, 10th Vet. Res. Corps.
 McGuirk, Bernard, 13th Vet. Res. Corps.
 Witherell, David, 13th Vet. Res. Corps.
 Manning, John, Vet. Res. Corps.
 Waters, Charles, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Turner, Charles, 5th Mass. Cav.
 Dow, Charles, 2d Mass. Cav.
 Cannon, Owen, 19th Mass.
 Burke, Samuel H., Cav. Bat.
 Wilson, Joseph, 4th Mass. Cav.
 Smith, Charles, 4th Mass. Cav.
 Kennedy, John, 13th Mass. Bat.
 Stankoff, Nicholas, 13th Mass. Bat.
 Bryant, James W., Vet. Res. Corps.
 Scott, Munroe.
 Spealock, Charles.
 Allen, George.

Drowns, Henry.
 Gough, Caleb.
 Powell, James.
 Taylor, John.
 Pierce, Edwin H., 1st Mass. Cav.
 Tauman, John, 19th Mass.
 Schatz, Frederick, 19th Mass.
 Russell, Thomas, sub.
 Lyons, Edward, sub.
 Haggerty, William, sub.
 Mead, Charles, sub.
 Cooper, James, sub.
 Quiner, Peter, sub.
 Tyler, John, 19th Mass., sub.
 Carr, John, sub.
 Perkins, William, sub.
 Martin, Frank, sub.
 Moore, James, sub.
 Sherburne, Samuel, sub.
 Moran, Thomas, 20th Mass., sub.
 Slocum, Robert, 19th Mass., sub.
 Lyons, Edward, sub.
 Jones, George, sub.
 Pierce, Charles, 19th Mass., sub.
 Johnson, Peter, sub.
 Burns, William, sub.
 Champlin, Jason, 54th Mass., sub.

Total of enlistments in the Army.....	352
Total of enlistments in the Navy.....	22
	374

Of these 11 were killed, 15 died of wounds, and 32 died of disease; 35 others were wounded.
 Total, 93.

NECROLOGY.

The following soldiers were mortally wounded or killed in the service: Henry C. Ball, Austin Barton, Levi M. Bolio, Charles K. Baker, Henry Bowman, Henry C. Boynton, Ptolemy P. Cutter, George E. Cooke, Francis H. Dickinson, David L. Dickinson, George A. Draper, Levi Edson, Martin S. Johnson, William W. Latham, George Putnam, Edward T. Prouty, George W. Scott, Frazier A. Stearns, Charles V. Smith, James K. Sanderson, Josiah Thayer, Joseph K. Taylor, James W. Spear, Charles D. Mollett, Jason Champlin, Samuel C. White.

The following died of disease contracted in service: Charles B. Adams, Sylvester H. Adams, Benjamin P. Allen, Morrison Barton, Milo A. Bartlett, George Dickinson, John W. Dickinson, Joseph Grover, Murray B. Lovett, Alonzo W. Latham, Reuben Miles, Edward W. Manley, Marcus T. C. Miles, Henry Plumb, Norman Roberts, Edward H. Stanley, Lyman W. Skinner, George W. Sloan, Charles C. Smith, Ethan A. Taft, Robert Wilson, John P. W. Wheelock, John Thompson, Jarvis Jackson, Spencer Church, Eugene P. Hovey, Arthur Sears, Lyman D. Phelps, Ezra Kelsey, Cephas B. Bolio, Sanford Jackson, Henry Thompson.

WOUNDED.

The following were wounded while in service: Charles H. Barton, Nelson R. Ball, Edmund Boltwood, James Bowman, John Boston, Patrick Beston, Frederick R. Bell, John E. Cushman (lost an arm), Henry Coy, George B. Cowley, Chester Dickinson, Jr., Baxter E. Dickinson, John A. Glazier, Henry E. Hawley, William J. Hopkins, Ebenezer M. Johnson, Charles F. Kellogg, Rufus P. Lincoln, James A. Preston, Simon E. Preston, James A. Pierce, Jacob L. Rust, Charles B. Spaulding, Henry Sears, John Sholes (lost a leg), William J. Smith, John Sandling, Timothy Spellman, Mason W. Tyler, Charles T. Turner, Medad Vinton, Solomon H. Williams, Dwight Russell, Lewis R. Haskell, Henry Wm. White.

MILITARY EXPENSES.

Expenses of the town in 1861	$535.17
Expenses of individuals, 1861	366.50
Expenses of the town, 1862	8,256.00
Expenses of Wm. A. Stearns, Esq.	875.00
Expenses of the town in 1863	61.25
Expenses of drafted men for substitutes in 1863-64	14,275.00
Expenses of the town in 1864	11,738.85
Expenses of individuals, 1864	8,063.00
Expenses of the town in 1865	406.00
Interest on the "State Aid"	1,360.50
	$46,237.27
Deduct amount received from State to equalize bounties	1,641.27
	$44,596.00

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. EDWARD DICKINSON, LL.D.,

was born in Amherst, Hampshire Co., Mass., Jan. 1, 1803. His ancestors lived in Hadley (of which Amherst was formerly a part) as early as 1657, the year in which Hadley was settled. His father was Hon. Samuel Fowler Dickinson, one of the conspicuous founders of Amherst College, and a leading lawyer of his day and locality. Preparing for college at home, he entered Amherst at the age of sixteen, where he remained one year. The three last years of his college course were spent at Yale, when he graduated, among the first of his class, in 1823. For the two succeeding years he read law with his father, and then spent a year in the then famous Northampton law-school, under Profs. E. H. Mills, Judge Samuel Howe, and J. H. Ashmun. In 1826 he opened a law-office at Amherst, and continued in the practice of his profession from that time till his death, nearly half a century.

The first public position which he filled was treasurer of Amherst College, to which responsible office he was elected in 1835, and which he held from that time till 1874, when he resigned, and was succeeded by his son, W. A. Dickinson, its present incumbent. He entered upon the duties of this office at a time when the college was comparatively weak and its financial resources much embarrassed, and even its perpetuity a matter of uncertainty. The fact that, during his administration, the property of the college grew from something like one hundred thousand dollars to over a million, abundantly attests the financial ability and skill with which it was handled.

The Springfield Republican, in an obituary notice, says of him, "No man ever watched or tended his own child or his own property with more anxious, personal, jealous care than he did the institution he has so long and so ably served."

In 1838 and 1839, and again in 1874, his town chose him a member of the House of Representatives. In 1842 and 1843 his county sent him to the Senate; in 1845-46, he was a member of the Governor's council, Gov. Briggs being the chief magistrate; and in the years 1853 and 1855 he was member of Congress from the district then made up chiefly of Hampshire and Hampden Counties, nominated and elected by the Whig party. Mr. Dickinson was keenly alive to everything which looked to the prosperity of his native town.

Of his part in securing for Amherst her first railroad, the New London and Northern, the Amherst Record says: "Everything that talent, vigor, and indomitable perseverance could do he did, and it is no reflection upon his co-laborers to say that to his influence, tact, and energy are we mainly indebted for the accomplishment of the work."

From the close of his term in Congress, Mr. Dickinson retired from public life, except in the instance of his last election to the House of Representatives in 1874, and it was owing to the deep interest he took in securing to his town all the advantages of the construction of the Massachusetts Central Railroad that he consented to serve it again in the Legislature. On the morning of the 16th of June, 1874, he made a speech in the House on a bill appropriating three million dollars for perfecting the Troy and Greenfield line of road, the main purpose of which was to guard the interests of the Massachusetts Central. Soon after, feeling a premonition of illness, he retired to his rooms at the Tremont Hotel, where about one o'clock he was stricken with apoplexy, and died in a few hours. In the death of Mr. Dickinson the town of Amherst and her college lost emphatically one of their best and most devoted friends. Of his character, to quote again from the Springfield Republican: "In his State, and particularly in its western section, he has long ranked among the few 'first citizens,' honored for his years and public services, respected for his sterling good sense and independence of character, revered for his spotless integrity and patriotic self-sacrifice to public duty, beloved even by all who came near to him for the simple truthfulness and chivalric tenderness that lay deep and broad in the base of his nature. He has left an example of service as a public-spirited citizen and faithful official that both in quality and quantity should alone make him an historic character in Massachusetts. He was indeed a New England Chevalier Bayard, without fear and without reproach. He possessed and exhibited that rarest and yet most needed of all qualities in these days of cowardly conformity and base complaisance,—the courage of his convictions. This was the essence of his life. This is his noblest bequest to his community and his State."

In 1863, Amherst conferred upon him the honorary title of LL.D. For many years he was an active member of the First Congregational Church of Amherst.

The surviving members of his family are an aged wife, a sister of Mr. Albert Norcross, of Monson, and the late Lorin M. Norcross, of Boston; a son, W. A. Dickinson, a lawyer, and, as before mentioned, the successor of his father as treasurer of Amherst College; two daughters; a brother, William, who resides in Worcester, and is engaged in the banking business; and a sister, the wife of the Rev. Asa Bullard, Secretary of the Congregational Publication Society, and a resident of Cambridgeport.

WAITSTILL DICKINSON

was born in Amherst, Hampshire Co., March 19, 1814. His grandfather, Waitstill Dickinson, settled at an early day in South Amherst, on the place now occupied by George Shaw, and here both his father and Waitstill Dickinson were born. His father, Oliver Dickinson, was thrice married. By his first wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth, he had six children, viz., Mary, Waitstill, Moses, Josiah, William, and Elizabeth. By his second wife he had nine children, as follows: Clarissa, Martha, George, Lucretia, Mary, Emily, Webster, Clarissa (2d), and Charles. By his third wife he had no children. All but Josiah and Charles were married and raised families. Mary, Moses, Elizabeth, George, Charles, and Lucretia are deceased. Waitstill, Josiah, Emily, and Martha, widow of Charles Haywood, are residents of Amherst. From the time he was old enough to work Waitstill Dickinson was employed on his father's farm, receiving only a common-school education. When fourteen years old he drove a four-horse team to Boston, and followed the business of teaming for the most part till he was twenty-one years of age.

He was married, April 20, 1837, to Mercy J. Dickinson, daughter of Enos and Joanna Dickinson, of Amherst. Mrs.

Dickinson was born in Amherst, April 7, 1816. They have eleven children, as follows:

Lyman Enos, born Aug. 9, 1839. Died March 26, 1843. Joanna Thankful, born Feb. 17, 1841. An invalid for fourteen years, occasioned by being thrown from a wagon. Living at home. Henry Clay, born Feb. 14, 1843. A soldier in the late war. Married Nellie Andrews. Three children, viz., Stella F., Isadore L., and Katie I. Employed in the store with his father. Julia L., born May 3, 1844. Died Aug. 29, 1868. Dwight E., born Jan. 21, 1846. Married Henrietta Bolter.

Waitstill Dickinson

One child,—Walter. A farmer in Amherst. Lucy M., born Oct. 22, 1847. Living at home. Edward M., born Oct. 14, 1849. Married Bell Schofield. One child,—Grace E. Clerk in grocery-store in Hartford, Conn. Daniel Webster, born Dec. 6, 1851. Married Jennie Prince. Employed in a store at Rocky Hill, Conn. George Washington, born July 16, 1854. Married Ella Shumway. A farmer in Sunderland. Sidney Oliver, born Sept. 19, 1858. Clerk in post-office at Amherst. Robert Martin, born July 12, 1860. Living at home.

Mr. Dickinson followed teaming four years after marriage. In 1842 commenced merchandising on a small scale in South Amherst, and continued in that business for six years. He carried on a farm the next seven years. From that time to the present he has kept a grocery-store in South Amherst, occupying his present "red-brick" store since 1863.

Mr. Dickinson has served as selectman and overseer of the poor seven years, and assessor five years; also school director for a number of years. Postmaster at South Amherst six years from 1844, and from 1866 to the present time. Elected a Representative to the Legislature in 1849. In politics he is Republican. Though not a member of any church, a regular attendant upon, and contributor to, the support of the Congregational Church of South Amherst.

Ezra Ingram

EZRA INGRAM was born in Amherst, Hampshire Co., Mass., Sept. 1, 1799. The family descended in a direct line from 1st, John Ingram, who was born in England about 1642; emigrated to this country, and was one of the early settlers in the town of Hadley. He died June 22, 1722. 2d. John Ingram, who married Mehitable, daughter of John Dickinson, by whom he raised a family of eleven children. When advanced in years he removed to North Amherst, where he died. 3d. John Ingram, married Lydia, daughter of Samuel Boltwood, by whom he had six children. Died in Amherst, Nov. 11, 1737. 4th. John Ingram, married, Feb. 9, 1758, Thankful Rose, by whom he had seven children. Died Aug. 30, 1809. 5th. Ebenezer Ingram, born July 8, 1760, in Amherst; married, May 20, 1789, Esther Rood, by whom he had nine children, as follows, in the order of their birth: Dencey, Peter, Abigail, Esther, Ezra, Naomi, Lucy, Ellen A., and John P.,—three sons and six daughters.

Peter was for many years a cloth-manufacturer at North Amherst. After being burned out he moved to Fond du Lac, Wis., where he died. He left two sons and one daughter.

John P. also moved to Fond du Lac and died there, leaving one son and two daughters.

Four of the six daughters married and settled in Western New York. Naomi married M. C. Darling, who was the founder of Fond du Lac. Ellen A. married Col. Josiah Tryon, both of whom died in Fond du Lac. Ebenezer Ingram, the father, died in Amherst, Nov. 30, 1819. His wife died in Fond du Lac while on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Tryon.

Ezra Ingram being the only son living at home at the time of the death of his father, which occurred when he was twenty years of age, the care and responsibility of the family devolved largely on him. Up to that time he had been employed on the farm and assisting in the grist-, carding-, and cloth-mills, which were owned and run by his father. His education was confined to the district school of the neighborhood. By the terms of his father's will he became the owner of the homestead farm, and a half interest with his brother Peter in the mills, they to pay a stipulated amount to the younger brother and sisters. He gave his personal attention to the farm, and his brother ran the mills. Eventually he sold his interest in the mills to his brother.

He was married, Nov. 24, 1824, to Susan E. Roberts, daughter of Ephraim and Jerusha Roberts, of East Hartford, Conn. By her he had children as follows: Francis H., born Dec. 13, 1825, who went South as a teacher, which occupation he followed a number of years. He was book-keeper in a wholesale hardware store in Nashville, Tenn., at the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 9, 1862.

Lucy M., born Dec. 8, 1828; married, Sept. 2, 1862, to Bela U. Dickinson, a retired farmer, living in Amherst. They have one son, John Francis.

Ebenezer M., born June 24, 1831; in the employ of Wells, Fargo & Co., San Francisco, Cal.

Wells Woodbridge, born Aug. 27, 1833; killed by the kick of a horse, Aug. 22, 1842.

Mr. Ingram remained on the homestead farm till the spring of 1843, at which time he sold it to Ephraim Cushman. In 1847 he purchased what is known as the Eastman farm, about one mile north of the village of Amherst, where he remained ten years. He then bought the Dr. Gridley place in Amherst, where he remained also ten years. He then purchased the Dr. Smith place, next to Gunn's Hotel, where he still resides. His wife died Jan. 24, 1835. He married, May 25, 1838, Mrs. Nancy Judd Edwards, widow of David Edwards, of Northampton, and daughter of Frederick and Nancy Judd, of Southampton, with whom he lived over forty years. He had no children by his second wife. Mrs. Ingram died March 21, 1879.

Mr. Ingram has filled various offices of public trust. Was selectman and overseer of the poor eighteen years, and town assessor four years; was elected a representative to the State Legislature in 1842. Is a Republican in politics, and has missed but one gubernatorial election in fifty-seven years. Though not a member of any church, he has been a regular attendant of the Congregational Church of Amherst. Honest and honorable in all his dealings, whether of a private or public character, temperate in his habits, of a genial, social disposition, an obliging neighbor, and a steadfast friend, Mr. Ingram well deserves the high esteem in which he has always been held in the community in which he has lived.

Photo. by J. L. Lovell, Amherst.

Simeon Clark

SIMEON CLARK was born in Amherst, Hampshire Co., Oct. 15, 1807. The ancestor of this branch of the Clark family, who came to this country from England, was William Clark. He sailed from Plymouth, England, in the ship "Mary and John," March 30, 1630, and was among the first settlers of Dorchester, near Boston. He moved his family to Northampton in 1659. His wife rode on horseback, with two baskets, called panniers, slung across the horse, carrying one boy in each basket and one in her lap, her husband on foot. In 1661, with others, he formed the first church in Northampton, and was chosen lieutenant of the train-band,—an important office at that time. He died July 18, 1690. He had four sons,—William, John, Samuel, and Nathaniel. His son John, Simeon's ancestor, married his second wife, Mary Strong, March 16, 1679, by whom he had eleven children,—six sons and five daughters. The names of the sons were John, Nathaniel, Ebenezer, Increase, Noah, and Josiah. These brothers all lived near each other in Northampton, had large families, lived with their wives more than fifty years and survived them, and all of them were living when the youngest child was seventy years old; and all of the children lived over eighty years,—one ninety-nine and three over ninety years. When the youngest, Josiah, died, in 1789, aged ninety-two years, he was the last of the six sons and five daughters, and at the time of his death there were known to have been descendants of the six brothers only to the number of eleven hundred and fifty-eight children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, of whom more than nine hundred and twenty-five were living. Increase, the fourth son of John, above mentioned, died Aug. 27, 1775, the father of eight children.

The fifth child, Simeon, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born Oct. 20, 1720; married Rebecca Strong, Nov. 2, 1749. They were married by the Rev. Jonathan Edwards. He moved from Northampton to Amherst in 1750, where his twelve children were born, and located on a farm at the centre of Amherst, the homestead being still held by the Clark family. He was one of the first deacons in the First Congregational Church of Amherst.

Simeon, the second child of the twelve children, was born June 25, 1752; was twice married. By his first wife, Lucy Hubbard, he had three children,—viz.: Elijah, Eunice, and Philomela,—each of whom raised large families, their children numbering thirty-one. His second wife was Irene Lewis, to whom he was married April 23, 1795. Their children were Lucy, Lucy (2d), Asahel, and Simeon. Lucy and Asahel both died young. Lucy (2d) married, Dec. 3, 1817, Frederick A. Palmer, by whom she had one son, Albert R. Palmer, who was a graduate of Amherst College, and became an eminent lawyer in Racine, Wis., and died there. Simeon, the father, died May 8, 1831; the mother, May 11, 1855.

Simeon Clark married, May 21, 1829, Myra Cowles, daughter of Silas and Zilpha Cowles. She was born Oct. 31, 1806. By this union there were nine children: Juliette, born July 30, 1830; married, Nov. 26, 1856, George H. Estabrook, of Worcester, Mass., by whom she had four children, all deceased. Asahel Lewis, born July 25, 1832; graduate of Amherst, class of 1857; married Phoebe P. Gooch, Sept. 19, 1860; four children, three living; studied theology at Union Seminary, New York City, and is pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Florida, Orange Co., N. Y. Royal Washburn, born April 28, 1834; a graduate of Amherst, class of 1858; studied theology at Union Seminary; from loss of eyesight and health was prevented from entering his chosen profession or any active occupation; died March 28, 1879. Zilpha Gilbert, born Jan. 21, 1836; married Theodore J. Briggs; four children, three living; a graduate of Amherst, class of 1857; a teacher in San Antonio, Texas.

Edwin Warren, born Sept. 21, 1837; died May 5, 1838. Emily Maria, born May 28, 1839; died Sept. 15, 1839. Emily Adelia, born June 28, 1840; married, May 24, 1866, Francis H. Boynton, a graduate of Amherst, class of 1861; pastor of Congregational Church at Baynham, Mass.; three children, two living.

Edwin Warren, born Dec. 2, 1842; married, Dec. 1, 1868, Louise M. Kellogg, who died July 18, 1869. He was again married, Feb. 28, 1872, to Lizzie L. Henry, daughter of John P. and Laura Henry, of Chesterfield, N. H. They have had two children, viz.: Walter Edwin, born April 13, 1874; died July 18, 1875. Howard E., born Nov. 17, 1876. Edwin W. lives at the homestead and carries on the farm.

Albert Simeon, born May 14, 1848; died Sept. 18, 1848.

Mr. Clark received a common-school education, supplemented by attendance at Amherst Academy nearly two years. He has always lived in the house where he was born, which was built by his father in 1780, situated at Mill Valley, one mile south of Amherst village. His occupation has been principally farming, though he studied field-surveying, and followed it, more or less, for forty years. His services have been often demanded as administrator of estates. He has been justice of the peace thirty years, selectman, assessor, and overseer of the poor for many years; was captain of a militia company of the State for a number of years. He has been a member of the First Congregational Church of Amherst since 1831, and a deacon in the church sixteen years. In politics he has been identified with the Whig and Republican parties.

His wife, with whom he had lived nearly half a century, died June 8, 1871. A resident of Amherst for a period beyond the allotted time of man, always taking a lively interest in the growth and upbuilding of her institutions, he has lived to see the church of which his grandfather was one of the founders become a rich and prosperous society and a powerful factor in shaping the religious sentiment of the community, and the college, for the first building of which he helped to draw the bricks and sand, grown to rank among the foremost institutions of the land.

EASTHAMPTON.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

EASTHAMPTON may be properly termed one of the river-towns, though its territory borders the Connecticut for only a short distance south of the "Oxbow." At that point Easthampton divides Northampton, so that the latter is not made up of contiguous territory; Northampton has a sort of outlying province, consisting of Mount Tom and a section of narrow river valley. This separates Easthampton from what would seem to be its natural eastern boundary, the Connecticut.

Easthampton is bounded north by Northampton, east by Northampton and the Connecticut River, south by Hampden County and Southampton, west by Southampton and Westhampton.

It is the smallest town in the county, having an area of 6613 acres, as reported in the census of 1875.

Easthampton is a portion of the original purchase from the Indians by the proprietors of Northampton, and the title to the soil is, therefore, traced back directly to the treaty by which the tract was obtained.

NATURAL FEATURES.

This town in its topography differs from all the other towns of this county west of the river. There are few elevations sufficient to be called hills in the entire town.

It is walled in on the southeast by the precipitous heights of the Mount Tom range, but has no jurisdiction over them.

At the northwest the town line just clears the southern spurs of the Mineral Hill group. At the southeast corner it cleaves a slice from one of the lower declivities of Mount Tom.

The two branches of the Manhan River, one flowing south from Westhampton, the other north from Southampton, unite upon the western border and flow eastward through the centre of Easthampton to the Connecticut, joining the latter at the south part of the Oxbow. The tributaries of the Manhan from the north are Pomeroy Brook, Saw-Mill Brook, and several smaller rivulets. It has one tributary from the south, of considerable importance, named Broad Brook. This furnishes the water-power for most of the great manufacturing enterprises, rather than the Manhan. Broad Brook itself has a small tributary in the south part, bearing the suspicious name Rum Brook.

The town has many landscapes of quiet beauty, and all around it, within easy drive, is some of nature's grandest scenery. It is a charming place for the summer tourist who may desire to retain his connection with modern civilization, newspapers, and all the pleasures of a cultured town, and yet enjoy nature in her loveliest forms. A recent author writes with enthusiasm of his native town:

"It is such a spot as a lover of nature might select for a residence. Its streams flowing down from the mountains which encircle it, bearing fertility on their bosoms; the mountains themselves standing like watch-towers guarding it; its variation of hill and dale and plain; its beautiful trees and streets; all combine to render it a delightful retreat from the cares and turmoils of city life."

EARLY SETTLEMENT—SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

John Webb was undoubtedly the first settler upon the present territory of Easthampton. In the town-records of Northampton, under date of Dec. 13, 1664, it is stated that the town granted John Webb a piece of land at Pascommuck to build a house upon. In February of the same year the following language appears in a legal document: "I, John Webb, Sr., of Pascommuck, do engage," etc. This would indicate that he was already located out there at the time the town confirmed his title. It is known that he was a citizen of Northampton as early as 1657, as his name appears in a transaction with certain sachems for the purchase of land. As this was only three years after the settlement of Northampton, it might be inferred that he was one of the first proprietors, and that he might have settled at the Oxbow upon his arrival. In 1663 or 1664 it was recorded that John Webb brought in several wolves' heads, probably to secure the colonial bounty offered.

In Lyman's History and in his Centennial address there are given the facts above stated, but his conclusion does not locate Webb at Nashawannuck until the spring of 1665, though the legal document above quoted by Mr. Lyman expressly describes him as "of Pascommuck," February, 1664. The house of Mr. Webb was near the present residence of Henry Clapp (late of Augustus Clapp). Its precise location is said to have been on a little rise of ground near the bank of the river, at the westernmost bend of the "old bed," at that time the only channel. Here, then, was the pioneer opening in the forests of Easthampton, nearly two and a quarter centuries ago. It is said that Mr. Webb died in 1670, though some authorities regard the date as uncertain.

Robert Danks, of Northampton, married his widow, and, with two sons of Webb, resided at Nashawannuck many years, and the descendants of Mr. Webb were at the same place seventy-five years or more.

The next place of settlement was probably on Saw-mill Brook, north side of the Manhan and near the present Bassett place.

Permission to erect a saw-mill was given in 1674 to David Wilton, Medad Pomeroy, and Joseph Taylor. There seems to be no evidence showing whether the mill was built about that time, or, if it was, whether a dwelling-house for any of the parties was erected near it.

The same uncertainty appears to exist with reference to the grist-mill, the privilege of building which was granted twelve years later to Samuel Bartlett, at the falls of the Manhan. It is generally understood that both of these mills were built soon after their respective grants were made; but tradition locates Joseph Bartlett as the first settler there, some thirty-eight years later, and states that he opened a tavern. It must be supposed, then, that these mills were not built at the time the grants were voted, or that they were run by non-residents for forty or fifty years, with nobody living anywhere in that neighborhood, nor even in Southampton,—all of which seems decidedly improbable. Even the Pascommuck settlement was twenty to twenty-five years later, and, judging by reliable records, it is not easy to see that there were any settlers at the time these mills are said to have been built in Westhampton, Huntington, Southampton, and Easthampton, with the single exception of the Webbs or Danks at Nashawannuck.

Neither tradition nor documentary evidence locates the Pomeroyes at the mountain until fifty years later than the date of the mills, and Sergt. Ebenezer Corse was not "on the plain" until near 1730. Yet these mills, only distant from Northampton four or five miles, may have been carried on exactly as it has been supposed; but the grinding and the sawing must have been wholly for Northampton, or nearly so, for fifty years. This unsettled problem we respectfully refer to the antiquarians of Easthampton.

If we accept the usual account, the next settlement in point of time was that of Pascommuck. In 1699 the town of Northampton granted lots to five families at Pascommuck. The five were Moses Hutchinson, John Searl, Benoni Jones, Samuel Janes, and Benjamin Janes. It is understood they removed there in 1700. The settlement was about opposite the mouth of the Manhan, on the present farms of L. W. Parsons, Joseph Parsons, and Gilbert A. Clark. After the fearful slaughter which broke up the settlement in 1704, some ten years elapsed before the place was again occupied.

"The new settlers were Nathaniel Alexander, who married the widow of John Searl (the latter one of the slain) and lived several years on the place. Samuel Janes took the place of his father. In 1720, John Lankton bought the place formerly owned by Benoni Jones. He lived, however, only nine years to enjoy it. His widow married a man by the name of Wharton, but for some cause he soon after left her, and she was known for many years as Widow Wharton. Her son, John Lankton, afterward removed to West Springfield. His father owned a slave while he lived in Pascommuck, who was valued at £60 in his inventory. It appears also that Joseph Bartlett was also a slaveholder, from the fact that he set free two slaves by his will. There is also a slave mentioned in the list of Major Clapp's estate, but whether it was one he purchased, or one of those set free by his Uncle Joseph Bartlett, is not certain.

"The place of John Searl was occupied by his son Elisha, after the latter returned from captivity. Ebenezer Ferry, from Springfield, at a later period, bought the Hutchinson place, and lived on it twenty-five years or more."

The notes given elsewhere from the Northampton town-records indicate pretty nearly the precise location of the five families who settled in 1700.

Returning to the falls of the Manhan "at the old cartway," we find that Samuel Bartlett, in 1705, gave the mill and land about it to his son Joseph Bartlett, and that the latter finally built a dwelling-house and settled there about 1720 or 1725. It is not related that he had any children, and when he died most of his property was left to his nephew, Jonathan Clapp, who lived with him.

As early as this it is probable some expectation was felt that a town and village would grow up around this point, as he left some property to his brothers on condition that they should give £100, old tenor, to the first church of Christ that should be erected and celebrate divine ordinances within half a mile of his house. This condition was afterward complied with.

About the same time that Joseph Bartlett built his house, his brother, David Bartlett, built and settled about forty rods west of where Julius Pomeroy now resides, and his son followed him upon the same place nearly to the time of the Revolution. To this house during the war were brought persons afflicted with the smallpox. Col. Hosford, of Northampton, died there, and also Rev. John Hooker, the successor of Rev. Jonathan Edwards. The first was buried in the field a little way from the house, and Mr. Hooker in the Northampton cemetery.

Not far from the same time, 1726-28, four brothers by the name of Wait settled between these Bartlett brothers, not far from where R. C. Dresser now lives.

Next perhaps in order of time were the Pomeroyes, Eldad and Samuel, who are counted as pioneers of both Southampton and Easthampton. Prof. Edwards' Centennial address upon Southampton infers that they were located as early as 1725. Other writers make the date 1732. The earlier is probably correct. In the division of Southampton land, June 8, 1730, the Pomeroyes were permitted to locate their share "near their meadows." This proves their possession and cultivation at that date, though not positively their residence.

The first settlement "on the Plain" was made by Sergt. Ebenezer Corse. This was probably about 1728. He built the house where Spencer Clapp formerly lived, now owned by Theron Pomeroy. To him the town is indebted for one of its finest streets, he having cut away the woods and opened what is now Main Street, straight for more than a mile from the centre of his house. Tradition relates that he was a bold and fearless man and declined to move into the fort at the time other citizens did. When, however, he discovered traces of an ambush actually laid for him, he prudently allowed "discretion to be the better part of valor," and came in.

Ebenezer Corse is mentioned in the records of Southampton. At the drawing of lots, June 8, 1730, it was voted that Ebenezer Corse should have his share "near his house." This indicates that he was then settled there. It thus appears that a settlement of considerable importance was fairly begun 1725 to 1730. The early annals are silent as to other names for nearly fifteen years, but it is hardly probable that this length of time intervened without any addition to the settlement. There were doubtless others whose names have not come down to the present,—families who perhaps remained a short time, and, moving away, left no line descending to preserve the traditions of settlement. This is indicated, though not proved, by the fact that previous to 1745 the town of Northampton LEASED the school lands to various individuals. In that year the town sold the school meadow of eighty acres above the grist-mill to Deacon Stephen Wright and Benjamin Lyman.

The former settled where Samuel Hurlburt now lives, and the latter near Joel Bassett's present house. Benjamin Lyman, Jr., and Stephen Wright, Jr., both settled in the neighborhood of Ebenezer Corse, but not "soon after" Corse, as one writer states, for Benjamin Lyman, Jr., was not born until 1727, a year or two before Corse's settlement. It may be inferred that, as young men of twenty to twenty-five years, they may have located there in 1749 or 1750,—that is, "soon after" their fathers did on the school lands.

Benjamin Clapp and Aaron Clapp also probably moved there about the same time. The descendants of each of these four families occupy their respective ancestral homesteads, viz., Ansel B. Lyman, James H. Lyman (through his wife), John and Luther L. Wright, and William N. Clapp and son.

In 1750, Joseph Wright and Titus Wright were established in the north part of Easthampton.

About this time also—1750—Josiah Phelps settled on Park Hill, upon the place long occupied in later times by J. Rockwell Wright. Mr. Phelps had no children, and at his death his farm passed into the hands of Jonathan Bartlett. Park Hill is said to derive its name from an inclosure built to capture deer.

About 1760, John Hannum and Eleazer Hannum settled upon the place now occupied by J. M. and Edwin Hannum.

Israel Hendrick came from Connecticut about 1774, and settled in the southeast part of the town, where there have been so many of the same name in modern times. His first log house stood on the east side of Broad Brook, where in late years Pearson Hendrick lived.

Other families in this neighborhood, probably before the Revolution, were Joel Robbins, Benjamin Stephens, and Benjamin Strong.

With the thirty families thus mentioned, from John Webb down for a hundred years, there were undoubtedly others whose names are not preserved.

Perhaps the true pioneer period of a town may be said to be the time of settlement preceding civil organization. In the case of Easthampton this is longer than usual, owing to the territory remaining for many years, both ecclesiastically and civilly, a part of Northampton.

No early assessment-roll of polls and estates seems to be preserved in the town-clerk's office of Easthampton, and a complete list of settlers at the time of incorporation cannot be easily made.

The names appearing in the proceedings of the early town-meetings are mentioned in the following list, with their location in town, as far as can be readily stated after the lapse of nearly one hundred years:

RESIDENCE OF HON. EDMUND H. SAWYER, EASTHAMPTON, MASS.

RESIDENCE OF MRS. EMILY C. WILLISTON, EASTHAMPTON, MASS.

L. H. Everts, Publ'r, Phila.

Elisha Alvord, Pascommuck, homestead where Edward Clark now lives, the late Luther Clark place; he had one son, Elisha. Bildad Brewer, homestead where Joseph Bosworth now resides. John Brown, homestead probably in the Pascommuck neighborhood, near East Street school-house. Aaron Clapp, Sr., lived on James H. Lyman's present place; and Aaron Clapp, Jr., where Martin Wood now lives; Levi Clapp was a brother of Aaron, Jr. Jonathan Clapp, homestead the present Fargo place. John Clapp, homestead in the west district, buildings gone; they stood on the brow of the hill, a little southeast of where Mirick Clapp now lives. Capt. Joseph Clapp, homestead the old hotel on the place now owned by the heirs of Lucas W. Hannum.

Benjamin Clapp, homestead the present place of Z. A. Thayer, and the present place of Wm. N. Clapp, is a part of the old farm; children, Rachel (Mrs. Nathaniel Edwards), Northampton, died a little over one hundred years old; Ocran, Easthampton, on a farm given by his grandfather, Jonathan; Anna (Mrs. Medad Lyman), Easthampton, then Vermont; Clarissa (Mrs. Jonathan Lyman), Vermont; Sophia (Mrs. Rev. Gad Newell), New Hampshire; Dr. Benjamin Clapp, South Carolina; Solomon (father of Wm. N.), Easthampton, on the old place; Sally (Mrs. Daniel Lyman), Easthampton; Spencer Clapp, Easthampton, on a part of the Corse place; Phebe (Mrs. Levi Clapp), Easthampton; Fanny (Mrs. Jared Clark), Easthampton, afterward Ohio; Caroline (Mrs. Milton Knight), of Huntington.

Philip Clark, homestead near the Mount Tom Station, where Uriel Clark now lives. Obadiah Clark, homestead the present place of Lewis S. Clark. Asahel Clark, homestead near the present Williston Mills, opposite the office, still standing. Uriel Clark, an old name, probably same homestead as given for Philip above. Phineas Clark, homestead on East Street, half-mile south of the Philip Clapp place. Job Clark, homestead where Henry Clark now resides. Oliver Clark, homestead on Park Hill, west part of town. David Chapman, Jr., a son of David, mentioned below. David Chapman, blacksmith, homestead just beyond the covered bridge; the "old cartway" was close by his blacksmith-shop. Zadoc Danks, homestead the place recently bought by Mr. Hendrick, on Pleasant Street. Ephraim Danks; he lived in Nashawannuck; descendant of the early Danks. Solomon Ferry, homestead where Deacon Edward Clark now lives (probably). Eleazar Hannum, homestead where Deacon Eleazar Hannum now lives. Joel Hannum, homestead the same. John Hannum, in the same neighborhood. Jonathan Janes. Edwin S. Janes lives on the old Janes homestead, in Pleasant Street. Benjamin Lyman, homestead where Ansel B. Lyman now lives. David Lyman, homestead on West Street, where Samuel M. Lyman now lives. Ezra Ludden, homestead the well-known place of Ebenezer Wood on Park Street. Solomon Pomeroy, homestead where Mirick Clapp now lives. William Phelps, homestead the present Julius Pomeroy place. Elisha Searl; he was a builder. Stephen Wright, homestead where John Wright now lives. Elijah Wright, homestead present place of Samuel Hurlburt.

These are the men who held the town offices, were appointed on committees, and transacted all the public business for the years 1785 and 1786, or were named on the first jury list.

The following summary of votes relating to the present territory of Easthampton (and perhaps a portion of Southampton) is taken from the records in the office of the town clerk of Northampton. It gives the dates of some incidents already mentioned in this sketch and many others that do not appear to have been previously published.

The grant permitting the Indians to build a fort was voted April 13, 1664. Two of the conditions were, that "they shall not Pow-wow on that place, nor anywhere else among us; that they shall not get liquors or cider and drink themselves drunk as to kill one another as they have done."

John Webb killed two wolves and received 1 pound, 1667.

Nov. 4, 1674.—The town granted to David Wilton, Medad Pomeroy, and John Taylor liberty to set up a saw-mill, and also granted them the liberty of the commons to fall timber; the place they granted them "is on the brook on the right hand of the cartway going over Manhan River, on this side, that runs into the river, and whilst the mill is in use they have granted them ten or twelve acres of land for a pasture."

March 8, 1678.—The town granted to John Webb, Nathaniel Alexander, and Richard Webb a parcel of land over Manhan River, under the hill, that the Indian fort stands upon, and they are to have six acres apiece, or to the broad brook that comes into Manhan, which comes along beside the mountain.

Jan. 4, 1685.—Voted to Joseph Parsons, and such others as should join with him, liberty to make a cart-bridge over the mouth of the Manhan River, provided they damnify no man's property.

Jan. 3, 1686.—At a legal town-meeting, Jan. 3, 1686, the town considering of a motion of Mr. Samuel Bartlett to set up a corn-mill upon Manhan River, below the cartway on the falls, and on his desire the town granted to him the place he desired, and the privilege of the stream for two miles, not to be interrupted by any person or persons, but said Bartlett have the free use of the place, and liberty to be to him and to his heirs forever; that is to say, so long as he or they keep a corn-mill there, and maintain it fit for service.

April 9, 1688.—A tract of 30 acres was granted him on the south side of the Manhan, on the consideration of his building a mill there, to be laid out next to Mr. Hawley's land.

April 9, 1688, voted Mr. Joseph Hawley forty acres of land in the meadow on south side of Manhan River, in the meadow commonly called "Lieut. Wilton's meadow." This was in consideration of his services in getting the Town Bounds settled.

April 24, 1691.—In a general grant of home-lots the name of John Webb still appears,—perhaps another John Webb than the pioneer of 1664; under the same date, Caleb Pomeroy had two home-lots granted, "joining to his meadow up Manhan River." This shows very early possession by the Pomeroy's on the mountain and the meadow still bearing their name.

March 6, 1693.—The value of "the Pascommuck farm," in making out rates, was to be decided by a committee,—two by the town and two by the owners; the two latter were Isaac Sheldon, Sen., and William Holton.

Sept. 16, 1698.—The town granted four acres apiece of land for home-lots, over Manhan River near Pascommuck, to accommodate them, they having purchased land at Pascommuck,—the men are Samuel Janes, Benjamin Janes, Benoni Jones, and John Searl,—on condition that they make a good fence to secure themselves from the town cattle, which fence is to be four feet eight inches in height. They must live on the land four years before their title is perfect.

Dec. 28, 1699.—Moses Hutchinson had a home-lot granted to him at Pascommuck on the same condition the persons aforesaid had their home-lots granted.

April 8, 1702.—Voted that all the common land lying on the north side of the school land, betwixt Samuel Pomeroy's home-lot and the saw-mill, should be added to the school land and be for the use of the school,—only reserving liberty of an highway six rods wide up to Samuel Pomeroy's land lying by the side of the school land.

At the same time, voted that all the low land below Samuel Bartlett's corn-mill, down as far as Robert Danks' farm, should be laid out for the school's use forever; bounded on Manhan River southerly, and the brow of the hill northerly.

May 20, 1702.—From the report of a committee upon fencing at "Hog's Bladder," it appears that John Searl, Jun., was "to make a good and sufficient gate at the landing-place on the south side of Manhan River, near the mouth of it as we go to Pascommuck, for which he is to have three acres of land on the westerly side of his home-lot there on Pascommuck side."

2. We agreed with said Searl that he was to make a good and sufficient fence from said gate down the Great River unto Samuel Janes' lot.

We agreed with Moses Hutchinson to make and maintain a good and sufficient fence from the uppermost post of said gate up the river the whole breadth of his lot, which is four acres. We agreed with John Clark to make and maintain a good & sufficient fence from Moses Hutchinson's lot up the river unto the bending of the river unto a red or black tree marked upon the brow next the river; and he was to have four acres of land, forty and two rods along the river, east side 12 rods, west side, twenty rods. At the south side of said lot is a highway of six rods in breadth.

Feb. 11, 1703.—The town took action with reference to the division of land on the south side of Manhan River; that on the west side of the county road. The town measurers, John Clark and Samuel Wright, were directed to measure the length of the land from Manhan to Webb's rock, which is our south bounds.

The "additional grant" was obtained by an order in council, June 4, 1701.

March 1, 1703.—Capt. John Taylor was granted 80 acres of land to be taken up about Whitelof brook, somewhere in that half mile square which lieth near Springfield bounds; to lie together on one side of that half mile which Springfield men claim; this 80 acres to be to Capt. John Taylor during his life-time, and after him to be his two sons, Thomas and Samuel, and their heirs forever.

May 21, 1716.—Granted to Ebenezer Pomeroy the remainder of the half mile square not before granted to Capt. Taylor and his sons, bounded northerly by the line between Northampton and Springfield from the Great River over the mountain extended to the county road to Westfield. Westerly by the county road, and southerly and easterly by the line between Springfield and Northampton.

A road to "Hog's Bladder" was laid out March 7, 1715. The committee that laid it were Timothy Baker, Samuel Wright, and Thomas Sheldon, and the parties through whose lands it appears to have been laid were Preserved Clapp, Thomas Sheldon, Benjamin Edwards, Jr.

The following notes are of very early date :

John Webb signs the planters' agreement, Oct. 3, 1653.

June 9, 1686, is found an order with reference to the road through the meadows to "Hog's Bladder."

Dec. 1, 1657, 2½ acres granted to John Webb in great rainbow.

Feb. 9, 1658, John Webb was to have 12 acres in Manhan.

Dec. 16, 1659, exchanging of lands noticed with John Webb.

July 25, 1660, John Webb's tools that Medad Pomeroy shall have on Terms: a pair of Bellows, an Anvil, a hand hammer, 3 pairs of tongs, &c., &c.

This shows that John Webb was a blacksmith as well as "a mighty hunter."

May 15, 1662, John Webb brought in a wolf's-head & skin.

June 8, 1663, another, and Sept. 7, another. In the year 1664, four more.

The meadows of the Manhan were worked as early as 1662, as appears by regulations concerning roads.

Dec. 1, 1729.—Voted to Give Elisha Searl six acres of land on the Fort Plain, beyond Pascommuck, between the first lot in the mountain Division and the land belonging to Jeremiah Webb and Robert Danks. Committee Dea. John Clark.

Jan. 25, 1731.—Granted Benjamin Stebbins four acres of land upon the Fort Plain, near Mt. Tom, to be laid out adjoining to Elisha Searl's land.

The following are taken from old files of the Hampshire Gazette :

August 5, 1789.—Silas Brown, David Lyman, and Silas Brown, Jr., gave notice that they shall open a publick house for the accommodation of the people attending the ordination August 13th.

July 2, 1792.—Joseph Clapp, Jr., merchant, offers what seems now a sufficiently varied assortment of goods :

"Calicoes, chintzes, West India Rum, Cross-Cut Saws, Steal plate. Also in a few days will have N. E. Rum, Wine, Brandy, Frying-pans, Altum, Copercas, Rice, Rusins, &c."

Dec. 10, 1794.—Joseph Clapp, Jr., advertises powder, shott, Coniac brandy, sugar, Malaga wine, Chintzes, Lutestrings, &c.

Feb. 19, 1798.—Jonathan Lyman and Obadiah Janes give notice that they have formed a partnership as merchants, & offer a varied assortment of goods.

Feb. 27, 1798.—Lyman & Janes announce the dissolution of their partnership, Obadiah Janes to adjust the accounts and continue the business, as appears by a subsequent advertisement.

June 9, 1800.—Benajah Brewer announces that nails are cut by him, which he will sell cheap at the retail price.

EASTHAMPTON, July 4, 1801.—Celebration here was opened by a national salute at sunrise. At 11 o'clock a procession moved from Mr. J. Clapp's to the meeting-house. An address was made to the throne of Grace by Rev. Mr. Williston, and he also delivered an elegant and patriotic oration. The dinner was at Mr. Luther Clapp's, and toasts were drank, accompanied with discharges of Capt. Brewer's artillery. Toasts; among others, "The United States, may they realize that united we live, divided we die!"

ORGANIZATION.

Just before the Revolutionary war some steps were taken to establish a separate town. The people upon the territory now included in Easthampton expressed their views by petitions to Northampton and Southampton in 1773. In the former town a committee reported favorably, and the report was adopted. Southampton opposed the proposition, and the troubles of the Revolutionary period delayed any further action until 1781-82. The project was then revived, but it required several years of effort to secure the act of incorporation, which was passed by the General Court in the summer of 1785.

Robert Breck, Esq., of Northampton, issued a warrant for the first meeting. It was directed to Benjamin Lyman, and the people met accordingly at the house of Capt. Joseph Clapp. The territory was set off as a district, having all the rights of a town except that of representation in the General Court. This district feature was a remnant of colonial policy, intended to retain power in the hands of the royal authorities, by not allowing a rapid increase of the people's representatives in the Legislature. The policy survived the Revolution, districts continuing to be incorporated for a few years.

The name East-Hampton was rather appropriate, not so much from its location, as from the fact that the three other Hamptons were already named, and it needed this to complete the natural series. And, though almost inclosed by the others, this town extends at one point to the east line of the original tract, and has so far a right to be called East-hampton.

The act incorporating Easthampton as a district was approved by Governor Bowdoin, June 17, 1785. The warrant was issued June 29, 1785. It was directed to Benjamin Lyman, who "truly and faithfully notified and warned the inhabitants." The record of the first meeting is as follows :

HAMPSHIRE Co., ss. :

At a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the District of Easthampton, in said county, on Monday, the 4th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1785, Robert Breck, Moderator, the following District officers were chosen, viz.: David Lyman, District Clerk; Aaron Clapp, Jr., Constable; Jonathan Clapp, Capt. Philip Clark, Enos Pomeroy, Surveyors of Ways; Stephen Wright, Capt. Philip Clark, Eleazer Hannum, Selectmen and Assessors; Joel Parsons, Benjamin Lyman, Tythingmen; Obadiah Clark, Lemuel Lyman, Sabbath-wardens; Daniel Alexander, Surveyor of Shingles and Lumber; Solomon Ferry, Elijah Wright, Fence-viewers; John Brown, Joel Hannum, Howards; John Clapp, David Chapman, Jr., Elisha Alvord, Hug-reeves; Capt. Joseph Clapp, District Treasurer; David Chapman, Clerk of the Market; Zadoc Danks, Sealer of Leather; Benjamin Clapp, Packer.

The foregoing officers being all sworn, the meeting was dissolved.

Attest:

ROBERT BRECK, Moderator.

The newly-elected Selectmen called a District meeting for the 13th of July, at which action was taken upon various subjects.

Stephen Wright, Philip Clark, Obadiah Janes, John Hannum, Capt. Joseph Clapp, Benjamin Lyman, Lieut. Joel Parsons were appointed a committee to look into the cost of getting set off, and also the cost of the meeting-house.

Voted, to keep the road in repair from the meeting-house to Pascommuck.

Nov. 16, 1785.—Voted, a committee to look into the state of the highways, and report,—Capt. Philip Clark, Eleazer Hannum, Elijah Wright.

Voted, a committee to see what land the District own on the south side of the Manhan, and to sell the same,—John Hannum, Asahel Clark, Philip Clark.

Voted, that the constables might warn common ordinary town-meetings "by an outcry on a public day."

Jan. 11, 1786.—Voted, a committee to view the ground from Broad Brook to Pascommuck and report what alteration ought to be made,—Benjamin Clapp, Eleazer Hannum, Stephen Wright, Solomon Ferry, Elijah Wright.

Voted, the Selectmen should lay a road "where they now travel across Daniel Alexander's land, and allow said Daniel Alexander twelve shillings damage."

Voted, a committee to inspect the bridge near Capt. Clapp's, and provide timber for the repair of the same,—Joseph Clapp, Elijah Wright, and Lieut. Asahel Clark.

Committee on Pascommuck Bridge,—Joel Parsons, Solomon Ferry, Jonathan Janes.

Committee "to sell three pieces of land near the river called Manhan,"—John Hannum, Ephraim Danks, Benjamin Lyman.

Voted to allow Mr. Aaron Clapp five shillings for the loss of an axe at the raising of the meeting-house.

The selectmen were directed to make an assessment to pay the district debts.

At the first regular March meeting, held March 22, 1786, there were chosen: Benjamin Lyman, Moderator; David Lyman, District Clerk; Joseph Clapp, District Treasurer; Stephen Wright, Philip Clark, Eleazer Hannum, Selectmen and Assessors; Joel Parsons, Joseph Clapp, Wardens; Eleazer Hannum, Solomon Ferry, Aaron Clapp, Jun., Surveyors of Highways; Solomon Pomeroy, Uriel Clark, Field-drivers; Jonathan Clapp, Noah Janes, Tythingmen; Elijah Wright, Obadiah Clark, Fence-viewers; David Chapman, Clerk of the Market; Enos Janes, Elijah Wright, Jun., Elisha Searl, Seth Hannum, Phineas Clark, Hug-reeves; Daniel Alexander, Surveyor of Shingles; Zadoc Danks, Sealer of Leather; Benjamin Clapp, Packer; Benjamin Clapp, Constable.

Committee to view a way to Park Hill,—Eleazer Hannum, Obadiah Janes, Elijah Wright, Bildad Brewer, Philip Clark.

Jurymen designated were Philip Clark, Asahel Clark, Daniel Alexander, John Brown, Joel Parsons, Solomon Ferry, Joel Hannum, Ephraim Danks, Job Clark, Obadiah Clark, David Chapman, Ezra Ludden, Aaron Clapp, Jun., Joseph Clapp, Jonathan Clapp, William Phelps, Elijah Wright, David Lyman, Eleazer Hannum, Enos Pomeroy, Solomon Pomeroy, John Hannum, Benjamin Clapp, Oliver Clark.

April 3, 1786.—Obadiah Clark was allowed a premium for a wolf-head equal to one-seventh of what Northampton allowed last year for three wolf-heads.

April 27, 1786.—Chose Capt. Philip Clark to attend the Hatfield Convention, with instructions "to use his influence not to have the County split."

June 22, 1786.—Voted, that Noah Janes be collector, and have 32 shillings on the hundred pounds for his services.

Aug. 21, 1786.—Chose Capt. Joseph Clapp to attend a convention, called at the request of several towns, to meet at Hatfield. This was one of the "Shays Conventions."

Place of the District and Town-Meetings.—The first meeting was held "at the dwelling-house of Capt. Joseph Clapp." This house is still standing, and is now owned by heirs of Lucas W. Hannum, occupied as a tenant-house. It was the well-known tavern of Deacon Thaddeus Clapp for many years. The next meeting, July 13, 1785, was called "at the meeting-house frame." This must have evidently had a superior system of ventilation,—a qualification much studied for modern public halls.

In the fall of the same year the meetings were called "at the meeting-house," and there they continued to be held for a period of forty-eight years,—the last one Aug. 8, 1833.

The first regularly called meeting "in the town-hall" was held Nov. 11, 1833. This hall was built in pursuance of the following action:

Nov. 12, 1832.—Voted, to raise a suitable sum of money for the erection of a town-house, provided the four classes unite in building a grammar-school house. Voted, to leave with the committee chosen at a previous meeting, Luther Clark, chairman, the making of a draft and estimates of the expense.

Mr. Pomeroy is alluded to as contractor in some of the records, and the full committee, appointed some years before the work was really completed, were Luther Clark, Ahira Lyman, John Phelps, Joel Parsons, and John Ludden. This joint school and town building is now a dwelling-house on Pleasant Street, occupied by C. S. Rust, owned by Theodore Clapp, moved there from the old site occupied by the present town-hall.

The movement for the second town-hall began some time before the town finally authorized the building. March 8, 1841, the warrant contained a clause relating to a new town-hall, but no action was taken in relation to it. At an adjourned meeting, the first Monday of April, a committee were appointed, consisting of Samuel Williston, Augustus Clapp, Thomas J. Pomeroy. They made a report favorable to the enterprise, and the report was accepted. They were continued as a building committee. They appointed an additional committee "to see if the house is built according to contract,"—John Ludden, Jason Clark, and John Hannum. Voted to convey to Samuel Williston the old town-house for the sum of $200, the sum to be applied toward the building of the new.

March 14, 1842, committee reported by their chairman, Samuel Williston, that the new town-house was nearly finished, and the town voted to accept the job if approved by the committee previously appointed.

This town-hall began to be used for town-meetings about this time, and they were continued there for nearly thirty years. The building then became the property of the First Church, and it was moved to a site adjacent to their house of worship, remodeled into a chapel, and is so used at the present time. The third town-hall is the new and spacious edifice now in use.

TOWN-HALL, EASTHAMPTON.

"Its erection was voted in the fall of 1867. The building committee consisted of Seth Warner, E. H. Sawyer, H. G. Knight, L. W. Hannum, E. R. Bosworth, and L. D. Lyman. The foundation was begun in April, 1868. The corner-stone was laid July 4, 1868. The building was ready for occupation by June, 1869.

"One of the most notable days in the history of the town was that of its dedication, Tuesday, June 29, 1869. A large procession, led by the Haydenville Band, and under the chief direction of Capt. F. A. Rust, moved through the principal streets, and escorted the orator and distinguished guests to the Hall. The soldiers of the war, under command of Capt. J. A. Loomis and Lieuts. J. H. Judd and H. H. Strong, were in attendance. The exercises at the Hall were in the following order: After an overture by the Germania Band, Hon. H. G. Knight, of the committee of arrangements, introduced Hon. Samuel Williston, president of the day, who made a few remarks, after which a prayer of dedication was offered by Rev. A. M. Colton. The keys were presented by Seth Warner, in behalf of the building committee, to L. D. Lyman, of the committee to be in charge of the Hall. The principal feature of the occasion was the admirable address by Hon. Ensign H. Kellogg, of Pittsfield. Brief remarks by Lieut.-Gov. Tucker closed the dedicatory services. The day was one of the finest, and an immense assemblage participated in the exercises. A concert was given in the evening by Miss Adelaide Phillips, of Boston, and eighteen members of the Germania Band. It was a rare musical treat, and was enjoyed by fully 1100 people. A promenade concert was also held on the following evening.

"The Hall is in the Lombard style of architecture, is of brick laid in black mortar, and its height is relieved by bands of Portland stone. The front is especially ornate. It is very handsomely finished, both without and within. Its ground dimensions are 104 by 60 feet, exclusive of the towers. At the north corner is a tower 75 feet in height; and at the south corner the Memorial Tower, 12 feet square and 133 feet high, which has near its summit an ornamental projecting balcony, affording a fine outlook. Upon its front, near the base, it supports a memorial tablet of white Italian marble, 12 feet in height, decorated on either side with columns of black marble. It ends at the top in a triangular block, surmounted by a cross. It bears upon its face the inscription: 'Easthampton erects this tower, a memorial to these her sons, who died for their country, during the great Rebellion.' Then follow the names of the honored dead.

"The first story of the building contains a small hall and rooms for the town officers and for the public library, with ample corridors and stairways leading to the spacious upper hall. This is capable of seating 1100. The entire cost of the structure was $65,000. The tablet cost $2000. The architect was Mr. Charles E. Parker, of Boston, and the builder E. R. Bosworth. The masonry was supervised by George P. Shoales, and the painting by F. J. Gould. The elaborate frescoing was done by William Carl, of Boston."

SELECTMEN FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE DISTRICT, 1785.

- 1785-86.—Stephen Wright, Capt. P. Clark, Eleazer Hannum.
- 1787.—Benjamin Lyman, Elijah Wright, Eleazer Hannum.
- 1788-89.—Philip Clark, Elijah Wright, Eleazer Hannum.
- 1790-91.—Lemuel Lyman, Joel Parsons, Noah Janes.
- 1792.—Lemuel Lyman, Joel Parsons, Aaron Clapp, Jr.
- 1793.—Lemuel Lyman, Joel Parsons, Oliver Clark.
- 1794.—Eleazer Hannum, Noah Janes, Oliver Clark.
- 1795.—Elijah Wright, Lemuel Lyman, Joel Parsons.
- 1796.—Eleazer Wright, Noah Janes, Oliver Clark.
- 1797.—Elijah Wright, Lemuel Lyman, Joseph Clapp, Jr.
- 1798.—Noah Janes, Lemuel Lyman, Joel Parsons.
- 1799.—David Lyman, Levi Clapp, Joel Parsons.
- 1800.—Oliver Clark, Levi Clapp, Solomon Lyman.
- 1801.—Oliver Clark, Joel Parsons, Solomon Lyman.
- 1802-3.—Oliver Clark, Uriel Clark, Levi Clapp.
- 1804.—Oliver Clark, Solomon Lyman, Justus Lyman.
- 1805.—Oliver Clark, Solomon Lyman, Jonathan Janes, Jr.
- 1806.—Thaddeus Clapp, Solomon Lyman, Jonathan Janes, Jr.
- 1807.—Thaddeus Clapp, Oliver Clark, Justus Lyman.
- 1808.—Jonathan Janes, Jr., Oliver Clark, Justus Lyman.
- 1809.—John Hannum, Thaddeus Parsons, Justus Lyman.
- 1810.—John Hannum, Jonathan Janes, Jr., Justus Lyman.
- 1811.—John Hannum, Thaddeus Parsons, Justus Lyman.
- 1812.—John Hannum, Thaddeus Clapp, Justus Lyman.
- 1813.—Solomon Lyman, Thaddeus Parsons, Justus Lyman.
- 1814-16.—John Hannum, Solomon Ferry, Justus Lyman.
- 1817-21.—John Hannum, John Ludden, Seth Janes.
- 1822-23.—John Ludden, Ocran Clapp, Julius Clark.
- 1824-26.—John Ludden, John Hannum, Luther Clark.
- 1827-29.—Levi Clapp, John Hannum, Luther Clark.
- 1830.—John Ludden, John Hannum, Luke Janes.
- 1831-32.—John Ludden, Daniel Lyman, Luke Janes.
- 1833.—John Hannum, Levi Clapp, Luke Janes.
- 1834.—Luther Clark, Levi Clapp, John Ludden.
- 1835-37.—Luther Clark, Jason Janes, John Ludden.
- 1838.—Luke Janes, E. W. Hannum, John Ludden.
- 1839-40.—L. P. Lyman, E. W. Hannum, Luther Clark.
- 1841.—E. W. Hannum, Augustus Clapp, Lorenzo Clapp.
- 1842-44.—E. W. Hannum, Zenas Clark, Solomon Alvord.
- 1845.—E. W. Hannum, Luther Clark, Theodore Clapp.
- 1846-47.—E. W. Hannum, Luther Clark, Solomon Alvord.
- 1848-49.—Lemuel P. Lyman, Luther Lyman, Solomon Alvord.
- 1850.—E. Ferry, Luke Janes, Solomon Alvord.
- 1851.—E. Ferry, Luke Janes, H. G. Knight.
- 1852.—E. W. Hannum, Luke Janes, H. G. Knight.
- 1853.—E. W. Hannum, E. Ferry, Luther Clark.
- 1854.—J. H. Lyman, E. Ferry, Luke Janes.

- 1855.—L. F. Clapp, Q. P. Lyman, Ransloe Daniels.
 1856.—L. F. Clapp, Joseph Parsons, Solomon Alvord.
 1857.—E. W. Hannum, Joseph Parsons, L. P. Lyman.
 1858.—Alanson Clark, L. F. Clapp, E. H. Sawyer.
 1859-60.—Alanson Clark, L. F. Clapp, Levi Parsons.
 1861.—Alanson Clark, Lewis S. Clark, Levi Parsons.
 1862.—Lewis S. Clark, Alanson Clark, Seth Warner, Lauren D. Lyman, Lewis Clapp.
 1863.—Lauren D. Lyman, Seth Warner, E. S. Janes.
 1864.—Lauren D. Lyman, E. S. Janes, E. A. Hubbard.
 1865.—Edwin S. Janes, Lewis S. Clark, Joel Bassett.
 1866.—Joel L. Bassett, Ansel B. Lyman, Lewis S. Clark.
 1867-69.—S. Alvord, Q. P. Lyman, L. W. Hannum.
 1870.—S. Alvord, Theodore Clark, A. S. Ludden.
 1871.—G. L. Manchester, Theodore Clark, A. S. Ludden.
 1872-76.—A. S. Ludden, J. W. Wilson, H. T. Hannum.
 1877.—H. J. Bly, A. S. Ludden, A. P. Clark.
 1878.—A. S. Ludden, H. J. Bly, Austin P. Clark, E. R. Bosworth, elected at a special meeting in the place of H. J. Bly, resigned.
 1879.—A. S. Ludden, E. R. Bosworth, L. B. Searl.

TOWN CLERKS.

David Lyman, 1785-87; Jonathan Clapp, 1788-89; Joseph Clapp, Jr., 1790-96; Hophni Clapp, 1797-1802; Obadiah Janes (2d), 1803; Joseph Clapp, 1804-7; Obadiah Janes (2d), 1818-20; Levi White, 1811-12; Obadiah Janes (2d), 1813-15; Isaac Clapp, 1816; Zalmon Mallory, 1817-20; Isaac Clapp, 1821-22; Zalmon Mallory, 1823-28; Samuel Wright, 1829-33; Ebenezer Ferry, 1834-40; Edwin Hannum, 1841-42; Ebenezer Ferry, 1843-54; Lucius Preston, 1855-63; George S. Clark, 1864; Chas. B. Johnson, 1865-66; Watson H. Wright, 1867; Charles B. Johnson, 1868-69; Lafayette Clapp, 1870-76; Lafayette Clapp, Jr., 1877-80.

REPRESENTATIVES.

The district became a town and entitled to representation in 1807.

Dea. Thaddeus Clapp, 1810-12; P. Nichols, 1813-14; Capt. L. Lyman, 1815-16; John Hannum, 1817-18; Ahira Lyman, 1819; Dea. Thaddeus Clapp, 1820-24; Ahira Lyman, 1825; John Ludden, 1826-29; Ocran Clapp, 1830; Luther Clark, 1831; John Ludden, 1832; Jason Janes, 1833-34; Luther Clark, Jr., 1835-37; John Ludden, 1839; Samuel Williston, 1842; E. W. Hannum, 1843; E. M. Wright, 1844; Zenas Clark, 1845; H. Bartholomew, 1848; John Wright (2d), 1849-50; H. G. Knight, 1851-52; Lemuel Lyman, 1853; Seth Warner, 1854; Lafayette Clapp, 1859; Eli A. Hubbard, 1862; Edmund H. Sawyer, 1865; Lucas W. Hannum, 1870, died in office; Wm. G. Bassett, 1874; Lafayette Clapp, 1876-77.

VILLAGES.

New England villages are not incorporated, and have no municipal government of their own. To citizens of other States it appears strange to find the people of a rural district, several miles away, paying equally with the village residents for costly water-works, sidewalks, and similar public improvements; but it seems to be submitted to without a murmur in these law-abiding towns. Even a hapless non-resident owner of a wood-lot on the outskirts of a town will not perhaps complain if once in his life he can tread the pavement, drink of the water, and study in the library, for all of which he has helped pay, at the rate of two or three per cent. upon his property.

The village of Easthampton is situated nearly in the centre of the town, and at the present time extends over a wide extent of country, comprising a large number of manufactories and business establishments, pleasant private residences, and fine public buildings.

The beginning of the village was coeval with the settlement, or at least with the incorporation, of the district. It grew up near the old mill of the Bartletts, authorized by Northampton in 1675.

Whatever there was of a village in early times was at the falls of the Manhan, near the "old cartway." The entire extent of the present village, northeast, east, and southeast from the covered bridge, is the growth of modern times. There are men living who remember the erection of almost every house over all this newer territory, except a few of the old pioneer homesteads. They remember when in the vicinity of Union Street were broad fields of rye; when the woods still covered the present grounds of the seminary, and children went there Sunday noon to eat their dinner, and soberly, as became their New England training, watch the squirrels running from tree to tree; and some of these are not very old men, either. The present village is mainly the growth of thirty years.

Stores.—One of the first to open a store was Joseph Clapp, Jr. He commenced trading in 1792, in his house, nearly opposite the present store of A. J. Lyman, on Main Street. His wife was the daughter of Timothy Lyman, of Chester. On the day of his marriage Mr. Lyman said to him, "You are now going to trading. The maxim of the world seems to be, Trade so that you can live by it. My advice is, Trade so that you can die by it."

A few years later Mr. Clapp erected a store where the hotel now stands. Bohan Clark afterward traded there for a time, but finally removed to Northampton.

Eldad Smith followed him in the Clapp store. He sold out about 1821, and removed to Granby. After this Baxter Bunnell and William R. Gillett traded successively at the same point. In 1841 this building was sold out, removed to Union Street, and was used as the seminary boarding-house for a long time.

Soon after 1800, Asahel Janes, and, later, Obadiah Janes, kept store in a house near the hotel, afterward the place of Capt. Ebenezer Ferry. The latter himself opened a store in 1843, when he received the appointment of postmaster. In 1850 he removed to Knight's brick block, then just erected, and continued there until his retirement, when he was succeeded by F. H. Putnam, who is still in trade.

In 1835, Mr. Williston opened a store near his residence, particularly for the purpose of paying his employes, although he sold goods to other people. Here Horatio G. Knight became his clerk and won the confidence of his employer, so that at the age of eighteen he was intrusted with the purchase of goods, and soon had the entire management of a trade amounting to $40,000 a year left to him. In 1842 or 1843 Mr. Williston sold out to the firm of Knight & Snow (E. L. Snow). The business was, however, closed two years later. The building was used as a warehouse, and in 1848 removed to a location near the factory.

About this time the firm of John H. Wells & Co. was formed. This changed in 1858 to Gregory & Wells. Mr. Gregory died, and the firm was again John H. Wells & Co.

In 1830, when the Farmington Canal was creating "great expectations" in the minds of the people, Luther Clapp opened a store on the banks of the canal just north of the Manhan River. In 1840 he sold out to Harris Bartholomew, who remained until 1850.

In May, 1855, John Mayher opened a tin-shop in the place. Miletus Parsons somewhat earlier, and also S. W. Lee, Jr., had commenced this line of business, but continued it only a short time. Mr. Mayher made the enterprise successful, and from the small beginning of a tin-shop has developed a business of great extent and variety.

This traces the mercantile interest down to a recent period. During the last fifteen years there has been with the rapid growth of the village a large number of men in trade, too numerous for special notice.

PUBLIC-HOUSES.

The first tavern within the limits of the town was kept by Joseph Bartlett. It stood where Deacon Thaddeus Clapp lived, a few rods north of the Manhan River. He was licensed in 1727, and probably continued the business for some twenty years, though the accounts of early settlement would imply but few customers in his immediate vicinity.

Maj. Jonathan Clapp, the nephew of Joseph Bartlett, as elsewhere mentioned, commenced to keep tavern where R. S. Dresser now lives, about 1750. He continued the business until his death, in 1782.

It is said that the soldiers from Southampton met here when they were about to start for Boston in the days of the Revolution, and that travelers from Connecticut to Vermont passed over this route in early times and often stopped with Maj. Clapp.

After his death, his son, Jonathan Clapp, opened a tavern in a house that stood across the road from his father's place; that was the present Fargo place. The house was on the site of the present. In 1793, Capt. Joseph Clapp, brother of the last-mentioned Jonathan, opened a tavern at the old stand of Landlord Bartlett, where he continued until his death, in 1797. His son, Luther Clapp, succeeded him for fourteen years, and then the brother of Luther, Deacon Thaddeus Clapp, kept the same house long enough to complete nearly a hundred years of tavern-keeping by the same family,—father, sons, and grandsons. After Thaddeus Clapp took down the old sign there was no hotel for some years. But after the opening of Williston Seminary there arose a greater necessity for the accommodation of travelers, and Mr. Williston built the one which, after many subsequent changes, is now the Mansion House, mentioned below. Luther Clapp was the first landlord there. It was afterward closed awhile during repairs, but was reopened and kept under the name of the Union House, by George M. Fillibrowne.

The Easthampton Mansion House.—This is not much like the pioneer "tavern" of Joseph Bartlett that was opened in the forest, near the "cartway over the Manhan," probably one hundred and fifty years ago. A public-house in a rural village always has a variable history. But since 1869 Easthampton has had a model hotel. William Hill, from the Northampton Mansion House, bought the property at that time, and has proved what a wide-awake man of principle can do in keeping a temperance house. With him it is not the compulsion of public sentiment nor the force of law, to which an unwilling, reluctant compliance is so often given by men who would sell liquor if they could. With an enthusiastic love of temperance principles, and a natural hospitality that makes him the prince of landlords, he has proved that the hotel of a village may rank with its best institutions, whether of a business character, or social, moral, and religious.

In 1870 he added a story to the main building, in the shape of a mansard roof, greatly improving its appearance. In 1871 he built a three-story extension in the rear, 80 by 40 feet. He can easily accommodate 100 guests, and has cared for 150. He has doubled the capacity of the house and more than quadrupled its business, receiving much patronage, during the summer season, from city guests. Much has been said—though not too much—in praise of Mr. Hill's excellent management.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. David Phelps located here about 1780, and practiced medicine six or eight years.

Dr. Hophni Clapp, a native of Southampton, studied with Dr. Woodbridge of that town, and settled here about 1790. He spent his life in Easthampton.

Drs. Hall, Munson, and Edson practiced here for a short time.

Dr. Salmon Mallery settled in Easthampton, not far from 1815. He had a large practice, and was exceedingly popular. In 1835 he removed to Michigan.

Dr. Atherton Clark commenced the practice of medicine here about the time Mr. Mallery left. He was for many years the only physician in the place.

Other physicians have been Dr. Solomon Chapman, Dr. Addison S. Peck, Dr. Thomas Henderson, and Dr. Barber.

In recent years the physicians have been Dr. F. C. Greene, Dr. Winslow, Dr. Ward, and Dr. C. R. Upson, a homœopathic physician, residing near Mount Tom station.

Various dentists have practiced here: R. D. Brown, Thomas Bolton, A. E. Strong, R. E. Strong, and H. S. Bascom.

LAWYERS.

So much other material of a valuable character is crowded into this sketch that we cannot enter upon a lengthy notice of the legal profession. Wm. G. Bassett and A. J. Fargo are the lawyers of recent years, and of the present time.

THE POST-OFFICE OF EASTHAMPTON

was established in 1821, and before that the inhabitants had their mail from the office at Northampton or Southampton. The Hampshire Gazette, which they could no more keep house without than they can now, was brought to their doors by post-riders.

Postmasters have been Baxter Burnell, 1821–23; Wm. R. Gillett, 1823–28; Thaddeus Clapp, 1828–40; J. Emerson Lyman, 1840–41; Thaddeus Clapp, 1841–43; Luther Clapp, 1843; Ebenezer Ferry, 1843–61; J. H. Bardwell, 1861 to the present time.

The office was first kept in a store that stood where the Mansion House is now located. Dr. Thaddeus Clapp kept it in his tavern.

This little office of 1821, worth to the postmaster about $75 a year, has changed into one of the most important offices in the county. It is estimated that 150,000 letters are yearly mailed here, and it is a money-order office, both domestic and foreign.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The town has a regularly-organized and thoroughly-equipped fire department, of which E. T. Sawyer is chief, and E. R. Bosworth and Wm. Hill assistants.

Pipes have been laid through the principal streets (in all, 6500 feet of iron pipe), with hydrants at proper intervals. There are at the upper mills no less than five pumps, each connecting with these pipes, and capable of forcing water through the village. One is a bucket-plunger steam-pump of the largest size, owned by the town. There are two other steam-pumps and two rotary-pumps run by water-power, which are owned by the corporations. In case of fire, force can be instantly applied sufficient to lift a stream of water over any building within reach of a hydrant. The Williston Mills village is protected in the same way by a pump at each mill. Several of the corporations have trained hose companies, and there is besides in the town a hose company, a hook-and-ladder company, and the old Manhan Engine Company, all of which forces are under the command of the fire engineers.

THE PRESS.

A job printing-office was opened in 1869 by F. A. Bartlett. He continued it about two years, and then sold it to H. C. McLaughlin.

The latter sold it, March 1, 1873, to Mr. H. M. Converse, who still continues the business.

In the fall of 1875, Mr. H. De Bill also started a weekly news sheet, called the Easthampton Leader. The first number was issued October 14th. Mr. De Bill enlarged it twice, and continued it through thirty-three numbers. He then sold out to Mr. Converse, of the job-office above mentioned. The new proprietor changed the name to The Enterprise, and still continues the publication.

GLENDALE.

This place received its name—somewhat in a fanciful way, perhaps—from the natural features in the vicinity. It began to be so designated at the time the Elastic Fabrics Company established their works at that point. When they went to the centre village they retained the name and "moved" it with their machinery.

To avoid a conflict of names, the present silk-works at this point are known as Glenwood Mills.

Besides the mills there are the boarding-house, the school-house, and a few private residences.

MOUNT TOM STATION.

This place is the eastern terminus of the Mount Tom Railroad, and both are rightly named, in view of their proximity to the mountain. The station building is neat and conveniently arranged. There are three or four residences near. In front and a few rods distant is the Holyoke steamboat-landing. A little north is the famous "Ox-Bow."

Altogether, the place is somewhat romantically situated, being in the "gateway of the mountains," at the foot of the bold northern peak of the Mount Tom range, and spread out before it, north and east, there is a combination of valley, plain, and stream, bordered in the distance by Northampton and Hockanum.

A little north, across the southern part of the Ox-Bow and just within the town of Northampton, is the extensive lumber-mill of the McIndoes.

A movement has been made recently to establish a school in this neighborhood.

THE MOUNT TOM RAILROAD.

This is entirely an Easthampton institution as far as its location is concerned, beginning and ending within the limits of the town. It belongs to the Connecticut Valley Railroad Company, though it was necessary to obtain a separate charter and build it by a separate company at first.

The first train of cars was run over the road Thanksgiving-day, 1871. It is three and one-half miles long. It accommodates travel very much, especially as it has six stations, counting the termini.

SCHOOLS.

"The first school which was taught in town of which we have any reliable record was at Pascommuck, in the year 1739. At that time Northampton appropriated a sum of money for a school there. There is no account of any further appropriation until 1748. In this year and nearly every subsequent year they gave money for schooling at Bartlett's Mill and at Pascommuck. The wages of teachers in those times appear small in comparison with what teachers now receive. Six shillings a week were paid to Obadiah Jones, Philip Clark, Joel Parsons, and others for keeping school in their own districts when they boarded themselves. If the teacher lived out of the district, more was sometimes paid."

At a meeting of the freeholders of Easthampton soon after its incorporation £15 were raised for the use of schools, of which at that time there were probably but three. The same sum was annually appropriated until 1793, when it was increased to £20.

The appropriations at various times have been as follows: 1807, $200; 1820, $220; 1830, $300; 1840, $360; 1850, $600; 1860, $1200; 1865, $2200; 1866, $3500. In this last year $3800 was also appropriated for building new school-houses.

Nov. 24, 1788.—Voted £15 for schooling, and appointed a committee,—Philip Clark, Eleazer Hannum, and Elijah Wright. This appears to have been the first school committee in town.

The town was divided into four school districts in 1797. Nashawannuck District was bounded on the south by Manhan River, and west by Saw-mill Brook. The west district was bounded on the south by Manhan River, and east by Saw-mill Brook. Pascommuck District was bounded on the north by Manhan River, and on the west by Broad Brook. The Centre District comprised the remaining portions of the town, but a few in the southeast were not included in any district. At first the management of each school was left entirely in the hands of the district, the money raised by the town being equitably apportioned to the several districts, and by them spent according to their discretion. Later, however, a general committee was appointed, whose duty it was to examine teachers and visit the schools to inquire into their progress. The hiring of teachers, the disbursement of the money, and the ownership of the school-houses was still in the hands of the districts. In 1864 the districts were abolished, and the town committee have full control.

The Central High School was established in 1864 by a vote of this town. A year passed in the erection of a suitable building, at a cost of $15,000. The house was dedicated Aug. 29, 1865. It will accommodate 212 scholars.

In earlier times—1833 to 1843—there was a grammar school, the first town-house being built partly for this purpose.

WILLISTON SEMINARY.*

This celebrated institution was founded by Hon. Samuel Williston. It was opened to students Dec. 2, 1841. The first building, which was of wood, was burned March 4, 1857, and its place was supplied by a large brick building, completed near the close of the same year at an expense of about $20,000. A second building had already been erected at this time, comprising a chemical and philosophical department, a large school-room with an upper story, and wing for student-rooms. In 1863-64-65 a gymnasium was built,—one of the finest and most complete in the United States. This cost over $20,000. A new dormitory of brick, four stories in height, was erected in 1866, at a cost of nearly $50,000. Subsequently an astronomical observatory was built. These costly buildings were all erected by the donations of the founder. These, with the grounds and apparatus, were estimated in 1873 at $270,000. By his will Mr. Williston has left the institution a large endowment. Upon the settlement of the estate, the seminary is to receive $200,000, and ultimately $300,000 more. The homestead, given to Mrs. Williston and valued at $50,000, has been given by her to the seminary after her decease, provided at least one of the permanent buildings is placed upon the grounds, and the whole kept for the use of the seminary. The school has $10,000 invested in apparatus and appliances for illustration in history, mathematics, the sciences, and classics. Among these are a thoroughly-furnished philosophical lecture-room; a chemical laboratory; an astronomical observatory; duplicate sets of surveying and engineering instruments; preparations for illustration in anatomy and physiology; models and designs for the drawing-room; geological, mineralogical, and botanical collections; maps, photographs, and plaster casts. The school is believed to have the most complete facilities for instruction of any school of its grade in the United States.

The first principal was Rev. Luther Wright. He was born in Easthampton, and had great influence in securing the location of the school in his native town. He was succeeded in 1849 by Rev. Josiah Clark, whose resignation took place in 1863, when Rev. Marshall Henshaw was elected principal. He resigned in 1876, and Rev. James M. Whiton was elected to fill the vacancy. His services closed at the end of the spring term of 1878. Prof. J. W. Fairbanks, who succeeded him, is the present principal (January, 1879),—the first alumnus of the school to occupy the principal's chair. One hundred different teachers have given instruction in the school during its history, many of whom are now occupying positions of great influence in the pulpit, at the Bar, in the professor's chair, or other professions. For some years it has been the policy of the trustees to have the teacherships permanent positions, thus securing greater efficiency in the board of instruction.

The seminary opened with a male and a female department. The latter was suspended in 1864. The largest number of ladies in attendance during any year was 187, and the smallest 44. There were 54 names of ladies in the catalogue of 1864. The first catalogue contains 191 names,—two-thirds of these in the English course. The total rose rapidly until, in 1846, it stood at 542. After that it declined, and the yearly aggregate stood between 300 and 400 until the discontinuance of the ladies' department. The average term attendance since the war has stood at 175. During the first five years of the seminary's existence 95 per cent. of the pupils were from New England,—60 per cent. from Hampshire County and 30 per cent. from Easthampton. As high schools were developed in the neighboring towns this local patronage fell off, and the growth of South Hadley Seminary affected the number of ladies. During the second five years the percentage from New England had dropped to 90 and the percentage from Hampshire County to 33. For the next ten years the New England percentage stood at 85 and the Hampshire County percentage continued at 33. With the increased cost of board, and the continued development of home-schools, these percentages continued to decline, until, at present, that from New England is 50 and from Hampshire County 10, half of whom are from Easthampton. This indicates that the seminary began as a local school and served the purpose of a high school for many neighboring towns. It has ceased to be local, and has become national.

From its beginning the school has been divided into two departments,—a classical and an English or, as recently named, a scientific,—existing on a parity and having parallel courses of study.

The first catalogues simply give a list of studies which were pursued in the two departments. There was no term arrangement of studies and no classification of students. Since then the courses of study have continually grown more definite, and the school is now strictly graded. While students are allowed to select their course, most of them are pursuing a regular course.

The school gives thorough preparation for the best colleges and scientific schools. Its scientific department also offers a complete course of study for those whose time and money will not permit a more extended course. The course of study in each department occupies four years, but mature students are advanced as rapidly as they can be with profit to themselves. Special students are received at any time, and permitted to join the classes for which they are qualified.

The purpose of the founder was to establish a school of the highest order, partly self-supporting because of the income from invested funds and generous provision in other ways, and therefore open to those of limited means. This purpose is always kept in view. Tuition is free to those who need such help, and board is kept at $3 per week at the seminary boarding-house. All young men of energy and perseverance are thereby able to avail themselves of the advantages of the school.

* By Prof. Sawyer.

The seminary is under religious but not sectarian influence. From one-fourth to one-third of the students, from term to term, are professing Christians.

A notable event in the history of the seminary was the celebration of the Quarter Centennial, which was held anniversary week, July 2, 1867.

There was a large attendance of graduates and former pupils. Rev. R. S. Storrs, of Brooklyn, was president of the day. Prof. Wm. S. Tyler, the adviser and trusted friend of the founder, delivered an historical address. Rev. N. Adams, of Boston, in prayer, dedicated the completed buildings to the promotion of learning and religion. Prof. Cyrus Northrop, of Yale College, pronounced an oration. There was also a poem by C. H. Sweetzer, of the Round Table, N. Y.

This gathering of Alumni left, as its legacy, an incipient Alumni Association, which still lives and grows. It has done something toward the cultivation of an esprit du corps among graduates. It has meetings each anniversary week, with a public address from some distinguished alumnus. Addresses have been delivered by Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Prof. Judson Smith, Rev. H. M. Parsons, C. D. Adams, Esq., Judge William S. Shurtleff, Col. Mason W. Tyler, Rev. Charles M. Lamson, and Rev. Augustus F. Board, D.D. On one occasion a poem was delivered by Rev. Albert Bryant, and on another by Judge Shurtleff.

One of the most valuable results of this organization has been the publication of an Alumni record. This society urged the matter upon the trustees, who readily favored the project, appointed a co-operating committee, and voted to defray the expense. The matter was finally put into the hands of Rev. Joseph H. Sawyer, for several years a teacher in the seminary. With painstaking and great labor, and with the co-operation of various class secretaries, he succeeded, at length, in bringing out a most satisfactory record. It gives the addresses, and, in most cases, a brief sketch of the life, of trustees and teachers, and of 1455 male students; an index of the full number; the Roll of Honor; and a list of female teachers and students, with their present address and name. From this record it appears that, at the time of publication in 1875, there had been connected with the seminary 5166 male and 1077 female students; total, 6243. Of these, the whole number reckoned alumni is 1117. Mr. Sawyer was able to report more or less fully concerning 2494 persons. Of these, 512 had already received a college education,—205 at Yale, 162 at Amherst, and 78 at Williams. Seventy-two were then in college. Eighty-eight more had graduated at professional or scientific schools. Of these, 167 had chosen the clerical, 174 the legal, and 80 the medical professions; while 77 were teachers, 15 journalists, and 25 civil engineers. The Roll of Honor shows 9 generals, 16 colonels, 14 majors, 13 chaplains, 27 surgeons, 36 captains, 41 lieutenants, and 230 non-commissioned officers and privates. Of these, 49 died in battle or from exposure. Adding those who have attended the school since the Alumni records were published, we have a grand total of 6750 students since the opening of the school; 1250 graduates of Williston Seminary, of whom 700 have completed a collegiate or professional course of study.

The first board of instruction, 1841, consisted of Rev. Luther Wright, Principal, and teacher of Latin and Greek; David M. Kimball, M.A., Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, and Astronomy; Richard S. Storrs, Jr., M.A., Mental and Moral Philosophy, Rhetoric, and Chemistry; Miss Clarissa L. Wright, French, English Grammar, and Geography; Col. Asa Barr, Music; and Horatio Brown, Penmanship.

The first board of trustees were: Hon. Samuel Williston, President; Rev. Homan Humphrey, D.D., Rev. Emerson Davis, Rev. John Mitchell, Rev. William Bement, Secretary; Rev. Luther Wright, Treasurer; Deacon J. P. Williston, Hon. William Bowdoin, Rev. Mark Hopkins, D.D., Prof. William S. Tyler.

Present trustees and officers: Hon. Horatio G. Knight, Easthampton, President; Prof. William S. Tyler, D.D., LL.D., Amherst; Rev. L. G. Buckingham, D.D., Springfield; Rev. John H. Bisbee, Westfield; Rev. Nehemiah Adams, D.D., Boston; Rev. Aaron M. Colton, Easthampton; Rev. Gordon Hall, D.D., Northampton; Col. William I. Clark, LL.D., Amherst; Rev. Samuel T. Seelye, D.D., Easthampton; Hon. Edmund H. Sawyer, Easthampton, Treasurer; M. F. Dickinson, Jr., Esq., Boston; A. Lyman Williston, Esq., Florence; Joseph W. Fairbanks, M.A., Easthampton.

The present faculty (January, 1879) includes the following: Joseph Whitcomb Fairbanks, M.A., Principal, and instructor in Latin; Joseph Henry Sawyer, M.A., instructor in Mental Science and English Literature; Robert Porter Keep, Ph.D., instructor in Greek; Roswell Parish, M.A., instructor in Mathematics and Physics; Russell M. Wright, M.A., instructor in Natural History and Geometry; Henry Elijah Alvord, C.E., instructor in Drawing and Gymnastics; Erastus G. Smith, B.A., instructor in Chemistry and Elocution; Charles A. Buffum, M.A., instructor in Latin and History.

The following is a list of college graduates natives of Easthampton:

Azariah Clark, 1805, Williams College, ministry.
Job Clark, 1811, Williams College, medicine.
Elam C. Clark, 1812, Williams College, ministry.
Theodore Clapp, 1814, Yale College, ministry.
Solomon Lyman, 1822, Yale College, ministry.
Sumner G. Clapp, 1822, Yale College, ministry.
Luther Wright, 1822, Yale College, teaching.
Sylvester Clapp, 1823, Union College, ministry.
Silas C. Brown, 1828, Union College, ministry.
Theodore L. Wright, 1829, Yale College, teaching.
Samuel Matthews, 1829, Amherst College, teaching.
Francis Janes, 1830, Williams College, ministry.

Thornton W. Clapp, 1835, Williams College, ministry.
Edmund Wright, 1836, Williams College, ministry.
Josiah Lyman, 1836, Williams College, teaching.
Alender O. Clapp, 1837, Amherst College, ministry.
Addison Lyman, 1839, Williams College, ministry.
Jabez B. Lyman, 1841, Amherst College, surgery.
Russell M. Wright, 1841, Williams College, teaching.
Horace Lyman, 1842, Williams College, ministry.
Elijah H. Wright, 1842, Amherst College, medicine.
William S. Clark, 1848, Amherst College, teaching.
Lyman R. Williston, 1850, Amherst College, teaching.
Edson L. Clark, 1853, Yale College, ministry.
Francis H. Hannum, 1865, Amherst College.
James T. Graves, 1866, Yale College.
Payson W. Lyman, 1867, Amherst College, ministry.
Henry H. Sawyer, 1871, Amherst College, business.
Charles H. Knight, 1871, Williams College, medicine.
Alvin E. Todd, 1871, Yale College, ministry.
Frank Warner, two years at Williams College, music; then music a year at Leipsic, Germany.
Frank E. Sawyer, 1872, United States Naval Academy, navy.
George H. Baker, 1874, Amherst College, history. *
William B. Sawyer, 1875, Amherst College, medicine.
Fred. M. Leonard, Harvard College.
Arthur Wainwright, Amherst College.

School Statistics.

January, 1837.—Six schools; attending in the summer, 161; average, 123; winter, 175; average, 139; in town between 4 and 16, 197; summer schools, 26 months; winter, 17 months; summer teachers, 6 females; winter, 4 males, 2 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $22; female teachers, $10.02.

January, 1847.—Six schools; attending in the summer, 160; average, 126; winter, 186; average, 135; in town between 4 and 16, 215; attending under 4, 10; over 16, 6; summer schools, 22 months; winter, 19 months; total, 41; summer teachers, 6 females; winter, 4 males, 2 females; male teachers, average wages per month, $22.50; female, $14.16.

January, 1857.—Seven schools; attending in summer, 161; average, 136; winter, 215; average, 155; attending under 5, 6; over 16, 8; in town between 5 and 15, 236; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 1 male, 7 females; summer schools, 32 months, 10 days; winter, 22 months, 15 days; total, 55 months, 5 days; wages of male teachers, average per month, $25; female, $12.

January, 1867.—Thirteen schools; attending in the summer, 452; average 374; winter, 513; average, 398; attending under 5, 8; over 15, 59; in town between 5 and 15, 542; summer teachers, 12 females; winter, 13 females; summer schools, 39 months, 15 days; winter, 42 months, 15 days; average wages of female teachers, $28 per month.

January, 1878.—Sixteen schools; repairs, $529.03; attending, 631; average, 513; under 5, 5; over 15, 72; in town between 5 and 15, 637; teachers, females, 21; from Normal, 5; school, 142 months; average wages per month, $42.46; taxation, $7000; expense of superintendence, $200; vested funds, $143,000, yielding an income of $8000; from other local funds and dog tax, $151.99; 1 high school, 1 teacher, 81 scholars; supported by taxation, 9 months and 5 days; principal's salary, $900; 1 incorporated academy; 225 scholars; tuition, $13,000; town share of State fund, $282.67.

CHURCHES.

The desire of the people for a separate civil organization was intimately connected with their plans for a separate church. In all their movements for a new town, it was assigned as a special reason "that with greater profit to themselves and their families, they might attend on public worship and on the ordinances of God's sanctuary."

Accordingly, before the civil organization was secured, certain individuals made preparation to build a meeting-house, and a frame was erected in the spring of 1785.

The following notes from the town records show the early action down to the time of Mr. Williston's ordination:

July 13, 1785.—Chose a committee to make an inquiry for a preacher, and report at some future meeting.—David Lyman, Philip Clark, Jonathan Clapp, Joseph Clapp, David Chapman.

Voted, to make this meeting-house (already partly built) the place of public worship.

Voted, to purchase the house of the individuals who had been at the expense of erecting it. Voted a committee to cover the house.—Jonathan Clapp, Philip Clark, Joseph Clapp, Obadiah Janes, Benjamin Clapp, David Chapman, Benjamin Lyman.

Nov. 16, 1785.—Voted, "to hire preaching," and chose a committee for that purpose.—Stephen Wright, Benjamin Lyman, and Philip Clark.

March 22, 1786.—Committee on preaching instructed to continue their services, and their previous action ratified.

April 3, 1786.—Voted, "to secure the windows of the meeting-house," and appointed a committee for that purpose, —Asahel Clark, Jonathan Clapp, and Zadok Danks.

June 22, 1786.—Voted, to levy a tax of 30 pounds upon the polls and estates to pay for preaching.

Oct. 26, 1786.—Voted, that the committee on preaching hire M. Woolworth another term on condition that they can agree with him.

Nov. 27, 1786.—Voted, to raise forty pounds for the support of the gospel.

Voted, that the committee "board the ministers at the cheapest place they can, if it be a good place."

Jan. 18, 1787.—Voted, to concur with the church in inviting Mr. Aaron Woolworth to settle with us in the work of the ministry, and offered him a settlement of 200 pounds, to be paid 50 pounds a year; and a salary of 75 pounds a year for the first five years, afterward 80 pounds yearly, and seventy loads of wood a year for his own fires. Committee to wait upon Mr. Woolworth, Stephen Wright, Philip Clark, Benjamin Lyman, Joseph Clapp, Asahel Clark.

But Mr. Woolworth was not settled.

April 16, 1787.—Committee upon the underpinning of the meeting-house, Jonathan Clapp, John Hannum, Lemuel Lyman.

Here is also a glimpse at the carpenter work, Mr. Jonathan Clapp being voted twelve shillings for making pins for the meeting-house.

May 28, 1787.—Committee on preaching dismissed at their request, and the following appointed: Stephen Wright, Benjamin Lyman, Asahel Clark, Philip Clark, David Lyman.

The committee were instructed to apply to Rev. Mr. Holt and to others in their discretion.

Aug. 20, 1787.—Voted, the committee should employ Mr. Holt another term.

Nov. 26, 1787.—Voted, to allow Stephen Wright one shilling and sixpence per day for riding after a preacher, calling his time two days and a half.

Voted, to raise 40 pounds for preaching.

Nov. 24, 1788.—Voted fifty pounds for the support of preaching, and voted to finish the meeting-house, and a committee were appointed to make a distribution of the tax in timber.

Voted, to allow David Lyman the same Mr. Joseph Clapp had for boarding the minister. We conclude Mr. Lyman's was the cheapest place to be obtained, according to a previous vote, but we also conclude that it was "a good place."

March 23, 1789.—To prevent disorder upon the Sabbath, voted that the tythingmen do their duty faithfully.

In 1786, Benjamin Lyman, Stephen Wright, and Philip Clark were appointed a committee to collect a donation made by Joseph Bartlett many years before to the first church of Christ which should organize and hold divine service within half a mile of his house. It amounted, with interest, to £14 1s. and 3d., and was expended for a communion service.

The pioneer state of organization and preparation was at length passed, and a changing pastorate gave way to a regular settlement, uncertainty to steady permanent work. A call was voted to Rev. Payson Williston, April 6, 1789. It was accepted, and he was ordained Aug. 13, 1789.

The terms of the engagement were £180 settlement fund and a salary of £65 the first year, to be increased £1 a year until it amounted to £70, besides 35 cords of wood per year if he "shall need so much for his own consumption."

Mr. Williston's pastorate lasted until 1833, when he resigned, but continued to reside in this place, loved and venerated by the people to whom he had preached the words of eternal life for so long a period. The correspondence between pastor and people at the time of the resignation is honorable to both. His life was prolonged for twenty-three years after the close of his ministerial services. At the age of ninety-two, Jan. 30, 1856, he was called by the great Head of the Church to come up higher.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH.

During the period of early settlement a part of the inhabitants living upon the territory now constituting Easthampton retained connection with the church of Northampton, and others with that of Southampton. It was not until the district was incorporated that a movement for a new organization was successful. Nov. 13, 1785, forty-six persons were dismissed from the Northampton church, and about the same time fifteen families, embracing twenty-six persons, from the church at Southampton, to constitute a new church. The organization took place at the house of Joseph Clapp, Nov. 17, 1785.

Stephen Wright was the moderator of the meeting, and Capt. Philip Clark was clerk. Ministers present were Rev. Solomon Williams, of Northampton; Rev. Jonathan Judd, of Southampton; Rev. Enoch Hale, of Westhampton; and Rev. Joseph Strong, of Williamsburg. The first deacons chosen were Philip Clark and Benjamin Lyman. The former declined, and two years later Obadiah Janes was chosen in his place. As already shown, the new church was without a settled pastor for over three years.

The present church edifice was built in 1836 and 1837 from a plan drawn by William F. Pratt, of Northampton. Mr. Pratt and Jason Clark were the contractors. The corner-stone was laid June 9, 1836, and the house was dedicated March 16, 1837. The structure is 80 by 60 feet, and its original cost was less than $6000. In 1844 the church was enlarged by building more capacious galleries. Mr. Samuel Williston at his own expense had the spire remodeled and an organ and a clock introduced. In 1865 it was removed a short distance, to its present location, and thoroughly remodeled at an expense of $5000.

The site where the old meeting-house of 1785 stood is now a beautiful park, adding much to the attractions of the village. A fine elm, growing near the centre of the park, is known as the "pulpit elm," and is said to mark the spot over which stood the pulpit in the first meeting-house,—a splendid living memorial, marking a place historic in the annals of Easthampton.

The First Church have a large and convenient chapel near their house of worship. In 1846 a commodious brick parsonage was erected on one of the pleasantest sites in the town at an expense of $3000, the greater portion of which was donated by Mr. Samuel Williston, though the society relinquished to him the old parsonage. A Sabbath-school was instituted in 1818, meeting at first with some opposition. It was held in the district school-house that stood at what is now the corner of Park and Main Streets. It has been continued from that time to the present as one of the cherished institutions of the church.

The communion-service in use was the gift of Mrs. Tirzah Clapp, widow of Luther Clapp; she died Aug. 13, 1811. In her will she bequeathed $300 to the church and town, $35 of which, according to her direction, was expended for a pall-cloth, and the balance fell to the church.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Payson Williston, installed Aug. 13, 1789; resigned and dismissed by council Oct. 16, 1833; died Jan. 30, 1856, aged ninety-two. 2d. Rev. William Bement, ordained Oct. 16, 1833; dismissed April 9, 1850. 3d. Rev. Rollin S. Stone, installed Oct. 8, 1850; dismissed July 26, 1852. 4th. Rev. A. M. Colton, installed March 2, 1853, and now in the twenty-seventh year of his pastorate.

A very pleasant event in the history of the church was the quarter-century celebration of Mr. Colton's pastorate. It was held on Friday, March 1, 1878. The addresses, the gifts, the social entertainments, the music, all were of a rich and varied character, recalling tender reminiscences, and exhibiting the love and esteem which existed in the whole community for the faithful pastor.

At the meeting to make arrangements Mr. Edwin S. Janes presided, and Mr. Watson H. Wright was secretary. The general committee appointed were Deacons Lauren D. Lyman, William Hill, Martin L. Gaylord, Watson H. Wright, Lucius E. Parsons, Mrs. Lafayette Clapp, Mrs. Gilbert A. Clark, Miss Sarah E. Wright, Miss Emma A. Clark. The principal gift in which the offerings of the people were embodied was a costly and beautiful silver service, engraved with the pastor's name.

For the second piece sung upon this occasion thirteen members of the church choir of twenty-five years ago took the "singers' seats." These were also present in the choir of eighty who sang at the installation of Mr. Colton. The thirteen now sang the same tune, and from the same book,—

"One thing have I desired of the Lord." As the modern choir retired to give place to the thirteen Mr. Edwin S. Janes, the leader, alone remained,—the sole link between the old and the new, his services in the choir extending over a longer period than those of the pastor in the pulpit.

Record of Deacons Chosen.—Philip Clark, Jan. 18, 1786; declined; died May 26, 1818. Stephen Wright, Jan. 18, 1786; died June 3, 1809. Benjamin Lyman, June 21, 1786. Abadiah Janes, 1788; died Feb. 1, 1817. Joel Parsons, 1798. Solomon Lyman, 1807; resigned 1833 (probably). Thaddeus Clapp, 1808; died April 12, 1861. Sylvester Lyman, 1813; resigned in 1833. Julius Hannum, Jan. 2, 1825. Ithamar Clark, Nov. 29, 1832; died April 3, 1857. Eleazer W. Hannum, 1833; still in office after forty-six years of service. Samuel Williston, Sept. 2, 1841; dismissed to the Payson Church, Oct. 8, 1850. Luther Wright, May 14, 1857; died Sept. 5, 1870. E. Alonzo Clark, May 14, 1857; one of the present deacons (January, 1879). Lauren D. Lyman, Feb. 3, 1870; one of the present deacons (January, 1879).

THE PAYSON CHURCH OF EASTHAMPTON.

This was one of the developments caused by the rapid increase of population consequent upon the removal of the button-works from Haydenville to Easthampton and the general enlargement of business enterprises. The first meeting for the organization of a second church was held July 8, 1852.

The church, consisting of 100 members, was formed December 29th of the same year, and the church edifice that had been already built was dedicated in the evening of that day. The Rev. R. S. Stone became the first pastor, and was installed at the same time with the services of organization and dedication. The first deacons were Hon. Samuel Williston and Dr. Atherton Clark. The first clerk was E. A. Hubbard, who served until 1855, when he was succeeded by C. B. Johnson, Esq., who has been continued in that office to the present time.

The church was very unfortunate for several years in respect to their house of worship. The first house, erected in 1852, was burned Jan. 29, 1854, with no insurance upon it. In the following spring the erection of another house was commenced, and, when partially finished, that was destroyed by fire Sept. 1, 1854. The walls and foundation were partially saved; a third building was commenced almost immediately, which was completed the next year, and dedicated Sept. 6, 1855. This rapidity of work and steady perseverance in the face of disaster could have hardly succeeded except through the munificence of Hon. Samuel Williston, who paid almost entirely for the erection of the last house,—about $14,000. The first parsonage was destroyed at the same time with the second church. In connection with the building of the third edifice a new parsonage was erected, at an expense of $4000.

But the list of disasters was not yet complete. Jan. 2, 1862, the tall spire of the church was blown down by the severe gale of that morning. It fell across the roof, ruining a large portion of the building. The organ, the desk, and the vestry, however, escaped injury. At the time of repairing this damage an addition was made to the building, and the present structure is 89 by 50; spire, 163 feet in height; organ recess, 27 by 19; audience-room, 75 by 48 below and 87 by 48 above. The total expense of building and rebuilding cannot have been less than $50,000. The ordinary seating capacity may be stated at 600, in case of necessity reaching 800.

Present Organization (January, 1879).—Rev. A. R. Merriam, Pastor; C. B. Johnson, Hon. E. H. Sawyer, Horatio G. Knight, Rev. J. H. Sawyer, Deacons and Church Committee; E. Thomas Sawyer, Joseph H. Wilson, Jairus Burt, Parish Committee; Rev. Joseph H. Sawyer, Superintendent of Sunday-school; communicants, about 450; congregation, including seminary students, 600 to 700; Sunday-school attendance about 320; having an excellent library.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. R. S. Stone, installed Dec. 28, 1852; dismissed Jan. 21, 1863. 2d. Rev. S. T. Seelye, D.D., installed Oct. 14, 1863; resigned and dismissed by council Jan. 8, 1877. 3d. Rev. A. R. Merriam, ordained and installed Oct. 31, 1877; and the present pastor of the church.

Record of Deacons (elected for a term of two years).—Dr. Atherton Clark, chosen Nov. 14, 1852, left town in 1863; Samuel Williston, chosen Nov. 14, 1852, died July 19, 1874; Charles B. Johnson, chosen Aug. 29, 1861, still in office; Ansel B. Lyman, chosen Aug. 29, 1861, served one term; Seth Warner, chosen June 2, 1864, removed to Haywood, Cal.; E. A. Hubbard, chosen June 2, 1864, served until March 1, 1866; E. H. Sawyer, chosen March 1, 1866, present deacon; M. H. Leonard, chosen Jan. 1, 1874, resigned Feb. 20, 1879; Alpheus J. Lyman, chosen Dec. 4, 1873, served to Jan. 4, 1877; J. H. Sawyer, chosen Jan. 4, 1877, present deacon; H. G. Knight, chosen to succeed M. H. Leonard, 1879.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

In the fall of 1862, Mr. Thomas Turner and Mr. Thomas Martin, who had recently removed from England to this place, feeling the want of religious observances, to which they had been accustomed, instituted family prayer-meetings. At the first these were strictly of a private character. These two pious families were thus unconsciously to themselves laying the foundation of an important religious work. Tenderly cherishing the sacred flame of devotion in their own households, they soon took an advance step by inviting Mr. F. H. Putnam, who was then a member of the Methodist Church of Northampton, to meet with them. He did so, and a few others were invited. The private character of the meetings, under the impulse of increasing interest, was soon changed to public gatherings, and the community at large were invited to attend. The result of these unofficial prayer-meetings was a revival work of deep interest. Mr. Albert Hopkins, mentioned as the first convert, is still an active member of the church.

The assistance of the minister of the Methodist Church at Northampton was solicited, and he promptly came over and preached as his other engagements would permit. The chief labor was, however, still done by the faithful brothers who had commenced the meetings. As a result of this movement, extending over a period of two or three months, a class was formed, consisting of 17 members, with William Bryant as leader.

The meetings were removed to Bosworth's Hall, on the second floor of his present carpenter shop, though the whole building has been moved a short distance from its original site. The families of Martin and Turner were Baptists in England, but they had been accustomed to carrying on meetings very similar to the usual forms of the Methodist Church. They united heartily in laying the basis of a Methodist church organization, though they did not remain long in Easthampton to witness the success of the movement commenced by themselves. Mr. Turner went back to England, and Mr. Martin removed to the vicinity of Boston.

The next step was a request to the district meeting at Northampton for a minister, and temporary arrangements for a few Sabbaths. The large audiences and the interest shown proved the success of the enterprise. A formal application to Conference in the spring of 1863 was responded to by appointing Rev. S. Jackson to supply this appointment regularly.

The church was organized by him in April, 1863. The class-leaders were William Bryant and Oscar H. Hill. The stewards were Thomas Turner, Thomas Martin, F. H. Putnam, Francis Newton, Wm. Martin, Alfred Hopkins, James Swindell.

A Sunday-school was begun about the same time, with F. H. Putnam superintendent, a position which he has filled a large part of the time since. The use of the town-hall was obtained for Sabbath-day services, but, that being used by the First Congregational Church in the evening, the Methodists met in Bosworth's Hall.

In the fall of 1863 the question was agitated of securing a place upon which a house of worship might be built at some future time. E. H. Sawyer and H. G. Knight offered to sell the society a lot, but kindly suggested that the town might vote the church a site, and offered themselves to bring the matter up at the next town-meeting. This was done, and, with a liberality the Methodist society heartily appreciated, a lot of sixty-five feet front was donated by the town, upon which the church edifice now stands; and a year later, 1865, the town voted the church a handsome addition as a site for a chapel. The effort to build followed immediately upon the gift of a site, ground was broken in 1865, and by the assistance of the church and society it was so far inclosed and completed that a festival was held in it before winter set in. The finishing was pushed during the next year, and the house dedicated Dec. 12, 1866. The sermon was preached by Rev. Wm. R. Clark, of Springfield, from the text, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

The pastorate of Mr. Jackson had closed the spring before, and his three years had been full of work, both material and spiritual. There had been over three hundred conversions, half or more uniting with this church. Between $7000 and $8000 had been raised for the support of the gospel and for building. Rev. Franklin Furber succeeded Mr. Jackson.

The entire cost of the house of worship, with fixtures and furniture, was $16,396.36. A heavy debt had been incurred, which it has required patience, perseverance, and liberal giving to bring within safe limits. Meanwhile, a pleasant parsonage on Prospect Street has been secured, at an expense of about $3000. All this has been done while reducing a debt of $5000 left at the building of the church. The society now have their fine house of worship and their parsonage. The debt is reduced to about $3000, and pledges to meet a large portion of this are available.

Ministerial Record.—Rev. S. Jackson, 1863-66; Rev. Franklin Furber, 1866-68; Rev. Chas. T. Johnson, 1868-70; Rev. William W. Colburn, 1870, appointed chaplain of the State-prison; Rev. William G. Leonard filled out the year; Rev. H. A. Hall, 1871-73; Rev. S. O. Dyer, 1873-74; Rev. L. A. Bosworth, 1874-76; Rev. E. R. Thorndike, 1876-78; Rev. C. A. Merrill, 1878.

Among the various revival occasions, the Conference year, 1866-67, is recalled as one of great interest to the church, the interest continuing throughout the entire year.

In the summer of 1868 the society erected a tent upon the camp-ground, at an expense of $150.

Present Organization (January, 1879).—Rev. C. A. Merrill, Pastor; F. H. Putnam, John McCandless, O. H. Hill, Class-Leaders; Medad L. Pomeroy, Oscar H. Hill, Austin Fairchild, Joshua A. Loomis, Christian Kaplinger, Alfred Hopkins, H. R. Dickieson, Frank Kellogg, Henry A. Langdon, Stewards; F. Putnam, Superintendent of Sunday-school.

The church has had a large percentage of changes by removals from town, often reducing its membership. There are now about 150 communicants.

It perhaps should be added that some twelve years before the prayer-meetings of Thomas Turner and Thomas Martin there was Methodist preaching in the town-hall by Rev. Mr. Potter. This was in 1850 or '51. The enterprise, however, did not meet with sufficient success to warrant the formation of a society, and after a time it was abandoned, and some interested in that work entered into the movement to found the Payson Church, which followed soon after.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF EASTHAMPTON, KNOWN AS ST. PHILIP'S PARISH.

This society was organized April 10, 1871. Services had previously been held by Rev. B. F. Cooley, and he became the first pastor, continuing as such until March, 1872, when he resigned, and was soon after succeeded by Rev. Lewis Green. At that time the society consisted of 56 families, 49 communicants, and a congregation of 80 to 100. Mr. Green resigned in the spring of 1873, and services were suspended until autumn. Then the work of the parish was resumed by Rev. J. Sturgis Pierce, rector of St. John's Church, Northampton. Services are held in the lower town-hall. The society has secured a desirable site, and they hope to make arrangements for building a house of worship in a year or two. The wardens are N. W. Farrar and James Butterworth; the former is also superintendent of the Sunday-school. Major H. E. Alvord is parish clerk. The Sunday-school numbers from 40 to 50. The vestrymen of the church are Thomas Major, Robert Oliver, Clarence E. Ware, Joseph Bassett, Henry E. Alvord. Joseph Bassett is also treasurer.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH OF EASTHAMPTON.

This society is located in the southeast part of the village, on A Street, near the corner of Liberty. The church stands upon rising ground, a location possessing many advantages. In the rapid business growth of Easthampton there came in quite a large population of Catholic sentiments, and efforts were made to provide themselves with religious services after their own faith. They were aided in this by the leading business-men of the town, even by those who cherished the New England Protestant faith as tenaciously as Catholics cherish theirs. The first house of worship was of wood, and was destroyed by fire. The present church is of brick, large and convenient. The present pastor is Rev. Father Walsh, who resides on Pleasant Street, and is evidently wielding a strong influence in his congregation. His predecessor was Rev. Father Callery, who is now at Florence.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The earliest burying-ground was at Nashawannuck, and it is supposed that a large number were buried there. So neglected and forgotten had this been for many years that the site was regarded as unknown. Lyman's history, however, identifies the place as being "on an elevation, in a field belonging to the Augustus Clapp farm, and about fifteen rods southwest from his house." The field spoken of is a cultivated one, and all traces of graves are obliterated. Yet here undoubtedly moulder the remains of several of the early settlers. Very likely the remains of those killed at Pascommuck or at the bloody field upon the Wait farm may have been gathered up and brought to Nashawannuck. None of the published accounts of that affair seem to speak of the burial.

The present East Street or Pascommuck Cemetery, while it is quite ancient, does not date to 1704. Indeed, Lyman's history makes the opening of the latter as late as the time of the Revolution. But there is a period of seventy-five years preceding that in the history of the territory now constituting Easthampton. Where were the dead of that period buried if not at Nashawannuck?

The Pascommuck Burial-Ground.—There may be some question whether this is the next in order of time. The votes at the district meetings in 1787 seem to imply that the old centre burial-ground was then first laid out; still, there may have been burials there earlier than that. The Pascommuck ground was given by Eliakim Clark, and the first person buried there was a child of Jonathan Janes, in the year 1775.

This cemetery is still in use to some extent. It is in a fair state of preservation, and the town usually votes a small sum for it at the annual meetings.

The Old Centre Burying-Ground.—This was opposite the grounds of the present seminary, on the location now occupied by the Methodist Church, the new town-hall, and other buildings. The place was obtained of Benjamin Lyman, son of one of the original purchasers of the school lands. The following items with reference to it appear in the town records, though they do not leave it clear whether burials had already taken place there.

April 16, 1787.—Voted a committee of three to look into the circumstances of our burying-place, and make report at some future meeting,—Stephen Wright, Solomon Ferry, David Lyman. This action was in respect to a clause in the warrant, which proposed to see what the district would direct with reference to an exchange of lands with Mr. Benjamin Lyman for a burying-place.

Committee reported Nov. 25, 1787, and a new committee appointed to see how much land is required,—Philip Clark, John Hannum, Joseph Clapp.

In 1812 a committee were paid for having fenced "the Middle District Burying-Ground,"—John Ludden, Jr., $12; Ahira Lyman, $2.50; Deacon Solomon Lyman, 90 cents; and Obadiah Janes was to pay $1 for the old fence.

It is said that a child of Benjamin Lyman, Jr., the proprietor of the farm, was the first one buried in that ground. The school lands were bought in 1745, and Benjamin Lyman, Jr., alluded to, was then eighteen years of age.

This ground, full of sacred memories, where the dead of sixty years or more had been gathered, was finally given up before the demands of business and public improvement. It cost something of a struggle, as such changes always do, and it seems yet to many that the ground ought to have been fenced and retained, even if burials there ceased. But a vote of the town authorizing the removal of the remains was finally obtained. It was done as tenderly as it is possible to do such work,—the stones and memorials carefully preserved. The old centre burial-ground became only a memory,—only an item of history.

The New Cemetery at the Centre.—The action of the town to open this appears in the records as follows:

March 10, 1845, appointed a committee to procure land for a new burying-place,—Samuel Williston, John Ludden, Luther Clapp. They were instructed to buy not less than two nor more than three acres.

June 2, 1845, committee reported that it was best to purchase three acres of land of Widow Orpha Lyman, to be laid out into lots. The report was accepted. Eventually, however, four and a half acres were bought. The first person buried in this ground was Mrs. Eunice S. Lyman, wife of Daniel F. Lyman. The cemetery was subsequently enlarged, and is sure of preservation and careful attention in the future.

Among the bequests of Hon. Samuel Williston were $4000 to construct the beautiful iron fence which now incloses the grounds, and $6500 as a permanent fund, the interest of which is to be annually expended in the care and adornment of the cemetery.

In this yard, upon the Williston family lot, stands a fine granite monument, erected at an expense of $4000.

Brookside Cemetery.

"As early as 1870, the cemetery committee called the attention of the town to the fact that, though there were frequent calls for burial-lots, no more were available. The matter was not taken in hand till the following year, and, though a committee examined locations and prices, consulted as to plans, and reported progress from time to time, no full and definite recommendations came before the town from then till June 9, 1873. At that time they reported a preliminary survey of land bordering the pond at the upper village on its west side, and owned by Mrs. Williston, J. D. Ludden, J. P. Searl, Edson White, and the heirs of Daniel Rust (2d), and recommended the purchase of a suitable amount of land, the building of a bridge across the pond, near the Nashawannuck office, and the construction of a road. The town voted to adopt the plan recommended, and provided a sum of money for the purpose. Ernest W. Bowdich, of Boston, a civil and topographical engineer, made the final survey, beginning his work Oct. 27, 1873. This gentleman, with extensive acquaintance, declares that he knows no more finely-located cemetery in Western Massachusetts than this is. It has been named Brookside Cemetery, from its proximity to the water, which adds greatly to its beauty. To interest the people in the enterprise, and to familiarize them with the location, a general invitation was given them to come together Nov. 5, 1873, and construct an avenue upon it. About 150 responded to the call. The cemetery, exclusive of the inclosing avenue, contains nearly 29 acres. The whole number of lots laid out is 807, of which 57 have been sold. There is ample room to increase the number of lots to 1000 if desirable, and still leave spaces for decorative purposes. The prices range from $6 to $50 per lot. It is now in charge of a committee,—E. H. Sawyer, Chairman; Lafayette Clapp, Secretary and Treasurer; and E. S. Janes, Superintendent,—with whom were associated in the early history of the enterprise A. L. Clark, L. D. Lyman, Wm. N. Clapp, and R. C. Dresser. The whole cost up to date is not far from $9800."

The plans of the civil engineer were executed by the superintendent, E. S. Janes, with care and fidelity. Avenues have been graded, lots improved, and the cemetery is to be in future years a lovely and beautiful resting-place of the dead. Year by year nature, art, and culture will combine to adorn its winding walks, its reserved squares, and its burial-lots. Along these silent streets shall be laid, for a century to come, old age in its glory, manhood in its prime, youth in its strength, and childhood in its innocence. Here Christian faith will inspire the hearts of mourning circles with golden hopes of immortality, and point the living to the better land of the departed. And to those who tread these carefully-cherished grounds, and remember, perhaps, that their dead are in the unknown and lost burial-grounds of the past, will come the sweet consolation that our Heavenly Father knoweth where his children sleep, and needs no marble shaft to mark their resting-place.

There were some burials on the Pearson Hendrick farm.

BANKS.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

This was organized in 1864, with a capital of $150,000, which was afterward increased to $200,000. Hon. H. G. Knight is the president, and A. D. Sanders cashier. Rev. S. T. Seelye is the vice-president.

An efficient board of directors co-operate in the management. Dividends formerly averaged 9 per cent. annually, somewhat less in these later years of "hard times." A surplus of $40,000 has accumulated.

A handsome bank building, with a solidly-built vault, was erected in 1871, at a cost of $20,000. It is said to be a model structure for a country bank.

THE EASTHAMPTON SAVINGS-BANK.

This was organized June 7, 1870, and is located in the same building as the National Bank. Hon. E. H. Sawyer is president, and Rev. S. T. Seelye treasurer.

It has a deposit account of $225,000, three-quarters of which belongs to the people of this town.

PUBLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

"While the town-hall was in process of erection, a Public Library Association was organized with corporate powers, Hon. E. H. Sawyer, its earnest advocate, securing the charter. The town appropriated two large rooms in the hall for its use, and has made it an annual grant of $500. Private donations have also been made, the chief of which have been $1000 each from Mr. Williston and Mr. Sawyer, and $500 each from Christopher Meyer, John R. Ford, and James Sutherland. Thirty-five persons have made themselves life-members by the payment of $50 each. Any citizen of the town can consult the books freely at the library, and can withdraw them on payment of $1 per year. There are at present 320 subscribers, besides the life-members. The whole number of books is 4995. Miss Dora C. Miller has been the librarian from the outset, and her services have been invaluable. The present officers are E. H. Sawyer, President; H. G. Knight, Vice-President; W. G. Bassett, Secretary; C. E. Williams, Treasurer; Rev. S. T. Seelye, Rev. A. M. Colton, Lafayette Clapp, and E. T. Sawyer, Directors.

"The laws of the State empower Library Associations, if they so choose, to establish and maintain museums. Our Association undertook the enterprise early in 1872, putting the matter into the hands of C. B. Johnson, H. N. Rust, and Lafayette Clapp, who soon had it in successful progress. The two former have made extensive private collections, and on that account were especially well fitted for the duty assigned them. The committee, to which L. D. Lyman was added on the departure of Mr. Rust, have worked with enthusiasm, and, with the co-operation of others, have been able to make a most valuable collection. The articles are displayed in the library reception-room, and constitute a feature of decided interest, both to citizens and strangers. Many relics of the late war, and other rare and curious articles, have been collected. Some of these are illustrative of local history, others of antique customs, or of the habits of uncivilized people. Hon. E. H. Sawyer has been a steadfast friend of the work, giving to it some $300 at the start. He, with Mr. Rust of the committee, Dr. Seelye, and George S. Clark, have been the most extensive depositors. Space and time are wanting to mention the articles in detail. There are muskets, swords, knives, and other relics of the war, as, e.g., a piece of rail from the field of Antietam, riddled with bullets; a bust of John Brown, and one of his pikes; a case of stuffed birds, the work of David M. Strangford; a collection of seashells; curiosities from the South Sea Islands; and other articles. Some of the articles have a local association, such as a set of table-glasses, used about 1740, by Maj. Jonathan Clapp; the bullet-pouch that saved the life of Lemuel Lyman, at Lake George, Sept. 8, 1755; the deed of School Meadow, executed in 1745, by the agents of the town of Northampton, to Dea. Stephen Wright and Benjamin Lyman, ancestors of the Wrights and Lymans of the town; a musket made by Moses Chapman and carried by Nathaniel White in the Revolution; Rev. Mr. Williston's license to preach, signed by Jonathan Edwards; his corner-clock, and an oil-painting of him, presented by Mrs. Emily G. Williston; also an oil-portrait of Rev. Wm. Bement, painted by Sylvester S. Lyman, of Hartford (a native of the town), and in part donated by him. Besides the portraits, the walls are adorned by several fine engravings."

It should be added that there was an early library association organized in 1792, and composed of about thirty persons at first, who paid two dollars each and a small annual sum. In the progress of years quite a library was collected, and Rev. Payson Williston officiated as librarian for thirty-five years. In 1842 it was united with the Youths' Library Association, an organization formed for literary improvement, in 1828. Its members paid one dollar as a membership fee, and an annual tax of twenty-five cents. After the union the name was changed to the Easthampton Social Library Association. The library was removed to the town-hall, and though there was at times little interest in the matter, yet it continued down to nearly the date of the formation of the corporate society above noticed, and was really a praiseworthy affair, having an existence, in one form or another, seventy years or more.

It contained some valuable works,—Rollin's History, Josephus' History. A library meeting was held once in three months. When several wanted the same book they used to bid for it.

THE FARMERS' CLUB OF EASTHAMPTON.

This was organized in 1858 to promote the interests of the farming community by the holding of meetings and interchange of views and experiences. The society has kept up its operations nearly every year since it began. Several exhibitions of fruit, vegetables, and stock have been held which were very successful and reflected great credit upon the members. Many professional and business-men not engaged in farming have found the meetings and social gatherings a pleasant place of resort, and have contributed much to their success. Professors in the seminary, pastors of the churches, merchants, and factory-men are often "farmers" for the time being.

The officers for the present winter (1878-79) are Major H. E. Alvord, President; Lewis E. Janes, Secretary.

There are many other organizations of a social, benevolent, or educational character existing in Easthampton. Among these, including some that have dissolved and others that are maintained somewhat irregularly, may be mentioned the Easthampton Mutual Relief Society, organized to do a life insurance business; the Ionic Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, and associated with it the Doric Chapter of the order of the Eastern Star, to which mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters of Masons are admitted; the Humboldt Lodge, D. O. H., No. 97,—a mutual German relief society; the Caledonian Thistle Club, for similar purposes among the Scotch residents; the St. Patrick's Mutual Benevolent Society, with a similar object among the Irish citizens; a Grange of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry; the Young People's Literary Society; a Lyceum; a Young People's Temperance organization, and other societies of a like character. Easthampton shares largely in all these elements of modern progress and mutual aid.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

These appear very clearly in the sketches of early settlement and in the military notes.

The scene of the Pascommuck massacre was just south of the Manhan, at the foot of the mountain; upon a beautiful plateau overlooking the meadows and Northampton beyond. The centre of the little settlement is stated as the point where the road now leading up the mountain diverges from the public highway. Standing here, the imagination can but faintly picture the scenes of that fearful morning,—the surprise, the slaughter, the burning, and the leading away of the few captives. Not far off is the ravine down which Benjamin Janes, eluding the vigilance of his captors, dashed with the energy of desperation, seized a canoe, and rowed to Northampton. The war-whoop of the Indian has given way to the shriek of the locomotive; the wilderness of the savage to the culture of civilization. The Manhan still flows onward to the Connecticut, and Mount Tom still lifts its bold summit above the site of the ancient hamlet, but all else have changed.

Fort Plain, so called, in the rear of East Street school-house, is understood to derive its name from the location there of the Indian fort of 1664. This was one of the abiding-places, or headquarters, of the remnant of the Non-o-tucks who remained in this vicinity for some years after the sale of their lands. The opening troubles of King Philip's war excited the old feelings of hostility, and, expecting to be disarmed or captured by the whites, these few Indians retired up the valley, and never returned. This was their last residence within the limits of Easthampton. From this "plain" they took up their northward march, leaving forever the fields of their fathers and the streams and hunting-grounds of their ancestral Non-o-tuck.

The company of troops from Northampton that pursued the Indians after the Pascommuck slaughter overtook them on the well-known Wait farm. The exact field of the skirmish is not known, but in this immediate vicinity Capt. John Taylor was killed, and here the Indians massacred the little boys, sparing only Elisha Searl, who made signs that he would go with them willingly.

Samuel Janes, one of the boys whom the Indians had tomahawked and left for dead, however, recovered, and lived to a good old age. He was the ancestor of the present families of that name in town.

The other points of considerable historic interest—the location of the first settler, John Webb, the first mills, the place of the first district-meeting, and other similar points—are fully noted elsewhere.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

It may have been proper to say before 1847 that agriculture was the principal occupation of the people of Easthampton. It could hardly be true at any time since. Considerable wheat was raised in the early times, while the soil still abounded in the elements of fertility; flax was also an object of culture; but both of these ceased to be remunerative, and were mostly abandoned years ago. Rye, corn, oats, and potatoes soon became the staple crops, and have been for many years.

During the last twenty-five years large quantities of tobacco have been grown, and the business was exceedingly profitable for a portion of the time. It is yet grown extensively, though like other agricultural products it is greatly reduced in price. The extent of the manufactures of the town compels this notice of the farming interests to be condensed into a brief allusion.

Mills, Factories, etc.—Upon the small tributaries of the Manhan flowing from the north there seem to have been no mill privileges improved except upon the one known as Sawmill Brook. Upon this, near the Northampton line, was a saw-mill, dating back to 1803. It was owned at various times by Capt. John Phelps; by Elisha C. and Asa Strong with other proprietors; by E. W. Lyman; by Jonathan and Calvin Strong, of Northampton; and probably there were others who at times owned shares. The mill was destroyed in the freshet of 1854, and there are now no buildings near the old site.

Lyman's history gives the original founders as Jonathan Strong and brother, Jonathan Bartlett, John Phelps, and Simeon Clark.

On the northern branch of the Manhan, south of Loudville, and just within the limits of Easthampton, is the grist-mill of Franklin Strong. This is not one of the very old mills, but has been in existence perhaps thirty-five years, and widely known as Strong's grist-mill.

Caleb Loud, of Loudville, also had a saw-mill near the Strong mill,—continued for some years.

The Strong grist-mill was first built as a carding-machine. Below, at Glendale, there was a saw-mill owned at one time by H. Bartholomew. It went down many years ago, and the present Glenwood Mills occupy nearly the same location.

Descending the Manhan to the mouth of Saw-mill Brook, we reach the vicinity of the earliest improvement of the water-power of the town.

In 1674, Northampton gave "David Wilton, Medad Pomeroy, and Joseph Taylor liberty to erect a saw-mill on the brook on the right hand of the cart-way going over Manhan River." Here we have a glimpse of this place two hundred and five years ago,—a single road winding through the unbroken forest to the south, crossing just above the present covered bridge at the foot of what a hundred years later was known as Meeting-house Hill.

Above on the little brook was the saw-mill privilege granted by Northampton, near the present residence of Joel Bassett. Little is known of the duration of this mill or its subsequent owners, and it probably lasted but a short time.

In 1686-87 the town of Northampton voted Samuel Bartlett liberty "to set up a corn-mill on the falls below the cart-way on the river." The building of this mill it is supposed followed soon after the grant. With Joseph Bartlett, who succeeded Samuel, lived Jonathan Clapp, a nephew of Joseph, and the mill passed to him. From that time to this the Clapp family have retained an interest in the property,—one-quarter being now owned by Edward Clapp, a descendant, and three-quarters by Mr. J. E. Thayer.

About 1780, Jonathan Clapp commenced the business of fulling cloth. He occupied a portion of the grist-mill, where for a number of years he carried on the business, receiving the cloth which had been woven in the various families of the surrounding town and "fulling" it, as it was called. The customary charge was three cents a yard. After "fulling," it was "dressed," and thus rendered fit for clothing. This enterprise subsequently became connected with another. Not long after the opening of Jonathan Clapp's fulling business, Capt. Joseph Clapp built another clothing-mill on Broad Brook, a short distance below the present button- and suspender-factories. There he carried on a flourishing business.

Thaddeus Clapp, son of Joseph, about 1792 or 1793 embarked in the same business at Worthington, but soon returned and entered into copartnership with his father.

At the death of Joseph Clapp, in 1797, the works were removed to Manhan River, near the grist-mill above mentioned. After the business was given up by Mr. Clapp it was conducted successively by Roswell Knight; by Lowell E. and Jason Janes; then by Janes & Alvord; and lastly by Janes & Ferry. This last-named firm in 1835 erected a new building (the one afterward occupied by H. B. Shoals as a tannery), and went into the manufacture of satinete. The "hard times" of 1837, when cloth was sold for less than the first cost of the wool, brought this enterprise to an end. The first power-loom ever run in this town was started in that mill.

The tannery business at this point was continued for several years.

The present grist-mill building is itself an old affair, as its heavy timbers indicate, but it is not the one erected by Samuel Bartlett one hundred and ninety years ago. It has been rebuilt twice.

At the south side of the Manhan at this point was a saw-mill, owned for many years by L. P. Lyman, but not dating back like the grist-mill to the earliest settlement. Mr. Lyman did a large lumber business for many years. This mill was built by several parties; among them Benjamin Clapp owned one-fourth, and others of the Clapp family.

Below, along the Manhan to its mouth at the "Ox-Bow," there is not fall enough for any mill privileges. The statement of "Nason's Gazetteer" that there was a mill at Nashawannuck must refer to the Bartlett Mills or to the one on Saw-mill Brook.

On Broad Brook, just above its junction with the Manhan, was the old saw-mill of Capt. Lemuel Lyman and Luther Clark, built no doubt before 1800. About 1845 it was bought by Spencer Janes and Alanson Clark, and it is stated that Horace and Henry Clark were also part owners. The mill was then rebuilt. Mr. Edwin S. Janes states that it was said by the older people that there had been a mill there for seventy-five or eighty years, which would carry the date of its first erection back to 1770 or 1775. The new mill was subsequently owned by Zenas Clark, Obadiah Clark, and Edwin Janes (not Edwin S. above mentioned). Spencer Janes finally became the sole owner. It passed at his death to his son, Edwin S. Janes, who sold the privilege in 1858 to Samuel Williston.

A previous writer gives the builder of the first saw-mill at this point as Bohan Clark, 1797, but the evidence indicates an earlier date. The sons of Asahel Clark owned the mill at one time.

Just above, on Broad Brook, is the site of an old carding-machine, now within the limits of the pond. The present lane upon the farm of Edwin S. Janes is the veritable old "Carding-Machine Lane" of seventy-five years ago. This carding-machine is understood to have been built by Lieut. Jonathan Janes, and seems to have been a distinct affair from the Clapp mill already mentioned, which stood farther up, near the present button-works.

Tracing Broad Brook southward from the present village, the only water-privileges of early times improved were the following: The saw-mill of Stephen Hendrick, which stood near the present residence of George Hendrick. Traces of the mill all gone; no mill there for forty years. The saw-mill of Benjamin Strong was near the present residence of Calvin Strong; buildings still standing, but unused. The saw-mill of Alva Coleman was on Williston's Brook. It was established for sash and blinds, but the water-power was not enough, and it was not used much and is now taken down.

This is a brief summary of the mills down to the year 1847. At that time the town entered upon a new era.

Modern Easthampton dates from the establishment of the button business. True, Mr. Williston, in his growing wealth and with his liberal plans of benevolence, had already founded the seminary and done much for other public improvements; but the removal of the button-machinery from Haydenville and the erection of the first large building, 97 feet by 45, and three stories in height, was the beginning of a material development and a rapidity of growth which have transformed a small rural hamlet into a large and thriving village "with all the modern improvements."

The National Button Company.—In 1847-48, Mr. Williston entered into partnership with Horatio G. Knight, and the firm was known as Samuel Williston & Co. Somewhat later Seth Warner was admitted, and the firm-name was Williston, Knight & Co. The business was carried on by this firm until Dec. 1, 1865, when the partnership expired, and the stock company now carrying on the business was formed. Mr. Williston was president during his life. The present officers are Horatio G. Knight, President; H. G. Knight, H. W. Knight, H. J. Bly, W. H. Chapman, and M. F. Dickinson, Jr., Directors; Joseph H. Wilson, Superintendent; Horace L. Clark, Clerk and Treasurer.

The number of hands now employed is about 175, and the line of work is limited exclusively to the manufacture of covered buttons. The present building was erected in 1861, and is 106 feet by 30, with a wing 40 by 60. At that time the first building was leased to the Goodyear Elastic Fabric Company.

The Nashawannuck Manufacturing Company.—In 1848 and 1849, Mr. Williston erected a brick building by the side of his button-factory, to be occupied in the manufacture of suspender webbing, which business he continued in his own name until 1852, when he sold out to the joint-stock company above named. Mr. Williston remained, however, until his death a stockholder, and was president. The present officers are Christopher Meyer, President; Hon. E. H. Sawyer, Treasurer; G. H. Leonard, Resident Agent. The capital of the company was at first $100,000. It was increased at various times until it reached $300,000, and the charter empowered them to increase to $500,000. The treasurer, Hon. E. H. Sawyer, has been connected with the company in that capacity from the organization, now more than twenty-five years. Assisted by the board of directors, he has the chief management. The amount of business was largely increased by the purchase in 1853 of the right to use Goodyear's patent vulcanized rubber in the manufacture of elastic fabrics. They were the first in this country to successfully introduce the combination of threads of vulcanized rubber with fibrous material in the production of woven goods, and their example had the effect of stimulating others in the same direction. For some years they made their own rubber thread and all the yarns used in their mills. They have allowed this business to pass into the hands of other concerns growing out of the parent company. The work is divided into two departments, the weaving and the finishing. In the latter the company use great quantities of leather for ends. Their present building is over three hundred feet long and forty wide. The machinery has a capacity of 4000 dozen pairs of suspenders a week, and over 300 hands are employed.

Condensed statements give some idea of the marvelous magnitude of their operations. They have made in one year 7,000,000 yards of suspender goods, equaling 170,000 dozen pairs of suspenders; and also 2,500,000 yards of webs and frills, using 250,000 pounds of yarn and 60,000 pounds of rubber. The New York office of the company is Nos. 74 and 76 Worth Street.

The Goodyear Elastic Fabric Company first commenced operations in 1861, making elastic cloths to be used in shoes. They leased the button-mill first built by Mr. Williston. In June, 1865, they sold to the Glendale Company.

The Glendale Elastic Fabrics Company.—In 1862 a company, consisting of H. G. Knight and E. H. Sawyer, of Easthampton, and William and C. G. Judson, of New York, was organized under the title of the Glendale Vulcanized Rubber Company, with a capital of $50,000. Their business was the manufacture of elastic cords, frills, and other similar goods. They located at the place now known as Glendale, in the western portion of the town. They enlarged and occupied a building that had been occupied as a manufactory of twine and batting by Gregory & Wells. In 1864 they rented the two upper stories of the large brick factory erected by the Rubber Thread Company, near the Easthampton depot. Their operations were transferred to the village. They bought out the Goodyear Company in June, 1865, and their business rapidly increased until they occupied four mills.

In 1867 something of a reorganization took place, and the name was changed to its present form. The machinery was brought from England by Hon. E. H. Sawyer as an agent for certain New York capitalists.

At about the same time the company bought the elastic cord and braid business, originally started by Lieut.-Gov. Knight, and they have since successfully connected both the goring and braided goods, together with the weaving of narrow-loom or fine garter-web, and have brought the standard of their productions up to that of the best goods made in Europe. The line of work embraces a wide variety.

They are almost the only manufacturers in the United States of elastic goring for congress gaiters and shoes, and produce as handsome and serviceable goods as are made anywhere in the world. The goods are made in all qualities, including silk, worsted, and cotton, ribbed and plain. An article of especial value is their worsted goring. Elastic braided cords and flat braids are made in great variety,—in plain and polished cotton, in black, white, and fancy colors of silks and worsted. There are also made silk and cotton narrow-loom webs for arm elastics, pocket-book straps, and scores of other uses, and these form a special branch of their business. They make webs for suspenders, and keep in stock or make to order almost every conceivable kind of woven and braided elastic goods. About two hundred hands are employed. In recent years the company have competitors, but they are still leaders in the business. The president is Hon. E. H. Sawyer.

Easthampton Rubber Thread Company.—Manufacturers of rubber thread of all sizes from fine Para rubber. This company was formed in November, 1863, with a capital of $100,000, and immediately began active operations. The managers had had previous experience in the business, and were thoroughly acquainted with the needs of the elastic fabric manufacturing business, and were determined to supply them. With this end in view, they employed the latest and best mechanical aids and gathered a corps of skilled workmen. Their productions were at once received with great favor, and gave such satisfaction as to call for increased facilities. In 1869 the capital was increased to $150,000, and their business greatly extended. Their line of work is confined exclusively to the manufacture of rubber thread. They buy only the best quality of rubber, the "biscuits" being expressly selected for this company in Brazil. Every step of the conversion from "biscuits" to thread is taken within the company's works. The last processes are rolling the rubber into sheets of such thickness as may be necessary to make the size required, and then cutting the sheets into strips whose width equals the thickness.

They make thread of all required sizes, from $\frac{1}{16}$ th to $\frac{1}{4}$ th of an inch square. All the principal manufacturers of elastic goods in the United States obtain their supplies from this establishment.

Their business has supplanted the foreign trade and almost stopped the importation. The works have a capacity of making 40,000 pounds of thread a month. It is stated that the company make seven-eighths of the rubber thread used in the United States. The company met with a severe repulse in the burning of their building, July 12, 1869, causing a loss of $135,000, with only $70,000 insurance, but with characteristic energy they had a new mill ready for use in five months. Nearly 250,000 pounds of pure rubber are used each year, and they do an annual business of $200,000 to $250,000. The present officers are Hon. H. G. Knight, President, E. T. Sawyer, Secretary and Treasurer.

The Easthampton Gas Company.—This was organized Sept. 7, 1864, with a capital of $20,000. It was increased April 23, 1866, to $30,000. Ebenezer Ferry was the first president, and Horace L. Clark treasurer. The company make 2,500,000 cubic feet of gas yearly. The present officers are E. T. Sawyer, President, H. L. Clark, Treasurer, and C. B. Johnson, Clerk. Previous to the formation of this company, as early as 1858 or 1859, the manufacturing corporations had made, in a limited way, illuminating gas from rosin. It was extended somewhat by a desire to light the Payson church for a course of lectures, there not then being a town-hall of sufficient capacity to accommodate the audiences. A pipe was extended to that point, and the lighting for the lectures was successful.

After that John Mayher, to whom we are indebted for these facts, extended the pipe across the street to his hardware-store, and Mr. Ebenezer Ferry also lit up his store, adjoining. This led to the formation of the regular company to manufacture coal gas.

The Mount Tom Thread Company.—In November, 1866, J. L. Bassett bought the saw-mill property, near the covered bridge, on the south side of the Manhan, and began the manufacture of spools and bobbins, supplying the Williston Mills with these articles. After being burned out in 1868, he rebuilt, and then went into the manufacture of thread, which he has ever since continued. The business is conducted by a corporation entitled as above, organized September, 1873, with a capital of $55,000. J. L. Bassett is president, and J. I. Bassett secretary and treasurer. About 30 hands are employed and a business done yearly of $75,000 to $100,000. They buy yarn, which is mostly imported, and dye, twist, and spool it. It is an excellent thread, mostly for machine use, put up in two-ounce spools, and it goes chiefly to the clothing and shoe trade.

The Valley Machine Company.—In 1868, Mr. Williston, James Sutherland, and Dr. J. W. Winslow formed the East-hampton Steam-Pump and Engine Company. The company sold out in 1870 to the Valley Company, then formed for that purpose. The new company purchased the machinery business which the Nashawannuck Company had been carrying on in the way of repairs. A new pump was also taken up, which has proved a great success. It is known as "Wright's Bucket-Plunger," patented by William Wright, of New York. It has been greatly improved by the Valley Company, who claim that it is now "the most simple, compact, and reliable steam-pump ever offered to the public." The company at first received a charter, but surrendered it in 1873, and organized on a partnership basis, with John Mayher as treasurer and general manager. About 30 hands are employed. A foundry was erected and put into operation June, 1877. The company make also the "Acme Steam-Pump," Mayher's patent. Several handsome testimonials adorn the office. Their pumps have been sent to Sweden and Norway, and an Egyptian commissioner to the Centennial of 1876 was so pleased that he shipped one home to use in his house in that land of ancient civilization.

The Williston Mills.—The name of Williston is so intimately associated with all the leading enterprises of East-hampton that the above title would hardly designate any particular business without explanation.

In the spring of 1859, Mr. Williston commenced the erection of a building for the manufacture of cotton-yarn, partly for the supply of the Nashawannuck Company. He purchased of Edwin S. Janes the old saw-mill privilege at the foot of Pleasant Street. The ground was rough and uneven, and a large amount of grading was required to be done before the foundation could be laid. When this had been partially done, and work upon the foundation was progressing, an unexpected obstacle presented itself in the shape of a spring of water bursting out with great force. It seemed for a time to defy all the efforts of the workmen. But the difficulty was apparently overcome, and work on the building went forward. In about a year from its beginning it was finished and put in operation. But the spring and the quicksand around it were destined to cause still more trouble. The dam was undermined and carried off, with a part of the factory.

A heavy loss was incurred, and the mill was delayed for several months.

Mr. Williston, however, set to work with his usual energy to repair the break, which he completed by winter. This time no attempt was made to build a dam in the old place, but it was constructed a short distance farther up the stream, and the water brought to the mill in a canal. But the list of disasters was not yet complete. In March, 1863, the water burst through the bank of the canal, near the trunk which conveyed the water to the wheel. The delay was only for a few days; steam, which had been introduced, furnished the motive-power. Repairs on the dam, which at this time was rebuilt in the original place, required four or five months. By this time upward of $100,000 had been expended. The capacity of the mill was afterward increased by large additions. The spindles number 11,000, giving employment to nearly 200 hands, and consuming 550,000 pounds of cotton a year.

The yarn spun is of the finest quality, equal to the best English. It is twisted under water. The machinery is of the best description.

Quite a village sprang up in the vicinity of the mill. The company, consisting then of Mr. Williston, J. Sutherland, and M. H. Leonard, soon had fifty or more tenements erected for employes. The increasing business demanded greater facilities, and preparation for the erection of a new factory commenced in the summer of 1865. On the 15th of August the first stone of the foundation was laid, and in four months the walls were up and the building covered.

"Mr. Williston had now undertaken the greatest business enterprise of his life. The manufacture of cotton yarns had resulted so favorably as to encourage a great enlargement of the business, and he was at that time vigorously pushing to completion a mill with a capacity of 20,000 spindles,—twice that of the first mill. It was to be run by steam,—a Corliss engine of 240-horse power. A corporation was formed, with the title 'The Williston Mills,' which had a paid-up capital of $700,000. For a time, at least, it employed from 400 to 500 persons, with a pay-roll of $9000 and a sales account of $50,000 to $60,000 per month, and owned a village of 160 tenements (mostly only two under one roof), a store, and a large boarding-house. To this enterprise Mr. Williston, who was the principal owner, gave the last years of his life, relinquishing to the hands of others the management of the industries of the upper village, in which he still retained his interest. His attempt in the new factory was to establish the manufacture of all grades of spool cotton for hand and machine sewing. With great energy and will he persevered in his undertaking, and for several years turned out thread in large quantities. But the competition was so sharp, and the difficulties and embarrassments of the work and of the times were so great, that the enterprise failed to be remunerative, and, indeed, was prosecuted at so heavy a loss as greatly to cripple Mr. Williston, and sadly to disappoint his hopes as to the amount of money he was able to leave behind him for educational purposes, although, as it was, his bequests were princely.

"At last he abandoned the manufacture of thread, and confined his efforts to the manufacture of cotton yarns. In this there has been better success. On account of the shrinkage of values and the ill success of the undertaking, the capital of the corporation was reduced to $350,000, where it now stands."

If these mills were not as successful as he had hoped, yet they stand as the final enterprise of this distinguished man, a monument reared by himself, indicating his business pursuits in life, as Williston Seminary and the Payson church do his educational and religious aspirations. To these mills he devoted the last years of his life, driving every day as long as health permitted to the office, and displaying his wonted judgment and foresight in the management of his business. But the time came when all these enterprises passed into other hands. He died July 18, 1874. Over his grave may well rise the shaft of enduring granite, but he has a better memorial than that: modern Easthampton is his monument.

MILITARY.

A settlement having been made at Pascommuck about 1700, consisting of the five families already mentioned, that place became the scene of a fearful slaughter by the Indians in 1704. The following account is taken from a historical discourse delivered many years ago by the Rev. Mr. Williams, of Northampton:

On the 13th of May, 1704, old style, the Indians attacked the village of Pascommuck. The inhabitants had been settled there only two or three years, the town having granted them their home-lots in 1699. The Indians had been to Merrimack River, but met with no success; they then directed their course toward Westfield, but Westfield River was so high they could not pass it. Some of the Indians had been at Northampton in a friendly manner the year before, and now informed their companions that there was a small village at Pascommuck where they might get provisions, for they were almost famished, and intended, as they afterward declared, to resign themselves up if they could obtain no food otherwise.

In the evening before the 13th of May, the Indians went upon Mount Tom and observed the situation of the place. As the meadow was then covered by water, they supposed the village could be taken, and that no aid could come seasonably from the town on account of the intervening flood. The village consisted of only five families,—Samuel Janes, Deacon Benjamin Janes, John Searls, Moses Hutchinson, and Benoni Jones.

A little before daylight the Indians attacked the village. Benoni Jones' house, which stood on the lot where Nathaniel Kentfield afterward lived, was encompassed with pickets. The Indians procured flax and other combustibles and set them on fire, which was communicated to the house. A young woman named Patience Webb was awaked, and, looking out of the window, was shot through the head. The people surrendered, and all of the above families were killed or taken prisoners. Some of the prisoners were afterward rescued by the people from the town. These, commanded by Capt. Taylor, went round by Pomroy's meadow and met the Indians near Mount Tom, when a skirmish ensued, in which Capt. Taylor was killed.

The wife of Benjamin Janes was taken to the top of Pomeroy's Mountain, knocked on the head, and scalped. Our people found her in that situation, and, perceiving that she was still alive, brought her home, and she recovered and lived till she was more than eighty years of age. The wife of Moses Hutchinson was taken prisoner, but soon made her escape. John Searls' wife was also taken and severely wounded, but was afterward rescued from the Indians.

Benoni Jones' wife, and Elisha, the son of John Searls, were taken prisoners to Canada.

No other lives were known to have been taken by the Indians till 1724, when Nathaniel Edwards (2d) was shot a few rods south of the present residence of Samuel Phelps. It was supposed that he, in company with other men from Northampton, had come out to gather their crops from the Manhan meadows. Returning he was delayed, fell behind the others, and was shot and scalped. A negro lying close on the top of the load is said to have escaped, as the savages seem to have made no effort to take the team, and it traveled on after the killing of Mr. Edwards. At the top of the hill the negro unharnessed a horse and rode forward with the news.

From the present territory of Easthampton several volunteers joined in the old French war, so called, and were at the battle of Lake George, Sept. 8, 1755. Eliakim Wright, son of Stephen Wright, was among the killed. Lemuel Lyman, son of Benjamin Lyman, was saved from death by his bullet-pouch checking a ball that struck him. The pouch is now in the museum connected with the public library.

During the period of danger preceding the war of 1756 several houses in Easthampton were fortified in anticipation of a possible attack from the Indians, or from an attempt by the French to renew their old campaigns down the Connecticut Valley. The house of Joseph Bartlett, at the mills, Maj. Jonathan Clapp, on the Northampton Road, and Samuel Janes, at Pascommuck, were all fortified, but the strength of the fortifications was never tried. There was no attack made. Sergt. Corse refused to move into the fortified houses or go back to Northampton, declaring "he wasn't afraid of Indians or anything else." He barred up his own doors, and had a large dog with him. But one night some eight or ten savages surrounded the house; but of them thrust a gun through the door, which Corse seized and pulled away from him. He let out his dog; the Indians ran; but after this Corse went into Northampton each night, like the rest of the people.

There is no complete record of the names of Easthampton men who served in the Revolutionary war. The following are mentioned: Capt. Joseph Clapp, Quar.-Mast. Benjamin Clapp, Dr. Stephen Wood, and his sons Daniel and David, John Clapp, Benjamin Lyman, Jr., Stephen Wright, Jr., David Clapp, Levi Clapp, Eliakim Clark, Barzillai Brewer, and Willet Chapman.

Dr. Wood died in service at West Point. David Clapp did not return from the war, and his fate seems to have been unknown. Messrs. Brewer and Chapman both died in the army. Moses Gouch, from this town, also served through the war and returned. From the facts given in Lyman's centennial address, it appears proper to add Capt. David Lyman, Jonathan Janes, Samuel Judd, David Chapman and Joel Parsons, Phineas Clark, Zadoc Danks, Stephen Wright, the father of Samuel Brooks, and Daniel Braman.

Jonathan Clapp, Jr., though not belonging to the army, is said to have locked his mill and hastened to Bennington when the approach of the British was made known through the Connecticut Valley, but he was too late for the battle. Maj. Jonathan Clapp was in command of the Western Massachusetts regiment, and was sick in Pittsfield at the time of the battle. Quar.-Mast. Benjamin was with him, and both chafed under their detention within sound of the guns.

Shays' Rebellion.—It is said that there were very few in Easthampton who sympathized in this affair. On the other hand, a company was sent to Springfield to assist the State forces. The officers were David Lyman, Captain, and Noah Janes, Lieutenant.

It is supposed that the following list comprises nearly all the others that went: Lemuel Lyman, Elijah Wright, Gideon Wright, Stephen Wright, Levi Clapp, Thaddeus Clapp, Eleazer Hannum, Justice Lyman, Eliakim Clark, Eleazer Clark, Enos Janes, Silas Brown, Arad Brown, Job Strong, Israel Phelps, and Zadoc Danks.

WAR OF 1812.

The warrant for a meeting July 6, 1812, contained the clause, "to see if the town will adopt any measures relating to a war with Great Britain."

Dea. Thaddeus Clapp was chosen moderator. Voted, to oppose a war with England.

Voted, the selectmen be a committee to send a memorial to Congress.

Voted, to send Dea. Thaddeus Clapp to the County Convention to be held at Northampton on the 14th of this month.

Voted, to delay the matter of paying the militia soldiers any money, or raising any until they are called for.

This seems to have been the only "war" meeting held during that struggle with England. But when Boston was supposed to be in danger, and a large force was called out for its defense, the following persons from Easthampton went and served in that bloodless campaign: John Alpress, Elisha Alvord, Worcester Avery, Levi Brown, George Clapp, James Clapp, Philip Clark, Gershom Danks, Stephen Hendrick, Moses Gouch, Luther Pomeroy, Spencer Pomeroy, Jesse Ring, Harris Wight, Collins Wood, Ebenezer Wood, Thaddeus Parsons, Jesse Coats.

Official Action by the Town during the Civil War, 1861-65.

—In 1861 the startling events at the South evoked an immediate response in Easthampton. At a town-meeting held April 30th, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

Whereas, a large portion of the citizens of the United States are in open rebellion against the Government of the same, and the President of the United States has by proclamation called for a large force of volunteer soldiers to defend and vindicate the Government, and there is a strong probability of a still larger force being soon called for; and as we deem it to be the privilege as well as the duty of every good citizen and lover of his country to contribute in some way toward supporting the government from which he receives protection; therefore, in order to encourage the citizens of this town to volunteer their services in defense of our general government, be it

Resolved, That this town appropriate five thousand dollars for the purpose of equipping such volunteers as may be called into service, and for the relief of families and relatives dependent upon them for support.

This meeting was only two weeks after the surrender of Fort Sumter, and is believed to have been the earliest official action in this part of the State.

November 5th.—The town voted to pay State aid to the families of volunteers, as provided by law. The list shows that many volunteers went into the service during this year.

Aug. 11, 1862.—The town voted to pay the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars to each of the twenty-one volunteers who have enlisted under the last call of the President. Voted, fifty dollars each to nine months' volunteers, to be increased by seventy-five dollars in case of enlistment for three years at the close of the nine months' service. August 27th, it was voted to add seventy-five dollars to the first fifty in the case of nine months' men.

In the fall of this year the formation of the 52d Regiment drew from this town a large number of citizens engaged in active business, descendants of the ancestral families of early times.

Aug. 17, 1863.—Voted, that the families of drafted men be put on the same footing as those of volunteers, with reference to State aid.

The contest still lingered with all its horrors, but every needed sacrifice was promptly and bravely made. The dead were brought home for burial, and new men stepped forward to fill their places. Aug. 20, 1864, it was voted to raise and appropriate $125 each for 34 men to complete the town's quota, and that it be paid in gold or its equivalent. This was in the dark days when Grant was delayed at Petersburg and Sherman at Atlanta.

It is stated in Schouler's history that Easthampton furnished 200 men for the war, which was a surplus of 18 over and above all demands; 5 were commissioned officers. The whole amount of aid paid solely by the town was $30,367. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $924,567, and the population 1916. Amount of aid to families afterward refunded by the State, 1861, $256.40; 1862, $1600.05; 1863, $1847.34; 1864, $1601.24; 1865, $1400; total, $6705.03.

The spontaneous, unofficial action is worthy of honorable mention. Individuals, neighborhoods, sewing societies, town societies, one and all were at work for the absent. The children in the Sunday-schools gave liberally for the same purpose.

"The Society to Aid Sick and Wounded Soldiers" early in 1861 sent a box of supplies worth $150 to the suffering in St. Louis, Mo. In 1863 the same society sent two barrels of clothing to the "contrabands," a name Gen. Butler has the credit of originating. Contributions were taken up in the churches, and the "factory-girls" gave $200, all of which was used to purchase materials to make into clothing, filling four large boxes. The barrels and boxes were estimated to be worth $600. In 1864 the same society sent through the Christian Commission nine boxes filled with under-garments and other contributions. One large box was also sent to the freedmen, and one to the Union refugees in Cairo, Ill. The value of these eleven boxes was at least $1000. In 1865 two boxes containing contributions valued at $200 were sent to the front early in the spring. Other contributions were taken up in churches and Sunday-schools, the amounts not recorded, but all of which was given freely for this noble work. The Sabbath-school of the First Congregational Church gave during the war in cash and books probably $150. Perhaps others did equally well in proportion to ability.

The following list is prepared from the adjutant-general's reports, from "Lyman's History of Easthampton," aided by further inquiry among the veterans themselves now living in Easthampton. It is designed to include every man who was a resident of Easthampton and went into the army, together with a few others who may be properly mentioned in recounting the military services of Easthampton. Mere recruits hired abroad, in Boston or elsewhere, are not intended to be given, except as they may have lost their lives in the service of the town. The list has been revised by Lafayette Clapp.

SOLDIERS' RECORD, WAR OF 1861-65.

Calvin L. Strong, enl. Oct. 15, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. B; trans. to 52d, Nov. 5, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Frederick C. Colton, enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 James T. Graves, enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Benjamin M. Smith, enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; clerk in Q. M. Dept. for a time.
 Whitney F. Alvord, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Lyman H. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles L. Boehm, enl. Nov. 18, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Frank L. Boehm, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 George M. Clapp, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Wm. E. Clapp, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Lewis Clapp, 1st lieut., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles L. Webster, sergt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died July 19, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La. A march of fifty-three miles in twenty-four consecutive hours had just been made, which caused his sickness.
 Newton Wood, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John W. Lyman, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Clinton Bates, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died in the service. He had carried his own and a sick comrade's knapsack—a double load—for a long, weary march, commencing March 13, 1863.
 Stephen W. Pierce, musician, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 James H. Clark, enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. G; disch. Aug. 14, 1863, for disability, as given in the adjt.-general's reports. He died of fever in the hospital at Alexandria, Aug. 14, 1864, and his remains were brought home for burial. He was in the Shenandoah campaign under Banks; Antietam, under McClellan; Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg. He and Roland S. Williston were the first men who volunteered from Easthampton.
 Oran D. Saxton, May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. K; disch. April 24, 1862, for disability.
 Wm. G. Taylor, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Lorenzo D. Trask, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

Lewis P. Wait, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died Nov. 2, 1862, at Easthampton, Mass.; having been in camp but fifteen days and returning home upon a furlough, he was taken sick and died.
 Enoch E. Wood, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Samuel K. Matthews, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Lucius E. Parsons, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Herbert W. Pomeroy, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died Jan. 28, 1863, at Plaquemine, La., of typhoid fever.
 Wm. W. Poole, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Alfred S. Shaw, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. April 29, 1863, for disability.
 George W. Shaw, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edwin E. Janes, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles W. Johnson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John G. Keppel, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Albert A. Lyman, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles H. Lyman, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Daniel W. Lyman, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; killed June 14, 1863, at Port Hudson, La., in the attack on the fort; body not brought away, but buried where he fell.
 Edmund W. Clark, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Lewis S. Clark, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles W. Dawes, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Edward M. Ferry, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 S. Williston Graves, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Joseph K. Hull, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Justus Lyman, 1st sergt., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 23, 1863; pro. to 2d lieut. Feb. 17, 1864; to 1st lieut. June 5, 1864; to capt. May 15, 1865; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff, May 16, '64; disch. June 26, '65.
 John H. Judd, sergt., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; pro. to 2d lieut. Jan. 2, 1863; to 1st lieut. May 17, 1864; must. out March 21, 1865; taken at Drury's Bluff, May 16, 1864, and was a prisoner for nine months; then escaped from Charlotte, N. C.

George P. Clark, sergt., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 7, 1864.
 Wm. F. Bly, enl. Jan. 2, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. June 26, 1865; Bly was first counted on the quota of Springfield; enl. Aug. 11, 1862; disch. to re-enl. Jan. 1, 1864; must. Jan. 2, 1864, on the quota of Easthampton.
 Thomas Bolton, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 Henry Braman, enl. Aug. 6, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; disch. May 22, 1865.
 Alvan W. Clark, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 23, 1863; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; died at Andersonville.
 Oliver A. Clark, enl. July 21, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; died June 27, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.
 Lafayette Clapp, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; most of the time in hospital service; at Foster General Hospital, Newbern, N. C., from May 21, 1863, to Aug. 8, 1864; then detailed as clerk in the office of Superintendent of White Refugees, Dept. of N. C., until disch., Sept. 27, 1864, and afterward as civilian in same capacity until May 25, 1865.
 Wm. P. Derby, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864; had held an appointment in the post-office at Newbern, N. C., during his term of enlistment.
 Edward Merrigan, enl. Feb. 3, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; disch. June 7, 1865.
 Charles Morganweek, enl. Feb. 4, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. July 7, 1865.
 Patrick Murphy, enl. July 21, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; disch. May 22, 1865.
 Ezra O. Spooner, enl. Aug. 5, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; died Aug. 4, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.
 Frederick P. Stone, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; died Jan. 9, 1865, at Andersonville, Ga.
 Spencer C. Wood, enl. July 21, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; unaccounted for in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, 1868, vol. ii. page 527; Spencer C. Wood never had a discharge; has tried to get one since the close of the war, but never succeeded in getting the attention his case deserved from the War Department; there was no stain upon his record as a soldier.
 Thomas Barbour, enl. Dec. 22, 1863, 27th Inf., Co. B; taken prisoner at Southwest Creek; paroled May 26, 1865; disch. June 26, 1865.

Charles Walker, enl. Dec. 14, 1863, 27th Inf., Co. C; disch. June 26, 1865.

Charles B. Hendrick, enl. Oct. 1, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. K; disch. Jan., 1862, for disability.

Charles D. Fish, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 26, 1865.

George A. Hill, enl. Aug. 5, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864; disch. June 26, 1865.

Sylvester S. Hooper, corp., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 23, 1863; a prisoner for several months at Andersonville, having been taken at Drury's Bluff; disch. June 21, 1865.

Lyman A. Howard, enl. July 21, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; disch. April 10, 1865.

Elisha C. Lyman, enl. July 26, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. A; died Dec. 26, 1862, at Newbern, N. C.; his remains were brought home for burial.

Thaddeus A. Lyman, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Oct. 17, 1862, for disability.

Fordyce A. Rust, 1st sergt., enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; pro. to 1st lieut. Feb. 20, 1862; disch. Nov. 18, 1864.

Charles S. Rust, enl. Nov. 9, 1861, 31st Inf.; must. as q.m.-sergt. Feb. 14, 1862; pro. to 2d lieut. April 1, 1863; to 1st lieut. Feb. 3, 1864; re-enl. April 12, 1864; acting brigade quartermaster of cavalry under Gen. Lucas for a time; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.

John L. Ross, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B.

Amasa Bruman, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. March 21, 1863, for disability; he also had three sons in the army,—a patriotic record.

Joseph U. Braman, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.

Leonard Braman, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.

Egbert J. Clapp, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; re-enl. Feb. 15, 1864; pro. to q.m.-sergt. June 18, 1864; to 2d lieut. June 7, 1865; disch. Sept. 9, 1865; he was in the battles of the Red River campaign, and the campaign against Mobile.

Albert H. Ford, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; re-enl. Feb. 15, 1864; disch. Sept. 9, 1865, serving nearly four years.

Martin S. Dodge, must. as corp., Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; re-enl. and pro. to sergt., March 27, 1864; disch. Sept. 26, 1865.

John Leavitt, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; re-enl. and pro. to sergt., Feb. 15, 1864; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.

William Newton, enl. Nov. 22, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; re-enl. and pro. to corp., Feb. 17, 1864; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.

James F. Mahar, musician, enl. Feb. 16, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Feb. 14, 1864, to re-enl., and served through till Sept. 9, 1865.

Theodore Battlett, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. June 22, 1862, for disability.

Samuel D. Gould, enl. Feb. 15, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. B; he had re-enl. at the end of his first term; wounded at Pleasant Hill; he served nearly four years in all; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.

William Hickey, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; killed April 13, 1863, at the battle of Camp Bisland, La.

Almon S. Ludden, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. June 1, 1862, for disability.

Ansel Packard, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. to re-enl., Feb. 14, 1864.

Wilbur H. Purdy, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. April 9, 1862, for disability.

Henry V. Rich, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. June 18, 1862, for disability.

Allen Wright, enl. Oct. 12, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Dec. 21, 1861, for disability.

Richard Wright, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Feb. 19, 1862, for disability.

Daniel Franzer, enl. Nov. 26, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. G; disch. to re-enl., Feb. 15, 1864 (Northampton).

Daniel Granger, enl. Nov. 26, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. G; unaccounted for in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, vol. ii. page 650.

William S. Bryant, enl. Jan. 16, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. H; re-enl. Feb. 17, 1864; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.

Chauncey R. Hendrick, enl. Jan. 2, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. H; disch. June 30, 1862, for disability, and died Sept. 11, 1862.

Charles A. Braman, enl. July 31, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. D; disch. Jan. 10, 1865, for disab.; wounded in Louisiana.

Andrew J. Ferrell, 1st sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.

Alpheus W. Parsons, sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. April 14, 1863, for disab.

Andrew J. Hill, corp., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.

Marshall Blythe, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.

Henry B. Chapman, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. Feb. 7, 1863, for disab.; died at Easthampton, Sept. 29, 1864.

Charles H. Clark, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans. April 15, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.

David Fahey, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.

Henry Graves, Jr., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.

Daniel W. Kane, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; died Dec. 16, 1862, Stafford Court-House, Va., of typhoid fever, and was buried there.

Gilbert Sandy, enl. Feb. 18, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. C; disch. Aug. 7, 1865, by order of War Department; a prisoner at Andersonville nine or ten months; a hired recruit; name given because he suffered at Andersonville.

Henry Shattuck, enl. Aug. 25, 1863, 22d Inf., Co. H; killed June 18, 1864, at Petersburg, Va.

Robert Risk, enl. Sept. 7, 1861, 24th Inf., Co. C; disch. Sept. 6, 1864.

Frank Lamar, enl. May 13, 1864, 19th Inf.; unassigned recruit, and unaccounted for in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, 1868, vol. ii. page 329.

John O'Brien, enl. Aug. 12, 1862, 11th Inf., Co. H; disch. July 14, 1865.

Henry L. Ferry, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. I; disch. Nov. 14, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. in 31st and served through the time of the regt.

Edwin Fahey, enl. Aug. 12, 1862, 1st Cav., Co. B; missed in action, May 10, 1864; prisoner nine months at Andersonville.

John Kinloch, enl. Aug. 12, 1862, 1st Cav., Co. F; disch. to re-enl., Feb. 17, 1864; taken prisoner twice, confined six months at Salisbury; disch. June 17, 1865.

Asa D. Strong, enl. Sept. 19, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; trans., Feb. 18, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.

John White, enl. July 28, 1863, 2d H. Art., Co. A; died of yellow fever, Oct. 23, 1864, at Newbern, N. C.

Luther L. Wright, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. April 30, 1863, for disab.

Patrick McNamee, enl. Feb. 18, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. E; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.

Elmer J. Hardy, enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; died of wounds May 7, 1864; a recruit from abroad; lost his life in service for the town.

Wm. H. Turner (Lyman's History).

Ralph Burnett (Lyman's History).

James S. Tencellent, 10th Conn.

John Reagan, farrier, enl. Co. B, 3d N. Y. Cav.; disch. for disab. brought on by severe exposure, Sept. 30, 1862.

Augustus M. Clapp, enl. at the age of fifteen years and ten months in Co. K, 85th Ohio Cav., for three months; was also in Co. C, 88th Ohio; was engaged in the pursuit of Morgan's guerrillas and in guarding rebel prisoners; re-enl. in 3d Ohio Cav. He was in one engagement where, though unknown to him at the time, his oldest brother was among the rebel forces. He died in hospital at Nashville, Tenn., of typhoid fever, March 9, 1863.

Dr. F. C. Greene, served with McClellan in the Peninsular campaign, and suffered severely in the swamps of Chickahominy.

John G. Hennessy, enl. 1864, 5th N. H.

Justin W. Chapin, belonged to a New York regt.; captured and confined at Andersonville seven months.

Thomas Connolly, enl. Aug. 27, 1862, Navy; assigned to the "Monongahela," and served under Farragut.

John Quinn, enl. Aug. 27, 1862, Navy; assigned to the "Tennessee."

John Donovan, enl. Aug. 27, 1862, Navy; assigned to the "Patapsco."

Salmon H. Lyman, enl. 1861, Anderson Zouaves, N. Y., Co. A; was in the battle of Williamsburg; soon after was taken sick, removed to New York, and died at Davis Island Hospital, Aug. 25, 1862. His remains were buried in Easthampton with military honors, Sept. 18, 1862.

Roland S. Williston, sergt., enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Mass., Co. G; died from wounds received at Cedar Mountain.

Charles Tencellent, enl. 1861, 7th Conn.; died of wounds received at Olustee, Fla.

Henry Lyman, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 27th Regt., Co. A; died Aug. 5, 1863; remains brought home for burial.

Gustavus W. Peabody, enl. 10th Regt., Co. I, June 21, 1861; served through his term; wounded at Salem Heights; trans. March 15, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.

Edward H. Graves, enl. 10th Regt., June 21, 1861; probably served out his term; pro. to q.m.-sergt., Oct., 1861.

Rufus Burl.

Daniel Gallagher, enl. in 9th Conn.

Patrick Ryan, enl. in 9th Conn.

Alvan W. Clark, enl. Oct. 11, 1861, 1st Wis. Bat. L. Art.; disch. March 10, 1863.

Charles M. Rensselaer, enl. 54th Regt., Co. C; wounded in battle; taken prisoner; died at Andersonville, June 8, 1864. The only colored man who enlisted from Easthampton; he desired to enlist at first, but was not allowed to; joined the army as soon as the government received colored men; was a native of Easthampton.

Michael Fitzgerald, enl. 1864, 82d N. Y.; wounded at Deep Bottom, Aug. 14, 1864; disch. June 15, 1865.

Hugo Oberempe, enl. June 5, 1861, 5th Conn. Regt.; taken prisoner, confined a month at Belle Isle, exchanged, and had a long after-service under Banks, Hooker, and Sherman; was wounded at Peach-Tree Creek; disch. June, 1865. One of "Sherman's Bummers."

Franklin R. Hoyt, enl. Oct. 10, 1861, 1st Mass. Cav., Co. F; disch. Oct. 10, 1864.

James H. Newton, enl. Aug. 6, 1862, 1st Mass. Cav., Co. G; was in the service about two years.

Alonzo S. King, enl. fall of 1862, Navy; assigned to the "Henry Hudson," and served one year upon the coast of Florida.

Wm. A. Bartlett, enl. Co. D, 37th Regt., Aug. 30, 1862 (Westhampton); trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, Dec. 15, 1863.

Albert S. Gove, enl. spring of 1861, Anderson Zouaves, N. Y.; served full term; disch.

Richard Goodsell, enl. spring of 1861, Anderson Zouaves, N. Y.; served through; disch.

John Tencellent, enl. in 55th Mass. and 7th Conn.

Frank Thornton, enl. in 55th Mass.

John Howard, enl. in 55th Mass.

Robert Fale, enl. in 15th Bat.

—Morey.

To this record may properly be added the following names, not belonging directly to Easthampton,—three sons of Joseph Alvord, who removed to Bement, Ill., before the war:

Joseph C. Alvord, lieut., enl. 1861, 21st Ill.; killed at the battle of Murfreesboro', Dec. 30, 1862.

Oscar L. Alvord, enl. 54th Ill.; taken sick in camp of typhoid fever; returned home, but died in a few days.

Harrison M. Alvord, enl. 73d Ill.; served through the war.

Henry H. Smith, son of Rev. Hervey Smith, of Easthampton; in a printing-office in Georgia when the war broke out. When ordered to leave the State or join the army, he went to North Carolina. Attempting to come North at a later period, he was captured, robbed, kept at Richmond and Andersonville twenty months or more, finally exchanged, and came home; received an appointment in the provost marshal's office, New York; afterward enlisted; drilled five months or more; thrown from his horse; injured; discharged. A career of patriotic suffering.

Edmund A. Sawyer

Gen. George C. Strong. He passed his early years with his uncle, A. L. Strong, of Easthampton; was educated at Williston Seminary, admitted to West Point, and graduated there with high honors in 1857, taking the rank of commander of the battalion of cadets. His services in the war which followed so soon after his graduation were of a long and distinguished character. Having passed through many dangers, been promoted repeatedly, and honored with appointments of great responsibility, he fell at the head of his column mortally wounded in the attack upon Fort Wagner, and died July 30, 1863.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. EDMUND HOUGHTON SAWYER, son of Ezra Sawyer and Eliza Houghton, was born in Newton, Mass., Nov. 16, 1821. His father was born in Sterling, Mass., July 22, 1794, and his mother in Lancaster, Mass., May 22, 1794. The rudiments of his education were obtained at the common schools in Lancaster, where his boyhood was passed, and he subsequently attended the Derby Academy at Hingham. His father discovered in young Sawyer those elements which, if properly developed, would result in rendering him a thorough business-man, and in 1836 arranged for him to enter the large mercantile establishment of Abraham Holman, in Bolton, Mass., as a clerk. Here he remained five years, and rose step by step from "boy-of-all-work" to the position of chief clerk of the establishment. At the age of twenty he left Bolton, and, after spending a few months in the vicinity of Boston, went to Brattleboro', Vt., and engaged with Williston & Tyler in the wholesale hardware, drug, and grocery business, which he pursued with success for a period of eight years, when he was induced by the late Samuel Williston to join him in the manufacture and sale of woven elastic rubber goods in Easthampton.

In 1850 the Nashawannuck Manufacturing Company was incorporated for the manufacture of elastic fabrics, with a capital of $100,000, since increased to $300,000, and Mr. Sawyer has been a director, the treasurer, and general agent from its organization to the present time. These positions require his attention as superintendent of the manufacturing department in Easthampton and the selling department, with a store, in New York City.

In addition to his active management of the business of the Nashawannuck Company, he has been called to assist in various enterprises in and out of Easthampton, always discharging the duties of the various positions with great credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of those interested. He is director in the Easthampton Rubber Thread Company; the Gas Company; director, president, and treasurer of the Glendale Elastic Fabrics Company; director in the Williston Mills. In the latter company he was director, treasurer, and general agent from 1871 to 1875. He was called to these positions by Mr. Williston, who found that these mills, through the advice and management of others, were rapidly losing money, and in two years after Mr. Sawyer assumed the management they were rescued from disaster and placed upon a sound foundation.

At the death of Mr. Williston the will made Mr. Sawyer one of the executors, and being the only resident executor, except Mrs. Williston, whose age prevented her from active service, the labor of settling this vast estate of over $1,000,000 devolved mainly upon Mr. Sawyer, through whose management, aided by the wise counsel and sympathy of his other co-executors, M. F. Dickinson, Jr., Esq., of Boston, and A. L. Williston, Esq., of Northampton, the legacies and debts, save one, have been paid, and a handsome gain realized on the inventory as taken soon after his death.

Mr. Sawyer was prominent and active in the organization of the First National Bank of Easthampton, and has been a director since its organization. He has also for many years been a director in the First National Bank of Northampton, and president and trustee of the Easthampton Savings-Bank.

He has been appointed and elected to, and now holds, positions as follows: trustee of Northampton Lunatic Hospital since 1864; trustee of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary since 1873; trustee of Williston Seminary since 1867; and is now treasurer of the same.

Mr. Sawyer has ever manifested a decided interest in the welfare of Easthampton, and was the original mover in the establishment of the Public Library Association, and has contributed more time and money to its maintenance than any other one person. He has always commanded the respect and esteem of the citizens of the town for which he has done so much, and has officiated as justice of the peace a long time, and notary public since 1864. In addition to the various town offices held by Mr. Sawyer, he was elected Representative to the Massachusetts Legislature in 1866 from the First Hampshire District, and Senator from Hampshire County in 1867 and 1868.

Politically, he is a Republican, and has been since the organization of that party,—never, however, a partisan, caring more for the triumph of right principles and the election of good men than for party or personal gain. He was active during the Rebellion, and gave largely in time and money toward the preservation of our free institutions. He was also one of the originators of and active in the movement that sent Hon. Julius H. Seelye, now president of Amherst College, to Congress.

The same activity manifests itself with Mr. Sawyer in religious matters as in the management of his multifarious secular duties. He has been a member of the Payson Orthodox Congregational Church since its organization, and for the same time member of the choir, of which, a portion of the time, he has had charge. He has been deacon of the church a number of years, superintendent of the Sunday-school, etc. Amherst College, in 1878, bestowed upon him the degree of Master of Arts (A.M.). His business relations have been of an extensive character, and he has twice visited Europe on business,—once in 1859, and again in 1861.

Mr. Sawyer has been twice married,—first to Mary A. Farnsworth, of Brattleboro', Oct. 4, 1848. She died May 3, 1851, leaving one son, Henry Hovey, born Sept. 11, 1849. He is a graduate of Williston Seminary and Amherst College, and is now in business with his father, as secretary of the Nashawannuck Manufacturing Company. Mr. Sawyer's second marriage occurred May 4, 1853, to Sarah J. Hinckley, of Norwich, N. Y. Their family consists of three children, viz., William Brewster, born Nov. 22, 1854; he is a graduate of Williston Seminary, Amherst College, and Harvard Medical School; Edward H. Hinckley, born Nov. 17, 1862, is now a student in Williston Seminary; Mary, born Jan. 28, 1866, now attending the village school.

Mr. Sawyer is essentially a self-made man, and his life has been one of steady and active devotion to business. His great success has been the natural result of his ability to examine and readily comprehend any subject presented to him, power to decide promptly, and courage to act with vigor and persistently in accordance with his convictions.

"Honor and fame from no condition rise;
Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

SAMUEL WILLISTON

was born in Easthampton, June 17, 1795. He was the son of Rev. Payson Williston, of Easthampton, who was the son of Rev. Noah Williston, of West Haven, Conn., who had four children,—two sons, both of whom were ministers, and two daughters, both of whom were ministers' wives. On his father's side he was own cousin to Rev. Richard Salter Storrs, D.D., of Braintree, and so akin, not only to the Willistons and Storrses, but to the Paysons, the Stronges, the Elys, and the other illustrious clergymen whose names Prof. Park has recently woven like a garland about the brow of the Braintree pastor. His mother, Mrs. Sarah Birdseye Williston, was also the daughter of a Connecticut clergyman, Rev. Nathan Birdseye, of Stratford.

His parents and grandparents were all remarkable for their longevity. His father lived to the age of ninety-three, and his father to the age of seventy-seven; his mother to the age of eighty-two, and her father to his one hundred and third year.

His father's family consisted of six children, five of whom arrived at adult ages. Of his two brothers, one was Deacon J. P. Williston, of Northampton, the reformer and philanthropist, whose humane and Christian charities, beginning at home, compassed the globe, dropping like the rain and distilling like the dew on the dry and thirsty land. The other, Deacon N. B. Williston, president of a bank in Brattleboro', Vt., a man of like spirit with his brothers, is the only surviving member of the family. Of his two sisters, one was the wife of J. D. Whitney, Esq., of Northampton, and the mother of the distinguished professor of that name; the other was the mother of the late Mrs. Dr. Adams, of Boston.

Samuel, though the third child that was born to his parents, was the oldest son that grew up to manhood. The trials and triumphs of his education and his early business, and the story of his marriage, constitute a romance in real life of rare interest and pathos. He began to go to school very young, and attended the district school in his native place, summer and winter, till he was ten years old; then in the winter only till he was sixteen, at which age his schooling, as it was called,—that is, his instruction in the common school, which then scarcely extended beyond reading, writing, and the rudiments of arithmetic,—ceased altogether. He began to work on a farm at the early age of ten, in the absence of his father on a missionary tour of three months in the State of New York. This first work was done on the farm, and under the direction of a good deacon in his father's church, Deacon Solomon Lyman, whose memory he always held in high esteem and veneration. After this he worked on a farm every summer till he was sixteen, sometimes on his father's, sometimes for some of his parishioners, and the last of these summers out of town in Westhampton, where his wages were seven dollars a month.

After he ceased going to school, he studied to some extent privately with his father, though only in the winter, for he was obliged to work in the summer. He loved study and longed for a liberal education. But he saw no way in which he could obtain the requisite means. He therefore went into a clothier's shop belonging to a brother-in-law in Rochester, Vt., where he labored the greater part of two winters, till he became master of the art to such an extent that he was intrusted with the charge of the shop. Meanwhile, he lost no time, spent his evenings in reading, and made the most of all the means of self-education within his reach. His desire for a better education being thus increased, on his return from Vermont, late in the winter of 1813-14, he entered Westfield Academy. But his funds were exhausted before he had completed a single term, and he came home again to study with his father. Still encouraged by his teachers and his parents, that where there was a will there was a way, and that some way would be found for him yet to go through college, he now began to study Latin, which he pursued first with his father and then with Rev. Mr. Gould, of Southampton. In the summer of 1814, learning that there were funds at Andover for the aid of indigent students, and attracted by the excellence of the institution, he went to Phillips Academy, then under the principal charge of Rev. John Adams, and enjoying the instructions also of Mr. Hawes, afterward Dr. Hawes, of the Centre Church in Hartford, Conn. He excelled in his studies. He went up at a step from the "Epitome of Sacred History," over the class in "Viri Romæ," to the class in "Selectæ Sacris et Profanis," and on examination at the close of his first term he was placed upon the foundation as a charity scholar. Now he had reached a point from which he thought he could see the goal of his ambition, a college education. Now he was satisfied, and regarded his fortune as made, or at least quite secure. But severer trials awaited him. He had not been there a year when his eyesight failed him, and he was obliged to leave. For two years now, from the spring of 1815 to that of 1817, he vibrated between labor on the farm and a clerkship in a store, passing the larger part of the time in the store, but with intervals of two or three months on the farm, suffering all the while from weakness, inflammation, and incessant pain in the eyes, till at length he gave up all hope of being or doing anything that could satisfy his ambition. He made up his mind—this is the way in which he was in the habit of speaking of it—that he must be a farmer, and a poor man at that. These years, however, were by no means lost to him. In the store of Justin Ely, of West Springfield, and still more in the large wholesale establishment of Francis Child, of New York City, with whom he spent a year, he was acquiring that knowledge of men and things, and forming those ideas and habits of business, which were afterward to be of such essential service to him in the management of his own affairs. Moreover, it was during this period, under the discipline of repeated disappointments and sore trials, accompanied by the effectual teaching of the Holy Spirit, that he began life anew as a Christian, and after a severe inward struggle, which began soon after leaving Andover, and ended in submission and peace just before going to New York, he consecrated himself publicly to the service of God as a member of the Presbyterian church under the pastoral care of Rev. Dr. Spring.

In the spring of 1817, at the age of twenty-two, he came back to his father and proposed to him to go into the farming business; the father to furnish the farm and the capital, and the son to manage it and do the work. The father reluctantly consented, invested some four or five hundred dollars from his father's estate in the purchase of land, taking the deed of it in his own name, and then borrowed money for the purchase of more land and implements of husbandry. Thus unpromising was the commencement of Mr. Williston's business life, without capital, almost without anything that he could call his own, and having run his father in debt for the very tools with which he was to do his work. He continued to follow farming as his business four years, enlarging the farm and extending the business, varying it also by raising sheep and growing fine wool, till he became, for that place and those times, quite a large farmer and wool-grower. He worked on the farm himself, however, only in the summer. In the winter he betook himself to that unfailing resource of intelligent and aspiring youth of both sexes in Yankee land, teaching school.

In the spring of 1822 (May 27th) he was married to Miss Emily Graves, daughter of Elnathan Graves, a respectable farmer in moderate circumstances, in the neighboring town of Williamsburg.

He still taught one year, after being married, in the central district school in Easthampton, thus making five winters in all, besides the entire year of his teaching in Springfield. Meanwhile, the farming business went on, enlarging, as we have said, and on the whole prospering. But he was obliged to run in debt at the outset. This debt was still further increased for the sake of enlarging the business. He had invested in land and sheep eighteen hundred dollars, most of which was borrowed capital. His first crop of wool was lost through the failure of the purchaser. Two or three hundred dollars a year was all that could be saved for repairing this loss and reducing this burden of indebtedness. Mrs. Williston has remarked that at this time it was a daily subject of prayer at the domestic altar that God would open to him ways and means by which he might obtain a competence for himself and family. And now, at length,—doubtless in answer to those very prayers, and as the result, too, of the severe discipline to which he had been subjected,—the way was to be opened. And the relief was to come through the wife whom God had given him to be not only his companion and helpmeet in general, but his wise counselor and his good genius in that very thing which he had so often made a subject of special prayer. Mrs. Williston had never felt able to keep the help she needed in housekeeping, nor to give what she wished in aid of charitable objects. While looking about for relief and enlargement in these particulars, she found that her mother had been in the habit of making covered buttons for her own family, and a small surplus for sale to others. She took up the business at once on a somewhat larger scale. The first package of buttons which she made she took to Mr. David Whitney, of Northampton (long the treasurer of the Hampshire County Missionary Society), as a contribution of the first-fruits to the cause of missions; and President Humphrey, happening in about that time, became the first purchaser. Little did he or she think that there was the germ of Williston Seminary and Williston College.

Samuel Wilson

Herbert Gustav Knight

The second package was sent to Arthur Tappan, of New York, who immediately contracted for twenty-five gross at two dollars a gross. Fifty dollars! Never in all their subsequent wealth did they feel so rich as when they received that order from the firm of Arthur Tappan. The first buttons Mrs. Williston made with her own hands. Then she employed other hands to work for her in the house. Next she began to give out buttons to be made in neighboring families. Mr. Williston soon perceived that here was a field of enterprise wider and more promising than farming, and that instead of making her time and toil merely subsidiary to his work, he might better make his minister to hers. It was in 1826, when he was already more than thirty years of age, that the beginning was made of this new undertaking. In 1827 he went to New York, found customers, received orders, and went back to extend his business. Soon he went in like manner to Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Boston, and established agencies in all the principal cities of the United States. The business grew rapidly, and it was only a short time before he had more than a thousand families at work making buttons for him, through all that circle of towns, thirty or forty miles in diameter, of which Easthampton was the centre. Auxiliary to the button business, he opened a store, and for a number of years carried on quite a large business, for the country, in the sale of dry goods, his first clerk being Mr. Knight, and Mrs. Williston his first bookkeeper.

The manufacture went on in this way by hand, employing thousands of busy and skillful fingers in a constantly-extending circle of private families, and rewarding their industry with a corresponding increase of the comforts and elegances of life, for ten or a dozen years, when Providence opened the way for a still greater improvement and enlargement. In one of his visits to New York, Mr. Williston found there some buttons of English manufacture, made without thread, without needle, and, I had almost said, without fingers,—in short, manifestly made by machinery. He took these buttons to the Messrs. Joel and Josiah Hayden, who were then just beginning to be known as ingenious and enterprising mechanics in Williamsburg, and proposed to furnish the capital, sell the goods, and divide the profits equally if they would discover the process, get up the machinery, and manufacture the buttons. They entered with characteristic zeal and energy upon the experiment, and worked on patiently with hands and brains for years before their labors were crowned with complete success. It was a full year before they could make a button. When they had succeeded to some extent, they derived great assistance from a colored man who had been an employé in an English factory and knew the machinery and the process.

The perfecting of this machinery, and the successful carrying on of the manufacture, made the fortunes of both parties. It was the making—it was at least the beginning—of Easthampton. It has since done the same service for Easthampton.

It was when he was a little over forty that Mr. Williston began to lay "foundations" and build not only for himself, but for his native town, and for the larger public. In 1837 he bore a prominent part in the erection of the house of worship now occupied by the First Church in Easthampton. In 1841 he established Williston Seminary. In 1843 he built his own house. Early in 1845 he founded the Williston professorship of rhetoric and oratory in Amherst College. Later in the same year he spent six months in traveling in Europe. In the winter of 1846-47 he founded the Graves professorship—now the Williston professorship—of Greek, and one-half of the Hitchcock professorship of natural theology and geology in Amherst College, thus making in all the sum of fifty thousand dollars, which he had already given for permanent foundations in that institution.

It was in 1847 that he removed his business from Easthampton to Easthampton.

Mr. Williston has filled not a few posts of honor and trust. He was a member of the Lower House of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1841, and a member of the Senate in 1842 and 1843. He was elected to the Legislature as an anti-slavery Whig, and might doubtless have continued to occupy and adorn public life if he had not, after three years' legislative service, declined a re-election. In politics he has always been known as belonging to the school of progress and reform.

While a member of the Legislature, in 1841, he was chosen by that body a trustee of Amherst College. For thirty-three years, and throughout one entire generation, he has not only been a member of the corporation, but during the larger part of these years a member also of the Prudential Committee, and often of special committees on buildings and business matters of the utmost importance, and until the recent failure of his health he was from principle an unfailing attendant of ordinary and extraordinary meetings of the board, and unsparing not only of his money, of which he gave during his life a hundred and fifty thousand dollars from time to time as it was wanted, and would do the most good, but also of his time, which, for a man of business and wealth, it is often far more difficult to give than money. For the same number of years he has been not only trustee, but president of the trustees, of Williston Seminary, and with only two exceptions—the one occasioned by sickness, and the other by absence from the country—he has presided in all the meetings. He has been the acting treasurer also of the seminary, and has watched over all its external and internal affairs with the same wise and careful personal supervision which he has given to his business. Appointed by the Governor and Council one of the first trustees of the State Reform School, when that office was no sinecure, he was of great service in erecting buildings, improving the farm, and inaugurating the institution. He was one of the first trustees of Mount Holyoke Seminary, of which he helped to lay the foundations, and in which he ever felt a lively interest. He was a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and for many years as constant in attendance on its meetings as he was in contributions to its funds.

The business corporations, manufacturing companies, banks, railways, gas and water-power companies in Easthampton, Northampton, Holyoke, and elsewhere, in which he was a leading corporator, and usually president, are too numerous to mention.

Mr. Williston's domestic life was marked by great trials as well as great blessings, and had a most important bearing on his character and history. For four years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Williston lived without children. In 1831 they lost two children, then three and a half and one and a half years old, by scarlet fever. In 1837 they were called to experience the same deep affliction again in the loss, and by the same disease, of two children who had reached the age respectively of five and a half and three and a half.

With his high intellectual endowments he united that integrity and fidelity to all his engagements which alone can inspire confidence, and therefore which alone can insure lasting prosperity.

Mr. Williston died July, 1874.

The aggregate of his charities in his lifetime must have exceeded a million of dollars. His will provides for the distribution of from one-half to three-quarters of a million more. Considerably more than half of this magnificent sum he gave to two institutions.

HORATIO GATES KNIGHT,

son of Sylvester and Rachel Lyman Knight, was born in Easthampton, Mass., March 24, 1819. His boyhood was passed in his native town, where he was educated at the common and select schools. In 1841 he commenced business as a partner of the late Samuel Williston in Easthampton, and continued in business with him more than thirty years. During this time Mr. Knight resided at Easthampton, although having a mercantile house in New York City.

In political matters he has affiliated with the Whig and Republican parties. He has ever manifested a decided interest in the political issues of the day, and has held many offices within the gift of his fellow-citizens. In addition to holding various town offices, he was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1852-53, Massachusetts Senate in 1858-59, Massachusetts Executive Council in 1868-69, and was Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts in the years 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878.

He was chosen as a delegate to the convention that first nominated President Lincoln at Chicago, and to the convention that nominated President Grant the second time at Philadelphia. He was appointed by Gov. Andrew in 1862 "commissioner to superintend the drafting of militia;" by Gov. Washburn in 1873 as "Massachusetts commissioner to the Vienna Exposition;" and by Gov. Talbot in 1879 as "member of the Massachusetts Board of Education."

He is president of the First National Bank of Easthampton; president of the National Button Company of Easthampton; president of the India-Rubber Thread Company of Easthampton; president of the Northampton Institution for Savings; director or trustee of various other corporations or institutions in Easthampton and Northampton; trustee of Williams College, Williamstown; and trustee of Williston Seminary, Easthampton.

He was married in New York City, Sept. 28, 1841, to Mary Ann Huntoon. Their children have been as follows: Alice, Lucy, Mary, Horatio Williston, Charles Huntoon, Russell Wright, and Frederick Allen.

During the rebellion Gov. Knight was very active in promoting enlistment, and spent much time and money in filling the quotas of this section and aiding soldiers' families. He has ever taken a deep interest in the prosperity of his native town, and every movement looking toward the welfare of town, county, or State has received his earnest support.

EDWIN R. BOSWORTH

was born March 16, 1826, in Rehoboth, Bristol Co., Mass. In the same town his grandfather, Peleg Bosworth, lived and died. His father, Peleg Bosworth, a prominent contractor and builder, was born in the same town in 1778, and died in 1829. His mother was Susanna, daughter of Chase Rounds, of Rehoboth. Edwin R. was the youngest of twelve children, and passed his boyhood at home on the farm, attending the district school during the winter. When he was seventeen years of age, in 1843, he left home and went to Providence, R. I., where for two years he worked, learning the business of a carpenter and joiner. In 1845 went to Fall River, Mass., and remained there one year. In 1846 he removed to Palmer, Mass., and worked as a journeyman until 1850, when he commenced business for himself as a carpenter and builder. During this period, with others, he built the Baptist church and the New London and Northern Railroad depot. In 1854 he discontinued business in Palmer, and spent a portion of that year in travel, looking over the West, with the intention of finding a suitable place for his business. Failing in this, he returned to Massachusetts, and in the summer of 1855 was in Amherst superintending the erection of the fine Appleton Cabinet building, and at that time the elegant residence of Prof. Tuckerman, of Amherst College. In 1855 he removed to Easthampton, where he still resides, and has witnessed the remarkable growth of that town. At the time of his arrival this had just begun, and he was soon recognized as an honest and thorough builder. Important contracts were given him, and from that day he has been prominently identified with the building interests of this and other towns; was superintendent, builder, and assistant architect of the town-hall of Easthampton; builder of the Methodist church, the gymnasium, and North Hall of Williston Seminary; architect and builder of the First National Bank building, the high-school building, many of the large mills, business blocks, and private residences, among which are the residences of E. T. Sawyer, E. H. Gale, H. L. Clark, J. E. Clark, and F. J. Gould; also built the fine residence, on Park Street, of Hon. E. H. Sawyer. In Northampton he built the First National Bank building and the residence of William B. Hale, its president.

To his original business as architect, builder, and dealer in lumber he has added civil engineering, and from 1873 to 1876, while still conducting his business in Easthampton, was connected with C. W. Richards in the lumber business in Springfield.

Mr. Bosworth married, May 20, 1849, Hannah E., daughter of Nathan Barron, of Lyndon, Vt. By this union he has had four children, two of whom are living,—Frank E., born Aug. 4, 1853, in Palmer, and Susie B., born April 6, 1866, in Easthampton. His son, Frank E., is now on the editorial staff of the Boston Globe.

Mr. Bosworth is a self-made man. Prompt and energetic in all contracts intrusted to him, he has won a reputation as a contractor and builder second to none in this section. Although his business affairs have been of an onerous nature, he has found time to assist in all measures tending to the advancement of the interests of Easthampton, and is at present a selectman, a justice of the peace, director of the National Bank of Easthampton, and a trustee and member of the finance committee of the savings-bank. His political sentiments are Republican, and he has always acted with that party.

Rev. C. C. Smith

WILLIAM N. CLAPP.

William N. Clapp is the descendant in the seventh generation of Roger Clapp, who came to this country from England in 1630, settling in Dorchester, Mass. There he married Miss Joanna Ford, daughter of Thomas Ford, of Dorchester, England, who, with her parents, came over in the same ship with himself.

Roger Clapp was appointed by the General Court, in August, 1665, captain of the Castle (the principal fortress in the province), which position he held for twenty years, and was universally respected and honored. He also held various other offices, both civil and military. In 1686 he removed to Boston, where he died in 1691, in the eighty-second year of his age. His wife died in 1695, in her seventy-eighth year. By this union there were fourteen children, one of whom was Preserved, born Nov. 23, 1643, who married Sarah Newberry, of Windsor, and settled in Northampton. He was a captain of the town, a representative in the General Court, and ruling elder in the church, and died from the effects of a gunshot wound received from an Indian. He had seven children, one of whom, Roger, was the father of Maj. Jonathan, one of the first settlers of Easthampton, who removed to that town about 1730. He was a man of great energy, and was very prominent in the early history of the town. He had three sons and eight daughters. The youngest son, Quartermaster Benjamin Clapp, was born in 1738, and married Phebe Boynton, of Coventry, Conn.

He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and died in 1815, at the age of seventy-seven. His wife died in December, 1847, at the advanced age of ninety-seven years. She retained her activity, both of body and mind, till the last year of her life. There were born to them fifteen children. The eighth was Solomon, the father of William N. Clapp, who was born in Easthampton, Sept. 2, 1782, and died Nov. 25, 1827. He was a farmer, and lived on the place occupied by his father. He married Paulina Avery, daughter of Abner Avery, of Northampton, who was a native of Wallingford, Conn.; was in the Revolutionary war, holding the rank of lieutenant; removed to Northampton in middle life; lived there a number of years, and removed to Easthampton, living the last years of his life with a son, and died in 1836, aged eighty-eight.

There were ten children by this marriage, of whom William N. Clapp is the second son. He was born in Easthampton, Nov. 3, 1810.

Mr. Clapp spent his boyhood at home, receiving his education in the public schools, and attending one term at the Hopkins Academy, in Hadley, Mass. In his seventeenth year his father apprenticed him to a jeweler and watch-maker, in which position he remained but a few months, when he returned home in consequence of the death of his father.

In the winter of 1829, beginning in December, Mr. Clapp taught a district school in South Amherst, Mass., and again, in 1830, in Westhampton, Mass., and, in 1831, in Grafton, Worcester Co., Mass. He then chose the calling of a farmer, which he has steadily and successfully followed to this time, 1879.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

William N. Clapp

Mr. Clapp is a member of the Payson Congregational Church of Easthampton. He is a firm supporter of the public-school system, and is warmly interested in all educational matters.

Politically he was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and at present is independent, supporting such men and measures as best meet his views. He is not an office-seeker, and is represented by those who know him well as being an inveterate hater of rings or combinations, and as having the courage to support such measures as he deems for the best good of the community; advocating retrenchment and economy, and being a positive man, he adheres somewhat tenaciously to this line, regardless of the effect upon his popularity, but is ever deferential and courteous.

Mr. Clapp has held various offices. Was a justice of the peace for twenty-one years, declining a renewal of his commission; was collector and treasurer of the town from 1839 to 1854. He was collector and treasurer of the first parish from 1839 to 1853, ceasing to act in that capacity upon the formation of the Payson Society. Is a trustee of the Easthampton Savings Bank.

Mr. Clapp has been married three times. His first wife was Tryphena Janes, second daughter of Parsons Janes, of Easthampton. Her grandfather was Jonathan Janes, a soldier in the French-and-Indian wars, and was present at the surrender of Louisburg, July 26, 1758. Mrs. Clapp died July 29, 1847. Their children were four in number: Sarah Eugenia, was educated at Williston and South Hadley Seminaries, and for ten years has been a successful teacher in the public schools of Ohio and Massachusetts. William Edgar, served during the war of the Rebellion in the 52d Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers; was at the siege of Port Hudson, and has a good army record. Solomon Parsons, was a farmer, and died in 1872, leaving a widow and two children. Eliza Tryphena, became the wife of George W. Guilford, and died Feb. 18, 1879, leaving one daughter.

Mr. Clapp married (second) Emily Janes, sister of his first wife, Jan. 4, 1848. There were by this union two children,—Emily Maria and Harriet Ellen,—both of whom are at present attending the Mount Holyoke Seminary, South Hadley, Mass. Mrs. Clapp died Nov. 8, 1861.

His present wife was Prudence T. Wait, daughter of Charles Wait, of Easthampton, and formerly of Williamsburg, whom he married Oct. 1, 1862. Her grandfather was Joseph Wait, of Williamsburg, Mass., a Revolutionary soldier. By this marriage there have been born to them two children, both of whom are dead.

JOSEPH W. WINSLOW, M.D.

This gentleman is of Puritan descent, and traces his ancestry far back into England to Edward Winslow, of Droitwich, England. From an old record the writer finds the following ancestral line: "Kenelin, a younger brother of Gov. Edward Winslow, who landed at Plymouth, Mass., from the ship 'Fortune,' in 1621, was his first American ancestor. 2d, Lieut. Job. 3d, Dr. Richard W. 4th, Capt. Hezekiah W. 5th, Ezra Winslow, married the sister of Alden Spooner, printer of the first newspaper in Vermont. He was a man of sterling integrity, and strictly religious. He was a staunch royalist, hence the name of George Rex, his son," father of Dr. Joseph W. Winslow.

Joseph W. Winslow, son of George Rex Winslow and Lucy Clark Winslow, was born in Barnard, Vt., March 8, 1820. Here he remained until seventeen years of age, attending the village school and the high school at Rochester, Vt. His father, in the mean time, had removed to Ware, Mass., whither young Winslow subsequently followed, and attended the high school at that place.

He decided upon the medical profession as his life-work, and spent four years in the study of medicine, principally under the preceptorship of Prof. Gilman Kimball, of Lowell, Mass., the last being as demonstrator of anatomy for him; and at the United States Marine Hospital at Chelsea; and in 1845 graduated at the Berkshire Medical College with honor. He began the practice of his chosen profession at Enfield, Mass., where he remained about twelve years, and then removed to Easthampton, where he has since been engaged in active practice.

J. W. Winslow M.D.

He was coroner in Easthampton when the office was abolished, and was subsequently appointed by the governor medical examiner for Hampshire Co.

May 13, 1857, he united in marriage with Emily B., daughter of Dr. Jared Bement, and adopted daughter of her uncle, Edward Smith, of Enfield. They have two children,—Susie E. and Edward S.

Dr. Daniel Thompson, of Northampton, speaking of Dr. Winslow, says: "He is considered by his professional brethren as a true man, whose integrity could not be questioned. Professionally, he is of quick perception, sound judgment, and has more than ordinary attainments in both the practice of medicine and surgery, and his professional application of means to ends have uniformly been judicious."

Dr. Winslow enjoys the confidence of his fellow-citizens in a remarkable degree, and has a large and remunerative practice. Politically he is a Republican, and religiously a Congregational Trinitarian.

WESTHAMPTON.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

WESTHAMPTON lies principally west of the town of Northampton, and centrally distant from the court-house about seven miles. Its figure is more regular than that of any other town in the county, the outlines forming a slightly oblique parallelogram. It is bounded north by Chesterfield and Williamsburg, east by Northampton and Easthampton, south by Southampton, west by Huntington and Chesterfield. The farm acreage reported in the census of 1875 is 15,817 acres, or nearly twenty-five square miles. The town is a part of the original Northampton tract, and the title is traced back to the treaty conveying the land from the Indians to the first proprietors. The following vote upon the records of Northampton appears to indicate an early division of a large part of what is now Westhampton among the proprietors their heirs, or assigns:

"Jan. 20, 1714, voted to throw up three miles of the west end of the westwardly division of commons, and to lay said three miles into two ranges; and each proprietor shall draw again for the said three miles, and to draw by the same rule as before, except some persons who were left out, who are then to have a draught."

This tract was known as Long Division. This was nearly fifty years before there was any attempt at settlement. The Northampton records are lost for a period of twenty-two years, covering the time of the first settlement of the Long Division.

Many facts of interest were doubtless recorded at that time which are not now obtainable.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is drained to the southeast in a general sense, and mostly by tributaries that unite to form the north branch of the Manhan River. These are Turkey Brook, Sodom Brook, and other streams. In the southwest part of the town, however, are found some small rivulets that, with others flowing from Huntington, form the south branch of the Manhan. In the northeast there are also found the head-waters of Roberts Meadow Brook, a stream that finally unites with Mill River at Leeds, in the town of Northampton.

The east branch of the Westfield River touches the north-west corner of Westhampton. In the north part of Westhampton, then, these three river-systems—the Manhan, the Westfield, and the Mill River—have some of their sources very near each other, the high hills along the Chesterfield line forming the water-shed of the three valleys. Westhampton may fairly be called a mountainous town. There are several distinct elevations with special names. Along the western side are Canada Hill, Spruce Hill, Gob Hill, Breakneck Mountain, and Red-Oak Hill. In the centre, north of the village, is Tob Hill. Southeast of the reservoir is the eminence known as Hanging Mountain, and near the middle of the east side of the town is Turkey Hill. The names of two of these are evidently derived from the timber upon them, and a third from the number of wild turkeys found there originally, and even within the memory of some now living in town.

There is a story that some cattle were once killed by falling over a precipice on the hill known as Breakneck. The names of the others are more obscure, though vague tradition assigns Tob and Gob to certain reminiscences of Indian location.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The territory now included in the town of Westhampton, though only a few miles distant from the Connecticut River, and though it was an actual part of the town of Northampton, remained unsettled for more than one hundred years after the commencement of the settlements at Northampton, Hatfield, and Hadley. Early pioneers pushed out into Easthampton and Southampton forty, fifty, and sixty years before any one ventured to seek a home amid the hills of the Long Division. Chesterfield, to the northwest, was in vigorous progress of settlement for several years earlier than Westhampton. Perhaps Huntington and Williamsburg did not much antedate Westhampton, yet practically the latter was the latest settled of any of these towns. The commencement of its history is nearer to the people of the present generation than any other in this section, and therefore it is better preserved.

To the care with which the town records and those of the church were written up, and to the indefatigable researches of the well-known historian, Sylvester Judd, are the people of this town greatly indebted, both for the fullness and for the accuracy of their annals, offering as they do to the writer of the present day a wealth of material difficult to select from, on account of the worth of the whole, and difficult to compress into the limits of a single chapter in a work devoted to the three valley-counties.

From the historical address of C. Parkman Judd, delivered at the Westhampton reunion, Sept. 5, 1866, we take the following passages as the best summary statements of early settlement:

"The first settlement in Westhampton was made in the southwesterly part of the town, near the present highway which runs from Kingsley's mill by Norton's tavern to Norwich. Before the town of Norwich was incorporated, in 1773, that town, with Chester, was called Murrayfield, in honor of Col. John Murray, of Rutland; and that part of Murrayfield which joined Northampton was called Shirkshire and New Plantation.

"People had moved into Murrayfield in 1760, and Northampton wished to open some communication with the new plantation. For this purpose, in 1762, the town of Northampton laid out a road to the boundary-line between Northampton and Murrayfield or Shirkshire, and this was called the Shirkshire road. This road probably followed the old road from Northampton village by Park Hill and King's saw-mill on the Manhan or King's River to the present line of Westhampton, and thence through Westhampton, on to Murrayfield, substantially where the present road goes from Strong Kingsley's mill-site to the boundary of Huntington. But this road was simply a line run in the smoothest places through the woods, whose direction was indicated by some blaze-marks upon the trees. It was laid out very wide so that travelers on horseback could wind their way, dodging the rocks and trees.

"It was some time after this before the road became well trodden into a mere horse-path. We must not be misled by the term road. Indeed, the great route to the West through Blandford, which had been used more than sixty years, was in the time of the Revolution so bad and rough that it is said to have taken 20 yoke of oxen and 80 men to convey a mortar over the hills to the encampment at West Point.

"Abner Smith was the person who made the first permanent settlement within the present limits of the town of Westhampton. He is supposed to have come from Connecticut to Chester or Murrayfield, where he remained a short time, and removed from thence to Westhampton in 1762. It is certain that a poll-tax was levied upon him for the first time that year. He first cleared up some land not far from the spot where Deacon Enoch Lyman used to live. Here he built a log house, supposed to be just over the brook where the blacksmith-shop afterward stood. Here on the banks of the Manhan the first settlement began; here the first opening was made in the wilderness. He remained here a year or two, and then built a log house on the south side of the old Shirkshire road, and sold the place to Jonathan Fisher in 1770. This was the beginning of the Fisher place. The second settler was Ebenezer French, who is supposed to have come from Southampton some time in 1763. He was concerned in King's saw-mill, and finally became the owner of two-thirds of it.

"This mill brought him to the wilds of Westhampton, where he selected a spot for his habitation as near to his mill as he could find on the Shirkshire road. He made a clearing and built a log house very near the old tavern-stand of Landlord Wright, recently occupied by Martin Wright. Both Smith and French were taxed by the town of Northampton in 1763 and 1764. In the latter year Smith was taxed for 7 acres of land, 2 horses, 1 yoke of oxen, 2 cows, and 3 hogs. French was taxed for 20 acres of land, 1 horse, 1 yoke of oxen, 1 cow, and 1 hog. The two families in all numbered 19 persons,—10 in Smith's family, and 9 in French's.

* * * * *

"In 1765 the names of Smith and French still appear upon the tax-roll, and no others.

"In 1766, Abner Smith's name alone appears for that portion of Northampton within the present limits of Westhampton. French had sold out and left. Before the preparation of the tax-roll of 1767 two other settlers had come in, making, with Smith, three. Timothy Pomeroy came from Southampton, and purchased the place begun by French. He soon opened a tavern, which was greatly patronized by the hands working at the lead mine. Old Nathaniel Strong, of Northampton, owned a large tract of land situated between the Shirkshire road and the northerly line of Southampton, and embracing the spot occupied in later years by Wm. J. Lyman. This land had a great orchard of sugar-maples upon it, and his boys came out here to make sugar in the spring. In this way the land was explored, and his grandson, Noah Strong, Jr., was induced to commence a plantation near the orchard. In 1767 he put up a house on the westerly side of the Southampton road, and about half-way between the residence, in later years, of Wm. J. Lyman and the Huntington road. His family consisted of his wife and two children, and late in the fall a third child, Lemuel, was born, and that was the first birth in the town of Westhampton.

* * * * *

"In 1765, Samuel Kingsley, of Southampton, deeded to his son Samuel 40 acres, and to his son Joseph Kingsley 50 acres, in Long Division, on Shirkshire road. In 1768, William Bartlett moved his family into town, and settled upon the same spot, or near the residence of Jared Bartlett, and in the same year Samuel Kingsley, Jr., began to build on the south side of the Norwich road, very near the house where he lived for so many years.

"Martin Clark and John Smith moved into town in 1769. Clark first built upon the north side of the Norwich road, nearly opposite the new house of Mr. Ludden. Soon after this he built another house on the south side of the road, and lived there until his death.

"John Smith was a brother of the first pioneer, Abner."

Ten more persons settled in town in 1770, so that at this time there were about sixteen families in town. And by this time the small openings in the forest were found at various points throughout Long Division,—they were no longer confined to the old "Shirkshire" road.

By referring to the Northampton tax-list of 1771 and looking for the names in the Long Division, it will be found that there are 21; and it is interesting to note the statistics then given. There were eight houses: probably this includes only the frame houses. There were 13 horses over three years old, 10½ yoke of oxen, 16 swine, 20 sheep over one year old. There were 26½ acres in mowing, 40½ acres tillage, and 28½ acres pasturing. The whole valuation was £259 18s. Wm. Bartlett seems to have been the millionaire, having nearly one-fourth of the valuation,—£62 14s.

In 1772 there were only five names more than those of the previous year. The stock and the valuation were only slightly increased. The six largest tax-payers were the following, in the order named: William Bartlett, Martin Clark, Samuel Kingsley, Timothy Pomeroy, John Smith, and Noah Strong, Jr. Two persons were rated as having one-third of a barn each.

A great amount of attention was given about this time to the mines. They had been thought to be of considerable value a hundred years before, as shown in the records given elsewhere. About ten years before the Revolutionary war, the well-known Ethan Allen and a few other persons came to the mines, purchased large tracts of land in the vicinity, and began an excavation for lead.

After sinking some thousands of dollars rather deeper, probably, than they sunk the shaft, they sold out to William Bowdoin, brother of Gov. Bowdoin, and others. These took hold of the work in great earnest, and employed many hands. They were led on by the common opinion that there was silver as well as lead in the mine. They excavated to the depth of 60 or 70 feet into the rock, and to remove the water which flowed into the pit they put in a pump, which was kept in motion by a stream of water brought more than two miles, from Sodom Brook, in the southerly part of Westhampton. From this brook the water was carried into a swamp a little south of the former residence of Sylvester Judd, Sr. It then followed the course of a small stream which issued from the easterly part of this swamp, and then a trench more than a mile long was dug to the mine. This trench could be seen in some places down to a late period of time, and probably some traces of it may be yet seen. This mining excitement along the south line of the town no doubt had some effect in inducing early settlement.

It is well known that Ethan Allen was somewhat rough and profane. He is said to have neither feared God nor regarded man. He was met at the mine on one occasion by Rev. Jonathan Judd, who took occasion to gently rebuke Allen for his profanity. The latter put in a plea of defense on the ground of the depravity of human nature in general; but the minister's words had an effect upon him, and he was not heard to swear for several days afterward.

The population increased rapidly during the six years preceding the incorporation of the town. The land was cheap, the soil was productive, yielded fair returns for labor, and settlers found it better than they had expected. The people worked upon the roads. Different parts of the town began to have easy communication with each other.

Eleven years before incorporation, the town of Northampton voted to build a bridge over the Manhan at King's saw-mill, and in the next year, 1768, voted to build a bridge over Sodom Brook. The latter was the first bridge built in Westhampton. The streams were forded previous to that date.

In 1771 it was voted to build a bridge beyond Samuel Kingsley's.

Thus little by little the early steps of settlement took place. Small neighborhoods gradually increased.

Meetings were held in various parts of the town. Occasionally a school was opened for a few weeks at a time.

The "Long Division" began to put on the appearance of a settled community.

"When Abner Smith came into town in 1762, this part of Northampton was a wilderness, covered with an unbroken forest. In every direction were woods, underbrush, and mountain elevations. No habitation was to be seen; no pioneer had put up his log abode; the woodman's axe was not heard, and the entire region was as silent as the grave, save when interrupted by the sighing of the wind or the gambol of wild animals.

"Even as late as 1800, one standing upon the top of Tob or Mineral Hill, or the hill near Norton's old tavern, which at this day open to the eye such beautiful prospects and scenes of surpassing loveliness, looked down upon hardly a mark of civilization save the curling smoke above the tall trees rising from the scattered habitations. And there were just the same wildness and boundless forests stretching over the northerly portion of the town. Old Mrs. Sybil Bridgman, wife of Elisha Bridgman, said she could see nothing but woods and forests from her husband's house, on Hanging Mountain, in 1786."

Besides, Long Division was the despised part of the old plantation laid out in 1654 on the west side of Connecticut River. It had no meadows stretching far and wide ocean-like; it had no interval land resting in the bosom of the mountains and treasuring up the riches of untold ages; and it had no rivers to open up a highway for enterprise and adventure. For a long time after the settlement of Northampton meadows was the only land which had more than a nominal value; other land was not prized, nor had it any temptation to the pioneer.

The early settlers were men of small means, but they were industrious, stout-hearted, and willing to meet dangers and difficulties.

They were the genuine working men and women. There were no ten hours' men in those days. They toiled through fourteen, and sometimes sixteen, hours of the twenty-four.

Perhaps there is no better picture of the early dress and the home-life of the pioneers of these hill towns than the following, written of Westhampton, but applicable to many others:

"Their dress was strong but simple. Pantaloon was not known in this part of the State ninety years ago. The men, both old and young, wore checkered shirts, and a sort of brown tow or woolen trousers, or short breeches, known then as 'kilts' or 'skilts.' These only reached just below the knees, generally loose and open at the bottom, but sometimes fastened with a buckle. They had no braces or galls, but were buttoned tight around the hips in sailor fashion. Boots were rarely seen; they wore shoes and leggins over their legs in winter; but all the summer and fall work was done at home and in the meadows by them barelegged and barefooted. The head was covered with a cap made of the skin of some wild animal, and if perchance any of the men were able to wear a felt hat, it was kept for Sunday-go-to-meeting, and lasted a lifetime.

"Their diet was simple, but it was hearty, and contained the very marrow of life. Seventy years ago bread and milk were the common food of New England children for breakfast and supper, except on Saturdays and Sundays, when they made their supper and breakfast of hasty-pudding and milk; but at times in the winter, when milk was scarce, a little water and apple-molasses were put into a dish of cider and the whole warmed, then toasted bread was crumbed into it, and this mixture of bread and cider constituted the meal,—and down to the nineteenth century the adults and children made their morning and their evening meals of this same bread and milk or bread and cider.

"This was good eating. The Indian-bread of our foremothers bore no resemblance to the tasteless stuff which goes by that name to-day, and it was far more nutritious and wholesome than the sour, soggy bread, streaked with saleratus, which is brought upon the table by our domestics.

"The dinner was then the great meal, as it is now. The children then were allowed to come to the table. The dinner consisted of corned beef and pork,—boiled often with potatoes, turnips, and cabbage, commonly called 'pot-luck;' to this was added, once a week, a boiled Indian-pudding; and during the most laborious seasons of the year they made their suppers of this pot-luck, brought on to the table in the shape of cold victuals. They had no butcher-carts. Water or cider was the common drink, save on Sundays or festive occasions, and rarely on washing-days, when a little bohea tea was steeped and reesteeped as long as it would color or give any taste to the water. At a much later day cider-brandy or pupelo came into use.

"But the grandmothers,—and their loving daughters too,—they contributed too largely to the success of the young town to be forgotten. They bore their full share of the toils and hardships of pioneer life. They were the spinners, the weavers, tailors, nurses, and doctors of the town. They were the dairy-maids and cooks, as well as the friends, sweethearts, and housewives of the fathers.

"They were really the helps meet for their husbands. They were always at work. The morning began with work, work, work, kept on all through the day, and late into the night by the light of the pitch-pine fagot. They brought up the cows from the pasture and milked them; they fed the calves, nursed the sickly lambs, fed the pigs, raised the chickens and the goslings, and took care of the garden. These, however, were the daily chores. They often raked and spread hay. They pulled and spread flax. Mr. Sylvester Judd's manuscripts give an instance of a mother and daughter that did all the cooking, washing, and mending for twelve laborers, and at the same time took care of the milk of thirty cows!"

NOTE.—The compiler follows the orator in repeating this story, but will suggest that to modern readers it may throw some doubt upon Mr. Sylvester Judd's veracity or accuracy, or both!!

"Then again, almost all the clothing was made from flax and wool raised in the family. We stop not here to speak of their skill in making rye-bread, or rye-and-Indian, when we are all of us beginning to abandon our cream-of-tartar biscuits and saleratus bread made out of the choicest brand of Genesee or St. Louis flour, and trying to substitute in the place thereof the sweet, nutritious rye- and Indian-bread of our grandmothers. True it is that these good old dames sometimes of a Monday, after a hard day's work at washing, would sit down and sip a little bohea tea, and that now and then several women of a neighborhood would get together and talk gossip; but then no time was lost, for the knitting-needle or the darning-needle moved more rapidly than their tongues. And this toil and struggle followed day after day, and continued from the beginning to the end of the year; there were no holidays then: picnics and barbecues had not then been heard of.

"Almost the only interruptions were the twenty-four hours of the Sabbath, that were sacredly kept, and the occasional calls for extra meetings on week-days, when unusual attention was given to religion. And yet they grew up hearty, stalwart men and genuine women, and lived to a ripe old age. Sickness rarely came into the household, the doctor was seldom called in, they never bought any patent medicine, and it was not often that any illness afflicted them which a little 'pennyrial' or 'thoroughwort' tea, or 'Picra' would not cure.

"The dress of the women was as simple as that of the men. Most of their clothing consisted of wool, flax, and cotton made by their own hands. The materials were colored in the dye-tub, which used to stand near the great kitchen fire-place, or by the aid of butternut-bark. Generally they wore a black or striped petticoat with a white linen gown, which extended down a little below the waist, and a long checked apron in front. When at work out-of-doors they were sometimes bareheaded, but more commonly wore a rush hat or a pasteboard bonnet bound with a cape to protect the neck. Perhaps some of the older people of the present time can even yet remember the butternut-colored petticoats worn by the school-girls, and the flannel gowns of a purple color worn by adults. These were made up loose, adapted to the action of the body, and not fitted to sweep the streets; cut short so that the feet could move freely, and drawn up by a string in a few folds about the waist so loose that the lungs could perform all their duties.

"So dressed, the boys had hard work to catch the girls in the race at tag. For winter the hood was the bonnet, a Vandyke was worn over the shoulders, a flannel gown protected the chest, and thick woolen mittens covered the hands. This was the golden age of homespun.

"It is no wonder that before the energy of such men and women the forest disappeared and the wilderness blossomed as the rose. The families of our forefathers were large. Four or five children were a small number; seven and eight were the more common numbers; often there were ten or twelve robust children in the family, and sometimes sixteen. The children were born healthy, they were fed upon plain, simple food, they grew up stout and healthy, and the dwellings of the parents were filled and made vocal with the merry clatter of buxom girls and ruddy boys."

It may be thought that in this long quotation we are allowing the orator to wander at his own sweet will over the fields of his boyhood and revel in the Arcadian simplicity of those patriarchal times.

He gives so rosy and charming a picture of those pioneer homes that we are tempted to reverse Solomon's opinion and say "that the former times were better than these." The general picture is no doubt correct; there were rugged physical frames; there were stalwart men and strong women skilled in every known industry of the household; there were bounding pulses, and health and joyous laughter in the homes; but still the fact remains that grave-yards were necessary in those days, and the student of pioneer history wandering through them will find they contain others besides the old men of a hundred years. It may be doubted, if not denied, that families were healthier then than now. Read the moss-covered records on the low, small grave-stones, trace the death-notices in the early files of the Hampshire Gazette, and we venture the assertion that the deaths in childhood, youth, and middle age will bear as large a proportion to the whole number as they have at any period since.

In these large, old families of ten, twelve, and even sixteen, the compiler of family notices will find himself compelled to write "died in infancy," "died in childhood," "died young," against one, two, three, or more of the names. It will surprise any one to read the columns of death-notices and see how many young people died in the very bloom of youth and opening promise: as Grace Fisher, only daughter of Aaron Fisher, Sr., and Hophni Judd, the talented young lawyer.

Canker rash, black tongue, scarlet fever, and dysentery raged among the children, and desolated homes then as the same or other diseases do now. Exposure, hardships, weak constitutions inherited, brought death to youth and middle age. Doctors could live well in these hill-towns then,—they are steadily starved out now.

There is no doubt that the children which survived were rugged. They must have been! It may not be possible to compare the past with the present accurately, but the number of very old people now living in these New England towns bears significant testimony that modern forms of living are no more enervating and destructive than the old; and if the families of a hundred years ago had drank less cider and eaten less pork, it is possible the roll of octogenarians in 1879 might have been longer than it is. It is not clear that Westhampton has deteriorated as to the health of the people. If we look at the faith, the virtues, the economy, of the old times, it is perhaps possible to reach a different conclusion. And yet the gospel with its sweet words of hope is still dear to warm, loving hearts, and yearly the old and the young are lying down to their last sleep "soothed and sustained" by its unfaltering trust.

There are not so many natives of the town graduating from college as once there were, but there are not so many people, by nearly one-half, to furnish the students. Besides, the extravagance of modern educational courses has practically barred the doors of all higher education except to the wealthy. Restore academic and college life to what it was when Justin Edwards completed a full course for less than $400, and there may be many to avail themselves of their advantages.

PHYSICIANS OF EARLY TIMES.

The first and only physician for a long series of years was Dr. William Hooker. He was the son of Rev. John Hooker, of Northampton, and was born in November, 1766. He studied medicine with Dr. Ebenezer Hunt, of Northampton. He settled in Westhampton in 1788. His homestead and office were at the present place of George Burt. He continued in practice for forty-six years, retiring from active work in 1834. He lived to the age of ninety-four, dying Feb. 27, 1861. Like the pastor of the church, Dr. Hooker became known to every one in Westhampton. Skillful in his profession, a sincere, devoted Christian, he followed closely in the footsteps of Him who went about doing good. Of a cheerful temperament, he carried sunshine into the chamber of the sick. His religious convictions were strong and fervent, rendering his declining years peaceful, hopeful, and happy to the last.

Dr. Orcutt was a noted physician in more modern times.

LAWYERS.

It is not proper perhaps to count any lawyers as actual residents of Westhampton. Several going out from their native town became distinguished in the legal profession elsewhere: their names appear in the list of graduates. Among those who have drawn legal papers, settled estates, and transacted much general business that sometimes falls within the province of the legal profession, may be particularly mentioned John A. Judd, long a magistrate, and consulted for many years on questions of law, as well as on public business.

Thomas C. Davenport at the present time does a variety of legal writing.

MERCHANTS.

Elijah Norton was trading at an early date, his advertisements appearing in 1794. His store was just south of the present town-hall. Others trading at that point were Israel Wright, Wm. Pease, and John A. Judd.

Wm. Hooker & Co. were in trade at about the same time as Mr. Norton. Their store was on the corner where E. B. Pratt now trades. Sylvester Judd, Jr., succeeded Hooker & Co. Others in trade at that store have been Mr. Baldwin, Jonathan Judd, John A. Judd, and Anson Chapman. E. B. Pratt is the present proprietor.

The present Davenport building was the old town-hall and centre school-house. In late years a store has been kept in it most of the time. F. H. Judd has been in trade there the last few years.

PUBLIC-HOUSES.

The earliest tavern must have been that of Timothy Pomeroy, which, it is supposed, he opened 1768 or 1769. This was when the mines in Southampton, near by, were being worked, and his house is said to have been patronized by the miners largely. The tavern of Landlord Wright is alluded to very often in connection with the early annals of the time. It was one of the prominent features of the old Shirkshire road. The tavern of Elijah Norton was also a noted stopping-place of early times in Westhampton. He bought out Seth Burk in 1785. Elijah Norton also kept tavern at the centre, not far from the present town-hall.

CATALOGUE OF EARLY SETTLERS.

Jehial Alvord, 1777-78, homestead "Shack Street," on land of Joseph Hathaway; house still standing. Jonathan Alvord, Sr., 1777-78, homestead the present house of Joseph Hathaway. William Atwater, 1774-75, probably removed from town at an early day. Thomas Alvord and Eliab Alvord both lived on the present Wm. Edwards place. Wm. Bartlett, 1768, settled near the present residence of Samuel Williams; descendants are still in town. The first frame house built in town was erected by Mr. Bartlett. John Baker, 1774, homestead where Ezra Howard now lives. John Bullard, 1771 or '72, settled on a place now owned by Deacon A. D. Montague, known in late years as the Davis place, on Hanging Mountain; buildings gone. Seth Burke, 1770, from Goshen; homestead the present place of the widow of Moses Ludden. Joel Bartlett, homestead where Patrick Lawlor now owns; house unoccupied at the present time. Elisha Boyden, homestead near the reservoir; place now owned by George Evans; old buildings standing yet. Elihu Bartlett, homestead the Christopher Bartlett place. Noah Bartlett, homestead now owned by Patrick Lawlor. Cornelius Bartlett, homestead the old place of Oliver Norton. Phineas Bartlett, homestead the old James Lyman place. Nathan Brewster, homestead where Deacon A. D. Montague now lives; left town not long after 1800. Elisha Bridgman, homestead where Franklin A. Bridgman now lives. The property has remained in the family from the first settlement to the present time. Israel Bridgman, homestead where Abner P. Bridgman now lives, and this has always been in the family. Isaac Bullard, perhaps on the Lester Langdon farm, near the reservoir; buildings gone. Elijah Boyden, 1777-78, on the Langdon place. Gideon Clark, Jr., 1771 or '72, homestead the present Widow Bush place. This was the long-time town clerk. His father came and had a place near the Bush place, known as the James Hurlburt place. Abner Claffin, 1773. He warned the first town-meeting, but elderly people do not readily identify his homestead. Joshua Claffin, 1770, homestead at Turkey Hill, on the lot where Capt. Henry Hooker lived; buildings gone. Zachariah Curtis, 1777-78. He bought the place first settled by Ephraim Sandford, on the Roberts Meadow road, beyond Turkey Hill school-house, now occupied by Jerome Stevenson. James Cowen, 1770. His wife was a sister of John Smith, and Cowen settled near him; left town, however, at an early day. Martin Clark, 1769, settled north side of the Norwich road, nearly opposite the present residence of George Tower. Later he lived on the other side of the road, where Horace Clapp now lives. The parade-ground of the first military company was in that door-yard, on the north side of the road. Nathan Clark, 1774, the present Orcutt place, on what was known as "Clark Hill" in the old times. Ebenezer Clark, 1775, homestead the present place of Medad King. Jonathan Clark, 1774, homestead west of the meeting-house, on land now owned by Wm. E. Lyman; buildings gone. Dorus Clarke. He was the father of Rev. Dorus Clarke and Rev. Tertius Clarke. Epaphras Clark, 1775. He was a brother of Gideon Clark, and lived on the James Hurlburt place. He died early. Elihu Chilson, 1774, homestead in the northwest part of the town; moved away early. A son, Spencer, afterward bought the saw-mill known as the "Clark Mill." Joseph Chilson, 1777-78, homestead northwest part of the town. Benjamin Clark lived in the northwest part of the town; went to Northampton at an early day. He was a brother of Benoni. Solomon Clark, homestead part of the present Henry Parsons farm; cellar-place still visible at the foot of Mineral Hill, near the brook; removed to Dalton. Darius Clark, for a long time an editor at Bennington, was a son. Paul Clark, homestead near Jerome Chapman's, on the Horace C. Bartlett place. He was a brother of Benoni Clark. Matthew Clark, homestead the present place of Irene Clark. Two sons, Harvey and Eli, went to Wayne Co., N. Y. Lewis H. Clark, the author of several town histories in this volume, is a grandson of Matthew. Titus Clark, homestead where David Montague now lives. Thomas Clapp, homestead on the road near the reservoir; buildings gone. Reuben Coats lived near the meeting-house for a time. Giles Clark, perhaps where Horace C. Bartlett now lives. Seth Clark. He was a brother of Gideon, Jr. Kenaz Clark. He was a brother of Gideon Clark, Jr. Oliver Clapp, homestead on Chesterfield road, northwest part of town, known as the Charles C. Clapp place. Jacob Clark, the present Horace Rhodes place; first house stood back in the lot. He was the father of Rev. Orange Clark and Rev. Jacob L. Clark. Noah Cook, from Northampton, homestead the present place of Miss Sarah C. Cook. Children: Nancy,—Mrs. Enos Clark,—Chesterfield; Pliny, who went to Ohio; Hannah,—Mrs. Joseph Graves,—Niagara, N. Y.; Noah, Williamstown; Julius, Westhampton; Edwin,

Niagara, N. Y.; Ira, Illinois; Joel, Westhampton, on the old homestead; father of Miss Sarah. The latter is in possession of various military commissions given to her grandfather, and signed by Gov. John Hancock and Gov. Samuel Adams. David Dewey, homestead a mile or more southwest of the church. Nathan Damon, homestead northwest part of the town; last house in Westhampton on that road. Asahel Danks, homestead on Turkey Hill; now owned by Sylvester King. Nathaniel Elliot, 1771-72, near the Southampton line, not far from the mines. Thomas Elwell, 1775, homestead on the present place of his great-grandson Theodore Elwell. Timothy Edwards, 1775, homestead the buildings occupied by Alvin Kingsley, north of the late Deacon Joel Cook's place. Noah Edwards, 1777-78, homestead opposite the present place of Francis Edwards. Justin Edwards, homestead present place of Francis Edwards. He was the father of Rev. Justin Edwards, the great advocate of temperance, and author of the total abstinence pledge. Other children: Dotia, died unmarried; Jesse, settled in Westhampton; Mary,—Mrs. David Haskell,—Northampton; William, who settled on the old homestead, and father of Francis Edwards. Ebenezer French, 1763, from Southampton, built near the old stand of Landlord Wright. He left town about 1765, perhaps returning to Southampton. A few years later, however, he was living in the northwest part of Westhampton. Aaron Fisher. He was the son of Jonathan Fisher, Sr., and a brother of the Jonathan who died in the army. Aaron Fisher and his son, Aaron, Jr., were prominent in the public affairs of the town. Jonathan Fisher, homestead present Fisher place on the old Norwich road. He died Oct. 3, 1796, aged eighty-four. A son, Jonathan, Jr., died in the army of the Revolution at Morristown, N. J., 1777. Jonathan Fisher, Sr., was married twice, and had thirteen children. Skilton Felton, 1773. Abiather French; lived in the northwest part of the town. Jonathan Frost, 1775. Samuel French. Stephen Fisher; it is not clear from the record what family Stephen was from. The Stephen in the family of Jonathan, Sr., died in infancy. John Fisher. He was a son of Jonathan Fisher, Sr., and brother of Aaron, Sr. Jonathan French. He was a son of Ebenezer mentioned above. Ebenezer Gee, homestead last house on the Southampton road. Isaac Goodell, homestead where Thomas Clapp lived, on the Reservoir road. Elijah Gardner. Rufus Heminway. Jared Hunt, homestead where Henry W. Montague lives. Moses Hatch. D. F. Harwood. Ebenezer Higgins. William Hooker, the well-known physician mentioned elsewhere. Ezra Hickson, 1770, settled on the East road, near the present residence of Francis Edwards. Probably did not remain in town but a few years. Rev. Enoch Hale, settled on the lot voted him by the town, probably in the summer of 1779, as soon as the house was inclosed sufficient to live in. Sons, Nathan, Enoch, Richard; daughters, Mrs. Elisha Clapp, Mrs. William Hooker, Mrs. McCall, Mrs. Levi Burt, Mrs. Richardson Hall. Sylvester Judd, from Southampton, in 1774. He was a son of the Southampton minister, Rev. Jonathan Judd. The Judd homestead, in Westhampton, was the present Elihu P. Bartlett place. Solomon Judd, brother of Sylvester Judd, Sr., and lived on the William Reed place. Joseph Kingsley, 1770, from Southampton, settled near his brother Samuel. He was the father of the well-known Strong Kingsley, who died a few years since. Samuel Kingsley, Jr., 1768, from Southampton, south side of the Norwich road, very near where he afterward erected another house, and where he lived for many years,—the present Lester T. Langdon place. Thaddeus King, from Northampton, 1787-88, homestead place now owned by L. Warner King. Children: Elijah, who settled in Westhampton; Thaddeus, who died young; Rebecca,—Mrs. Zadoc L. Wright,—of Westhampton; Luther, of Westhampton (father of L. Warner); both father and son born on the place, which has always remained in the family. Medad King, from Northampton, 1796. Homestead was bought of Ebenezer

Clark. Children: Vester, died young; Elisha, Westhampton; Simeon, died young; Susan and Dorcas, died young; Medad, now living on the old homestead; Susan (2d),—Mrs. George Day,—Northampton; Gaius, New York, Reynolds' Basin, west of Rochester. Azariah Lyman, homestead the farm of his grandson, W. E. Lyman. The old house opposite the residence was built by Azariah Lyman in 1774. Children: Azariah, Jr., went West; Jesse, settled on the old homestead; Elihu, Westhampton; Mrs. Jonathan Clark; Mrs. Hastings. Rufus Lyman, homestead where E. P. Lyman now lives. Jonah Mallory, 1770. Perhaps the name should be John. He and Jacob Mallory are said to have been brothers-in-law of John Smith, their wives being sisters of Smith. They lived near him, and left town at an early day. Peter Montague, 1777-78, lived in the west part of the town; buildings nearly gone. His grandsons now live in town and own the same land. Elijah Norton, 1785, bought the place already settled by Seth Burke. Two sons were Elijah and Joseph. Elijah opened a tavern where Christopher C. Bartlett now lives, and also at the Centre. Timothy Pomeroy, 1767, from Southampton, homestead the place of Ebenezer French, already mentioned, very near the present place of Edmund Slaterry. John Parsons, 1775, homestead on Turkey Hill. David Parsons, 1775, homestead on Turkey Brook. Noah Parsons, 1777-78, homestead where Henry M. Parsons, a grandson, now lives. Timothy Phelps lived near where Joseph Whalen now lives. Two sons were Luke and Timothy. Levi Post lived beyond the Fishers, on the Norwich road; place owned by Stephen Searl. Oliver Post, 1774, lived beyond the Fishers, on the Norwich road; place owned by Stephen Searl. Israel Parsons, homestead on what is now known as the Capt. Burt place. Cadwell Phelps. Pliny Pomeroy, homestead on or near the place formerly owned by Capt. Henry Hooker. Bela Parsons, homestead near the Oliver Clapp place, on the road to Chesterfield, where Otis Witherell now lives. Israel Pittsinger, homestead where Henry Hathaway now lives. He was one of the Hessian soldiers in Burgoyne's army, and chose to settle here. Medad Parsons lived on the road to Chesterfield, near the reservoir. Ebenezer Paine, homestead on the road to Chesterfield, above the Ralph Clapp place. Nathaniel Rogers, 1777-78. Zebulon Rust. Elijah Rust lived where Patrick McCarty now lives. Joel Rust, homestead where Edward Clapp now lives. Barnabas Rich. Ezekiel Snow, 1771-72, settled near the line of Southampton, not far from the mines. Ebenezer Stearns, 1771-72, settled southeast, near where Joseph Whalen now lives. John Strong (3d), 1771-72, first built near the residence of the late Jared Bartlett; he afterward lived opposite Gee's house. Jonathan Stearns was a son of Ebenezer. Levi Smith, homestead probably on the Enoch Lyman place. Abner Smith, the first settler of the town, came in 1762. His homestead at first and his subsequent change have been mentioned. He sold out to Jonathan Fisher in 1770, and is supposed to have left town at that time or soon after. John Smith was a brother of Abner, coming in about 1769. He lived in several different places; finally built the house in which Enoch Lyman used to live,—the present place of Leander Rhodes. Noah Strong, Jr., 1767; his son Lemuel was the first child born in Westhampton. He lived on the road leading south from the Huntington road, and not far from the present place of Wm. J. Lyman. Amasa Strong lived west of the church, near the old Montague place. Ephraim Sanford, 1770, settled on the well-known Bridges place, east of Turkey Hill school-house. He was a Revolutionary soldier; left town in a few years, selling out to Zachariah Curtis. Elijah Tyler, 1777-78, lived where Jerome Stevenson now lives. John F. Tucker, 1771-72, built a log house on the Nathaniel Edwards farm, east of Joel Cook's place (within the line of Northampton). Asa Thayer lived where David Montague now lives; earlier than that, opposite Joseph Whalen's place. He left the "Thayer Fund" to the town. Timothy Thayer, 1771, built the old Alvord house, so called, over the brook, where Wm. Edwards now lives. He was a brother of Asa. Elias Thayer was also a brother of Asa; left town early. Ephraim Wright, 1773, homestead where Edmund Slattery now lives,—that was the old Wright tavern-stand. Jonathan Wales, 1771, lived above the place of Mrs. Bush. Simeon Ward, 1770, homestead near the present house of Henry Parsons, but probably left town in a few years. Reuben Wright, 1774, lived on Bascom's Hill, where R. W. Clapp now lives. At the foot of that hill the stage was overturned once and one or more lives lost. Daniel Winters, 1775. Oliver Waters, 1777-78. Phineas Wright, the present place of Charles W. Niles. Oliver Wright, homestead the present place of Christopher C. Bartlett.

The following are from old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

July 21, 1794.—Elijah Norton, merchant, advertises that he has just received "a handsome assortment of West India and Dry Goods."

March 4, 1795.—Solomon Clark offers for sale, cheap, a farm of 60 or 80 acres, 30 under improvement, with a house and barn, situated 2 miles east of the meeting-house, and on the County road to Northampton. A good place for a tradesman; especially a shoemaker is very much wanted. Also one-eighth of a saw-mill, within half a mile of said farm.

Thursday, Jan. 19, 1817.—The new meeting-house dedicated. Prayer by Rev. Mr. Gould, of Southampton. Sermon by the Rev. Enoch Hale,—Ex., chap. 3, verse 5. Concluding prayer by Rev. Mr. Waters, of Chesterfield. The services were accompanied with good vocal and instrumental music. The building was planned and built by that correct architect, Capt. Isaac Damon, of Northampton.

"CARD.

"Enoch and Richard Hale, having, with their families, commenced living in their new dwelling, erected principally by the liberality of their friends, beg leave publicly to express their gratitude for the truly Christian munificence which they have experienced to a very large extent. May the all-gracious God be pleased to repay earthly favors with spiritual blessings, and cause that they who water be also watered themselves!

"WESTHAMPTON, Feb. 12, 1817."

ORGANIZATION.

In the period of pioneer settlement, extending from 1762 to 1778, a population of sufficient numbers had been secured to warrant a separate town organization, and the necessary steps were taken to procure the assent of the General Court. The name of Westhampton seems to have been adopted by common consent, and was an appropriate name, as the territory to which it applied had been the west part of Northampton. The act of incorporation was passed Sept. 29, 1778.

The records of the town have been kept in a clear and accurate manner from the first year of the town organization. They are in excellent preservation, reflecting the highest credit upon the care, competency, and fidelity of the various town clerks through a period of one hundred years. They embody a large amount of valuable historical material. The first volume opens with the act of incorporation, approved by the Governor of the commonwealth, Sept. 29, 1778.

In pursuance of the act there follows the warrant for the first town-meeting, signed by Caleb Strong, Esq., of Northampton, requiring Abner Clafin, "one of the principal inhabitants of the town of Westhampton," to notify and warn the freeholders to attend the first town-meeting, to be held at the house of Nathan Clark, on Thursday, the 19th day of November, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, to choose town officers, and also to determine whether the said town will request Mr. Hale to continue to preach in said town.

The following is the record of the first town-meeting:

At a legal meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of Westhampton, on the nineteenth day of November, 1778, in the first place Caleb Strong, Esq., was chosen moderator. The town then proceeded to the choice of town officers for the remainder of the present year, when the following persons were chosen to the offices annexed to their names respectively: Sylvester Judd, Clerk; Deacon Martin Clark, Treasurer; Mr. John Smith, Capt. William Bartlett, John Baker, Selectmen; John Parsons, Ephraim Wright, Surveyors of Highways; Azariah Lyman, Tythingman; John Smith, Warden; Abner Clafin, Constable.

The town then proceeded to consider the clause in the warrant, whether the town will request Mr. Hale to continue to preach in said town, upon which the town voted to choose a committee of three persons to procure Mr. Hale or some other person to preach in the said town four Sabbaths after the term is expired for which Mr. Hale is engaged. The town then chose Messrs. Martin Clark, Azariah Lyman, and Sylvester Judd to be the said committee; also voted that the said committee be desired to request the gentlemen whom they shall obtain to preach the four Sabbaths above mentioned to preach two of the Sabbaths at the house of Nathan Clark, and the other two at the house of Azariah Lyman.

Attest:

CALEB STRONG, Moderator.

A second meeting followed in a few days, pursuant to a warrant issued by the newly-chosen selectmen, of which the following is the record:

At a legal meeting held at the house of Azariah Lyman, on the 24th of November, 1778, in the first place chose John Smith moderator. The town then voted to allow the surveyor's accounts in the manner following: for a man and team, four dollars a day; for a man, two dollars a day; for cart or plow, half a dollar a day for summer work, and nine shillings per day for a man for fall work; and other work in proportion. Also voted that the surveyors proportion the team work according to the goodness thereof; also voted to allow twenty shillings a hundred for good plank.

Voted that the town treasurer and town clerk procure what books are necessary for their respective offices.

Voted to raise four hundred pounds to defray the present debt and to defray the town expenses for the ensuing year.

After long debate as to whether the meeting-house, to be hereafter erected, should be located at the centre of the township, or as near as the nature of the land would permit, a vote was passed to that effect.

A vote to reconsider was, however, passed, and then it was decided to appoint a committee from neighboring towns to propose a site for the meeting-house, and Col. Bonney, of Chesterfield, Deacon Nash, of South Hadley, and Col. Day, of Springfield, were requested to act. A committee to provide for and attend this "outside" committee was named, consisting of Jonathan Wales, Zachariah Curtis, and Sylvester Judd. Voted to request the gentlemen from abroad to attend to this matter as soon as possible.

Attest:

JOHN SMITH, Moderator.

At another meeting, November 30th, the action of the 24th was reconsidered. This meeting was held at the house of Nathan Clark, but "removed" during its session to "Mr. Tyler's stock-yard." Voted that the "centre of the land" should be considered as the place for a meeting-house, or as near as the same will admit. And a committee, consisting of John Smith, John Baker, Ebenezer Clark, Noah Strong, John Bullard, and Elijah Tyler, were instructed to report a place for the meeting-house, but were required to conform to the vote in favor of the centre. Really, they were to find the centre of the town. These votes show the opening of the controversy, the settlement of which appears in the sketch of the church.

At the regular town-meeting, March 8, 1779, besides the officers given elsewhere, there were chosen Azariah Lyman and John Baker, Constables; Nathan Clark and Joseph Kingsley, Tythingmen; Elijah Tyler, Ebenezer French, Wardens; David Parsons, Jonathan Clark, Epaphras Clark, John Eliot, Hog-reeves; Zachariah Curtis, Amasa Strong, Aaron Fisher, Seth Burk, Surveyors of Highways; Noah Edwards, Levi Post, Fence-viewers.

A town-meeting was held June 25, 1779, at the house of Elisha Chilson.

The warrant for a town-meeting, to be held Sept. 25, 1786, contained the following clause: "To see if the town will consider the distressing calamities of public affairs, and direct their representative to attend the General Court." This was during the pressure of the "hard times" that were the pretext for the "Shays rebellion," so called, in which, however, Westhampton did not share.

The town voted upon this clause that Azariah Lyman, John Smith, Ebenezer Clark, Jonathan Wales, Noah Cook, Noah Edwards, Ephraim Wright, Rufus Lyman, and Samuel Edwards be a committee to instruct their representative, and agree with him concerning his wages.

April, 1790, voted that "the care of the meeting-house be committed to Mr. Samuel French, to sweep once a fortnight, furnish water for baptizing the children, also to lock and unlock said house on all public days reasonably; for which the town are to give him fifteen shillings a year."

Place of Town-Meetings.—The earlier meetings are designated in the records, and the place will be clearly known from the record of family location already given. As soon as the meeting-house was sufficiently finished, town-meetings were held there, as in other New England towns, until the erection in later years of the town-hall.

The following is a list of the selectmen from the organization of the town :

- 1778.—John Smith, William Bartlett, John Baker.
 1779.—William Bartlett, Abner Claffin, Zachariah Curtiss.
 1780.—John Smith, Ephraim Wright, Gideon Clark.
 1781-82.—Ephraim Wright, Gideon Clark, Rufus Lyman.
 1783-85.—Ephraim Wright, Ebenezer Clark, Gideon Clark.
 1786.—Gideon Clark, Jr., Sylvester Judd, Asa Thayer.
 1787.—Aaron Fisher, Noah Cook, Ebenezer Clark.
 1788.—Asa Thayer, Sylvester Judd, Elijah Rust.
 1789.—Asa Thayer, Sylvester Judd, Gideon Clark, Jr.
 1790.—Aaron Fisher, Sylvester Judd, Gideon Clark, Jr.
 1791.—Aaron Fisher, Martin Clark, Gideon Clark, Jr.
 1792.—Aaron Fisher, Asa Thayer, Noah Cook.
 1793.—Aaron Fisher, Samuel Edwards, Gideon Clark, Jr.
 1794.—Sylvester Judd, Asa Thayer, Gideon Clark, Jr.
 1795.—Samuel Edwards, Ephraim Wright, Willard Smith.
 1796.—Sylvester Judd, Timothy Edwards, Noah Parsons, Gideon Clark, Jr., Peter Montague.
 1797.—Asa Thayer, Timothy Edwards, Sylvester Judd.
 1798.—Samuel Edwards, Jonathan Wales, Titus Clark.
 1799.—Samuel Edwards, Jonathan Wales, Timothy Edwards.
 1800-1.—Sylvester Judd, Asa Thayer, Timothy Edwards.
 1802-3.—Aaron Fisher, Asa Thayer, Noah Cook.
 1804.—Asa Thayer, Samuel Edwards, Willard Smith.
 1805.—Asa Thayer, Samuel Edwards, Sylvanus Clapp.
 1806.—Sylvanus Clapp, Sylvester Judd, Israel Parsons.
 1807.—Sylvester Judd, Sylvanus Clapp, Asa Thayer.
 1808.—Sylvester Judd, Aaron Fisher, Asa Thayer.
 1809.—Sylvester Judd, Aaron Fisher, Timothy Phelps, Jr.
 1810.—Sylvester Judd, Willard Smith, Timothy Phelps, Jr.
 1811.—Sylvester Judd, Willard Smith, Benoni Clark.
 1812.—Aaron Fisher, Benoni Clark, Jonathan Clark.
 1813.—Aaron Fisher, Jonathan Clark, Benoni Clark.
 1814.—Aaron Fisher, Benoni Clark, John Bates.
 1815.—John Bates, Benoni Clark, Samuel Edwards, Jr.
 1816.—Willard Smith, Benoni Clark, Samuel Edwards, Jr.
 1817.—Aaron Fisher, Sylvanus Clapp, Joseph Kingsley, Jr.
 1818-19.—Sylvanus Clapp, Benoni Clark, Samuel Edwards, Jr.
 1820.—Sylvanus Clapp, Elijah Rust, Jesse Lyman.
 1821.—Elijah Rust, Sylvanus Clapp, Jesse Lyman.
 1822.—Sylvanus Clapp, Jesse Lyman, Benoni Clark.
 1823.—Samuel Edwards, Jr., Benoni Clark, Richard Clapp.
 1824.—John Bates, Richard Clapp, Samuel Edwards, Jr.
 1825.—John Bates, Samuel Edwards, Jr., Jesse Lyman.
 1826.—Timothy Phelps, Jesse Lyman, Bela P. Clapp.
 1827.—Timothy Phelps, Bela P. Clapp, John A. Judd.
 1828-29.—Bela P. Clapp, John A. Judd, Ezra Kingsley.
 1830-31.—Bela P. Clapp, Jesse Lyman, Richard Hale.
 1832.—Bela P. Clapp, Richard Hale, Jared Bartlett.
 1833.—Jared Bartlett, Eleazer Judd, Joel Cook.
 1834.—Joel Cook, Jared Bartlett, Francis Loud.
 1835.—Joel Cook, Jared Bartlett, Eleazer Judd.
 1836.—Joel Cook, Roswell Dickinson, Richard Hale.
 1837.—Almon B. Ludden, Jesse Lyman, Ralph Clapp.
 1838.—Almon B. Ludden, Jonathan W. Bartlett, Roswell Dickinson.
 1839.—Roswell Dickinson, Medad King, Jr., Levi Burt.
 1840.—Levi Burt, Medad King, Jr., Almon B. Ludden.
 1841.—Almon B. Ludden, Levi Burt, Linus Chapman.
 1842.—Linus Chapman, Clark Bridgman, Jared Bartlett.
 1843.—Jared Bartlett, Linus Chapman, Clark Bridgman.
 1844.—Jared Bartlett, Joel Cook, Asa Parsons.
 1845-46.—Joel Cook, Asa Parsons, Matthias Rice.
 1847.—Joel Cook, Matthias Rice, Festus Hooker.
 1848.—Festus Hooker, Joel Cook, Almon B. Ludden.
 1849.—Almon B. Ludden, Festus Hooker, Joel Cook.
 1850.—Almon B. Ludden, Medad King, Festus Hooker.
 1851.—Medad King, Enoch H. Lyman, Jared Bartlett.
 1852.—Jared Bartlett, Enoch H. Lyman, George N. King.
 1853.—Enoch H. Lyman, George N. King, Augustus E. Hale.
 1854.—Levi Burt, Linus Chapman, Enoch H. Lyman.
 1855.—Joel Cook, Linus Chapman, Levi Burt.
 1856.—Joel Cook, Festus Hooker, Jared O. Bartlett.
 1857.—Joel Cook, Festus Hooker, Reuben W. Clapp.
 1858.—Jared Bartlett, Sylvanus Hubbard, Reuben W. Clapp.
 1859.—Jared Bartlett, Sylvanus Hubbard, Anson Chapman.
 1860.—Medad King, Anson Chapman, John Bates.
 1861.—Medad King, John Bates, Enoch H. Ludden.
 1862.—Medad King, Enoch H. Lyman, Henry M. Parsons.
 1863-64.—Enoch H. Lyman, Henry M. Parsons, Elbert Langdon.
 1865-66.—Elbert Langdon, Albert G. Jewett, Henry W. Montague.
 1867.—Albert G. Jewett, H. W. Montague, Wm. J. Lyman.
 1868-69.—Joel Burt, Theophilus Edwards, Elbert Langdon.

- 1870.—Elbert Langdon, C. C. Bartlett, Charles N. Loud.
 1871-72.—A. G. Jewett, C. C. Bartlett, Charles Clark.
 1873.—A. G. Jewett, Charles Clark, R. W. Clapp.
 1874-75.—A. G. Jewett, Franklin Strong, R. W. Clapp.
 1876.—A. G. Jewett, Franklin Strong, George Burt.
 1877.—A. G. Jewett, George Burt, E. P. Lyman.
 1878.—George Burt, John Watson, E. Payson Lyman.
 1879.—A. G. Jewett, George Burt, John Watson.

TOWN CLERKS.

Sylvester Judd, 1778; Gideon Clark, Jr., 1779-1813; Sylvester Judd, Jr., 1814-15; Luke Phelps, 1816-29; John A. Judd, 1830-36; Francis Loud, 1837; John A. Judd, 1838-54; Daniel W. Clark, 1855-66; Charles N. Loud, 1867-69; Thomas C. Davenport, 1870; F. H. Judd, 1871-80.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

John Smith, 1781; Sylvester Judd, 1787-88; Gideon Clark, 1793; Sylvester Judd, 1796; Sylvester Judd, 1798; Aaron Fisher, 1801; Sylvester Judd, 1804; Sylvester Judd, 1805-6; Sylvester Judd, 1808-10; Timothy Edwards, 1811; Sylvester Judd, 1812; Sylvester Judd, 1813; Sylvester Judd, 1814-15; Aaron Fisher, 1816; Sylvester Judd, 1817; Joseph Kingsley, Jr., 1818; Willard Smith, 1819; Aaron Fisher, 1822; Joseph Kingsley, Jr., 1823; Joseph Kingsley, Jr., 1827; Samuel Edwards, Jr., 1828; Bela P. Clapp, 1829-30; Samuel Edwards, Jr., 1832; John A. Judd, 1833; Jesse Lyman, 1834; Eleazer Judd, 1835; Jesse Lyman, 1836; John A. Judd, 1837; Jared Bartlett, 1840; Joel Cook, 1841; Almon B. Ludden, 1842; John A. Judd, 1843; Asa Parsons, 1847; Levi Burt, 1849; Daniel W. Clark, 1851; Medad King, 1852; Festus Hooker, 1853; Joel Cook, 1858; Matthias Rice, 1862; Wm. J. Edwards, 1869.

VILLAGES.

This subject is easily disposed of. The CENTRE, so-called, first derived its importance from the location of the meeting-house. A small stream tumbling down from the western hills furnishes water-power, which has generally been improved. A country store has usually been maintained, and at the present time there are two, one kept by F. A. Judd, in the building of T. C. Davenport, the other by E. D. Pratt, on the southeast corner. The watch-repairing business, by T. C. Davenport, has for many years been a feature of Westhampton Centre, rivaling, if not excelling, that of more showy establishments in larger villages. He is also postmaster and justice of the peace. In and near the Centre are quite a number of the large, roomy, hospitable-looking dwellings of olden time.

George Burt is the present owner of the Dr. Hooker homestead, a place associated in the memory of the oldest citizens with "turnkeys" and pills, as well as the kindly sympathy of "the beloved physician." Nathan Burt has the Hale homestead. The Chapman family the Sylvester Judd mansion. The Dr. Orcutt place, still owned by the family, was the old Nathan Clark homestead. David Montague owns the Benoni Clark place, and A. G. Jewett that of Theodore Clark. If the "Centre" can scarcely be called a village, yet there is a history clustering around it which renders it a cherished spot to the sons and daughters of Westhampton. However far they may have wandered, "their hearts untraveled" fondly turn to the picturesque hillsides and the secluded dells of this rural hamlet. Some special names may be noticed.

SHACK STREET seems to be applied to the northwest part of the town from the custom in early times of sending the swine up into those woods to fatten upon the falling nuts of the forest.

BABCOCK'S CORNER, on the Huntington road, is so called from a family of that name once residing there.

LOUDVILLE owns a divided allegiance to Northampton and Westhampton. Its mills and stores and shops, excepting the wood-turning business of Francis Norton, are all in the former town, and also the school-house. But the residences of the citizens situated upon the west side of the principal street are in Westhampton, and the Loudville people seem to be closely connected to Westhampton in church, social, and business affairs.

The first postmaster at Westhampton Centre was Jonathan Judd. His successors have been John A. Judd, Anson Chapman, John A. Judd a second time, F. H. Judd, and T. C. Davenport. The last named was appointed in 1865, and has kept the office to the present time.

SCHOOLS.

The first settlers of Westhampton took early measures to provide education for their children. They petitioned the town of Northampton to allow the people of the Long Division something for schooling. In 1776, as noted elsewhere, they succeeded in obtaining an appropriation of £9 for preaching and schooling. Some children were sent to Northampton, and some to Southampton.

In the winter of 1781-82, the people of the south part raised a fund by private contribution and opened a school. This was probably the first school kept in the town. The teacher was Deacon Samuel Edwards, and he taught in a room of Azariah Lyman's house. This was kept about three months. Tradition states that he was an excellent teacher, and was engaged for several winters. He taught reading, writing, arithmetic, and spelling.

The first school-house was built by private means, in 1782, near Babcock's Corner. Rev. Enoch Hale took much interest in starting the schools, and urged the town to make suitable provision for the education of youth. He encouraged young men to go on in their studies; he assisted them, and invited them to come to his house for instruction; and it was through his advice that so many young men in the early years of the town fitted themselves to enter college. These students had very small means to aid them in their studies, and the kind assistance of their pastor saved their funds from exhaustion and quickened their zeal. Rev. Justin Edwards pursued his preparatory studies with Mr. Hale, and entered the sophomore class, and yet his whole expenses were only $38. These lessons of economy ought not to be lost upon the present age, when the middle and poorer classes of the community are well-nigh denied the advantages of higher education in consequence of the expense with which modern extravagance has surrounded the pathway of the student even at heavily-endowed institutions.

Williams was the favorite college for the Westhampton boys. Justin Edwards several times walked to and from Williamstown,—a distance of 40 miles. But the early collegians used to generally ride to and from college on horseback.

At the beginning of the term a number from this and the adjoining towns would go up together, taking one person along with them on a spare horse. The latter would go to the college in one day, pass the night, and on the following day lead back the horses with empty saddles, and at the end of the term some one go to Williamstown for them in a similar way.

March 22, 1779.—The first official action with reference to schools seems to have been in the negative, as an item in the warrant to see whether the town would raise any money to encourage schooling was voted down.

Schools were evidently sustained by private enterprise several years.

March 13, 1786.—A committee was appointed to divide the town into a convenient number of districts, in order to receive the benefit of schooling,—Messrs. Israel Parsons, Ebenezer Clark, Martin Clark, Peter Montague, Aaron Fisher, John Baker, Azariah Lyman, Jonathan Wales, Noah Edwards, Timothy Edwards, and Rufus Lyman.

May 29, 1786.—Voted, to raise the sum of twenty-five pounds to be expended in schooling during the term of one year from this time.

June 26, 1786.—Committee on school districts discharged and the town divided into six districts by a vote then and there,—certainly a prompt, summary method, if not the most accurate and complete. District No. 1 at the corner by Ebenezer French's house; 2d at Oliver Post's; 3d at Cornelius Bartlett's; 4th at or near the crotch of the road at Wright's field, so called; 5th at Elijah Boyden's; 6th at John Baker's.

Also voted, that each district board their own master or mistress. Also voted, that each man's money be expended at that school to which he is the nearest, measuring on the road, except John Bullard, John Pittsinger, Jonathan Alvord, and Jehial Alvord, who shall be allowed to lay out their money at Elijah Boyden's, if they shall think fit.

March 12, 1787.—Voted, to raise twenty-five pounds for schooling, to be divided as last year, except the six families that live the southeast side of Turkey Hill, who are to lay out their proportion in schooling where they please; and each district to act their pleasure concerning the boarding of their masters or mistresses.

March 10, 1788.—Voted, 30 pounds for schooling, and appointed Israel Parsons, Samuel Edwards, Sylvester Judd, Justin Edwards, John Smith a committee to determine from time to time upon the propriety of each school district sending their children to other districts, if any complaint be made.

March 2, 1789.—Voted, 30 pounds for schooling. Those persons near the centre of the town about to build a school-house allowed to expend their money at the new house, in case it should be built.

In a meeting held at Northampton, Oct. 22, 1818, for the purpose of considering the expediency of establishing a college in Hampshire County, at which the Hon. John Hooker, of Springfield, was chosen chairman, and Rev. Isaac Knapp, of Westfield, secretary, a committee was appointed to see about the removal of Williams College to this county. On that committee were Rev. Dr. Lyman, of Hatfield; Rev. Mr. Williston, of Easthampton; Rev. Mr. Hale, of Westhampton; Rev. Mr. Gould, of Southampton; Sylvester Judd, Esq., of Westhampton; Hon. Ezra Starkweather, of Worthington. The little town of Westhampton, it appears, had two members of this important committee,—a compliment to its educational standing and to the distinguished men residing there.

The modern school system of the town, founded by these vigorous labors of the fathers, is in steady and successful operation, and liberal appropriations are made from year to year.

The following is a list of graduates of colleges, natives of Westhampton:

Tertius Strong, 1790, Williams College, law.
 Levi Parsons, 1801, Williams College, ministry.
 Nathan Hale, LL.D., 1804, Williams College, journalism.
 William Fisher, 1805, Williams College, ministry.
 Justus Kingsley, 1809, Williams College.
 Justin Edwards, D.D., 1810, Williams College, ministry.
 Hophni Judd, 1812, Williams College, law.
 Ebenezer B. Wright, 1814, Williams College, ministry.
 Calvin Montague, 1814, Williams College, medicine.
 Epaphras Clark, 1815, Williams College, law.
 Dorus Clarke, 1817, Williams College, ministry.
 Anson Hooker, 1819, Williams College, medicine.
 Edward Hooker, 1820, Williams College, law.
 Joel Burt, 1821, Union College, medicine.
 Tertius S. Clarke, D.D., 1824, Yale College, ministry.
 George Burt, 1825, Amherst College, business.
 Levi F. Claffin, 1826, Williams College, business.
 Orange Clark, D.D., 1828, Columbia College, ministry.
 Jacob L. Clark, D.D., 1831, Yale College, ministry.
 Calvin Clark, 1832, Williams College, ministry.
 Sylvester Judd (3d), 1836, Yale College, ministry.
 George Lyman, 1837, Amherst College, ministry.
 Zenas M. Phelps, 1839, Williams College, teaching.
 Jonathan S. Judd, 1839, Williams College, ministry.
 Dexter Clapp, 1839, Amherst College, ministry.
 Chauncey P. Judd, 1840, Yale College, law.
 Melzar Montague, 1841, Williams College, ministry.
 Enos J. Montague, 1841, Williams College, ministry.
 Luther Clapp, 1841, Williams College, ministry.
 Samuel W. Fisher, 1841, Williams College, business.
 James Brewer, 1842, Williams College, ministry.
 Anson Clark, 1845, Williams College, ministry.
 Charles H. Norton, 1847, Williams College, ministry.
 Justin W. Parsons, 1849, Williams College, foreign missions.

Chester Bridgman, 1856, Amherst College, ministry.

Henry M. Bridgman, 1857, Amherst College, foreign missions.

Francis Burt, 1857, Amherst College, teaching.

With reference to Samuel Fisher, usually included in the above catalogue, the editor of the "Reunion Pamphlet" adds a statement to show that he was undoubtedly a native of the town. The explanation needs explaining. The Jonathan Fisher who died in the army was only thirty-four years of age, and was the son of the Jonathan that bought the Abner Smith place in 1770. That the younger Jonathan lived in Westhampton is sufficiently proved by the general understanding that he represented the town in the Continental army, but it could only have been for a period of five years, or at most seven. Samuel Fisher was the youngest son, and a posthumous child, born in Sunderland, June 30, 1777, his father, the lieutenant, having died in the month of March before. The widow of the lieutenant evidently returned to Dedham soon after, as Samuel lived with his mother there until he was five years of age, and after that with his uncle, Dr. Samuel Ware, of Conway.

As this disposes of the name of Samuel, it is proper to add that the date of William Fisher's birth, in 1776, leaves it pretty certain that he was born in Westhampton. Jonathan, who graduated at Harvard and became the pastor of the church at Blue Hill, Me., and was the author of several works, was probably born in Dedham before the removal to Westhampton, as he died at quite an advanced age in 1845.

Besides the list of graduates, there are others who entered various professions without completing a full college course. Among these may be mentioned Dr. Enoch Hale, of Gardiner, Maine, and afterward Boston; Dr. Sylvanus Clapp, of Pawtucket, R. I.; Dr. Oliver D. Norton, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Dr. Watson Loud, Dr. Philo Clark, Dr. Henry Cook, Dr. Mendal Jewett, Rev. Christopher Clapp, Rev. Henry Loud, Rev. Joseph Stearns, Rev. Anson Stearns.

There are others who took a classical course of studies, without, however, graduating, and went into business instead of professional life, as John A. Judd, Edwin Cook, Zenas Kingsley, Alvin Clark.

Joseph Alvord was connected with the Wheeler & Wilson sewing-machine works, and was a noted business-man. He died within a few years.

LITERATURE.

The Rev. Enoch Hale prepared a spelling-book about the beginning of this century. He was far in advance of his age. That book is now something of a literary curiosity,—a rare prize for the antiquarian. It contained lessons and stories for children, written in a style adapted to their understanding. It is said the book suited the children, but not the adults. The latter supposed that abstract doctrines of theology were the right and proper material to be placed in the hands of children, even to learn to read. Mr. Hale's method became popular thirty years later, and the bright, cheerful literature of modern school-books is but the development of his idea.

Sylvester Judd, Jr., was not only editor and historian, but an author of several books, as "Margaret," and other works of fiction. His name is still standard authority upon the early annals of the Connecticut Valley.

His published history of Hadley is a specimen of the diligence with which he labored, and the fullness and accuracy of his writings.

The "Reunion" of 1866 was a noteworthy occasion in the history of the town. It was similar to a centennial celebration, and its proceedings are appropriately preserved in a pamphlet full of valuable historic material.

To have the gathering twelve years before the completion of a century had the advantage of securing the attendance of many aged people, natives of the town, then living, but who soon after passed away,—among them Jesse Lyman, Asa Parsons, Mr. Burt, Eli Clark, and doubtless many others.

School Statistics.

January, 1837.—Nine schools; attending in the summer, 198; average not stated; winter, 269; average, 233; in town between 4 and 16, 259; summer schools, 32 months; winter, 22 months and 7 days; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 7 males, 3 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $19.43; female teachers, $9.73.

January, 1847.—Eight schools; attending in summer, 163; average, 123; winter, 175; average, 132; in town between 4 and 16, 206; attending under 4, 11; over 16, 14; summer schools, 28 months and 21 days; winter, 23 months; total, 51 months, 21 days; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 5 males, 3 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $18.80; female, $11.45.

January, 1857.—Seven schools; attending in summer, 83; average, 66; winter, 100; average, 86; attending under 5, 8; over 15, 11; in town between 5 and 15, 116; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 7 females; summer schools, 21 months and 5 days; winter, 22 months, 5 days; total, 43 months, 10 days; average wages female teachers per month, $12.57.

January, 1867.—Six schools; attending in the summer, 86; average, 70; winter, 126; average, 102; attending under 5, 7; over 15, 14; in town between 5 and 15, 147; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 2 males, 3 females; summer schools, 26 months; winter, 16 months and 5 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $33.66; female teachers, $30.80.

January, 1878.—Five schools; $18.37 for repairs; scholars attending during the year, 114; average, 70; 1 under 5; 21 over 15; number between 5 and 15 in town, 127; teachers, 3 males, 7 females; schools kept 38 months, 15 days; wages of male teachers per month, $26; female, $24 per month; taxation, $1000; superintendence, $45; income of vested funds and dog tax, $35.90; 1 private school, 10 scholars; tuition, $127.50; town share of State school fund, $224.57.

CHURCHES.

As in most other New England towns, so especially in Westhampton, the convenience of public worship was a matter considered at the time of the incorporation, and as one of the reasons for it. In the memorial to the General Court asking for an act to organize a new town, it is expressly stated "that your petitioners, being now increased to a considerable number, are of the opinion that we can support a minister of the gospel among ourselves." But there are earlier records than this, showing their earnestness in this matter. At the town-meeting of Northampton, March, 1772, the inhabitants of Long Division petitioned the town to return to them their minister and school-rates, in order to pay for preaching. This request was granted, and in August of that year an order was drawn in favor of Samuel Kingsley, representing Long Division, for £7 16s. At the December meeting of the same year Northampton voted £8 to Long Division for preaching. A year later, November, 1774, the town voted £9 to Long Division for preaching and schooling, and in November, 1777, Northampton voted Long Division £15 for the support of preaching. These appropriations by Northampton were rendered effective by the vigorous efforts and the zealous sacrifices of the people themselves; ministers were procured, sometimes for single Sabbaths, again for several weeks at a time, and so public worship was quite steadily maintained as early as the summer of 1772. It is stated that Noah Cook, of Hadley, preached that year a few Sundays, services being held at the house of Samuel Kingsley, and also at the house of Timothy Thayer.

The house of Samuel Kingsley was not far from Babcock's Corners, where a few years later it was proposed to locate the meeting-house. The house of Timothy Thayer was over the brook, near the residence in later years of William Edwards, and to accommodate some of the foot-people logs were placed across the stream; sometimes both boys and girls waded through the water.

Mr. Cook was a lame man and walked with a crutch, so that he was sometimes called the "three-legged minister." The next winter one Mr. Gould preached a few times. In the winter of 1773-74, Mr. Hooker, of Northampton, held service and baptized three children, whose names were Noah Kingsley, Justice Burk, and Rebecca Fisher, and it is supposed these were the first baptisms in Westhampton.

There was preaching in 1774 or 1775 in the northerly part of the town, at the house of Jonathan Wales, by a Mr. Taft, brother of Mrs. Wales. These were the times that "tried men's souls." Mr. Taft was a zealous Whig, talked Revolutionary politics during the week, and preached and prayed for liberty on Sunday. He believed in the non-intercourse policy, and refused to drink any tea when England was endeavoring to force Americans to pay a tax upon it.

Rev. Mr. Hooker, of Northampton, and Mr. Judd, of Southampton, occasionally came and gave lectures on week-days. As places of meeting the barns of Joseph or Samuel Kingsley and of Nathan Clark were alternately used.

A Mr. Hotchkiss preached a few times in Westhampton and Norwich. In the spring of 1778, John Eliot preached four Sabbaths. Jonathan Smith, of Hadley, and David Parsons, of Amherst, preached during the same year.

And old man, known as Father Saxton, who lived in Long Division, near the old house of Solomon Judd, preached all one summer in 1776 or 1777.

But these preliminary and somewhat irregular services soon gave way to something more permanent and orderly. Previous to the incorporation of the town, Rev. Enoch Hale had preached one or more Sabbaths, and at the first meeting, Nov. 19, 1778, about the only business done, except to elect town officers, was the appointing of Martin Clark, Azariah Lyman, and Sylvester Judd a committee to engage his further service; the preaching one-half of the time to be at the house of Nathan Clark, the other half at the house of Azariah Lyman. The settlement of a minister in those days was an affair of deliberation,—slow, but very certain to be wise and judicious. It was not until nearly a year later, August, 1779, that a regular call was extended Mr. Hale to become the settled pastor. It was accepted. The terms of settlement consisted of many items, substantially the following: A lot of land in the northwest part of the town,—15 acres from Nathan Clark's farm, 5 acres from Elihu Chilson's homestead,—a parsonage to be built, 32 by 30, or the value of such a house paid to Mr. Hale in money. The annual salary was to be the first year £40, and to rise by adding £3 a year until it reached £70, this sum to be perpetual. To this was added the finding of the minister's firewood annually after the first six years; and also the promise to make further provisions for his support if these stipulations proved to be insufficient.

The ordination took place Sept. 20, 1779, in a barn on the old Norwich road, standing a little east of the present residence of Mr. W. E. Lyman. It was an occasion of great interest, long remembered by those who were present, and often described by them to the children of later years. The ordaining council consisted of Rev. Jonathan Judd, Rev. Solomon Williams, Rev. Samuel Hopkins, Rev. Joseph Huntington, Rev. Joseph Lyman, Rev. Aaron Bascom, Rev. Gershom C. Lyman, and Mr. Joel Hayes, a delegate.

The church was organized Sept. 1, 1779, Rev. Jonathan Judd, of Southampton, and Rev. Mr. Hooker, of Northampton, present and assisting. The first deacons chosen were Martin Clark and Reuben Wright. The exact list of members at the date of organization is not preserved, but the following names appear in the handwriting of Rev. Enoch Hale, and by him are described as being members "soon after the formation of the church:" Jonathan Alvord, William Bartlett, Joel Bartlett, Elijah Boyden, John Bullard, Jonathan Clark, Nathan Clark, Ebenezer Clark, Gideon Clark, Noah Edwards, Jonathan Fisher, Ebenezer French, Samuel Hubbard, Saml. Kingsley, Joseph Kingsley, Sylvester Judd, Azariah Lyman, Rufus Lyman, Peter Montague, John Parsons, David Parsons, Oliver Post, John Smith, Noah Strong, Amasa Strong, Elijah Tyler, Mary Bartlett, Ruth Boyden, Joanna Bullard, Sarah Clark, Eunice Clark (wife of Nathan), Eunice Clark (wife of Ebenezer), Esther Clark, Jerusha Edwards, Mary Elwell, Rachel French, Beriah French, Jerusha Hubbard, Hannah Judd, Isabel Kingsley, Martha Lyman, Mary Montague, Lydia Parsons, Irene Parsons, Mary Phelps, Mrs. Strong (wife of Noah), Thankful Strong, Sarah Strong, Ruth Tyler, Abigail Wright.

The erection of a meeting-house was considerably delayed by the discussion over the site. The story is too long for our limits; we can only state the successive steps. May 21, 1779, a site was selected by the town and a house voted to be built 40 by 50. This site was very near the present location, as appears from subsequent statements in the town records, but it was unsatisfactory. The south part of the town desired to have it on the old historic Norwich road, where the first settlement had been made, and where the majority of the people then lived, and they suggested what has been known in late years as Babcock's Corners. The northern portion insisted on the "square" in front of Nathan Clark's, now the rock-covered triangle near the centre school-house. The dissension was severe and threatening. Meanwhile, Mr. Hale's house was erected, the present place of Nathan Burt, and meetings were held in that, his house, perhaps, as well as himself, thus proving a peacemaker; but the town returned the meetings to Nathan Clark's the next spring. The geographical centre, near the top of Tob's Hill, was gravely proposed. Then a committee from abroad, consisting of Col. Chapin, of Hatfield, Deacon White, of Springfield, and Deacon White, of Whately, were invited to decide the location. They reported a site which the town accepted, but which was not really satisfactory to either party, and this was abandoned. Five weary years were thus passed, when, with considerable unanimity, the town came back nearly to a previous selection, and the house was at last located and built where the present one stands. It was in the woods, the primeval timber being cut away to make room for it, the log hut of Samuel Hering and the house of Mr. Hale, now the place of Nathan Burt, being the only habitations near the meeting-house; but the struggle was ended, and ended for all succeeding years.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHURCH RECORDS.

In 1789, large additions were made to the church, mostly young people.

Dec. 26, 1781.—The pastor, with Deacon Martin Clark, delegate, attended a council at Williamsburg, to install Rev. Joseph Strong.

September 30 and Oct. 1, 1782.—The pastor, with Deacon Wright, delegate, attended a council at Amherst.

Sept. 29, 1801.—The pastor, with Samuel Kingsley, delegate, attended a convention at Northampton, to form a missionary society. This shows that some of the earliest movements in behalf of Christian work for the heathen began in these towns of the Connecticut Valley; this date being some years earlier than the historic prayer-meeting by the hay-stack, in Williamstown.

1806.—Forty-eight were added to the church that year.

Oct. 21, 1819.—Pastor, with Solomon Judd, delegate, attended a convention at Hadley, which recommended unanimously certain articles respecting church union and government. Subsequently, May 1, 1820, the church of Westhampton, after hearing the report of a committee on said articles, refused to approve them, and also declined to send delegates to another convention to meet at Hatfield. The committee above mentioned were Deacon Martin Clark, Deacon Samuel Edwards, Sylvester Judd, Esq., Capt. Azariah Lyman, Deacon Pliny Sykes, Maj. Aaron Fisher, Solomon Judd, Dr. Wm. Hooker, and Willard Smith.

This transaction shows very clearly the dignity and carefulness with which the local church guarded their independence, and how steadily they declined to yield their own convictions of truth and duty even to unanimous recommendations from conventions and councils.

May 1, 1818.—The church chose a committee "to superintend Sabbath-schools in this town, and to apply if necessary to the town for this purpose,"—Benoni Clark, Levi Post, Jr., Noah Kingsley, Luke Phelps, and Richard Clapp.

Oct. 30, 1818.—The church voted their thanks to the above committee for "their benevolence, diligence, and fidelity in conducting the Sabbath-schools." This appears to have been the opening of the modern Sabbath-school work in this town,—a work which for sixty years has been steadily cherished by the church as one of its most important departments.

April 6, 1820.—At the meeting which appointed the annual Sabbath-school committee, they were instructed "to see what can be done in regard to our common schools for the promotion of religion among the children," and April 16th the committee reported that "the Bible be read with solemnity every half-day in the public schools in connection with prayer, if prayer be attended."

April 5, 1821.—Benevolent work was provided for by the appointment of Joseph Kingsley, Dr. William Hooker, Deacon Pliny Sykes, Joel Rust, and Willard Smith a committee "to encourage and receive charitable donations and deliver them to their uses."

May 3, 1822, the standing committee of the church in their annual report have the following reference to a subject that has not yet disappeared from the field of public discussion:

"During the past year they have unhappily found occasion in several instances to pay attention to brethren who were thought to be injuring, if not destroying, themselves by drinking intemperately intoxicating liquors. Their exertions to reclaim from that vice, if not so completely successful as they ardently desired, they allow themselves to hope have not been wholly without success. But further endeavors they are sensible will be necessary to effect (if by the grace of God it be possible) a thorough reformation in all who have deviated from the way of the gospel."

It appears from the records that the evil of intemperance cost the church much trouble, resulting in many unpleasant trials, and in some instances actual excommunication.

We copy one sentence as a specimen of the solemnity and almost judicial formality attending ancient church discipline:

"Mr. —, listen to your sentence. To the grief of God's children you have a number of years been intemperate, in drinking to drunkenness. This church has labored to reform you, without success. You refuse to be reformed; therefore hear: the church of Christ in Westhampton sentences and pronounces you, Mr. —, to be excommunicated, and does by this sentence excommunicate you from the fellowship of Christ's church."

To the radical temperance men of the present time it will seem strange that the crime specified in the above sentence was not "drinking" intoxicating liquors, but "drinking to drunkenness," and doubtless the culprit was tried, the decision made, and the sentence pronounced by men who saw no harm in moderate drinking, and no doubt practiced it. Doubtless their own cellars were stored with cider,—an agent that has probably wrought more ruin in rural towns than any other intoxicating liquor. But the men of that time had not learned, what is now so clear, that church members, to save their own sons and their neighbors' sons, must close their lips against even cider, and banish it as a beverage from their households.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Enoch Hale, ordained Sept. 20, 1779; died Jan. 14, 1837, in the fifty-eighth year of his pastorate and the eighty-fourth year of his age. 2d. Rev. Horace B. Chapin, installed as colleague to Mr. Hale July 8, 1829; continued only a short time after Mr. Hale's death, being dismissed, at his own request, in May, 1837; he died at Lewiston Falls, Me., October, 1840. 3d. Rev. Amos Drury, installed June 28, 1837; he died while still pastor, July 22, 1841, at Pittsford, Vt., being on a visit to friends in that place. 4th. Rev. David Coggin, ordained May 11, 1842; died of consumption while still pastor, April 28, 1852, aged thirty-five years. 5th. Rev. Andrew Bigelow, installed March 2, 1854; dismissed April 18, 1855. 6th. Rev. Roswell Foster, installed Nov. 20, 1856; dismissed Dec. 28, 1858. 7th. Rev. Edward C. Bissell, ordained Sept. 22, 1859; Mr. Bissell enlisted in the army for the suppression of the Rebellion, and was chosen a captain; he was dismissed from the pastorate May 10, 1864. 8th. Rev. Thomas Allender, installed June 21, 1866; died Sept. 17, 1869. 9th. Pliny F. Barnard, installed June 30, 1870; dismissed July 1, 1873. 10th. Rev. Joseph Lanman, installed June 3, 1874; dismissed Sept. 11, 1876. 11th. Rev. Edward S. Palmer, installed Dec. 7, 1876, and present pastor of the church (November, 1878).

Record of Deacons.—Reuben Wright, chosen Oct. 13, 1779; died May 6, 1798. Martin Clark, chosen Oct. 13, 1779; died May 24, 1823. Samuel Edwards, chosen Jan. 31, 1786; died Aug. 12, 1842. Pliny Sykes, chosen June 5, 1811; died Nov. 12, 1833. Elisha King, chosen May 19, 1824; died June 29, 1852. Eleazer Judd, chosen Jan. 5, 1834; died June, 1863. Zenas S. Clark, chosen Dec. 16, 1852; present deacon, but not acting. Joel Cook, chosen July 5, 1855; died 1878. Wm. P. Edwards, chosen Feb. 27, 1862; present deacon officiating. Alfred D. Montague, chosen Dec. 30, 1875; present deacon officiating.

THE UNION CHURCH OF WESTHAMPTON

was formed Sept. 30, 1829. It consisted of 41 members who had withdrawn from the fellowship of the old church. The movement was the result of differences of views and feelings, not really of doctrine,—such a movement as may often be expected to occur where men of equal rectitude, equal faith, and equal piety, exercising the liberty of thought common to this free country, arrive at exactly opposite conclusions as to duty and policy. The Rev. John Truair was pastor of this church for eight years, but after his removal meetings were not regularly continued. There were no sufficient reasons for a separate society, and the church was formally dissolved Aug. 17, 1850. The members returned to the old church, and few traces of the division exist either in policy or sentiment at the present time. The Rev. Mr. Truair is spoken of by some writers as an impulsive agitator, a disturbing force, and doubtless he may have somewhat roughly broken in upon the ancient set forms and possibly the prosaic sermonizing of the times. But it must be remembered that 1825 to 1835 was the great period when modern methods of revival work were to a certain extent inaugurated, new measures introduced, and new styles of thought and speech became prominent throughout this and other States in the pulpit and the prayer-meeting. The children of the families who adhered to Mr. Truair, now in advanced life, speak yet with some feeling of his energy, his enthusiasm, but they heartily join with the children of the other families in throwing the kindly veil of charity over all the proceedings of that period, and forgetting both conservatism and radicalism in united, harmonious work in the old paths and for the old faith.

BURIAL-GROUNDS.

The burials in this town seem to have very early been made in just three places,—not scattered over the farms and in the neighborhood, as in the case of some pioneer settlements. The action of the town in 1779 implies that one had been in use in the south for some years previously. This was located a little west of Babcock's Corners, on the north side of the road, and in later years the remains have been removed and the ground given up. The first burial here is not certainly known.

The action of the town alluded to was the following:

March 8, 1779.—Voted, that the town will procure two acres of land—the one in the north, the other in the south part of the town—for the purpose of burying-places. Voted, that the place that has been used in the south part of the town be continued for that purpose. Voted, that Capt. William Bartlett, Jonathan Clark, Seth Burk, Zachariah Curtis, and Aaron Thayer be a committee to procure the places above mentioned.

The one north of the centre, near the present residence of Sylvester King, was laid out pursuant to the above action, and is therefore nearly one hundred years old.

The cemetery at the centre was authorized by the following action:

Dec. 6, 1790.—Voted, that the committee heretofore chosen to seek a place for a burying-ground be directed and empowered to purchase a piece of ground of the Rev. Enoch Hale and Mr. Jared Hunt for the purpose above mentioned, and to take deed for the same in behalf of the town.

Bounds of the new burying-ground in Westhampton, lying on the east side of the highway that leads from Mr. Hale's to Mr. Samuel Kingsley's, about 30 rods south of Mr. Hale's dwelling-house; one-half said burying-ground, lying on the south side of the dividing-line between Mr. Hale and Mr. Jared Hunt, taken out of Mr. Hale's land, and the other half, on the north side of said line, out of Mr. Hunt's land,—being 16 rods in length on the above said highway, and 15 rods to the east parallel to the above said line, and containing in the whole one acre and a half.

This ground is the principal cemetery of the town. The dates extend back about eighty years, but there were much earlier burials. Near the front entrance stands a fine soldiers' monument, erected, soon after the close of the war, to the memory of those who fell in that struggle. It bears the inscription,—

"Erected by the Town of Westhampton in grateful remembrance of her brave and patriotic soldiers who sacrificed their lives in defense of liberty and union during the great rebellion."

This cemetery is in good condition; excellently cared for; containing some fine monuments of later years standing amid the low, moss-covered stones of the earlier times. Upon this death-crowned summit, and along its beautiful eastern slope, are gathered the dead of a hundred years.

The Damon family have a private burial-place near the old homestead, in the northwest part of the town.

Some members of the Hayden family were buried originally upon their farm, the place now occupied by Mr. Stanton. The remains were, however, removed to Chesterfield many years ago.

In the "Reunion Address" of 1866 it is stated that the wife and child of John F. Tucker were buried in Nathaniel Edwards' pasture, east of Joel Cook's.

TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, ETC.

There have existed here the usual variety of religious, benevolent, and temperance organizations common at the present time and for the last half-century. None of them were of sufficient permanence to furnish materials to any extent for a historical sketch.

The old parish or town library of early times seems to have been a valuable means of instruction. It, however, disappeared, the books being scattered and lost.

In later years, and particularly at the time of the Reunion Festival of 1866, efforts were made to establish a new and more permanent one, especial attention being given to a pastor's library.

At that time Rev. Dorus Clarke made a donation to the town of $100, the interest of which should be given as a prize annually to the best reader and speller in the centre school.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

These are mentioned in the general narrative, and need little additional notice. The place of the first settlement on the banks of the Manhan, by Abner Smith, in 1762, is interesting in its pioneer reminiscences. It was on the southern branch of the Manhan, and just where the present Huntington road crosses the stream in the southwest part of the town. The place of the first town-meeting at the present Orcutt place recalls the early efforts at civil organization. Here came that distinguished man, Governor Caleb Strong, to preside at this formation of a new town, organized in the midst of the Revolution.

These and similar places will readily occur to all who read the interesting annals of other days.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The people of Westhampton have always been mostly engaged in farming. In former times considerable attention was given to selling firewood and lumber. Indeed, much of the actual money received by the earlier settlers and down to thirty years ago was for firewood drawn to Northampton. Firewood gradually rose in value, as well as lumber in various forms.

The last ten years have witnessed a great change in this form of industry. Firewood has declined nearly one-half in value, owing to the introduction of coal in dwellings, stores, and business-places, as well as upon the railroads. Another reason of the decline was the establishment of the steam-mills at Mount Tom. These keep continually for sale (more, in fact, than they can dispose of promptly) large quantities of slab-firewood, which supplants soft wood in the market to a great extent. The business prosperity of Westhampton has been largely injured by these causes. In the earlier times many cattle were fattened for beef in the pastures of this town, and the products of the dairy were of much importance. The sharp competition of Western beef, Western butter, and Western cheese in the market towns of New England has largely destroyed the profit formerly made from these sources.

Westhampton, too, has been one of the most prolific of New England towns in furnishing emigrants to settle the broad and fertile States of the Centre and the West. Her sons have sought more genial climes and easier-tilled lands. The houses have disappeared from large sections of the town. Pastures and fields, formerly plowed, have grown up to woodland. Some of her own distinguished sons have intimated in public addresses that the town will, after a time, disappear as a civil organization; that it will become a wood-lot of Northampton again; that the wild animals may once more live in the ancient haunts, wolves howl upon the slopes of the mountains, and bears prowl along the banks of Turkey Brook, Sodom Brook, and the Manhan River. The reduction is not rapid, however, for the last twenty years, and no such result need be expected. The great period of reduction was from 1830 to 1850.

The later decrease is at a much slower rate. It is not necessary to infer that Westhampton must live in future history solely upon her past fame. Were it so, were the volume of Westhampton records to be closed now, there would remain in the annals of the commonwealth enduring memorials of the labors of her distinguished sons. It would be a history in which any town might feel a just pride. But we prefer to believe that some of the sons of Westhampton will abide in the old ways and restore the old homesteads; that the rose shall not give place to the ivy, and the fruitful field to the untrodden wilderness; that material prosperity, under the impulse of some new revival of business, will again visit these rugged hillsides; that religion and education shall still display here their signal worth, as they have in the past; and that other generations shall arise here to bless the fathers of to-day as these now bless the fathers of a century ago.

Mills, Factories, etc.—In the northeast part of the town, on the Roberts Meadow Brook, is the Bridgman saw-mill. It was a very early affair, built about the time the country was settled. It has been kept up ever since by the family of Bridgmans. It is now owned by Lucas Bridgman. The Westfield River touches the northwest corner of the town, but it does not appear that the water-power was improved within the limits of Westhampton. On the head-waters of the Manhan, just below the reservoir, was a saw-mill, known as Langdon's, built thirty years ago or more. It is now abandoned. Farther south, just below the junction of a western branch, was formerly the Chilson grist-mill. It dated back probably to about the time of the first settlement. It was burnt and not rebuilt many years ago. In the same building at one time was a brass-foundry, Bruce & Armitage. They made harness trimmings. The enterprise was continued for a few years. At this same point was the Chilson saw-mill, built probably by Mr. White at an early day. This was also abandoned.

Farther down the stream are the wood-turning works, formerly run by Gere and T. K. Wright, now occupied by E. P. Torrey. Next below was the Thayer grist-mill, an institution entirely unknown to the young people of the present time, or even some of older years. It was built by Deacon Timothy Thayer, and stood near where Deacon Wm. I. Edwards now lives. It is thought that this was given up as early as 1800. Next below is the saw-mill of Henry Parsons. This was built by Mr. Solomon L. Warner, thirty or thirty-five years ago. A curious feature of this water privilege is that to a stranger standing on Parsons Bridge and looking northwest toward the meeting-house there is a strong temptation to believe the stream runs up hill, and that when the next bridge is reached, still farther toward the centre, and one looks back, the same impression remains.

The "natives" familiar with the topography and with the actual levels do not seem to think there is any difficulty in understanding it at all, and perhaps there is not. It is all in the visitor's "eye." Beyond the Parsons mill this stream soon enters the town of Northampton. Commencing on Sodom Brook, near the Southampton line, and coming north, there was formerly the distillery of Joseph Kingsley. It stood near the present place of Lester T. Langdon. Next below is the tannery-yard of Matthias Rice & Sons; this is still in operation. Near this place in former years were also the tan-works of Samuel Giddings, on the north side of the Huntington road. Near Babcock's Corner also chairs were manufactured at one time. On this stream below is the saw-mill of W. E. Lyman. This was built by the late Jesse Lyman. It is still in operation. At the site of Loud's Mills there was formerly a fulling-mill. It was run at one time by Strong Alvord, also by Saml.

Ormsby. Not far below Loud's Mills this brook unites with the Manhan.

In going west from Babcock's Corners the dividing-ridge between the northern and southern branches of the Manhan is crossed, and on the latter various mill privileges have been improved. There was the distillery in old times of Enoch Lyman. Below was a tannery, run, perhaps, by Samuel Giddings. Then Enoch Lyman had a saw-mill on the place now owned by Leander Rhodes. Below that was the Fisher saw-mill, and farther south was the saw-mill and grist-mill of Elihu Bartlett. This was an important place of business for many years. At Loudville, within the town of Westhampton, is located the wood-turning establishment of Francis Norton.

Various other enterprises, as distilleries, potash-works, and wood-turning works, have existed from time to time in different parts of the town. At the present place of the Loud Mills was an old saw-mill, owned at various times by Ludden, Niles, Drake, Edgerton, and others. Charles W. Niles also had a wood-turning shop. On the little stream in the village was the turning-shop of Francis Loud, now owned by Charles N. Loud; not operated to any great extent. A little above, Austin Loud had a turning-shop and also a saw-mill.

The ten leading articles of farm production for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values stated: Butter, $12,991; firewood, $13,925; hay, $21,851; potatoes, $4671; tobacco, $3727; apples, $5863; beef, $7263; pork, $3591; cider, $2947; corn, $2194.

MILITARY.

Westhampton was settled just before the Revolutionary war and during its progress, being incorporated in 1778; hence it naturally had little Revolutionary history, except as a part of Northampton. In the sketches of the latter town relating to the war of Independence may be found names that properly belong to the present territory of Westhampton.

Rev. Enoch Hale, the first pastor, was of a patriotic family, his brother being Nathan Hale, who was executed as a spy in the British camp, and whose fame has been celebrated in oratory and song. The minister had also seen actual service in the field during the opening years of the struggle, previous to his settlement as the pastor of the Westhampton church.

The following official action, found in the town books, forms an honorable record for a town not organized until three years after the war of the Revolution commenced:

Aug. 5, 1779.—At a town-meeting, voted, that "the town would provide such things for those men that went from us into the Continental army as the town of Northampton desired of us.

Aug. 11, 1779.—In the midst of Revolutionary difficulties, Massachusetts having proceeded to call a State convention to form a constitution, Westhampton elected Sylvester Judd as a Delegate.

Oct. 18, 1779.—The town voted to hire the three men required for the Continental army. Gideon Clark, John Smith, and Sheldon Felton were appointed a committee to assist the militia officers in hiring the men.

Voted, that the selectmen collect the clothing required of Westhampton for the use of the army, deliver the same in Northampton, and take a proper receipt therefor.

Voted, that the men that went the month's campaign into Connecticut be paid the same as those that went in June last, in proportion to their service. Nathan Clark, Aaron Fisher, and Sylvester Judd were appointed a committee to attend to this.

July 23, 1781.—Voted, to hire the three men now required of us for the army, and that Capt. Azariah Lyman, Lieut. Aaron Fisher, and Lieut. Noah Edwards be a committee to hire said men, expense to be assessed upon said town, and paid within one month.

Sept. 18, 1781.—Voted, that the men that now hold themselves in readiness to join the army at the shortest notice shall be paid 2 pounds 10 shillings per month for each month they shall be in actual service, twenty shillings to be paid in advance when called upon to march.

May 1, 1782.—Voted, that Mr. Sylvester Judd be a committee to hire one man for the Continental army.

Perhaps this was not accomplished, for a similar vote seems to have been taken September 10th of the same year; also, October 28th; also, December 4th; and, after all, it does not appear whether the man was obtained.

The votes thus given show the official action of the town. From other sources the following general facts are obtained:

Training-bands were formed in the colony of Massachusetts Bay in 1774. The first training in Westhampton is said to have been in the fall of that year. A company consisting of 30 or 40 persons held a parade in the door-yard of Deacon Martin Clark. There is probably no muster-roll of this impromptu company. The people had refused to train the year before under certain officers appointed by Gov. Hutchinson, but now, under the impulse of the coming danger, they met voluntarily to prepare not for simply a holiday parade, but for actual war, which it was seen could not long be delayed.

William Bartlett was elected captain, Noah Strong lieutenant, and Jonathan Fisher ensign.

The company had a small drum and no fife. That same year the company of Minute-Men formed in Northampton included several from the Long Division. Captain Noah Cook, afterward of Westhampton, was a member of this band. When the news of the battle of Lexington reached Northampton on the morning of April 21, 1775, the bells were rung and the drum beat to arms in the streets. A cannon appears to have been discharged, as stories coming down in Southampton families tell of the signal-gun that summoned them to the post of duty. Noah Cook was in the meadows harrowing in oats. Like others, he abandoned the work on the instant. In a short time the Minute-Men came in from all parts of the old town of Northampton; they paraded in front of the meeting-house, occupying the present street before "Shop Row." They were armed and equipped. Rev. Mr. Hooker made "a stirring prayer." Col. Seth Pomeroy made a patriotic speech and encouraged them in the good cause. That same afternoon, with three or four days' rations, they started for Concord, which they reached on the 24th. Another company of Minute-Men was formed from the territory of Southampton, Norwich, and Westhampton. Jonathan Wales, Ebenezer French, Jr., and Ebenezer Gee marched with this company to Concord soon after the battle of Lexington. They remained near Boston several months. In September, 1775, Gee enlisted in Arnold's expedition against Canada, and went as far as Dead River. In February, 1776, Noah Cook and Abiather French marched with the second expedition to Canada by way of Ticonderoga, arrived at Quebec in April, where, instead of taking the fortress, they took the smallpox, and the only ammunition they had adapted to that was butternut-bark pills. At Dorchester, Ebenezer French joined a force sent on for the defense of New York.

In December, 1776, a company was formed under Jonathan Wales, captain, and Noah Strong, lieutenant. From Westhampton this company had also Seth Burk, Jonathan Fisher, Levi Post, Timothy Phelps, Asa Thayer, and Sylvester Judd. Jonathan Fisher died in March, 1777, at Morristown, N. J., whither the company had marched after remaining at Peekskill a short time. Jonathan Fisher is spoken of as a fair-looking, well-built man, with gentlemanly manners. He was a zealous patriot, and did much to aid the enlisting of soldiers. He was brave, courageous, and a true soldier. The Bible he carried into camp with him is in the possession of his great-granddaughter, Mrs. Lewis H. Clark, of Sodus, Wayne Co., N. Y.

In the crisis of the Burgoyne campaign, September, 1777, when reinforcements were ordered, eight men from Westhampton went to join the army of Gen. Gates. The names do not seem to be preserved. It is apparent that from the Lexington alarm, in 1775, all through the weary years of the war, there were several in the army all the time from this town.

In 1780, June 5th, there came the order of the General Court for every sixth man to march to reinforce the Continental army. This must have taken ten or twelve, but we have no record of the names. They were ready by the 28th, and marched, but to what part of the army is not stated in the chronicles of the times. But not yet were the calls finished. In the fall of 1781, a company raised from the three Hamptons marched to Saratoga, to prevent any possibility of renewing the Burgoyne campaign of four years before. This was during the southern campaign against Cornwallis. It is no doubt the case that during the remaining two years of the struggle that culminated in the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, Westhampton was still represented. And so through this whole contest the people responded to every call for men.

Though the calls followed each other very closely, in one instance less than a month intervening, yet it does not appear that a draft was made. The men were procured by volunteering, or perhaps in a few instances by hiring, to fill the quota. Orders came from time to time to the towns to provide supplies for the army,—that is, so many pounds of beef, so many blankets, shoes, and stockings. Committees were appointed to visit every house; they decided whether the house should furnish one, two, or more blankets, or so much beef, etc. There could be little delay: the owner immediately produced them, and took his pay in Continental paper; or, if the owner preferred, he could pay so much money and save his property. The town was to provide each soldier with a firearm and bayonet,—or instead of a bayonet, a tomahawk or hatchet,—a cartouch-box, knapsack, and blanket. Tories were not found in Westhampton, except, it is said, in a single instance, and the place was speedily made too hot for him.

SHAYS' REBELLION.

Westhampton seems to have been more free from the influences attending that outbreak than any of the surrounding towns.

If the people felt the pressure of the hard times, as they must have done, they yet deemed that the only safe way for a redress of grievances and for relief was by peaceful means. It is not known that any of the citizens of this town shared in the insurgent movements or were favorable to them. So noted was the town at that time in this respect that when the Shays' men seized that staunch old patriot and firm "government man," Capt. Kirkland, of Norwich, they were afraid to take him through Westhampton for fear he would be rescued by the citizens.

The State convention which ratified the Federal Constitution of 1788 was an important body, and the debates were able and earnest. The Constitution had strong opposition. The delegate from Westhampton, Major Aaron Fisher, was one of its friends, and it was approved by 19 majority. As long as he lived Mr. Fisher enjoyed the proud satisfaction of having voted in the affirmative.

OFFICIAL ACTION DURING THE CIVIL WAR, 1861-65.

1861.—There was no action by the town in its corporate capacity during this year.

1862.—The first meeting to consider war matters was held August 1st, at which it was voted to pay a bounty of seventy-five dollars each for nine months' volunteers. October 4th, the treasurer was directed "to pay back to the several collectors all moneys paid in by them as bounty-money for the town's first quota of the three hundred thousand men, and that the town treasurer be directed to borrow six hundred dollars to pay equally to each of the six volunteers.

April 25, 1863.—The town voted to raise seventeen hundred and fifty dollars for the payment of bounties to volunteers.

July 22, 1864.—It was voted to refund to each man who has paid commutation or furnished a substitute, or who may pay it under the last two calls of the President for men, one hundred and twenty dollars. It was further voted to provide for the future by borrowing $1500 "to aid, when needed, to procure volunteers to fill the quota of the town under any future call of the President by paying a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars, the same amount to be paid to each person who pays commutation or provides a substitute."

May 9, 1865.—Voted, to pay three hundred dollars to each drafted man who in 1864 paid commutation-money or furnished a substitute; also to assess this year $1200, and the remainder in the two succeeding years, to pay money borrowed on account of the war. The treasurer was authorized to borrow money in advance of the levy by tax.

Westhampton furnished 68 men for the war, which was a surplus of four over and above all demands. One was a commissioned officer. The whole amount of aid paid solely by the town was $9454.50. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $298,404, and the population of the town 608. Aid to families under the provision of the State law 1861, $81.60; 1862, $561.63; 1863, $912.93; 1864, $514.75; 1865, $270.92. Total, $2341.99.

The soldiers' list hereto annexed is presumed to include the name of every resident of the town who entered the army. Substitutes and recruits hired abroad are omitted. The list is based upon the reports of the adjutant-general and the records in the town clerk's office.

Edwin C. Bissell, capt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Charles S. Marsh, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Horace C. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Abner P. Bridgman, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Feb. 26, 1863, for disability, at Baton Rouge.
George Burt, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
George A. Chilton, enl. Feb. 29, 1864, 37th Inf., Co. A; disch. July 18, 1865.
Frederick F. Jessimine, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 22, 1863; wounded at Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864; died the 6th; buried there.
Nelson T. Knight, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; died Oct. 3, 1862, at Washington, N. C.
Hugh B. Laidley, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
Hiram J. Von Steenburgh, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 22, 1863; disch. June 27, 1865.
Wm. A. Bartlett, enl. Aug. 8, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; trans. Dec. 15, 1863, to Vet. Res. Corps; disch. April 15, 1864, for disability.
Justin E. Janes, enl. Aug. 8, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. March 29, 1863, for disability.
Sumner L. Niles, enl. Aug. 8, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 21, 1865, for wounds.

Jonathan M. Phelps, enl. Feb. 29, 1864, 37th Inf., Co. D; died April 3, 1864, at Washington, D. C., of measles; buried in Westhampton.
Francis H. Wright, enl. Aug. 8, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; died Feb. 19, 1863, at Falmouth, Va., of typhoid fever; buried there.
Anthony F. Tufts, enl. Jan. 30, 1862, 15th Inf., Co. F; disch. March 19, 1863, for disability.
John P. Conway, enl. Aug. 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. C; disch. Aug. 30, 1864.
Andrew J. Shaw, corp., enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. April 13, 1863, for disability; had been a rebel prisoner; well-nigh starved to death at Andersonville.
Horace F. Clapp, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Michael Connery, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Sylvester Davis, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Wm. I. Edwards, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
George W. Snyder, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died May 9, 1863, at Berwick City, La., of fever.
Henry Sullivan, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Wm. H. Tufts, enl. Aug. 26, 1861, 20th Inf., Co. D; disch. for disab., March 31, 1863.
Samuel P. Janes, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Oct. 8, 1864; was in the signal corps a portion of the time.

Daniel F. Knight, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 27, 1865, having re-enlisted.
Edward Reed, enl. Sept. 27, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enlisted; disch. June 27, 1865.
Henry H. Clark, enl. Aug. 19, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; lost in the battle of the Wilderness; known to have been wounded; undoubtedly died on the battle-field.
Caleb F. Tufts, enl. Jan. 21, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. H; disch. June 18, 1862, for disability.
Wm. J. Pittsinger, enl. Feb. 4, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. I; disch. June 20, 1862, for disability; died on the road home at New York, Sept. 9, 1862; buried in Westhampton.
Edward W. Hooker, sergt., enl. Aug. 8, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. C; pro. to 2d lieutenant. May 24, 1865; disch. June 21, 1865.
Augustine G. Janes, enl. Aug. 16, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; disch. March 10, 1863, for disability; died at Philadelphia on the way home; body brought to Westhampton for burial.
Oliver K. Hooker, enl. Aug. 18, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; killed May 12, 1864, in Virginia.
Charles Loud, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Henry Strong, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; died in the service, and brought to Westhampton for burial.
Wm. M. Kingsley, enl. 37th Inf.; killed in battle.
Charles L. Wright, enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

Photo. by Hardie & Schader.

Ansel Clapp

ANSEL CLAPP is a direct descendant of Roger Clapp, who was born in Devonshire, England, April 6, 1609; and, coming to this country, landed at Nantucket Beach, May 30, 1630. Four years later he married Joanna Ford, who arrived in this country in the same ship, the "Mary and John."

Ansel Clapp is the sixth generation from Roger; Preserved was of the second, Samuel of the third, Seth of the fourth, and Seth of the fifth. Ansel was born in Northampton, Mass., Feb. 13, 1788. Opportunities for education in those days were meagre, but he made good use of his time in attending the common schools.

In the thirty-first year of his age he married Eunice, the only daughter of Reuben Wright, who was one of the first to erect the standard of home in the wilds of Northampton. During the same year Reuben Wright's son, Burt, having entered the ministry, Ansel Clapp removed to his father-in-law's premises in Westhampton, and succeeded in the active management of the farm upon which he passed the balance of his life. His life was not an eventful one as the world counts it. He was first a Democrat, subsequently an Abolitionist, and later a Republican. He was a pronounced Abolitionist, and lived to see the institution of American slavery destroyed.

He became an advocate of temperance principles quite early in life. When he was but eight years old he attended the raising of a barn, and, as was the custom in those days, the flip-iron was kept in pretty constant use in the mixture of hot toddy, which was thought to be necessary upon such occasions. The boys drained the sweet from the bottom of the cup. Ansel loved it so well that he became somewhat intoxicated, and on the following day was so chagrined that he resolved to never again touch the intoxicating cup; a resolution that he strictly adhered to throughout his life. He was a member of the Congregational Church in Westhampton.

He delighted to be much in society. He always looked upon the bright side, and would extract a large amount of sweet where another would only find bitter. He loved to make others happy. He was benevolent, and, being economical, frugal, and industrious, always had something to spare for those in need. In temperance, politics, and religion Mrs. Clapp was a true wife and helpmeet; she kept herself well informed upon all subjects before the public, and always interested herself in forwarding the objects she thought were for the best good of all.

Mr. Clapp enjoyed good health during his life, and his death, in his seventy-eighth year, Sept. 11, 1866, was the result of an injury received in the harvest field a few weeks before. His wife survived him ten years, dying Sept. 30, 1876, aged seventy-nine.

They had two sons and two daughters. The first son, Luther, entered the ministry and became the pastor of a Congregational Church in Wannatosa, Wis. He married Harriet Priscilla Stedman, of Chicopee. Their children are five daughters and one son,—Harriet, Priscilla, Emma Louisa, Mary Stedman, Wardlow Ansel, and Grace Danforth Wright.

The second son, Reuben Wright Clapp, was united in marriage, Dec. 23, 1852, to Susan T., daughter of Levi Burt, of Westhampton, and granddaughter of Rev. Enoch Hale, the first minister of Westhampton. To them were born eight children,—Ellen Louise, Laura Hale, George Burt, Lyman Wright, Martha Frances, Edwin Bissell, Susan Maria, and Mary Anna.

The first daughter, Harriet Frances Clapp, is unmarried. The second daughter, Sophia, is the wife of Alfred D. Montague, who was the son of David Montague, of Westhampton, and grandson of Peter Montague, who was one of the first settlers in the west part of the town. Their children are Francis Clapp, Edward Hooker, Lovisa Janes, Alfred Dwight, and Harriet Frances.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Jesse Lyman

Richard Lyman, the ancestor of Jesse, was born, in 1580, in High Ongar, England. He emigrated to this country in 1631, and settled in Roxbury, Mass., where he was a member of the church of Rev. John Eliot. His wife was Sarah Osborne. In 1635 he removed through the woods with others to Hartford, Conn., and his name, with ninety-nine other first settlers of Hartford, is inscribed on a monument in an ancient cemetery in that place. He died in 1640.

Lieut. John Lyman, son of Richard, was born in England, in September, 1623, and died Aug. 20, 1690.

He was in command of the Northampton soldiers in the famous Falls fight, above Deerfield, May 18, 1676. His wife was Dorcas Plum, of Branford, Conn. Their oldest son, Lieut. John Lyman, was born in 1661; married Mindwell Pomeroy in 1687, and died in 1740. Their first son was Lieut. John Lyman, who married Abigail Mosely. Their first son was Zadoc Lyman, who married Sarah Clark. They lived at South Farms, in Northampton, afterward Hockanum, Hadley. Their second son was Capt. Azariah Lyman, who married Jemima Kingsley, daughter of Samuel Kingsley, of Southampton. In the year 1774 they removed to Westhampton, where their fourth son, Jesse Lyman, whose portrait appears with this sketch, was born, March 9, 1789, he being of the seventh generation.

Jesse Lyman was essentially a self-made man. His education for his day was advanced. He possessed excellent judgment, and was well versed in matters pertaining to the law, and frequently acted as referee in the settlement of disputes in his own and neighboring towns. He thus became well known, and made many friends. He was prompt in his dealings with men. His word was always strictly kept; in this respect he was scrupulously particular. When he was twenty-one years old he was selected to fill public positions, being a justice of the peace for many years, and twice elected to the Legislature, in 1834 and 1836.

Mr. Lyman was a member of the Congregational Church of Westhampton, but did not profess to be a Christian until in after life. He died Feb. 9, 1874. Politically he was first a Whig, and for a time a Democrat, but upon the formation of the Republican party joined its ranks.

Jesse Lyman married Lucy Kingsley. Their surviving son is William Eustis Lyman, who now lives on the old homestead where his father was born and died. William E. Lyman married Mary E. Orcutt, daughter of Dr. Orcutt, of Westhampton, and their surviving children are Myra Elma, Annie Field, and William Hervey Lyman.

S O U T H A M P T O N .

GEOGRAPHICAL.

SOUTHAMPTON is situated southwest of the county-seat, and distant from it about eight miles. It is bounded north by Westhampton and Easthampton, east by Easthampton and Hampden County, south by Hampden County, west by Hampden County and Huntington.

In the petition of the settlers for incorporation, under date of July 8, 1741, the territory is spoken of as consisting of 14,000 acres. In the tables published with the census of 1875 the farm acreage is stated at 17,128 acres.

The territory of Southampton is a part of the original purchase from the Non-o-tuck Indians, and the title is traced back direct to that treaty. The town also includes the "Additional Grant," so called, which was south of the original Northampton tract. The first proprietors of Northampton owned the lands now included in Southampton. It was their heirs or assigns who constituted the body of proprietors that, in 1730, proceeded to divide up and settle the "new precinct."

NATURAL FEATURES.

Southampton is fully embraced within the system of the Manhan River and its tributaries. The southwestern branch, rising in Huntington and Westhampton, flows southerly through the western part of Southampton, receiving several tributaries; then, extending into Hampden County, it makes a sharp angle in its course and flows northeasterly through Southampton, a little east of the centre, to the Easthampton line. There it forms the boundary line for a short distance, and then unites with the north branch, that, rising in Westhampton, sweeps across the corner of Northampton at Loudville, and is also the boundary line for some distance between Southampton and Easthampton.

Among the smaller streams may be mentioned Alder Meadow Brook, Red Brook, Moore Brook, Triple Brook.

The town has considerable variety in its surface, including hilly and even mountainous tracts, as well as a large area of rolling country and rich alluvial lands. It is one of the finest agricultural towns in the county, comprising a large proportion of tillable land.

Geologically, the town has some interesting features. The lead-bearing strata in the north have attracted the attention of miners and capitalists at various times for 200 years. Geologists have been much interested in the Southampton "Adit." This is an artificial excavation of 900 feet in length, perforating the solid rock, and large enough to admit a boat with several persons. There are several considerable elevations in the town; the most important is Pomeroy's Mountain. In the southwest is Wolf Hill, and in the southeast is Whiteloofe Hill.

The view from some points in the town is very fine. From the higher lands above the village the west front of Mount Tom and the adjacent country form a landscape of great attraction.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

The early settlement of Southampton is shown by the following extracts from the old proprietors' book, still preserved in the office of the town clerk. It opens with the following entry:

At a legal Proprietors' meeting, the second Monday in March, the tenth day Anno Domini 1730, and continued by adjournment from the 19th day of January last past, a motion was made for the dividing the land over Manhan, upon the west side of the County road. Then the question was put whether the proprietors would divide the land, beginning up the hill over Manhan, upon the west side of the County road, and so extend beyond "Whiteloofe brook" so far as our old boundaries, in such form and manner as to be suitable, together with the additional grant that now belongs to the town, to make a precinct or town; and the division to be made to and amongst the original or ancient proprietors, their heirs or assigns, or any that hold by purchase under the ancient or original proprietors or their heirs. Voted affirmatively.

Then a motion was made to make choice of a committee to form the matter for the proprietors, and then the proprietors made choice of Col. John Stoddard, Ebenezer Pomeroy, Deacon John Clark, Mr. Joseph Hawley, and Ensign Ebenezer Parsons to be a committee to project the manner and form of the Division of said land in the best manner, as they should think most likely to bring forward a speedy settlement; and they to make report of their doings to the next proprietors' meeting, in order to their allowance or approbation. Voted affirmatively.

Then Ebenezer Pomeroy was chosen Proprietors' Clerk. Then the manner of calling another proprietors' meeting was voted as followeth, viz., that when the aforesaid Committee have prepared the projection with respect to the division of the land, as aforesaid, that they give notice unto the Proprietors' Clerk that he should post up a notification in a public place, seven days before said meeting, setting forth the articles thereof; he doing the same, that should be a sufficient warning or notification for said proprietors' meeting. Voted affirmatively.

Then the proprietors did desire of the selectmen that there be a town-meeting at the same time with the proprietors' meeting, to act their pleasure upon and with respect to that land on this side Webb's Rock, adjoining to the aforesaid land. Then the proprietors did adjourn the said meeting until 2 o'clock this day afternoon.

Attest: EBENEZER POMEROY, Moderator.

Afternoon: then a motion was made, agreeable to that which was in the warrant, viz., whether the proprietors would vote a confirmation of those three divisions heretofore made by the Proprietors, and recorded in the town-book of records,—and it passed in the negative.

Attest: EBENEZER POMEROY, Moderator.

At a legal meeting of the Proprietors of the Common and undivided land within the township of Northampton, May 25, 1730, Committee reported "that there shall be laid out to thirty of the proprietors who shall undertake to bring forward a speedy settlement on said land ninety acres each, at the place hereafter mentioned, as part of their proportion of said land, provided that ninety acres does not exceed any of said thirty's part; and in case any one should not be entitled to as much as that, then to lay out to such person the whole of the amount due to such proprietor."

The general method of laying out the land was to give to each man a house-lot of 20 acres either on Pomeroy's little mountain or on town-plot hill, 10 acres of Pine Plain either in Davises Plain or in the adjoining Plain which lieth southwardly of Pomeroy's little mountain, and 60 acres more to each to complete his 90 acres in the best of the land either on Pomeroy's little mountain, town-plot hill, or wolf hill, or in the land adjoining said hills; and for a minister the same quantity was to be set apart in each of the divisions stated as to each of the 30 settlers. At the same meeting it was voted that Ebenezer Corse might have his share laid out near to his house; and that Samuel Pomeroy and Eldad Pomeroy may have their rights as near to their meadows as may conveniently be.

May 25, 1730.—At a proprietors' meeting it was voted: 1st. That each settler should be required to till and fence five acres before next fall twelve months.

2d. Each settler was to build and cover a house of at least one room, within two years from the above date, either on Pomeroy's Mountain or on the town-plot hill, so called.

3d. That each settler should remove there with his family within two years, and live there at least two years.

4th. That each settler does so manage and improve his land that the Committee shall be satisfied he will fulfill the conditions in good faith.

The surveying was done in the months of May and June, 1730, by Capt. Dwight, John Alvord, Ebenezer Kingsley, Jonathan Strong, and Stephen Wright. The proprietors' clerk in the record says, "June 2d, Lieut. Hawley and myself went out to them in the woods to give directions."

"June 5th, Col. Stoddard and Deacon Clark went out in the same desire;" and "June 8th all the committee went out to read conditions and to admit each to draught."

The drawing took place on this last day named, June 8, 1730.

The names of 30 proprietors seem to have been placed in one box, and 30 numbers of home-lots in another, and 30 numbers of 10-acre lots in a third. A name was drawn, and a number from each division of lots. In two or three instances it is somewhat uncertain from the record what number should stand against a particular name. There seem to have been 31 numbered lots in each division, and this ought to be so if they laid out 30 for the proprietors and 1 for the minister; but the ministerial lot is not stated in the following list, which we copy from the old proprietors' book:

Drawing Home-lots, June 8, 1730.

Names.	Home-lots.	Ten-acre lots.
1. Judah Hutchinson	27	9
2. Ebenezer Miller	28	22
3. Thomas Porter	9	12
4. Nathaniel Searl	2	3
5. Noah Sheldon	29	27
6. Jonathan Bascom	22	15
7. Josiah of Nehemiah Strong	21	14
8. Nathan Lyman	12	26
9. Stephen Root	31	4
10. Elias Root	3	5
11. Noah Strong	16	8
12. Noah Clark	25	1
13. Eleazar Hannum	1	2
14. Gideon Parsons	5	17
15. Ebenezer Kingsley	8	18
16. John Alvord	6	11
17. Phineas King	4	29
18. David Bartlett	3	24
19. Jonathan Strong	10	25
20. Joseph Wright	23	31
21. Stephen Wright	20	30*
22. Robert Danks	14	6
23. Dea. Clark	24	28
24. Ebenezer Sheldon	15	23
25. Waitstill Strong	19	21
26. Jonath. Parsons	13	10
27. Preserved Wright	26	20
28. Aaron Clark	11	13
29. Jonathan Strong	17	19
30. Jonathan Miller	18	16

March 12, 1731.—The Committee, viz., Col. Stoddard, Dea. Clark, and Ebenezer Pomeroy, took into consideration the fact that David Bartlett and Jonathan Miller would not go; also Ebenezer Miller, Noah Strong, Noah Clark, and Jonathan Parsons. They admitted the following in their places: Nathaniel Clark, Joseph Clark, John Wait, Roger Clapp, Nathaniel Phelps, Jonathan Phelps.

March 15, 1732.—Liberty was given to four men, viz., Dea. Clark, Joseph Wright, Ebenezer Sheldon, and Jonathan Strong, to set up a saw-mill, either upon the great brook at the Falls, or below it, upon Manhan River, at their election, upon condition they shall prepare said mill for sawing before next winter. And the Committee did also agree and consider to let them have such a quantity of land as they should judge convenient, at the place of and about said mill, as a part of their said proportion in said land.

Twenty years later, Oct. 10, 1752, another drawing took place of lots in the "additional grant." At this time the proprietors appointed three assessors: Deacon Cook, Noah Clark, and Capt. John Hunt; Noah Clark, Collector, and John Hunt, Treasurer.

The arrangements for settling the south part of Northampton were thus made in 1730. The date of actual settlement is next to be considered. In the proprietors' proceedings, quoted above, it will be noticed that the share of Ebenezer Corse was permitted to be laid out near his house. This would indicate that he was already settled May 25, 1730. His home was the present Theron Pomeroy place, Easthampton. It was further voted that Samuel Pomeroy and Eldad Pomeroy might have their shares laid out as near to their meadows as might conveniently be. This shows that they were already settled. This is further sustained by tradition, and their ownership for many years before is proved by a petition which they made in 1742 to the General Court, desiring to be exempted from taxation for the support of the new precinct lately formed by "about thirty families at the southwest corner of the town bounds." The Pomeroyes belonged to the old town as they considered, and did not desire to be a part of the new. They state that they had improved their lands and paid taxes for them forty or fifty years. This would indicate the cultivation of "Pomeroy's meadows" as early as 1700. They were evidently the first pioneers upon the territory of Southampton, though not a part of the company of proprietors who made the general settlement. As the descendants or representatives of the original proprietors of Northampton they were entitled to share in the newly-divided territory, and their rights were accorded by the vote above mentioned, but neither they nor Ebenezer Corse participated in the drawing of home-lots or Pine Plain lots.

After the drawing of June 8, 1730, several of the proprietors came out to their lots, made some improvements, and cleared small tracts of land, leaving their families, however, in Northampton. This was probably about all that was done in 1730 and 1731. Ebenezer Corse and the Pomeroyes are counted as among the first settlers of Easthampton.

"In 1732, Judah Hutchinson and Thomas Porter came to the precinct and erected houses. In May, 1733, fourteen settlers joined them. These were Deacon John Clark, Joseph Clark, Samuel Danks, Phineas King, Ebenezer Kingsley, Nathan Lyman, Elias Root, Stephen Root, Nathaniel Searl, Ezra Strong, Ichabod Strong, Deacon Waitstill Strong, John Wait, Moses Wright.

"During three or four of the succeeding years fourteen additional settlers united with the little plantation. Their names were Jonathan Bascom, Samuel Burt, Roger Clapp, Aaron Clark, Elisha Clark, Jonathan Clark, Ebenezer French, Eleazar Hannum, Elias Lyman, John Miller, Noah Pixley, Israel Sheldon, Noah Sheldon, and Stephen Sheldon."

The town of Northampton voted, Dec. 22, 1732, "to lay out a highway over the branch of Manhan River at or near Pomeroy's meadow, or some other suitable and convenient place, so as to accommodate the new settlement," and appointed Ensign John Baker and Moses Lyman a committee for that purpose. Among the petitioners for incorporation as a precinct, July 8, 1741, were some names not mentioned above: Ebenezer Pomeroy, Joseph King, Selah Clark, Aaron Root, Elias Lyman, Jonathan Miller, Nathaniel Searl, Jr., Charles Phelps.

The above statement as to the order of time in which the early families actually located here is the traditional one. But there seems to be no proof, either in the old proprietors' book or other documents of the town clerk's office, that Thomas Porter and Judah Hutchinson were actually the first. There is another theory, which is undoubtedly entitled to some consideration. In the cemetery may be seen a stone, in good preservation, standing on the left of the main avenue, and only a short distance west of the soldiers' monument, upon which is the following inscription:

"In memory of Ensign Ebenezer Kingsley and Mrs. Mary, his wife.

"Ensign Ebenezer died March 21st, 1783, in the 79th year of his age. Mrs. Mary Kingsley died Feb. 8th, 1781, in the 74th year of her age.

"THEY WERE THE FIRST SETTLERS IN SOUTHAMPTON."

The style of the inscription, the kind of stone, and its general appearance, indicate that it was erected not long after the latest death, 1783. This testimony is therefore itself ninety-six years old, or nearly that, and was recorded when the town was only fifty years old, and when the facts of settlement must have been known. The family would not have permitted that inscription if they had not supposed it to be true; and if it were not true, so much public conversation would have arisen over it that some traces of that would have almost necessarily come down to the present time in family traditions.

Ebenezer Kingsley's "house" is mentioned as early as Feb. 25, 1734,—the first time the word house is used in the proprietors' records. He was then undoubtedly here the year before, 1733. Then, in "summing up," we need to rely upon this gravestone testimony only to carry the date of his settlement twelve or fifteen months still farther back, and the "direct examination" is closed. We leave this venerable monumental witness to be "cross-examined" by those who suppose Porter and Hutchinson were the first settlers. The record of births, not usually stating the place, is not conclusive, but we add that Ebenezer Kingsley, Jr., was born Feb. 28, 1728, and Chloe Aug. 17, 1731, and John June 30, 1734; and these births are entered in the Southampton records.

* Probably.

We add a few remarks upon the pioneer families, necessarily brief for want of space in a volume devoted to three counties.

Location of the Early Settlers, 1732 to 1735, from Northampton.—Jonathan Bascom's homestead was the present place of Elam Hitchcock, south of the Methodist church, where he built a log cabin. Mr. Bascom's house was surrounded with palisades for defense during some of the Indian alarms. He died April 20, 1780, aged seventy-four. His wife died April 4, 1789, aged eighty-nine. His children were Jonathan, Elisha, and Rachel. Elisha was a lieutenant of the militia; he enlisted in the Revolutionary army, and lost his life at Fort Ticonderoga. The Sheldon K. Bascom house is one of the three oldest houses in town, and is now standing between the village and the depot. The latter may have been the fortified house.

Judah Hutchinson was a tailor, and his house stood a few rods east from that now owned by Joel T. Clapp. It is said that his house and that of Thomas Porter were the first erected in town.

Thomas Porter. A part of the house which he erected is the southwest corner room of the present house of George K. Edwards. His homestead was bought by Deacon Samuel Edwards, Sr., and Mr. Porter removed to a place a little south of the old Pomeroy tavern, on the road from Northampton to Westfield. Jehial Porter, of somewhat later years, was a son of this pioneer. The widow of the late Col. Elisha Edwards now resides in this ancient dwelling-house. From her many valuable items have been obtained for this history. Five generations of the Edwards families have been born in the house.

Deacon Samuel Edwards, homestead as above stated, came to Southampton in 1753. Children: Hannah (Mrs. Stephen Lyman), Southampton; Catherine (Mrs. Lemuel Coleman), Southampton; Samuel, who settled in Westhampton; Luther and Elisha, in Southampton; Mercy and Asenath, died young. In this old homestead are some venerable relics,—a rifle carried by Deacon Samuel in the old French war, by Deacon Elisha in the Revolution, and by Col. Elisha in 1812; the teacher's chair of Deacon Samuel, and in which his son, Deacon Elisha, died, and his grandson, Col. Elisha.

Eldad Pomeroy. "Lyman's History of Easthampton," in 1866, states "that Eldad Pomeroy and Samuel established themselves about 1732 near where Deacon Eleazer W. Hannum now resides." Other writers, however, make their settlement nearly ten years earlier.

Samuel Coleman, a Revolutionary soldier, was at the battle of Ticonderoga. His homestead was the present place of, and the first house was very near to the present house of, Zeno E. Coleman, his grandson. Children: Sarah (Mrs. Clark Searl), Southampton; Zeno, Southampton; Thaddeus, Southampton; Eliphalet, Chester; Eleazer, Southampton; Catherine (Mrs. Ira Searl), Southampton; Phoebe (Mrs. Quartus Hannum, and after his death Mrs. Josiah Pomeroy); Benoni, Southampton; and Mercy, who died young.

Nathaniel Searl, from Northampton, homestead a number of rods north of the present house of George W. Foley, on the same side of the road. His house was the place of board for the ministers who preached on probation, and he also entertained the council at the time of Mr. Judd's ordination. He had more conveniences for such purposes than other settlers, having a house with two rooms and only nine sons. The cellar is still visible. He is said to have been the richest man in Southampton.

Israel Sheldon, from Northampton, homestead where Abner Sheldon now resides. Two sons, Paul and Silas, settled in Southampton; Daughters: Naomi (Mrs. Deacon Nash, of Williamsburg), Eglah (Mrs. Jonathan Warner, Williamsburg), Lucy (Mrs. Jonathan Bascom, Southampton). Children by second marriage: Israel, Southampton; Abner, Southampton; Pliny, Southampton; Sarah (Mrs. Luther Edwards, Sr.).

Noah Sheldon, brother of Israel, homestead thirty or forty rods north of that of the former Ralph Edwards; buildings gone. They were near the present residence of Albert Root.

Stephen Sheldon, brother of Israel and Noah, homestead where his grandson Rodolphus Sheldon afterward lived, and where Augustine Munson now resides. Ezra Strong, from Northampton, homestead near the place afterward owned by Israel Sheldon, and nearly opposite to the present house of B. F. Williams; he died in 1748, and his widow with the children removed back to Northampton; his widow was afterward the second wife of Israel Sheldon. Ichabod Strong, from Northampton; homestead was nearly half a mile south of the present house of Charles B. Lyman. Deacon Waitstill Strong, from Northampton, homestead a few rods east of the house of the former Jonathan Judd, Esq., which is the present place of Harris Nimocks, east of the village; he was a grandson of Elder John Strong, of Northampton. Nathan Lyman, from Northampton, homestead where Lucius Hayden now resides; John Lyman, a nephew, came from Northfield and lived with him; John Lyman's children were Mrs. Capt. Joel Burt, Westhampton; Mrs. Stephen Wright, Easthampton; Achsah, unmarried. Sons: Nathan, died young from an injury; John, of Southampton, father of Mrs. Elisha Edwards; Asa, Southampton, on the old homestead. Samuel Burt, from Northampton, homestead where Stephen E. Searl now lives; Deacon Samuel Burt was the father of the three ministers found in the list of graduates of the Burt family.

Roger Clapp, from Northampton, homestead where Nathan H. Lyman now resides. Aaron Clark, from Northampton, homestead where George Hyde now resides. Elisha Clark, from Northampton, homestead a few rods west of the house where Martin P. Clapp now lives; the barn in which Elisha Clark was killed by the Indians stood near; the chimney that marked this old home of Mr. Clark was standing till within a few years.

Deacon John Clark, from Northampton, homestead where Arthur W. Lyman now lives; Deacon John was a brother of Aaron and Elisha above mentioned; the father of Deacon John (Deacon John, of Northampton) gave to the Southampton church a silver goblet, which (unfortunately remodeled into modern style) is now in use in the communion service.

Jonathan Clark, from Northampton, homestead opposite to the present place of Solomon A. Wolcott. Joseph Clark, from Northampton, homestead on Rattle Hill, where Samuel Pinch afterward lived; his wife dying soon after he came here, he returned to Northampton.

Selah Clark, from Northampton, succeeded to the place of Joseph Clark; Jonathan, Joseph, and Selah were brothers, and cousins of the first three Clarks mentioned. Samuel Danks, from Northampton, homestead where Moses Danks afterward lived, and later Simeon Lyman; the present place of Thomas Bailey. Ebenezer French, from Northampton; house stood thirty or forty rods north of the house where Roswell W. Marshall now lives. Eleazer Hannum, from Northampton, homestead where Gilbert Bascom now lives. Phineas King, from Northampton, resided in a house which stood between the street and the house built by Lemon Gridley, afterward owned by Heman Searl; the present place of Noah H. Clark was the Phineas King house. Ebenezer Kingsley, from Northampton, resided near the house which was occupied for many years by Rev. Mr. Gould. The place is opposite the burying-ground, and now owned by Charles H. Frary. As shown elsewhere, this is very probably the point of first settlement by the colony formed among the proprietors.

Elias Lyman, from Northampton, lived where his grandsons, Joel and Isaac, afterward resided, a mile and a half west of the village. John Miller, from Northampton; house was near where Royal Burt afterward lived. Noah Pixley, from Northampton, lived where Rainsford Root afterward did. The place where he was killed by the Indians is elsewhere identified. He was some distance from the homestead here stated. Elias Root, from Northampton; homestead was opposite the present place of Lyman C. Tiffany. Stephen Root was a brother, and resided with Elias, returning soon to Northampton. John Wait, from Northampton; homestead known for so many years afterward as the Wait farm. Moses Wright, from Northampton, homestead a few rods south of where Whitney Loomis now lives; he died unmarried in 1748.

Rev. Jonathan Judd. Children: Silence (Mrs. Samuel Edwards, Westhampton); Sarah (Mrs. Timothy Clark, Southampton); Clarissa (Mrs. Luther Edwards, Southampton); Jonathan, who settled in Southampton, and was the long-time merchant; Sylvester, who settled in Westhampton, and was the father of the well-known historian of the same name. Jonathan Judd was a graduate, a "gentleman of the old school," and known as Sir Judd; never married. He opened a store in his father's house, the present residence of Col. E. A. Edwards.

PHYSICIANS—LAWYERS.

Dr. Woodbridge was the first physician, and came here by formal invitation of the town in 1775. He was equal to the trust reposed in him; was a skillful and conscientious practitioner. His wife was Mindwell Strong, of Northampton. His children were Mrs. Gould, Rev. Dr. John Woodbridge, and Rev. Sylvester Woodbridge. Dr. Woodbridge spent a long life in Southampton, and accumulated a handsome property as the result of his busy life-work. Indeed, all the physicians who remained any length of time in Southampton are said to have been pecuniarily successful.

When Dr. Woodbridge was advanced in years, Dr. Blair came to the town and commenced practice. He was the first to practice inoculation, and met with much opposition. Esquire Birge was the first person operated upon. Dr. Blair remained but three or four years. When he left he introduced Bela P. Jones as the next physician. This was about 1809. He practiced about thirty years. He died in Hudson, Mich., in 1865.

During Dr. Jones' practice Dr. Jehial Abbott was in Southampton for two or three years. He was considered a superior physician. He removed to Westfield, and remained there till he died in a good old age. Dr. Jones sold out in 1838 to Dr. Artemas Bell, who did good service for thirty years. He was succeeded by Dr. S. E. Thayer, who, after seven years, sold out to Dr. George W. Wood. The latter was a promising young physician, and devoted himself with zeal to his profession. He died in five months of diphtheria, a martyr to his professional zeal and to his devoted care of a family he was attending in that fearful disease. He was succeeded by Dr. H. P. Atherton, the present physician.

To this notice should be added the name of Dr. Josiah H. Gridley, a native of the town, who lived and died here, and had quite an extensive practice in the town and vicinity. He was of the botanic or eclectic school, and practiced thirty-five years.

As to lawyers, though Southampton has furnished many for other places, few have made any attempt to practice at home. Charles Bates practiced for a time, but found so little litigation that he resorted to other labors. Several citizens not educated directly for the legal profession have given attention to matters before the courts from time to time.

MERCHANTS.

Jonathan Judd first commenced trade at his father's house, just how early is not ascertained. He then established himself where Orrin Moore now lives, and continued until 1816 or 1818. He was succeeded by his nephew, Asa Judd, who traded there perhaps thirty years. He died in 1848, and was succeeded by Jonathan Judd for nineteen years. He built the corner store, and was followed in 1862 by A. G. Judd, the present proprietor. This store is, therefore, the regular successor of the little store first opened more than a hundred years ago in a small room of the present Col. Edwards' house. It was the "Judd store" then; it has been the "Judd store" ever since; it is still the "Judd store."

James K. Sheldon, at present retired from business, kept store fifty-two years where he now lives. He came from Suffield and opened about 1818. E. H. Bell succeeded for six or seven years, and the present proprietor is A. R. Clark.

TAVERNS.

The old tavern of Peres Clapp was the present Hitchcock place, south of the Methodist meeting-house. A tavern was kept a few years in the present house of Noah Clark. The Gamaliel Pomeroy tavern was in the east part of the town, and it was known as the Pomeroy Tavern for a long series of years.

The following are from old files of the Hampshire Gazette: March 9, 1787, Lemuel Pomeroy advertises for the recovery of two mares belonging to him "taken by the rebels from Elias Lyman's tavern 29th of January last." This is an incident of the Shays rebellion.

July 1, 1793, Sylvester Woodbridge, merchant, advertises an extensive assortment of goods, "Satin, Tiffanies, West India rum, Jesuits' Bark, Salt Petre, Snake Balls, etc." He closes with the following: "Incited by motives of Benevolence, he invites all those indebted to him by book or note to make immediate payment, as the day of patience with them will soon expire, when the law will bite—and—sting."

April 21, 1793, David Chapman informs those indebted to him that they must pay up without further notice: "that old excuse—produce is low—is no excuse now; everything bears a high price and demands the cash."

Nov. 18, 1794, Sylvester Woodbridge, besides offering his usual variety of goods, calls on those indebted to pay up, and, "with regret, informs such as neglect this call that one more alarming and expensive awaits them, which, he thinks, it requires no spirit of prophecy to foresee will issue in unfeigned repentance."

Nov. 21, 1798, Sylvester Woodbridge advertises a large number of apple-trees "inoculated with particular fruit."

Oct. 6, 1800, Gashum Pomeroy asks for the arrest of a thief who stole from him fifteen yards check linen, one fur hat, almost new, one pair of striped linen overalls, one pair of small knee-buckles, and a Raizor.

Aug. 26, 1801, Rev. Mr. Gould was ordained colleague pastor to Rev. Mr. Judd.

The several parts were conducted by Rev. Messrs. Atwater, Backus, Lyman, Smith, Williams, and Hale. "The audience behaved with unusual propriety through the whole exercise."

ORGANIZATION.

From the records in the office of the town clerk of Northampton the following items are taken, as throwing light upon a period of more than fifty years preceding the first civil organization of any kind for the present territory of Southampton:

At a legal town-meeting July 27, 1679, upon the consideration of a letter from Mr. Hezekiah Usher and Mr. Wharton recommending Ensign and Robert Lyman to our town about a lead mine within the bounds of our town, the letter being read, and after much discourse and agitation the town did then pass the following vote, viz., that Robert Lyman and any other of the inhabitants of this town, and having common rights in the town, shall have liberty to try and open any place within our bounds, and to make use of any sort of mines or minerals, provided they attend law.

Oct. 16, 1679, the town gave up all their right "in that mine lying about six miles off on the west side of the town to a company, who chose to undertake the work, viz., Wm. Clark, Sr., John Strong, Samuel Davis, Israel Rust, Joseph Parsons, Sr., Robert Lyman, Joseph Hawley, John King, Joseph Parsons, Jr., Preserved Clapp, John Lyman, Sr., Martyn Smith, Samuel Bartlett, Richard Lyman, Medad Pomeroy.*

Jan. 2, 1681, the town granted them 100 acres of land, provided they went forward with the enterprise.

Medad Pomeroy was granted the right to erect a fulling-mill, April 14, 1682.

Jan. 2, 1687, Caleb Pomeroy asked for a piece of land between the branches of the Manhan. Samuel Bartlett and James Wright appointed a committee to view what he desires, and report.

May 10, 1731.—Granted to Joseph Wait five acres of land on the southwardly branch of the Manhan, to be laid out so as to avoid incommencing Samuel and Eldad Pomeroy as much as the committee conveniently can.

Dec. 11, 1732.—Voted Ensign John Baker & Moses Lyman a committee to lay out a highway over the Branch of the Manhan River, at or near Pomeroy's Meadow, or some other suitable and convenient place, so as to accommodate the new settlement.

May, 1737.—The selectmen of Northampton laid out a road; they began at Eldad Pomeroy's path that goeth Southerly to Samuel & Eldad Pomeroy's bound tree, so called, and then they turned westwardly on the said hill till they come to Samuel Pomeroy's path going down the hill from his house; and then going over the brook, and so up the hill along near Caleb Pomeroy's house, still westwardly, till they come to the top of the hill; then, turning something southwardly, down the hill, all in Samuel Pomeroy's land; and then over Manhan River, over the bridge that is now over the river, erected by the new town people, from the foot of the hill to the bridge in Eldad Pomeroy's land, so along where the path now goeth; all to be two rods wide.

The young surveyors now in the schools can retrace this road for a practical example.

Feb. 10, 1742.—Voted a bridge over the Manhan, near Bartlett's mill, and the town appointed Waitstill Strong and Joseph Wright, Jr., Capt. Parsons, Com.

March 7, 1743.—5000 acres of land granted the new precinct "on the back side of White Loaf Hill," 300 of it for the support of the gospel.

May 7, 1750.—Northampton voted a school-master to the second precinct.

The new settlement was a part of Northampton for several years. It became known and distinguished as the "Second Precinct." In the warrant for the Northampton town-meeting of Sept. 14, 1739, the clause was inserted:

"To see whether the town would consent to setting off the new town, so-called, by the bounds following, viz.: beginning on the south side of Manhan River a little above Bartlett's house, and so bounded easterly upon the county road till it extends southwardly unto the dividing-line between Northampton and Westfield, and then bounded westwardly upon land belonging to the province, and bounded northwardly upon the Long or West Division, so-called," and the record of the meeting held states the action thereon as follows: "All which land, and the inhabitants as before described, the town voted should be set off a distinct and separate precinct, that so by the consent of the General Court they might be under a capacity to carry on the worship of God among themselves."

The authority of the General Court was not, however, sought until nearly two years later.

The petition under date of July 8, 1741, states "that your petitioners dwell on a certain tract or parcel of land in the township of Northampton, in the county of Hampshire, intended for a precinct, the centre of which is about eight miles from Northampton meeting-house;" that "the town have given their consent;" that "the proprietors are willing that a tax of sixpence per acre should be laid on the whole of their tract (being about 1400 acres) to enable us to defray some necessary public charges that may arise among us."

The petitioners close with this clause:

"We therefore most humbly move that your Excellency and honours would be pleased to set us off to be a Precinct with the usual privileges, and order the aforesaid tax to be levied, that we may be enabled to build a meeting-house, settle a minister, and have the worship of God among ourselves; and your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray."

It will be noticed how clearly the great object was "to settle a minister and have the worship of God" established among them. All questions of civil polity, all business interests, were subordinate to this. The necessary act was passed July 17, 1741, by the House of Representatives, and was attested by J. Hobson, speaker. It was concurred in by the Senate, July 18th, and signed by I. Willard, secretary. It received the executive approval July 23d. This latter date is regarded as the birthday of the town of Southampton, and its hundredth anniversary, July 23, 1841, was celebrated with great enthusiasm. An address was delivered by Prof. B. B. Edwards, of Andover Seminary, a native of the town. The committee of arrangements consisted of Rev. Morris E. White, Elisha Edwards, Asahel Birge, Asahel Chapman, and Stephen Strong.

The 44th Psalm was sung to the tune of Mear. Mrs. L. H. Sigourney contributed a poem, and Daniel W. Chapman, of Rochester, N. Y., also sent an ode.

* These were the miners of two hundred years ago.

At the ample entertainment which followed, every article of food is said to have been the product of the town itself.

Thirty-eight years of a second century have passed away, and some of the children now living in Southampton may very likely share in the second centennial, 1941.

We make the following extracts from the early precinct records:

Precinct Proceedings.

September 21, Anno Domini 1741.—At the first meeting of the Freeholders and other inhabitants qualified, according to law, to vote in precinct affairs, assembled at the house of Phineas King, in the second Precinct, in Northampton, to choose Precinct officers, Voted that Ebenezer Kingsley should be the moderator of said meeting. Voted that Phineas King should be the precinct clerk.

Voted that Waitstill Strong, Ebenezer French, and Aaron Clark should be assessors for the present year. Voted that Stephen Sheldon should be collector, for the ensuing year. Voted that Nathaniel Searl, John Wait, and Phineas King should be a committee to appoint meetings for the year ensuing. Voted that John Clark, Ebenezer Kingsley, & Phineas King should be a committee to seek out some meet person to preach the gospel to us.

PHINEAS KING, Precinct Clerk.

The above votes have been examined, and are found to be a true record by me.

EBENEZER KINGSLEY, Moderator.

April 13, 1843.—Nathaniel Searl, Moderator. Voted to give Mr. Jonathan Judd a call to settle with us, in the second Precinct of Northampton, in the work of the gospel ministry. The settlement and salary elsewhere stated were then voted. Committee to treat with Mr. Judd were Nathaniel Searl, John Wait, Ebenezer Kingsley, John Clark, & Ebenezer French. Voted to make a pulpit in the meeting-house the year ensuing.

May 20, 1743.—John Wait, moderator. Voted Mr. Jonathan Judd's word to him, in addition to the settlement and salary already voted. Voted that June 8, 1743, as the day for the ordination of Mr. Judd as "Pastor and Teacher." Voted to invite to the council Mr. Hopkins, of West Springfield, John Woodbridge, of South Hadley, Mr. Parsons, of East Hadley, and Mr. Woodbridge, of Hatfield, and Mr. Williams, of Hadley, and Mr. Ballantine, of Westfield. Voted June 2d be appointed as a day of solemn fasting and prayer. Mr. Nathaniel Searl was appointed to provide for the ministers and messengers who may come to the ordination.

Mr. Judd's answer concludes, "I do now, as I hope under some suitable apprehension of my own nothingness, and also my insufficiency to engage in such a great work, accept of their call, begging their prayer for me, that I may be enabled to be faithful and successful in the work of the ministry unto them, and save my own soul and theirs."

Jan. 12, 1749.—Voted to accept of the offer of the town of Northampton to give us five hundred acres of land as an equivalent for our right in the land lying in the great meadow, or common field, that was sequestered for the use of the ministry, provided they will permit us to sell the whole land, and put the money at interest for the use of the ministry charges of said precinct.

March 20, 1749.—A committee to dispose of the above land was appointed,—Ebenezer Kingsley, Waitstill Strong, Samuel Burt, Eleazer Hannum.

March 16, 1752.—Waitstill Strong, Moderator; Ebenezer Kingsley, Precinct Clerk (and he appears to have served from the first, except Mr. Phineas King the one year 1741); Samuel Burt, Precinct Treasurer; Amos Loomis, Collector; Aaron Clark, Esq., Stephen Sheldon, and Elias Lyman, Assessors.

Voted, a committee on furnishing the meeting-house,—Stephen Sheldon, Eleazer Hannum, and Samuel Burt. Thomas Porter was voted fifty shillings, old tenor, for sweeping the meeting-house.

Voted, Jonathan Clark, Nathan Lyman, and Ebenezer French to examine the votes that are in loose papers, and determine what part of them should be entered in the records.

March 4, 1752.—Voted, a committee see that every man has liberty to do his part in labor toward Mr. Judd's salary,—Solah Clark, Ichabod Strong, Elias Lyman, Timothy Clark, Nathaniel Searl, Jonathan Clark, and Samuel Pomeroy.

Jan. 18, 1753.—Voted, as to the price of materials to be allowed upon the minister's salary,—money counted as "old tenor," viz.: good pine boards, eleven pounds; a thousand slit-work, twenty-four shillings a hundred. Voted to give eight shillings a load for carting from Loomis' mill to the meeting-house.

Voted, to give Stephen Sheldon, for his slit-work for the galleries, twenty shillings; Jonathan Bascom, for setting some squares of glass and stacking up two stacks of boards, twelve shillings.

Voted, to give Stephen Sheldon for some nails, and bringing them up from Westfield, three pounds, old tenor.

Voted, Ebenezer French for thick timber, twenty-six shillings per hundred.

Voted, Ebenezer Kingsley and Nathan Lyman for carting a load of boards from Clark's mill to the meeting-house, twelve shillings.

Voted, that Stephen Sheldon and company should have liberty to "set up a horse-house in some convenient place near the meeting-house."

Committee to seat the meeting-house,—Elias Lyman, Aaron Clark, Stephen Wright.

One year in age shall be esteemed as good as one pound in the valuation. To "dignify" the seats a separate committee was voted,—Samuel Burt, Jonathan Clark, Stephen Sheldon.

During the separate precinct organization the territory was really under the jurisdiction of Northampton.

March 2, 1752, the town of Northampton by vote declared their willingness that the Second Precinct should be erected into a separate district if the General Court should see fit. During the following year the necessary act of the Legislature was obtained, and the new district commenced its independent existence in 1753. The first district-meeting was held March 19, 1753. The name Southampton was first used officially about this time, though it had probably been coming into use gradually for some years. As the territory was the southwest part of the original Hampton tract, together with the additional grant, lying still farther south, it is evident that the name was an appropriate one. The following list of officers was chosen at the first meeting.

The first and legal meeting of the inhabitants of the District of Southampton, met at their meeting-house on Monday, March 19, 1753, chose Deacon Waitstill Strong, Moderator; Ebenezer Kingsley, District Clerk; Waitstill Strong, Stephen Sheldon, Ebenezer Kingsley, Selectmen and Assessors; Samuel Burt, Treasurer; Timothy Clark, Constable; Ebenezer French, Nathan Lyman, Stephen Sheldon, Tythingmen; Samuel Danks, Ebenezer Pomeroy, John Wait, Fence-Viewers; Ebenezer Pomeroy, Roger Clapp, Amos Loomis, John Wait, Jr., Samuel Clapp, Lemuel Burt, Phineas King, Stephen Wright, Jr., Highway Surveyors; Waitstill Strong, Clerk of the Market.

The notes we have given already cover the first twelve years of civil history, though the town was not independent of Northampton until the district organization took place. Further extracts from the valuable records occur under the different heads of this sketch.

On Jan. 3, 1774, the town voted in the negative upon a proposition to allow certain inhabitants to unite with some of Northampton to form a new district or town. (This was the Easthampton project.)

At the meeting in March a committee was appointed to draw up and present the objections of the town, viz., Jonathan Judd, Aaron Clark, and Elias Lyman.

Place of Town-Meetings.—The first precinct-meeting was "at the house of Phineas King." The records do not show where the others were held until the one called for March 16, 1752, which was held "at the meeting-house," and there they continued to be held until March 16, 1840, a period of eighty-eight years. They were then changed to "the upper room in the centre school-house," or a different expression for the same place was "at the town room in the centre school-house." This was only for a year. The first meeting in "the new town-house was held Nov. 8, 1841." This was built by Seth Bartlett, contractor.

The old school-house stood in the centre of the public square, —streets all around it. This venerable building, with all its educational memories, is still standing, the residence of Charles H. Frary having been removed to that place about 1805.

It was succeeded about that time by the two-story school-building, the upper room of which belonged to the town. This stood on the present school-house lot near the street, and was taken down and the present brick school-house built about 1863 or 1864.

The following is a list of the selectmen from the organization of the town:

- 1753.—Waitstill Strong, Stephen Sheldon, Ebenezer Kingsley.
- 1754.—Samuel Burt, Ebenezer Kingsley, Aaron Clark.
- 1755.—Samuel Edwards, Samuel Burt, Jonathan Clark.
- 1756.—Ebenezer Kingsley, Samuel Edwards, Samuel Clapp.
- 1757.—Aaron Clark, Samuel Burt, Ebenezer Pomeroy.
- 1758.—Samuel Edwards, Aaron Clark, Samuel Burt.
- 1759.—Samuel Edwards, Jonathan Clark, Stephen Sheldon.
- 1760.—Aaron Clark, Samuel Edwards, Elias Lyman.
- 1761.—Samuel Burt, Samuel Edwards, Aaron Clark.
- 1762.—John Lyman, Roger Clapp, Aaron Clark.
- 1763.—Nathaniel Searl, Elias Lyman, Stephen Wright.
- 1764.—Waitstill Strong, Nathaniel Searl, Jr., Samuel Burt.
- 1765.—Waitstill Strong, Aaron Clark, Nathaniel Searl, Jr.
- 1766.—Samuel Burt, Roger Clapp, Samuel Edwards.
- 1767.—Aaron Clark, Elias Lyman, Nathaniel Searl, Jr.
- 1768.—Elias Lyman, Aaron Clark, Samuel Burt.
- 1769.—Nathaniel Searl, Jr., Waitstill Strong, Aaron Clark.

- 1770.—Waitstill Strong, John Lyman, Nathaniel Searl, Jr.
- 1771.—Aaron Clark, Waitstill Strong, Jonathan Judd, Jr.
- 1772.—Jonathan Judd, Jr., Samuel Edwards, Nathaniel Searl.
- 1773.—Aaron Clark, Elias Lyman, John Lyman.
- 1774-75.—Elias Lyman, John Lyman, Aaron Clark.
- 1776.—Timothy Clark, Elias Lyman, Aaron Clark.
- 1777.—John Lyman, Timothy Clark, Douglass King.
- 1778.—John Lyman, Lemuel Pomeroy, Dr. Sylvester Woodbridge.
- 1779.—Douglass King, Timothy Clark, Sylvester Woodbridge.
- 1780.—Jonathan Judd, Jr., Benjamin Lyman, Douglass King.
- 1781.—John Lyman, Sylvester Woodbridge, Abner Pomeroy.
- 1782.—John Lyman, Sylvester Woodbridge, Lemuel Pomeroy.
- 1783.—Douglass King, Sylvester Woodbridge, Lemuel Pomeroy.
- 1784.—John Lyman, Timothy Pomeroy, Silas Sheldon.
- 1785-86.—John Lyman, Timothy Pomeroy, Lemuel Pomeroy.
- 1787.—Moses Clark, John Lyman, Timothy Pomeroy.
- 1788-89.—John Lyman, Lemuel Pomeroy, Moses Clark.
- 1790.—Ebenezer Pomeroy, Moses Clark, Peres Clapp.
- 1791.—Lemuel Pomeroy, John Lyman, Isaac Parsons.
- 1792.—Ebenezer Pomeroy, Peres Clapp, John Lyman.
- 1793.—Lemuel Pomeroy, Peres Clapp, Ebenezer Pomeroy.
- 1794.—Lemuel Pomeroy, Ebenezer Pomeroy, Samuel Burt.
- 1795.—Lemuel Pomeroy, Samuel Burt, Peres Clapp.
- 1796.—Samuel Coleman, Peres Clapp, Samuel Burt.
- 1797.—Isaac Parsons, Samuel Coleman, John Lyman.
- 1798.—John Lyman, Isaac Parsons, Samuel Coleman.
- 1799-1801.—Peres Clapp, Roswell Strong, Timothy Clapp.
- 1802-4.—Silas Sheldon, Luther Edwards, Roswell Strong.
- 1805.—Luther Edwards, John Lyman, Jr., Silas Sheldon.
- 1806.—Luther Edwards, John Lyman, Jr., Frederick Judd.
- 1807.—Frederick Judd, John Lyman, Jr., Samuel Coleman.
- 1808.—Noah Clark, Asahel Chapman, Roswell Strong.
- 1809-11.—Roswell Strong, Noah Clark, Asahel Chapman.
- 1812-13.—John Lyman, Roswell Strong, Luther Edwards.
- 1814-15.—John Lyman, Abner Sheldon, Jr., Asahel Chapman.
- 1816-18.—Abner Sheldon, Jr., Gaius Lyman, Stephen Strong.
- 1819.—Abner Sheldon, Jr., John Lyman, Stephen Strong.
- 1820.—Asahel Chapman, Stephen Strong, Abner Sheldon, Jr.
- 1821.—Stephen Strong, John Lyman, Thaddeus Clark.
- 1822-23.—John Lyman, Asahel Birge, Thaddeus Clark.
- 1824.—Asahel Birge, Thaddeus Clark, Timothy Clark.
- 1825.—Timothy Clark, Joseph Ranger, Wm. S. Rogers.
- 1826.—Joseph Ranger, Timothy Clark, Wm. S. Rogers.
- 1827.—Asahel Birge, Joseph Ranger, Wm. S. Rogers.
- 1828.—Wm. S. Rogers, Silas Sheldon (2d), Joseph Ranger.
- 1829.—Wm. S. Rogers, Thaddeus Clark, Asahel Birge.
- 1830-31.—Wm. S. Rogers, Thaddeus Clark, Timothy Clark.
- 1832.—Thaddeus Clark, Luther Edwards, Jr., Wm. S. Rogers.
- 1833-34.—Elisha Edwards, Theodore Strong, Strong Clark.
- 1835-36.—Elisha Edwards, Theodore Strong, Wm. S. Rogers.
- 1837.—Stephen Strong, Wm. S. Rogers, Theodore Strong.
- 1838-39.—Wm. S. Rogers, Stephen Strong, Linus Bates.
- 1840.—Wm. S. Rogers, Stephen Strong, Orange Strong.
- 1841-42.—Orange Strong, Asahel Pomeroy, Jr., Elisha Edwards.
- 1843.—Elisha Edwards, Chauncey Clapp, Asahel Chapman, Jr.
- 1844-45.—Asahel Chapman, Jr., Chauncey Clapp, Samuel Lyman.
- 1846.—Asahel Chapman, Thaddeus Clark, Chauncey Clapp.
- 1847.—Elisha Edwards, Orange Strong, Samuel C. Pomeroy.
- 1848.—Elisha Edwards, Strong Clark, Samuel C. Pomeroy.
- 1849-50.—Elisha Edwards, Timothy P. Bates, Zeno E. Coleman.
- 1851.—Wm. S. Rogers, Elisha A. Edwards, Timothy P. Bates.
- 1852.—Wm. S. Rogers, Elisha A. Edwards, Isaac Parsons.
- 1853.—Wm. S. Rogers, Oliver N. Clark, Isaac Parsons.
- 1854.—Joseph Ranger, Thaddeus Clark, Joseph S. Clark.
- 1855.—Wm. S. Rogers, Joseph Ranger, Joseph S. Clark.
- 1856.—Isaac Parsons, Joseph S. Clark, Edson Hannum.
- 1857-58.—Isaac Parsons, Edson Hannum, Orrin R. Moore.
- 1859.—Isaac Parsons, Elisha A. Edwards, Harris Nimocks.
- 1860.—Isaac Parsons, Harris Nimocks, Jonathan N. Judd.
- 1861.—Isaac Parsons, Jonathan N. Judd, Artemas Barnes.
- 1862.—Isaac Parsons, Edson Hannum, Artemas Barnes.
- 1863-65.—Zeno E. Coleman, Henry S. Sheldon, Lyman C. Tiffany.
- 1866.—Zeno E. Coleman, Timothy P. Bates, Jairus E. Clark.
- 1867-68.—Timothy P. Bates, Jairus E. Clark, Lewis Hannum.
- 1869.—Isaac Parsons, Henry S. Sheldon, Albert S. Atkins.
- 1870-71.—Timothy P. Bates, Henry S. Sheldon, Albert S. Atkins.
- 1872-74.—Henry S. Sheldon, Edson Hannum, George W. Edwards.
- 1875.—Henry S. Sheldon, George W. Edwards, Lyman C. Tiffany.
- 1876-78.—Henry S. Sheldon, Lyman C. Tiffany, George D. Hannum.

TOWN CLERKS.

Ebenezer Kingsley, 1753-56; Timothy Clark, 1757-61; Ebenezer Kingsley, 1762-76; Jonathan Judd, Jr., 1777-86; Perez Clapp, 1787-1801; Asahel Birge, Jr., 1802-27; Wm. S. Rogers, 1823-29; Asahel Birge, 1830-31; Timothy Clark, 1832-35; Elisha Edwards, 1836-43; Jonathan N. Judd, 1844-48; Elisha A. Edwards, 1849-50; Jonathan N. Judd, 1851-61; Elisha A. Edwards, 1862; Lyman C. Tiffany, 1863-66; Elisha A. Edwards, 1867-76; F. E. Judd, 1877-79.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.*

Joseph Hawley, 1754-55; Gideon Lyman, 1756-57; Timothy Dwight, 1758-61; Timothy Dwight, 1762-63; Joseph Hawley, 1764; Timothy Dwight, 1765; Joseph Hawley, 1766-73; Elias Lyman, 1774; Samuel Burt, 1775; Timothy Clark, 1779; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1781; Jona. Clark, 1784; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1785; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1787-89; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1796; Isaac Parsons, 1798; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1800-1; Samuel Pomeroy, 1802; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1803-6; Frederick Judd, 1807; Lemuel Pomeroy, 1808-9; Frederick Judd, 1810; Luther Edwards, 1811-13; Asahel Birge, 1814; Asahel Birge, Jr., 1815; Asahel Birge, 1816-18; Asahel Chapman, 1819; Asahel Chapman; 1822; John Lyman, 1825-26; Luther Edwards, Jr., 1827; Timothy Clark, 1828; Elisha Edwards, Jr., 1829; Timothy Clark, 1831; Elisha Edwards, Jr., 1832; Timothy Clark, 1833; Elisha Edwards, 1834; Wm. S. Rogers, 1835-36; Elisha Edwards, 1837-38; Wm. S. Rogers, 1839; Elisha Edwards, 1841; Strong Clark, 1846-47; Noah L. Strong, 1848; Samuel C. Pomeroy, 1852; Stephen Lyman, 1855; Lysander B. Bates, 1856; Almon B. Clapp, 1857; Orrin R. Moore, 1858; Lyman C. Tiffany, 1861; Edson Hannum, 1864; Samuel B. Quigley, 1871-72; Henry Sheldon, 1879.

VILLAGES.

SOUTHAMPTON CENTRE

was the first point of settlement by the colony of thirty; Thomas Porter and Judah Hutchinson being the first to erect houses, according to the account already given. If Ebenezer Kingsley was earlier, his house was north of the present village.

The village is pleasantly situated in the midst of a fine farming country. It includes the Congregational church, the Methodist church, Sheldon Academy, a handsome brick school-house, a town-hall, two stores, post-office, and several shops. Here is located also the whip manufactory of Mr. Quigley, who removed to this town for business purposes and for a pleasant home, after an active engagement of many years upon the New York Independent and the New York Tribune. There are quite a number of new, elegant, private dwellings, as well as many others of a substantial and permanent character,—the homes of the "solid" men of olden times, around which cluster many family traditions. The railroad station is a short distance east, and with several trains a day, both north and south, there are afforded excellent facilities for business or travel. On the whole, it is one of those charming New England villages in which the virtues of the earlier times are united to the progress and the culture of the present.

RUSSELLVILLE, in the southwest part of the town, is frequently spoken of as "the village." It is a small hamlet which has grown up in modern times around the business of the Russells,—father and sons,—and from them derives its name.

Like other towns, Southampton has some odd local names, as "Foggintown" and "Bedlam," and divides, perhaps, with Easthampton the traditions of "Pogue's Hole" (Glendale).

The postmasters of Southampton have been James K. Sheldon, Gad C. Lyman, O. N. Cowles, E. A. Edwards, Harvey Dada; J. N. Judd, twenty-one years, 1840 to 1861; A. G. Judd, from 1861 to the present time.

SCHOOLS.

While the new precinct was still a part of Northampton, that town made some provision for schools. In 1748, Northampton voted to have schools in the "distant parts of the town to instruct in reading and writing, viz., on the plain, over Mill River, Pascommuck, Bartlett's Mills, and new precinct." In 1750 the selectmen were instructed to provide a school-master for the second-precinct.

In 1751, Northampton appointed Eleazer Hannum, Waitstill Strong, Jr., and Stephen Sheldon a committee to have the oversight of building a school-house in the second precinct.

Deacon Samuel Edwards, who moved to Southampton in 1753, was a teacher for a long time. He is said to have been engaged for forty winters.

* Northampton and Southampton were united in sending representatives from 1755 to 1773, inclusive.

A few extracts from the town records are of educational interest:

April 2, 1753.—Voted to have a school set up at the school-house the beginning of October next, and that the selectmen provide a schoolmaster.

February 1, 1754.—Voted Waitstill Strong and Ebenezer Kingsley ten shillings a day for two days' work upon the school-house.

Occasionally the town-meeting was adjourned from the meeting-house to the school-house. The latter could be warmed, while the former could not.

Nov. 10, 1766.—Samuel Edwards, Aaron Clark, Elias Lyman, Samuel Clapp, Jonathan Clark were appointed a committee for the business of the school. This was probably the first school committee, the selectmen having had charge of any business of that kind before. That year fifteen pounds were voted for the support of the schools, the extreme parts of the town to have their equal part of the school. From which it may be inferred that some other school-houses were by this time erected besides the one at the Centre, though the other schools may have been held in private houses.

Nov. 3, 1767.—Voted to raise fifteen pounds for the use of the school.

March 20, 1769.—Voted that the present selectmen shall keep the school as long as they think proper this spring, and to set it up again when they think best.

Dec. 4, 1769.—Voted fifteen pounds for schooling.

"Ebenezer Kingsley was an early teacher. After the Revolution four classes were formed in different parts of the town and small houses built. Mrs. Deacon Elisha Edwards was the first female teacher in town (Miss Anna Bates), in the summer of 1785."

In 1791, voted, a third part of £50 for support of a woman's school. This was after considerable opposition.

The school-house was used for warming, on Sunday, as appears from the appointment of a committee to inspect the school-house on the Sabbath, and to keep order, "and if they cannot keep order to lock up the school-house." Voted, that Obadiah Frary and Stephen Wright shall have charge of the school-house.

School Statistics at intervals of about Ten Years.

January, 1837.—Seven schools; attending in the summer, 258; average, 225; winter, 324; average, 284; in town between 4 and 16, 357; summer schools, 29 months, 15 days; winter, 22 months; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 4 males, 4 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $20.25; female teachers, $11.43.

January, 1847.—Eight schools; attending in summer, 204; average, 156; winter, 278; average, 173; in town between 4 and 16, 290; summer schools, 34 months; winter, 25 months and 21 days; total, 59 months, 21 days; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 4 males, 4 females; average wages male teachers per month, $21.25; females, $11.05.

January, 1857.—Eight schools; attending in summer, 185; average, 138; winter, 242; average, 186; attending under 5, 20; over 15, 26; in town between 5 and 15, 239; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 2 males, 6 females; summer schools, 23 months, 18 days; winter, 24 months, 18 days; total, 48 months, 16 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $24; female, $14.41.

January, 1867.—Seven schools; attending in the summer, 200; average, 159; winter, 217; average, 173; attending under 5, 10; over 15, 26; in town between 5 and 15, 266; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 1 male, 6 females; summer schools, 24 months; winter schools, 21 months; average wages of female teachers per month, $23.08.

January, 1878.—Eight schools; 203 attending during the year; average, 133; 4 under 5; 18 over 15; whole number in town between 5 and 15, 190; teachers, 12 females; from normal school, 2; school kept 59 months, 3 days; average wages of female teachers, $28.04; taxation, $1450; expense of superintendence, $43; printing, $10; vested funds, $1860; income from local funds, $129.60; other income and dog tax, $68.48; 1 high school, 1 teacher, 26 scholars; by taxation, 5 months, 15 days; principal's salary, $225; town share of school fund, $227.49.

To this notice of the schools we add the following list of graduates from this town:

Jonathan Judd, 1765, Yale College, business.

David Searl, 1784, Dartmouth, went South.

Ashbel Strong, 1801, Williams, ministry.

Lyman Strong, 1802, Williams, ministry.

Sylvester Burt, 1804, Williams, ministry.

John Woodbridge, 1804, Williams, ministry.

Martin L. Hurlburt, 1804, Harvard, ministry.

Saul Clark, 1805, Williams, ministry.

Theodore Pomeroy, 1808, Yale, medicine.

Samuel Ware, 1808, Williams, ministry.

Rufus Pomeroy, 1808, Williams, ministry.

Thaddeus Pomeroy, 1810, Williams, ministry.

Isaac Parsons, 1811, Yale, ministry.

William Strong, 1811, Williams, ministry.

Federal Burt, 1812, Williams, ministry.
 Sylvester Woodbridge, 1813, Williams, ministry.
 Rufus Hurlburt, 1813, Harvard, ministry.
 Noble D. Strong, 1813, Middlebury, ministry.
 Aretas Loomis, 1815, Williams, ministry.
 Justin W. Clark, 1816, Harvard, law.
 Medad Pomeroy, 1817, Williams, ministry.
 Chandler Bates, 1818, Williams, ministry.
 Lemuel P. Bates, 1818, Williams, ministry.
 Philetus Clark, 1818, Middlebury, ministry.
 Erastus Clapp, 1822, Union, ministry.
 Jairus Burt, 1824, Amherst, ministry.
 Bela B. Edwards, 1824, Amherst, ministry.
 Abner P. Clark, 1825, Yale, ministry.
 Ralph Clapp, 1825, Amherst, ministry.
 Joseph B. Clapp, 1829, Amherst, law.
 Jeremiah Pomeroy, 1829, Amherst, ministry.
 Alvan W. Chapman, 1830, Amherst, medicine.
 Gideon Searl, 1830, Union.
 Jesse L. Frary, 1831, Amherst, ministry.
 Edward R. Thorp, 1831, Hamilton.
 Israel W. Searl, 1832, Amherst, missionary to Africa.
 Mahlon P. Chapman, 1832, Amherst, died before graduation, at Andover.

Philander Bates, 1833, Amherst, ministry.
 Rufus C. Clapp, 1833, Amherst, ministry.
 David Gould, 1834, Amherst, law.
 Sereno D. Clark, 1835, Amherst, ministry.
 Justus L. Janes, 1835, Amherst, ministry.
 Lemuel Pomeroy, 1835, Amherst, ministry.
 Alexander H. Strong, 1835, Williams, business.
 Lewis F. Clark, 1837, Amherst, ministry.
 Wm. H. Sheldon, 1837, Yale, ministry.
 Spencer S. Clark, 1839, Amherst, ministry.

The above was prepared for the centennial anniversary of 1841, and there may now be added the following:

Julius C. Searl, graduated at Amherst in 1842; studied theology at Princeton and East Windsor; settled in the ministry at Unionville; deceased.

Henry L. Edwards, Amherst College, 1847; studied theology at Andover; now residing in Northampton.

Austin Weeks, Antioch College, Ohio, in 1858.

Henry Jones, Amherst College, 1857; studied theology at East Windsor; now pastor in St. Johnsbury, Vt.

J. B. Finck, at Amherst College for a time; graduated at Columbia; studied theology at Union Seminary, New York City; now residing on Long Island.

Andrew J. Clapp, Amherst College, 1857; studied theology at Andover, 1861; died at Shutesbury, Mass., 1863.

Julius D. Phelps, Amherst, 1874.

S. C. Pomeroy, Noah L. Strong, and Charles Bissel took a partial course at Amherst.

PHYSICIANS AND DENTISTS NOT INCLUDED IN THE ABOVE LIST.

Jesse Searl, M.D.;* Ashbel Searl, M.D.;* Noah Bartlett, M.D.;* Ichabod Searl, M.D., Syracuse, N. Y.; Oscar F. Searl, M.D., Kansas; — Searl, Springfield, Mass.; Josiah A. Gridley, M.D.;* Elias Strong;* A. E. Strong;* E. R. Strong, New York City; Artemus Clapp, New York City; Dwight Clapp, Boston, Mass.; John P. P. White, M.D., New York City; Horatio Clapp, Westfield, Mass.; Horace S. Bascom, New Haven, Conn.; Edward F. Barnes.

A few prominent men, natives or descendants of natives, may properly be added: Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, ex-U. S. Senator, Kansas; Hon. Theodore M. Pomeroy, New York State Senate; Rev. Noble Strong, D.D., LL.D., Texas; Rev. Henry M. Parsons, D.D., Boston and Buffalo; Rev. Washington Gladden, Springfield, Mass.; Prof. Edward Birge, Ph.D.,

* Deceased.

Professor of Zoology, Madison, N. Y.; Alvin Searl, Judge in San Francisco; Cornelius S. Hurlburt, Professor of Dental Surgery, Springfield; Jairus S. Hurlburt, Dentist; Parmenas B. Strong, Teacher, Springfield, deceased; Alvin B. Clapp, Teacher, Westfield State Normal School.

Southampton has also been quite noted for the number of ministers' wives: Mindwell Woodridge married Rev. Vinson Gould; Asenath Edwards married Rev. Rufus Pomeroy; Anna Hatch married Rev. Sylvester Burt; Armena Bascom married Rev. Abner Clark, and for a second husband Rev. Lemuel Dada; Eunice Edwards married Rev. L. P. Bates; Pamela Strong married Rev. Sumner Clapp; Mary Strong married Rev. Thomas Hall; Mary Gould married Rev. A. W. McClure, D.D.; Mindwell Gould married Rev. John Patten; Abigail Ely married Rev. Justus L. Janes; Aurelia R. Woodbury married Rev. Samuel Clark; Hannah Wolcott married Rev. Lemuel Pomeroy; Lucy Parsons married Rev. Samuel Ware; Ruth Pomeroy married Rev. Flavel Bascom; Nancy Sheldon married Rev. Lewis F. Clark; Martha Rogers married Rev. John W. Dadman; Abbie Parsons married Rev. Jason Morse; Sophia Parsons, second wife of Rev. Jason Morse; Julia A. Edwards married Rev. C. H. Taylor; Amelia Jones married Rev. Mr. White; Mary Searl married Rev. Lyman Johnson; Ophelia A. Searl married Rev. Andrew J. Clapp; Josephine Eldridge married Rev. Mr. Ellis; Harriet G. Lyman married Rev. William B. Stocking; Ruth Searl married Rev. Joseph J. Candlin.

FOREIGN MISSIONARIES.

Israel Watson Searl to Liberia, Harriet Lyman Stocking to Persia. Both died in the field.

The following teachers of note may be mentioned, all of them of great usefulness, and several of them authors of celebrity: Mrs. Mindwell W. Gould, Mrs. Elizabeth S. Clark, Miss Eunice L. Strong, Mrs. Anna B. Gleason, Mrs. Ruth P. Bascom, Mrs. Mindwell G. Patten, Miss Rachel Gould, Mrs. Margaret G. Dorman, Mrs. Sarah B. Thayer, Miss Annis C. Bates, Miss Mary Searl, Mrs. Mary Birge Gardner, of Gardner Institute.

For these additions to the list of Prof. Edwards of 1841, we are indebted to Miss Carrie Edwards, of Southampton.

SHELDON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL IN SOUTHAMPTON.

The founding of this institution is best shown by the following records, taken from the trustees' book:

At a meeting of a number of the inhabitants of the town of Southampton, convened at the central school-house, Sept. 11, 1828, for the purpose of considering the expediency of raising a permanent fund for a school in which the higher branches of literature may be taught,—Asahel Chapman, Esq., Chairman; James K. Sheldon, Clerk,—

Voted, that this meeting deem it expedient to attempt raising a permanent fund for a public school in this town.

Voted, that a committee be appointed to draft a constitution or basis on which the school shall be founded, and to solicit subscriptions to the fund for the support of the same.

Voted, that Rev. Vinson Gould, Elisha Edwards, Cornelius Searl, Theodore Stearns, Chauncey Clapp, Heman Searl, and Theodore Strong be said committee.

Voted, to adjourn to Thursday, the 18th day of Sept., inst., at 6 o'clock P.M.

Thursday, the 18th.—Voted, that this meeting upon reflection consider the object of founding a public school in this town as worthy of increased exertions for its attainment.

Voted, that one person in each school district be added to the committee for soliciting subscriptions and donations.

Voted, that Phinehas Strong, Abner Sheldon, Jr., Warham Searl, Theodore Parsons, Oliver Clark, Jr., and Thomas Johnson be added to the committee aforesaid. Adjourned to October 15th.

Voted, that James K. Sheldon, Luther Edwards, Jr., and Deacon Ansel Clark be a committee to wait upon Mr. Silas Sheldon and present to him a statement of the existing state of things with regard to the prospects of the proposed school, and confer with him in regard to future progress.

October 30th.—Voted, a committee be appointed to present at a future meeting a draft of a set of rules by which we shall be governed in our future operations.

Voted, that Rev. Vinson Gould, James K. Sheldon, and Theodore Strong be said committee.

November 13th.—Voted, to add to the committee on rules Elisha Edwards and Timothy Clarke.

December 3d.—Voted, that the trustees who may hereafter be chosen from the neighboring towns, when appointed, shall fix on a suitable place for the location of a building for the school, if the trustees to be elected in this town do not agree upon the location.

The constitution was adopted Dec. 10, 1828. The preamble is as follows: "We, the subscribers, inhabitants of the town of Southampton, taking into serious consideration the importance of training up youth with better advantages for an education than can be found in the common elementary schools, and being desirous that they should be instructed in the principles of our holy religion and of correct morals, have sequestered a portion of our property for the establishment of a permanent school in this town, of an elevated character, in which youth may be taught English and classical literature and the great end and purposes of living; imploring the blessing of Almighty God upon our attempt to found such an institution for his Glory and the greater usefulness of the youth of the present and of succeeding generations, do adopt the following principles."

The board of trustees was required to consist of not less than eleven nor more than seventeen, the first board to be chosen by the donors, and all vacancies in the future to be filled by the board.

The founders of the institution were the following: Silas Sheldon, Vinson Gould, Elisha Edwards, Luther Edwards, Phineas Strong, Asahel Chapman, Sheldon K. Basson, John Lyman, Luther Edwards, Jr., Gaius Lyman, Eliphalet Hatch, Jr., Theodore Stearns, Aaron Strong (2d), Heman Searl, Timothy Clark, Bela B. Jones, Thaddeus Clark, Theodore Strong, Elisha Edwards, Jr., Asa Lyman, James K. Sheldon, Gad C. Lyman, Rufus S. Clark, Josiah A. Gidley, Seth Bartlett, Elihu Brown, John Strong, Ansel Clark, Asahel Chapman, Jr., Stephen Wolcott, Sardis Chapman, Oliver Clark, Jr., Gaius Searl, Simeon Sheldon, Moses Searl, Cornelius Searl, Wm. S. Rogers, Thomas Johnson, Jesse Searl, Theodore Parsons.

The trustees chosen were as follows: President, Rev. Vinson Gould; Vice-President, James K. Sheldon; Secretary, Elisha Edwards, Jr.; Treasurer, Timothy Clark; Luther Edwards, Jr., Silas Sheldon, Heman Searl, Theodore Parsons, Theodore Strong, Rev. Ichabod Spinner, Sylvester Judd, Jr., Rev. Payson Williston, Samuel Edwards, Jr., George Dunlap, Col. Samuel Lyman, Asahel Chapman.

The Legislature was petitioned to incorporate the new institution, and an act for that purpose was approved Jan. 27, 1829.

The building committee were James K. Sheldon, Luther Edwards, Jr., and Elisha Edwards, Jr., and the academy was erected in the summer and fall of 1829.

The school opened Dec. 1, 1829. Rev. I. S. Spencer delivered an address, for which he received the thanks of the trustees.

The year was divided into four terms of eleven weeks each,—tuition, $3 a term; languages, $3.50.

Charles A. Dewey and Stephen Wolcott were elected trustees Oct. 27, 1829.

The tuition the first quarter amounted to $181.12. Elisha Edwards, Jr., became president of the board in 1832; Rev. M. E. White in 1834; Luther Edwards in 1853; Rev. Stephen C. Strong, 1854; Luther Edwards, 1859; Rev. Joseph E. Swallow, 1860; Luther Edwards, 1862; Rev. B. A. Smith, 1865; Samuel Lyman, 1868; Rev. Rufus P. Wells, 1869; Isaac Parsons, 1874, and to the present time.

Elisha Edwards, Jr., was vice-president, secretary, or treasurer from the organization down to the time of his death. His son, Col. E. A. Edwards, has occupied the position of treasurer for many years, and is the present secretary and treasurer.

The school had a very successful career for twenty years or more, but after it was subjected to the competition of Williston Seminary, Easthampton, and other institutions not far distant, the number of scholars from abroad was considerably reduced. The corporation has, however, been maintained; and when a full corps of academic teachers were no longer maintained, a select school—at least one term in the year—has been secured, and in later years, by an arrangement with the trustees, the town sustains a high school. This is taught the present year by Miss Orcutt, of Westhampton.

The institution was of immense benefit to the town, and a large number of youth secured there the advantages of a higher education.

The first principals of the academy were Wm. Bradley and Samuel Hunt, with five assistants. Mahlon P. Chapman also taught in the institution, and Jonathan S. Fancher.

CHURCHES.

At the first precinct-meeting, Sept. 21, 1741, the proprietors appointed a committee to obtain a preacher of the gospel. The committee were John Clark, Ebenezer Kingsley, and Phineas King. Earlier than this, however, the settlers, without waiting for official action, had secured, in 1737, occasional preaching by Rev. David Parsons, afterward the first minister of Amherst, and by Mr. John Woodbridge, soon after installed at South Hadley, and these ministers with others were the temporary supplies until the installation of the first pastor, Rev. Jonathan Judd. This event took place June 8, 1743. This was the same day of the organization of the church, and Mr. Judd had probably preached some time on probation.

Northampton, in 1737, voted that a part of the town tax that was levied upon this new settlement should be applied toward building a meeting-house. It was not, however, completed until 1752. When it was finished, the old custom was followed of appointing a committee to "dignify" the seats and pews,—dignity being in "the compound ratio of age and property." The committee's word was law, and this man sat here and another there, as he was directed to. It is thought that, besides age and property, perhaps culture, quality, or a trace of aristocracy may have helped compound the ratio for seating.

The first house of worship was torn down in 1788, and the present one erected upon its site the same year.

This second house was extensively repaired and remodeled in 1840, and assumed at that time very much of its present shape. It is still a handsome and substantial structure, and one that in these later days of retrenchment and economy may well be retained for many years. It has a beautiful location, and with the modern adornment of the grounds is worthy of the children of the pioneers. Around this spot cluster the memories of five generations, and the children of the sixth now gather upon the same sacred heights. Here for sixty years came the first pastor of the church, his people reverently following in the footsteps of the man of God. He settled with them in this wilderness; he shared the dangers of Indian warfare; their sons went forth with his blessing in 1756 to win an empire from France; and in the stormy times of the Revolution his patriotic words nerved the departing soldiers to deeds of valor. He saw the sacrifices made for the grand old principles of human freedom. He walked before this people through his long pastorate, bringing the strong consolations of the gospel to the sorrowing and the desolate, and pointing all to the brighter land,—"the shining shore of the Christian's hope." His faith and the faith of the fathers still live amid these hills and lovely valleys; the generations have come and gone, but the gospel, surviving all, illuminating all, lives in the hearts of the children as it lived in the hearts of the fathers.

The position of the Southampton meeting-house has been determined at some of the various State surveys. It is situated in latitude 42° 14' 45" and in longitude 72° 45' 54".

Mr. Judd, the first minister, had for settlement 200 acres of land, £100, "old tenor," in money, and £125 in work; for salary, £130 in money (probably old tenor, worth only about one-third gold basis) for three successive years, and then to be increased £5 a year until it amounted to £170.

The record of Mr. Judd's ministry is seldom equaled, extending over a period of sixty years from his ordination to his death, July 28, 1803, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He was successful in the ministry, and had the satisfaction of seeing his church built up and strengthened from year to year and occasionally refreshed by marked revivals. The whole number that joined the church during his active service was 442; the number of baptisms, 1034. The number of deaths in that time was 440; births about 1550.

The first page of the venerable church-book contains the following entry:

"A record of the Church of Christ in Southampton.

"A church was organized in this town A.D. 1743, June 8th, when Mr. Jonathan Judd, A.M., was ordained the first minister. He preached nearly 56 years. Rev. Vinson Gould was ordained August 26th, A.D. 1801, as colleague Pastor with Rev. Jonathan Judd. The Reverend and venerated Jonathan Judd departed this life July 28, 1803, after having sustained the pastoral office a few weeks more than sixty years."

The records open with the proceedings of the council, June 8, 1743. It consisted of the following ministers: Revs. Samuel Hopkins, Springfield; Jonathan Edwards, Northampton; John Woodbridge, David Parsons, Hadley; John Ballantine, Westfield; with the messengers of the churches to which they respectively belonged. A sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Edwards.

The covenant was signed by the following persons: Jonathan Judd, Nathaniel Searl, John Wait, Phineas King, Nathan Lyman, Stephen Sheldon, Israel Sheldon, John Wait, Jr., Ebenezer French, Noah Sheldon, Thomas Porter, Jonathan Bascom, Waitstill Strong, Stephen Root, Ichabod Strong, Moses Wright, John Clark, Eleazer Hannum, Selah Clark, Elias Lyman, Nathaniel Phelps, Ebenezer Kingsley, Aaron Clark, Elisha Clark, John Miller, Jonathan Clark, Ezra Strong, Samuel Burt, Aaron Root, Roger Clapp, Ebenezer Pomeroy, Nathaniel Searl, Jr.

The following were soon after admitted "upon owning the confession of faith and entering into covenant," and were considered as enrolled among the founders of the church: Samuel Pomeroy, Noah Pixley, Priscilla Searl, Esther Wait, Mary Kingsley, Anna King, Esther Strong, Sarah Lyman, Mindwell Bascom, Sarah Porter, Miriam Strong, Rachel Pomeroy, Mary Searl, Eunice Clark, Abigail Pixley, Submit Clark, Mary Strong, Ann Lyman, Mary Sheldon, Thankful Sheldon, Mary French, Thankful Clark, Hannah Burt, Eunice Wait, Naomi Sheldon, Hannah Clark, Elizabeth Clark, Priscilla Searl, Jr., Mary Searl, Mary Kentfield, Ann Clapp.

The catalogue has so much of family history indicated that we add the following names,—all of them probably admitted before 1755: Dorothy Hannum, Dinah Corse, Elizabeth Corse, Reuben Corse, Eliphaz Searl, Joshua Pomeroy, Abigail Searl, Silence Judd, Lois Pomeroy, John Hannum, Amos Loomis and wife Hannah, Timothy Clark and wife Freedom, Elisha Pomeroy, Aaron Searl, Moses Searl, Samuel Pomeroy, Jr., Ebenezer Kingsley, Jr., Eleazer Hannum, Jr., Joseph Torrey, Ebenezer French, Jr., John Hannum, Jr., John Lyman, Gideon Searl, Thomas Pixley, Mary French, Hannah Pomeroy, Sarah Barker, Silence Torrey, Chloe Kingsley, Abigail Pomeroy, Deacon Stephen Wright and Esther, his wife, Obadiah Frary and Eunice, his wife, Stephen Wright, Jr., Samuel Clapp and Mindwell, his wife, Zebediah Miller and Rebecca, his wife, Mary Strong, wife of Deacon Strong, Eunice, wife of Ichabod Strong, Elizabeth Searl, Elijah Wright, Elijah Pomeroy, Douglass King, Noah Burt, Nathaniel Loomis, Abner Pomeroy, Ebenezer Sheldon, Catharine Wright, Chloe Clark, Sarah King, Miriam Strong, Submit Clark, Jr., Sarah Strong, Mary Barker, Mindwell Porter, Clarinda King, Mary Hannum, Sarah Porter.

The following were some of the earliest baptisms:

Sarah, daughter of Gaius Burt, July 10, 1743.
Naomi, daughter of Israel Sheldon, Sept. 9, 1743.
Levi, son of Nathaniel Searl, Nov. 6, 1743.
Preserved, son of Elisha Clark, Feb. 5, 1744.
Elisha, son of Waitstill Strong, Aug. 12, 1744.
Rachel, daughter of Ebenezer Pomeroy, Aug. 26, 1744.
Dorothy, daughter of Eleazer Hannum, Aug. 19, 1744.
Jonathan, son of Jonathan Judd, Oct. 7, 1744.
Experience, daughter of Aaron Clark, Dec. 2, 1744.
Tamar, daughter of Ezra Strong, Dec. 16, 1744.

The record of baptisms is very full and carefully written up, and is exceeding valuable in these days when genealogical information is so eagerly sought for by the descendants of the old New England families.

Notes from the Church Records.

August, 1750.—The church voted to choose the following brethren to assist the Pastor, viz., Deacon Waitstill Strong, Deacon John Clark, John Hannum, and Nathaniel Searl. For the same purpose, there were appointed in subsequent years, as occasion required, the following: Capt. Stephen Wright, John Waite, Samuel Burt, Deacon Elias Lyman, Deacon Samuel Edwards, Capt. Lemuel Pomeroy, Lieut. John Lyman, Deacon Douglass King.

The early church-book contains but few records of meetings for fifty or sixty years. From the church manual and from the number of additions at various times, the following special seasons of religious interest may be mentioned:

In 1761-62 there was an extensive revival pervading all classes of the community, and 30 were received into the church within a few months.

The years 1766 and 1770 are also noticed. In the former, 19 members were added, and in the latter, 23.

In 1784-85 a great revival is spoken of in the manual, and it appears that 25 to 30 were received about that time.

During the year 1797, 21 united with the church. In 1802, 17 made a profession of religion. In 1806 there must have been a continued state of revival for many months, as seventy-five united during that year or soon after; 22, at the communion of January 4th; 21, May 4th; and large numbers at other dates.

1809 and 1811 were also noted years. In 1816, 45 were received. 1823 was especially marked as a year of great religious interest; one hundred and twenty members were added, 36 of them at the communion March 2d, and 40 at the communion of May 4th.

In 1828, 27 were received; in 1831, 20; in 1832, 27; in 1833, 39; in 1838, 27; in 1841, 88,—51 at the May communion, and 21 at that of July; 1850, 67; 1851, 21.

Feb. 9, 1829, the church passed the following resolutions:

1st. That it is the sacred duty of all the members of the church to use their united influence in every judicious way to prevent the use of ardent spirits.

2d. That it be recommended to ask the members of this church to abstain from personally using ardent spirits, excepting for medicinal purposes, and that they use none in their families or as a part of hospitality.

3d. That the constitution of the temperance society, or some similar paper requiring entire abstinence from the use of ardent spirits, be submitted to each member of the church for his or her signature,—and it shall be left to the conscience of each individual to sign or not,—in the hope that, after mature and prayerful deliberation, each person in the church will take decided and open ground in favor of total abstinence.

4th. That if any member of the church who has been reported intemperate, and who has been expostulated with on the subject, refuses to promise total abstinence, such member be summoned to appear before the church, to show cause why he or she shall not be excluded from the visible church of God.

These resolutions are fully up to the standard of modern temperance work, except that the term "ardent spirits" was used instead of "all intoxicating drinks," but the pressing home upon every member the duty of an individual pledge had a decisive emphasis that could not well be disregarded. Perhaps these resolutions were called out by cases of discipline which had arisen from intemperance.

We add the following action upon the seating, just a specimen of the interesting material that might fill a volume from the town records:

April 2, 1753.—Voted, that the widow Pixley should have liberty to sit in the body of the meeting-house, in the second seat. Voted, that Ebenezer Kingsley, Phineas King, Samuel Danks, and their wives, together with Deacon Strong's wife, should sit in the corner pew on the north side of the meeting-house; that Aaron Clark, Israel Sheldon, and their wives should sit in the front pew, together with Jonathan Clark; that Elias Lyman and wife should sit in the body of the meeting-house, either in the second seat or the fourth seat; that Deacon Clark's wife should sit in the corner pew on the south side of the meeting-house; that the widow Sheldon should sit in the front pew, together with Esquire Stephen Sheldon; that John Wait, Jr., and Zebediah Miller and their wives should sit in the pew next the deacons' seat.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Jonathan Judd, ordained June 8, 1743; died July 28, 1803, aged eighty-four years,—a pastorate of sixty years. 2d. Rev. Vinson Gould, settled as colleague to Mr. Judd, Aug. 26, 1801, and succeeded him in the pastorate; his services were also continued for many years, being dismissed Jan. 5, 1832. 3d. Rev. Morris E. White, ordained June 20, 1832; remained twenty years; dismissed Jan. 1, 1853. 4th. Rev. Stephen C. Strong, ordained April 12, 1854; dismissed Feb. 10, 1859. 5th. Rev. Joseph E. Swallow, installed Oct. 5, 1859; dismissed Oct. 6, 1862. 6th. Rev. Alexander D. Stowell, labors commenced May 1, 1863; closed Nov. 1, 1864. 7th. Rev. Burritt A. Smith, ordained March 15, 1865; dismissed May 11, 1868. 8th. Rev. Rufus P. Wells, installed Jan. 5, 1869; dismissed Jan. 27, 1874. 9th. Rev. Edward S. Fitz, ordained May 20, 1874; dismissed June 2, 1876. 10th. Rev. E. L. Clark, labors commenced in Sept. 1, 1877; and he continues the present acting pastor of the church (January, 1879).

Record of the Deacons since the Organization of the Church.—Waitstill Strong, chosen 1743; died Oct. 9, 1792. John Clark, chosen 1743; remained in the office until his death. Elias Lyman, chosen 1766; died Feb. 18, 1803, aged eighty-seven. Samuel Edwards, chosen 1766; died in 1789-90. Abner Pomeroy, chosen 1780. John Lyman, chosen 1786; died Oct. 28, 1811, aged seventy-eight. Douglass King, chosen 1790; resigned in 1801. Elisha Edwards, chosen 1790; died Nov. 17, 1832, aged seventy-four. Samuel Burt, chosen Dec. 24, 1801; died June 7, 1822, aged sixty-three. Roswell Strong, chosen Dec. 24, 1801; died March 22, 1837, aged seventy-six. Ansel Clark, chosen 1824; resigned May 1, 1835, and removed to Ohio. Walter Bates, chosen 1832; died Oct. 14, 1859, aged seventy-five. Theodore Strong, chosen 1833; died March 3, 1842, aged fifty. Theodore Stearns, chosen 1836; resigned

May, 1857, and removed to Easthampton. Samuel Lyman, chosen 1842; died Dec. 8, 1876, aged eighty-nine. Timothy P. Bates,* chosen 1858. David B. Phelps,* chosen 1859. Stephen Lyman,* chosen 1873.

Register of Church Committee.

1790-1832, Deacon Elisha Edwards; 1801-37, Deacon Roswell Strong; 1824-35, Deacon Ansel Clark; 1832-59, Deacon Walter Bates; 1842, John Lyman, Gaius Lyman, Israel Burt, Deacon Theodore Strong; 1833-63, Luther Edwards; 1836-57, Theodore Stearns; 1842-76, Deacon Samuel Lyman; 1842, Deacon John B. Lyman; 1842-71, Thaddeus Clark; 1842-70, Strong Clark; 1859, Deacon Timothy P. Bates, Deacon David B. Phelps; 1859-65, Elisha A. Edwards; 1864, Isaac Parsons; 1872, Justin W. Clark; 1873, Deacon Stephen Lyman; 1865-75, Benjamin Norton; 1876, Wm. D. Boyd; 1877-78, Isaac Parsons, J. W. Clark, Lyman W. Searl, Wm. V. Strong.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SOUTHAMPTON.

Simeon Sheldon and wife, having attended Methodist meeting at Holyoke, invited Rev. Rufus Baker, a local minister, to preach in their neighborhood. He accepted the invitation, and established meetings in the school-house at "Foggin-town." Rev. Messrs. Douglass, Gross, Hayden, and Hastings continued the efforts. Rev. H. Battin succeeded, and took charge of the meetings in 1840 and 1841. Previously, however, a class had been organized, which held its relation to the church at Westfield. The members of this class were as follows: Simeon Sheldon, Naomi Sheldon, E. Almira Sheldon, Lucretia Clapp, and Ira Searl.

Rev. H. Battin succeeded in procuring the organization of a church in May, 1842. The same spring Conference sent Rev. Thomas Marcy, the first regular Conference preacher.

The original members were Henry Battin, Fanny Battin, Simeon Sheldon, Naomi Sheldon,† Harris Nimocks,† Lucy B. Nimocks, Charles C. Gillette, Merrick Searl, Lucy B. Searl, Silence Williams, Sarah M. Chapman, Lorenzo Clark, Betsey Clark, Chiloe Burt, Royal Burt, Luther Morgan, Thomas Howard, Cordelia F. Moore, Eliza Strong, Alpheus Strong, Elam A. Hitchcock,† Lovina Burt, Rhoda Clapp, Thaddeus Clapp, Amelia A. Luddington,† and Amos B. Luddington.†

The succession of pastors has been: Thomas Marcy, 1842; J. W. Dadman, 1843-44; F. A. Griswold, 1845; Freeman Nutting, 1846; H. M. Nichols, 1847; Ephraim Scott, 1848; George E. Chapman, 1849; Wm. Pentecost, 1850-51; Franklin Fisk, 1852-53; Judah Crosby, 1854-55; David Kilbourn, 1856-58; William G. Leonard, 1859-60; L. R. Brewster, 1862-63; N. Fellows, 1864-65; G. R. Bent, 1866-67; L. White, 1868-69; J. W. Merrill, 1869-70; B. T. Johnson, 1871-72; Joseph Candlin, 1872-75; H. Matthews, 1875-76; A. Webster Mills, 1877, and present pastor (January, 1879).

The church edifice was erected in 1844 at a cost of about $2700, and was dedicated in November of that year. The sermon upon that occasion was preached by Rev. Mark Trafton. To erect the house of worship required much effort and great sacrifices on the part of this congregation. They incurred at the outset considerable of a debt, which was not liquidated until 1848.

The first business or parish meeting was held at the town-house, Feb. 21, 1844. It was called on the petition of 32 citizens. The warrant was issued by Elisha Edwards, justice of the peace, and directed to Artemas Barnes, who notified the meeting. Elisha Edwards called to order. Orange Strong, Clerk; Artemas Barnes, Moderator; Artemas Barnes and Chauncey Clapp, Assessors; Elisha Warner, Treasurer; Simeon Sheldon, Collector; John W. Dadman, Chauncey Clapp, and Simeon Sheldon, Committee on By-Laws; Chauncey Clapp, John W. Dadman, Harris Nimocks, Simeon Sheldon, Artemas Barnes, Rufus Strong, and Morris Searl, Building Committee.

The building committee reported, Feb. 28, 1844, the dimensions to be 60 by 42, with a basement; expense estimated at $2000; $1000 then raised, and a loan could be obtained of $1000; voted to proceed.

April 16, 1844.—Deed read; voted to settle title in a board of five trustees, and chose Simeon Sheldon, Chauncey Clapp, Harris Nimocks, Merrick Searl, and Artemas Barnes. Report of committee after building was $2431; other expenses followed.

The records of the Quarterly Conference, Jan. 20, 1845, soon after the building of the house, show the following official members: Simeon Sheldon, Harris Nimocks, H. Battin, and M. Searl. The house was remodeled, enlarged, and furnished with a pipe-organ in 1877. There has been a Sunday-school from the first.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The first death in town is said to have been that of Simeon Wait. This was in 1738. His death was occasioned by drinking cold water. His remains were buried in the present Central Cemetery. This dates back, therefore, one hundred and forty-one years. It is situated a little north of the village, has been kept in a good state of preservation, and is cared for at the present time as so venerable and sacred a place ought to be. In the west part of the town is another burial-place, not so old as the one at the centre, yet of considerable antiquity. It is still in use. It is not known that there are more than one or two places of private burial in town. The early establishment of the ground at the centre prevented burial on individual farms.

Southampton, too, has been spared the unpleasant experience of having an old burial-place given up, destroyed, and the remains of the dead rudely disturbed by the encroachment of business. A handsome soldiers' monument is placed near the front entrance to the cemetery at the village, bearing the following inscription:

"Erected by the Town of Southampton and Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, in grateful remembrance of the patriotic and brave volunteers of Southampton whose lives were sacrificed in defence of liberty and union during the great Rebellion."

TOWN SOCIETIES.

One of unusual note was the "Southampton Association of Ministers," formed August, 1826, composed of natives of the town who had entered the ministry. It numbered variously from thirteen to thirty. Few rural towns could ever have organized such an association so numerous from their own citizens. Their names appear elsewhere in these sketches. They had triennial gatherings, and their meetings were of great interest, combining religious, literary, and social features. Death thinned their ranks, removal to distant States scattered the survivors, young graduates entering the ministry were less in number than formerly, and the society ceased to exist. Its history is one of the pleasant reminiscences of the older people of the present time. A large number of literary, benevolent, religious, and temperance associations have existed from time to time, but of too ephemeral a character to offer much material to the historian.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

The present residence of Col. E. A. Edwards is the principal one to be mentioned. Entering that building, venerable with age, yet well preserved, the mind easily pictures the scenes of the olden time. It was the residence of the first minister, Rev. Jonathan Judd, and was fortified for defense. Two ancient chestnut-trees standing near are relics of Indian times. From the higher land above the enemy could toss stones upon its roof, and at the west side was the watch-tower. In these now pleasant rooms, where Col. Edwards and family receive their guests to the enjoyment of genial hospitality and literary culture, there were gathered often the trembling fugitives (forty families, it is said) listening for the war-whoop of the savage, looking for their approach over the western hills, and dreading the torch or the tomahawk. Here, too, those of stouter heart, disguising their own fears, placed the loaded guns ready for instant use and spoke brave words of comfort to the fearful and despairing. The pastor's voice rose in prayer for his people as they gathered within a parsonage fortified for battle. Around this fireside a few years later was discussed the news from Quebec and Montreal as it slowly reached the Connecticut Valley,—the death of Wolfe, the surrender of the province, and similar events. Later yet the minister, leading his people in patriotism as in prayer, wrote here his communication offering, in case of revolution, to reduce his salary and share with his people the hardships of the period. The Declaration of Independence was no doubt read in these rooms to a group of neighbors who came to hear the news.

* Present deacon of the church (January, 1879).

† Still living and members (1879).

The house has stood under three national governments,—the monarchy, the confederation, the constitution. It is said to have been built "the year the French war began." The marks of burnt floors, where the fugitives boiled their pots, are still visible in different parts of the house.

Near the present residence of Martin P. Clapp must have stood the barn of Elisha Clark, where he was killed by the Indians,—the scene of one of those numerous tragedies which "reddened all this fair land."

A part of the present Elam Hitchcock house was the old fortified Bascom house.

The scene of Pixley's death is mentioned elsewhere, and other similar places of special historic note appear under various heads in this sketch.

The "top of Pomeroy's Mountain" is involved in the story of the Pascommuck massacre. Benjamin Janes had escaped and gone for aid to Northampton, but his wife was in the possession of the savages. On this mountain they knocked her on the head, scalped her, and left her for dead. The flight of the Indians was a hurried one, pursuit was prompt, and Mrs. Janes was taken up alive and lived to a good old age. There can be nothing in modern "blood-and-thunder romances" more wonderful than these incidents grouped together,—the Janes children knocked on the head at the Wait farm and one of them recovering to become the ancestor of a long line of succeeding families, and the wife of Benjamin Janes, in a similar way, almost rising from the dead on Pomeroy's Mountain, where she had been sacrificed.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The business interests of Southampton are mostly agricultural. There is a large area of tillable land divided into valuable farms, while portions of the rougher tracts afford excellent pasturage. The principal crops raised are Indian corn, rye, oats, potatoes, and tobacco,—the latter in immense quantities. A large amount of the best quality of English hay is cut. Much attention is given to the products of the dairy; considerable stock of good blood is kept, and the town makes a fine display of working-cattle at the annual fairs.

The farms and homesteads generally give evidence of the care which has been devoted to them, indicating the taste and thrift of their owners. In quite a number of instances they belong to the descendants of the men who settled them one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty years ago. The old ancestral names of 1730 are still prominent upon the records of the town and in public life.

In earlier years the extensive forests furnished a large amount of lumber, and the saw-mills existing at one time in town are said to have turned out 300,000 feet in a year. With the clearing up of the farms, this business has been largely reduced in later years.

Mills, Factories, etc.—In the northwest part of the town, on the west branch of the Manhan, was the Isaac Parsons saw-mill (originally Theodore Parsons), dating back perhaps to nearly the first settlement. There are buildings yet standing at this place, but the business is mostly given up.

On the east branch of the Manhan was the Clapp saw-mill, not so early as the other, continued for many years, but now abandoned.

On another small brook, a tributary of East Branch, was the bark-mill of Israel Searl. It was in this that a fearful accident occurred, his son, Lyman Searl, being caught in the machinery and killed.

Below, on the main stream, is the well-known Bartlett mill, dating back to 1825 or 1830; burnt out a few years since, but rebuilt and now in use. Present proprietor, Allen C. Bartlett. It was formerly owned by Stephen E. Searl, and built by one of the Lymans.

Farther south on the Manhan was the old Sheldon grist-mill, built perhaps as early as 1790, or even earlier. Pliny Sheldon was the proprietor for many years, and built it. The mill was burned 1860 to 1863, and not rebuilt.

At this same point was the old Clover mill, built perhaps as early as 1818, and run for twenty or thirty years. Zaavan Moore was the proprietor for a large portion of the time.

In later years was a saw-mill in connection with this water privilege by Joseph S. Clark and Wm. Miller.

The buildings have all been abandoned for many years, and the water-power is now unimproved.

A short distance below was the site of a very early saw-mill, one of the oldest built in town; also a grist-mill, carried on by Oren Root, and afterward by Silas Sheldon.

At the present time there is a saw-mill owned by Mather Root; something of the whip business is also carried on there.

A few rods south were the old clothier-works of Joseph Russell, built in the early part of this century. The business carried on by him, and by his sons after him, has given the name of Russellville to this place.

The old buildings were burned. Upon the same site the Russells erected, twenty years ago or more, new buildings, and established the whip business, which they have carried on to the present time.

Near the old clothing-mill of Joseph Russell was the blacksmith-shop erected by Mr. Churchill 1800 to 1810, and afterward owned by Parsons Clark, and later by Moses Searl. A trip-hammer was in use at this shop, and a large business was done. The hammer and bellow were run by water-power.

At Russellville axe-helves were made at one time by Mr. Leland, turned by water-power.

On a branch known as Roaring Brook, flowing into this town from Montgomery, the upper mill-site improved, was for a saw-mill twenty years ago or more,—now abandoned.

Below is the whip-factory of Charles D. Russell.

Tracing the Manhan northward as it returns from the southern bend in Westfield, there is a tributary known as the Great Mountain Brook. Upon the upper waters of this was the saw-mill of Elisha Searl, afterward owned by Wolcott and later by Stearns,—buildings gone. Below was a bark-mill, an old affair.

Next below, the manufacture of chairs was carried on for a time.

On this stream were the old and well-known clothier-works of Zophar Searl, succeeded by a woolen-mill, a saw-mill, and a shingle-mill. There was also here a cotton-batting mill, run by Mr. Simmons. "Railroad waste" was also cleaned here. There was also a saw-mill built by S. C. Burt, and a shingle-mill.

Upon the Manhan the water privilege of Elijah Lyon & Son is the site of the most ancient mills in all this section.

March 15, 1732, at a meeting of the proprietors it was voted that liberty be given to four men—viz., Deacon Clark, Joseph Wright, Ebenezer Sheldon, and Jonathan Strong—to set up a saw-mill either upon the great brook at the Falls, or below it upon Manhan River, at their election, upon condition they shall prepare said mill for sawing before next winter; and the committee did also agree and consider to let them have such a quantity of land as they should judge convenient at the place of and about said mill as a part of their said proportion in said land.

It is not easy to ascertain whether this mill was actually built at that time, though it is probable that it was. It was followed by a grist-mill at an early day, and they were known as Strong's mills in the childhood of the oldest citizens now living. Phineas Strong was connected with them for many years.

The mills passed from the Strong's to Holly & Root twenty years ago or more, and then to Mr. Stimson, who was succeeded by the present proprietors. The Messrs. Lyon have met with severe losses by fire and flood within a year past; but it is understood that they intend to rebuild, and re-establish their business upon this historic old site.

Mr. Stimson was engaged for a time in the manufacture of piano-legs at this place. Mr. Quigley, now of Southampton village, first manufactured whips for a time at these mills.

Two miles below, near Easthampton, is the Maj. Lyman saw-mill. This was built by Lieut. Samuel Coleman, Gaius Searl, Maj. John Lyman, and Jesse Mary. It passed to Maj. Lyman, and was known by his name. The present mills were built by the Lyman family.

At Southampton village on the little brook was an ashery, an old affair. There was also at one time a large tannery and a bark-mill run by water-power. The tannery was built, or at least owned very early, by Paul Chapman. He was followed by Mr. Chapin, and the latter by Mr. Bliss. Later still Mr. Bagg owned the place. The business was given up perhaps thirty years ago. Distilleries were dotted all over the town, it is said, in the old times, when New England rum and cider-brandy were supposed to be a part of the necessities of life.

The ten leading articles of farm production were as follows, with their several values stated, for the year ending May 1, 1875: butter, $27,838; tobacco, $12,749; milk, $27,077; manure, $12,406; hay, $37,103; firewood, $11,125; potatoes, $11,177; pork, $7949; corn, $6916; apples, $6021.

There were also reported: charcoal, $1098; cider, $2870; railroad ties, $2058; beef, $2403; eggs, $2675; rye, $3521; straw, $2825; veal, $1051.

MILITARY.

At the time the settlement of Southampton commenced there was a state of comparative peace. The bloody tragedies of Deerfield and Pascommuck had occurred thirty years before, or nearly that, and something of security had begun to be felt by the settlers in the Connecticut Valley. From 1730 to 1742 the new precinct of Southampton was exempt from fears of Indian massacre.

Its settlement had been made during a lull in the tempest of war and fire that had raged so long. But there followed a period of danger,—a period when every home was to be guarded by the rifle, when crops were to be sowed and harvests reaped at the risk of life and the price of blood. During the year 1743 incessant vigilance became necessary.

A species of fortification or palisade of stakes was built around Mr. Judd's house. Also a watch-tower or mount at the west side of the house, communicating with it by a window.

The inhabitants removed thither for a short time in the height of the alarm. Some of those who went into the fields to perform their agricultural labor took their place as sentinels to prevent surprise. When they walked in the woods or in the roads in search of cattle, or for any other purposes, every man carried his weapon with him. The people of the neighboring towns sometimes marched hither on an alarm, and scoured the woods. The danger for the time being seemed to pass away, and the families gradually removed out of the fortified houses to their own dwellings again.

In the year 1745, Cape Breton was captured by the New England forces under Gen. Pepperell. Several men joined that expedition from Northampton. Among these was Deacon Samuel Edwards, Sr., who had not then moved to Southampton. Elias Lyman was, perhaps, the only soldier that went directly from Southampton. No Indians were seen in the town that year.

Early in the spring of 1746 an expedition was proposed against the French and Indians in Canada, and several of the inhabitants of Southampton enlisted. The project was, however, abandoned. On the 25th of August, 1746, the houses of Aaron and Elisha Clark, which had been deserted by the families, were plundered by the Indians; beds were torn in pieces, clothing and provisions seized, and other violence was committed.

The Indians, supposing themselves discovered, fled to Pomeroy's Mountain, and on the west side of it killed six horned cattle and one horse, and wounded others.

About Sept. 10, 1746, the Indians placed an ambush between the houses of Ezra Strong and John Wait, near the bars leading to a field where cows were pastured. The Indians drove the cows to the back part of the pasture in order that the individual who should be sent to drive them home at night might fall into the ambush. But the cows as usual, toward night, gradually approached the bars. The Indians then sent one of their number to drive them to a distant part of the inclosure and keep them there. Samuel Danks, who went to drive the cows home, did not pass through the bars as was expected, but took a nearer course. When he came in sight of the cows he perceived them to be very restless. He then stopped a moment, and discovered the Indians trying to prevent them from going toward the bars. Danks instantly ran and gave the alarm. The Indians fled, and were seen no more during the year.

The next year there was trouble again. On the 27th of August, 1747, about five o'clock p.m., Elisha Clark was killed by the Indians as he was thrashing grain in his barn. His body was pierced by seven bullets, and when found it was covered with straw. Until this time the Indians had not been heard of in the vicinity during the summer. The sorrowful event surprised the inhabitants in all directions. Soldiers from the adjoining towns assembled for the defense of the place and for the pursuit of the Indians. The foe had, however, fled, destroying as they went several head of cattle. They encamped the first night after the attack in Westhampton, near the spot where, in after-years, stood the house of Mr. Noah Strong. Sixteen poles which they set up there were supposed to indicate the number of the party.

On May 9, 1748, about noon, Noah Pixley was returning from a pasture, whither he had driven his cows, and had reached a spot a little south of the highway, a short distance beyond the house where in later years Zophar Searl resided, when he was shot by a party of Indians. First one gun was heard by the people in the centre of the town; then three guns were discharged in the manner of an alarm, which were followed by three or four others in quick succession. Still, Pixley was only wounded in the arm. He then ran five or six rods, when the Indians overtook him, tomahawked and scalped him. In their haste to flee, they cut off a part of his skull. The inhabitants immediately rallied and pursued the Indians, who fled up a path leading to Samuel Burt's residence. At his house they stopped a short time; but, as the family had left it, they did but trifling injury. The people were now in the utmost consternation. Every heart beat with terror. There was no safety by night or by day, in the field, in the road, or the house. They immediately withdrew from their homes and forts, and left the settlement desolate. Most of them retired to Northampton. Mr. Judd and his family went to Suffield. On the 19th of July following, seven families ventured back, and kept a sort of garrison the remainder of the summer. In the autumn most of the people returned, —Mr. Judd, the minister, somewhat later in the season.

This year was remarkable for a combination of three dread scourges of humanity,—war, pestilence, and famine. Three of the pioneers—men of mark in this community—died: Noah Sheldon, Ezra Strong, and Moses Wright. The retreat of the inhabitants left not only the winter grain to be destroyed, but the Indian corn and other crops of the spring uncultivated and lost.

No one was willing to labor in the field unless surrounded by guards. The settlers were obliged to be assisted from abroad. Provisions were brought from neighboring towns. Hay was carried in bundles upon the backs of horses. The year 1749 was marked by the establishment of peace between England and France, and between Canada and the colonies. To Southampton this was a welcome relief; but the year was one of severe drought. The first mowing was a failure, but a rich and luxuriant after-growth was developed by the abundant late rains.

These Indian attacks were the last that occurred; but the alarm of war, calling men to suffer and die, was still heard for many years. In 1754, during the preliminary irritation of the approaching "French war," the whole territory along the Connecticut River was once more alarmed. The old fortification around the minister's house, in this town, was repaired, and the watch-tower again built. It was expected that the former tactics of the French-and-Indian allies might be repeated, and that slaughter and desolation might burst upon these towns as in the days of the fathers of Deerfield, Northampton, and Hadley. But the time had come when French domination was to cease on the northern line. French armies could find no chance to descend the valley of the Connecticut and hurl their savage legions upon the sleeping villages. They were forced to fight—and fight in vain—for the soil of Canada itself. British and colonial troops penetrated their strongholds along the St. Lawrence, and the flag of England floated in triumph over a provincial empire lost and won.

To recruit the forces for these campaigns, men enlisted freely from New England towns. In the army raised to seize Crown Point, there are said to have been ten Southampton soldiers. Two of them, Eliakim Wright and Ebenezer Kingsley, Jr., were killed in battle. Eight survivors returned to their homes. The documents from which these items are gathered fail to give their names.

During the year 1756 a number of soldiers were in the service from Southampton, but their names do not appear in the town records or other authorities, except that Elisha Bascom is named as having served longer than others.

In the terrible tragedy at Fort William Henry, in 1757, when the prisoners were ruthlessly butchered after surrender, two from Southampton—Nathaniel Loomis and Joel Clapp—were stripped and plundered, and escaped only with life after a hot pursuit and passing through the woods fourteen miles. The annals of the period also indicate that Southampton men were in the battles at Fort Ticonderoga, 1758. Doubtless, too, some of these men remained in the service, and were with the victorious army that captured Quebec and laid the foundation of the general peace that followed.

Southampton evidently bore its share in the "old French war," and it is a matter of regret that a complete list of the heroes of that struggle has not been preserved.

In the thickening troubles that preceded the Revolutionary struggle, even as early as 1768, the men of Southampton were already intently studying the great questions at issue.

In that year, Rev. Mr. Judd proposed that if the struggle did come between the colonies and the mother-country, his salary should be reduced to as low a point as could be reasonably thought proper. Samuel Burt and Aaron Clark were delegates to the Northampton Convention, and Deacon Elias Lyman to the Provincial Congress that met at Concord, Oct. 11, 1768. The town committee of correspondence consisted of JONATHAN JUDD, SAMUEL BURT, ELIAS LYMAN, AARON CLARK, SAMUEL POMEROY, SAMUEL CLAPP, and ISRAEL SHELDON. A company of Minute-Men was raised, and the town voted to hire a competent instructor for them in the military art, and to pay the men for their time while engaged in drilling.

The historians speak of Noah Burt as particularly active. On the receipt of the news from Lexington, he took one horse from the team with which he was plowing, left the other to a boy to take care of, and went his way to the post of danger. His wife and daughters took care of the farm, entering the fields sickles in hand and securing the grain.

One of these daughters married Mr. Cook, of Norwich, and was the mother of John Cook, now living at Huntington village. He relates many incidents that his mother used to tell in his childhood about the old times of the Revolution. Her father was enrolled as a Minute-Man. His knapsack was ready packed, and gun loaded, waiting for any call that might come. The battle of Lexington had occurred, but the news had not reached Southampton. Noah Burt was plowing, as stated, when a single report of cannon at Northampton (the signal agreed upon for alarm) told the story of danger. Riding one of the horses to the house, the wife handed him the gun and the knapsack, and he went his way to join the soldiers that were gathering at the sound of that signal-gun.

Mr. Cook also gives a family story, illustrating the hardships of that time, and the rough work which the women did. Out of fodder for the cattle, Mrs. Burt managed to harness an unbroken colt with an older horse, and went some distance for a load of straw. Returning, the team ran, the load was lost off all along the road, but the intrepid woman herself stayed on the wagon, and the team, by the aid of a neighbor, was finally secured; and the writer infers she drove back and loaded up the straw.

Nine days after the battle of Lexington this district voted to pay for two-thirds of the provisions for Capt. Lemuel Pomeroy's company, and a committee of nine was appointed to collect the provisions and send them on by team.

The town records show many votes taken upon Revolutionary matters. In 1781 the town voted to raise £200 in silver or gold, and £4000 in Continental money, toward "raising our quota of soldiers." In raising the 5000 men called for by the General Court, June 25, 1776, the quota of Southampton was 17 men. Previous to that, in January, 1776, the quota of blankets called for from Southampton was 6. At the Lexington alarm, 46 men went from Southampton, under command of Capt. Lemuel Pomeroy.

From the treasurer's book we take these Revolutionary items:

Received a receipt from the selectmen, Elias Lyman and Stephen Wright, which sheweth that Nathaniel Searl, Jr., has received seven pounds and four shillings, five pence, and three farthings, in order to uphold the district stock of ammunition. The above entered by Samuel Edwards, Treasurer.

Southampton, Aug. 6, 1777, received order from the selectmen to discharge Ensign Nathaniel Searl the sum of twenty pounds that he received of the town to uphold the town stock of ammunition.

The above entered by Samuel Edwards, Treasurer.

Dec. 12, 1774.—"Order the 5th from the selectmen for what the Treasurer let Deacon Lyman have for his charges in going to the first Congress, 2 pounds, 8 shillings, 9 pence."

The following records in the town books, including the extract from Mr. Judd's letter, give a clear view of the prompt and decisive way in which the fathers met the troubles of the Revolutionary period:

From Rev. Mr. Judd's letter of April 7, 1766:

"Further, I would say that your committee seemed to think that from the Stamp Act, or from some other apparent difficulties, people might be greatly reduced and brought into distress; that it might be difficult to pay the above-mentioned salary. I therefore said to them, and now say to you, that if such a day of distress and difficulty should come, I will join with a committee of yours, and they and I will reduce the salary as low as it can be reasonably thought proper; and I hope this will satisfy you as fully as it did your whole committee."

Oct. 3, 1774.—At a meeting of the inhabitants of the district of Southampton to see what measures they shall think proper to do in this critical day, voted, that Sergt. Aaron Clark should be the moderator of said meeting. Voted, to indemnify the selectmen for issuing out a warrant for this present meeting, and so for issuing out other warrants for other meetings if there should be need of other meetings. Voted, to send one or more persons to meet the Congress at Northampton. Voted, that Samuel Burt and Sergt. Aaron Clark should be a committee or delegates to meet the committees or delegates of other towns in the county of Northampton to consult what measures is best to be taken by the county at this present day. Voted, to choose a committee of correspondence for Southampten. Voted, that the committee consist of Capt. Jonathan Judd, Samuel Burt, Deacon Elias Lyman, Sergt. Aaron Clark, Jonathan Clark, Timothy Clark, Lieut. Lemuel Pomeroy, Samuel Clapp, Israel Sheldon. Adjourned to Monday next. Voted, to choose one agent or delegate to go to the Provincial Congress to be held at Concord, Tuesday, Oct. 11th, and Deacon Elias Lyman was chosen. Voted, to draw money out of the district treasury to pay said delegate's expenses. Samuel Burt and Aaron Clark appointed a committee to get the money.

Nov. 28, 1774.—Voted Aaron Clark five shillings for going to Hadley to the congress. Voted, to adopt the resolves of the Continental Congress. Voted, to assist the many distresses in the gathering of rates if there should be any occasion. Voted, that the constables collect the province tax committed to them immediately, and pay it to Henry Gardiner, Esq., according to the direction of the Provincial Congress. Voted, to indemnify the above constables upon their producing a receipt from said Gardiner, as fully and safely as if they had paid the same to the Honorable Harrison Gray, Esq. This was the overt act of rebellion that withheld the taxes from the colonial authorities.

Dec. 12, 1774.—Chose a committee to see what could be obtained by subscription for the poor of Boston,—Deacon Lyman, Timothy Clark, Lieut. Sheldon, Aaron Clark, Israel Sheldon, Aaron Clapp, Nathaniel Searl, Capt. Judd, and Aaron Strong. Voted Deacon Lyman twenty shillings expenses attending the Provincial Congress. Voted Aaron Clark and Samuel Burt three shillings each, expenses attending the County Congress. Voted, to raise some money to instruct the Minute-Men in learning the art of military. Voted three pounds to some person to instruct them in the use of the firelock.

Jan. 13, 1775.—Voted Mr. Elias Lyman a delegate to the Provincial Congress to meet at Cambridge, in February next. Voted, to give the Minute-Men nine pence a time for twelve half-days' drill. Voted, to concur with the Continental Congress as to buying any goods that were imported since the first day of December last. Lieut. Stephen Sheldon, Timothy Clark, and John Lyman were named as a committee to see that no such goods are brought into this town, and to see that no traders take any advantage in selling their goods contrary to the advice of the Continental Congress.

March 16, 1775.—Voted, to add twelve men to the committee of inspection,—Deacon Samuel Edwards, Samuel Clapp, Aaron Clapp, Samuel Burt, Capt. Lemuel Pomeroy, Elias Lyman, Jonathan Clark, Capt. Jonathan Judd, Sylvester Wright, Sergt. Aaron Clark, Lieut. Abner Pomeroy, Sergt. Nathaniel Searl.

April 28, 1775.—Voted, to pay for two-thirds of the provision for Capt. Lemuel Pomeroy's company. Committee on provisions, Aaron Clark, Deacon Edwards, Eleazer Hannum, Nathaniel Searl, Douglass King, Samuel Burt, Israel Sheldon, Elijah Clapp, and Aaron Clapp.

It will be noticed that this was nine days after the battle of Lexington.

Voted, to choose a committee to treat with some likely man to come and settle with us as a doctor,—Capt. Judd, Ensign King, Elijah Clapp.

March 11, 1776.—Committee of correspondence, Deacon Elias Lyman, Lieut. John Lyman, Timothy Clark, Sergt. Aaron Clark, Capt. Lemuel Pomeroy, Capt. Abner Pomeroy, Jonathan Clark, Aaron Clapp, Stephen Wright, Lieut. Stephen Sheldon, Eleazer Hannum, Israel Sheldon, Josiah Searl.

The last town-meeting called "in his Majesty's name" was on Oct. 26, 1775. They are then called simply by the authority of the selectmen, Oct. 10, 1776, "in the name of the State of Massachusetts Bay."

March 17, 1777.—Committee of safety, Elias Lyman, Deacon Samuel Edwards, Timothy Clark, John Lyman, Lemuel Pomeroy, Douglass King, Abner Pomeroy, Stephen Wright, Jonathan Clark. Voted a committee to look into the state of the town and average what each man has done in the present war. Voted a bounty of twenty pounds to each man who shall enlist for three years.

March 23, 1778.—Voted, to grant Israel Sheldon the stream where his mill now stands, upon Wolf Hill Falls, while he keeps his mill in repair. Voted, that the soldiers that went to Quebec in the year 1776 should be reimbursed their taxes for that year. Voted, to comply with the order of the General Court with reference to articles of clothing for the army; to raise money for that purpose by subscription, if possible; if not, to charge it to the town.

June 15, 1778.—Voted a committee to attend to the supplying of the families of our Continental soldiers, viz. Jonathan Clark, Samuel Burt, Lieut. Lemuel Rust, Lieut. Asahel Birge, Deacon Samuel Edwards.

May 11, 1779.—Committee to attend to the families of the soldiers absent in the war, Lieut. Elijah Clapp, John Hannum, Elijah Wright.

July 7, 1779.—Chose Jonathan Clark to meet with the committees of correspondence at Concord. Voted money for Mr. Clark's expenses, and appointed his son Abner a committee to raise it.

March 18, 1780.—Committee, Lieut. John Lyman, Lieut. Elijah Clapp, Capt. L. Pomeroy, Ensign Nathaniel Searl, Stephen Wright. The sum of 8000 pounds was voted to be assessed upon the people.

June 30, 1780.—Voted, that the town will give the soldiers for three months five hundred dollars' bounty, and three pounds in hard money per month for the time of service. Voted, to add five bushels of Indian corn to what has been already voted to the militiamen now going into the war.

July 14, 1780.—Voted, to furnish four horses and an ox-team & driver, according to the requisition of court, for the army,—Ensign Nathaniel Searl and Ensign Douglass King, committee. Committee on clothing also appointed,—Capt. Samuel Burt, Capt. Thomas Clark, Ensign Nathaniel Searl, John Hannum, Lieut. Elijah Clapp.

Dec. 19, 1780.—A committee to hire soldiers required,—Abner Pomeroy, Abner Clark, Elijah Clapp, Timothy Clark, Joel Clapp, Peres Clapp, Asahel Birge, Nathaniel Searl, John Lyman.

Jan. 1, 1781.—Voted a committee to purchase the beef required for the Continental Army, viz., Nathaniel Searl, John Hannum, John Lyman.

Jan. 31, 1781.—Voted 200 pounds hard money, silver or gold coin, and 4000 pounds in Continental money.

The following note, from the appendix to the centennial address of Prof. B. B. Edwards, gives about all the information that can be obtained as to those from Southampten who were in the army of the Revolution:

"Among those who were engaged in the eight months' service at Cambridge, in 1775, were Capt. Abner Pomeroy, Sergt. Lemuel Rust, Sergt. Gershom Pomeroy, Corp. Stephen Clapp, Corp. Samuel Edwards, and Corp. Ezekiel Wood, together with fourteen privates. Stephen Clapp (born 1749, and a brother of Roger Clapp) died of a fever near Boston, August, 1775. Ebenezer Gee, one of the privates, went on the Quebec expedition. Obadiah Frary, of Southampten, was killed and scalped by the Indians, August, 1777, on a retreat to Stillwater from Moses Creek, near Fort Edward. Elisha Edwards was in his company. Stephen Sheldon, brother of Simeon, died in a wagon in Gates' army. Deacon Roswell Strong was with him. Darius Searl died in the service, probably on Long Island. Aaron Strong was killed by a cannon-ball in an intrenchment at Saratoga. Oliver Pomeroy, a son of Capt. Abner Pomeroy, died in the service near the close of the war. It is believed that a young man by the name of Hall, a son of John Hall, also died in the army.

"In June, 1779, the General Court ordered a reinforcement for the Continental army. The proportion of Southampten was six.

"At another time the following soldiers from Southampten were engaged in the service: Sergt. Jacob Pomeroy, Joseph Bartlett, Elisha Bundy, Samuel Coleman, Silas Pomeroy, Gad Pomeroy, Noble Squires, and Phineas Searl. The last named was in Capt. John Carpenter's company. The others were in Capt. Ebenezer Pomeroy's company."

To this should be added the name of Lemuel Bates, who shared in the hardships of Arnold's march through the woods of Maine, and in the subsequent attack upon Quebec.

It is evident that nearly all the men capable of bearing arms were in the Revolutionary service at one time and another.

Prof. B. B. Edwards adds:

"The people of Southampten were not at all behind their neighbors. They were ready to contribute and suffer at any moment. The young men marched to the scenes of conflict, while the elders, the anxious mothers and sisters, were offering intercession to Him whose hand alone could turn aside the unerring rifle, or stay the pestilence that delighteth especially to walk in the camp of the soldier. The old people have told us that at some periods during the war hardly a young man was present in the religious assemblies. The various burdens incident to these times were shared by all with affecting unanimity. Those who could not fight could load a wagon with provisions or drive it to the encampment of their brothers and fellow-townsmen. Such as were too infirm to bear a musket themselves gladly joined together and gathered the harvest of those who were hemming the British in at Boston, or who, with Col. Brooks, were storming the redoubt at Saratoga."

The general accounts of Shays' rebellion do not show that Southampten had much share in it. Probably some of her citizens were, however, among the disaffected, but their names and deeds have not been preserved.

In 1812, Luther Edwards and John Lyman were the delegates of Southampten in the anti-war convention at Northampton, July 14th. What other part was taken by Southampten in that struggle with England does not appear.

WAR OF 1861-65.

The first legal meeting to consider war matters in the eventful year of 1861 was held October 14th. It was voted to pay to each wife, and to each child under sixteen years of age, and to each parent, brother, or sister of those who have volunteered or who may hereafter volunteer in the service of the United States, and are dependent upon them for support, the sum of $1 a week "when found necessary," and the treasurer was authorized to borrow $500 for that purpose. The records show that many enlistments had taken place without waiting for town action. Men from Southampten were in some of the earliest regiments that marched soon after the surrender of Fort Sumter. March 17, 1862, the selectmen were instructed to borrow whatever sum of money might be necessary to carry out the provisions of the law with reference to State aid to families of volunteers. September 2d, voted to pay a bounty of $100 to each volunteer for nine months. No official action was taken during 1863, but the patriotic work went on; men continued to enlist, and much labor was performed in the way of sending supplies for the suffering and destitute, the sick and the wounded. It was voted in 1864 to pay a bounty of $125 each for volunteers for three years, and to veterans re-enlisting $25 additional; $1950 was appropriated for this purpose. This bounty was continued to the end of the war, and the quotas required of the town were promptly filled either by enlistment of citizens or hiring of recruits. May 22, 1865, the treasurer was authorized to borrow $3266 to reimburse individuals who had advanced money to encourage recruiting during the year 1864. The long agony was over, peace had come, and the town faithfully met its obligations to citizens who had advanced money in the dark days of the previous year.

Schouler's history states that Southampton furnished 127 men for the war, which was a surplus of 16 over and above all demands; 5 were commissioned officers. The whole amount of aid paid by the town was $10,808.12. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $496,462, and the population was 1130.

Aid to families reimbursed by the State: 1861, $92.28; 1862, $1131.86; 1863, $2013.61; 1864, $1662.21; 1865, $1000; total, $5899.96.

The following list, prepared from the military reports of the State, from the record in the town clerk's office, and by inquiry, is supposed to contain the name of every citizen of Southampton who served in the army of 1861-65:

Marshall D. Strong, enl. Oct. 15, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. B; trans. to 52d, Nov. 5, 1862, and placed upon the quota of Southampton.
Gideon D. Tower, sergt., enl. Oct. 15, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. E; disch. July 29, 1863.
Samuel F. Edwards, 2d lieut., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; pro. to 1st lieut., Nov. 13, 1862; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Daniel C. Bates, corp., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
Vernon D. Austin, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; disch. Sept. 27, 1864; was wounded in the side at the battle of Newbern, N. C.
William E. Austin, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; trans. Aug. 14, 1863, to Vet. Res. Corps.
Orson R. Childs, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; trans. Dec. 31, 1863, to Vet. Res. Corps.
Erastus L. Cook, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; died Feb. 17, 1862, on gunboat "Ranger," a hired recruit from abroad, but died in service for Southampton.
Alonzo F. Bartlett, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. A; disch. Aug. 17, 1865.
David Duggan, enl. Sept. 1, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. A; disch. July 31, 1865, by order of War Department.
David Maxwell, enl. Sept. 1, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. A; disch. July 31, 1865, by order of War Department.
Russell S. Root, enl. Sept. 1, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. A; disch. July 31, 1865, by order of War Department.
George K. Edwards, 1st sergt., enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. July 7, 1862, for disability; re-enl. March 2, 1863, 2d Inf., Co. A.
Lewis O. Frary, sergt., enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.
Amos B. Pomeroy, enl. Nov. 24, 1863, 27th Inf., Co. F; disch. June 26, 1865.
Charles H. Searle, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; killed May 12, 1864, at Drury's Bluff, Va.
Hiram Spooner, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; killed June 2, 1864, at Cold Harbor, Va.
Elisha A. Edwards, capt., enl. Feb. 20, 1862, 31st Inf.; resigned Sept. 5, 1862, for disability.
Hiorace F. Morse, 1st lieut., enl. Feb. 20, 1862, 31st Inf.; pro. to capt., Aug. 17, 1863; disch. Nov. 18, 1864.
Henry Hilton, enl. Dec. 30, 1864, 19th Inf., Co. B; died of wounds, April 26, 1865, at Washington, D. C.
Albert Allison, enl. May 12, 1864, 26th Regt.; unassigned recruit, and unaccounted for in the adjt.-general's report of volunteers, 1868, vol. ii, page 522.
Matthew C. Clair, enl. Dec. 24, 1863, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. June 26, 1865.
Rufus W. Robinson, enl. Feb. 24, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. A; died July 23, '64, at Andersonville, Ga.
John Quinn, enl. Sept. 24, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. C; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; died of wounds, July 4, 1864, at Point Lookout, Md.

George W. Coleman, enl. Sept. 24, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. D; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 15, 1865, by order of War Department.
Dwight G. Bartlett, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; died Dec. 30, 1861, at Windsor, Mass.
Henry Brant, enl. Aug. 29, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. B.
Gardner Fowles, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.
Nathan L. Frary, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Oct. 15, 1862, for disability.
Gideon B. Searle, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 27, 1862, for disability.
Almon A. Spooner, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.
Charles E. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Gilbert M. Hall, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Jeremiah M. Johnson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died March 8, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
Henry L. Moore, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Feb. 23, 1863, for disability.
Wm. J. Losey, enl. Jan. 23, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. H; pro. to sergt., Feb. 14, 1864; disch. Sept. 19, 1865; re-enl. Feb. 23, 1864, 31st Regt., Co. H.
Lucius Wright, enl. Nov. 1861, 31st Inf., Co. I; disch. to re-enl., Feb. 15, 1864.
Charles L. Edwards, 1st lieut., enl. Aug. 27, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; pro. to capt., April 5, 1864; major, June 26, 1865, five days after expiration of service as capt.; must. out with regt., June 21, 1865.
Flavel K. Sheldon, enl. Aug. 8, 1862; must. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; pro. to sergt.; 2d lieut., June 27, 1864; 1st lieut., May 4, 1865; he was wounded, April 2, 1865, before Petersburg, through the hand and in the chest; mustered out June 17, 1865.
Wm. M. Kingsley, corp., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; killed May 12, 1864, at Spotsylvania, Va.; buried on the battle-field.
Augustus B. Bates, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 21, 1865.
George C. Clark, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; killed May 6, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.; body never recovered.
Frederick M. Hannum, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 21, 1865.
John S. Hyde, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; killed May 6, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.; body never recovered.
Henry A. Searle, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; trans. Sept. 16, 1863, to Vet. Res. Corps; disch. July 7, 1865.
Reuben S. Searle, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 21, 1865.
Richard Leverton, enl. May 2, 1864, 2d Cav., Co. K; died Aug. 9, 1864, at Washington, D. C.
Michael Delhanty, enl. Jan. 27, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. G; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
Robert Pepper, enl. Jan. 3, 1865, 4th Cav., Co. M; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
George H. A. Brown, enl. July 28, 1862, 2d Inf., Co. C; died at Washington, D. C., Feb. 3, 1863; a hired recruit from abroad, but name given because he died in service for Southampton.

Hiram A. Eaton, enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. G; died July 20, 1862, at Frederick, Md.; a hired recruit from abroad, but name given because he died in service for the town.
Wm. H. Lane, enl. Sept. 6, 1864, 2d H. Art., Co. F; trans. Jan. 17, 1865, to 17th Inf., Co. B; disch. July 11, 1865.
Charles Holman, corp., enl. Jan. 3, 1865, 13th Batt. L. Art.; disch. July 28, 1865.
Charles Baker, enl. Dec. 8, 1864, 15th Batt. L. Art.
James Harvey, enl. Dec. 8, 1864, 15th Batt. L. Art.
John S. O'Brien, enl. Dec. 8, 1864, 15th Batt. L. Art.
Robert B. Coleman, enl. July 29, 1863, 2d H. Art., Co. B; disch. May 24, 1865.
Wm. G. Elkins (2d), enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; disch. July 30, 1865.
Marshall G. Hardy, enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; disch. July 30, 1865.
John H. Dustin, enl. Sept. 6, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. not given.
Henry C. Fargo, enl. Dec. 7, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. not given.
Patrick Flannagan, enl. Sept. 8, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. not given.
George S. Meacham, enl. Dec. 29, 1863, 1st Cav., Co. E; trans. Sept. 14, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.
Edwin O. Hyde, sergt., enl. Sept. 14, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; pro. to com.-sergt. Dec. 20, 1863; disch. June 26, 1865.
John Woodruff, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. June 12, 1862, for disability; re-enl. Feb. 3, 1864, 1st Cav.; unassigned, and disch. as rejected, March 2, 1864; again enl. April 6, 1864, Co. K, 57th Inf.; disch. June 27, 1865; lost one leg in the service.
John Dufney, enl. April 26, 1864, 2d Cav., Co. G; disch. July 20, 1865.
David B. Phelps, sergt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Lysander B. Bates, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Watson Root, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Anson B. Norton, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died April 19, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
Robert Baldwin, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Alonzo F. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; re-enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 31st, Co. A; disch. Aug. 17, 1865.
Edwin C. Parsons, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died July 5, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
Jonathan E. Pomeroy, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Morris W. Searle, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Albert H. Strong, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died April 17, '63, at Baton Rouge, La.
Wm. Cruise, enl. Jan. 1, 1864, 2d Batt. L. Art.; disch. Aug. 11, 1865; previously served nine months in the 52d Regt.

Edward B. Duggan, enl. Jan. 1, 1864, 2d Batt. L. Art.; disch. Aug. 11, 1865.
 Frederick Dwight Simpson, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died June 22, 1864, at Washington, D. C.; buried there.
 Paul Trotter, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; wounded in a skirmish before Petersburg; disch. May 25, 1865, for disab.
 George M. Wolcott, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; killed May 6, 1864, Wilderness, Va.; body never recovered.
 George K. Ober, sergt., enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; disch. July 30, 1865; had previously served nine months in the 52d and the 46th.
 Albert E. Briell, enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; disch. Dec. 17, 1864, for disability.
 Rufus A. Street, enl. Dec. 4, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; died Aug. 3, 1862, at New Orleans, La., of typhoid fever.
 George D. Vares, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.
 James M. Williams, enl. Nov. 25, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. to re-enl. Feb. 18, 1864 (West-field); final disch. Sept. 9, 1865.
 Henry C. Loomis, enl. Nov. 23, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. G; disch. July 17, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. Sept. 5, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps.
 Daniel McCune, enl. Dec. 22, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. G; disch. March 23, 1863, for disab.

Frank H. Kellogg, enl. Sept. 6, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; had previously served nine months in Co. H, 37th Regt., and disch. for disab., May 25, 1863.
 Emerson J. Walcott, enl. Sept. 6, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. Jan. 21, 1865; had previously enl. in a Connecticut regt., and disch. for disab.
 Perry M. Coleman, enl. April 25, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. C; killed in the battle of Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862; first man to enlist, and first man brought home for burial.
 Harrison Fuller, enl. May 11, 1861, 2d Cav., Co. C; trans. to 5th Cav., Co. I.
 Victor Visette, enl. in regular army.
 Oscar F. Searle, enl. Sept., 1862, hospital service; disch. April, 1863.
 George E. Rowley, enl. Nov. 25, 1863, 27th Regt., Co. F.
 Wm. McDonald, enl. in 4th Cav.
 George Roy, enl. 49th U. S. Col'd (representative recruit, paid for by Mary S. Rogers, of South ampton, as certified to by Gov. John A. Andrew, Nov. 22, 1864).
 Samuel W. Lane (representative recruit, paid for by Gilbert Bascom).
 Lewis F. Swint, 3d asst. eng., enl. July, 1862, Navy in service to Aspinwall supply and convoy ships; died at Southampton, July 22, 1863, of fever contracted in the service.

Joseph W. Powers, enl. Oct. 4, 1861, 31st Regt., Co. B; disch. June 12, 1862, for disab.
 Chauncey Hendrick, enl. Dec. 20, 1861, 31st Regt., Co. H; disch. Aug., 1862, and died three days after he returned home.
 Wm. W. Thomas, enl. in 31st Regt., Co. B.
 Timothy Hoag, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. D; disch.
 Henry G. Chapin, enl. Sept. 6, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. D; disch.
 George D. Strong, enl. Aug. 10, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. A; disch. May 16, 1865, for disab.
 Luther Archer, disch. before regt. left the State.
 Augustine Barron, enl. April, 1861, 6th Regt.; was with the regt. when attacked by the mob in Baltimore; re-enl. in 22d.
 Henry Griffin, enl. Aug. 19, 1862, 25th Conn., Co. E; disch. Aug. 26, 1863.
 George Foley, enl. in 10th Conn.
 Charles W. Emerson, enl. April 20, 1863, 1st Batt. H. Art., Co. D; disch.
 George Maxwell, enl. Aug. 25, 1862, 46th Regt., Co. C; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Edward F. Barnes, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 46th Regt., Co. I; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Wm. D. Emerson, enl. April 20, 1863, 1st Batt. H. Art., Co. D; disch.
 Henry H. Parker, enl. Feb. 24, 1864.

HADLEY.

THE town of Hadley occupies the northwest corner of that portion of the county of Hampshire which lies east of the Connecticut River, and is bounded north by Sunderland, Franklin Co., and a portion of the town of Amherst, east by Amherst, south by South Hadley and the Holyoke range, and west by the Connecticut River. It contains nearly or quite 17,000 acres, and has a population, by the census of 1875, of 2125.* By the United States census of 1865 the population was 2246. The surface along the river is nearly level, and at the village of Hadley spreads to the westward, forming an extensive peninsula, inclosed by the Connecticut on the north, west, and south. South and east of Fort River is a considerable table-land, called "Lawrence Plain," whose general surface is from thirty to fifty feet above the river-bottoms, and extends southward and eastward to the vicinity of the mountain range. Most of the eastern-central portion of the town consists of a rolling upland, whose connection with the lower surface to the westward is, for some distance, sharply defined by a low terrace or bluff, suggesting the shore of a former sea.

Mount Warner rises immediately south of Mill River, a little west of the centre of the northern half of the town, and is separated from the Connecticut by high bluffs and narrow reaches of bottom-land. North of Mill River the surface forms a low, undulating plain, except in the northeast corner of the town, where are still lower lands called the "Great Swamp." Another, not extensive, tract of low land lies east of Mount Warner, near the Amherst line, and is called "Partridge Swamp."

STREAMS.

The principal streams are Fort and Mill Rivers. The former rises in Pelham, traverses the town of Amherst, and, entering Hadley two and a half miles from the southern boundary, passes in a general southwesterly direction to the Connecticut; the latter rises in Shutesbury, traverses Amherst, and enters Hadley from the northward, nearly two miles from the northern boundary, and flows southward one mile, and thence westerly to the Connecticut, at the village of North Hadley. On each of these streams are several improved mill-sites.

The soil of the river-flats is a sandy alluvium, easily tilled, and yielding ample returns for liberal culture. The uplands are principally of loam with more or less of sand, the last occasionally occurring in separate, extensive beds. Intervals, composed chiefly of a light clay, are also found in situations indicating denudation, or a removal of the lighter materials. These, however, are not refractory, and respond well to intelligent tillage. The town of Hadley probably contains a larger area of good, workable land than any other town in the Connecticut Valley.

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

Hadley† owes her early settlement to certain troubles existing in the churches of Hartford and Wethersfield, which, from time to time, broke forth afresh, notwithstanding the repeated efforts of sundry councils and the General Court to compose them, made between the years 1647 and 1659.

Among the more fruitful sources of discord appear to have been questions concerning "baptism," "church membership," and what was called "rights of the brotherhood." The dissenting minority of the church at Hartford seem to have been the most conservative part of that body, and opposed to liberalizing the conditions relating to baptism and membership, and quite as much opposed to clerical assumptions of power. Some of the members of the church at Wethersfield were similarly affected, and were sustained by the minister, Mr. John Russell. All hope of a permanent reconciliation between the factions having died away, the following application, in behalf of the withdrawing church members, was made to the General Court of Massachusetts:

"Whereas, your most humble servants, the subscribers, with several others of the colony of Connecticut, do conceive that it may be most for the comfort of † Named from Hadley, or Hadleigh, a town in England, in the county of Suffolk, some of whose people settled at Hartford. The Saxon spelling was Headlege.

* Occupations, males, 1875: Clergymen, 1; clerks, 5; merchants and traders, 14; farmers, 279; farm laborers, 219; blacksmiths, 4; broom-makers, 60; brush-makers, 4; carpenters, 9; painters, 6; laborers, 14; total, 618. Females: Teachers, 21; housewives, 475; housekeepers, 20; domestics, 36; other help, 30; total, 582. All occupations, 1267.

them and theirs to remove themselves and families from thence, and to come under your pious and goodly government, if the Lord shall please so to order it, and yourselves to accept it,—we do presume to present this our humble motion to your wisdom's consideration, whether we may, without offense, view any tract of land unpossessed within your colony, in order to such an end; and in case we can present anything that may be to the encouraging of a considerable company to take up a plantation at Nonotuck or elsewhere, we may have your gracious allowance to dispose ourselves there; or in case that be not, then within any of your settled plantations, as the wise God shall direct us and show unto us; we being first of you, presume to tender ourselves first to you, which if you shall please to grant, we hope, through the grace of Christ, our conversations among you shall without offense; so committing you and all your weighty affairs to the guidance and blessing of the Lord, we rest,

"Yours, in all due observance,

"JOHN CULICK,

"WILL GOODWIN."

"BOSTON, May 20, 1658.

The court granted the petition May 25, 1658, as follows:

"In answer to the petition of Capt. Cullick and Mr. Wm. Goodwin, in behalf of themselves and others, the court judgeth meet to grant their request, in reference to lands not already granted, and further gives them liberty to inhabit in any part of our jurisdiction already planted, provided they submit themselves to a due and orderly hearing of the differences between themselves and their brethren."

In October, 1658, the inhabitants of Northampton voted, in response to an application from some of the withdrawers, to "give away" Capawonk,* a meadow lying in the present town of Hatfield, south of Mill River, on condition that the applicants should settle a plantation on each side of the Connecticut, maintain fences against hogs and cattle, pay £10 in wheat and peas, and inhabit by the succeeding May.

These preliminaries having been effected, the persons who contemplated removal entered into an agreement, of which the following record appears:

"At a meeting at Goodman Ward's house, in Hartford, April 18, 1659, the company there met engaged themselves under their own hands, or by their deputies, whom they had chosen, to remove themselves and their families out of the jurisdiction of Connecticut into the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, as may appear in a paper dated the day and year aforesaid. The names of the engagers are these: John Webster, William Goodwin, John Crow, Nathaniel Ward, John White, John Barnard, Andrew Bacon, William Lewis, William Westwood, William Goodman, John Arnold,† William Partridge, Gregory Wilterton,† Thomas Standley, Samuel Porter, Richard Church, Ozias Goodwin,† Francis Barnard, James Ensign,† George Steele,† John Marsh, Robert Webster,† William Lewis, Jr.,† Nathaniel Standley, Samuel Church, William Markham, Samuel Moody, Zechariah Field, Widow Westley,† Widow Watson,† Andrew Warner, Mr. John Russell, Jr., Nathaniel Dickinson, Samuel Smith, Thomas Coleman, John Russell, Sr., John Dickinson, Philip Smith, John Coleman, Thomas Wells, James Northam, Samuel Gardner, Thomas Edwards,† John Hubbard, Thomas Dickinson, Robert Boltwood, Samuel Smith, Jr.,† William Gull, Luke Hitchcock,† Richard Montague, John Latimer,† Peter Tilton, John Hawkes, Richard Billings, Benj. Harbert,† Edward Benton,† John Catling,† Mr. Samuel Hooker,† Capt. John Cullick,† not fully engaged, Daniel Warner.

"1st. We whose names are above written do engage ourselves mutually one to another that we will, if God permit, transplant ourselves and families to the plantation purchased on the east side of the river of Connecticut, beside Northampton, therein to inhabit and dwell, by the 29th of September come twelve-months, which will be in the year 1660 [meaning Sept. 29, 1660].

"2d. That each of us shall pay the charges of the land purchased according to his proportion, as also for the purchase of Hockanum.

"3d. That we will raise all common charges, of what sort soever, for the present, upon the land that men take up: mow-, plow-land, and house-lot, according to the proportion of land that each man takes of all sorts; and all charges shall be paid as they shall arise and be due from the date hereof.

"4th. That if any persons so engaging be not inhabiting there by the time aforesaid, then, notwithstanding their payment of charges, their lands and what is laid out in rates shall return to the town; and yet this article doth not free men from their promise of going and inhabiting."

"5th. That no man shall have liberty to sell any of his land till he shall inhabit and dwell in the town three years; and also to sell it to no person but such as the town shall approve on.

"Agreed that all those persons that will go up within three weeks shall give in their names by this day fortnight, and then those that are so agreed shall take up a quarter together, and so those that follow shall take up another quarter, so they do it together, or so far as their numbers run.

"Agreed, also, that no person shall fell any trees upon any lot of ground lotted out, or to be lotted out, but upon his own ground or lot, or against his own

* Capawonk meadow was purchased of the Indians by the settlers at Northampton in 1657, three years after their first "planting." Twenty of the signers of the agreement, from John Russell, Jr., to John Latimer, inclusive, were of Wethersfield; Tilton and Hawkes, and, possibly, Samuel Porter, were of Windsor; and all the remainder, with one or two exceptions, of Hartford.

† Did not remove to Hadley, or for a short time only.

lot within ten rods of the same in the highway. The land to be lotted in either what is for the home-lots, or between the home-lots and the meadow."

It was also agreed, on the 25th of April, that the company should purchase, if possible, "the lands on the west side of the great river, above Napanset." At this meeting William Westwood, Richard Goodman, William Lewis, John White, and Nathaniel Dickinson were chosen to lay out the lots in a new plantation on the east side of Northampton, to the number of 59 home-lots of 8 acres each, and "to leave a street twenty rods broad betwixt the two westernmost rows of home-lots; and to divide the said rows of home-lots into quarters by highways." The same record further says that, "the plantation being begun by them and some other of the engagers, the rest of the engagers that remained at Hartford and Wethersfield, with those that were come up to inhabit at the said plantation, did upon the 9th of November (1659), at Hartford, and about the same time at Wethersfield, and at the same plantation, choose by vote William Westwood, Nathaniel Dickinson, Samuel Smith, Thomas Standley, John White, Richard Goodman, and Nathaniel Ward, to order all public occasions that concern the good of that plantation for the year ensuing.

"The said townsmen made a rate upon the 22d of November, 1659, for the paying of the purchase of the said plantation and for the minister's maintenance, levying it at 50s. the £100, which in the whole sum came to £180; for the speedy gathering of this rate we sent the rate down to the two towns, Hartford and Wethersfield, that the charges might be truly paid and satisfied by every man according to his engagement, as is visible in the engagement itself, that is dated the 18th of April, 1659."

On the 28th of May, in that year, the General Court made the following provision for laying out the boundaries of a town for the settlers, in accordance with the grant of May 25, 1658:

"Whereas it hath appeared to this Court that, according to a former grant to Capt. John Cullick and Mr. William Goodwyn, in behalf of themselves and friends that desired to remove into our colony, they have begunne to remove to Norwottucke with severall families, and made some beginning on the east side the river, in order to a plantation, and that there are many desirable persons, having a pastor with his church, engaged to goe along with them, with another,† who may in time be joynd to that church for their further helpe in the work of the ministry, whereby they are enabled not only to carry on a toune, but church work also. This Court being willing to remove all obstacles out of their way, and finding the people so many and considerable that have engaged, with severall others that would engage if there might be encouragement found there for them, do order that these persons following, viz., Capt. Pinchon, Left. Holyoke, Deacon Chapin, Willjam Holton, and Richard Lyman, shall be a committee fully empowered by this Court to lay out the bounds of the toune at Norwottocke, on either or both sides the river, as they shall see cause, so as shall be most suitable for the cohabitation and full supply of those people, that this wilderness may be populated, and the majne ends of our coming into these parts may be promoted. Voted by the whole Court mett together. 23, 3, 1659."

In the ensuing September, the committee named in above order made the following report:

"In obedience to an order of the much Honored General Court, in May last, appointing us whose names are subscribed to lay out the bounds of the new plantation at Norwottuck, on the river Connecticut, for the supply of those people that are to settle there; considering what people are to remove thither, and the quality of the lands thereabouts, we have thought good to lay out their bounds on both sides of said River, viz., on the East side of Said river their southerly bounds to be from the head of the Falls above Springfield, and so to run east and by north the length of nine miles from the said river; And their northerly bounds to be a little brook, called by the Indians Nepasoneague, up to a mountain called Quunkwattchu, and so running eastward from the river the same length of nine miles; from their southerly bounds to the northerly bounds on the east side of the river is about 11 or 12 miles. And on the west side of the river their bounds on the south are to join or meet with Northampton bounds (which said bounds of Northampton come to a little riverett running betwixt two pieces of land, called Capawonk and Wequittayagg). And on the north their bounds to be a great mountain, called Wequomps; and the North and South bounds are to run west two miles from the great river; And from North to South on that side the river is about 6 or 7 miles.

"JOHN PYNCHON,

"ELIJAH HOLYOKE,

"SAMUEL CHAPIN,

"RICHARD LYMAN.

"Sept. 30, 1659.

† Mr. Samuel Hooker, son of Mr. Thomas Hooker, of Hartford. He was then preaching in Springfield. See Judd's History.

"A POSTSCRIPT.—Whereas it's said above that their north and south bounds are to run two miles west from the great river; it is intended that the south bounds are the river itself above mentioned, upon what point soever it run, and the two miles west respects the straight line."

The return was approved by the deputies, but was "respected till next court" by the magistrates, some of whom had received grants of land within the territory then laid out. Modifications were made in the boundaries subsequently, which are fully set forth in the chapter on the "organization of the town." The extent of nine miles east and west was never confirmed.

As the order of the General Court of May 28, 1659, intimates that several families had then "begunne to remoove to Norwottucke," it is safe to assume the committee of five, previously chosen, had at once proceeded to lay out the home-lots as directed, so far as the work was practicable. Several of the signers doubtless had been deterred from making immediate settlement by reason of prior grants of land, which seem to have been unwittingly made by the General Court to Simeon Bradstreet and others, within the limits of the new plantation.*

The interesting documents which perpetuate the details of the five years' struggle of the inhabitants to obtain the lands they had purchased, and which record the final unjust decision of the General Court in favor of the claims of Mr. Bradstreet, relate chiefly to that part of old Hadley which is now Hatfield, and will be omitted in this history of the present town of Hadley.

That some of the original 59 who had committed themselves by the agreement to remove went to the new town to reside some time before December, 1659, is probable; and Mr. Judd says that the seven who were chosen in November to "order all public occasions," or a majority of the seven, probably wintered there, with others, and that Thomas Stanley made his will Jan. 29, 1659-60, in which he disposed of his house and land, "that are here at the new plantation."

The first subsequent action of the inhabitants of which a record exists was on Oct. 8, 1660, when, at a town-meeting, held at Andrew Warner's, it was voted that no person should be owned for an inhabitant, or vote or act in town affairs, until he should be legally received as an inhabitant; and that those who settled on the west side should be in all respects equal to, or one with, those on the east side by paying their proper share of all charges, under the agreement; but were required "to be inhabiting there in houses of their own by Michaelmas next,"—Sept. 29, 1661. The following persons, 28 in number, signed the proceedings of this meeting: John Webster, William Goodwin, John Crow, Nathaniel Ward, John White, Andrew Bacon, William Lewis, William Westwood, Richard Goodman, Thomas Standley, Samuel Porter, Ozias Goodwin,† John Marsh, William Markum, Samuel Moody, Zechariah Field,‡ Andrew Warner, Mr. John Russell, Jr., Nathaniel Dickinson, Samuel Smith, Thomas Coleman, John Dickinson, Philip Smith, Thomas Wells, Thomas Dickinson, Richard Montague, Peter Tilton, Richard Billing.†

The first distributions of land in Hadley were made without exclusive regard to the wealth or influence of the recipients. Each of the planters was allowed 8 acres for a home-lot, or enough land elsewhere to make that amount if the home-lot contained less.

The home-lots which were to constitute the village proper were laid out, at least in part, in 1659 on either side of a wide street, which ran north and south across the neck of the peninsula formed by the "great river" Connecticut. The course of the river permitted a greater length to the east than to the west line of the street, the latter being about one mile. Cross-highways divided the row of lots on each side of the wide street into two unequal sections.

The following, as given by Mr. Judd, is the plan of the village as it appeared in 1663. Several new names, not at-to March 25, 1661, their desire to settle on the west side of the river, in the present town of Hatfield: Aaron Cook, Thomas Meekins, William Allis, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., John Coleman, Isaac Graves (with his father, Thomas Graves), John Graves, Samuel Belding, Stephen Taylor, John White, Jr., Daniel Warner, Richard Fellows, Edward Benton, Mr. Ritchell (with his son), Lieut. Thomas Bull, Gregory Wilterton, Nathaniel Porter, Daniel White, William Pitkin, John Cole, Samuel Church, Samuel Dickinson.

HADLEY IN 1663.

Cook and Church did not remove to the west side; Goodwin, Bull, Wilterton, and Pitkin continued at Hartford; Nathaniel Porter at Windsor; Ritchell and Benton at Wethersfield. Sixteen were permanent residents on the west side.—Vide Judd's Hist., page 23.

* By the grant to Bradstreet, he was permitted to take up 700 acres east of the Connecticut, near Northampton. Maj. Daniel Denison had a grant of 500 acres, and Samuel Symonds one of 300 acres, near Mr. Bradstreet, and Gen. Humphrey Atherton one of 500 acres, "at Nonotucke, beyond Springfield."

The General Court, to secure the release of the lands on the east side of the river from the operation of these grants, in November, 1659, increased the grant to Maj. Atherton by 200 acres; that to Mr. Bradstreet, May 31, 1660, by 300 acres; that to Mr. Symonds by 100 acres; and that to Gen. Denison by 300 acres. They were permitted to take up lands on the west side of the river, "provided it be full six miles from the place now intended for Northampton meeting-house." Regardless of this limitation, Mr. Bradstreet, who evidently coveted the rich intervals on the west side, persisted in locating one-half of his 1000 acres within the six miles. This action materially interfered with the west-side settlement, and though the people of Hadley, backed by those of Northampton, protested against it, Mr. Bradstreet's location was finally confirmed in 1662.

In April, 1664, Lieut. Samuel Smith, for the town of Hadley, purchased the 500 acres from Mr. Bradstreet for £200 and a grant of 1000 acres of land elsewhere on the Connecticut. The court made the grant of 1000 acres for the purpose in May, 1664. This land is now in Whately. The north line of the 500 acres so purchased was then considered the north line of Hadley, west of the river.

† Three who voted at this meeting,—Ozias Goodwin, Zechariah Field, and Richard Billing,—with twenty-two others, whose names follow, signified, prior tached to the agreement made at Hartford and Wetherfield, will be noticed. "The figures denote the number of acres in each lot. A full lot of 8 acres was 16 rods wide. There was a broad space between the small lots at the north end and the river, and several years later several small house-lots were granted next to the river, and men built houses on these lots and lived there many years. M in the street is the place where the first meeting-house stood. It was built after 1663."^{*}

SUBSEQUENT DISTRIBUTIONS OF LAND.

The old township of Hadley, east of the Connecticut, was estimated to contain 57,000 acres, of which about 30,000 acres were north of Mount Holyoke. That part of the township lying west of the great river was set off as a separate town by the name of Hatfield, May 31, 1670. An agreement had been concluded, on the 22d of December next preceding, by which Hadley retained "forever the free and full disposal of all the land on the east side of the river, for the maintaining of all common charges respecting things ecclesiastical or civil," and a similar jurisdiction over all lands below or southwest from a specified division line, excepting certain lands therein "already either given or sold to inhabitants on the west side."[†] It was also "covenanted that the society or town of Hadley, on the east side of the river, have liberty to get fencing stuff on the west side of the river, for their land lying on that side of the river, both now and from time to time always, as also to get timber if any see cause to build a barn or shelter for securing his fruits raised there." This agreement further provided that the inhabitants on the west side should pay to those on the east side "£6, as the remainder of what is due for purchase-money." The signers to these articles of separation were, on the part of the old town, Henry Clarke, John Russel, Jr., Samuel Smith, Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., and Peter Tillton; on the part of the "west inhabitants," Tho. Meekins, Sr., William Allice, John Conle, Sr., Isaack Graves, and Samuel Belden.

The land reserved to Hadley by the above agreement in the course of years became in large proportion the property of actual residents of Hatfield, though still a part of the former town and taxed for its benefit. In December, 1707, Hatfield took steps toward securing a jurisdiction over this reserved territory, and in May, 1709, petitioned the General Court to declare the Connecticut River to be thereafter the boundary between the towns. Hadley opposed the change, and asserted that the agreement of 1669 "ought to be binding upon the consciences of all good people." The General Court dismissed the first petition of Hatfield, but recommended that "the selectmen and inhabitants of Hadley accommodate their neighbors of Hatfield, on consideration of the many advantages Hadley has over and above Hatfield." After many subsequent efforts, all of which Hadley opposed with vigor, Hatfield gained the end sought, and the river was made the boundary by act of Nov. 2, 1733.

^{*} Mr. Judd gives the following "Change of Proprietors: In February, 1661, there were 46 east-side proprietors, when the Meadow Plain was divided. Nine of these ceased to be proprietors in 1661 and 1662, viz.: John Webster, died in 1661; Robert Webster, lived at Hartford; Elizabeth, widow of Luke Hitchcock, married in Springfield; James Northam, died in 1661; Capt. Cullick, removed to Boston; Mr. Samuel Hooker was ordained at Farmington, 1661; Richard Weller, removed to Northampton; John Arnold, lived at Hartford; John Kellogg was, perhaps, a mistake for Joseph Kellogg; John Hawks died 1662, left a family.

† Eleven new proprietors were added before March, 1663, making 48, viz.: the town, which took Mr. Hooker's lots; Wm. and Thomas Webster, as one; Henry Clarke, from Windsor; Joseph Baldwin, from Milford, who married the widow of James Northam; Timothy Nash, from Hartford; Chibleab Smith; Samuel Church; Joseph Kellogg, from Farmington, and last from Boston; John Ingram, John Taylor, William Pixley."

‡ These excepted parcels were "the whole accommodations of Mr. Terry on the west side of the river, and the whole accommodations of Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., and half of Mr. Webster's accommodations there, and John Hawks his whole accommodations, and all Joseph Kellogg's, and all Adam Nicholls', his, and that which was Samuel Gardner's in Little Ponsett, and Goodman Crow's in Little Ponsett, and Nathaniel Stanley's in Little Ponsett, and Richard Montague's in Great Ponsett, and Joseph Baldwin's whole accommodations, and John White's in Great Ponsett, and John Dickinson's in Little Ponsett, and except 12 acres and a half above and besides all this when it shall be given or sold to an inhabitant or inhabitants on the west side of the river."

The lands south of Mount Holyoke were set apart for distribution in 1720, "according to the list of estates and polls," as taken in January of that year. The total valuation of estates and polls was then £6063 8s., and the number of persons entitled to share in the division was 117, including 22 residents of Hatfield.‡ The town was allowed a share on the basis of an estate of £150, and Rev. Isaac Chauncey on a basis fixed at £92 16s.

South Hadley was made a "precinct" in 1732-33, and a "district" in April, 1753, with the consent of the mother-town.

About 10,900 acres of land, now in the town of Amherst, were distributed in 1703.§ These were all north of the Bay road. The lands south of that road were apportioned in 1742, of which the larger part was also in territory since named Amherst. That part of Amherst north of the Boston road was made a separate precinct Dec. 31, 1734, and constituted a district Feb. 13, 1759.

Ninety-seven persons participated in the principal divisions of the east precinct (Amherst) lands, of whom 16 resided in Hatfield, but owned land in Hadley meadows, on either the east or west side of the river.||

The remaining lands, or those embraced within the bounds of the present town of Hadley, were most of them distributed prior to 1754. Four of the more valuable pieces of meadow or interval lands were allotted in the years 1661-62 and '63, and were called "Forty-Acre Meadow," "Great Meadow," "Fort Meadow," and "Hockanum Meadow." These contained about 1200 acres.

Forty-Acre Meadow was north of the village, toward Mill River, and contained, notwithstanding its title, considerably more than 67 acres.¶ This meadow and a piece called the Forlorn, with other lands in the Great Meadow, were assigned to "those who lived in the north half of the village," as an equivalent for Fort Meadow, which was turned over to the inhabitants of the south half of the village.

The Great Meadow "included all the land upon the peninsula west and south of the home-lots," and was about two miles in extent east and west. The northwestern portion bore the name of Forlorn, or Honeypot. The Great Meadow contained 710 acres, and was divided into 177 parcels. The whole was arranged in three divisions, of which that nearest the home-lots was called Meadow Plain, and was distributed in February, 1661. A tract in the Great Meadow, south of the south highway, was called Aquavitæ, and still bears the name.

Fort Meadow, south of the village and chiefly north and west of Fort River, contained about 147 acres. A portion was south of the river. The tract contained some low, marshy ground. Upon the division of this meadow among the south inhabitants, each person received 5 acres for each £100 of his estimated estate.

Hockanum Meadow was south of the preceding, and originally contained near 293 acres. It formed a long point or ‡ Inclusive of the estate of Thomas Dickinson, whose heirs were in Connecticut.

§ "Those who intended to remove to Hadley had put in a sum 'to take up lands by' in April, 1659. When the lands were divided, each proprietor received allotments according to a sum annexed to his name, called estate. These sums varied from 50 to 200 pounds, and must have been the result of friendly consultation and agreement. How persons and property were considered cannot be known. Some of the engagers were worth three times the sum set against their names, and some were worth less than the sum so affixed. Hartford had divided lands according to sums set against the names of proprietors."

|| Vide "Amherst," in this history.

¶ If Mr. Judd states correctly, at page 200 of his history, "Forty Acres" actually contained nearly 130 acres.

 A name given to parcels of land used for making up deficiencies. A tract in Northampton was so named.

neck of land whose extent east and west was nearly a mile and a half, with a width varying from 80 to 140 rods. The width was in time much reduced by the action of the river, which in February, 1840, cut a new channel through the peninsula.* Since 1663 the width at that point had been reduced from 100 rods to less than 30. The meadow was divided into lots and apportioned to the 48 proprietors of 1663, in March of that year. The total valuation of the estates at the time was £6145.

The lands known as Inner or Inward Commons were divided at several periods from 1742 to 1764. On the 4th of March, in the year 1700, the town voted that all the land from Mount Holyoke to Mill River, west of a line three and a quarter miles eastward from the meeting-house, should "lie as common land forever." It was supposed that this line would run eastward of the "New Swamp."

The proprietors determined in 1733 that the chief value of the Inner Commons was in the "growth of fire-wood and timber," and ordered that walnut- and oak-trees less than twelve inches in diameter should be cut only for timber, and a few years later gave each proprietor permission to take one pine-tree for boards to every £15 of his estate.

The division of the Inner Commons was made according to the real estate of each proprietor, as indicated by the list of 1731, "with the addition of three pounds for each poll and servant."†

Four divisions were laid out and allotted in 1742, and, "excepting the Pine Plain west of Spruce Swamp, comprehended the commons in Hadley, from near the foot of Holyoke to Sunderland line, and included the land north of Mill River, which is now—1858—in Amherst. Mount Warner was in tracts 3 and 4, in the first division."

A fifth division was made in 1743, embracing lands extending from what is now Belchertown westward, a distance of seventeen hundred and fifty rods, including the northern slope of Holyoke, and bounded north by the Bay road. Most of this division was in the east precinct, now Amherst.

In 1754 the land on the north side of Mount Holyoke, which had been voted a sheep pasture in 1725, and which lay immediately west of the fifth division, was distributed as the sixth division, and the same year "lots were drawn in the seventh division, which was on the Pine Plain, east of the home-lots and others granted on that plain, and west of Fort River Swamp and Spruce Swamp. This narrow, irregular division stretched northward from the highway by Fort Meadow fence, above two miles, to near the Stone Bridge, so called. The portions of poor men were small."

In these later divisions of lands, the old-time liberality of the more wealthy proprietors is not so apparent as when the home-lots were laid out in 1659, and the years succeeding. Mr. Judd says "that the proportion of land received by those in moderate circumstances became less and less in the subsequent divisions." And further, that "the division of 1731 must have been contrived by the large land-holders, and aided by a considerable portion of the middling class. Their rule was, 'Whosoever hath, to him shall be given.' The wealthy man received as much land on account of his slave as the poor man on his own account."

These seven divisions were surveyed and platted by Nathaniel Kellogg, and contained 13,303 acres and 122 rods, as follows: the 1st, 4233 acres, 84 rods; 2d, 2086 acres, 118 rods; 3d, 1677 acres, 84 rods; 4th, 1835 acres, 44 rods; 5th, 2660 acres, 4 rods; 6th and 7th, each 405 acres, 54 rods.

* The peninsula cut off by the river in 1840, and called the "Ox-Bow," was annexed to Northampton in 1850.

† "The residence of the 147 persons in the list of 1731 was as follows: 90 in the old town, 2 near School Meadow, 39 in the second precinct, south of Holyoke, and 18 in what was afterward the third precinct and Amherst."—Judd's Hist., p. 281. The total valuation in 1731 was £3603.

The following is a summary of the distributions of land in Old Hadley, east of the river and north of Mount Holyoke:

	Acres.
Distributions before 1703.....	3,500
Divisions in Amherst in 1703.....	10,000
Flat Hills and lands adjoining.....	900
Seven divisions, 1742 to 1754.....	13,300
	27,700
Highways, streams, and waste.....	2,300
	30,000

Some additional lands were allowed the proprietors of Forty Acres, Hockanum Meadow, and Fort Meadow, under the general designation "skirts," in and after 1675; the first receiving about 225, the second 140, and the last 110 acres, besides a tract called Fort River pastures, which extended "up the river from Fort Meadow fence" toward Spruce Hill. These pastures were "laid out to 22 persons in the year 1699."

FIRST THINGS.

The first school-house was previously the dwelling of Nathaniel Ward, who gave it with a portion of his home-lot for school purposes, and it was so used for many years. Mr. Ward died in 1664. The house was "ready to fall down" in 1710, and two years later the property was leased to Dr. John Barnard for ninety-seven years, at eighteen shillings per year. The first building erected as a school-house was built in 1796, in the broad street "in the middle of the town," and was 25 by 18 feet in size, with 7 feet between joints.

The first meeting-house stood in the wide street, opposite Richard Montague's; was framed in 1665, but not finished until Jan. 12, 1670. A house for meetings was hired in 1663 and 1664.

The first inn or ordinary was kept by Richard Goodman in 1667, in which year it is probable the first general training occurred, Mr. Goodman entertaining the officers.

The first marriage in Hadley was that of Aaron Cooke, Jr., and Sarah Westwood, daughter of William Westwood, magistrate, May 30, 1661. The ages of bride and groom were respectively seventeen and twenty-one years. She died March 24, 1730, aged eighty-six. He died Sept. 16, 1716, aged seventy-six. The children of this marriage were Sarah, who married Thomas Hovey; Aaron, of Hartford; Joannah, born 1665, married, 1683, Samuel Porter, Jr., and died 1713; Westwood, born 1670 or '71; Samuel, born 1672; Moses, born 1675; Elizabeth, born 1677, married, 1698, Ichabod Smith; Bridget, born 1683, married first, 1701, John Barnard, second, Deacon Samuel Dickinson.

The first, and, it is believed, the only, couple belonging to Hadley who were ever divorced were negroes. Ralph Way obtained, in January, 1752, a divorce from his wife, Lois, on the ground of adultery with a negro named Boston.

Illegitimacy was equally rare, only a single case occurring before 1700, and that in 1690. The parties involved were married soon after.

The first male child born was Samuel Porter, son of Samuel, one of the first settlers. He died July 29, 1722.

The first death was that of an infant without name, child of Philip Smith, which was buried in Hadley Cemetery, Jan. 22, 1661. John Webster, who died April 5th the same year, an ancestor of Noah Webster, was the second person buried there.

The first minister was Mr. John Russell, Jr., an Englishman by birth, who came with the first planters to Hadley and remained until his death, 1692.

Dr. John Westcarr† was the first physician resident in Had-

† In 1660, Dr. Westcarr was examined before Capt. John Pyncheon, upon a charge of selling liquor to the Indians. The Indians were the complainants. The doctor confessed that he had two barrels of liquor in the spring, and that he used four or five gallons at a time in preparing medicines. The Indians' testimony showed a different disposition of at least a part of it. "Tackquellawant testified that John Westcarr sells liquors to the Indians; 'and about a month ago I had four quarts of him, and paid him a beaver-skin. This is truth, and

ley. He came in 1666, and was the first Indian trader. Richard Montague, baker; Asahel Wright, butcher; Oliver Warner, hatter; Timothy Nash, blacksmith; John Russell, Sr., glazier; William Partrigg, cooper; Samuel Gaylord, Jr., and Jonathan Smith, weavers; Hezekiah Porter, and possibly his father, Samuel, carpenters. John Barnard had a malt-house in Hadley prior to 1664. Elijah Yeomans, goldsmith, was in Hadley from 1771 for twelve years, and made clocks and articles of jewelry. Samuel Porter, who died in 1722, was probably the first merchant.

GROWTH OF THE TOWN.

The unsettled condition of the colonies from 1675 to 1713, during which period the wars of "Philip," "King William," and "Queen Anne" brought desolation to some of the plantations in the Connecticut Valley, and suffering and disturbance to all, prevented in Hadley any considerable growth beyond the limits of the original home-lots. A few persons were granted portions of land, as hereafter noted, but most of them were in or near the wide street.

Joseph Warriner, in 1669, was permitted to build "in the middle of the street," near the north end. He there built a house and barn, which he sold to Eleazar Warner, after about twenty-one years' occupancy, and removed to Enfield. Between the north "highway to the woods" and the river, the following house-lots were granted, beginning with the one farthest west: John Preston, 1 acre, 1679; Joseph Barnard and Dr. John Westcarr, each 2 acres, 1673; Isaac Harrison and William Gaylord, each 2 acres, 1672; Peter Montague, 2 acres, 1673; Henry White, 3 acres, 1680; Isaac Warner, a quantity in 1681, "extending up the river to Coleman's Brook, west of the highway to Forty Acres." Only one or two houses were erected on these lots before the first Indian war. The palisade, built about the settlement in 1675-76, did not include the houses—five in number—on the north highway. The lots on both sides of this highway have been washed away by the river.

In 1679, Thomas Webster, who had been obliged to abandon his property at Northfield four years previous, was supplied with a house at the expense of the town, in the middle highway "into the meadow," not far from William Webster's.* Small parcels were also granted to John Preston, John Ingram, and Edward Scott, in 1677, '78, '79.

A lot 3 rods by 40 in size was set off to Mark Warner "from the middle highway, next to Mr. Russell's house-lot," in 1680. Although he did not build as contemplated, he did not fail to claim the land. This resulted in a controversy lasting many years.

Additional House-Lots.—The land east of the old home-lots, being farther from the river, was lower than those which were first occupied. This land in what was called the Pine Plain was finally taken in, after 1675, by the extension of all the home-lots on the east side of the wide street, except 5. Land in the rear of the 5 lots—those of John Barnard, Andrew Bacon, Nathaniel Stanley, Thomas Stanley, and John White—was sold, in February, 1675, by the town to Dr. John Westcarr, for the sum of £10. This land had a frontage on the middle highway of 16 rods, and was about 66 rods in depth.

In 1684, February 12th, the town voted that other lots

Chabbatan and Wottellosin know it, and saw it.' Chabbatan appeared, and said Tackquellawant had four quarts, as he testified, of J. W. 'I was with him, and saw it, and saw him pay a beaver-skin for it.' Nuxco testified: 'I fetched liquors from John Westcarr when the Indians were drunken, and my wigwam was broken and spoiled by the drunken Indians this summer. I was before the Northampton commissioners about it. I had six-and-a-half quarts of liquor of J. W., and paid him a great beaver-skin of my wife's. I also fetched three quarts more, and paid him six fadom of wampum.' Nuxco says it is a known trade among the Indians, that it's two fadom of wampum for a quart."

* "Two sons of Governor Webster lived some years in this highway, near the east end, in small houses built by the town. The pound was near them. One of the buildings long remained for a poor family to live in, and was called the town-house."—Judd's Hist., p. 197.

should be laid out upon the Pine Plain, and appropriated "twenty rods in breadth for a highway at the rear of the old home-lots, to run from the north end of the town to Fort Meadow, and eastward of said way, the lots aforesaid to be laid out to begin at Joseph Smith's lot at the north end, and run as far as there is common land to the Fort Meadow, leaving highways into the woods." The lots were each to contain 8 acres and have a frontage of 16 rods.

Although attempts were made toward a settlement in the new street at several earlier periods, it was not until 1699, at the end of the King William war, that many lots were taken in that quarter. Twenty-six lots were then taken, and a few frames for houses put up; but another war caused further delay, and nothing of permanence was accomplished until the final peace in 1713. Fifteen families resided on the new street in 1720.

The following constituted the twenty-six lot-owners on the new middle street in 1699, arranged in order from the most northerly: Luke Smith, Samuel Smith, Samuel Porter, George Stillman, Joseph Smith, William Rooker, Samuel Partrigg, Peter Montague, Ebenezer Smith, Nathaniel Warner; then a highway 8 rods wide, south of which was a vacant lot, subsequently (1713) given to John Montague, Jr., Samuel Ingram, Samuel Boltwood, Widow Hannah Porter, Timothy Nash (two lots); and then a highway ten rods wide, a continuation of the "middle highway to woods." South of this highway were Daniel Marsh, Experience Porter, Thomas Selden, John Taylor, a highway three and a half rods, John Smith, Nathaniel White, Thomas Hovey, Capt. Aaron Cook, John Kellogg, Nehemiah Dickinson, who was next north of the old Bay Road.

Mr. Judd says of Hadley, as it was in 1770: "The progress of the town was slow. There may have been in 1770 about 108 or 110 families, and 600 inhabitants. Only a small portion of the 13,000 acres of Inner Commons, distributed long before, had been cleared, and not more than six or eight houses had been built on the Commons. Some of these were at North Hadley. A few men began to build on the Boston Road about this time. There were no inhabitants at Plainville, nor farther south in the eastern part of Hadley, nor on the Sunderland road north of Caleb Bartlett, nor between Charles Phelps and the back street. Samuel Wright had settled in the northeastern part of Hadley, where his son Silas and his grandson Silas, the late Senator and Governor of New York, were born." He also says, in a note, "Lieut. Enos Smith erected the house in which his son Deacon Sylvester Smith now lives, and finished one room in 1770. . . . Gideon Smith had a house northeast of him, Stephen Goodman had built a house beyond the mill, and Nathaniel White farther east, where he long kept a tavern. There was a house near the mill for the miller."

The wide street was much improved in the course of time, and some ponds, especially one near the meeting-house, disappeared with other unsightly objects. Flocks of geese had long enjoyed the pools, and at times congregated beneath the meeting-house, even on the Lord's day, and, abusing their privileges as lay members, disturbed the services with their incoherent gabble.† The street was reduced prior to 1791 to an average width of sixteen rods and a half or thereabouts. By the many floods in the river the street and some of the old home-lots at the north end have been washed away. Nearly all the land north of the lots of Chileab Smith and Thomas Coleman, as originally laid out, has disappeared, with a large part of the Smith lot, and some of the west end of † The meeting-house and school-house were both in the wide street, while the geese were most numerous. Mr. Judd applies to the situation the lines of Goldsmith:

"The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children, just let loose from school."

But the geese did not long survive the establishment of Hopkins Academy, whose students waged against them a war of extermination.

the Coleman lot. There has been large gain in the meadow at the south end of the street. Middle Street was narrowed to its present width in 1773.

AFFAIRS—PENAL, SOCIAL, DOMESTIC, AND REGULATIVE.

In the early rude, as in the later cultured, age, there was an equilibrium of forces, a law of compensation. The present might not wish to exchange its gas and kerosene and electricity, as means for making day of night, for the fatty candle-wood and tallow-dips of the past, but would welcome a return of that social condition which enabled Richard Fellows, in 1662, to get redress in 10s. damages against Judith Varlete for "defamation," and gave Goodwife Hawk £5 judgment against Benjamin Wait for a "libelous writing." No less would it welcome more extended use of the methods by which, in 1665, Andrew Warner and the heirs of John Barnard composed their difficulties concerning a malt-house by arbitration. Hadley, since that day, has had little need of a resident lawyer, and for many years has had none. Justice was well proportioned when, in 1670, one John Garrett was visited with twenty-four stripes and a fine of £7 10s. for the paternity of a child born out of wedlock to a negro servant of Mr. Russell, while the mother received fifteen stripes. The fine was payable to Mr. Russell; but seven years later he parted with 33s. 6d., upon the judgment of a Springfield court, for saying that Daniel Hovey was a "man of scandalous life." There seems to have been no partiality shown in the court decisions, for it is recorded that Thomas Beaman, having received judgment against John Fisher to the amount of 40s. for saying that "Beaman's mother was a witch, and that he looked like one," was himself obliged to pay 10s. to his reviler, whom "he had fallen upon and beaten." But of all the offenders in Hadley, one Joseph Selding appears to have been the most incorrigible, and particularly distinguished for his defiance of lawful authority. He was one of nine young men who were variously disciplined for riotous conduct in February, 1676, in "stopping and hindering the execution of a sentence which was ordered by authority." This was in the troublous time of Philip's war, and was no doubt an outgrowth of the disturbed condition of affairs and the presence of many soldiers. Selding's after-life was creditable, but he did not remain in Hadley after 1700.

Less creditable to our forefathers, perhaps, was their attitude toward the matrons and maids—their wives and daughters—who disregarded the distinctions created by the sumptuary laws and persisted in wearing silks and "excess of apparel," and even dared to wear them "flauntingly." A glorious liberty was won for their posterity by the martyrdoms suffered in Hadley, in the persons of Hannah (Barnard), wife of Dr. John Westcarr; Sarah (Strong), wife of Joseph Barnard, afterward Mrs. Jonathan Wells; Hannah (Wakefield), wife of Edward Grannis; Abigail (Montague), wife of Mark Warner; Hepzibah (Buell), wife of Thomas Wells, Jr.; Felix (Lewis), wife of Thomas Selding, whose son Thomas was slain at Deerfield, in 1704; and maids Mary Broughton, Sarah Barnard, sister of Joseph; Ruth Warner, daughter of Andrew; Mercy Hubbard, daughter of John, and also the wife of Joseph Gaylord; and a daughter of Joseph Baldwin, Jr. This battle was fought between the years 1673 and 1677, and no body of selectmen thereafter, though urged by the court, dared trespass upon the rights of the sisterhood. Perchance the courage imparted by flip, punch, and tobacco to the inner man was more than balanced by the outward weaknesses in attire,—knee-breeches, silk stockings, and royal wigs. "Perhaps," says Dr. Huntington, "there was finally a compromise between the side-board and the toilet-table."

The housewives of that day, notwithstanding their love for silks, did not spurn the busy wheel wherewith was made the yarns of flax and wool and cotton, nor the loom in which these were woven into fabrics for their families. The distaff and spindle were theirs by divine right, and prouder they doubtless were of their home-made fabrics than of the silks of the Indies. Some of the cloths produced in Hadley between 1745 and 1772 were the following: tow, tow and linen, cotton* and linen, sacking, linsey-woolsey, plain and fine woolen, checked linen, checked woolen, fine check, checked cotton,* bed-tick, diaper, diamond table-linen, bird's-eye, fine wale, striped or streaked cloth, crape, blanketing, fine crash, and coverlets.†

Housekeepers of the present time would envy those of ancient Hadley the nearness and cheapness as well as richness of the shad and salmon. Since a century ago shad and pork have changed places, the latter losing its aristocratic pre-eminence. Near the south end of West Street, in Hadley, was a famous salmon ground, prior to 1795. Forty salmon have there been caught in a single day, some of which weighed thirty pounds, and even reaching forty in rare cases.‡

An act "to prevent monopoly and oppression was passed by the 'State of Massachusetts Bay,'" in 1777, fixing the maximum prices at which the several articles therein enumerated should be sold, and authorizing the selectmen and committees of the various towns to adopt corresponding or proportionate rates within their fixed limits. The following action was taken by the officials of Hadley:

"The Selectmen and Committee of the town of Hadley, by the authority given them by the late act of this State for preventing Monopoly and Oppression, do affix the prices of the goods and articles in this list enumerated as they are to be sold in the town of Hadley: the price of a day's labor, mowing, reaping, and pulling flax, shall not exceed 0. 3s. 0; and other farming labor in the summer season shall not exceed 2s. 8d. by the day; and from the first of November to the first of March, 2s. a day. And that the labor of tradesmen and mechanics and other labor be in the same proportion, according to former customs and usages. The highest price for good wheat (except seed-wheat) shall be 6s. pr. bush.; good merchantable rye, 4s. do.; Indian corn, 3s. do.; barley or malt, 4s. do.; oats, 2s. do.; pease and beans, each 6s. do.; flour manufactured in this state, 18s. pr. cwt.; sheep's wool, good, at 2s. pr. pound; pork, the best sort, fresh, at 4d. pr. lb.; salt pork, clear of bone, 8d.; beef, best grass-fed, at 2½ d. (other in proportion); best stall-fed beef, at 4d.; raw-hides, 3d.; calfs-skins, at 6d.; salt, at 20s. pr. bush.; chocolate, at 2s. pr. lb.; cheese, 6d.; butter, at 8d.; men's stockings, good, 6s. a pair; men's shoes, made of neat's leather, of the best common sort, at 8s. a pair, and others in that proportion, according to their size and quality; cotton wool, at 3s. 10d. pr. lb.; flax, well dressed and good, 1s.; coffee, at 1s. 8d.; tried tallow, 8d.; rough do., 5d.; good tow cloth, yard wide, 2s. 3d. pr. yd.; other coarse linen in the same proportion according to their widths and qualities; flannel, yard wide, checked or striped, 3s. 6d., and others in the same proportion; good oak wood at 7s. pr. cord (in ordinary seasons); tanned hides, manufactured in Hadley, 1s. 3d. pr. lb., and curried leather in the usual proportion to it; veal and grass-fed mutton, 2½d.; stall-fed mutton, 3d.; turkeys, fowls, and ducks, at 4d.; English hay, good, at 2s. pr. cwt., and other hay in proportion; horse-keeping, a night or 24 hours, 1s.; keeping a yoke of oxen, a night or 24 hours, 1s. 8d.; for a mug of Flip, made of West India rum, 1s.; do. of N. England rum, 10d.; a common meal of victuals, 10d.; if a roast^d dish be added, 1s.; white-pine boards, of best kind, 40s. m.; yellow-pine, do., 30s. m.; sawing do., 15s. m. Hadley, Feb. 24, 1777. Signed by order of the selectmen and Committee.

ELEAZER PORTER, Chairman."

SLAVES.

The first three ministers of Hadley owned slaves, as did others of her worthy people. Mr. Russell had a servant, Margaret (who fell from grace), and perhaps owned others.§ Mr. Chauncey owned Arthur Prutt and his wife, Joan, to whom were born seven children. Mr. Williams disposed of a negro woman, Phillis, by will, in 1753, who was probably the "Phillis Smith" who married Ralph Way, Jr., in 1765, and had four children.

Joshua Boston, son of "Boston," was a noted negro in Hadley. Both father and son were the property of Col. Eleazer Porter, who died in 1757. Joshua was a negro of

* This is certainly an error, for cotton was not cultivated in the United States until about 1785, and the cotton-gin was not invented until 1792.

† Much of the weaving was done by professional weavers.

‡ At one time, in the last century, it was disreputable, because an indication of poverty, to eat shad. But anecdotes are told of persons of wealth who surreptitiously partook of that dainty, though tabooed, article of diet. Dr. Huntington tells a family anecdote of one of the Porters, who ordered his negro to watch his opportunity on the river-bank, and stealthily slip a shad under his crock.

§ The inventory of his estate included "three negroes,—a man, woman, and child."

striking figure, dignified, and withal a true gentleman, and was even said to "bear a resemblance to Gen. Washington." He could read and write, was a member of the church, and had served as a soldier in the Revolution. His death occurred in December, 1819, at or about the age of seventy-nine.

The returns state that there were 18 slaves in Hadley over sixteen years of age, in 1755, and 20 ten years later. In 1771 there were 4 between fourteen and forty-five who were slaves for life, one each owned by Charles Phelps, Jonathan Warner, Dr. Kellogg, and Oliver Warner, and others under fourteen and over forty-five.

Among the last of the slaves owned in the town was "Jim," the property of Gen. Moses Porter. He lived to an extreme old age, was finally freed, but chose to remain with the family of his former master. He was tenderly cared for in his old age.

THE HADLEY WITCH.

Mary Reeve, in 1670, became the wife of William Webster, of Hadley. For a time they lived in reduced circumstances on the middle highway leading to the burying-ground, occupying a part of the present lot of Mr. John S. Bell. Poverty did not sweeten her native bitterness of temper, the free exercise of which, aided by the credulity and infatuation of her accusers, brought upon her the charge of witchcraft. Tradition alleges that she performed astounding feats,—bewitched cattle and horses, regardless of the chastisements inflicted therefor by their drivers, upset loads of hay, and then reversed the operation, raised an infant from its cradle to the ceiling sundry times without touching it, and did other and divers evil things that only a witch could do.

She was tried before the worshipful Mr. Tilton, of Hadley, and bound to appear at the court at Northampton, whose grave assemblage of judges ordered her case, "with all the evidences," to be presented to the Court of Assistants, at Boston, and poor Molly's person consigned to Boston jail. The following is the record of the latter court for May 22, 1683, when Governor Bradstreet, Deputy-Governor Danforth, and nine assistants were present:

"Mary Webster, wife to William Webster, of Hadley, being sent down upon suspicion of witchcraft, and committed to prison, in order to her trial, was brought to the bar. The grand-jury being impanelled, they, on perusal of the evidence, returned that they did indict Mary Webster, wife to William Webster, of Hadley, for that she, not having the fear of God before her eyes, and being instigated by the devil, hath entered into covenant and had familiarity with him in the shape of a worraneage,* and had his imps sucking her, and teats or marks found on her, as in and by several testimonies may appear, contrary to the peace of our sovereign lord, the king, his crown and dignity, the laws of God and of this jurisdiction. The court, on their serious consideration of the testimonies, did leave her to further trial."

At this further trial, September 4th, the sensible jury found her "not guilty."

She was subsequently charged with occasioning the death of Mr. Philip Smith, a man of virtue and renown in Hadley, who, Mather says, was "murdered with an hideous witchcraft." It seems her baneful influence was exerted while receiving charity at his hands. He began, in January, 1684, to be very "valetudinarious," and showed "weanedness from and weariness of the world." Existence was impossible with such an array of disorders, and yet Molly would not let him die in peace; caused his medicines to be emptied, his bed to shake, flame to appear in it, and invisible moving animals, and gave him a lively countenance after he was pronounced dead. At last, however, Philip succeeded in his effort to depart, but probably not before some "brisk lads" had dispelled the enchantment by taking forcible possession of Molly and administering summary punishment. They "dragged her out of her house, hung her up until she was near dead, let her down, rolled her some time in the snow, and at last buried her in it, and there left her." She survived the rough treatment, lived eleven years longer in comparative peace, she and Hadley witchcraft dying together in 1696.

MURDER OF RICHARD CHURCH.

Only one murder has ever occurred in Hadley of which any account survives, and that was perpetrated by Indians. The victim was Richard Church, a tailor, residing in Hadley, who had gone hunting in the vicinity of Mount Warner with Samuel Barnard and Ebenezer Smith, from whom he became separated. His companions heard two shots fired, followed by a shout. Search was made by large parties of the inhabitants in various directions, and the body of Church found robbed of his clothes and gun, scalped, and with an arrow in his side and a bullet-shot in his head.

The guilty parties were four "Albany Indians" from Hatfield, where a number of families of that tribe resided. They had been ordered not to hunt east of the river, and from revenge or fear of exposure made way with Church. Mowenas and Moquolas were convicted as principals in the murder, and sentenced to be shot. They were executed at Northampton, Oct. 23, 1696, eighteen days after the murder. Wenepuck and Pameconeset were indicted as accessories, but were not sentenced. Samuel Porter was then sheriff of Hampshire County. The murdered man was a son of Samuel Church, and a grandson of Richard Church, one of the first settlers.

BI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The two-hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Hadley was celebrated with fitting ceremonies on the 8th day of June, 1859. On that occasion an address was delivered by Prof. Frederick D. Huntington, D.D., of Cambridge, and a poem read by Edward Clarke Porter. Both orator and poet were natives of Hadley. The latter, a son of Mr. James B. Porter, had then recently graduated from Yale College, bearing fresh laurels as poet of his class (1858). He became a clergyman of the Broad Church (Protestant Episcopal), and before the first congress of that denomination, at Chicago, delivered the address, October, 1874. He died in January, 1876, honored and beloved. Sweetly did he welcome Hadley's wandering children to their glad reunion, and quite as sweetly does his memory linger among them amid the scenes he loved and of which he sung:

"And thus the peaceful Valley lay,
And watched the River's ceaseless flow,
All blooming with the showers of May,
Or decked with Autumn's garlands gay,
Two hundred years ago.

* * * * *
"And thus the noble River flowed,
And watched the Summer come and go,
As on the mossy banks she strowed
Her flowers and garlands through the wood,
Two hundred years ago."

PROMINENT MEN.

Among the sons of Hadley are many who have held prominent positions. Charles P. Phelps, graduate of Harvard, 1791, Giles C. Kellogg, and Moses Porter each served several years in the Legislature. Mr. Kellogg, a graduate of Yale, was admitted to the Bar in 1804, was instructor in Hopkins Academy a number of years, and became register of deeds for Hampshire County in 1833, and remained in office twelve or thirteen years. John Porter, son of William, graduate of Williams College, 1810, has served in both branches of the New York Legislature, and has held the office of surrogate. Joseph Smith was Senator, 1853-54. Worthington Smith, D.D., late president of Burlington University, who died Feb. 30, 1856; Parsons Cooke, D.D., graduate of Williams College, 1822, founder of the New England Puritan; Rev. Jeremiah Porter; Gen. Joseph Hooker, distinguished in the Mexican war and in the late war of the Rebellion; William Porter; Charles P. Huntington; and Rev. Frederick Dan Huntington, sons of Rev. Dan Huntington,—all, many years since, went forth from Hadley, their native town, and have not failed to do her honor.

* Corruption of an Indian word signifying a wild black cat or a black wild-cat.

The old home-lot of Samuel Porter yet remains the property of his descendants, many of whom reside in Hadley. The line of descent to these contains many names of distinction, and is as follows:

Samuel Porter (1),* one of the first settlers in Hadley, married Hannah Stanley, of Hartford, and had eleven children, of whom Hon. Samuel (2), the first male child born in Hadley, April 6, 1660, became judge of Hampshire County, and died in 1722, "leaving an immense estate of over £10,000." He married twice; by his first wife, Joanna, daughter of Capt. Aaron Cooke, having fourteen children, of whom Eleazar (3) married Sarah Pitkin, was long in a judicial position, and died 1757. He had twelve children, of whom Eleazar and Elisha (4) have descendants in Hadley at the present time (1879).

Hon. Eleazar (4), born June 27, 1728, graduated at Yale, 1748; was justice of the peace and judge of Probate; died 1797. He married, first, his cousin, Anne Pitkin, and had three daughters; second, Susanna, daughter of Rev. Jonathan Edwards, of Northampton, and had six children, of whom William (5), a physician, died 1847. He married, first, Lois Eastman, and had three children; second, Charlotte Williams, and had seven children, of whom one, James Bayard (6), resides in Hadley.

Moses (5), another son of Hon. Eleazar (4), married, August, 1791, Amy, daughter of Benjamin Colt, of Hadley, and had thirteen children, of whom one, Eleazar (6), resides in Hadley.

Col. Elisha (4), born January, 1742, brother of Hon. Eleazar (4), graduated at Harvard College, 1761; became sheriff of Hampshire County; was appointed captain of foot in Col. Israel Williams' regiment of militia, Jan. 18, 1773, and Jan. 22, 1776, received a commission as "colonel of a regiment ordered to be raised to join the American forces now acting in Canada, under command of Maj.-Gen. Schuyler," and July 1, 1781, received a commission as colonel of the 4th Hampshire Regiment. He married, first, Sarah, daughter of Rev. David Jewett, of Rowley, and had six children; second, Abigail, daughter of Hon. John Phillips, of Boston. Of his children, Gen. Samuel (5), born April 15, 1765, held successively the military positions of cornet of horse, 1787; captain of cavalry in 4th Division of militia, 1790; major in 1st Battalion of cavalry in 4th Division, 1792; lieutenant-colonel of cavalry, same division, 1793; and general of militia still later. He was State Senator, 1817, was Representative fifteen years, and long held the position of justice of the peace. He married, October, 1786, Lucy Hubbard, and had six children, —Margaret, Abigail, Lucy, Elisha, Polly, and Pamela. Margaret (6) married, 1810, Rev. Seth Smith, of Genoa, N. Y., and had nine children, of whom one, Abigail (7), resides in Hadley; Pamela (6) married Dudley Smith, and had nine children, of whom four, Sarah Hillhouse, Abby Phillips, Lucy and Samuel Dudley (7), are residents of Hadley; Clarissa married — Cooley, of Hartford.

Stephen Terry, an original settler, had a daughter Mary, who married, 1659, Richard Goodman, also an original settler, and had Thomas, 1673, who married Grace, daughter of Samuel Marsh, of Hatfield, and had Nathan, 1713, and Eunice (5), who married Joseph Smith, and died in 1838. He died in 1830. Their son, Joseph Smith (6), born 1796, State Senator, 1853–54, owns and occupies a major part of the home-lot of his ancestor, Mr. Terry.

NOTED LANDMARKS.

Besides the residences of the early ministers, Mr. Russell and Dr. Hopkins, referred to in connection with the history of the First Church, are others worthy of mention. One of these, on the east side of the broad street, was erected in 1714, by Eleazar Porter, grandson of Samuel, one of the first settlers, and is now owned and occupied by his descendants of the fifth generation. The house is double, with an entrance of double-doors, and with steep roof, sloping toward the street. The southwest corner room—where Gen. Burgoyne was entertained after his surrender, and where his sword, together with interesting family relics of the olden time, is studiously preserved—remains as in the days of the Revolution. From the broad porch on the south side, the venerable minister, Dr. Hopkins, one time addressed a motley and excited assembly during the Shays rebellion.

Another house, next north of the one described, is similar in style, is one year older, and was built, probably, by Eleazar, a son of the Hon. Samuel Porter, and great-grandfather of James B. Porter, a resident of Hadley. The two houses are on the old home-lot of the first Samuel Porter.

Opposite, and a little north from the last-described mansion, is a modest dwelling, low and weather-worn, with semi-octagonal roof, but renowned as the place of birth of Maj.-Gen. Joseph Hooker, in 1815. It seems not to be known by whom the house was erected, though it doubtless stood in the days of the Revolution; an elm of near a century's growth guards the entrance. Joseph Hooker, the father of Gen. Hooker, removed from Hadley with his family to Watertown, N. Y. E. and C. M. Thayer, brothers, are the present owners of the property.

On the old home-lot of Stephen Terry stands a house erected in 1802 by Joseph Smith, who married a great-granddaughter of Mr. Terry. Mr. Smith's son Joseph, now eighty-three years of age, owns and occupies the homestead.

Jonathan White, a descendant of John, a first settler, occupies the original home-lot of the latter, and descendants of Richard Montague now own, and recently occupied, their ancestors' home-lot.

INDIAN LAND-TITLES.

That portion of the Connecticut Valley lying on either side of Mount Holyoke for a considerable distance was known to the Indians and early settlers as Nolwotogg, or Nonotuck,—the name having many orthographies.†

In 1654, John Pyncheon, Elizur Holyoke, and Samuel Chapin, a committee appointed for the purpose by the General Court, laid out one plantation west of the river for the colony at Northampton, extending "from the little meadow called Capawonk or Mattaomet, down to the head of the falls," and reserved the lands on the east side of the river for another plantation.

The Indian titles to Nolwotogg were extinguished at different periods, from 1653 to 1662, by John Pyncheon, who purchased the lands for the benefit of the "planters," as the early settlers were termed. The territory which now constitutes the town of Hadley is embraced in two deeds, which include also lands now in Amherst, South Hadley, Granby, and other towns eastward.

The following deed embraces the land from the mouth of Fort River and Mount Holyoke, on the south, to the mouth of Mohawk Brook and the southern part of Mount Toby, on the north, extending easterly nine miles into the woods:

"Here followeth a copy of a deed or writing whereby the Indians of Nolwotogg, upon the river Quieneticott made sale of certain lands unto Maj. John Pyncheon, of Springfield, together with the copy of the said Maj. John Pyncheon, his assignment of the said deed for the use and behoof of the inhabitants of Hadley, and his acknowledgment thereof.

† Mr. Judd gives the following as the prevailing orthography at the several dates: "Nawattocke, 1637; Nowottok and Nawottock, 1646; Nauwotak, 1648; Noatucke, 1654; Nanotuck, 1653; Nonotuke, 1653, 1655, 1658; Norwotake, Norwotuck, and Norwuttuck, 1657; Northwotock, 1656, 1661; Norwotock, 1659, 1660; Norwotucke, 1659; Norwotuck, 1661. John Pyncheon has in his accounts Nalwotogg, Nolwotogg, and Norwotog, and in his deeds Nolwotogg." Norwotuck was most used by the English. The signification seems to have been "in the midst of the river," having reference to the peninsulas at Hadley, Hockanum, Northampton, Hatfield, etc.

* Numbers in parentheses indicate the generations.

"Be it known to all men by these presents, that Chickwallop, alias Wahillowa, Umpanchella, alias Womscum, and Quonquont, alias Wompshaw, the sachems of Nolwotogg, and the sole and proper owners of all the land on the east side of Quoneticot River, from the hills called Petowamachu, and from the mouth of the brook or river called Townucksett, and so all along by the great river upward or northward to the brook called Nepawsooenegg, and from thither part or south end of the great hills called Kunckquachu (being guessed at near about nine miles in length), by the river Queneticott,—We the aforementioned Chickwallop, alias Wahillowa, Umpanchella, alias Womscum, and Quonquont, alias Wompshaw, of Nolwotogg, on the one party, do give, grant, bargain, and sell unto John Pynchon, of Springfield, on the other party, to him, his assigns, and successors, forever, all the grounds, woods, ponds, waters, meadows, trees, stones, &c., lying on the east side of Queneticot River, within the compass aforesaid,—from the mouth of the little Riverett Townucksett, and the hills Petowomachu northward up the great river of Queneticot to the Brook Nepawsooenegg, and from the south end of the hills Quaquachu, being near about nine miles in length from the south part to the north part, and all within the compass from Queneticot River nine miles out into the woods, all the aforesaid tract of ground called Townucksett, Sunnuckquomnick, Suchaw, Noyey, Gasseck, Pomptuckset, Mattabaget, Wunnaquickset, Kunckquack-qualluck, Neposeoneag, and to the south end of the great hill called Kunckquachu, and for nine or ten miles eastward from the great river out into the woods eastward,—We the said Chickwallop, Umpanchella, and Quonquont, do for and in consideration of two hundred fathom of wampum,* and twenty fathom and one large coat of eight fathom, which Chickwallop sets off, of trusts, besides several small gifts, and for other good causes and considerations, do sell, give, grant, and have given, granted, bargained, and sold to John Pynchon, of Springfield, and to his assigns and successors, all and singular, the aforesaid land, or by whatever other name it is or may be called, quietly to possess, have, and enjoy the aforesaid tract of ground, free from all molestations or incumbrances of Indians, and that forever,—only the Indians aforesaid, and in particular Quonquont, doth reserve and keep one corn-field,—about twelve, sixteen, or twenty acres of ground,—a little above Mattabaget, by the brook called Wunnaquickset, lying on the south side of the said brook, and compassed in by a swamp from that brook to the great river; and also they reserve liberty to hunt deer, fowl, &c., and to take fish, beaver, or otter, &c.; but otherwise all the aforesaid premises the said John Pynchon, his assigns and successors and their heirs, shall forever enjoy absolutely and clearly, free from all incumbrances of any Indians or their corn-fields forever, except as before excepted. And in witness hereof, we, the said Indians, do subscribe our marks this present twenty-fifth day of December, 1658. It is the only corn-field on this or south side of the brook called Wunnaquickset, and the little bit of ground by it, within the swamp and betwixt the swamp and the great river, which the Indians do reserve, and are to enjoy. But the little corn-field on the other side, or further side, or north side of Wunnaquickset, and all the other corn-fields within the compass of ground aforesaid, the Indians are to leave and yield up, as witness their hands.

"The mark — of UMPANCHILLA, alias WOMSCUM,

"The mark — of QUONQUONT, alias WOMPISHAW,

"The mark — of CHICKWALLOP, alias WAWAHILLOWA.

"Witnesses to the purchase, and that the Indians do fully sell all the lands aforesaid to Mr. Pynchon, and that the marks were subscribed by the Indians themselves:

"JOSEPH PARSONS,	EDW. ELMORE,
"JOSEPH FITCH,	SAMUEL WRIGHT,
"ARTHUR WILLIAMS."

The mark R. T., of Rowland Thomas, who was privy to the whole discourse and conclusion of the purchase, and Joseph Parsons, who was present and acquainted with the whole agreement. The other witnesses came in to testify to the subscribing, and that the Indians owned all as it was read to them.

The Indians desired that they might set their wigwams at some times within the tract of ground they sold without offense, and that the English would be kind and neighborly to them in not prohibiting them firewood out of the woods, etc., which was promised them.

Mr. Pynchon, on Oct. 28, 1663, assigned the deed to the inhabitants of Hadley for whom he had made the purchase. The corn-field reserved in the deed was a part of the land since known as the upper School Meadow, and was subsequently purchased by Hadley from the Indian owners.

* Wampum was the principal medium of exchange in dealings with the Indians. This currency consisted of sea-shells strung in the shape of beads, and dealt out in "hands" or "fathoms." Nor was it exempt from depreciation by over-issue. The beads were of several colors, white being the most plentiful. At first, six of the white or three of the black, blue, or purple beads were valued at one penny. They depreciated, as early as 1675, to one-quarter that value, or twenty-four white beads for a penny. The word wampum signifying white, the term "black wampum"—often used by the English—is about as admissible as "white blackberry."

By the other deed—Aug. 8, 1662—Wequagon (formerly called Wulluthearne) and his wife, Awonusk, and Squomp, their son, sold to John Pynchon, of Springfield, the territory from the mouth of Fort River and Mount Holyoke, on the north, to Stony Brook, in South Hadley, on the south, extending easterly ten miles, or to three ponds. The Indians, in the language of the deed, conveyed—

"All the grounds, woods, trees, ponds, waters, stones, meadows, and uplands, &c., lying and being at Nolwotogg, on the east side of Queneticot River, from the hill called Petawamachu, and the brook or little riverett called Townucksett, which formerly Umpanchella and Wowhillowa sold to the English, when they sold them Sunnuckquomnick and bounded it by the mouth of the brook Townucksett and the hill Petowomachu. Now, from the said hill and brook down Queneticot River southward to a brook or riverett called Chusick, where the cart-way goes over it, but at the mouth it is called Cowase, and all within the compass from the great river Queneticot eastward into the woods about ten miles, viz.: to the three ponds called Paquonckquamog, Scontucks, Paskisquopoh. The aforesaid tract of land called Petawamachu, Suchow, the great neck or meadow which the English call Hoccenum, together with the uplands adjoining, and the brook or riverett called Cowachuck alias Quaquoonuntuck, at the mouth of it, and so south to the riverett Chusick alias Cowase, at the mouth of it, and eastward to the three ponds before named."

The consideration for this land was "150 fathom of wampum with ten coats and more, two yards of cloth over in the largeness of their breeches, and several other small gifts, considerable all of them."

There was reserved and exempted from this sale fifty or sixty acres at Hoccenum, which had been mortgaged to Joseph Parsons,† of Northampton, by Wequagon and Awonusk. The Indians were not, however, to be excluded from hunting deer, beaver, and other wild creatures, nor from fishing and the use of fire-wood.

The Indian names of places often did not preserve their orthography throughout the same document, and even the names of the chiefs seem to have been capriciously spelled. The last-named deed was assigned to the inhabitants of Hadley, Feb. 6, 1671.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

The planters at Norwottuck,—as appears from the subsequent action of the General Court,—at a meeting held at the house of Goodman Lewis, on the Monday succeeding May 11, 1661, took steps to secure formal recognition as a town, with definite powers. The order of the General Court above referred to was passed May 22, 1661, and reads as follows:

"On the motion of the inhabitants of the new plantation nere Northampton, relating to sundry particulars, it is ordered by this Court that the said town shall be called Hadley,‡ and that for the better government of the people, & suppressing of sinns there, some meete persons, annually presented by the freemen unto this, shall be commissioned and empowred to act in severall services as followeth: first, the said commissioners, together with the commissioners of Springfield and Northampton, or the greater part of them, shall have the liberty & be impowred to keepe ye Courts appointed at Springfield & Northampton; secondly, that the said commissioners for Hadley shall & are hereby empowred, without a jury, to heare & determine all civil actions not exceeding five pounds; 3dly, that the said commissioners for Hadley shall and are hereby empowred to deale in all criminall cases according to laue, where the penalty shall not exceed tenn stripes for one offence; provided that it shall be lawfull for any person sentenced by the said commissioners, either in civil or criminall cases, to appeale to the Court at Springfield or Northampton; fourthly, that the persons for the yeare ensuing, & till others be nominated and chosen for the town of Hadley, appointed and authorized as aforesaid, are Andrew Bacon, Mr. Samuell Smith, & Mr. Wm. Westwood; 5thly, that the commissioners hereby appointed shall take their oathes before Capt. Pinchon for the faithfull discharge of their duty therein, who is hereby authorized to administer the same unto them. It is also ordered by this Court that the jurymen freemen for trialls at Springfield & Northampton Courts shall take information & make presentments to ye Court of misdemeanors, as grand jurymen usually doe, or ought to doe, and that the Clarke of the Court at Springfield & Northampton send forth warrants to the three townes for jurymen, with respect to the ease of travill to each Court, & yt Mr. John Russell, Sen., be Clarke of ye writts for Hadley, and yt Mr. West-

† Wequagon and his family owed Mr. Parsons eighty beaver-skins for coats, wampum, and other things, and gave him a mortgage May 28, 1662. The land was forfeited to Mr. Parsons, who sold it to the town, and gave a deed therefor March 29, 1663.

‡ Hadley, Hadleigh, or, more ancient, Headlege, is a town in England, county of Suffolk, on the river Berton. The name was probably adopted at the suggestion of some of the early settlers of Hartford, who were from that vicinity.

wood, or, in his absence, one of the other commissioners, are hereby authorized to joyne persons in marriage at Hadley.*

The limits of the old town of Hadley were somewhat indefinite, and have been substantially described in the chapter devoted to the early settlement. On the east side of the river the bounds extended eleven or twelve miles north "from the head of the falls above Springfield," with a width, east and west, of nine miles; on the west side, from the north bounds of Northampton up the river six or seven miles, with a width of two miles.

By subsequent action of the General Court, October, 1663, the town east of the river was limited to "five miles from their meeting-house place up the river, five miles down the river, and four miles east from the most eastern part of the river." In May, 1673, upon the petition of 38 of the inhabitants, the east line was fixed a distance of "six miles from the meeting-house eastward," making the bounds six by ten miles.†

A survey was made by Oliver Partridge, of Hatfield, in 1739, in accordance with the grant of 1673. He fixed the east line of the grant at six miles due "east of the meeting-house," and measured five miles each way—north and south—from the due-east point. From the extremities of this east line he surveyed due west to the Connecticut. The length of the north line was 1422 rods; of the south line, 2334 rods. The north line was farther north, by an average of $52\frac{1}{2}$ rods, than the one previously assumed to be the true line between Hadley and Sunderland, which ran due east from the mouth of Mohawk Brook. Sunderland therefore possessed 457 acres, for which that town gave to Hadley an equivalent in land at Deerfield Falls. This tract was sold by Hadley in 1749.‡

In May, 1683, upon the petition of the selectmen, who, among other considerations, set forth the appalling fact that "the inhabitants are shut up on the east and north by a desolate, barren desert," the General Court granted an addition to the southern portion of the town of four miles square.§ In November, 1727, a tract was added east of that last named, and extending to the equivalent lands, now Belchertown. This addition was about four miles in length, north and south, and two miles in width.

At this period the town of Hadley had attained its greatest proportions, containing by estimate eighty-nine square miles, or 56,960 acres, east of the Connecticut, beside a portion west of the river which was reserved in 1670, when Hatfield was incorporated. Within the ensuing thirty-two years, this "mother of towns" had richly endowed two other healthy offspring with landed estates,—South Hadley became a district in 1753, and Amherst a district in 1759. Hatfield absorbed the "reservation" in 1733. Amherst took that portion of her territory south of the Bay road in 1812, about 700 or 800 acres more from the northeast part of Hadley in 1814, and later, a small piece near the "Northampton road."

The peninsula cut off by the new channel of the river, at Hockanum, in 1840, as described in another place in this history, was annexed to Northampton in 1850, and bears the name "Ox-Bow."

No exact survey of the present town of Hadley, which would enable a plot thereof to be made, has ever been completed. The lines are, however, perambulated, as the law requires, at regular intervals, and trees and monuments upon the lines noted in the official reports. In general, the irregular line of the mountain ridge, upon the south, is the limit in that direction; the west bounds of Amherst, as described in the history of that town, the limit on the east; and the line fixed by Mr. Partridge, in 1739, between Hadley and Sunderland, the limit northward. (See previous note.) The Connecticut is the boundary on the west.

The first townsmen—"to order all public occasions"—chosen by the planters in November, 1659, have already been named in the account of the first settlement.

By the regulations passed in 1662, each inhabitant was to receive a notice before any town-meeting, be fined 6*d.* if tardy one-half hour, or 12*d.* if tardy one hour. If a majority did not appear, those present might "go away and attend to their own occasions." It was also provided that "the townsmen, before every town-meeting, shall choose one of themselves to be moderator, who shall have the ordering of the meeting, of speech and silence therein." A person departing without leave of the moderator should be fined 6*d.*, and be "accounted as one who gives an evil example of disorder to others."

Townsmen were to be chosen yearly, in January, and have power in all matters except "admitting inhabitants, giving of land, laying out highways, alienating fences and properties, erecting common buildings, as houses, mills, bridges, etc., of considerable value, levying of rates," etc.

Offices were multiplied or diminished as occasion required. The first townsmen—selectmen—chosen at a regular town-meeting in Hadley, Dec. 14, 1660, were Andrew Bacon, Andrew Warner, Nathaniel Dickinson, Samuel Smith, and William Lewis. Other officers were chosen as follows: Nathaniel Dickinson, Recorder of Orders or Town Clerk, Dec. 17, 1660; he was succeeded by Peter Tilton, Sept. 4, 1661, who was made also "to record lands," Feb. 9, 1663, and who served more than thirty-one years; Samuel Barnard, who followed in 1693, was "Clerk;" Samuel Smith and Peter Tilton, Measurers of land, 1660; Stephen Terry, Constable, March, 1662; Mr. William Westwood and Brother Standley, Fence-Viewers, "to view the meadow fences," April 24, 1661; Goodman Richard Montague, Hayward or Field-Driver, May 11, 1661; Edward Church and Chileab Smith, east side of the river, and Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., west side, Surveyors of Highways, Jan. 27, 1663; John Barnard, Sealer of Weights and Measures, 1663; Richard Montague, Grave-Digger, March, 1663; Timothy Nash, Samuel Moody, Samuel Church, Chileab Smith, Tithingmen, appointed by the Selectmen, 1678; Samuel Partrigg, Packer of Meat and Fish, 1679. Hog-reeves, hog-ringers, cow-keepers, shepherds were chosen at times in the early days.

Regulations, passed in 1693, provided that 10 men, including a majority of the selectmen, at any legally-warned meeting could proceed with the town business; that fences should be properly maintained, "every man to have a stake 12 inches high at the end of his fence, with the two first letters of his name facing the way the fence runs;" imposed penalties for trespass by persons or animals on a "neighbor's land," or on "common land," and arranged for the "pounding" of stray farm stock, and for labor on the highways and commons.

PRESENT TOWN OFFICERS.

William S. Shipman, Town Clerk and Treasurer; Francis Edson, Charles Cook, G. Myron Smith, Selectmen; Enos E. Cook, Collector; John S. Bell, Alphonso Dickinson, Royal M. Montague, Assessors; Merritt S. Ferguson, Enos E. Cook, William Perkins, Constables; Rowland Ayres, John W. Lane, George Dickinson, School Committee; Ithamar C. Kellogg, Elector under Oliver Smith's will.

FINANCIAL.

Received by town treasurer, from all sources, for year ending Feb. 12, 1879, $22,972.77; disbursed for same period,

* This was, and still is, called the act of incorporation for Hadley.

† A part of this petition reads: "The common feeding-place of our working cattle, whereby we carry on our husbandry, is without our town bounds, and our want of hay-ground is such as necessitates us to seek out some remote, boggy meadow, either to take hay from or carry our cattle to, that we may keep them alive; our interval land, by reason of the high situation of it, being seldom flooded, and so not continuing to yield grass as in the plantations lower down the river, and as here formerly."

‡ Vide Judd's Hist., p. 195.

§ Surveyed by John Chandler, Jr., of Woodstock, in October, 1715. (See history of South Hadley in this volume.)

$21,460.21, inclusive of $2850.88 for schools, and $2129.51 for the town poor. Total town indebtedness, $103,236.71; resources, $12,548.75.

TOWNSMEN OR SELECTMEN.*

- 1660.—Andrew Bacon, Andrew Warner, Nath'l Dickinson, Samuel Smith, Wm. Lewis.
- 1662.—Thomas Meekins, William Allis, Nath'l Ward, Richard Goodman, John White, Sr.
- 1663.—William Westwood, Thomas Meekins, Thomas Wells, Philip Smith, John White.
- 1664.—Gregory Winterton, John Dickinson, John Hubbard, William Allis, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr.
- 1665.—John White, Sr., Joseph Kellogg, Nathaniel Standley, Thomas Meekins, Isaac Graves.
- 1666.—Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., John Crow, Aaron Cooke, Zachary Field, John Coleman.
- 1667.—Thomas Coleman, Stephen Terry, Samuel Porter, John Cole, Samuel Warner.
- 1668.—Lieut. Samuel Smith, William Partrigg, Andrew Warner, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., Samuel Belding.
- 1669.—William Lewis, Francis Barnard, John Dickinson, Thomas Meekins, William Allis.
- 1670.—Henry Clarke, John Russell, Sr., Peter Tillton, Isaac Graves, Daniel White.
- 1671.—Philip Smith, Aaron Cooke, Edward Church, John Crow, Richard Montague.
- 1672.—Lieut. Samuel Smith, Samuel Porter, Samuel Partrigg, Samuel Church, Samuel Moody.
- 1673.—Richard Goodman, Timothy Nash, John Dickinson, Francis Barnard, Thomas Dickinson.
- 1674.—Andrew Warner, Peter Tillton, Ens. Aaron Cooke, Joseph Kellogg, Noah Coleman.
- 1675.—Nehemiah Dickinson, John Marsh, Daniel Hovey, Philip Smith, Chileab Smith.
- 1676.—Lieut. Samuel Smith, Ens. Aaron Cooke, John Hubbard, Sergt. John Dickinson, Francis Barnard.
- 1677.—Philip Smith, Richard Montague, Samuel Porter, Joseph Kellogg, Peter Tillton.
- 1678.—Lieut. Samuel Smith, Aaron Cooke, John Hubbard, Samuel Partrigg, Thomas Dickinson.
- 1679.—Lieut. Philip Smith, Peter Tillton, Timothy Nash, Richard Montague, Ensign Joseph Kellogg.
- 1680.—Lieut. Samuel Smith, Capt. Aaron Cooke, Nehemiah Dickinson, Samuel Partrigg, Joseph Baldwin, Sr.
- 1681.—Deacon Philip Smith, Lieut. Joseph Kellogg, Ens. Timothy Nash, Chileab Smith, Thomas Hovey.
- 1682.—Capt. Aaron Cooke, Samuel Partrigg, John Hubbard, Peter Montague, Daniel Marsh.
- 1683.—Deacon Philip Smith, Ensign Timothy Nash, Samuel Porter, Francis Barnard, Nehemiah Dickinson.
- 1684.—Capt. Aaron Cooke, Samuel Partrigg, Jonathan Marsh, Thomas Hovey, Nathaniel White.
- 1685.—Ensign Timothy Nash, Chileab Smith, Lieut. Joseph Kellogg, Nehemiah Dickinson, Daniel Marsh.
- 1686.—Capt. Aaron Cooke, Samuel Partrigg, Francis Barnard, Thomas Hovey, Samuel Barnard.
- 1687.—Ensign Timothy Nash, Daniel Marsh, Nehemiah Dickinson, Peter Montague, Peter Tillton.
- 1688.—Francis Barnard, Jonathan Marsh, Thomas Hovey, Samuel Moody, Thomas Selden.
- 1689.—Ensign Timothy Nash, Samuel Porter, Sr., Peter Montague, Nehemiah Dickinson, Lieut. Jonathan Marsh.
- 1690.—Capt. Aaron Cooke, Thomas Hovey, Chileab Smith, Nathaniel White, Thomas Selden.
- 1691.—Nehemiah Dickinson, Ens. Timothy Nash, Samuel Porter, Jonathan Marsh, Corp. Samuel Smith.
- 1692.—Capt. Aaron Cooke, Lieut. Joseph Kellogg, Samuel Barnard, George Stillman, Daniel Marsh.
- 1693.—None recorded.
- 1694.—Nehemiah Dickinson, Jonathan Marsh, Peter Montague, Nathaniel White, Samuel Smith, son of Chileab.
- 1695.—Lieut. Timothy Nash, Daniel Marsh, Thomas Hovey, John Kellogg, Samuel Barnard.
- 1696.—George Stillman, Ensign Chileab Smith, Nathaniel White, Joseph Smith, Daniel Hubbard.
- 1697.—Jonathan Marsh, Samuel Porter, Nathaniel Warner, John Montague, Timothy Eastman.
- 1698.—None recorded.
- 1699.—Thomas Selding, Daniel Marsh, Sergt. Samuel Smith, John Kellogg, Corp. Samuel Smith.
- 1700.—Samuel Porter, Cornet Nehemiah Dickinson, Jonathan Marsh, Samuel Boltwood, John Nash.
- 1701.—Samuel Marsh, Deacon N. White, Peter Montague, Hezekiah Porter, Samuel Partrigg.
- 1702.—Cornet Nehemiah Dickinson, Jonathan Marsh, Thomas Selding, John Smith, tailor, John Smith, orphan.
- 1703.—Samuel Porter, Sergt. Daniel Marsh, Corp. Peter Montague, John Nash, Samuel Barnard.
- 1704.—Cornet Nehemiah Dickinson, Jonathan Marsh, Sergt. Samuel Smith, Deacon Nathaniel White, Hezekiah Porter.
- 1705.—Thomas Selding, Lieut. Thomas Hovey, Q.-M. Peter Montague, John Smith, tailor, Samuel Cooke.
- 1706.—Samuel Porter, Jonathan Marsh, Daniel Marsh, Westwood Cook, Samuel Barnard.
- 1707.—Sergts. Joseph Smith, Samuel Smith, and John Nash, Deacon Nathaniel White, Luke Smith.
- 1708.—Q.-M. Peter Montague, Thomas Selding, John Kellogg, Samuel Barnard, Moses Cook.
- 1709.—Jonathan Marsh, Sergts. Daniel Marsh and Samuel Smith, John Smith, orphan, Experience Porter.
- 1710.—Samuel Porter, Deacons Nathaniel White and John Smith, Samuel Partrigg, Sergt. Joseph Smith.
- 1711.—Lieut. Nehemiah Dickinson, Peter Montague, Daniel Marsh, Sergt. Samuel Smith, Samuel Barnard.
- 1712.—Samuel Porter, Jonathan Marsh, Lieut. Thomas Hovey, Deacon John Smith, Experience Porter.
- 1713.—Samuel Porter, Luke Smith, Sergt. Samuel Smith, Westwood Cook, Sergt. Daniel Marsh.
- 1714.—Jonathan Marsh, Deacon John Smith, Sergt. John Nash, Experience Porter, Lieut. Nehemiah Dickinson.
- 1715.—Daniel Marsh, Sergt. Samuel Smith, Peter Montague, Deacon Nathaniel White, John Smith, orphan.
- 1716.—No record, a leaf being gone.
- 1717.—Nathaniel Kellogg, Lieut. Westwood Cook, Experience Porter, John Smith, son of Chileab, Luke Smith.
- 1718.—Peter Montague, John Nash, Deacon John Smith, Sergts. Samuel Smith and John Marsh.
- 1719.—Samuel Porter, Experience Porter, William Dickinson, Samuel Partrigg, Samuel Barnard.
- 1720.—Deacon John Smith, John Smith, orphan, John Nash, Sergts. Samuel Smith and Samuel Moody.
- 1721.—Samuel Porter, Luke Smith, Nathaniel Kellogg, Experience Porter, Lieut. Samuel Cook.
- 1722.—Sergts. John Nash and Samuel Smith, Lieut. John Smith, Samuel Barnard, Moses Cook.
- 1723.—Deacon John Smith, Experience Porter, Luke Smith, John Smith, orphan, Sergt. William Dickinson.
- 1724.—John Nash, Moses Cook, Nathaniel Kellogg, Dr. John Barnard, Sergt. John Marsh.
- 1725.—Deacon John Smith, Eleazar Porter, Samuel Partridge, Samuel Moody, Sergt. William Dickinson.
- 1726.—John Nash, Luke Smith, Sergt. Samuel Dickinson, Ens. Moses Cook, Samuel Porter.
- 1727.—Eleazar Porter, Nathaniel Kellogg, Samuel Moody, Sergt. William Dickinson, Joseph Eastman.
- 1728.—John Nash, Lieut. Samuel Cook, Samuel Porter, Luke Smith, Sergt. Chileab Smith.
- 1729.—Eleazar Porter, Lieuts. John Smith and Moses Cook, Ens. William Dickinson, Job Marsh.
- 1730.—John Nash, Capt. Luke Smith, Lieut. Samuel Cook, Deacon Samuel Dickinson, Joseph Eastman.
- 1731.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Lieuts. John Smith and Moses Cook, Ens. William Dickinson, Ichabod Smith.
- 1732.—Lieut. Westwood Cook, Thomas Goodman, Samuel Moody, Joseph Eastman, Samuel Barnard.
- 1733.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Capt. Luke Smith, Lieuts. John Nash and Samuel Cook, Deacon Samuel Dickinson.
- 1734.—Lieuts. Moses Cook and John Smith, Deacon Joseph Eastman, Samuel Moody.
- 1735.—Samuel Porter, Eleazar Porter, Ebenezer Marsh, Joseph Smith, Nathaniel Kellogg, Jr.
- 1736.—Moses Cook, Ens. William Dickinson, Deacons Samuel Dickinson and Joseph Eastman, Chileab Smith, Ebenezer Moody, Samuel Boltwood.
- 1737.—Samuel Porter, Eleazar Porter, Joseph Smith, Nathaniel Kellogg, Noah Cook.
- 1738.—Lieut. Moses Cook, Ens. William Dickinson, Deacons Joseph Eastman and John Smith, Chileab Smith, John Nash, Jr., Job Marsh.
- 1739.—Col. Porter, Samuel Cook, Dr. Crouch, Deacon Dickinson, Nathaniel Kellogg, Jr., Ephraim Nash, Jonathan Smith.
- 1740.—Capt. Moses Cook, Lieut. Dickinson, Ichabod Smith, Nathaniel White, Pelatiah Smith, Samuel Porter, Deacon J. Eastman.
- 1741.—Col. Porter, Capt. Luke Smith, Deacon Samuel Dickinson, Lieut. Chileab Smith, Nathaniel Kellogg, Samuel Smith, John Nash.
- 1742.—Capt. Moses Cook, Lieut. Dickinson, Samuel Porter, Ichabod Smith, Benjamin Church, William Montague, Ebenezer Kellogg.
- 1743.—Col. E. Porter, Deacon Eastman, Richard Church, Nathaniel Smith, Lieut. Chileab Smith, Edmund Hubbard, James Kellogg.
- 1744.—Capt. Moses Cook, Deacon Ichabod Smith, Samuel Porter, Nathaniel Kellogg, Jonathan Smith, Deacon Eleazar Mattoon, Sergt. John Smith.
- 1745.—Col. Porter, Chileab Smith, Joseph Eastman, Edmund Hubbard, James Kellogg, Luke Montague, Deacon Ebenezer Eastman.

* Usually called townsmen until 1673.

- 1746.—Capt. Moses Cook, Deacons Ichabod Smith and John Nash, Samuel Porter, Noah Cook, Lieut. Chileab Smith, Samuel Moody.
- 1747.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Deacon Joseph Eastman, James Kellogg, Edmund Hubbard, David Smith, Chileab Smith, Lieut. Jonathan Smith.
- 1748.—Capt. Moses Cook, Lieut. Nathaniel Kellogg, Deacons John Nash and Enos Nash, William Smith, John Dickinson, Jonathan Smith, Jr.
- 1749.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Lieut. Jonathan Smith, Joseph White, James Kellogg, Edmund Hubbard, David Smith, Deacon Nathaniel Montague.
- 1750.—Capt. Moses Cook, Lieuts. Nathaniel Kellogg and Ebenezer Kellogg, Jonathan Smith (3d), William White, Hezekiah Smith, Deacon Enos Nash.
- 1751.—Deacon John Smith, Ens. William Montague, Samuel Smith, Thomas Goodman, Solomon Boltwood.
- 1752.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., David Smith, John Smith, Jr., John Nash, Ebenezer Kellogg, Edmund Hubbard, Daniel Nash, Moses Porter, Enos Nash.
- 1753.—Jonathan Smith (2d), Nathaniel Kellogg, Moses Marsh, John Dickinson, Jr., Thomas Goodman, Samuel Smith, Ebenezer Dickinson, Samuel Marsh.
- 1754.—Hon. Eleazar Porter, John Nash, Ebenezer Kellogg, Enos Nash, Samuel Smith.
- 1755.—Capt. Jonathan Smith, Jonathan Smith (2d), James Kellogg, Josiah Chauncey, Joseph Hubbard.
- 1756.—Capt. John Lyman, David Smith, Enos Nash, Eleazar Porter, Jr., Jonathan Cooke, John Dickinson, Joseph Eastman, Jr.
- 1757.—Jonathan Smith, Nathaniel Kellogg, Joseph Hubbard, Charles Phelps, Jonathan Dickinson, Josiah Chauncey, Jonathan Moody.
- 1758.—David Smith, Eleazar Porter, Giles C. Kellogg, Joseph Eastman, Jr., Peter Smith, Capt. Moses Marsh, Edmund Hubbard.
- 1759.—Nathaniel Kellogg, Enos Nash, Jonathan Smith, Samuel Gaylord, Jonathan Cook.
- 1760.—David Smith, Capt. Moses Marsh, Eleazar Porter, Esq., Jonathan Warner, John Eastman.
- 1761.—Enos Nash, Nathaniel Kellogg, Edmund Hubbard, Noah Smith, Samuel Gaylord.
- 1762.—Jonathan Smith, Eleazar Porter, Esq., Capt. Moses Marsh, Capt. John Lyman, Noah Cook.
- 1763.—Giles C. Kellogg, Enos Nash, John Eastman, Jonathan Warner, David Smith.
- 1764.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Jonathan Smith, Capt. Moses Marsh, Jonathan Cook, Oliver Warner.
- 1765.—Deacons Enos Nash and David Smith, Edmund Hubbard, John Eastman, Jonathan Warner.
- 1766.—Jonathan Smith, Eleazar Porter, Esq., Oliver Warner, Nehemiah Gaylord, Capt. Moses Marsh.
- 1767.—Enos Nash, Samuel Gaylord, John Eastman, Oliver Smith, John Kellogg.
- 1768.—Jonathan Smith, Eleazar Porter, Esq., Noah Cooke, Nehemiah Gaylord, Elisha Porter.
- 1769.—David Smith, Jonathan Cooke, Oliver Warner, Josiah Peirce, Phinehas Lyman.
- 1770.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., John Eastman, Elisha Porter, Edmund Hubbard, Capt. Moses Marsh.
- 1771.—Jonathan Cooke, Jonathan Warner, Nehemiah Gaylord, Jonathan Smith, Benjamin Colt.
- 1772.—Elisha Porter, Esq., John Eastman, Warham Smith, Oliver Warner, Oliver Smith.
- 1773.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Jonathan Warner, John C. Williams, Capt. Moses Marsh, Jonathan Cooke.
- 1774.—Oliver Smith, Charles Phelps, Phinehas Lyman, Warham Smith, Eliakim Smith.
- 1775.—John Eastman, Nehemiah Gaylord, Stephen Goodman, Moses Kellogg, Oliver Smith.
- 1776.—Maj. Eleazar Porter, Caleb Lyman, Capt. Moses Marsh, Josiah Peirce, John C. Williams.
- 1777.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Capt. Oliver Smith, Lieut. Moses Kellogg, Caleb Lyman, Nehemiah Gaylord.
- 1778.—Charles Phelps, Phinehas Lyman, Enos Smith, Enos Nash, John Cooke.
- 1779.—Capt. Oliver Smith, Lieut. Daniel White, Thomas Smith, Phinehas Lyman, Ebenezer Marsh.
- 1780.—Col. Elisha Porter, John C. Williams, Esq., Ens. Edmund Hubbard, Warham Smith, Daniel White.
- 1781.—Enos Nash, Stephen Goodman, Enos Smith, Noah Smith, Nathl. Montague.
- 1782.—Eleazar Porter, Esq., Charles Phelps, Oliver Smith, Caleb Lyman, Edmund Hubbard.
- 1783.—Charles Phelps, Timothy Eastman, Warham Smith, Samuel Gaylord, Jr., Capt. D. White.
- 1784.—Nathaniel White, Azariah Dickinson, Lemuel Warner, Stephen Goodman, Lieut. Enos Smith.
- 1785.—Warham Smith, Samuel Gaylord, Seth Smith, Daniel White, Enos Nash.
- 1786.—Warham Smith, Enos Nash, Caleb Lyman, Daniel White, Stephen Goodman.
- 1787.—John Cook, Warham Smith, Lieuts. Enos Nash and Enos Smith, Elisha Dickinson.
- 1788.—Ens. Edmund Hubbard, Capt. Charles Phelps, Lieuts. Enos Smith and Enos Nash, Ens. John Montague.
- 1789.—Capt. Charles Phelps, Lieuts. Enos Nash, Enos Smith, and Elisha Dickinson, Samuel Gaylord.
- 1790.—Capts. Charles Phelps and Elisha Dickinson, Ens. Caleb Lyman, Seth Smith, Maj. John Smith.
- 1791.—Oliver Smith, Warham Smith, Charles Phelps, Eleazar Porter, Esq., Willard Smith.
- 1792.—Warham Smith, Elisha Dickinson, Enos Nash, Seth Smith, Eleazar Porter, Jr.
- 1793.—Charles Phelps, Elisha Dickinson, Enos Nash, John Smith (3d), Chileab Smith.
- 1794.—Enos Nash, Enos Smith, Elisha Dickinson, Samuel Porter, Daniel White.
- 1795.—Elisha Dickinson, Warham Smith, Charles Phelps, Enos Smith, Eleazar Porter, Jr.
- 1796.—Charles Phelps, Esq., Elisha Dickinson, Eleazar Porter, Jr., Seth Smith, Samuel Porter.
- 1797.—Enos Smith, Seth Smith, Samuel Porter, Eleazar Porter, Jr., William Dickinson.
- 1798.—Charles Phelps, Esq., Col. Samuel Porter, Capt. Elisha Dickinson, Lieut. Enos Smith, Elinh Smith (2d).
- 1799.—Capt. Daniel White, Lieut. Enos Smith, Maj. Eleazar Porter, William Dickinson, Col. Samuel Porter.
- 1800.—Capt. Elisha Dickinson, Charles Phelps, Esq., Col. Samuel Porter, Lieut. Enos Smith, Ensign Caleb Smith.
- 1801.—Lieut. Enos Smith, Col. Samuel Porter, Maj. Eleazar Porter, Capt. Elisha Dickinson, David Stockbridge.
- 1802.—Lieut. Enos Smith, Deacon Seth Smith, Capt. Elisha Dickinson, Col. Samuel Porter, David Stockbridge.
- 1803.—Enos Smith, Samuel Porter, Elisha Dickinson, David Stockbridge, John Hopkins.
- 1804.—Lieut. Enos Smith, Col. Samuel Porter, Charles Phelps, Esq., Lieut. Windsor Smith, Timothy Hopkins.
- 1805.—Samuel Porter, Charles Phelps, Elisha Dickinson, Windsor Smith, William Dickinson (2d).
- 1806.—Charles Phelps, Esq., Samuel Porter, Esq., Lieut. Enos Smith, Windsor Smith, Oliver Smith, Jr.
- 1807.—Capt. Elisha Dickinson, Lieut. Enos Smith, Charles Phelps, Esq., Lieut. Windsor Smith, Samuel Porter, Esq.
- 1808.—Capt. Elisha Dickinson, Lieut. Enos Smith, Charles Phelps, Samuel Porter, Esq., Capt. Caleb Smith.
- 1809.—Charles Phelps, Elisha Dickinson, Enos Smith, Windsor Smith, Stephen Johnson.
- 1810.—Charles Phelps, Esq., Enos Smith, Elisha Dickinson, Windsor Smith, Samuel Porter, Esq.
- 1811.—Deacon William Dickinson, Timothy Hopkins, Stephen Johnson, Capt. Caleb Smith, Giles C. Kellogg.
- 1812.—Deacon William Dickinson, Lieut. Enos Smith, Samuel Porter, Esq., Charles Phelps, Esq., Lieut. Windsor Smith.
- 1813.—Deacon William Dickinson, Samuel Porter, Esq., Charles Phelps, Esq., Jacob Smith, Windsor Smith.
- 1814.—Deacon William Dickinson, John Hodge, Capt. Eli Smith.
- 1815.—Samuel Porter, Esq., Lieut. Sylvester Goodman, Chester Hawley.
- 1816.—Gen. Samuel Porter, Deacon William Dickinson, Moses Porter, Esq., John Hodge, Lieut. Sylvester Goodman.
- 1817.—Dr. Reuben Bell, Ens. William Smith, Capt. Ephraim Smith.
- 1818.—Dr. Reuben Bell, Lieut. William Smith, Capt. Ephraim Smith.
- 1819.—Hon. Samuel Porter, Capt. Ephraim Smith, Lieut. Sylvester Smith.
- 1820.—Hon. Samuel Porter, Charles P. Phelps, Esq., Capt. Eli Smith.
- 1821.—Hon. Samuel Porter, Charles P. Phelps, Esq., Capt. Eli Smith.
- 1822.—Charles P. Phelps, Col. Sylvester Goodman, Moses Porter.
- 1823.—Charles P. Phelps, Deacon Wm. Dickinson, Capt. Eli Smith.
- 1824.—William Dickinson, Charles P. Phelps, Capt. Eli Dickinson.
- 1825.—Charles P. Phelps, Samuel Porter, Capt. Amos Pasco.
- 1826.—27.—William Dickinson, Joseph Marsh, Moses Porter.
- 1828.—John Hibbard, Zadock Lyman, Sylvanus Dickinson.
- 1829.—Ephraim Smith, Zadock Lyman, John Hibbard.
- 1830.—Hon. Charles P. Phelps, Amos Pasco, Dr. Reuben Bell.
- 1831.—32.—Hon. Charles P. Phelps, Simeon Dickinson, Oliver Bonney.
- 1833.—34.—Jason Stockbridge, Col. Ephraim Smith, John Shipman.
- 1835.—Simeon Dickinson, Cotton Smith, Elijah Smith.
- 1836.—Walter Newton, Simeon Dickinson, Joseph Smith.
- 1837.—Simeon Dickinson, E. W. Skerry, William Smith.
- 1838.—Sylvester Smith, Levi Dickinson, Jr., Cotton Smith.
- 1839.—John Shipman, Charles P. Phelps, William Smith, Esq.
- 1840.—Simeon Dickinson, Hiram Thayer, Erastus Smith, Jr.
- 1841.—Serenio Smith, Hiram Thayer, Nathan Clark.
- 1842.—Serenio Smith, Nathan Clark, Parsons West.
- 1843.—44.—Hiram Thayer, Zenas Cook, Horace Smith.
- 1845.—46.—Leicester W. Porter, William S. Shipman, Calvin Russell.
- 1847.—Caleb D. Dickinson, Wyman Smith, Joseph Smith, Esq.
- 1848.—Oliver Bonney, John A. Morton, Isaac Hawley.
- 1849.—50.—William S. Shipman, Alfred H. Cook, Thaddeus Smith.
- 1851.—52.—Lorenzo W. Granger, Rodney Smith, Martin F. Cook.
- 1853.—Charles P. Hitchcock, Linus Green, Perez S. Williams.
- 1854.—Charles P. Hitchcock, Linus Green, Levi Stockbridge.
- 1855.—H. C. Hurd, John S. Bell, Perez S. Williams.
- 1856.—John S. Bell, H. C. Hurd, Jeriah S. Smith.
- 1857.—William P. Dickinson, Jeriah S. Smith, David S. Cowles.
- 1858.—William P. Dickinson, David S. Cowles, Enos E. Cook.
- 1859.—Thaddeus Smith, Samuel Bell, George Shipman.
- 1860.—R. M. Montague, Samuel Bell, George Shipman.
- 1861.—R. M. Montague, Enos E. Cook, Thomas Reynolds.
- 1862.—63.—John S. Bell, Lorenzo N. Granger, Jeriah S. Smith.

1864.—Francis Edson, Lorenzo N. Granger, Horace Cook.
 1865-69.—Francis Edson, Horace Cook, George C. Smith.
 1870.—John S. Bell, Horace Cook, Horatio C. Hurd.
 1871-73.—John S. Bell, Jason W. Newton, Horatio C. Hurd.
 1874.—Francis Edson, Horace Cook, Horatio C. Hurd.
 1875.—Francis Edson, Horace Cook, H. C. Russell.
 1876.—Francis Edson, George B. Smith, H. C. Russell.
 1877.—Francis Edson, Horatio C. Hurd, Charles Cook.
 1878.—Francis Edson, Samuel F. Cooley, Charles Cook.
 1879.—Francis Edson, Charles Cook, G. Myron Smith.

RECORDERS OR TOWN CLERKS.

1660-61, Nathaniel Dickinson; 1661-93, Peter Tilton; 1693-1727, Samuel Barnard; 1727-47, Job Marsh; 1747-81, Josiah Peirce; 1781-90, Eleazar Porter; 1790-96, Enos Nash; 1796-97, Elisha Hubbard; 1797-1802, John Hopkins; 1802-3, William Porter; 1803-6, Seth Herbert Rogers; 1806-34, Giles Crouch Kellogg; 1834-41, Dudley Smith; 1841-54, Orlando Smith; * 1854-79, William S. Shipman.

CIVIL LIST.

COUNCILORS.

1757-58, Eleazar Porter; 1821-23, Samuel Porter.

STATE SENATORS.

1817, Samuel Porter; 1826-27, Charles Porter Phelps; 1853-54, Joseph Smith.

DEPUTIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.†

1661, Samuel Smith; 1662, William Lewis; 1663, Samuel Smith, William Lewis; 1664, Samuel Smith, John White; 1665, Samuel Smith, Peter Tilton; 1666, Peter Tilton; 1667, Samuel Smith; 1668, Samuel Smith, Peter Tilton; 1669, William Holton, John White; 1670, Henry Bridgman, Peter Tilton; 1671, Samuel Smith, Peter Tilton; 1672, Henry Phillips, Peter Tilton; May, 1673, Samuel Smith, Peter Tilton; September, 1673, Peter Tilton, Henry Phillips; 1674, Peter Tilton; 1675, John Richards, Peter Tilton; 1676, Peter Tilton; 1677, Philip Smith, Peter Tilton; 1678-79, Peter Tilton; 1680-84, Philip Smith; 1685, Samuel Partrigg; 1686, Samuel Partrigg, Thomas West; 1756-57, Josiah Pierce; 1758, Eleazar Porter; 1759, Moses Marsh; 1760, Josiah Chauncey,‡ of Amherst; 1761, Eleazar Porter; 1762, Josiah Chauncey; 1763, Eleazar Porter; 1764-65, Daniel Nash, of South Hadley; 1766, Enos Nash; 1767, Simeon Strong, of Amherst; 1768, Enos Nash; 1769, Simeon Strong, Elisha Porter; 1770, Elisha Porter; 1771, Josiah Pierce; 1772, Josiah Pierce, Eleazar Porter; 1773, Josiah Pierce; 1774, Josiah Pierce, delegate to Provincial Congress at Concord; 1775, January, Josiah Pierce, delegate to Provincial Congress at Cambridge; 1776, John Chester Williams; 1777, May 28th, Elisha Porter, Jonathan Smith; 1778, Elisha Porter, Jonathan Smith; 1779, Phinehas Lyman; 1780, Jonathan Smith; 1781, Phinehas Lyman; 1782-88, Oliver Smith; 1789-90, none; 1791-93, Charles Phelps; 1794, Jonathan Porter; 1795-96, Charles Phelps; 1797, Jonathan E. Phelps; 1798-99, Charles Phelps; 1800-6, Samuel Porter; 1807-8, Charles Phelps; 1809-10, Giles C. Kellogg; 1811-13, Samuel Porter; 1814, Giles C. Kellogg; 1815-16, Samuel Porter; 1817, Giles C. Kellogg; 1818-19, Samuel Porter; 1820, Charles P. Phelps; 1820, Samuel Porter, Moses Porter, Esq., members of Constitutional Convention; 1821-22, Charles P. Phelps; 1823, Moses Porter; 1824, Charles P. Phelps; 1825, none; 1826, Moses Porter; 1827, Giles C. Kellogg; 1828, Nathaniel Cooledge, Jr.; 1829, Giles C. Kellogg, Charles P. Phelps; 1830-31, Moses Porter; 1832, Charles P. Phelps; 1833, Oliver Bonney, Simeon Dickinson; 1834, Oliver Bonney, Ephraim Smith; 1835-36, William Smith, Jason Stockbridge; 1837, Walter Newton, Parsons West; 1838, Charles P. Phelps; 1839, Charles P. Phelps, William Smith; 1840, Charles P. Phelps, John Shipman; 1841, Charles P. Phelps; 1842, Joseph Smith (2d); 1843-44, Samuel Nash; 1845-46, John A. Morton; 1847-49, Giles C. Kellogg; 1850-51, Dudley Smith; 1852, Lorenzo N. Granger; 1853, Giles C. Kellogg, also member of Constitutional Convention; 1854, John Smith Bell; 1855, Levi Stockbridge; 1856, Perez S. Williams; 1857, Theodore Clark; 1858,‡ Leicester W. Porter; 1859, Peregrine Waters, South Hadley; 1860, Thaddeus Smith; 1861, Thomas M. Nash, South Hadley; 1862, Horace Cook; 1863, Stephen C. Weld, South Hadley; 1864, Horace S. Dickinson; 1865, Eliot Montague, South Hadley; 1866, Andrew T. Judd, South Hadley; 1867, Levi Stockbridge; 1868, Henry S. Porter, Hatfield; 1869, Stephen M. Crosby, Williamsburg; 1870, Francis Edson; 1871, Elisha Hubbard, Hatfield; 1872, Francis M. Carter, Williamsburg; 1873, Franklin Bonney; 1874, Samuel P. Billings, Hatfield; 1875, Henry L. James, Williamsburg; 1876, Horace Cook, Elisha Hubbard, Hatfield; 1877, Aaron R. Morse, Williamsburg; Daniel W. Wells, Hatfield; 1878, George C. Smith, Joseph Billings; 1879, Royal M. Montague, George M. Smith.

VILLAGES.

The town of Hadley contains two villages, both unincorporated.

* Simeon Dickenson, elected in 1841, did not serve.

† This list, down to 1863, is from the "History of Hadley," by Sylvester Judd, who has this note: "The town records, prior to 1800, seldom giving the name of the Deputy or Representative, this imperfect record, obtained from the State records at Boston, is inserted."

‡ From 1759, when Amherst became a district, up to 1774, the towns of Hadley, South Hadley, Amherst, and Granby united in the choice of representatives.

§ From 1858 until 1865, Hadley and South Hadley formed the 4th Representative District; Hadley, Hatfield, and Williamsburg, until 1875, the 3d District; and the same, with Westhampton, until the present time (1879), the 5th District.

HADLEY,

the largest, settled in 1659, is situated chiefly upon the neck of the large peninsula which projects westward—within a large bend of the Connecticut River—from the western border of the town, and is somewhat south of the town's central line of latitude. It contains upward of one hundred and fifty dwellings, a post-office, town-hall, two church edifices, and a high-school building, besides four others for the minor schools; also a grist- and saw-mill. The ancient cemetery lies immediately west of the village.

"West" and Middle Streets, running north and south, contain the major portion of the dwellings, and are bordered with elms and maples of magnificent growth and graceful proportions, some of which have braved a century's storms. West Street, with its generous breadth of near three hundred feet, its marginal elms and intervening meadow, fronted sparsely by dwellings, some quaint and olden, its charming vista southward, enriched, though interrupted, by stately Holyoke, has not a peer in all New England.

Russell Street, lying east and west,—the old "middle highway to the woods,"—is handsomely lined with forest-trees, chiefly maples.

NORTH HADLEY

is a small village on Mill River, between two and three miles north of Hadley, and near the Connecticut. It contains from sixty to eighty dwellings, a post-office, a public hall, connected with a grammar-school building, one meeting-house, a grist- and plaster-mill, a saw-mill, and a few other manufacturing establishments. The village has also a small park and a cemetery.

Five other thickly-settled neighborhoods are called, respectively, Russellville, Plainville, Fort River, Hart's Brook, and Hockanum.

HOCKANUM.

A settlement was made at Hockanum, the most southern portion of Hadley, between Mount Holyoke and the Connecticut, by Capt. John Lyman and his son Zadok, near the year 1744. They were from Northampton. There came, later, Ebenezer Pomeroy, son-in-law of Capt. Lyman, Stephen Pomeroy, Gideon Lyman and his sons, Gideon, Jr., and Elijah, Caleb Lyman, youngest son of John, Israel Lyman, oldest son of Zadok, and Ethan Pomeroy, son of Ebenezer.

A small island in the river, below the meadow at Hockanum, was sold by Elias Lyman, of Northampton, to Zadok Lyman, in 1750, and has now become a part of the mainland.

Zadok Lyman opened a hotel in the settlement in 1746.

EDUCATIONAL.

HOPKINS SCHOOL.

A benevolent merchant-prince of London, Edward Hopkins, Esq., came to New England in 1637, became Governor of the Connecticut Colony, and subsequently returned to England, where he died in March, 1657. By his will, a portion of his estate was bequeathed to four trustees, who were to dispose of the same, "to give some encouragement in those foreign plantations for the breeding of hopeful youths in a way of learning, both at the grammar school and college, for the public service of the country in future times."

The surviving trustees, Rev. John Davenport, of New Haven, and Mr. William Goodwin, of Hadley, made a distribution of the fund thus created, in 1664, the town of Hadley eventually receiving £308 out of a total of £1220.

As an addition to the fund, the town of Hadley made the following grant of land, Jan. 14, 1667:

"The town have granted to and for the use of a Grammar School, in this town of Hadley, and to be and remain perpetually to and for the use of the said school, the two little meadows next beyond the brook, commonly called the Mill brook, and as much upland to be laid to the same as the committee, chosen by the town, shall in their discretion see meet and needful; provided, withal, that it be left to the judgment of said committee that so much of the second meadow shall be excepted from the said grant as that there may be a feasible and convenient passage for cattle to their feed."*

This grant, which included the old Indian reservation, with its fort and burying-ground, was estimated to contain, in all, about sixty acres. By the subsequent action of the river, the area has been more than doubled. These lands are still called the "School Meadows."

According to a proposition of Mr. Goodwin, the town appointed two persons, who, with three others appointed by Mr. Goodwin, were made (with himself as a life-member) a governing board, with full power to manage and control the school fund and estate then possessed, and any other funds which should afterward be given to the town for the "promotion of literature and learning." This board was empowered to fill vacancies within itself, provided those appointed should be "known, discreet, pious, faithful persons." The persons chosen by Mr. Goodwin were Mr. John Russell, Jr., Lieut. Samuel Smith, and Aaron Cooke; by the town, Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., and Peter Tilton.

The trustees consenting, Mr. Goodwin built, with means from the Hopkins gift, a grist-mill upon Mill River,—the first grist-mill within the town. The mill, it was thought, would yield a good income for the school. It was garrisoned during the Indian war, and escaped injury until September, 1667, when it was burned by the savages. The trustees declined to rebuild, and sold the school's interest to the town for £10, Mr. Russell dissenting. The sale was decided by the court, in 1680, to be illegal; and after much parleying, Mr. Boltwood, who had come into possession of the old mill-site and made improvements, was to be indemnified by the payment, on the part of the school committee, of £138 "in grain and pork." The trustees regained possession, Nov. 1, 1683; but the town had not passed the title, and yet claimed a part of the land and water-power. The matter was referred to John Pyncheon and John Allis, who decided adverse to the school in March, 1685, and the mill was surrendered to Samuel Boltwood, his father, Robert, having died in April, 1684.

Thus the donation of Mr. Hopkins had been nearly exhausted, and the small remaining fund† became a source of lively controversy. In spite of the vote of 1669, the town sought to get control of certain legacies made to the town for school purposes by Nathaniel Ward, John Barnard, and Henry Clark, and appointed a committee, Aug. 23, 1686, to demand from the school trustees the surrender of all such funds and estates, the object being to organize and conduct an English school.

The majority of the voters favored such diversion of the funds, and had the co-operation of Mr. Peter Tilton, a former member of the school board, and Samuel Partrigg, an acting member. An appeal to the County Court, at Springfield, of which Mr. Tilton was one of the judges, resulted in the defeat of the measure, and Mr. Russell and his few supporters‡ were triumphant.

The decision of the court was commended by President Dudley.§ An examination of the affairs of the school was

* The committee were Mr. Clark, Lieut. Smith, Wm. Allis, Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., and Andrew Warner. A note made by Mr. Tilton on the record says, "These two meadows are, one, the round neck of land, and the little long meadow that was reserved by the Indians in the first sale, and afterward purchased by itself."

† This consisted of the grant from the town,—about 60 acres,—the house and lot given by Nathaniel Ward, with 14 acres of meadow, John Barnard's gift of 12 acres, Henry Clarke's gift of 11½ acres, and the mill. The latter had been rebuilt.

‡ Mr. Russell was sustained by a small minority, viz.: Samuel Gardner, John Ingram, Chileab Smith, John Preston, Joseph Kellogg, Samuel —, Samuel Porter, Sr., Aaron Cooke, William Markham, Hezekiah Porter, and Widow Mary Goodman.

§ The letter of President Dudley begins as follows: "I lately received your very solicitous letter referring to your free school in Hadley, and am very sorry that, while your inclination and opinion is so good and well resolved, you should seem to stand, like Athanasius, contra totum mundum. But right is too strong ordered by the president and council, and a visit by Mr. Pyncheon for such purpose was made Nov. 18, 1686.

At a meeting which had been ordered for November 19th, "at sun a quarter of an hour high," a hearing of the case was had, Capt. Aaron Cooke and Mr. Joseph Hawley also being present.

The reasons given by the opposing parties at this meeting in support of their respective positions are voluminous. The following is the concluding language of Mr. Partrigg in the document presented by him: "The greater part of the children are such poor men's that they cannot pay anything towards schooling the children, much less to bring them up to Grammar learning, so that there is not one, that I know of now, that pretend to Grammar learning, except two that are brought up at their parents' particular charge; the school having been so uncertain as (it) is we know, Grammar-school masters so hard to settle, that as soon as ever one is settled, one place or other calls them off; and so it hath been ever since the first, except with Mr. Watson, who, I understand, went away upon some difference betwixt him and our pastor. . . . I cannot see the difference as to the end (if that be, viz., English learning and writing), but this,—he that can teach grammar is surely better fitted to teach English than he that hath no grammar in him.

"But the ground of all this is: if no grammar, such poor helps as we have, when better cannot be obtained; that we (have) not half year's and whole year's vacancies under pretence of grammar schooling, and so schooling fail in a great measure. For I suppose it will be granted that the learning of any trade or science is best insinuated by constancy in attendance to it.

"If we cannot have polishers for the stone, let the ruff-hewers set to it to prepare while polishers come."

Mr. Pyncheon's report, signed also by Aaron Cooke and Joseph Hawley, requested that some action be taken "for quieting the hot and raised spirit of the people of Hadley," and elicited an order early in December, which was signed by Edward Randolph as secretary, and required the dismissal of Mr. Partrigg from the school board, confirmed the power of the trustees as "foeffers of the grammar school," authorized the Hampshire County Court "to supply the place of Mr. Partrigg with some other meet person in Hadley," and "to find out and order some method for the payment of Mr. Boltwood's expenses upon the mill, that the mill, farm, and other lands given to the school may return to that public use. The President and Council hereby declaring it to be beyond the power of the town of Hadley, or any other whatsoever, to divert any of the lands or estate of the said mill-stream, and the privileges thereof (which are legally determined to the said Grammar School), to any other use whatsoever. The President and Council judging the particular gifts in the town a good foundation for a Grammar School, both for themselves and the whole country, and that the Grammar School can be no otherwise interrupted, but to be a school holden by a master capable to instruct children and fit them for the university."

At a hearing before a court appointed at Northampton, that court ordered "those persons in Hadley who had taken the school estate into their hands for an English school to return it speedily to the former committee, the feoffers of the grammar school, viz., Mr. John Russell, Aaron Cooke, Joseph Kellogg, and Samuel Porter." Chileab Smith was substituted for Mr. Partrigg.

The town in a qualified manner, by a vote taken Aug. 29, 1687, submitted to the result, because of "their vote Aug. 23, 1686, wanting that formality in the seizure as might have to suffer any compulsion or force long; it will break loose and prevail. In the mean time I am deeply sorry that the pious and charitable device of Mr. Hopkins should be in any manner prevented or allayed, or the occasion of a difference or misunderstanding in that good place."

been," referring to the mill. The court at Springfield replied, through the selectmen of Hadley, reprimanding the inhabitants for the tone of their vote, and saying: "Such a spirit we see breathing forth from you as will necessarily call for some further animadverting thereon if you do not retract some of your actings, which we earnestly desire you to overlook and rectify."

A settlement was effected with Mr. Boltwood by arbitration, April 26, 1688, and it was not long before a goodly peace settled upon the Hadley peninsula.

In the notice of "first things" in Hadley mention has been made of a private house used for school purposes in 1664 and of the first school-house erected, 1696. No record of any vote concerning educational matters in the town exists prior to April 25, 1665. There was then appropriated "£20 per annum for three years toward the maintenance of a schoolmaster to teach the children and to be a help to Mr. Russell, as occasion may require." The schools were not made free until 1697, and even then continued such only about two years, when, March 30, 1699, the town voted that one-half the expenses over and above what was paid by the "school estate" should be paid by scholars. This was to be the rule for twenty years.

"The Hopkins School," says Mr. Judd, "was apparently the only public school in the old parish of Hadley for more than a century, except a school for boys and girls voted in 1760 for that year. It was the common town school."*

The following have been the teachers of Hadley Grammar—Hopkins—School so far as known:† Caleb Watson, 1666–73, a graduate of Harvard College in 1661. He removed from Hadley to Hartford; John Younglove, from Ipswich, 1674–80; Samuel Russell, H. C., son of Rev. John, 1682–83; Samuel Partrigg, of Hadley, three months, 1685; Warham Mather, H. C., son of Rev. Eleazar, of Northampton, 1686–87; John Younglove, six months, 1688–89; Thomas Swan, H. C., six months, 1689–90; John Morse, H. C., 1693–94; Salmon Treat, H. C., 1694–95; Joseph Smith, H. C., son of Lieut. Philip Smith, of Hadley, three quarters, 1695–96; John Hubbard, H. C., 1696–97; Joseph Smith, 1698–99; Samuel Meylen, H. C., 1700–1; Mr. Ephraim (or Samuel) Woodbridge, H. C., 1701–2; Nathaniel Chauncey, Yale, three months, 1702–3; Samuel Ruggles, H. C., 1702, eight months, 1703–4; Samuel Mighill, H. C., 1705–6; Jonathan Marsh, H. C., 1706–7; John Partridge, H. C., 1707–8; Aaron Porter, H. C., son of Samuel, of Hadley, six months, 1708–9; Daniel Boardman, Yale, eight months, 1709–10; John James, native of England, H. C., honorary degree, six months, 1710–11; Elisha Williams, H. C., son of Rev. William, of Hatfield, eleven months, 1711–12; Thos. Berry, H. C., six months, 1712–13; Stephen Williams, H. C., son of Rev. John, of Deerfield, 1713–14; Ebenezer Gay, H. C., nine months, 1714–15; Nathaniel Mather, Yale, four months, 1715–16; "Mr. Chauncey's son," probably son of Rev. Isaac, 1716–18; Stephen Steel, Yale, 1718–19; Solomon Williams, H. C., son of Rev. William, of Hatfield, 1719–20; Hezekiah Kilburn, Yale, 1720–21; Daniel Dwight, Yale, son of Nathaniel, of Northampton, 1721–23; Benjamin Dickinson, H. C., son of Nathaniel, of Hatfield, lived in Hadley, 1723–24; Israel Chauncey, H. C., son of Rev. Isaac, 1724–25, burnt to death November, 1736; Josiah Pierce, H. C., a native of Woburn, taught from March, 1743–55, and from 1760–66; taught English branches, Latin, and Greek; was paid a salary of $91, and had the use of 25 acres of meadow-land‡.

* Deacon Eleazar Porter relates that during the girlhood of his mother—Amy Colt—few, if any, females attended the town school, and that the only school she attended was held in the open air under a sycamore-tree, standing near the street, in the home-lot of Dr. Hopkins. This tree was cut down by Mr. Porter, about the year 1869. In the body of it many nails were found, covered by a growth of twelve inches' thickness. Upon these, doubtless, were hung the bonnets and other "toggery."

† As given by Mr. Judd.

‡ The yearly pay of the teachers until 1725 did not exceed £40, and prior to 1709 was payable in produce, at the usual prices. Board was paid from their small salaries at the rate of 4s. 8d. to 5s. per week.

The names of those who taught subsequent to the date last named, and prior to the incorporation of the academy in 1816, could not be obtained.

The old school in the street was probably the only one sustained within the town until after the Revolution, aside from such private schools as may have then existed, taught by "school-dames" and possibly by others. Jan. 7, 1788, £10 were appropriated "for schooling in those parts of the town which cannot be benefited by the school in the town street."

What was probably the second school-house erected in Hadley was built in accordance with the following: April 15, 1788, "voted to build a school-house 38 feet long, 19 feet wide, and 10 feet in height; to build a chimney at each end; to build it as near the present school-house as conveniently may be, in the discretion of the committee." £80 were appropriated for the building.

August 13th, it was determined that the old house, "after taking out the brick and stones," should be removed to the middle lane, east of the pound; and on September 12th decided that it should be sold. The new edifice was probably occupied, if not dedicated with a modern "flourish of trumpets," before Jan. 15, 1789, for on that day it was voted "that the schoolmaster be directed to divide his scholars into two classes, mixing the great and small ones, and direct each class to attend the school every other day alternately, and in case one of a family did not attend on his day the other might come in his stead."

The first school committee consisted of Mr. John Russell, Jr., Lieut. Samuel Smith, Aaron Cooke, Jr., Nathaniel Dickinson, Peter Tilton. The following were chosen as vacancies occurred: Philip Smith, 1680; Samuel Partrigg, 1682; Saml. Porter, 1685; Joseph Kellogg, 1686; Chileab Smith, 1687. Thomas Hovey, Samuel Porter, Esq., Sergt. Joseph Smith, Deacon John Smith, and Chileab Smith were the committee in 1720.

THE HOPKINS ACADEMY

was established Feb. 14, 1816. The following is a portion of the act of incorporation:

"Whereas, it appears by the petition of Seth Smith and others, the committee of the Donation School in the town of Hadley, that a fund heretofore given for the support of said school by the Hon. Edward Hopkins may be more conveniently and advantageously directed to the furtherance of the benevolent objects of the donor by establishing a body politic for the management of the same; therefore,

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, That there be and hereby is established an academy in the town of Hadley, and county of Hampshire, upon the foundation of the Hopkins Donation School, to be known and called hereafter by the name of Hopkins Academy, and that Seth Smith, William Porter, William Dickinson, Jacob Smith, and Moses Porter, the committee of the Donation School aforesaid, be, and they hereby are, incorporated into a body politic by the name of the Trustees of Hopkins Academy; and they and their successors shall be and continue a body politic by the same name forever."

Two additional trustees were chosen by the corporators June 4, 1817, and two others on the 6th. The four were Rev. Dan Huntington, Rev. John Woodbridge, Rev. Dr. Joseph Lyman, D.D., of Hatfield, and Isaac Bates, of Northampton. There were then nine trustees.‡

June 11, 1817, the board of trustees organized by choosing Dr. Joseph Lyman, President; Rev. Dan Huntington, Secretary; and Dr. William Porter, Treasurer.

An academy building, which was probably erected during 1816–17, was formally dedicated Dec. 9, 1817; on which occasion a sermon was preached by Rev. John Woodbridge from Deut. vi. 7: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." This building was of brick; faced the south on Russell Street, about fifty rods east of West Street, occupying a portion of the old home-lot of Hadley's first pastor, Mr. Russell. The total cost of the structure, as reported Nov. 29,

‡ By act of June 9, 1821, the charter was amended, limiting the number of trustees to "not more than fifteen, nor less than five, at any time."

1817, was $4954.90, a part of which was paid by subscriptions.* It stood with its length east and west, its roof sloping to the southward, and sustained a central bell-tower of modest proportions.

June 30, 1817, a code of by-laws was adopted, containing the following among other provisions:

"The instructors shall be persons of good moral character, of competent learning and abilities, firmly established in the faith of the Christian Religion, the doctrines and duties of which they shall inculcate as well by example as precept.

"Youth of both sexes who can read decently in a common English book without spelling, and write a joined hand, and are of good moral character, shall be entitled to admission. Males studying the Greek and Latin languages are exempt from tuition."

At the same date a prudential committee was appointed, consisting of Deacons Jacob Smith and William Dickinson, and Moses Porter, Esq.

Rev. Dan Huntington† and Miss S. Williston, of Easthampton, were the first instructors, appointed Nov. 29, 1817. The following as principals, so far as can be ascertained from the records, have succeeded Mr. Huntington. The dates of appointment are approximate: Worthington Smith, 1820; John A. Nash, May, 1826; George Nichols, November, 1827; Mr. — Russell, about November, 1830; Lewis Sabin, August, 1831; Mr. — Stearns, 1837 or 1838; Theodore L. Wright, probably January, 1840; Henry K. Edson, 1844; Marshall Henshaw, 1849; Lucius D. Chapin, February (?), 1851; Charles V. Spear, in 1851–52; Mr. — Buck, May, 1852; Reuben Benjamin, November, 1852, two years; Jesse R. Davenport, November, 1854, to May, 1867; Charles H. Chandler, 1867, two years; Herbert Cook, fall of 1869; George H. White, 1870 to 1873; W. G. Mitchell, 1873; W. W. Mitchell, 1874 to 1878; Edward Ayres, 1878, and now serving (March, 1879).

The office of president of the board of trustees has been filled by the following persons: Rev. Joseph Lyman, D.D., 1817–27; Rev. Nathan Perkins, Jr., 1828–34; Rev. John Brown, D.D., 1835–38; Rev. David L. Hunn, 1839–40; Rev. Joseph D. Condit, 1841; Rev. John Woodbridge, 1842–58; Rev. Warren H. Beaman, 1859–64; Rev. Rowland Ayres, 1865, who is still in office.

By the report of Dec. 4, 1878, the amount of the school-fund in the hands of the trustees was $30,630.28, of which $19,650 was in real estate, consisting chiefly of meadow-lands.

The academy building‡ was burned in 1860, but was not replaced. The town, after the introduction of the system of graded schools, erected in 1865 the present high-school building, in which the trustees of the Hopkins fund maintain an advanced or high-school department, the court having granted permission. The present building, a modern structure, stands at the southwest corner of Russell and Central Streets.

PRESENT SCHOOLS.

The town is divided into ten school districts, containing eleven school buildings, in which thirteen schools are conducted. These are distributed as follows: at Hadley village, one high school building, in which, besides the higher branches supported by the Hopkins fund, are taught one intermediate and one grammar-school; and two brick and two wooden structures, each of which contains a primary department; at North Hadley a large school-house, erected in 1863 or '64,

* By act of June 12, 1820, the State granted to the institution half a township of land in Maine, on condition that ten families should be settled thereon within five years. The cost of the building was in part paid from this source.

† Dec. 8, 1818, Mr. Huntington was continued at $500 per annum, salary; Giles C. Kellogg, assistant, at $20 per month, and board; Miss Sophia Mosely, assistant, at $12 per month, and board.

‡ This building was three stories high, and by a recent local authority is thus further described: "The lower floor was divided by a spacious hall into two large rooms for the separate use of males and females, and the two departments were under the care of gentlemen and ladies respectively. The second floor contained four rooms for chemical experiments, recitations, etc. The third floor was a hall of the size of the building, a stage at one end, with the appurtenances for exhibitions. Here, also, were the examinations at the end of the term, and the weekly declamations, reading of compositions, etc."

containing a primary, an intermediate, and a grammar department; at Hockanum, Fort River, Hart's Brook, Plainville, and Russellville, buildings, one in each hamlet, each containing one primary or mixed school. The school-house at Russellville was burned during the winter of 1877–78, but is to be replaced. Those at Hockanum and Fort River are of brick, and the one at Plainville has two stories.

The number of children in the town between the ages of five and fifteen May 1, 1878, was 450; average attendance for the year 1878–79, about 370. Number of teachers, 13. Received for same school year from town, $2750; State school fund, $198.21. Total, $2948.21. Expended for instruction, $2602; janitors and fuel, $248.88. Total, $2850.88. School committee for 1878–79, Rev. Rowland Ayres, George Dickinson, C. E. Lamson. Present committee, Rev. Rowland Ayres, Rev. John W. Lane, George Dickinson.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The circumstances attending the "planting" of the town of Hadley, and the plan of its organization and government, warrant the affirmation that the town itself practically constituted the first church, and that all the inhabitants were members thereof. All lived and moved under the fostering care and mysterious protection of the sanctuary, and died and were buried beneath the shadow of its altar in the wilderness. There must have been some formal gathering of members who constituted the church proper; and there were probably articles of faith and covenant subscribed, and a church policy instituted. Of these no record remains. The church organization was undoubtedly the second in the old county of Hampshire, and formed a year or more earlier than the church at Northampton, or about 1660.

Where to live and how to live were questions hardly separable in the minds of the grave worthies of ancient Hadley, who so soon after their arrival set about providing "a place of public worship."

The church records were burned in 1766, but those of the town disclose that on the 12th of December, 1661, the following action was taken:

"The town have ordered that they will build and erect a meeting-house, to be a place of public worship, whose figure is (in length and breadth) 45 feet in length, and 24 feet in breadth, with Leantors on both sides, which shall enlarge the whole to 36 in breadth.

"The town have ordered that the meeting-house abovesaid, when prepared, shall be situated and set up in the common street, betwixt Mr. Terry's house and Richard Montague's, in the most convenient place, as the committee chosen by the town shall determine.

"The town having ordered Mr. Russell, Mr. Goodwin, Goodman Lewis, Goodman Warner, Goodman Dickinson, Goodman Meekins, and Goodman Allis a committee for the aforesaid occasions."

For some reason, not much progress was made in building the edifice. It seems to have been framed in 1665, and completed Jan. 12, 1670.§ Seats were voted in 1668. The place chosen as a site, near the north end of the street, was possibly for the accommodation of the people west of the river. These experienced much difficulty in attending the services on the east side, and their application to be made a separate society, with a minister of their own, may have been the prime cause of the delay in building.

Those east of the river opposed the severance of the religious bonds, whereupon the "west inhabitants" appealed to the General Court, May 3, 1667, stating, among other things,—

"First, your petitioners, together with their families, within the bounds of Hadley town, upon the west side of the river, commonly called by the name of Connecticut river, where we for the most part have lived about 6 years, have attended on God's ordinances on the other side of the river, at the appointed seasons that we could or durst pass over the river, the passing being very difficult and dangerous, both in summer and winter, which thing hath proved, and is an oppressive burden for us to bear, which, if by any lawful means it may be avoided, we should be glad and thankful to this honored court to ease us therein, conceiving it to be a palpable breach of the Sabbath; although it be a maxim in law: nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa, yet by the Word of God to us, it is evidently plain to be a breach of the Sabbath: Ex. xxxv. 2; Levit. xxiii. 3; yet many times we are forced to it, for we must come at the instant of time, be the season how it will. Sometimes we come in considerable numbers in rainy weather, and are forced to stay till we can empty our canoes, that are half full of water, and before we can get to the meeting-house* are wet to the skin. At other times, in winter seasons, we are forced to cut and work them out of the ice, till our shirts be wet upon our backs. At other times, the winds are high and waters rough, the current strong, and the waves ready to swallow us; our vessels tossed up and down so that our women and children do screech, and are so affrighted that they are made unfit for ordinances, and cannot hear so as to profit by them, by reason of their anguish of spirit; and when they return, some of them are more fit for their beds than for family duties and God's services, which they ought to attend.

§ At this date the two deacons, the two elders, and Mr. Henry Clarke, were chosen to order the "seating" of the congregation. One hundred and twenty-eight adults paid each 3s. 3d. toward the cost of making the seats.

"In brevity and verity, our difficulties and dangers that we undergo are to us extreme and intolerable; oftentimes some of us have fallen into the river through the ice, and had they not had better help than themselves, they had been drowned. Sometimes we have been obliged to carry others when they have broken in to the knees, as they have carried them out; and that none hitherto hath been lost, their lives are to be attributed to the care and mercy of God. . . . Further, when we do go over the river, we leave our relatives and estates lying on the outside of the Colony, joining to the wilderness, to be a prey to the heathen, when they see their opportunity."†

The meeting-house, as constructed, did not conform to the proportions named in the original vote, but was fashioned according as the new committee thought proper. Just what it was, in size and shape, is not known; but Mr. Judd says, "They appear to have rejected the leantos and to have made the upper part as wide as the lower. There was doubtless a turret, or place for a bell, rising from the centre of the roof, as in most early New England meeting-houses. Galleries on the north and south sides were voted Jan. 9, 1699, and a gallery, which must have been on one end, is referred to as partly built. This vote shows that the ends of the house were east and west, and that the pulpit was at one end, apparently at the west end. There is no reason to suppose that the length exceeded the breadth. Some seats had to be altered to make a 'more commodious passage up into the galleries.' The seats were probably long seats, like others of that age, holding five or six persons each. They were to be built 'with boards and rails.' "

The first bell was purchased in 1670. It was "brought up by Lieut. Smith and others," and cost £7 10s., in winter wheat, at 3s. per bushel. This bell was small; but in 1675 Henry Clarke bequeathed to the church 40s., besides 40s. formerly given for a bigger bell that may be heard generally by the inhabitants." It is conjectured that the bell-rope hung down in the centre of the church.‡

It was a common provision in the early churches that sticks should be "set up in the meeting-house" with fit persons by them, "to use them as occasion shall require, to keep the youth from disorder." Such were provided for this meeting-house in January, 1672.

Mr. John Russell, Jr., the first minister, was an Englishman by birth, and a graduate of Harvard in 1645. He began his ministry at Wethersfield, about the year 1649, and came with his devoted followers to Hadley in 1659 or 1660. He served his flock faithfully until his death, Dec. 10, 1692, in his sixty-sixth year. Mr. Russell, though helpful to others, received little from his people except his small, but sufficient, salary. Even the firewood,§ so bountifully supplied in some cases,

* This expression would indicate that the meeting-house was used as early as the date of the petition, May 3, 1667. Meetings had been held in a house hired for the purpose. Dec. 10, 1663, Mr. Goodwin and John Barnard were chosen to seat persons in it "in a more comely order," and it was also voted to hire the house another year.

† The east side answered, in April, 1668, in part, "The meeting-house was to be set where it is, for their sakes, to our great inconvenience." The west side replied, in May, "When the meeting-house was put where it is, we declared that it should be no engagement to us, and desired them to set it where they pleased."

‡ Dec. 21, 1676, the people voted "that the bell in the meeting-house shall be rung at nine o'clock at night, throughout the year, winter and summer."

§ The wood furnished by the parishioners of Rev. Mr. Parsons, of Amherst, ranged from 60 loads in 1742 to 100 good loads in 1751, and, twelve years later, to 120 ordinary loads.

was not furnished in his. He was hopeful, faithful, and brave, and entertained a noble scorn of all oppression. His chivalrous protection, through long and trying years, of the fugitive judges, Goffe and Whalley, has immortalized his name, and made the old home-lot where he resided, and the town itself, famous in history. The impress of his hand is seen in the records of the period, and these evince his activity and zeal in behalf of his country and his people. Mr. Russell was thrice married.||

After the death of Mr. Russell, the church was served for a portion of the years 1693 and 1694 by Mr. Samuel Moody, who was compensated by a grant of wheat, peas, and corn, valued at £85. He was followed by Mr. Simon Bradstreet, temporarily, in 1695. About July of that year, Mr. Isaac Chauncey began to preach in Hadley, and in October was invited to settle, the people offering the "home-lot of 10 acres, and buildings, that belonged to their former pastor, Mr. Russell, and 20 acres of meadow-land, to be to him and his heirs forever, and a salary of £70 for three years, in provision-pay, and after that £80 per year." He was subsequently allowed a supply of firewood. The conditions appear to have been at once accepted. He was ordained over the church Sept. 9, 1696. Some modifications were made in the amount of salary and manner of payment, and occasional extra amounts given "in consideration of the difficult circumstances in his family."¶

Mr. Chauncey was born Oct. 5, 1670, graduated at Harvard College in 1693, and died May 2, 1745. He was assisted in his duties as minister in the last six or seven years of his life. He was twice married: first, Sarah ———, who died in 1720; second, Abiel, widow of Rev. Joseph Metcalf, of Falmouth. He had ten children,—four sons and six daughters,—all by the first marriage. Four of the daughters married ministers.

Mr. Chauncey's incumbency was not marked by events of a stirring character, such as distinguished that of his predecessor, Mr. Russell, but rather by a pastoral peace and quiet, as down the vale of life, amid his flock, he "Pursued the even tenor of his way."

The ministers who were called at times to aid Mr. Chauncey were Messrs. Edward Billings, Hobart Estabrook, Daniel Buckingham, Benjamin Dickinson, of Hadley, Noah Merrick, and John Woodbridge.

Chester Williams, of Pomfret, was ordained Jan. 21, 1741. He had accepted a call to Hadley on Dec. 5, 1740, and had occupied the desk since the previous September. A precinct, meeting of Nov. 3, 1740, had offered as a settlement the "town home-lot of 10 acres, and £300 in money, and during Mr. Chauncey's life an annual salary of £140, and the use of the town land, or instead thereof £30, as he shall choose; and after Mr. Chauncey's decease, £180 in money,"

|| He married, first, Mary Talcott, June 28, 1649; second, Rebecca, daughter of Thomas Newbury, of Windsor, Conn., who died Nov. 21, 1688, aged fifty-six; third, Phebe Gregson, who died Sept. 19, 1730. Says Dr. F. D. Huntington, "I take the liberty to say—here among neighbors—that I count it among my best ancestral honors to be descended, through my mother, from Mr. Russell's third wife, Phebe Gregson,—Phebe Whiting by her first marriage,—asking no other warrant for her goodness than that she was the chosen companion of two good divines; nor for her talents and those of her two predecessors as housewives, than the fact that on a salary ranging from £80 to £90 a year, paid mostly in produce, her husband, besides supporting his family, educating two sons, discharging all debts, providing for funeral charges and tombstones, and delivering to his wife, Phebe, about one hundred pounds sterling, which was more than she brought him, left to his children £830. The only items I could wish out of the inventory of the estate are three negroes,—a man, woman, and child."—Bi-Centennial Address at Hadley, June 8, 1859.

¶ Israel, a son of Mr. Chauncey, and a graduate of Harvard in 1724, became deranged, probably about 1729. He was burned, in a small building in which he was necessarily confined, some time in November, 1736. A contemporary account says, "He used frequently to cry 'fire,' in the night, and for this reason his cry now was not heeded till too late." In 1731 mention is made of "two indigent persons in Mr. Chauncey's family." Israel Chauncey had taught the grammar school in Hadley. Mr. Chauncey had slaves as family servants,—Arthur Prutt and his wife Joan.

 "At the ordination," says Mr. Judd, "106 pounds of beef, pork, and veal were provided for the dinner."

and the town land, or equivalent. A sufficiency of firewood was also voted.

Mr. Williams was a graduate of Yale College, in 1735, and remained in the ministry at Hadley until his death, Oct. 13, 1753, aged thirty-five. He left a wife, two sons, and three daughters. His wife was Sarah, daughter of Hon. Eleazer Porter, of Hadley, and sister of Col. Elisha Porter, of Revolutionary fame.*

The interval between the death of Mr. Williams and the settlement of his successor was filled, in part, by Mr. Josiah Pierce, Mr. — Mills, and Mr. Abel Newell.

Samuel Hopkins, the third minister, was ordained over this church Feb. 26, 1755, his father, Rev. Samuel Hopkins, and Rev. Stephen Williams officiating. He was allowed £200 as a settlement, a salary fixed at £60,—which it was ingeniously arranged should fluctuate with the market price of certain commodities,—the use of all the precinct land, and a supply of fuel.

Mr. Hopkins adapted himself to the situation by marrying the widow of his predecessor, and occupying her house. This house was burned in 1766, March 21, and another immediately erected over its ashes.† Mr. Hopkins—afterward Dr.—retained the relation of pastor to this people, and continued to preach until stricken with paralysis, in February, 1809. His death occurred March 8, 1811, in his eighty-second year.

Dr. Hopkins was not of the most rigid type of Calvinists; he had a fund of humor, and yet a becoming dignity which enforced respect, and was watchful against interloping sects.‡

After the death of his first wife, Feb. 15, 1774, he married, October, 1776, Margaret, daughter of Rev. Sampson Stoddard, of Chelmsford. Of his nine children—all by his first marriage—six were daughters, of whom four married ministers, one married Benjamin Colt, another, Moses Hubbard.

The fifth pastor, Rev. John Woodbridge, D.D., born Dec. 2, 1784, a native of Southampton, and a graduate of Williams College in 1804, was ordained as colleague of Dr. Hopkins June 20, 1810, and remained pastor of the church until Sept. 15, 1830, when he was dismissed to take charge of the Bowery Presbyterian Church in New York City. During Dr. Woodbridge's ministry the church enjoyed several revivals. The most remarkable occurred in 1816. It is still spoken of as "the great revival." During that year 187 persons were received into the church.

Rev. John D. Brown, the sixth pastor, was born in 1786, in Brooklyn, Conn., graduated at Dartmouth College in 1809, and before coming to Hadley was settled first at Cazenovia, N. Y., and then over the Pine Street Church in Boston. He was installed over this church March 2, 1831, and retained the pastoral relation until his death, March 22, 1839.

Rev. Francis Danforth, the seventh pastor, was born in 1793, at Hillsborough, N. H., graduated at Dartmouth College in 1819, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1822. He was installed over this church Dec. 11, 1839, dismissed Feb. 2, 1842, and died at Clarence, N. Y., Jan. 29, 1844.

Rev. Benjamin Nicholas Martin, a graduate of Yale College in 1837, succeeded Mr. Danforth, as the eighth pastor.

* Mrs. Williams had received from her father, who was the "most wealthy man in Hadley" in that day, a considerable portion. Mr. Judd says that Mr. Williams rode a horse valued at £20, and that his wardrobe contained leather breeches and waistcoat, four wigs, silk stockings, silver shoe-, knee-, and stock-buckles, two gold rings, and a tobacco-box and a snuff-box; also a silver tankard, valued at £22, a cane with a gold ferule, and one with a white head. He left to his wife, in the language of his will, "my negro woman, Phillis, my cows and sheep."

† Aug. 10, 1768, Mr. Hopkins purchased the lot and buildings for £266 13s. 4d. Mrs. Hopkins previously had a right to the use of one-third. The town added half an acre in 1773. In 1814, John Hopkins, his son, sold this homestead to Rev. John Woodbridge for $3100, reserving his shop on the southwest corner. This house, now—1879—112 years old, is occupied by Mr. Horace Richardson.

‡ The characteristics of Dr. Hopkins are clearly shown in Dr. Sprague's "Annals of the American Pulpit," in a contribution by Rev. Parsons Cook, a native of Hadley, dated Oct. 29, 1854.

He was ordained at Hadley, Jan. 19, 1843, and dismissed June 9, 1847. His successor, Rev. Rowland Ayres, the present pastor, is a native of Granby, graduated at Amherst College in 1841, and was ordained Jan. 12, 1848.

The second meeting-house was erected during the long pastorate of Rev. Mr. Chauncey, in 1713, in the middle of the broad street, opposite the "town lot," where stands the venerable "Hopkins house," occupied by Horace Richardson. It stood ninety-five years, until near the close of the ministry of Dr. Hopkins.

From the several votes of the town it is apparent that this structure, which was 50 by 40 feet in size, had tower and belfry, was plastered, "both the walls and overhead," had twelve windows below and thirteen above, some or all of which were "joiner's windows,"—diamond-shaped panes, set in lead frames,—and was furnished with galleries. The ordinary-seats or benches, which it first contained, were slowly supplanted by the high-backed box-pews, between the years 1719 and 1783. The people generally were opposed, and rightfully, to making invidious distinctions within the church, and would not provide pews for the principal families alone. Men and women sat apart in the church as late as 1762. Husbands and wives, "whom God had joined together," were in his house "put asunder."

Whatever may have been the rule observed in allotting the seats, the "seaters" had a difficult task, and often new committees were chosen for "reseating the house."

The steeple,‡ above the belfry, was added after 1753. The belfry itself was round, "with eight pillars and some ornamental work."

Mr. Eleazer Porter built and gave to this church a handsome pulpit with a sounding-board,—the latter inscribed "M. R. H., 1739."

A horse-block was provided in 1762. The tower, at the north end, contained an entrance, and was built up from the ground, separately,—not within the body of the church. There were two other entrances,—central on the east side and south end.

The present house was erected in 1808, and removed to the position it now occupies, on the east side of Middle, south of Russel Street, in 1841.¶

THE SECOND CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY, NORTH HADLEY, was organized Oct. 26, 1831, with 24 members. Its house of worship, dedicated in 1834, is located between three and four miles from that of the First Church, to which its members had previously belonged. Rev. Samuel M. Worcester, D.D., of Salem,—then of Amherst College,—was instrumental in organizing the society, became the first supply, and preached in a hall fitted up for that purpose. He commenced his labors in April, 1830, and served three years. Rev. Philip Payson succeeded Dr. Worcester, and preached about three years. The first settled pastor, Rev. Ebenezer Brown, a native of Brimfield, and graduate of Yale College in 1813, was installed April 8, 1835, and remained until June, 1838. The succeeding two years Rev. David L. Hunn served as a supply, and May 10, 1840, Rev. Warren H. Beaman—a graduate of Amherst College in 1837—began to serve the society, but was not formally settled until Sept. 15, 1841. He was dismissed July 8, 1872. Rev. James M. Bell served from October, 1872, was installed May, 1873, and dismissed April 20, 1876. His successor, Rev. John W. Lane, the present pastor, was installed May 1, 1878, having supplied from the preceding November.

‡ The cock, which still surmounts the steeple of the third meeting-house, is believed to have been put up when the spire of the second house was added, not long after 1753. . . . He was removed from the west to the middle street on the steeple in 1841." Zebulon Pratt, a slave of Oliver Warner's, climbed the steeple, sat on the "copper bird," and crowed. He was then 22 years old. Roguish fellows removed the gallinaceous vane in 1808, but were made to replace it.

¶ William Goodwin was the first ruling elder of the church, and had no successor, as appears by the records. Nathaniel Dickinson and Peter Tilton were the first deacons.

In 1854 a spire was added to the meeting-house, its pulpit remodeled, walls frescoed, and the building repainted. In 1866 an addition was made in the rear, to admit a pipe-organ and to accommodate the choir, behind the pulpit.

The present officers are Deacon Francis S. Russell and Deacon Baxter E. Bardwell, who is also clerk. The number of resident members is now (March, 1879) 124.

THE RUSSELL CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY*

was organized in 1841, with about 90 members, who withdrew from the First Church to constitute a new parish, upon the removal of their former church edifice from its previous position on West Street to its present location on Middle Street, and took its name from the first pastor of the original church, Mr. John Russell.

Rev. John Woodbridge, D.D., was installed as the first pastor, Feb. 16, 1842, and dismissed July 15, 1857. His successor, Rev. Franklin Tuxbury, was ordained over the church at the last-named date, and continued until Oct. 23, 1862. The present pastor, Rev. Edward S. Dwight, D.D., assumed the charge of the pastorate in June, 1864, and was installed in the following September. The present deacons of the church are Eleazer Porter and George Dickinson.

The church edifice of this society occupies a part of the front of the home-lot upon which Mr. Russell so long resided, and fronts west on West Street. It was erected in 1842.

CEMETERIES.

The burying-ground at Hadley, the oldest in the town, was reserved for the purpose in 1661, in the great meadow, and was in size $10\frac{1}{2}$ rods east and west by 20 rods north and south, and adjoined the west end of the home-lot of Edward Church† for 16 rods, and projected into the middle highway, from the north side thereof, 4 rods. A strip 6 or 7 rods wide was added to the east side in 1792, and another, 16 or 17 rods wide, in 1828. The grounds now contain a little more than 4 acres.

The first burial in this cemetery was that of an unnamed infant, son or daughter of Philip Smith, Jan. 22, 1661. The first adult buried was John Webster,—an ancestor of Noah Webster,—who died April 5th, in the same year. Tablets, erected in 1693, rest above the remains of Rev. John Russell and his wife Rebekah. Mr. Judd, who wrote in 1858, says, "There are only ten stones in the yard with dates earlier than 1720,—only ten when the town had been settled sixty years!"

The early monumental slabs were heavy and of rude workmanship, and all of sandstone.

In this old burying-ground, resting from the labors, the trials, the dangers, that beset them, many of the accomplished, many of "The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep."

One of the honored sons of this venerable hamlet has said but recently‡ concerning this cherished spot, "Here are ancestral memorials, rekindling in us and our children the holy courage of those who have won incorruptible crowns. Scatter along those ridges the seeds of fragrant blossoms that shall breathe their perfume of benediction over the green sods. Twine there the delicate graces of the sweet-brier, the woodbine, the ivy, the clematis, and the rose. Multiply, by every avenue and pathway, the voiceless preachers of hope,—

"Floral apostles that, with dewy splendor, Weep without woe and blush without a crime."

There are four other cemeteries in the town: one, at North Hadley, containing about an acre and a half of land, is situated in the northern part of the village; one near the Sunderland line, at "Russellville;" one at "Plainville;" and one at Hockanum, in the extreme southern portion of the town, at the foot of Mount Holyoke.

HOTELS.

Richard Goodman kept the first house of public entertainment in Hadley, for which he received a license in 1667. In 1675, and perhaps earlier, Joseph Kellogg, ferryman, was permitted to entertain travelers. The bar or bottle was quite as essential an adjunct of inns and ordinaries two centuries ago as of hotels and taverns now, but was perhaps under a sharper surveillance.§ Other inn-keepers of that period were Hezekiah Dickinson, 1692-93; Joseph Smith, 1696; Luke Smith, 1700-1 and 1711-31; Westwood Cooke, 1704-7. Nathaniel White, near Mill River, at North Hadley, for some time kept a tavern, from a period anterior to 1770; probably the same which until a recent period was kept by Thaddeus Smith, who succeeded John Hibbard.

Inns have been kept also in the following places: on the west side of West Street, north end, on the lot occupied by the residence of D. S. Baker, by Solomon Cooke, and afterward by Esek Baker down to 1864. At the south end, on the "Goodman place," or "Ferry lot," an inn was probably kept many years. Stephen Goodman married a daughter of the third ferryman, James Kellogg, whose grandfather there "entertained travelers." Joanna Kellogg may have become a landlady. Nearly opposite, on the east side, on the lot occupied by Mrs. W. P. Warner, there was once an inn; another, on the same side, south of Russell Street; and three others at the north end, east side,—one on the river-bank, near where David Foley resides (1879), one on the corner south, now occupied by Thomas McGraff, and a third on the lot next south of the last named, where Thomas Reynolds resides.

Not many years since, an inn occupied the corner north of the Bay road, on the east side of Middle Street, where Mrs. George Allen now resides, and was kept successively by Maj. John Smith, Benjamin Smith, and Augustus Smith.

Zadock Lyman opened a public-house at Hockanum in 1746, which at his death, seven years afterward, was continued by his widow. The house stood a short distance north of the present cemetery, and was kept and known as the "Lyman House" until 1869.

Farther north, a short distance, an inn was established by Ebenezer Pomeroy, brother-in-law of Zadock Lyman. In front flaunted "the sign of the White Horse."

The only hotel in the town at the present time—March, 1879—is the "Elmwood House," a title apt as regards its situation among the beautiful elms of West Street, but which does not recall the memorable incidents of its previous history. Situated on the old home-lot of Mr. Russell, the first minister of Hadley, it still retains, despite the changes, some portions of the old house he occupied, and in which the judges were so long concealed.||

The Russell House, and 12 acres of land attached, were sold to the town of Hadley in 1694, by Rev. Samuel Russell, third son of the first owner. The town gave 10 acres and the buildings to Mr. Isaac Chauncey, the second minister, in 1696, as a settlement. Josiah Chauncey, the youngest of Mr. Chauncey's children, sold the property in November, 1749, to Samuel Gaylord, from whom it passed to his son, Samuel. Chester Gaylord, a son of the last named, succeeded to the west half of the property, including the dwelling, the kitchen part of

§ The quality of beer was defined by the law, and a penalty attached to the sale of any inferior article. The lawful beer of 1674 required four bushels of barley malt to each sixty-three gallons.

|| So suggestive is the situation of the present "Judges' Chamber," in which this history is written, that the occupant readily imagines that the white-haired fugitives—Goffe and Whalley—have but just retired to the "dark closet" behind him to escape the spying intrusion; but Edward Randolph, long ere this, has followed, perchance discovered, them.

* A portion of this account of the churches of Hadley is from the appendix to Mr. Judd's history.

† Now owned by Mr. J. S. Bell and the Richardson brothers.

‡ Dr. F. D. Huntington's Bi-Centennial address, June 8, 1859.

which his father had rebuilt previous to 1782, and the main part, on Russell Street, in 1795.* The house and 4 acres passed to the possession of George H. Gaylord, son of Chester, thence to Horace Cook, who sold to Edward Kingsley, the present owner, in the spring of 1878. The house, in Mr. Kingsley's hands, has been much enlarged and improved, and adapted to the purposes of a hotel.

MOUNT HOLYOKE AND THE MOUNTAIN HOUSE.

This elevation of greenstone forms the division between Hadley and South Hadley, and yields from its summit extensive views of rare majesty and beauty. There were occasional visits to the summit by travelers during the last century, but the spot was not improved for the accommodation of sight-seers until 1821. A building was erected in June of that year, by individuals from Northampton and Hadley, and dedicated in an address delivered by Mr. E. H. Mills. The approach from the northwest side was made a short time afterward. Mr. John W. French built another house on the summit in 1851, and has since constructed a railway, by which ascents and descents are made with ease and safety. This house is partly in Hadley and partly in South Hadley.

TOWN POOR.

The town had few dependents upon its charity in the earlier years. William Webster and his wife Mary, the reputed witch, were given assistance, and lived in a house called the "town-house," in the middle highway, and east of the cemetery. Some of the poor were "boarded round;" one is named, a widow, who was "to go from Samuel Porter's, Sr., southward, and round the town." Thomas Elgarr, a soldier in the Indian war, was assisted; John Hillier (Hilliard?) was to be provided with "a small log house," in 1718. Ten years afterward £10 were appropriated for the poor. In 1793, 8 paupers were sold to Maj. John Smith for £11 each,—he receiving instead of paying the amount, however,—among whom was Rebekah (Crow) Noble, once fair and quite a belle in Hadley. She had been wooed and won; but, having dismissed her lover in a fit of jealousy, her after-life was embittered by regret and sorrow. She died in 1802, a pauper, at the age of ninety years.

The present poor-farm of 25 acres was purchased in 1867 for $2000, and the buildings then standing have been improved at a cost of $1200. There are but 9 inmates at the present time (March, 1879). Net cost of support of poor in poor-house, 1878-79, $724.79; outside poor, $779.12; total, $1503.91.

MANUFACTURES.

Mills.—The first mill erected in the present town of Hadley was for the manufacture of lumber. It was situated on Mill River, or the stream ever after so called, and was put up by Thomas Meekins and Robert Boltwood in or near the year 1664. Until this time the inhabitants used riven boards,† or those made with pit-saws. The mill of Meekins & Boltwood was continued by them until 1674.

Grist-Mills.—No grist- or corn-mill was erected in Hadley, east of the river, until the year 1670. Thomas Meekins had put up a mill on Mill River, in what is now Hatfield, in 1661, and was, by vote, to have all the town patronage, "provided he make good meal." Thomas Wells and John Hubbard were employed by the east-side residents to carry grain to mill and return with the meal at regular times. This method of supplying grists ceased when the Hopkins school-mill was erected in 1670. A lot near by was provided for the miller in October, 1671. The mill was guarded by a small garrison during the Indian war, and remained intact through the period of greatest uprising, but was burned by a roving band of redskins in September, 1677. The mill at Hatfield was then for a time resorted to, until the one on the east side was rebuilt by Robert Boltwood, a period of one or two years. The town, in a controversy with the trustees of the Hopkins grammar school,‡ twice obtained possession of the mill-property, but delivered it finally to the latter in 1687. Five years later it was damaged and destroyed by a flood and was again rebuilt, and was renewed in 1706 and in 1721.

John Clary was the miller in 1683. In November, 1687, Joseph Smith,§ a cooper, was engaged, and remained many years,—

"Tending the mill in its clattering round, Till his hair was as white as the flour he ground."

None of these early mills seem to have been provided with facilities for bolting the products. The bolting or sifting was a domestic operation, and several small "bolting-mills" were owned by families in Hadley.¶ Some flour was barreled and sent to market down the river.

A grist-mill has been kept at or near the site occupied by the first mill most of the time since 1670; part, if not most, of the time in connection with a saw-mill. A grist-mill and a saw-mill were in operation on Fort River, near Hadley village, in 1771.

Other Manufactures.—For a time a carding-mill was attached to the grist-mill,—probably in 1775,—and was continued to near the beginning of the present century, and subsequently an establishment for drawing wire was conducted successively by Nathan Clark and Horace Lamb. Cattle and wool cards made there at one time by John Clark.

A mill privilege farther up the river, at Plainville, was improved at a later date for the manufacture of wagons and other wood-work.

The manufacture of brooms, which is now a principal industry in the town, is the joint product of her fertile soil and the no less fertile genius of her adopted son, Levi Dickinson, a native of Wethersfield, Conn. He planted the first broom-corn in Hadley in 1797, and the year following raised "the first half-acre cultivated for brooms in America." His brooms met with good sale, and in spite of ridicule he persisted in producing them, and gradually improved the processes for manufacture. His devotion did not appear so visionary to the people of Hadley when, in 1850, that town was credited in the census with the production of 769,700 brooms, valued at $118,478, and 76,000 brushes, valued at $5970.

Certain of his neighbors, scenting success from afar, began the culture of broom-corn about the first year of this century, among whom are mentioned William Shipman, Solomon Cook, Levi Gale, and a negro named Cato. The manufacture became of national importance before the death of Mr. Dickinson. He died in 1843, aged eighty-eight.

Present Manufactures.—There are at present within the town a grist,- saw,- and planing-mill, owned by Rodney Smith; a grist- and saw-mill, owned by George E. Smith; and a saw-mill, owned by Samuel Dickinson.

AGRICULTURE.

The first plowing in what is now the town of Hadley was done for the Indians by the settlers at Northampton in 1654, the year that town was settled.

Wheat grew readily with rich soil, and was raised in con-

* It was at the time of this rebuilding that the bones of Gen. Whalley were discovered.

† Riven or cloven boards, hence, clove-boards, cloboards, clabboards, clapboards. The town voted, Dec. 17, 1660, "that if any men fell any rift timber, and do not rive it out into bolts, pales, rails, clapboards, or shingles within six weeks, any inhabitant may fetch it away for his own use; and if any man fell any pine timber and cart it not away in three months, any man may make use of it."

‡ See account of the Hopkins school in this volume.

§ He received for his labor one-half the toll, the use of a house and land. His part of the toll for several years was but £13 per year. "He was the first permanent resident on Mill River."—Vile Judd's Hist.

¶ Richard Montague, a baker, had a mill valued at 60 shillings in 1680. "His widow sometimes bolted flour for others by the barrel."

siderable quantity before the eighteenth century, and much was shipped to Boston. The other cereals were also grown, with the exception of buckwheat, which seems to have been unknown or disregarded until after the Revolution. Beans and peas flourished from the beginning.

Indian corn was always an important crop, increasing in acreage and yield per acre as the manner of cultivating was improved and a just system of returns to the soil, by way of fertilizers, was begun and followed. In the earlier years but a small number of domestic animals was kept, and the nearest lots alone were fertilized. In 1855 the corn on 1142 acres was estimated at 37 bushels per acre,—nearly double the yield a century ago.

Potatoes were introduced about the middle of the last century,—probably from Pelham,—and are now a staple crop. The quantity has increased and the quality improved.

Flax, which entered so largely into the manufactures of the early days of Hadley, was grown extensively as a necessity. Hemp became a product in the later years, and for a time yielded handsome returns.

Large areas of the rich lowlands—some of which were periodically overflowed and received silt from the river—have been kept as meadow-lands. Many pieces have never been plowed, or but rarely. The yield of hay from these lands—of a quality more or less desirable—has been, and still is, large. Hay is now (1879) an important crop with Hadley farmers. Fruit has been produced in limited quantity, and, in later years, of fair quality. Few apple-trees were grown for a long time after the first settlement, and, until after the Revolution, were grown for making cider, which had begun to take the place of other things potable. Hadley is recorded as one of four towns whose cider product, in 1771, averaged more than four barrels to a house. Grafted fruit has been introduced since 1800.

Tobacco culture was commenced by the farmers of Hadley about the year 1840, and the encouraging success at first attained—financially—led to the displacement of other leading crops, whose production had become unprofitable or impossible in competition with the West. A local writer intimates that the moral aspects of this industry were counter to the sentiments of right and justice which actuated the faithful “planters” of Hadley, as though the fumes of the Indian weed had dulled and stupefied the once alert consciences of the inhabitants. However this may be, Hadley was not alone in feeling the reaction which in 1875 followed a high tide of seeming prosperity. She is yet rich in her meadows and uplands, and the farmers are already responding to the demand for a new and less exhaustive industry.

Hadley claims to antedate all other towns in the use of the revolving horse-rake. It was first used on the farm of the late Rev. D. Huntington. It is doubtless also true that the “first scythe made in America was made in Hadley by Benjamin Colt,” who also introduced the use of sleds. Improved breeds of cattle were introduced about 1839.

MEANS OF COMMUNICATION.

Highways.—After laying out the highways of the village proper in 1659–60 others were laid in the meadows near by, making the whole number, as recorded in 1665, eleven. A “passable cart-way” was ordered in 1667, extending over the Forty-Acre Meadow to Mill Brook. Before 1659 the settlers at Northampton had a road to Springfield by way of Hockanum, on the east side of the river. With this early connection was made by the people of Hadley. The original road, which was used nearly a century, was “below the steep part of the acclivity,” some distance above the present road. In 1664 roads “sufficient for travell with carts” were laid out on both sides of the river between Hadley and Windsor, Conn. The road on the east side crossed the Chicopee River at Chicopee Falls; but eight years later one was laid to cross

“at the islands, near Japhet Chapin’s,” now Chicopee Centre. Over the latter produce could be taken directly to the head of navigation, below Willimansett.

The earliest way or path to Boston was north of Fort River and called “Nashaway Path,” and was probably laid out in 1662. In 1674 the “Bay road” crossed that river near the south end of Spruce Hill, and in 1688 was changed to its present route, but would allow the passage of vehicles. Such a broad road was pronounced not feasible in 1692. The wide roads were constructed later.

Ferries.—A ferry was kept up between the south end of the wide street in Hadley and Northampton by Joseph Kellogg and his descendants for nearly one hundred years, or from 1661 to 1758. Mr. Kellogg built a house on the lot which had been reserved for ferry purposes, on the south side of the “south highway to the meadow.” He was to provide, by arrangement with the town in 1675, “a boat for horses and a canoe for persons, and receive for man and horse eight pence in wheat or other pay, or sixpence in money, for single persons threepence, or, when more than one, twopence each.” Night and storm-bound travelers were at the mercy of the ferryman, and were obliged to negotiate terms with him. The ferrymen were, successively, Joseph Kellogg, his son John Kellogg, and his grandson Joseph Kellogg, and, after 1758, Stephen Goodman, who married a daughter of James Kellogg. The ferry was named “Goodman’s Ferry,” from the last proprietor.

In 1692 and subsequently a similar ferry was operated between Hadley and Hatfield, from the north end of the street, whose first Charon was John Ingram, the second John Preston. A bridge connecting Hadley and Hatfield was burned many years ago, since which several ferries have been opened, but only one of these is now operated, viz., between North Hadley and Hatfield. One, operated from the north end of West Street, Hadley, and another, called “Hunter’s Ferry,” some distance above, were abandoned before 1855. A ferry is now run between Hockanum and Northampton.

*Bridges.—A bridge was built over Fort River “for horses, oxen, and carts” in 1661, on the road to Springfield; and another, lower on the stream, in 1667; and a third, still farther down, in 1681. The cost of the last was £44 15s. 3d. The first bridge on the Bay road was one for carts, in 1675; was “near the south end of Spruce Hill, and much used by the troops in Philip’s war.”

A bridge was built over Mill River, “at the mill,” in 1684. In the absence of other means for crossing streams, trees were often felled to form foot-bridges.

The first bridge over the Connecticut at Hadley was authorized March 8, 1803, and connected that town with Hatfield. Lemuel Dickinson and seventy-four others were the incorporators. This bridge long since ceased to be maintained.†

The first bridge between Hadley and Northampton was constructed under an act passed March 2, 1803. The present iron bridge, erected in 1877, is the successor of a covered wooden structure, which was destroyed by a hurricane in June, 1877. At this casualty several persons were injured, and others miraculously escaped.

INDIAN OCCUPANCY AND WARS.

Several Indian forts were in Hadley. One of the most important was on Fort River, and “had the almost perpendicular bank, rising forty or fifty feet above Fort River, on the south and west sides, while the river flowed at the bottom of this bank on the west side. Lawrence’s Plain, a high, pleasant tract of land, extended easterly.” The site could be, within a few years, easily identified. Another fort was north of North

* The Connecticut bridges are described more at length elsewhere in this volume.

† It was a toll-bridge, as were all the early ones on the Connecticut River.

Hadley, on a ridge between the upper and lower School Meadows. This is supposed to have been the abode of Quonquont and his dusky followers. His deed to Mr. Pynchon, in 1658, mentions "the brook Wunnaquickset," which runs through the upper School Meadow, north and east of the fort. Many bones of Indians have been found in the vicinity, more than in any other place in Hadley. All the forts in Hadley east of the river were abandoned some years previous to the opening of hostilities with the whites in 1675.

The *Mohawks made occasional predatory and warlike incursions from the westward, in which the inhabitants of the river-towns suffered considerably from the loss of hogs and cattle, which were allowed to roam the woods. Hadley shared in these losses in 1667. Other Indians were involved or under suspicion,—even the Norwottucks.

Philip's War.—After his many disasters and losses in battle and by defection, Philip moved with what forces he could muster upon the Hampshire towns late in the summer of 1675. It was supposed he had proceeded to the vicinity of Paquayag, now Athol, and troops under Capts. Lothrop, Beers, and Watts were sent up the river in pursuit. The latter returned to Hadley on or near August 22d, but proceeded soon after to Hartford. Capts. Lothrop and Beers entered Hadley with their troops on the 23d of August, or about that time.

The valley Indians had shown signs of disaffection toward the whites, and an effort to disarm them occasioned open warfare. The first conflict was about ten miles above Hatfield, at a place called "Sugar-Loaf Hill," where Capts. Lothrop and Beers were both engaged with about 100 of their troops from Hadley. Of the nine soldiers slain on that occasion, one was a resident of that town,—Azariah, son of Nathaniel Dickinson.

Deerfield was attacked September 1st by the united hostiles, Norwottucks and Pocomtucks, and 18 men slain at Squakheag—Northfield—on the following day. On the 3d, "this onset being unknown, Capt. Beers set forth from Hadley with about 36 men and some carts to fetch off the garrison at Squakheag, and, coming within three miles of the place the next morning, were set upon by a great number of Indians from the side of a swamp, where was a hot dispute for some time."† Capt. Beers and many of his men were slain, including William Markham, Jr., of Hadley, a teamster. A demonstration was made by the Indians against Deerfield on the 12th, but within a few days thereafter the savages had all disappeared. A body of troops, about 60 in number, arrived at Hadley under Capt. Mosley, September 14th, and others were then on their way. There were more or less soldiers in the town from the 23d of August, 1675, until the close of this, the first Indian war in the valley.

The Nipmucks and Wampanoags under Philip, it is probable, had not participated in any of the conflicts west of the Connecticut River up to September 14th. Mr. Judd, who apparently was guided by the statement of Rev. Increase Mather in 1676, says these Indians "first showed themselves upon the Connecticut River on the 1st day of September (1675), and made an attack upon Hadley."

The following is Mr. Mather's statement of the affair:

"On the first of September, one of the churches in Boston was seeking the face of God by fasting and prayer before him. Also, that very day, the church in Hadley was before the Lord in the same way, but were driven from the holy service they were attending by a most sudden and violent alarm, which routed them the whole day after."

On the 18th of September, Capt. Lothrop and "above 70

* Part of a band of Mohawks, who had visited Boston, in 1723, "with sham proposals of alliance against the eastern Indians," but whose real object seems to have been junketing and carousal at the public expense, were entertained by Mr. Luke Smith, of Hadley, who had a score therefor against the commonwealth.

† For detail of this conflict, and of others incidentally mentioned in the text, see chapters relating to the towns where they severally occurred.

‡ For further account of this "alarm," see "Tradition concerning Gen. Goffe," in another part of this work.

men"‡ were sent to Deerfield to convoy a train of wagons, loaded with grain, from that place to Hadley. The train and guard were surprised, and there resulted the battle of "Bloody Brook," or rather a massacre seldom equaled in the annals of savage warfare for systematic and appalling completeness. Seventy-one were slain, including Capt. Lothrop. Among the slaughtered teamsters was John Barnard, son of Francis Barnard, of Hadley.

The Indians, having caused the abandonment of Northfield and Deerfield, artfully dodged the other northern towns; then, being strengthened, they fell upon defenseless Springfield, which they burned and pillaged October 5th. News of the threatened assault reached Hadley in the night previous, whereupon Maj. Pynchon, then in the town, with Capts. Appleton and Sill, whose forces had been in Hadley but a few days, set out for the beleaguered village on the very morning of its calamity. It was then, if at all during the war, that Hadley was left entirely ungarrisoned and defenseless. The Rev. John Russell wrote on the sixth to the Governor—Leverett—and council, giving an account of the destruction of Springfield, and says: "Our town of Hadley is now like to drink next (if mercy prevent not) of this bitter cup; we are but 50 families, and now left solitary. We desire to repose our confidence in the eternal God, who is the refuge of his people, and to stand ready to do and suffer his will in all things. To his grace I commend you." The sturdy minister manifestly had a lurking faith in the "strongest battalions."§

Capt. Appleton, who had taken command of the troops, returned to Hadley October 12th, whence he made frequent excursions in quest of the Indians, but did not encounter them.

Hatfield was desperately attacked by a considerable body of Indians October 19th, but was relieved by troops from Hadley, under Capt. Appleton. In this affair, Freegrace Norton, a sergeant, was mortally wounded, and died in Hadley soon after, at the house of Lieut. Samuel Smith.

The continued efforts of the savages to destroy the settlements caused much uneasiness, and many of the inhabitants contemplated removal with their families to safer situations, but were prevented by a proclamation issued by Capt. Appleton on the 12th of November. Soon after the 19th of the same month most of the troops were withdrawn from the river-towns, a small garrison being left in each. The garrison at Hadley, under Capt. Jonathan Poole, consisted of 30 men. Hadley, like the other towns of the valley, was without artificial defenses; no palisades were erected until the following year.

The number of whites slain in the county of Hampshire up to this time, according to the return made by minister Russell, was 145.

The recent experience of the inhabitants admonished them to take steps for the better protection of their settlements. The principal defenses were called palisades, and consisted of stakes or pales set closely together, with about two feet of their length in the ground and eight above, forming a tight fence about each plantation. These pales were probably joined together in some effectual manner, to prevent their removal singly. Simple as were these structures, they afforded adequate protection against the Indians, who soon came to regard them as traps to be avoided.¶

‡ In Dr. Holland's history, the number given is eighty.

§ Mr. Russell concludes his report with the following exhortation from Joel: "Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children and those that suck at the breast. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thy heritage to reproach, that the heathen shall rule over them. Wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God? Then will the Lord be jealous for his land and pity his people."

¶ In Hubbard's history it is related that "although they did in the spring (1676) break through the palisades at Northampton, yet as soon as they began to be repulsed they saw themselves, like wolves in a pound, that they could not fly

Such a palisade was constructed at Hadley, concerning which the first town vote recorded bears date Feb. 11, 1676,* and is as follows:

"Voted and ordered by the towne that the whole fortification set up for the defence and security of the town on east and west side shall be sufficiently maintained and kept up, and that on the west side the streete to defend the meadow from spoile and damage, and to be subject to the inspection of the fence-viewers, and no man in any part of the fortification above said shall have or make any perticuler outlett for himselfe or cattell into the meadow or lotts, under the penaltie of five shillings, which shall be forthwith distrained by warrant from the selectmen for the town's use."

Provision was also made at the same meeting for clearing the passage to the corn-mill, and cutting all bushes on the home-lots which might harbor an enemy.

The Indians, if many remained in the vicinity during the winter of 1675-76, made few demonstrations, and none of magnitude, against the river-towns. Philip's Wampanoags—possibly, though not certainly, accompanied by Philip himself—had passed over to the country of the Narragansetts soon after the failure at Hatfield, and doubtless bore a prominent part in the bloody scenes which there signalized the winter's campaign. Driven finally from the eastern settlements, the several bands of hostile Indians concentrated near the Connecticut River, and again beset the towns upon its borders. A large portion of the Narragansetts had escaped at the destruction of their fort on the 19th of December, 1675, and joined the frontier foray.

Not to be caught napping, the inhabitants of Hadley were divided into several "squadrons" for watch-duty, and a fortification committee was appointed.

Capt. William Turner entered Hadley March 4, 1676, and was joined by a body of dragoons, under Maj. Thomas Savage,† on the 8th. On the 14th, Northampton was attacked by Indians, who came from the northward. The following portion of a letter from minister Russell, of Hadley, to Gov. Leverett, as quoted by Mr. Judd, portrays the feeling inspired by that occurrence:

"RIGHT WORSHIPFUL,—Although the Lord hath granted us an interval of quietness this winter, yet since the coming on of the spring the war here is renewed. On the 14th inst. the enemy, to the number of 2000‡ as judged, made a most sudden and violent irruption upon Northampton, broke their works in 3 places, and had in reason taken the whole town, had not Providence graciously so ordered it that Maj. Treat was come in with his men the evening before; yet they burnt five houses and five barns,—one without the fortification,—slew five persons, and wounded five. There are said to be found slain about a dozen of the enemy. Above Deerfield a few miles is the great place of their fishing, which must be expected to afford them their provisions for the year. We must look to feel their utmost rage. My desire is we may be willing to do or suffer, to live or die, remain in or be driven out from our habitations, as the Lord our God would have us. Capt. Poole, who hath been left here for the government of the soldiers, doth earnestly entreat for liberty to repair to his own very much suffering family, at least for a while. With prayers to the God of all blessing to guide and strengthen and carry you through this day of temptation, I am, Sr, yr worp's most obliged serv't, —JOHN RUSSELL.

"HADLEY, March 16, 1675-6."

In the latter days of March much excitement was engendered among the settlers by a proposition or quasi order, emanating from the Massachusetts council, that all the plantations away at their pleasure, so as they never adventured to break through afterward upon any of the towns so secured."

The Hadley palisade was placed some distance in the rear of the buildings, on both sides of the street, and extended across the street at each end, inclosing a space nearly a mile long and about forty rods in width. Gates were made where the palisade crossed each of the lateral highways, and at the ends of the principal street, through which alone ingress and egress were permitted. It was ordered by the town that all bushes which might afford a lurking-place for the enemy should be cleared away in the vicinity of the fortification.

* Dr. Holland says, in regard to the palisades, "After the completion of these works the troops at Hadley were called off to Connecticut and the East, a sufficient number being left to garrison the several towns." (Hist. of West. Mass., Vol. I. p. 109.) The fortification was not completed when the vote was taken, Feb. 11, 1676. The troops withdrew in November previous.

† Capt. Turner proceeded to Northampton. There were then left in Hadley one Connecticut company, under Capt. Whipple, and two Massachusetts companies, under Capt. Gillam,—all under Maj. Savage.

‡ Mr. Judd exclaims at the extravagant figures: "2000 Indian warriors! Strange delusion! There may have been 300 or 400."

except Springfield and Hadley should be abandoned, and their inhabitants gathered into these two towns for purposes of defense. The council claimed that "to remain in such a scattered state is to expose lives and estates to the merciless cruelty of the enemy." The appeal was futile; the faith and courage which planted, if they had before wavered, now arose firmly to maintain the several towns in their integrity.

The later events of this war now hurried on. About the 1st of April a number of the residents of Hadley proceeded to Hockanum, with a guard of soldiers, to work in the fields. They were assailed from an ambush by a party of Indians, who killed Deacon Richard Goodman and two of the soldiers, and captured a third soldier, named Thomas Reed.§ Those killed and captured seem to have gone apart from the others.

Near the time of this incident—on the 1st of April—most of the troops left Hadley, under Maj. Savage, who allowed 151 soldiers to remain in charge of Capt. Turner. Of these 51 were stationed at Hadley, 46 at Northampton, 45 at Hatfield, and 9 at Springfield. Some of Capt. Appleton's troops left the preceding November yet remained. These soldiers were allowed to remain, doubtless, upon condition that the towns should support them, the offer of Northampton, "to diet them freely and pay their wages," having been accepted by the council.

The Indians, having been emboldened by the cessation of active campaigning against them, and by the withdrawal of troops, again occupied the planting-grounds at Deerfield. Mr. Russell wrote to the council, May 15th, concerning this, and gave other information as coming from Thomas Reed, who had effected his escape, and adds:

"He saith further, that they dwell at the falls, on both sides of the river,—are a considerable number, yet most of them old men and old women. He cannot judge that there are, on both sides of the river, above 60 or 70 fighting-men. They are secure and scornful, boasting of great things they have done and will do. . . . This being the state of things, we think the Lord calls us to make some trial what may be done against them suddenly, without further delay, and therefore the concurring resolution of men here seems to be to go out against them to-morrow night, so as to be with them, the Lord assisting, before break of day. We need guidance and help from heaven."

He says, in postscript, sagely:

"Altho' this man speaks of their number as he judgeth, yet they may be many more, for we perceive their number varies, and they are going and coming, so that there is no trust to his guess."

The proposed expedition against the Indians was undertaken on the evening of the 18th of May|| by a body of about 160 mounted men, from the several towns, under Capt. Turner. The resulting fight the following day, at what is now known as Turner's Falls, with its triumphant beginning and, in some respects, calamitous ending, is described elsewhere in this volume. Capt. Turner was shot while crossing Green River upon the return march, and 38 soldiers were slain, all except one after leaving the falls.

The following residents of Hadley were in the "Falls fight": Sergts. Joseph Kellogg and John Dickinson, Samuel Boltwood, Noah Coleman, Nehemiah Dickinson, Isaac Harrison, John Ingram, John Smith, Joseph Selden, Joseph Warriner, Thomas Wells, Jr., Jonathan Wells,¶ David Hoyt, Samuel § Mrs. Rowlandson, the wife of the minister at Lancaster, who was captured at that place on the 10th of February, 1676, and who, at the time of the affair at Hockanum, was with the Indians above Northfield, says, in her published account, "About this time the Indians came yelping from Hadley, having there killed three Englishmen, and brought one captive, Thomas Reed. They all gathered about the poor man, asking him many questions."

|| Not the 17th, as often erroneously stated. The records of Northampton and Hatfield, as well as the narratives of Hope Atherton and Jonathan Wells, show that the conflict was on the 19th of May.

¶ Jonathan Wells, according to Dr. Holland, was a resident of Hatfield; according to Mr. Judd, a resident of Hadley, and subsequently of Deerfield. Mr. Wells was crippled in the fight by a shot which fractured his thigh, and, keeping his saddle, accompanied as best he could the retreating parties of soldiers. He became bewildered in the woods, while in the company of one Jones, also wounded, and finally fell exhausted from his horse. Using his gun for a support, he pursued his painful journey, unfortunately in the wrong direction, but Crow, Peter Montague, and Eliezer Hawks; also Nathaniel Sutcliffe, who had lived in Deerfield. John Preston, who had enlisted under Capt. Turner, was also from Hadley, or afterward settled there. Harrison and Sutcliffe were slain, and John Dickinson and Samuel Crow probably.

The descendants of 68 Hampshire men who participated in this battle were awarded, in 1736, as many shares of land in Falltown, now Bernardston; and fifteen of the shares fell to representatives of the volunteers from Hadley.

Notwithstanding the loss of a large number of their warriors in the fight of May 19th, the Indians soon took the offensive, and on the eleventh day thereafter appeared at Hatfield, where they fired several houses and barns "without the fortification," and did other damage. "Twenty-five active and resolute men," wrote Mr. Mather, "went from Hadley to relieve their distressed brethren. The Indians shot at them ere they could get out of the boat, and wounded one of them." One of the twenty-five was slain,—“a precious young man, whose name was Smith,* that place (Hadley) having lost many in losing that one man.”

The forces in Hadley were augmented by the arrival there, on the 8th of June, of Maj. John Talcott, in command of 250 mounted men and 200 friendly Indians. A part of these forces proceeded to Northampton. The advent of these mounted men and Indians, according to Mr. Judd, created a profound sensation in Hadley. He says:

“The Indians were Peguals, Mohicans, Nianticks, Indians from Hartford County, and some from Fairfield. They formed a motley assemblage: their dress and arms were various, and their decorations diversified and fantastic. A collection of 200 friendly Indian warriors was a sight which the inhabitants of these towns never saw before.”

Capt. Swain, after the death of Capt. Turner, was sent to take the command in Hadley. Maj. Talcott made his headquarters at Northampton.

At this period the towns—especially Northampton and Hadley—possessed ample means of defense. Both towns had palisades, and were strongly garrisoned not only, but contained surplus troops, intended for an active campaign against the enemy.

The Indians were probably unaware of the real state of affairs, and on the 12th of June appeared at Hadley and made an attack upon the town. A contemporaneous writer, Rev. Increase Mather, gives the following graphic account:

“June 12th the enemy assaulted Hadley. In the morning, sun an hour high, three soldiers, going out of the town without their arms, were dissuaded therefrom by a sergeant who stood at the gate, but they, alleging that they intended not to go far, were suffered to pass; within awhile the sergeant apprehended that he heard some men running, and looking over the fortification he saw twenty Indians pursuing those three men, who were so terrified that they could not cry out,—two of them were at last killed, and the other so mortally wounded that he lived not above two or three days,—wherefore the sergeant gave the alarm. God, in great mercy to these western plantations, had so ordered by his providence that the Connecticut army was come thither before this onset from the enemy. Besides English, there were near upon two hundred Indians in Hadley, who came to fight with and for the English against the common enemy, who was quickly driven off at the south end of the town. Whilst our men were pursuing of them here, on a sudden a great swarm of Indians issued out of the bushes and made their main assault at the north end of the town; they fired a barn which was without the fortification, and went into a house where the inhabitants discharged a great gun upon them, whereupon about fifty Indians were seen running out of the house in great haste, being terribly frightened by the report and slaughter made amongst them by the great gun. Ours followed the enemy (whom they judged to be about five hundred, and, by Indian report since, it seems they were seven hundred) near upon two miles, and would fain have pursued them further, but they had no orders so to do. But few of ours lost their was admonished in a sleep which came upon him of his error, and changed his course. His after-experience, fraught with hair-breadth escapes, would form alone an interesting chapter.—Vide Dr. Holland's West. Mass., Vol. I, p. 124.

* “John Smith, of Hadley, so highly praised by Mather, was in the Falls fight a few days before. He was a son of Lieut. Samuel Smith, and an ancestor of the Hatfield Smiths. The late Oliver Smith, of Hatfield, the most wealthy man in Hampshire, was one of his descendants.”—Mr. Judd's Hist., p. 176, note.

† Mr. Judd, commenting upon some points of this letter, says, “It is not known when and where Hadley obtained this ‘great gun,’ which was only a small cannon,” and respecting the number of Indians, “There were not at that time seven hundred hostile Indian warriors in Massachusetts.”

lives in this skirmish, nor is it yet known how many the enemy lost in this fight. The English could find but three dead Indians, yet some of them who have been informed by Indians, that while the Indian men were thus fighting against Hadley the Mohawks came upon their headquarters and smote their women and children with a great slaughter, and then returned with much plunder.”

According to this account, the struggle appears to have been entirely outside the palisades. It will be remembered that a number of houses at the north end were not inclosed by the fortification. These were probably the ones to receive the assault. Says Mr. Judd:

“The object of the Indians seems to have been to plunder and destroy without the fortification, as at Hatfield. It may be conjectured that a part of them designed to cut off those that went down to work in Fort and Hockanum meadows in the morning. There may have been 250 Indians engaged in this enterprise. They were our river Indians and other Nipmucks, with some Narragansetts.”

With the exception of an attack on Hatfield and Deerfield, on the 19th of September in the succeeding year, 1677, when several of the inhabitants of those towns were killed and others taken prisoners, and that of the burning of the Hadley grist-mill, situated on Mill River, in the ensuing October, no further events of moment occurred in these northern towns during this war. Nearly all the troops were withdrawn from Hadley by the end of June, 1676, only a small garrison, under Capt. Swain, remaining. These also left before September.

The cultivation of the outlying lands during the war was attended with danger, and those most remote from the defenses were not tilled in 1676.

The following vote of the town, in July of that year, sufficiently illustrates the situation. Swords, if not then plow-shares, at least accompanied the implements of husbandry:

“Ordered, that during the time of cutting and inning of corn and grass in Hockanum and Fort Meadow, there shall be not less than the whole number of garrison soldiers, and two out of each squadron, or eight inhabitants, left to secure the town as a garrison every day, the ordering of the garrison aforesaid to be under the inspection of the captain of the garrison soldiers and Lieut. Smith. Ordered, that no less than forty nor more than fifty men presume to go to labor in Hockanum or Fort Meadow, as to harvest-work; and this number they shall dispose of in the best manner for their security and safety; and on those days when such a part are working, either in Hockanum or Fort Meadow, no person shall then be working in the Great Meadow, but the rest are to abide in the town as a security, under a penalty of three shillings. To-morrow, July 19th, shall be the day for going to Hockanum, the 20th into the Great Meadow, the 21st into Hockanum, and so the week following.”

During the winter of 1675–76, and until the following May, the northern towns paid their own soldiers who were engaged in garrison duty, and their maintenance was no light burden.‡ Rev. Mr. Russell entertained the chief officers at his own house, and, after two petitions in his behalf,—one of which was signed by his wife, Rebecca Russell,—was partly, if not wholly, reimbursed for his outlay, amounting to £78 13s. 8d. The keeping of these officers “called for provisions answerable, and was of the best to be had;” and, say the petitioners, he had “to draw divers barrels of beer, and much wine and fruit suitable to the company; and had no more credit for such company by the week or meal than other men for ordinary entertainment,” and caused “great cumber, trouble, and burden upon his wife.”

It is reasonable to suppose that the judges, Whalley and Goffe, who had so long been harbored by Mr. Russell, were not among the number of his guests at this period.¶

TRADITION CONCERNING GENERAL GOFFE, THE “HADLEY ANGEL.”

Local traditions concerning alleged local events, whether or not sustained by known facts of history, are believed to ‡ Wheat is meant.

§ “Samuel Porter took care of most of the wounded soldiers at Hadley, and laid out much for their provision and comfort. So says the record of the General Court, September, 1676. There was due him, for what he had expended on the country's account, about £200. Richard Montague baked for the soldiers, and Timothy Nash repaired their arms.”—Mr. Judd's Hist., p. 192.

¶ Mr. Judd says the judges “were undoubtedly at Peter Tilton's and Lieut. Samuel Smith's during the war. They could not have been concealed at Mr. Russell's.”

have some occasion for their origin outside the mere imaginings of men, and are entitled to a place in the annals of the historian. Such a tradition, claiming that, on a given occasion when Hadley was beset by the savages, a mysterious stranger appeared, took a prominent part in the defense of the town, and suddenly disappeared, and that the people believed an angel had been sent for their deliverance, in the person of that stranger, has been variously narrated by writers of New England history.

It was nearly one hundred years after the affair that it is supposed gave rise to this tradition before the name of Gen. Goffe was connected with it in any published document. To this phase of the story special interest attaches.

Referring to the preceding pages, it will be observed that Rev. Increase Mather says of the affair at Hadley, on Sept. 1, 1775, the people "were driven from the holy service they were attending by a violent alarm, which routed them the whole day after."

Gov. Hutchinson, in his "History of Massachusetts," published in 1764, gives the following, in a note, and says it is an anecdote handed down in Gov. Leverett's family:

"The town of Hadley was alarmed by the Indians in 1675,* in the time of public worship, and the people were in the utmost confusion. Suddenly a grave, elderly person appeared in the midst of them. In his mien and dress he differed from the rest of the people. He not only encouraged them to defend themselves, but put himself at their head, rallied, instructed, and led them on to encounter the enemy, who by this means were repulsed. As suddenly the deliverer of Hadley disappeared. The people were left in consternation, utterly unable to account for this strange phenomenon. It is not probable that they were ever able to explain it. If Goffe had been then discovered, it must have come to the knowledge of those persons who declare by their letters that they never knew what became of him."

Next in order is the version of the angel story as related by President Stiles in his "History of the Three Judges," published in 1794:

"Though told with some variation in different parts of New England, the true story of the angel is this: That pious congregation were observing a fast at Hadley, on occasion of the war, and being at public worship in the meeting-house there, on a fast-day, Sept. 1, 1675, were suddenly surrounded and surprised by a body of Indians.† It was the usage in the frontier towns, and even at New Haven, in those Indian wars, for a select number of the congregation to go armed to public worship. It was so at Hadley at this time. The people immediately took to their arms, but were thrown into great consternation and confusion. Had Hadley been taken, the discovery of the judges had been inevitable. Suddenly, and in the midst of the people, there appeared a man of a very venerable aspect, and different from the inhabitants in his apparel, who took the command, arranged and ordered them in the best military manner, and under his direction they repelled and routed the Indians, and the town was saved. He immediately vanished, and the inhabitants could not account for the phenomenon but by considering that person as an angel sent of God upon that special occasion for their deliverance, and for some time after said and believed that they had been delivered and saved by an angel. Nor did they know or conceive otherwise till fifteen or twenty years after, when it at length became known at Hadley that the two judges had been secreted there, which, probably, they did not know till after Mr. Russell's death, in 1692. This story, however, of the angel at Hadley, was before this universally diffused through New England by means of the memorable Indian war of 1675. The mystery was unriddled after the Revolution,‡ when it became not so very dangerous to have it known that the judges had received an asylum here, and that Goffe was actually in Hadley at that time. The angel was certainly Gen. Goffe, for Whalley was superannuated in 1675."

By the pens of later writers the story has been considerably amplified and embellished, attaining its maximum of romantic detail in "Palfrey's History of New England," 1865. An interesting modification is introduced by John Farmer, secretary of the New Hampshire Historical Society, who spices his sketch with the statement that Gen. Goffe, who saw the enemy approaching the meeting-house, "knowing the peril of the congregation, felt constrained to give them notice, although it might lead to the discovery of his character and his place of concealment. He went in haste to the house of God, apprised the assembly that the enemy were near, and that preparation must immediately be made for defense."

Other accounts of this transaction have been given by the following: Gen. Epaphras Hoyt, of Deerfield, 1824, in "Antiquarian Researches;" Holmes, in "Annals of America;" Dr. J. G. Holland, in "History of Western Massachusetts," 1855; Rev. Dr. Huntington, in his address at Hadley's Bi-Centennial Celebration, June 8, 1859; Sylvester Judd, in "History of Hadley," published in 1863. Two of these, Gen. Hoyt and Dr. Holland, connect the tradition with the attack on Hadley by the Indians, June 12, 1676, thus differing from other writers.

He would seem a bold innovator indeed who, after the lapse of more than two centuries, ventured to question the verity of any alleged fact of history which had met with such nearly universal acceptance, and been sustained by so formidable an array of historians. So bold a writer has come forth, in the person of Hon. George Sheldon, of Deerfield, who, in May, 1874, in a paper read before the Pocumtuck Valley Memorial Association, entered upon a sharp analysis of the original and succeeding accounts, as noted above, and ventured the opinion that not only was the asserted defense by Goffe a myth, but that there was no attack on Hadley Sept. 1, 1675.

Mr. Sheldon says, in substance, respecting the attack, that it has no verification in contemporaneous history; that Hutchinson, notwithstanding his possession of Goffe's diary,‡ gives the story as an "anecdote handed down in Gov. Leverett's family;" and that all the later accounts are traceable to a common source,—the "alarm" as recorded by Mather. Respecting the account given by Hadley's able historian, Mr. Sheldon says:

"Sylvester Judd, the most noted antiquary of the Connecticut Valley, writing one hundred years later than Hutchinson, criticises sharply the account by Stiles, thinks Hoyt mistook the date of the occurrence, and says: 'The attack was undoubtedly upon the outskirts of the town, probably at the north end. The approach of the Indians may have been observed by Goffe from his chamber, which had a window toward the east. There is no reason to believe there was a large body of Indians, but the people, being unaccustomed to war, needed Goffe to arrange and order them. The Indians appear to have fled after a short skirmish.' Thus the proportions of the story are reduced by Judd. The meeting-house was not surrounded, the attack was at the north end of the town, and there was but a slight skirmish, after all!" Mr. Sheldon concludes that the alarm of September proceeded from an attack on Deerfield, which occurred on that day; that in the real attack, June 12, 1676, there was no need of angelic interposition, as Hadley was then provided with ample means of defense; and that "Gen. Goffe knew that Hadley was in no danger of capture, and that there was no occasion for leaving his hiding-place, thereby exposing himself, his companion in exile, and his generous protectors to certain destruction."

Mr. Sheldon also notes the absence of any "anecdote" or tradition in the families of those who were present and eyewitnesses of the events of the time.

This view of the subject would appear to be strengthened by the fact that the Rev. Solomon Stoddard, in his communication to Mr. Mather, Sept. 15, 1676, given minute detail of the events which occurred in the valley, inclusive of those at Hadley, from August 24th preceding to the date of his letter, yet mentions no attack upon that town. The claim by Mr. Judd respecting the affair of September 1st—that Mather dare not publish more in 1676, and that Hubbard, who "did not mention the fight," was silent for prudential reasons—is somewhat gratuitous in the light of Mr. Mather's unreserved account of the assault of June 12th; for history seems equally divided as to the date of the angel's advent. Goffe's exposure at either time was equally dangerous. Moreover, Mr. Judd overlooked the fact that the "window toward the east," at Mr. Russell's, could not aid the judges' vision while residing at the house of Mr. Tilton or Lieut. Smith. Mr. Judd himself had said that during the war the judges "could not have

* Governor Hutchinson gives the precise date as Sept. 1, 1675.

† Mr. Judd says, "President Stiles errs in supposing the meeting-house was surrounded by Indians."

‡ Revolution in England.

§ See chapter on the "Regicides."

been concealed at Mr. Russell's." It is noticeable that none of the accounts respecting the "fight" of September 1st mention the firing of a single gun, or the wounding or killing of any soldiers or savages. There is a masterly marching to and fro, but no slaughter.

Granting the exigence, either on September 1st or June 12th,* it might readily be admitted that Goffe—brave, determined, and noble—would have become the angel of Hadley, as he was its most noted guest save one. Such a crisis would be a reasonable basis for the tradition, but the latter may not be used to prove the existence of the former. May not the absorbing legend be referable to some other origin?

King William's War.—The French-and-Indian or King William's war, 1688 to 1698, did not materially affect the inhabitants of Hadley. They had repaired their fortifications, and were not molested by the marauding bands of Indians.† These again caused the abandonment of Northfield in the spring of 1690, when Hadley became once more the frontier town on the east side of the Connecticut. While themselves exempt from assault, the good people of Hadley did not withhold the helping hand from their suffering neighbors at Northfield, Deerfield, Hatfield, and Brookfield. John Lawrence, of Brookfield, after the serious affair at that place, July 27, 1693, in which several were killed and others, including his brother Thomas and the wife of Joseph Mason, taken captive, hastened to Springfield for assistance. A company, in which were Hadley men, at once set out in pursuit of the Indians, and succeeded in rescuing the prisoners. They also "brought away 9 guns, 20 hatchets, 4 cutlasses, 16 or 18 horns of powder, and 2 barks full of powder, neatly covered." John Lawrence had previously resided in Hadley, and from him "Lawrence's Bridge" and "Lawrence's Plain" were named.

Queen Anne's War, 1703 to 1713, is memorable for the attack on the unhappy village of Deerfield, on the 29th of February, 1704, by a large body of French and Indians under Maj. Hertel de Rouville. The town was nearly destroyed. Fire and sword and tomahawk achieved a melancholy success. The news quickly spread, and a force was rallied for the pursuit, resulting in a sharp skirmish at a place called Petty's Plain. Fourteen residents of Hadley were in this fight, as follows: Sergt. Saml. Boltwood and his son Robert,‡ Jonathan Ingram and Nathaniel Warner, Jr., all killed; Samuel Boltwood, Jr., wounded in the arm; Benj. Church, wounded in the foot; John Montague, Jr., Ebenezer Selden, Nathaniel White, Jr., Thomas Hovey, Joseph Smith, Jr., Samuel Crowfoot, John Marsh. Besides these were Thomas Selden, who was slain in the town, and Joseph Eastman, who was made prisoner, both of Hadley.

After this calamity a strong force was sent to the river-towns, including Hadley, provided with snow-shoes for a winter campaign.

The Northern Campaigns were strongly supported by the people of Hampshire, 1754 to 1760, and the town of Hadley furnished many soldiers during their continuance.

In the Crown Point expedition of 1755, among the officers under Col. Ephraim Williams, was Capt. Moses Porter,§ of Hadley, great-grandson of Samuel Porter, a first settler. On the 8th of September, when the English army, under Gen. Johnson, had reached Lake George, that officer, wishing to intercept the French and Indians, who had threatened Fort Edward, despatched Col. Williams, with 1000 men and 200 Mohawk Indians, for the purpose. Instead of attacking the fort, the forces of Dieskau had marched on to meet the English, under Johnson, and were but a few miles distant. Col. Williams' movement had been discovered, and an ambuscade prepared, into which he unwittingly marched his troops. In the bloody conflict that ensued the English loss was severe, and among those who fell were Capt. Porter, Ensign Wait, and Henry Bartlett, of Hadley.

The following were in the service from Hadley, at or near the times indicated: Capt. Moses Porter, 1755, slain September 8th; Ensign Joshua Ballard, 1755, lieutenant, 1759; privates, 1755, John Clark and William Clark,—sons of John, Sr.,—Hezekiah Hubbard, Eliakim Smith, Benjamin Knights, Joseph Alexander, Henry Bartlett, slain, Nathaniel Church, Jr., John Eastman; 1756, William White, Elisha Smith, Joseph Wright, Jabez Cook, John Clark, Sr., Azariah Selden, Samuel McNeill, Josiah Smith; 1757, John White, Jr., Matthias Kelsey, John Brooks; 1758, Aaron Cook, John Bartlett, died, David Crosby, died, Edmund Hubbard, Ebenezer Stearnes, died, Daniel White, Stephen Coats, Timothy Nash, Thomas Selden; 1759, Robert Emmons, James Meacham, Samuel Catlin, Jr., John Mills, Samuel Cook, Caleb Lyman, Benjamin Smith (2d), Elisha Smith (2d), Timothy Church, Richard Church, Jr.; 1760, Cotton Gaylord, Oliver Bartlett, Nathaniel Fox, Warham Smith, Jonathan Jones, died, Oliver Thomas; 1761, Ephraim Wheeler, Aaron Cleveland; 1762, William Farrand.

The alarm occasioned by the massacre at Fort William Henry, in August, 1757, and by other causes, aroused the militia of the colony, and among those who marched forth from Hadley, to do service to the westward, were Capt. Moses Marsh, Ensign Eleazer Porter, Sergts. Elisha Cook, Jonathan Cook, and Josiah Dickinson, one corporal, and thirty-eight privates. They were out twelve days.

MILITIA.

The militia of Hadley were organized about the year 1661. In May of that year steps were taken to secure a drum and a stand of colors, and for holding a "training on the 16th inst." The officers of the train-band, in 1663, were Samuel Smith, Lieutenant; John Russell, Sr., Clerk; Richard Goodman, John Dickinson, and Joseph Kellogg, Sergeants; Aaron Cooke, Jr., Ensign-bearer. Smith and Cooke served in their respective positions about fifteen years, when the former, at eighty years of age, was relieved. The band was reorganized with Aaron Cooke, Jr., as Captain; Philip Smith, Lieutenant; and Joseph Kellogg, Ensign. Cooke served as captain for thirty-five years, to the age of seventy-three. Kellogg became lieutenant, and Timothy Nash ensign, in 1679, and the latter lieutenant, with Chileab Smith for ensign, in 1692, or near that time. The colors, with staff, tassel, and top, were purchased of Mr. Pyncheon, and cost £5.

Horsemen.—The "troope" of cavalry for Hampshire was dress became their prey. He left a wife, a daughter (who married Charles Phelps, Esq.), and a good estate. He had recently erected a handsome house, about two miles north of the village, on 'Forty Acres,' so called, and he owned about 300 acres in and near Forty-Acre Field and on Mount Warner. His house and barn were raised May 27, 1752, and he and his family removed to this place Dec. 5, 1752. This house, built one hundred and seven years since, is occupied by Rev. Dan Huntington, who married the daughter of Charles Phelps, and it is still a convenient mansion of respectable appearance. Charles put on the present mansard or gambrel roof, and made other alterations. He added to Capt. Porter's farm until he had about 600 acres. This farm was noticed by President Dwight, and he declared this estate to be 'the most desirable possession of the same kind and extent within my knowledge.' Mr. Phelps gave it to his son, the late Charles P. Phelps, Esq., and to his daughter, the late Elizabeth W. Huntington."

* The event upon which the whole story is founded is explicitly stated by Gov. Hutchinson to be that of Sept. 1, 1675. It is difficult to see by what authority subsequent writers have adopted a different date in order to secure a sufficient basis for the story they had to tell,—viz., the attack of June 12th.

† The east palisade was replaced in 1690. In March, 1691, the inhabitants voted to "repair the old garrison-houses and the east fortification, and to continue scouting in the woods."

‡ Mr. Judd gives the names of William Boltwood, son of Sergt. Samuel Boltwood, of Hadley, among those who had been in Canada during this war. He "died below Quebec, Aug. 27, 1714, on his return. He had been a captive, or perhaps an aid in recovering captives."

§ Mr. Judd makes the following note: "The late Lieut. Enos Smith, of Hadley, informed me that he saw Capt. Porter when he left Hadley for Albany, in the spring of 1755. His military dress appeared to Smith, then nine or ten years old, very rich and showy. Capt. Porter was slain by the Indians, and his formed in March, 1663, with John Pyncheon, of Springfield, as Captain; David Wilton, of Northampton, Lieutenant; William Allis, of Hadley, Cornet; and Henry Woodward, of Northampton, and George Colton, of Springfield, Quartermasters. The Hadley troopers were Mr. Henry Clark, William Lewis, Thomas Coleman, Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., Thomas Dickinson, Philip Smith, Andrew Warner, Samuel Billing, John Coleman, William Allis; the last three from the west of the river. This number, 10, increased to 14 in 1669, but dwindled to 7 in 1674. Philip Smith became Lieutenant in 1678; Samuel Partrigg, Quartermaster, in 1683; and Nehemiah Dickinson, Cornet, in 1685.*

Militia in 1775.—The following contains the "names of effective men in the militia:" Elisha Porter, Captain; Oliver Smith, First Lieutenant; Eliakim Smith, Second Lieutenant; Caleb Lyman, Ensign; Francis Newton, Warham Smith, Isaac Winter, James Meacham, Robert Crawford, John Montague, Maj. E. Porter, Ens. E. Hubbard, Mr. Moses Hubbard, Obed Thurston, John Elwell, Mr. Hopkins, Samuel Gaylord, Jr., Elihu Dickinson, Ens. E. Cooke, Capt. Moses Marsh, Daniel Marsh, William Marsh, Daniel Marsh, Jr., Ebenezer White, Deacon Eastman, Joseph Peck, Mr. Phineas Lyman, Lieut. Jonathan Cooke, Edward Gay, Mr. Jonathan Warner, Adj. Noadiah Warner, Peter Montague, Thomas Gaylord, Stephen Goodman, Lieut. Joshua Ballard, John Davis, Maj. I. C. Williams, Timothy Eastman, Elisha Dickinson, Lemuel Warner, John Smith, Mr. Jonathan Smith, Seth Smith, Perez Smith, Ebenezer Marsh, Mr. Oliver Warner, Mr. Paul Whitney, William Jones, Orange Warner, Elihu Warner, Aaron Cooke, Jabez Cooke, John Cooke, Joel Kellogg, Oliver Shed, Jonathan Ingram, Elijah Zebman (or Goodman), Noah Smith, David Smith, Moses Cooke, Giles White, Noah Cooke, Windsor Smith, Thomas Smith, Nehemiah Gaylord, Gardner Kellogg, Benjamin Bukman, Whiting Kellogg, Dr. Giles C. Kellogg, Robert Cooke, Josiah Peirce, Jr., Samuel Peirce, Benjamin Eddy, Oliver White, Gideon Warner, John Dickinson, Dan West, John Smith (2d), Enos Smith, Gideon Smith, Timothy Stockwell, Joseph Wright, Nathaniel White, Daniel Worthington, Nathaniel Herriman, Reuben Coates, Charles Coates, Ebenezer Pomroy, Jr., Israel Lyman, David Wells, Joseph Alexander, Jr., Mr. Charles Phelps, Samuel Snell, Benjamin Smith (2d), Joshua Burt, Samuel Dean, Nehemiah Gaylord, Jr., Simeon Elwell, Josiah Nash, Nicholas Bartlett, Seth Cooke, John Clarke, Joseph Blanchard, Windsor Smith, Jr., Oliver Hastings, Josiah Cooke, Azariah Dickinson, Silas Farr, privates,—making 108 of the militia.

Minute-Men.—The following marched on the Lexington alarm in the company of Capt. Hezekiah Hubbard.† The command of the company within a short time devolved upon Capt. Eliakim Smith, who was promoted from a second lieutenancy in the Hadley militia: Hezekiah Hubbard, Captain; Moses Kellogg, Lieutenant; Enos Nash, Sergeant; Perez Cooke, Daniel Dickinson, Josiah Goodrich, Nathaniel Montague, Stoughton Dickinson, Westward C. Wright, Carmi Wright, Elisha Cooke, Jr., Waitstill Cooke, Joseph Marsh, Samuel Marsh, Anderson Minor, Isaac Ely, Phineas Lyman, Jr.,

* "When this company met in one of our villages for exercise it was a day of excitement for the young, who heard the shrill trumpet, and admired the proud banner, the prancing steeds, and the gay appearance and quick motions of the men."—Judd's Hist. p. 227.

† Capt. Hubbard was taken sick with fever before the company marched, and, after an illness of about a week, died May 1, 1775. His successor, Capt. Smith, died of a similar fever at Watertown, in the following August. Capt. Hubbard was married in 1760 to Mabel, daughter of Edmund Hubbard, and had several children, of whom Lucinda, the eldest, married William Jones, in 1780. Their son, John Hubbard Jones, married Hannah Warner, and had children, of whom George N. enlisted from Hadley, at the outbreak of the Rebellion, in the 37th Regiment. His nephew, John Howard Jewett, enlisted in the 10th Regiment. These two were the only male descendants of Capt. Hubbard, then in Hadley, who were capable of bearing arms. Through the courtesy of Miss Sarah L. Jones, a sister of George N., these lists are given. The originals, in the handwriting of Col. Elisha Porter, are in her possession.

Joseph Smith, Jr., Joseph Church, William Cooke, Samuel Cooke, Timothy Cooke, Chileab Smith, John Montague, Jr., Francis Trayner, Daniel Bartlett, Daniel White, Samuel Sheldon, Oliver Bartlett, Timothy Hammond, Simon Baker, Colman Cooke, Caleb Williston, privates. This list is entitled "number and names of effective men of the Minute-Men."

The following were the effective men "in the artillery company:" Thomas Waite Foster, Captain; Samuel Cooke, Timothy Marsh, Moses Clark, David White, David Peirce, Wm. Peirce, Simeon Rood, Oliver White, Jr., Oliver Smith, John Brooks, Ethan Pomroy, Jabez Elwell, privates.

The following is a portion of a letter from Rev. Samuel Hopkins, D.D., to Col. Elisha Porter, then with the forces at Cambridge, dated May 14, 1775, soon after the death of Capt. Hubbard:

"May you (according to your desire) have wisdom to know your duty and be enabled to perform it, and be yourself an example for others as a soldier and a Christian! I yet hope in a good God that a settled civil war may be averted. May the country omit nothing that may and ought yet to be done to prevent so dreadful a scene, of no benefit to us or the present state, but full of evil, and may be of y^e most fatal and ruinous consequence to both! 'Tis an evil and Judgment w^h may continue still (and shall as long as I can have any hope) most earnestly to deprecate. May God preserve you and others, particularly those that went from this town, my neighbors, and of the flock of my charge, in whatever danger you are or may be in! They and you have my prayers to God for this if it may consist with his will, otherwise to be prepared for whatever is before you. You and they can't be too sensible of your dependence on the Lord of Life and Great preserver of men, or too careful to be in his fear and to please God, and that you do not sin against him. Capt. Hubbard, you've heard, is gone. We are not secure from y^e arrest of Death at home."

ANTE-REVOLUTIONARY MEASURES.

The inhabitants of Hadley were no less sensitive than their neighbors of the lower towns to the interference of the crown in the affairs of the colonies,—no less sensitive were they in regard to their civil than in what concerned their religious rights. All were ranged on the side of freedom as opposed to prerogative. The sending of commissioners by Charles II. to manage or "regulate" affairs in New England, 1664, resulted in a conflict of jurisdiction between the king's representatives and those of the people. The latter were sustained by their constituents at Hadley in a long address or petition drawn up by Mr. Russell, wherein, amidst voluminous and involved expressions evincing much faith in heavenly aid and final deliverance, are the following significant words: "The King of Heaven will give his poorest subject on earth leave to challenge resolutely his right, and not to let it go for frowns or threats. And why should we think that a just and gracious king on earth will not do in like manner? We have right from God and man to choose our own governors, make and live under our own laws. Our liberty and privileges herein as men we prize and would hold as our lives; this makes us freemen and not slaves. . . . Nor is it our own portion only that we trade with in this case, but our children's stock also, even their advantages as men and Christians to serve the Lord and be accounted to him for a generation forevermore. . . . We with our prayers and endeavors, heads and hearts, and lands and estates and lives, will be with you and subject unto you." This petition is dated Hadley, April 25, 1665,‡ and was signed by 91 persons, of whom 28 lived west of the river.

A petition, in February, 1669, addressed to the General Court of Massachusetts, and signed by 92 persons, protested against the threatened enforcement of a recent order imposing duties on goods and merchandise, and on "horses, cattle, and grain imported after March, 1669." It was feared that the result would be disastrous to the trade of Hadley with Connecticut, which colony it was thought would, in retaliation, place a tax upon all produce sent down the river. In this petition the yearning for liberty again finds opportunity for expression: "Liberty, liberty of the subject and commons, being the great thing we have made (and we trust in sincerity) profession of, the clogging and loading of trade, the freedom whereof is the advance of a people, will it not administer matter of discouragement, sinking discouragement, to our own people and be occasion of evil report among others, that we who have been an example of seeking liberty should become an example of taking it away from ourselves and others?"

‡ The fugitive judges had then been guests of Mr. Russell more than six months, and their presence may have inspired the pen of the minister with a trifle more than its wonted vigor in its opposition to the king.

The same spirit, much intensified, was manifested amidst the excitements which preceded and accompanied the Revolution. May 29, 1772, the inhabitants of Hadley voted "that the representatives of this town be instructed, and they are hereby instructed, to use their utmost influence and power in the next session of the General Assembly, that our grievances may be made known to his Majesty, that the same may be redressed."

REVOLUTION.

The people of Hadley, so sensitive concerning their rights and jealous of their liberties, were not slow to act in any given emergency. The phrases of their patriotic resolves seem to have anticipated those of the "Immortal Declaration." The first important action of the town concerning the existing state of affairs is embodied in the following resolutions,* passed Jan. 3, 1774, at a meeting held at the school-house:

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this town that the grievances we labor under are owing in a great measure to methods taken by persons among us, of an arbitrary turn of mind, to set the temper and behavior of the people of this province in an unfavorable light at Great Britain, and insinuating that there must be an abridgment of what are called English Liberties.

"Resolved, That this town will use all such measures as shall appear to them consistent with their duty in order to obtain a redress of the grievances we feel, and to prevent, if possible, any further violations of our natural and constitutional rights, that our invaluable liberties, civil and religious, may be enjoyed by us, and transmitted to posterity inviolate: always hoping, in the goodness of Divine Providence, that the machinations of designing persons to effect a change in our happy constitution will be rendered abortive from time to time to the latest generations.

"Resolved, That a standing committee of correspondence be appointed, consisting of five inhabitants of this town, to keep up and maintain a correspondence with the committees of correspondence in other towns within this province respecting this important concern."

Dr. Giles Crouch Kellogg, Phineas Lyman, Oliver Smith, Josiah Peirce, and Jonathan Warner were made a committee of correspondence, to which were afterward added Ebenezer Marsh, Capt. Moses Marsh, John Cooke, Benjamin Colt, Eliakim Smith, Edmund Hubbard, Warham Smith, and Noah Cooke.

Oct. 3, 1774, Josiah Peirce was chosen delegate to the Provincial Congress at Concord "to concert such measures as may be adopted and executed by the whole people in this time of distress and danger."

At the same meeting it was "voted, that there shall be a powder-house built for the use of the town; to be made of brick, plastered within and without, round in compass, equal to eight feet square; to be erected in the middle lane leading into the Great Meadow." Four half-barrels of powder were ordered then, and two more January 4th following.

The selectmen were "directed to make inquiry whether the great gun which did formerly belong to this town is the property of the town now," and 4s. per hundred weight were appropriated to "bring the cannon† from Williamstown to Hadley."

The following-named persons were made a committee of inspection: John Eastman, Oliver Smith, John Cooke, Charles Phelps, Noah Cooke, Caleb Lyman, Hezekiah Hubbard.

Jan. 30, 1776, a committee was appointed to provide for the manufacture of "Salt Peter," and May 30th the same year gave birth to the following:

"Voted, if the American Congress should, for the safety of the United Colonies, declare them independent of the Kingdom of Great Britain, we, the inhabitants of said Hadley, will engage, with our Lives and Fortunes, to support them in the measure."

* Reported by a committee, appointed at a previous meeting, consisting of Josiah Peirce, Moses Marsh, John Chester Williams, Jonathan Cooke, Jonathan Warner, John Eastman, and Phineas Lyman.

† Jan. 5, 1780, they "voted to sell the cannon."

Assured that such decisive action on the part of Congress would precipitate the conflict, the sturdy inhabitants, on the 17th of June, voted for more gunpowder.

The town records and papers contain no list from which the names of Hadley's Revolutionary heroes can be obtained. The numerous votes indicate generous contributions of men and means. The following are examples: May 13, 1778, "voted, that the six men now required of this town, and those who have and those who shall engage for the Continental army, be allowed £40. June 15th, "voted, that the militiamen who marched upon the alarms in July, August, and September, 1777, shall have credit at the rate of three months for one." June 16th, "that those who went to Ticonderoga in 1777 have credit at the rate of three months for two," and that "ten men who were raised last fall (1777) and marched to the northward under Capt. Samuel Cooke, and were in the service three months, shall have credit at the rate of four months for three." July 26, 1779, Capt. Oliver Smith, Capt. Moses Marsh, Nehemiah Gaylord, Nehemiah Gaylord, Jr., Josiah Nash, and Daniel Bartlett were allowed for one week each on the war service list. May 11, 1780, a committee reported as still due the nine months' men £4356 over and above what had been paid. July 3d, to secure sixteen three months' men a previous bounty of £50 was increased to £150, besides a monthly pay of £3, "in silver or gold, or 40s. per month in grane."‡ July 10th it was voted to purchase five horses for the army.

Jan. 9, 1781, they voted £60 hard money should be given for three years' service,—£20 annually,—and that 1000 paper dollars should be paid to each man, on his passing muster, to be reckoned at one penny each, as part of the first year's payment. Twelve men were then required, and $12,300 Continental paper money were levied to pay bounties and mileage; £120 for each hundredweight of beef required of the town were assessed "immediately in a separate rate."

There were a few persons who certainly were not of "rebellious minds, and who did not zealously aid and abet" the Revolution. Of such the patriots were not unmindful, as the following vote of Sept. 12, 1780, sufficiently testifies:

"Voted, that, in the opinion of this town, it is not consistent with the safety of the people that Simeon Strong, Esq.,§ considering his general unfriendly conduct to these United States, should be allowed to plead as an attorney at the bar to explain the law; that, in the opinion of this town, he should not be allowed to plead in this town in any case whatsoever."

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The valuable "History of Hadley," by Mr. Sylvester Judd, published in 1863, and the "History of Western Massachusetts," by Dr. J. G. Holland, 1855, are among the principal works consulted by the compiler of the foregoing pages. To Dr. Franklin Bonney,|| of Hadley, is he especially indebted for much important information, hearty co-operation, and a multitude of favors, including the loan of books and documents. Also to Mr. William S. Shipman, town clerk,—during whose long and faithful administration of that office the quaint old records of Hadley have been handsomely transcribed,—for cheerful aid, official and otherwise; and to Rev. Rowland Ayres, D.D., Rev. Edward S. Dwight, D.D., Deacon Eleazar Porter, Mr. Edward Kingsley, Mr. Francis Edson, and others, for needed information, and for assistance in various ways.

REBELLION RECORD.

TENTH MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

John C. Clark, Henry A. Dunakin, Alfred Van Horn, Howard Jewett, Francis White.

† Soldiers sometimes chose to take their pay in grain. It was voted at the meeting of June 15, 1780, that "Indian Corn be accounted $20 per bushel."

‡ Afterward Judge Strong. He was a resident of Amherst.

|| A sad closing incident in connection with this history of Hadley was the complete destruction of the barn and residence of Dr. Bonney, by an incendiary fire, on the morning of March 27, 1879. The embers yet smoulder as these acknowledgments are being written.

TWENTY-SECOND MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

Hiram Shumway.

THIRTY-FIRST MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

Avery A. Ward, James W. Smith, Joseph Noddeau.

SECOND MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

George Webber, John Vaile.

TWENTY-FOURTH MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

John Haggerty, Jr.

TWENTY-SEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

Daniel Howard, Henry Howard, Frederick S. Prior, John F. Russell, Willard Russell, Silas Cowles, Willard Hibbard, Theodore S. Billings, George A. Boice, Jay E. Nash, Henry Potter, Lucius D. Smith, William R. Montague (sergeant), Frederick H. Smith, Lewis W. West, Rufus Cook (corporal), Charles Elwell, Charles A. Lyman, Herbert Johnson, Irving R. Clark, Clarence P. Hewett, Edwin B. Smith, Franklin Elwell, Joseph Labell, Rollins Cowles, Simeon Preston, Luman Hibbard, Sydney Davis, Dwight Barrett, Madison Olds, Elijah Carter, Charles G. Howard, Frederick B. Kentfield, Marshall Cowles.

THIRTY-SEVENTH MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

William C. Morrell, Edwin D. Beaman, John C. Beals, William A. Champney, Henry V. Fales, Charles D. Hodge, Samuel Hodge, George N. Jones, William F. Leggett, Warren I. Lyman, John D. Miller, George W. Nash, H. Clement Russell, Joseph F. Smith, Samuel D. Smith, Charles O. Squires, Francis I. Stockbridge, Sylvester L. Stockbridge, Moses Thessier, Francis P. Wheeler.

FIFTY-SECOND MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

William Perkins (captain), Daniel H. Bartlett, Charles O. Beals, Charles L. Brown, Lyman P. Ballard, Charles W. Clark, Henry C. Comins, Alfred L. Cook, Elenzer Cook, S. Parsons Cook, George Crabtree, George M. Crafts (corporal), Charles F. Dickinson, Augustus E. Dickinson, John B. Dunbar, Charles S. Enderton (corporal), James Forsyth, Edwin C. Gray, William H. Hayward, Henry H. Hemmingway, Lewis B. Hooker, William H. Hodge, S. Dwight Kellogg, Benjamin Lombard, Jr., Truman Meekins, Harvey L. Rhoad, George M. Smith, Joseph O. Spear, Charles H. Wilber, Rodney D. Doolittle, Hiram M. Bolton, Oscar R. Hubbard, Luther W. Dickinson, Thomas Nugent, Charles H. White.

FIFTY-FOURTH MASSACHUSETTS INFANTRY.

Charles A. Story.

MASSACHUSETTS CAVALRY.

George Williams, Frederick Russell, James Hayden.

FIRST MASSACHUSETTS CAVALRY.

John Sullivan, William Baldwin, John F. Hodge, John Fisher (sergeant), Edward Crabtree.

KANSAS CAVALRY.

Edward Johnson.

SECOND MASSACHUSETTS BATTERY.

Silas Febo, Francis Mosson, Abraham Janette, Rufus D. Marsh, Rufus P. Scott, John W. Beaman, Daniel O. Dickinson, Francis Pilkey, Lewis Lancour, Nona Renjia, Leander Bushman, Jacob Laravie, Joseph Bravo.

REGIMENT NOT GIVEN.

Benjamin Till, Samuel C. Till.

NECROLOGY.

Frederick S. Pryor, 27th Mass. Inf.; killed in battle before Petersburg, June 18, 1864.
 John F. Russell, 27th Mass. Inf.; killed in battle of Cold Harbor, June 2, 1864.
 Silas Cowles, 27th Mass. Inf.; wounded near Petersburg, Va., June 15, 1864; died June 16, 1864.
 George A. Boice, 27th Mass. Inf.; died at Andersonville, Sept. 8, 1864.
 Henry Potter, 27th Mass. Inf.; killed in battle of Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864.
 Rufus Cook, 27th Mass. Inf.; died in hosp. at Newbern, N. C., Feb. 25, 1863.
 Henry Dunakin (2d), 27th Mass. Inf.; killed in battle of Cold Harbor, June 2, 1864.
 Rollins Cowles, 27th Mass. Inf.; killed in battle of Cold Harbor, June 2, 1864.
 Dwight Barrett, 27th Mass. Inf.; killed in battle of Cold Harbor, June 2, 1864.
 John C. Beals, 37th Mass. Inf.; died at Washington, D. C.
 Henry V. Fales, 37th Mass. Inf.; died in hosp. at Falmouth, Va., April 1, 1863.
 William F. Leggett, 37th Mass. Inf.; killed at Wilson's Creek, April, 1865.
 Charles W. Clark, 52d Mass. Inf.; died in hospital at Baton Rouge, La., April 20, 1863.
 Augustus E. Dickinson, 52d Mass. Inf.; taken prisoner near Baton Rouge; probably died in Libby Prison.
 George M. Smith, 52d Mass. Inf.; died at Mound City Hospital, Ill., Aug. 14, 1863.

Joseph O. Spear, 52d Mass. Inf.; died at Baton Rouge, La., July 17, 1863.

Hiram M. Bolton, 52d Mass. Inf.; died at Cairo, Ill., Aug. 1863.

Charles G. Howard, 27th Mass. Inf.; died in Andersonville Prison, Ga., Sept. 12, 1864.

Nona Renjia, 2d Mass. Bat.; died in New Orleans, April 18, 1864.

Leander Bushman, 2d Mass. Bat.; drowned from steamer "North America," April 18, 1864.

Frederick Russell, — Mass. Cav.; wounded at Chantilly, Sept. 1, 1862; died in Douglas Hospital, Washington, D. C., Oct. 2, 1862.

Hiram Shumway, 22d Mass. Inf.; wounded May 30, 1864; died in Emory Hospital, Washington, D. C., June 28, 1864.

Marshall Cowles, 27th Mass. Inf.; died at Newbern, N. C., Aug. 1865.

WOUNDED.

Frederick H. Smith, 27th Mass. Inf.; wounded at Cold Harbor, Va., June 2, '64.
 Clement Russell, 37th Mass. Inf.; wounded in battle of Wilderness, Va., May 5, 1864.

Joseph F. Smith, 37th Mass. Inf.; wounded in arm in battle of Wilderness, Va., May 6, 1864.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

FRANKLIN BONNEY, M.D.,

was born in Hadley, Mass., Feb. 2, 1822. He is the son of the late Oliver Bonney, who was born in Hanover, Mass., in 1790, sixth in descent from Thomas Bonney, the first of the family in this country, who came from Sandwich, in Kent, England, in the ship "Hercules," in 1634-35, and settled in Duxbury, Mass. His mother was Betsy F. Hayward, the daughter of Elijah Hayward, of West Bridgewater, Mass.

He was educated at Hopkins Academy, and afterward studied his profession at the Dartmouth Medical School, attending in the mean time a course of lectures at Brunswick, Me. He graduated at the former school in the spring of 1847, and immediately began the practice of his profession in his native town, which he has continued up to this time. In 1850 he became a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, and also of the Hampshire District Medical Society. During this period he has held the positions of president and vice-president of the local society, each for three years. He has also been councilor and censor of the same body, and is a member of the health department of the American Social Science Society. In 1869, Amherst College conferred upon him the honorary degree of A.M. He represented his district in the Legislature in 1873. During the war of the Rebellion he was surgeon for making preliminary examinations of recruits for the army, and also served for a time as volunteer surgeon at City Point, Va. He is a director of the Massachusetts Central Railroad and trustee and secretary of the Hopkins Academy. In addition to his ordinary professional labors, he has prepared and read several addresses before the district medical society, has occasionally prepared papers for the medical journals, and has made frequent contributions to agricultural and other journals.

In 1847 he was married to Priscilla P. Whipple, of Hanover, N. H., daughter of Hon. Thomas Whipple, M.D., of Wentworth, N. H. By this union there were four children,—two sons and two daughters,—of whom three are still living. Mrs. Bonney died in 1869, and in 1874 the doctor was married to Emma W., daughter of the late Sherman Peck, of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. By this second union there are two sons.

In early life the doctor was identified with the Whig party, and is now a Republican. As a physician Dr. Bonney ranks among the first. He is a public-spirited citizen, and enjoys the esteem of all who know him.

J. Bouney, M. D.

Photo, by Hardie & Schadee.

Eleazar Porter.

DEACON ELEAZAR PORTER is descended from one of the oldest families of New England.

Samuel Porter, who came to Hadley with the first settlers in 1659, was one of the king's justices. His son Samuel was the first male child born in Hadley, held the office of justice of the peace, was judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1711, and was a large landholder and of other estates. His son Eleazar was a justice of the peace, and was one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas from 1727 to 1757.

Eleazar, son of the latter, was born Jan. 27, 1728, graduated from Yale College in 1748, and was a justice of the peace in 1779. He was judge of Probate in same year, and one of the judges of the first court after the Revolution, which consisted of himself, Timothy Donaldson, of Brimfield, John Bliss, of Wilbraham, and Samuel Mather, of Westfield. He was commissioned in 1777. His second wife, whom he married Sept. 17, 1761, was Susanna, daughter of Rev. Jonathan Edwards, of Northampton. Their son, the late Col. Moses Porter, was born Sept. 19, 1768. He married, Aug. 30, 1791, Amy, daughter of Benjamin Colt, of Hadley, who made the first scythe in Hampshire County, if not in Massachusetts. He was the grandfather of the late Col. Samuel Colt, the inventor of Colt's revolver.

Eleazar Porter, whose portrait is given with this sketch, was the fourth son and seventh child of the thirteen children of Moses and Amy Colt Porter, born Jan. 21, 1806. He was educated at Hopkins Academy and on the farm, under the ministry of Dr. John Woodbridge and the Westminster Catechism, until his twenty-third year.

During this period, in the winter of 1821-22, he taught school in the centre district of Easthampton. In the spring of 1829 he went to Ware, Mass., engaged in business with the late C. P. Hitchcock, removed in 1833 to Worcester, Mass., and in that year opened a temperance house, about the first hotel of that class in Massachusetts.

In 1840, on account of impaired health, he discontinued business, and in 1841 traveled South and West; returned to Worcester, engaged in business again, and soon after had a return of his illness, which caused him to retire from active business life. In 1855 he removed to Ware, Mass., and remained there on a farm until 1858, when he came to Hadley, where he has since enjoyed comfortable health. In 1832 Mr. Porter married Mary Augusta, daughter of Alpheus Demond, of Ware, Mass. In connection with Col. Thomas Denny, of Leicester, Mass., Mr. Demond was the first to engage in cotton manufacturing in Ware, sixty-five years ago.

Mr. Porter has held many offices of public and private trust. July 23, 1830, he received the appointment of adjutant in the 5th Regiment of Infantry, 1st Brigade and 4th Division of the State Militia, which office he held until the regiment was disbanded.

In January, 1852, he was commissioned a justice of the peace for the county of Hampshire, and was reappointed to the same office in February, 1859, in 1866, in April, 1868, and in March, 1875.

In May, 1854, he was commissioned a coroner, and recommissioned in 1863 and 1870, holding the office until it was abolished, in 1877. He is one of the inspectors of the State Almshouse at Monson; was first commissioned in February, 1866, subsequently in February, 1869, and in February, 1872.

In his political affiliations Mr. Porter was first a Whig, and is now a Republican. During the late war he was a warm supporter of the Union cause. He and his wife have both been members of the Congregational Church for over forty years, and he is a deacon in the church. He has given freely of his time and money to promote charity and religion; is now a member of the Russell Congregational Society, and has been its clerk and treasurer for twenty-one years. Has been treasurer of the Hopkins Academy for twelve years; was made a life member of the A. B. C. F. M., in 1855; was elected a corporate member of the same board, Oct. 8, 1870; was made a life member of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, Feb. 7, 1846; of the American Bible Society, May 28, 1856; of the American and Foreign Christian Union, Aug. 1, 1867; and of the American Home Mission Society, 1855.

Being a practical abstainer from all intoxicating liquors, and realizing the advantages of abstinence, he is necessarily more or less identified with the temperance movements of the day, and was one of the executive committee of the Massachusetts Temperance Alliance for a number of years. He is a director of the Northampton Bridge Corporation, succeeding Hon. Eliphelet Williams as president. For twenty-five years he has been annually elected a director of the Northampton National Bank; for eighteen years a trustee, and the last two years the vice-president of the Northampton Institution for Savings.

In a communication to the writer, the officers of these institutions bear willing testimony to the traits of his character that have rendered his life a "useful and beneficent one," in the following words:

"In his fidelity to public trusts confided to him, in his punctuality in meeting his public and private engagements, in fact, in all the walks of life, he has enjoyed an unblemished reputation and kept himself unspotted from the world."

Mr. Porter has ever manifested a lively interest in educational matters, and in Dr. W. S. Tyler's History of Amherst College we notice this record: "Eleazar Porter has the honor of establishing the first scholarship in Amherst College;" and after naming the commissioners of the Amherst College Fund, continues: "Eleazar Porter, Esq., the founder of the Porter prize and the Porter scholarship, whose prudence and thrift as a man of business are so evenly and so beautifully balanced by his intelligent and Christian liberality. In the hands of such men the charity fund will be safely kept and wisely administered."

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

L. N. Granger

LORENZO NOBLE GRANGER was a grandson of Captain Caleb Smith, who was a native of the town of Hadley, and lived on the place now occupied by Mrs. Granger. His father was Enoch M. Granger, who was born in the town of Washington, Berkshire Co., Mass., Jan. 23, 1778, but who in early life removed to Madison Co., N. Y., where, June 30, 1811, Lorenzo N. Granger was born. When seven years old he removed with his grandparents, Capt. Caleb Smith and wife, to the town of Hadley, and settled on the place now owned and occupied by Mrs. Granger, where he continued to reside until his death, March 27, 1876.

March 26, 1846, Mr. Granger was united in marriage to Mrs. Sophronia Smith, daughter of Joseph Cummings, of the town of Ware, Hampshire Co., Mass. Mr. Granger was essentially a self-made man, his educational facilities being limited to the district school of his own town. His life, although not eventful, was remarkable for strict integrity and unswerving devotion to principle. In early life he engaged in the lumber and milling business in connection with two uncles, Cotton Smith and John Smith. Cotton Smith's interest afterward passed into the hands of his son, George C. Smith, who sold the entire interest to Mr. Granger. He also conducted a large farm. He was a man who did not aspire to political honors, but was once, in 1852, elected to represent his people in the State Legislature.

During the war of the Rebellion he held the office of selectman. He was also one of the trustees of the Hopkins Academy. We clip from an article in the Hampshire Gazette, written on the occasion of Mr. Granger's funeral, the following: "His numerous employés, together with all the workingmen of the community, were present in a body, and none seemed to be more deeply moved by the loss than they. Mr. Granger was the workingman's friend. The funeral was the most imposing one that has ever occurred in North Hadley, and the fact is to be attributed to the deep personal interest which all had in him as their friend. His death is the greatest loss this community has ever sustained. For business capacity, energy, promptness, and success he has long towered over all others in this vicinity; for strict integrity in all his dealings he remains unimpeachable. For kindness to the poor, for his liberal and constant gifts to the church and benevolent causes, for his general moral influence and public spirit, he has long stood forth among his fellow-citizens a pillar. For childlike simplicity, with his sturdy, manly qualities, for greatness of heart and native nobility of soul, he died without a peer. A man of few words, he will be remembered and revered most for his deeds. . . . At a time when we needed him most he is taken away. But, like his own massive monument, he has left behind him a character which, in spite of its minor failings, will be long remembered by those who knew him best as one of the purest and strongest that has ever appeared among the people of his town."

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Joseph Smith

From the records we learn that, about the year 1680, Sergt. Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith, of Hartford, removed to Hadley, and from him the subject of this notice is descended, being the fifth generation.

Hon. Joseph Smith was born in Hadley, Feb. 12, 1796. He was educated at the high school of his native town, and at the age of nineteen he taught school in Amherst, and again, in his twenty-first year, in North Hadley.

He has always taken a lively interest in public affairs. In 1834 he was commissioned an officer in the 3d Regiment, 1st Brigade and 4th Division, of the militia of the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

In 1842 he received his first appointment as a justice of the peace from Gov. John Davis, and held the position three terms. Has been foreman of a jury more frequently, perhaps, than any other citizen in Hampshire County.

In 1842 he was a member of the Legislature, and during the session was chairman of the committee on State charities. He was county commissioner in 1844, 1845, and 1846.

In 1853 he was elected to the State Senate, and during that period was a member of the committee on Maine lands, and was again chairman of one of the most important committees—that of State charities. His course in the House and Senate was exceedingly satisfactory to his constituents, by whom he is held in the highest regard.

He is a member of the Russell Congregational Church.

Jan. 28, 1818, he was united in marriage with Sophia, daughter of Caleb Smith, of Hadley, by whom he had eleven children, five of whom are deceased.

The writer of this sketch visited this venerable couple on the anniversary of their sixty-first wedding-day, and although both are on the down hill of life, having passed the scriptural age of three-score and ten, he found them still in the full possession of their mental faculties, retaining much of the vigor and elasticity of youth.

Mr. Smith still resides upon the old farm, which has been in the possession of his family from the earliest settlement of the town.

Sylvester Smith

MAJOR SYLVESTER SMITH was the sixth in descent from Lieut. Samuel Smith, who came from England, with his wife Elizabeth and four children, in 1634, in the ship Elizabeth, of Ipswich, and settled in Wethersfield, Conn., where he became a leading citizen.

In 1659, Samuel removed to Hadley with the first settlers of that town, and was prominent in its affairs, holding important offices both in Church and State. He died about 1680.

Chileab, son of Lieut. Samuel, was born in 1635, was a freeman in Hadley, and died March 7, 1731.

Luke, son of Chileab, was born in Hadley, was a captain, and died in 1748. The remaining ancestors, in a direct line of the present family, were as follows: Deacon Jonathan Smith, son of Luke, born in Hadley, March 4, 1702, and died April 4, 1774; Enos Smith, son of Deacon Jonathan, born in Hadley, Nov. 19, 1734, and died March 14, 1836.

Major Smith was the eighth child of the ten children of Enos Smith, and was born in Hadley, April 15, 1789. His education was received in the public schools, and his life was passed in his native town until his death, July 15, 1876, at the advanced age of eighty-seven. He was a farmer, a thorough business-man, and had many friends.

Major Smith was married twice. His first wife was Polly, daughter of Lemuel Warner, and his second, Elizabeth Edwards, daughter of John Smith. By the first union three children were born to them.

The following obituary notice is from the Hampshire Gazette: "Hadley suffers a great loss in the death of Major Sylvester Smith, aged eighty-seven, and one of her oldest inhabitants. He had always lived at Hadley, and was identified with its history, both by participation and knowledge, beyond any other man. Prominent in the town, a deacon of the Congregational Church, he induced the late Sylvester Judd, ex-editor of the Northampton Gazette, to begin his valuable history of Hadley, in the prosecution of which Mr. Smith gave tenfold more information than any one else.

"His knowledge of the family histories of the town was marvelously complete, and he was able to supply information oftentimes nowhere else to be found."

SOUTH HADLEY.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

SOUTH HADLEY is the southwest town of that part of Hampshire County which lies east of the Connecticut River, and is bounded north by the towns of Hadley and Amherst, being separated from them by the Holyoke range, east by Granby, south by Chicopee, in Hampden County, and west by the irregular line of the Connecticut River. It contains between 9000 and 10,000 acres, and has a population, by the census of 1875, of 3370, of whom 1910 are females. The town was set off as a precinct of Hadley in 1732, and was incorporated as a district in April, 1753. Granby was set off June 11, 1768. The town united with Hadley and Amherst in the choice of representatives until 1775.

Bachelor's Brook and Stony Brook are the principal streams, upon each of which are several mill-seats. The former enters the town from Granby, and passes in a general course westward to the Connecticut. Nearly or quite one-third of the town lies north of this stream. Stony Brook likewise enters from Granby, and passes in a zigzag course near the centre of the town, and finally northwesterly, emptying into the Connecticut a half-mile south of the mouth of Bachelor's Brook.

South Hadley and South Hadley Falls are the principal villages. Other considerable settlements are called "Pearl City" and "Moody Corners."

FIRST SETTLEMENT.

A few grants of land south of Holyoke were made by Hadley in the seventeenth century, the first of which was to Thomas Selden, in 1675. This grant comprised 6 acres at the mouth of Dry Brook, adjoining the Connecticut. Seven years later Timothy Nash acquired a quantity of land between Bachelor's Brook and Stony Brook, on the Connecticut River, which land was recently owned by Emerson Bates and H. Moody. In 1684, four persons were allowed to erect a saw-mill on Stony Brook or Bachelor's Brook, and to cut timber; and four others, five years later, had like permission. These mills seem to have answered a temporary purpose, and only one remained in 1720.

The lands south of Mount Holyoke were distributed among the proprietors of Hadley in accordance with a vote taken Jan. 25, 1720. These proprietors were 117 in number, and represented estates valued at £6063 8s.

Falls Woods Field was the first land actually laid out by authority of a vote taken March 14, 1720. This field contained 1775 acres, and was bounded west by the great river, south by 500 acres owned by Mr. Pyncheon,* north by Stony Brook, and east by a north and south line, 361 rods and 9 links east from the great river, as measured on Mr. Pyncheon's north line. The lots into which this field was divided ran east and west, but were fenced as a common field, each proprietor building his proportion.

Home-lots were voted at the meeting of March 14th, comprehending 1000 acres of the land most suitable for the purpose, and were laid out soon after.

Meadow-land to the amount of 500 acres was laid out in

* Mr. Pyncheon had 500 acres in the southwest corner of the addition made to Hadley in 1683. As surveyed by John Chandler, Jr., in 1745, the bounds ran east from the Connecticut along the north line of Springfield 180 rods; thence northerly 240 rods; thence west to the Connecticut 460 rods. The river was the western boundary.

1722 in seven parcels, named Stony Brook, Chapin's, Great, Little, Long, Taylor's Brook, and Pichawamiche Meadows, most of which were in what is now the town of Granby.

Five distributions, amounting to 16,500 acres, were made between 1722 and 1772, in which each proprietor in his order, as determined by chance, selected his portion from the lands remaining unappropriated. The whole amount drawn in the eight divisions for each pound of estate was in excess of three and a quarter acres.

Accounts differ respecting the time of the first settlement of the town.† A burial-place was laid out by the proprietors March 26, 1728, and the settlement doubtless began some time before November, 1727. At the last date a petition to the General Court was made by 21 persons, who represented that they were "residents on a designed precinct in Hadley, south of Mount Holyoke," were distant from the place of worship, and that the intervening way was mountainous and bad. They asked to be made a separate precinct. The following are the names of the petitioners: Daniel Nash (2d), Richard Church, Samuel Taylor, Samuel Smith, Samuel Kellogg, John Smith, John Preston, Nathaniel White, Thomas Goodman, Jr., John Taylor, Joshua Taylor, Joseph Kellogg, William Smith, Jonathan Smith, Luke Montague, Joseph White, Ebenezer Smith. The other four—Ebenezer Taylor, John Smith, Ephraim Nash, and John Lane—settled in what is now Granby.

Of the seventeen, John Preston died March 4, 1728, leaving heirs, and Ebenezer Smith was accidentally killed in 1729, and left a son John, who was possibly the one above named.

Additions before 1731: Wm. Gaylord, Nathaniel Ingram, Jr., Samuel Rugg, Samuel Taylor, Jr., Moses Taylor, Joseph Taylor, Daniel Nash (1st), William Montague, Ebenezer Moody, Ebenezer Moody, Jr., Peter Montague, Chibleab Smith (2d), Timothy Hillyer; 1731 to 1740, John Smith, Falls Woods, Rev. Grindall Rawson, Benjamin Church, Jr., Moses White, John Alvord,‡ John Alvord, Jr., Joseph Moody, Josiah Snow, Eleazar Goodman, Jabez Bellows, James Ball; 1740 to 1750, Jonathan White, John Gaylord, Gad Alvord, Daniel Crowfoot, Josiah Moody, Joseph White, Jr., Ebenezer Kellogg, Jesse Bellows, Reuben Smith, Moses Montague, John Stanley, Hugh Queen, Jonathan Preston, Josiah White, Joseph Cook, Daniel Moody, Thomas Judd,‡ Rev. John Woodbridge, Silas Smith, Philip Smith, John Smith (4th), Thomas White, Nathaniel White, Jr., Ephraim Smith, Aaron Taylor, Samuel Preston, Elijah Alvord, John Hillyer, Timothy Hillyer, Jr.; 1750 to 1763, Phinneas Smith (2d), David Nash, Noah Goodman, Joseph Kellogg, Jr., Titus Pomeroy,‡ Josiah Smith, John Rugg, Asahel Judd,‡ Reuben Judd,‡ Martin Wait, Josiah Snow, Jr., Gideon Alvord, John Woodbridge, Jr., William Wait, Jabez Kellogg, David Eaton, Israel Smith, John Chandler, Moses Alvord, Ebenezer Snow, Joseph Nash, John French, Benoni Preston, James Henry, Nathan Alvord, John Marshall, Elisha Church, Nathaniel Bartlett,‡ Benjamin Pierce, Josiah Smith (2d), William Taylor, Elisha Taylor, Job Alvord, William Brace, Reuben Taylor.‡

† Dr. Holland states that a few families settled the next year after the first distribution, or in 1721.—West Mass., Vol. II., p. 269. Mr. Judd says a few may have settled "as early as 1725."—Hist. of Hadley, p. 376.

‡ From Northampton.

§ Mr. Judd, who gives the names of the early settlers, says, "The lists are not perfect; some may have lived in present Granby."

Other petitions to the General Court had been made, in July, 1728, and June, 1732, in the former of which it was desired that a precinct should be established embracing the territory between Mount Holyoke and the Springfield bounds, and extending from the Connecticut River eastward to the "equivalent lands." Failure to settle a minister within the period limited by the court had each time defeated the forming of the precinct. July 4, 1732, an additional two years were given for procuring a minister, and this appears to have been effected before the ensuing March, in the person of Mr. Grindall Rawson, whose name appears in the foregoing list.

FIRST THINGS.

The first settlement in South Hadley was made in 1725-26; first meeting-house erected in 1733-34; first minister settled in 1733; first school-house built in 1738; first marriage registered, that of Lieut. Job Alvord, of Springfield, and Rebekah Smith, of South Hadley, Jan. 5, 1762; first death, that of John Preston, March 4, 1728; first regular ferry established in 1770, Elias Lyman being ferryman; first innkeeper, Samuel Smith, 1729; first music-teacher, John Stickney, about 1765; first resident physician, probably Dr. Samuel Vinton, 1784 to 1801; among the first traders, Dr. Ruggles Woodbridge and John Marshall, 1771.

MISCELLANY.

The ways of the early settlers of South Hadley and their modes of life did not differ, probably, in any material degree, from those of the people of the mother-town. Many of them were sons and daughters from the households in Hadley, who had tearfully separated therefrom to seek homes in the then distant wilds beyond Mount Holyoke. Fortunately, led by what they esteemed a due observance of the Sabbath, united doubtless with filial promptings, they were impelled to frequent reunions at the old church in Hadley's broad and hospitable street. The journey of six miles and return was an undertaking of no small magnitude. For the table, were served, in savory form, wild turkeys from the rugged slopes of Holyoke as late as 1825; while from the famous fishing-places in the river, between Bachelor's and Stony Brook, were obtained untold quantities of shad and salmon, if perchance the former were not in disrepute. The noisy congregations of fishermen near the falls soon after the Revolution,—overflowing the spacious inns of Daniel Lamb and Widow Mary Pomeroy,—who returned to their homes over hill and dale and through wood and fen, in all directions, with bags and cart-loads of the plump shad of the Connecticut, were evidence that appetite had by that time gotten the better of prejudice in regard to the matter of shad-eating.

Wolves, once plenty, ceased to annoy the inhabitants after 1765, and deer ceased to be numerous before 1800. It may be inferred that there was little "courtin'" by young men clad in deer-skin breeches after that date.

Domestic household manufactures were stimulated by the needs of the time, the raw material for which was obtained for many years by means of a traffic with Newport, R. I. Those who went to the "Island" were commissioned to trade for others, and sometimes represented twenty or more families, whose tow-cloth and other fabrics they took with them and exchanged for "wool, molasses, sugar, indigo, tea," and other articles, the heaviest of which were brought up the river by the way of Hartford. Jonathan Preston, in 1758, and Reuben Smith, in 1795, made such trips to Newport. It is possible the latter is chargeable with having first introduced cigars within the town, as it is recorded that "a South Hadley trader bought two hundred in 1795."

In 1771, South Hadley produced two more barrels of cider than the mother-town; had only nine less dwellings, 79; had as many grist-mills, 2; two more saw-mills, 4; two more oxen, 126; and in 1776 had only ninety-seven less white population, 584.

One slave, at least, was owned in the town, and bore the name of Cæsar Cambridge. He purchased his own freedom, March 6, 1778, paying his owner, David Mitchell, the equivalent of 100 silver dollars.

The first public conveyance, provided in 1789, was at once primitive and royal, though unseemly for a queen. This vehicle was a rail, its passenger John Queen, son of Hugh, and the transportation company under whose auspices the journey was accomplished composed of 16 men of South Hadley, who were required to pay a part of the expenses; 8 paid 20s. each, and 2 paid 10s. each, and £8 12s., costs. Rather dear for a trip from South Hadley to Granby! Why Queen was treated to the ride is not known. Twenty-six years before this event, the town voted money "to defend against Hugh Queen's being cast upon us to maintain." Hugh was killed by lightning about the year 1759. His home was near Elmer's Brook.

In 1769 a committee was chosen "to see where 'tis best to make a rode for Jonathan White to git to meeting." No conveyance was provided in his case.

ORGANIZATION.

South Hadley became the second precinct of Hadley in 1732, and was incorporated as a district April 12, 1753.

The precinct, and afterward the district, contained all that portion of the mother-town of Hadley lying south of the summit of Mount Holyoke, or about 25,000 acres.

The second or eastern parish of South Hadley was formed Feb. 18, 1762, and was incorporated as a town by the name of Granby, June 11, 1768.

The original line between the two parishes was unsatisfactory, and was several times altered after 1768. A straight line, called the "Goodman line," was run in 1781, and gave Granby 14,643 acres, and South Hadley 9363 acres. This line was confirmed in 1824. In January, 1826, the present boundary was established in accordance with the report of a legislative committee, consisting of George Grinnell, Jr., of Greenfield; Micah M. Rutter, of Middlesex County; Nathaniel P. Denny, of Leicester; William Perry, of Leominster; and William B. Calhoun, of Springfield. This line is on the Connecticut River, 6 miles and 296 rods; on Hadley, 3 miles and 202 rods; on Amherst, 170 rods; on Granby, 6 miles and 239 rods; and on Chicopee, 2 miles and 156 rods.

The first officers chosen were those of the precinct, March 12, 1733, when Ebenezer Moody acted as moderator, and Daniel Nash (2d) as clerk of the meeting. John Taylor, John Alvord, and Samuel Smith were made assessors and committee; and John Smith, son of Ebenezer, collector. The administration of the affairs of the precinct were confined chiefly to matters of an ecclesiastical nature, the civil connection with Hadley not having been severed. The erection of the district in 1753 gave South Hadley all the powers of a town, save that of sending a representative to the General Court. For such purpose the town united with Hadley and Amherst until 1775.

The first district officers were chosen April 30, 1753, at a meeting warned by Eleazar Porter, Esq., of Hadley, and were as follows: Deacon John Smith, Moderator; Daniel Nash, Clerk; Samuel Smith, Thos. Goodman, Deacon John Smith, Deacon John Smith, Jr., Luke Montague, Selectmen; Saml. Smith, Deacon John Smith, Jr., Luke Montague, Assessors; Moses Montague, Asahel Judd, Constables; Deacon John Smith, Sr., Treasurer; Josiah Moody, Experience Smith, Joseph Cook, Hog-reeves; Reuben Smith, Clerk of the Market, Sealer, Packer, and Gauger; Thomas Goodman, Job Alvord, Fence-viewers; Stephen Warner, Jr., Josiah White, Surveyors of Highways. Tythingmen, haywards, wardens, and deer-reeves were chosen in later years.

Present Town Officers.—Joseph Subanek, Clerk; S. G. Gaylord, Treasurer; Elliot Montague, C. N. Webster, Otis A. Judd, Selectmen; Gardner Cox, Luther A. Arnold, Wm. Hollister, School Committee; Harvey Carey, E. H. Judd, J. P. Taylor, E. Spooner, Charles H. White, Patrick O'Gara, Philip Hyde, Arthur N. Chapin, Constables.

CIVIL LIST.

SELECTMEN.

- 1753.—Samuel Smith, Thomas Goodman, Deacon John Smith, Deacon John Smith, Jr., Luke Montague.
- 1754.—John Moody, Daniel Nash, Joseph Moody, John Preston, Daniel Moody.
- 1755.—William Montague, Kezekiah Smith, Samuel Moody, Jonathan Smith, Philip Smith.
- 1756.—Luke Montague, Joseph Moody, William Eastman, Nathaniel White, Ephraim Smith.
- 1757.—Thomas Goodman, John Moody, Daniel Nash, Samuel Moody, John Gaylord.
- 1758.—Luke Montague, Deacon Smith, Jr., Capt. Smith, David Nash, Phinehas Smith.
- 1759.—Ens. Daniel Nash, Thomas Goodman, William Eastman, Samuel Preston, Eleazar Nash.
- 1760.—William Montague, William Smith, Joseph Moody, Ephraim Smith, Capt. Smith.
- 1761.—Luke Montague, Daniel Nash, Thomas Goodman, Nathan White, Elijah Alvord.
- 1762.—Capt. Samuel Smith, William Montague, William Smith, Ephraim Smith, Josiah White.
- 1763.—Deacon John Smith, Luke Montague, John Moody, Joseph Moody, John Gaylord.
- 1764.—Daniel Nash, Moses Montague, Joseph White, Jr., Benjamin Eastman, Experience Smith.
- 1765.—John Moody, Luke Montague, Ephraim Smith, Aaron Nash, John Clark.
- 1766.—Phinehas Smith, Nathan Smith, Philip Smith, Deacon David Nash, Josiah Moody.
- 1767.—Luke Montague, Daniel Nash, Deacon John Moody, Israel Smith, Joseph Cook.
- 1768.—Phinehas Smith, Joseph Moody, Nathan Smith, John Gaylord, Reuben Smith.
- 1769.—Nathaniel Ingram, Dr. Woodbridge, Ens. Nash, Ephraim Smith, Josiah White.
- 1770.—Deacon David Nash, Joseph Moody, John Gaylord, Joseph Kellogg, John Chandler.
- 1771.—Jonathan White, Noah Goodman, Jonathan Preston, Josiah Moody, Josiah Smith.
- 1772.—Joseph Moody, Luke Montague, Josiah White, Silas Smith, John Gaylord.
- 1773.—Luke Montague, Josiah Moody, Deacon David Nash, Thomas Judd, Gad Alvord.
- 1774.—John Gaylord, Joseph Moody, Capt. Josiah White, Daniel Nash, Ebenezer Kellogg.
- 1775.—Josiah Moody, Joseph Kellogg, Noah Goodman, Nathaniel White, Joseph Nash.
- 1776.—Daniel Moody, Benj. R. Woodbridge, Maj. Joseph White, Ezra Day, William Taylor.
- 1777.—Ephraim Smith, Enoch White, Joseph Moody, Josiah Smith, John Stickney.
- 1778.—Josiah Moody, Josiah White, John Gaylord, Jonathan Preston, Thomas Judd.
- 1779.—Capt. Moses Montague, Noah Goodman, Esq., Lieut. Enoch White, Azariah Alvord, Reuben Judd.
- 1780.—Darius Smith, Joel Church, William Wait, Nathaniel White.
- 1781.—Ephraim Smith, Joseph Moody, Josiah White, Joseph Kellogg, Thomas Judd.
- 1782.—Gardner Preston, Enoch White, Moses Montague, Nathaniel Goodman, John Stickney.
- 1783.—Maj. Josiah White, David Nash, John Gaylord, Azariah Alvord, Joseph Kellogg.
- 1784.—Israel Clark, David Mitchell, Ezra Day, Ephraim Smith, Dr. Samuel Vinton.
- 1785.—Daniel Lamb, Ebenezer Moody, Maj. Josiah White, Gardner Preston, Capt. Azariah Alvord.
- 1786.—Deacon David Nash, Enoch White, Moses Montague, Jahleel Woodbridge, Samuel Alvord.
- 1787.—Ruggles Woodbridge, David Mitchell, Ephraim Smith, John Mandeville, Ezra Day.
- 1788.—Josiah White, Gardner Preston, Darius Smith, Martin Wait, Levi Smith.
- 1789.—Noah Goodman, Ephraim Smith, Col. Ruggles Woodbridge, David Nash, Jr., Ezra Day.
- 1790.—Enoch White, Gardner Preston, Josiah White, John Stickney, Daniel Moody.
- 1791.—Seth Moody, Jahleel Woodbridge, Samuel Alvord, Darius Smith, Ames Kellogg.
- 1792.—Deacon Silas Smith, Capt. Azariah Alvord, Capt. Elizur Goodman, Ebenezer Moody, Gardner Preston.
- 1793.—Daniel Moody, Enoch White, Perez Smith, Nathaniel Ingram, Josiah White, Jr.
- 1794.—John Church, Samuel Preston, Jr., Ephraim Smith, Seth Moody, Joseph White.
- 1795.—David Smith, Gardner Preston, Daniel Moody, Azariah Alvord, Darius Smith.
- 1796.—John Stickney, Josiah Church, Ezra Day, Seth Moody, Dr. Daniel Stebbins.
- 1797.—Gardner Preston, Daniel Moody, David Smith, Azariah Alvord, Ephraim Smith.
- 1798.—Capt. Daniel Moody, Gardner Preston, Ephraim Smith, Azariah Alvord, Dr. Daniel Stebbins.
- 1799.—Ephraim Smith, Daniel Moody, Gardner Preston, Azariah Alvord, Dr. Daniel Stebbins.
- 1800.—Enoch White, Daniel Moody, Dr. Daniel Stebbins, Asa Nash, Gardner Preston.
- 1801.—Capt. Daniel Moody, Asa Nash, Enoch White, Lieut. Gardner Preston, Ephraim Smith.
- 1802.—Asa Nash, Ephraim Smith, Samuel Preston, John Church, Seth Moody.
- 1803.—Asa Nash, Levi Judd, Eldad White, Seth Moody, Gardner Preston.
- 1804.—Asa Nash, Levi Judd, Eldad White, Gardner Preston, Seth Moody.
- 1805.—Gardner Preston, Asa Nash, Eldad White, Ephraim Smith, Eliphaz Moody.
- 1806.—Asa Nash, Maj. Eliphaz Moody, Eldad White, Gardner Preston, Ephraim Smith.
- 1807.—Eliphaz Moody, Asa Nash, Eldad White, Gardner Preston, Levi Judd.
- 1808.—Eldad White, Daniel Moody, Calvin Goodman, Sherebiah Butts, Selah Smith.
- 1809.—Daniel Moody, Eldad White, Calvin Goodman, Sherebiah Butts, Selah Smith.
- 1810.—Daniel Moody, Eldad White, Selah Smith, Sherebiah Butts, Calvin Goodman.
- 1811.—Eldad White, Gardner Preston, Levi Judd, Peter Allen, Asa Nash.
- 1812.—Gardner Preston, Peter Allen, Asa Nash, Levi Judd, Eldad White.
- 1813.—Asa Nash, Levi Judd, Daniel Lamb, Jr., Bezaleel Alvord, Josiah Snow.
- 1814.—Asa Nash, Levi Judd, Josiah Snow, Daniel Lamb, Col. Eliphaz Moody.
- 1815.—Levi Judd, Eliphaz Moody, Josiah Snow, Asa Clark, Ephraim Smith, Jr.
- 1816.—Levi Judd, Josiah Snow, Eliphaz Moody, Selah Smith, Moses Gaylord.
- 1817.—Selah Smith, Josiah Snow, Daniel Moody, Daniel Warner, Moses Gaylord.
- 1818.—Daniel Moody, Moses Gaylord, Eli Stearns, Daniel Warner, Peter Allen.
- 1819.—Josiah Snow, Eli Stearns, Daniel Gillett, Josiah White, Allen Smith.
- 1820.—Moses Gaylord, Daniel Warner, Josiah White, Eli Stearns, Allen Smith.
- 1821.—Eliphaz Moody, Moses Gaylord, Allen Smith, Daniel Warner, Eli Stearns.
- 1822.—Daniel Warner, Daniel Gillett, Jr., Eli Stearns, Hiram Smith, Spencer Moody.
- 1823.—Eliphaz Moody, Moses Gaylord, Josiah Snow, Samuel Preston, William Bowdoin, Jr., Esq.
- 1824.—Spencer Moody, Eli Stearns, Samuel Preston, Ephraim Smith, Enoch Chapin.
- 1825.—Enoch Chapin, Josiah White, Hiram Smith, Ephraim Smith, Spencer Moody.
- 1826.—Titus Clark, Eldad Smith, Enoch Chapin, Moses Montague, Daniel Warner.
- 1827.—Hiram Smith, Alpheus Ingraham, Enoch Chapin, William Bowdoin, Jr., Josiah Bardwell.
- 1828.—Moses Montague, Eli Stearns, Eldad Smith, Josiah Church, Otis Goodman.
- 1829.—Otis Goodman, Joseph Clark, Cyrus Alvord, William Lyman, Josiah Church.
- 1830.—Alonzo Bardwell, Eldad Smith, Gardner Preston, Jr., William Lyman, Spencer Moody.
- 1831.—Joseph Clark, Josiah Church, Daniel Warner, Cyrus Alvord, Otis Goodman.
- 1832.—Spencer Moody, Daniel H. Lamb, Joseph Bardwell, Jr., Gardner Preston, Jr., Eldad Smith.
- 1833.—Joseph Bardwell, Jr., Alonzo Lamb, Hiram Smith, Spencer Moody, Alpheus Ingram.
- 1834.—Spencer Moody, Daniel H. Lamb, Ephraim Smith, Alonzo Bardwell, John Kellogg.
- 1835.—Spencer Moody, Titus Clark, Alonzo Bardwell, Zebina Judd, John Kellogg.
- 1836.—Alpheus Ingram, Alfred Judd, Titus Clark, Alonzo Lamb, Zebina Judd.
- 1837.—Titus Clark, Edward Southworth, Josiah Church, Spencer Moody, Lorenzo Gaylord.
- 1838.—Spencer Moody, Samuel Judd, Paoli Lathrop, Lorenzo Gaylord, Josiah Church.
- 1839.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Lewis Ingraham, Moses Montague, Paoli Lathrop, Samuel Judd.
- 1840.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Samuel Judd, Lewis B. Ingraham, Joseph Carew, Jr., Sedgwick White.
- 1841.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Dexter Ingraham, Shubael Cook, Marcellus Clark, Paoli Lathrop.
- 1842.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Marcellus Clark, Shubael Cook, Alonzo Bardwell, Dexter Ingraham.
- 1843.—Spencer Moody, Alfred Judd, Josiah Church, Robert Brainard, Josiah W. Goodman.
- 1844.—Lewis B. Ingraham, Jotham Graves, Joseph Carew, Edmund Smith, Luther Alvord.
- 1845.—Alonzo Bardwell, Ira Hyde, Lorenzo Gaylord, Thomas M. Nash, William Bowdoin.

- 1846.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Dexter Ingraham, Thomas M. Nash, Almerin D. Miller, Benjamin C. Brainard.
 1847.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Paoli Lathrop, Dexter Ingraham, Sedgwick White, Samuel Judd.
 1848.—Paoli Lathrop, Dexter Ingraham, Josiah Gaylord, Alfred Judd, Spencer Moody.
 1849.—Paoli Lathrop, Josiah Gaylord, Alfred Judd, Dexter Ingraham, Spencer Moody.
 1850.—Spencer Moody, Alonzo Bardwell, Broughton Alvord, Gardner Preston, Erastus T. Smith.
 1851.—Dr. Edward G. Ufford, Alonzo Bardwell, Spencer Moody.
 1852.—Paoli Lathrop, Gardner Preston, Levi W. Allen.
 1853.—Dexter Ingraham, Titus Clark, Sedgwick White.
 1854.—Titus Clark, Sedgwick White, Lorenzo Gaylord, Dexter Ingraham, Enoch C. Chapin.
 1855.—Thomas M. Nash, Oliver Pease, Daniel Alden, Benjamin Congdon, Asel L. Clark.
 1856.—Broughton Alvord, Byron Smith, Benjamin C. Brainard, John Gaylord, Norman Preston.
 1857.—Marcellus Clark, Dexter Ingraham, Broughton Alvord, Paoli Lathrop, Alonzo Bardwell.
 1858.—Broughton Alvord, Harvey Judd, Hiram Smith, Jr., Thomas M. Nash, Amos Kellogg.
 1859.—Hiram Smith, Jr., Broughton Alvord, Thomas M. Nash, Andrew T. Judd, Levi W. Allen.
 1860-63.—Hiram Smith, Jr., Broughton Alvord, Thomas M. Nash.
 1863-66.—Hiram Smith, Jr., Broughton Alvord, Byron Smith.
 1867.—Andrew T. Judd, Langdon Ayres, Thomas M. Nash.
 1868.—Andrew T. Judd, Langdon Ayres, Harvey Judd.
 1869.—Lorenzo Gaylord, Marcellus Clark, R. Ogden Dwight.
 1870.—Byron Smith, George E. Lamb, Marcellus Clark.
 1871-72.—Broughton Alvord, Hiram Smith, Jr., Martin W. Burnett.
 1873-74.—Martin W. Burnett, Lorenzo Gaylord, Joseph Bardwell.
 1875-77.—Martin W. Burnett, John H. Preston, Newton Smith.
 1878-79.—Elliot Montague, Otis A. Judd, Charles N. Webster.

CLERKS.

1753-55, Daniel Nash; 1756-74, Daniel Moody; 1775-81, David Nash; 1782-84, Ruggles Woodbridge; 1785-86, John Stickney; 1787-90, Jahleel Woodbridge; 1791-94, David Smith; 1795-1818, Josiah White, Jr.; 1819-24, Joseph Strong; 1825, Maltby Strong; 1826, Joel Hayes; 1827, Otis Goodman; 1828-29, Edwin Hooker; 1829-31, Joel Hayes; 1832, William Lyman; 1833, Otis Goodman; 1834-35, Joel Hayes; 1836, Otis Goodman; 1837, Joel Hayes; 1838-40, Titus Clark; 1841, Daniel Paine; 1842-64, David Turner; 1865-69, Joseph Bardwell; 1870-78, Ira B. Wright; 1879, Joseph Subanek.

REPRESENTATIVES.

From 1759 to 1774 the towns of Hadley, South Hadley, Amherst, and Granby united in choosing representatives to the General Court. Daniel Nash, of South Hadley, was chosen in 1764-65. From 1776 to 1787, Ens. Noah Goodman was the representative from South Hadley whenever a choice was made. No choice is recorded for the years 1790-91, '96.

In the years 1792-94, 1819-22, '45 the people voted "not to send a representative."

The following were representatives in the years named respectively:

Lieut. Enoch White, 1788; Noah Goodman, 1789 and 1795; Col. Ruggles Woodbridge, 1797-1812, though no record is made for the years 1801-3-6; Peter Allen, 1813; Dr. Elihu Dwight, 1814-15; Peter Allen, 1816-18; Joseph Strong, Jr., 1821; Josiah Bardwell, 1823; Joel Hayes, Jr., 1824-28; Daniel Warner, 1829-30; Joel Hayes, 1831; Hiram Smith, 1832; William Lyman, 1834;* Ephraim Smith, 1835; William Bowdoin, 1836; Daniel Paine, 1837; Joel Miller, 1838; Spencer Moody, 1839-40; Paoli Lathrop, 1840-41; Simeon Nash, 1843; Erastus T. Smith, 1844; Calvin Goodman, 1845; Joseph Carew, 1847; Titus Clark, 1848; Daniel Paine, 1849; Paoli Lathrop, 1850; Lorenzo Gaylord, 1851; Charles Peck, 1852; Marcellus Clark, 1853; Willard Judd, 1854; Warren L. Waterman, 1855; Dexter Ingraham, 1856; Gilbert A. Smith, 1857; Peregrine Waters, 1859;† Thomas M. Nash, 1861; Stephen C. Weld, 1863; Elliot Montague, 1865; Andrew T. Judd, 1866; Elliot Montague, 1869; Ira B. Wright, 1872; James W. Gaylord, 1875; Newton Smith, 1876; Martin W. Burnett, 1878. Edward P. Crowell, of Amherst, is the present representative, 1879.

VILLAGES.

SOUTH HADLEY,

a post-village, occupies a charming situation near the geographical centre of the town, and north and west of Stony Brook. The village contains not far from one hundred dwellings, a high-school building, one church edifice, and a number of stores and mills. It also contains two cemeteries and a small park. By far the most important feature of this rural village is Mount Holyoke Seminary, with its ample grounds and attractive and substantial structures.

SOUTH HADLEY FALLS

occupies a position on the Connecticut, at the extreme southern portion of the town, a number of its dwellings and streets being south of the town line, in Chicopee. This village, formerly known as the "canal village," is on the five hundred acres which were reserved for "Major Pynchon" in 1683. In 1726 the most or all of the tract was sold by William Pynchon, of Springfield, to John Taylor, of Hadley, for about a dollar and one-third per acre. The Taylors, and probably others, occupied the tract for half a century. The village now contains several hundred dwellings, a high-school building, four church edifices,—one of which is unoccupied,—a number of stores and mills, and two cemeteries. Since the building of the great dam across the Connecticut, from the head of the old canal to the opposite shore, the village has largely increased its manufacturing enterprises, and now (1879) may be considered as in some sense complementary to its remarkable neighbor opposite, the thriving city of Holyoke. A free bridge connects the two places. The village has waterworks connected with Buttery Brook.

Pearl City and Moody Corners, two thickly-settled localities, are in the north part of the town, on Bachelor's Brook.

EDUCATIONAL.

For a number of years after the settlement of South Hadley no public provision was made for the maintenance of schools. The rudiments of learning were doubtless taught in a private way, or wholly within the household.

Feb. 2, 1738, it was voted to build a school-house "23 feet long & 18 feet broad and 7 feet between joints." Deacon Joseph White, Deacon John Smith, and Samuel Smith were appointed "to see to y^e building the School-House," and to "discourse with the Committee of y^e School in y^e first Precinct of this town & desire their help about setting up a school in this Precinct."

March 12, 1739, the people "voted that the School-House shall be set in the most convenient place between y^e meeting-House & y^e house that Moses White now lives in." Jan. 12, 1747, £8 were voted to finish the school-house, and Ensign William Montague, Richard Church, and Daniel Nash made a committee to finish the building and provide a schoolmaster. The school-house was not finished until after March, 1754. In that year the selectmen were authorized to hire what schooling they thought proper for the summer. January 13th, following, £50, old tenor, equal to £6 $\frac{2}{3}$ lawful,† or \$22.22, were appropriated for schooling, at the school-house first, at Deacon John Smith's next, and at Falls Woods next, two months in each place. The people living up Bachelor's Brook were allowed a portion of the £50 for schooling. Of £13 6s. 8d. voted June 21, 1756, £2 13s. 4d. were for Falls Woods, £5 6s. 8d. to be spent at the school-house, and the rest "in the North and East extrems" of the district.

A committee was chosen, March 9, 1761, "to represent and to defend the district respecting a grammar school which the district is summoned to answer at the next Sessions of the Peas."

A school-house was ordered to be built at Falls Woods in 1769, and was undoubtedly finished before Nov. 28, 1775, when two committees were chosen, "one for the old school-house, so called, and one for the Falls Woods school." In 1794, £150 were appropriated for erecting "a school-house or houses," but the record does not disclose where they were to be located.

The following sums were appropriated for schooling in the

† A pound lawful was equal to \$3.33 $\frac{1}{3}$.

* Elections changed in 1833 from May to November.

† Representatives for years 1859-65, inclusive, were chosen by Hadley and South Hadley as one district; since 1865 South Hadley and Amherst have formed one district, No. 4. (See Hadley and Amherst for representatives in years not given in text.)

MOUNT HOLYOKE SEMINARY.
SOUTH HADLEY, MASS.

LYMAN WILLISTON HALL.
MOUNT HOLYOKE SEMINARY, SOUTH HADLEY, MASS.

years named: 1754, in lawful money, £8; 1758, £20, exclusive of teachers' board; 1764, £30, "including the boarding the school-masters;" 1775, £20; 1787, £30; 1795, £50; 1805, $300; 1815, $700; 1824, $500.

The town gave to promote singing, in 1792, $13.33; 1796, $20; 1799, $50; 1805, $50; 1807, $80.

The system of graded schools was introduced in 1868, and first applied to the schools at the Falls village, by Rufus C. Hitchcock, now of Thompsonville, Conn. It was chiefly, if not wholly, through his intelligent and persevering efforts that this salutary change was effected.

There are now—1879—two principal school buildings, of brick, in which nearly all the scholars are concentrated, and in each of which the several grades are taught. The oldest of these buildings is at the Falls village, and was erected about 1845, and enlarged in later years; the other is at the centre village, and was built in 1868 or 1869. A small brick school-house stands at Falls Woods, another at "Pearl City," in the northern part of the town, and one of wood at the Falls village.

There are practically seventeen different schools, conducted by as many teachers, four of whom are males. A teacher of music is also employed.

In 1868 the population was 2098; valuation, $1,103,491; greatest number of scholars enrolled, in summer, 488; greatest average attendance, summer, 393. In 1877 the population was 3370; valuation, $1,630,899; scholars between five and fifteen years, 579; greatest average attendance, 522; number of different scholars enrolled, 732. Amount applied to schools in 1877, $8500. The estimated population in report for year ending March 1, 1879, is 3500; greatest enrollment of pupils, summer term, 622; greatest average attendance, summer, 510; expenditure, $8512.53.

A private school for young ladies was taught a number of years, commencing in or near the year 1802, by Miss Abby Wright, and was "in good repute." Other private schools were doubtless conducted from time to time until the adoption of the district system, soon after 1812.

John Judd was the first teacher in District No. 4, at what is now "Pearl City."

MOUNT HOLYOKE SEMINARY.

Mount Holyoke Seminary, chief among the institutions of the old Bay State devoted to the education of young women, occupies a charming situation on the east side of the main street in the village of South Hadley. Two miles westward the Connecticut trails its winding thread of silver through the meadows, while nearer, on every side, appear in great variety the pastures green and undulating fields of a broken upland. As a majestic border to the picture, upon the west and north rise the stern and rugged ranges of Mounts Tom and Holyoke. Here, as everywhere in this lovely valley, the graceful elm abounds.

Mary Lyon, the founder of the seminary, was born in Buckland, Franklin Co., Mass., Feb. 28, 1797. She was generously endowed, physically and intellectually; but to her narrow circumstances, and consequent struggles to obtain an education, more than to any other cause, it is probable the seminary owes its existence. Self-sacrificing and zealous, she undertook the arduous task of providing an institution of learning which should be self-sustaining, and yet "where expenses should be so moderate as not to debar those of limited means and advantages so great that the wealthy could find none superior elsewhere." Such was her devotion to this noble purpose that she could write, "Had I a thousand lives, I could sacrifice them all in suffering and hardship for its sake. Did I possess the greatest fortune, I could readily relinquish it all and become poor, and more than poor, if its prosperity should demand it."

Some years of her life, before setting about her great work,

were spent in teaching, her first essay being in a school near Shelburne Falls, at a salary of 75 cents per week and board. After other experiences in a small way, in sundry schools of her native county, she united with Miss Z. Grant in the management successively of the Adams Female Academy, at Derry, N. H., and the female seminary at Ipswich, Mass. She remained with Miss Grant ten years, and it was during this period that the plans for the new institution were gradually and patiently matured. Upon leaving Ipswich, in 1834, she called to her aid a number of able, earnest, and willing friends, whom she had inspired with much of her own zeal and self-denial.

The seminary was incorporated Feb. 11, 1836, and the corner-stone of the first building—which was of brick and 94 feet by 50 in size—laid October 3d, following. This building, of four stories and basement, had a capacity to accommodate 80 pupils, and was opened Nov. 8, 1837. Its length has been extended to 166 feet, and a wing 122 feet by 40 projected eastward from each end, at right angles to the main structure. A gymnasium connecting the extremities of the wings completes the quadrangle.

The library, erected in 1870, at a cost of $18,000, is connected with the main building, 45 feet southward, by a corridor 11 feet in width. It is handsomely fitted for its uses, and finished in native woods. The furniture and cases are of black-walnut. The library contains about 10,000 volumes.

Williston Hall, the handsomest structure of the group, finely situated in the rear and somewhat north of the main edifice, is of brick, has four stories and a gabled roof, and an inner finish of ash, attractive and durable. Its cost, complete, was $50,017.74, of which sum Mr. A. Lyman Williston, of Northampton, whose name it bears, gave $10,000. The building is dedicated to science and art, and contains already many fine collections in the various departments. Rooms for the cabinets of ichnology, geology, mineralogy, zoology, and botany are provided; also a laboratory, and physiological and other recitation-rooms. The upper floor is devoted to the art-gallery. Upon one wall of the geological lecture-room appears in fresco a geological map, 15 by 22 feet in size, projected by Prof. C. H. Hitchcock, the original of which was awarded the prize at Philadelphia, in 1876.

The cabinets include an entire set of the Ward casts, a bonafide skeleton of the extinct New Zealand bird Palapteryx elephantopus, a rare collection of corals, and a fine collection of fossil bird-tracks, while the art-gallery contains, among other works of art, a large painting by Albert Bierstadt of a scene in the Hetch Hetchie Cañon, California. For this picture the gallery is indebted to Mrs. E. H. Sawyer, Mrs. A. L. Williston, and to the artist himself, who contributed a part of the price.

Upon the occasion of laying the corner-stone of Williston Hall, June 1, 1875, appropriate exercises were held, including a statement and narrative by one of the young ladies of the seminary. The hall was dedicated with interesting ceremonies Nov. 15, 1876, Prof. W. S. Tyler, of Amherst College, president of the board of trustees, delivering an address.

In the affairs of the seminary no domestics are employed. The members constitute one family, and by a proper division of labor, requiring a service from each of but one hour a day, perform all the needed household duties. While regarded as no part of the instruction proper, this daily service proves salutary as a means of promoting health and stimulating to system, order, and mutual helpfulness.

"The grand features of this institution," wrote Miss Lyon before its opening, "are to be an elevated standard of science, literature, and refinement, and a moderate standard of expense; all to be guided and modified by the spirit of the gospel." The actual work of the seminary has been in perfect accord with this intelligent forecast from the day of its opening until the present time. In the later years changes have been made by which the standard for admission has been raised and the curriculum proportionately broadened. The present regular course covers four years, of three terms each, and includes the higher English branches, mathematics, ending with astronomy in the third year; the physical sciences, French, or German, in the second year, and natural theology. Separate courses in Greek, French, and German are made optional, but may not be substituted for the regular curriculum. Instruction is given in vocal music, reading, penmanship, gymnastics, crayon and pencil drawing, and painting in water-colors.

This institution has received considerable aid from private sources, but never was endowed. With the exception of $40,000 received from the State, in 1867, the principal gifts have been,—from Mrs. Henry F. Durant, of Boston, $10,000 for the purchase of books; a legacy from the late Miss Phebe Hazeltine, of Boscawen, N. H. ($15,000), as a fund whose income should be used to assist deserving pupils, making the total fund for that purpose $20,000; from Mr. Kendall, of Leominster, Mass., by will, $5000; from the late Mrs. Julia M. Tolman, of West Roxbury, Mass.,—once associate principal,—a bequest of $3600, as the nucleus for a fund whose income might be used for the benefit of teachers.

Besides the single gift of $10,000, by Mr. Williston, for the hall of Science and Art, numerous other donations were made for the same purpose, amounting to $20,914.22.

Principal among Miss Lyon's coadjutors were Rev. Roswell Hawks, of Cummington, Mass.; Hon. Daniel Safford, of Boston; and Andrew W. Porter, Esq., of Munson, Mass. Each was afterward numbered among the first trustees of the seminary, Mr. Hawks holding for many years the presidency of the board. Mr. Hawks was distinguished for his successful labors in raising the needed funds, which in sums large and sums diminutive—equally the outpouring of large hearts—within two years became sufficient to warrant the erection of a building. Mr. Safford and his honored wife gave of their wealth—treasures of sympathy and treasures of gold—with unflagging and unsparing generosity. Mr. Safford said, in after-life, "No money, time, or effort which I have bestowed on any object affords me more satisfaction in the review than what I have given to Mount Holyoke Seminary."

In March, 1836, Deacon Andrew W. Porter was made a trustee. Next to its founder, he became more closely identified with the institution, its material and educational advancement, in all phases of its early struggling life and later prosperous existence, than any other person. The first building was put up, and nearly all succeeding improvements made, under his intelligent supervision, freely given. This was but the beginning of his life of devotion to the seminary,—the child of his adoption. "For forty years, without any pecuniary reward or emolument, he gave time, thought, money, and personal services unsparingly to the institution which he adopted, loved, and cared for as a child." In all he did for the institution, he had the hearty co-operation and sympathy of his loving wife. When in his last hours he could not speak he wrote, with hand that faltered, "Give my love to the teachers, the daughters, and all the pupils of the seminary." When the end came, and before the funeral, the principal of the seminary wrote, "The seminary is rich in friends, but we have no other Deacon Porter. He was more than a friend,—he was a father; and the 'seminary daughters,' whom he remembered to the last, must mourn for him. No human being, except Mary Lyon, has done as much for the institution as he. Next to Mrs. Porter, Mount Holyoke Seminary is chief mourner." Deacon Porter died March 4, 1877.

Miss Lyon performed the duties of principal of the seminary from the day of its opening until the period of her death, in March, 1849.* The successors of Miss Lyon have been Misses Mary W. Chapin, 1851 to 1867; Helen M. Trench, 1867 to 1872; and Julia E. Ward, the present preceptress.

The whole number of graduates, including the class of 1878, is 1640. Four-fifths—as shown by the attendance from 1838 to 1876, inclusive—were from the five States, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Hampshire, and Vermont, the percentage of the whole number being for each, respectively, 35, 15½, 15, 7½, and 7. The attendance for the years 1878–79 is 273, distributed in the four classes as follows: Senior, 31; senior middle, 38; junior middle, 86; junior, 118.

Lectures for the current year (1878–79): Rev. Edward D. Lawrence, of Marblehead, subject, "Philosophy of Travel;" Prof. Charles A. Young, of Princeton College, "Astronomy and Physics;" Prof. Charles H. Hitchcock, of Dartmouth College, "Geology;" Prof. Charles O. Thompson, of Worcester Free Institute, "Chemistry;" Rev. Selah Merrill, D.D., of Andover, "Recent Explorations in Bible Lands."

Teachers.—Miss Julia E. Ward, Principal; Miss Elizabeth Blanchard, Miss Anna C. Edwards, Associate Principals; Miss Lydia W. Shattuck,† Miss Harriet E. Sessions, Miss Hannah Noble, Miss Lucy J. Holmes, Miss Ellen P. Bowers, Mrs. Sarah D. Stow,† Miss Frances M. Hazen, Miss Elizabeth B. Prentiss, Miss Mary C. Townsend, Miss Sarah H. Melvin, Miss Elizabeth M. Bardwell, Miss Louise F. Cowles, Miss Adeline E. Green, Miss Cornelia M. Clapp, Miss Mary E. Blodgett,† Miss Anna A. Parsons, Miss Clara W. Wood, Miss Etta E. Hooker, Miss Abbie L. Sweetser, Miss Isabella G. Mack, Miss Persis D. Hewitt. Adelaide A. Richardson, M.D., Physician and Teacher of Physiology; Miss Mary O. Nutting, Librarian; Miss Margarethe Vitzthum von Eckstädt, Teacher of French and German; Miss Ada J. MacVicar, Teacher of Music; Miss Lillie L. Sherman, Assistant Pupil-teacher of Drawing; Mrs. Mary A. Foster, Mrs. Harriet G. Dutton, Superintendents of Domestic Department.

Trustees.—Rev. William S. Tyler, D.D., of Amherst, President; Abner Kingman, Esq., of Boston; Austin Rice, Esq., of Conway; Sidney E. Bridgman, Esq., of Northampton; Henry F. Durant, Esq., of Boston; A. Lyman Williston, Esq., of Northampton; Rev. N. G. Clark, D.D., Hon. William Claflin, of Boston; Edward Hitchcock, M.D., Rev. Julius H. Seelye, D.D., of Amherst; Hon. E. H. Sawyer, of Easthampton; Rev. J. R. Herrick, D.D., of West Hartford, Conn.; Francis A. Walker, Ph.D., of New Haven, Conn.; Edward Hitchcock, M.D., Secretary; A. Lyman Williston, Esq., Treasurer.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

The General Court made it a prerequisite to the establishment of a separate precinct south of Mount Holyoke that a minister should be settled, and that he should be "learned" and "orthodox." Five or six years elapsed before this condition was fully met, and the result showed that the minister finally secured was sufficiently firm, if not orthodox.

Mr. Grindall Rawson was engaged Aug. 10, 1733, and ordained the 3d of October following. He was allowed fire-wood, and a house was built for him in the ensuing year.† There remains no record of the amount of his salary and settlement, no evidence of a formal church organization.

A meeting-house, 40 feet by 30 in size, was in process of building in March preceding the engagement of Mr. Rawson, and on the 12th of that month it was voted to "build a pulpit, Daniel Safford, Congregational Publishing Society, Boston. Recollections of Mary Lyon, by Fidelia Fiske, American Tract Society, Boston. Memorial volume of Mount Holyoke Seminary, published in 1862. Life of Edward Norris Kirk, D.D., Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston.

† Absent a part of the year.

‡ The residence of Mr. Rawson, with the home-lot, was purchased by Moses White, and subsequently by Maj. John Woodbridge, who lived there until his death, in 1782. A large house was erected on the property a few years later, a few rods south of the site of Mr. Rawson's dwelling, by Col. Woodbridge, the year 1788. "After the raising," says Mr. Judd, "there was a great wrestling-match." This house is now owned and occupied by Deacon Moses Montague.

* Those desiring fuller accounts of Miss Lyon and her co-laborers are referred to the following works: Life of Mary Lyon, American Tract Society, New York; and to ceil and plaster the house up to the plates." The progress of the work was slow, and the subject of numerous votes before the house was finished, in 1737. A gallery with pews was finished seven years later. The seating, which was according to ratable estate, and the age and ability of individuals, was effected in 1734. The seaters were directed, in January, 1739, to make room for Madam Rawson.* The pews were of various sizes, holding from five to ten persons.

The parish and Mr. Rawson in a short time came to disagreement, of which the first evidence in the church records appears under date of Feb. 25, 1740. It was then "voted, that it is the desire of this precinct that Rev. Mr. Rawson be dismissed from and lay down the work of the ministry among us;" and subsequently, March 23, 1741, "voted, that whereas ye Rev. Grindall Rawson hath, in a public manner, withdrawn from 33 of the brethren of this church, whereby he hath not only gone contrary to the minds of a greater part of the church, but hath virtually withdrawn from a major part of the precinct, it is the mind of the precinct that Mr. Rawson is no longer our minister, and that Ephraim Nash, John Nash, and Sarg't John Smith be a committee to acquaint him that we have no further service for him in the office of a gospel minister, and that we expect he will refrain from any public acts in that office in future."†

A council, which met in May, 1741, advised a separation, yet, regardless of this, and the reiterated protests of the people, Mr. Rawson continued to officiate, and thus grievously offend, when he could get possession of the pulpit.

Driven to extreme measures, the parish appointed a committee of 15,‡ Oct. 30, 1741, who were enjoined "to prevent Mr. Rawson from entering the meeting-house on the Sabbath by such means as they shall think best, except he shall promise not to officiate or perform service as a minister; and if Mr. Rawson shall offer to perform services as a minister, the committee shall put him forth out of the meeting-house." Within a short time he again offended by entering the pulpit and commencing prayer. He was at once seized by a number of the committee, or at their bidding, and ejected from the house. Tradition says his mouth was stopped with a handkerchief, because he continued to pray. The parish was indebted to their minister "for salary and wood," and tradition again comes in to say that Mr. Rawson claimed the right to officiate until the debt was paid. He did not again attempt to serve.

Mr. Rawson married Dorothy, daughter of Rev. Isaac Chauncey, of Hadley, May 19, 1738. One son, Grindall, became a preacher; another, Charles, a physician.

The successor of Mr. Rawson, Rev. John Woodbridge, of Suffield, a graduate of Yale College, 1732, was installed April 21, 1742, and continued pastor of the church until his death, at the age of eighty years, Sept. 10, 1783. He had a settlement of £300, in land and buildings, and a salary of £150, which, after four years, was increased to £160, payable in bills "equal to old tenor." Reduced to silver equivalent, the salary was not more than £40. It was increased from time to time until it reached £66 13s. 4d., in 1761. A part of the salary was sometimes paid in grain. Wood was also provided, and rose from 50 loads per year to 70.

Mr. Joel Hayes was settled as the colleague of Mr. Woodbridge in 1781-82, and ordained October 23d, in the latter year. He had £275, hard money, as a settlement; £90 salary and firewood. After forty years' ministry he was dismissed in 1823, and died July 29, 1827, aged seventy-four.

As the inhabitants increased a larger meeting-house became a necessity. The new building was easily voted, March 2, 1751, but the question of its location became a serious matter of controversy. The original determination was to "set it near the old one," next "in the centre of travel," and after four years' indecision voted to build "if they could agree on a place to set it;" and three years later, January, 1758, again voted to build a house of worship 60 feet long and 45 feet wide, and to set it where it would best suit the inhabitants. But there were too many minds, and a curious period of vacillation and counter-voting followed, in which they voted to abide, and again not to abide, by the decision of a committee of non-residents. Jan. 14, 1760, five different places were designated; and so the projected sanctuary seems to have been on wheels, journeying through the town. A committee sent by the General Court made a report, determined by lot, which was not satisfactory to dwellers in the eastern portion of the district. They argued, January, 1761, that "owing to the soil the eastern parts of the district are likely to be much sooner filled with inhabitants than the western part; we think a large portion of the land in the western part is so poor it will never be inhabited," and desired to be separated from that part of the district if the committee's decision were confirmed. A second committee decided that the building should stand "at the head of the lane on Cold Hill."

The western inhabitants opposed the division of the district, but proceeded to build where the first committee had decided, near the old meeting-house. In this they were molested by their opponents, some of whom "drew away three posts and hid them in Pichawaniche Swamp," and in October, 1761, after the frame was raised, appeared with augmented force and cut off and pushed over the southern portion. The builders called a committee of ministers to judge of the validity of the decision "by lot." Four appeared in March following, and decided that the lot was "of a sacred nature," and that they "did not see how it could be departed from, according to the Old and New Testaments."

The vexed question was settled by the erection of the second parish, Feb. 18, 1762, and the payment by the first parish of all taxes collected in the second for the building, less the damage to the frame. The amount determined by arbitrators—Wm. Pitkin, Jr., of Hartford, Ebenezer Hunt, of Northampton, and William Wolcott, of Windsor—was £70 14s. 7d. The damage was repaired and the new house finished in 1763 and 1764, and "seated" in the latter year. Galleries were added in the ensuing seven years.§ A steeple and belfry were erected in 1791, and a bell furnished by Col. Ruggles Woodbridge.

A third church edifice was erected in or near 1844, and was burned in January, 1875. A fourth, the present church, was completed in 1876, and dedicated February 23d in that year. It cost, with furniture and organ complete, not far from $28,000.

The following have followed Mr. Hayes in the pastorate: Artemus Boies, of Blandford, a graduate of Williams College in 1816, served from Feb. 24, 1824, until Nov. 18, 1834; Jos. D. Condit, of Hanover, N. J., graduate of the College of New Jersey in 1826, served from July 8, 1835, until the time of his death, Sept. 19, 1847; Thomas Laurie, settled in June, 1848, remained a short time; Eliphalet Y. Swift, 1850-57 (?); Hiram Mead, Sept. 29, 1858, to November, 1867; John M. Green, Feb. 26, 1868, to May 25, 1870; James H. Bliss, January, 1871, to May 1, 1873; John R. Herrick, D.D., April 16, 1874, to April 16, 1878. The society is at present without a pastor (April 12, 1879). Number of members, 325.

§ The first meeting-house stood north and west of the second, with the principal entrance on the east side, and the pulpit opposite. It was removed, and became a dwelling; was sold to John Chandler near the year 1764, and was subsequently occupied by the Goodmans, and recently by Alfred Judd and the widow of Salathiel Judd.

* March 14, 1743, the parish voted "that William Montague sit in the high or first Pew with the men, and his wife in the highest Pew with the women. The wife of Deacon John Smith the 2d, and Luke Montague with his wife, sit in the Pew on the north side of 3^d east door; Madam Woodbridge in the Pew next the Pulpit, and the Widow Kellogg in the fire-seat or 3d Pew, either as she shall chuse."

† There were fifteen who voted against this measure.

‡ Ezekiah Smith, Stephen Warner, William Gaylord, Ephraim Nash, William Smith, Samuel Preston, Sergt. John Smith, Chilaab Smith, John Alvord, Peter Montague, Corp. John Smith, Moses Taylor, Samuel Smith, Jonathan Smith, and John Preston were the committee.

Present Officers.—Ansel L. Clark, Samuel Smith, Calvin Preston, Deacons; Elliot Montague, Clerk of the Church; Levi B. Allen, Clerk of the Parish, whose father, Levi W. Allen, had previously filled that office during twenty years.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, SOUTH HADLEY FALLS, was formally organized with nineteen members Aug. 12, 1824. The members were Joseph Bardwell, Sybil Bardwell, Enoch Chapin, Lydia Chapin, Rhoda Moody, Eleazer Owen, Jr., Earl Bishop, Philip Smith, Jr., Huldah Smith, Wm. Clough, Sewall Chapin, Asa Nash, Deborah Day, Pamela Atkins, Alonzo Bardwell, Sybil Abbee, Sabra Childs, Jennette Carpenter, Edith Gillett. The movement which led to the formation of the society originated at a meeting of the inhabitants of the south part of the town, held at the school-house in the "Canal district," February 28th in the year named. The first services were held in a building standing north of the later church edifice, and which yet is called the "Brick Chapel." The present house of worship was erected probably in 1835, on land purchased of David Ames, Jr., and John Ames, of Springfield. The "chapel" was used until the church building was ready. In March, 1870, an expenditure of $3000 was made necessary to repair damages occasioned by a recent fire.

The church remained as one body until 1860, when, because of certain differences, a part of the members withdrew and maintained for eighteen years a separate existence, claiming the name of the original organization. The parts were made one again in 1878.

The following have served as pastors of this society: John F. Griswold, from Dec. 3, 1828, until Aug. 2, 1831; William Tyler, from Aug. 10, 1832, until Dec. 4, 1843; William W. Thayer, from Dec. 4, 1839, until March 29, 1842; Leander Thompson, from Dec. 13, 1843, until Aug. 28, 1850; Porter H. Snow, from Feb. 4, 1852, until Dec. 15, 1854; Richard Knight, Sept. 10, 1856, until April 30, 1860; S. J. M. Merwin, from Dec. 4, 1860, until July 10, 1867; Geo. E. Fisher,* installed Oct. 2, 1867, who was succeeded by Winfield S. Hawkes, the present pastor, installed Nov. 12, 1878. Number of members Oct. 1, 1878, 350.

Present Officers.—John Gaylord, Joseph Carew, Langdon Ayres, William B. Wilder, Deacons; Stephen C. Weld, Clerk and Treasurer.

A METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

was organized at the village of South Hadley Falls in the fall of 1827, and a house of worship provided five years afterward. The original members numbered 15 or 20, but because of the loss of the church records, at the burning of the shop of Mr. Benjamin C. Brainard many years ago, the names of all cannot be given. A few are remembered: Benjamin C. Brainard, Eunice P. Ashley, afterward Mrs. Brainard, Maria Gaylord, afterward Mrs. Aldrich, Julia Gaylord, Elmira Griswold.

The first class was organized by Dr. Fisk, who occupied the small building known as the "Brick Chapel," whose use for religious purposes was granted by Capt. Ariel Cooley. Dr. Fisk continued to serve the class for two or three years, and was followed by Joel Knight, then a student at Wilbraham, who preached for a number of months, chiefly in a small school-house. The church organization was the result of a revival held during his ministry. He was followed by a Mr. Davis, from Wilbraham, who was occasionally assisted by Abel Stevens. At the times when Mr. Stevens attended the audiences became so large that the school-house was found insufficient, whereupon a larger room was procured in the paper-mill of Mr. Lathrop. The society has been served by many pastors, whose terms of service have usually been from one to three years each, according to customs of this denomination. The present minister is Rev. John Galbraith.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

The people of this denomination were for many years served by non-resident priests. No regular society was formed until within a short period, their church edifice dating from 1877-78. This edifice was built under the auspices of Father Harkins, the first pastor, who is now a resident of Holyoke.

CEMETERIES.

South Hadley has four cemeteries. The old cemetery, at the centre village, was laid out by the proprietors, March 26, 1728, upon ground known as the "Sandy Hill," on the west side of the main highway, or country road, being in size twenty-eight rods along the road, and twelve rods in width. It has since been enlarged. It was voted in March, 1754, to fence the burying-yard with stone.

The first person buried in this ground was John Preston, who died March 4, 1728.

Another place of burial has been provided, a little north and west of the preceding, containing about ten acres of land, and threaded near its eastern border by a small brook. A dam near the south line forms a considerable pond within the grounds.

The third cemetery is at the Falls village, a few rods from the south line of the town, and overlooks the Connecticut River, from which it is but a short distance removed. It contains five or six acres, and is under the control of a regular cemetery organization.

The Catholics have a small burial-ground near the north end of High Street, at the Falls village.

HOTELS.

The shad fisheries, and the business of transporting produce by the "falls," made the "wayside inn" more of a necessity in the earlier days of the town's history than do the fisheries and other industries of the present day.

The first inn was opened by Samuel Smith, in 1729, and kept until 1731; the next by Samuel Kellogg, 1733 to 1740; and next, probably by William Eastman, after 1750, and John Smith, from 1759 to 1771. All these were on the Springfield road, north of the present Falls village.

The first innkeeper at "Falls Woods" was Elijah Alvord, in 1755, a man of trade, with a warehouse at the mouth of Stony Brook, at that time, or a few years later. Noah Goodman succeeded him as host. Two years after the road was laid by the falls, a public-house was opened by Titus Pomeroy, on the old Pynchon grant,—known since as "Taylor's field,"—in 1767, and for some years after his death was kept by his widow. Daniel Lamb established an inn in the vicinity, in 1782.

Not far from the year 1759, a house was erected by John Smith, father of Maj. John, of Hadley, on the north side of the present road from Smith's Ferry to the village of South Hadley. This was enlarged, and in 1773 converted into a hotel by John Stickney. The throngs of fishermen made this step necessary. The house is now, or was a few years since, owned by Mr. Emerson Bates.

On the west side of the common at South Hadley an inn was put up by Joseph White, and a part of it was afterward incorporated into the public-house recently kept by Mr. Geo. L. Smith.

Elias Lyman the elder, who conducted the first ferry, had a public-house near the present ferry-landing, in 1770.

What was known as the "Canal Hotel," a brick structure, which still stands facing the north end of Front Street, at the Falls village, was built by Ariel Cooley, not far from the year 1815. The mason employed was Deacon Enoch Chapin. It was principally for the accommodation of river-men and fishermen. The aged Lydia Day, now a resident of the village, was employed at this hotel, about the year 1820, and says that meals for a hundred or more fishermen were there served in a

* The church society celebrated its fiftieth anniversary Aug. 9, 1874, the pastor, Rev. George E. Fisher, giving an historical address.

DRAWN BY H. ROGERS

CAREW PAPER CO., SOUTH HADLEY FALLS, MASS.

RESIDENCE OF JOSEPH CAREW

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

single day. Ordinary wayfarers were seldom among the guests. In that day the extension in the rear of the main part did not exist. Some of the descendants of Ariel Cooley are now residents of the Falls village,—1879.

The present house, at the southeast corner of Front and Main Streets, was kept as a hotel about the same period, 1820, by a Mr. Bishop, and subsequently became the dwelling of Josiah Bardwell.

TOWN-POOR.

Samuel Mighill, a graduate of Harvard, whose name appears among the early instructors of the Hopkins school, in Hadley, 1705, petitioned for town aid in 1759. He was supported at public charge until his death, April 11, 1769, and was the first person thus supported by the town.

Comfort Domo, daughter of the eccentric Peter,—who was long a dweller on the north side of the mountain, in Hadley,*—experienced much discomfort in her later days. Becoming a town charge, she was warned from South Hadley in 1790, and later was the occasion of controversy between that town and Granby. Each claimed the other should support her. She died in the latter town in 1798.

In Hadley, a family of French neutrals were supported by the town at one period, in and before the year 1762.

AGRICULTURE.

The farming-lands of the town are chiefly devoted to the production of hay and grass, and their resultants,—milk and butter. The yield of milk is large, for which a near home-market is found in the manufacturing districts.

WATER-WORKS.

A system of water-works was introduced at the Falls village, in 1872-73, which derives its supply of water from a reservoir constructed on Buttery Brook, at a point east of the village. The main pipes are from eight to twelve inches in diameter, and supply nearly fifty hydrants, which are used for fire and other purposes. The cost of construction, as reported March 1, 1875, was $55,716.65. The governing body is denominated the "Board of Water Commissioners for Fire District No. 1, of the town of South Hadley."

The present water commissioners are Benjamin Aldrich, President; Benjamin C. Brainard, Treasurer; C. A. Bardwell, J. Suhanek, H. E. Gaylord, William T. Hollister. Austin S. Day is superintendent.

MASONIC.

Mount Holyoke Lodge was formed in 1870 with about 20 members. The first officers were Rev. George E. Fisher, Master; Emerson R. Judd, Senior Warden; W. M. Harris, Junior Warden; Benjamin C. Brainard, Treas.; R. O. Dwight, Sec.

The meetings of the lodge were first held in a building owned by the Glasgow Company, on School Street, from which, in the year 1874, or early in 1875, they were transferred to suitable rooms in a new brick edifice on Front Street.

Present officers: James O. Walker, Master; William N. Price, Senior Warden; P. August Moos, Junior Warden; Campbell Chapin, Sec.; Serbertram E. Bliss, Treas.

A chapter of the order known as the "Knights of Pythias" was formed a few years since, at the village of South Hadley Falls. It is composed of Germans.

MANUFACTURES.

Besides the earlier mills mentioned in connection with the first settlement and concerning which nothing more is known, there were others at a later day, which in turn have passed away. Three saw-mills were operated in 1771, all connected with the falls, owned respectively, from above downward, by Noah Goodman (supposed), William Taylor, and Titus Pomeroy. One was owned in another quarter of the town by Dr. Ruggles Woodbridge. In the same year a grist-mill on Stony Brook was owned by Samuel Preston, and one on Bachelor's Brook by Josiah Moody.

Asheries, for the manufacture of potash, were conducted simultaneously with the above, by Dr. Woodbridge and by John Marshall, but their sites are not known. Joseph White made potash many years afterward, in a building situated west of the inn then occupied by him between the park and cemetery.

Distilleries were common at the beginning of the century, and South Hadley was the possessor of two, whose history is little known. Their products did not promote their own longevity, whatever the influence upon their patrons.

Caleb Ely had a fulling-mill in 1771, whose exact location is not known.

Forty or fifty years ago—now 1879—the Moodys established a forge on Bachelor's Brook, and many years afterward, about 1850, a stock company started a paper-mill near the site of the Moody grist-mill previously mentioned. Farther down the stream Ezra Allen put up a paper-mill, in or near the year 1859. A button-factory was at one time in operation at what is now "Pearl City," whence the name of that inconsiderable hamlet.

The manufacturing enterprises on Stony Brook have been a cotton-factory, which was burned in 1824 or about that time, and succeeded by the present paper-mill of Judd & Brothers; a grist-mill lower on the stream, built twenty-five or thirty years ago by Erastus T. Smith, its recent owner; and a woolen-mill still farther down, built nearly a half-century ago, by Stephen White, and now owned by L. H. Arnold. The last is near the site of one of the old distilleries, and is not at present in operation. The lowest site on this stream is occupied by a sash-and-blind factory, established by John H. Hastings in 1830-35, and recently owned by Howard, Gaylord & Co. Nash & Josselyn made cotton-mops, wicking, and batting in 1855 and subsequently.

A steam saw-mill, on the bank of the river, above the canal, has been in operation for many years, and is now conducted by B. Congdon & Co.

The "Morgan Nail-Works" were in operation on the borders of the old canal in 1812-15; Enoch Chapin had an oil-mill as early as 1820 to '25; Bardwell & Bishop a saw- and grist-mill in 1825; Charles Howard and Wells Lathrop a paper-mill in 1824; and D. & J. Ames a paper-mill about 1828. Most of these occupied the site of the present Glasgow mill, or that vicinity. The Ames mill was burned in May, 1844 or '46, and it is said the others were also destroyed by fire at that time or earlier. A dyeing establishment was operated by Eleazer Owens in or near the year 1820, in the same neighborhood.

The enterprise of grinding salt was conducted at the falls in 1824, and possibly at an earlier date. The salt came from Nantucket. In 1844, Carew & Damon began to put up fine salt in bags, and were the first, it is claimed, in that branch of the business.

Present Manufactures.—The canal around the falls at South Hadley was begun and completed during the last eight years of the last century, and was long used for purposes of navigation by boats and other craft ascending and descending. Its later use, however, and that which has stimulated the growth of the little village of South Hadley Falls, has been to supply water from the Connecticut for manufacturing uses.

There are at present three mills supplied with power through the canal. The upper mill is that of the Carew Manufacturing Company, established in 1848, with a capital of $35,000. The main building was burned and rebuilt in 1873. This company employs 80 operatives, and turns out 3000 pounds of fine writing-paper each twenty-four hours. Power is transmitted through a large turbine-wheel. Officers: Chas. H. Smith, President; Joseph Carew, Treasurer and Agent.

* Peter died, and was buried in the South Hadley burying-ground, in 1762, and a head-stone still marks the spot.

The middle site is occupied by the mill of the Hampshire Paper Company, chartered May 19, 1866, for the "manufacture of paper, and fabrics of which paper is the principal material," with a capital of $200,000. The incorporators were Wells Southworth, Edward Southworth, J. H. Southworth, Erastus Hopkins, Alonzo Bardwell, J. L. King, Theodore W. Ellis, and George M. Atwater.

HAMPSHIRE PAPER CO. MILLS, SOUTH HADLEY, MASS.

The building occupied by the company was erected in 1860 by the Glasgow Mills Company. The products are fine writing-paper and bristol-board, of which last a specialty is made, the company claiming to be the first successful manufacturers of that article in this country. The maximum number of operatives employed is 175. A turbine-wheel is used.

Present officers: J. H. Southworth, President; C. H. Southworth, Treasurer.

The lower site is occupied by the Glasgow Mills, a corporation created Feb. 16, 1848, by an act incorporating William Bowdoin, Charles Peck, George M. Atwater, and their associates, under the name of the "Glasgow Company," for the purpose of manufacturing cotton, woolen, worsted, or silk goods, severally or unitedly. The capital stock has been increased from $300,000 to the present figure, $350,000. George M. Atwater was the first president, and William R. Gould, Jr., first clerk and treasurer.

This company has one large brick structure, 200 by 50 feet in size, and six stories high, in which are 389 looms. Work is furnished to 400 operatives, producing chiefly fancy dress-goods and gingham, at the rate of 70,000 yards per week, and the yarns used in their manufacture. Power is derived from a Boyden turbine-wheel 64 inches in diameter, under 30 feet head.

Present trustees, George M. Atwater, John H. Southworth, J. C. Atwater, Martin W. Burnett, Oscar Edwards, Henry Hinckley, Howard Foote; President, John H. Southworth; Treasurer, George M. Atwater; Agent, Benjamin C. Brainard.

MEANS OF COMMUNICATION.

Roads.—The early settlers were liberal in their dedications of land for highway purposes. The old road or cartway to Springfield, through what is now South Hadley, laid in 1664, was "in breadth twenty rods," but narrowed in 1710 to ten rods. Before the latter date two roads were established, but it is not known which was the first laid. These roads united "a little north of the seminary," and with some changes are still maintained. The most westerly road passed over the dingle called "Lubber's Hole," and west of the buildings now west of the park.

In April, 1765, a road called the "Lumber road" was opened from the head of the present canal to a point on the river two or three miles below, to facilitate the carriage of lumber and produce by the falls. The floating argosies of commerce—comprised of lumber, shingles, logs, and other products of the forest, in shape of rafts—gave to the broad river above the falls a show of life in that day which it does not now possess.

A way across Mount Holyoke, at a low place called the "Crack," had been in use a long time prior to 1762; but in that year a country road was laid at that point, extending from the Bay road, in Amherst, to the meeting-house in South Hadley, and four years later was extended "to the Springfield road, near Moses Taylor's."

Ferries.—The first licensed ferryman between South Hadley and Northampton was Elias Lyman, who established a ferry, at what is now Smith's Ferry, in 1770. This had long been a crossing-place. The fare was 3½ pence for man and horse, for three summer months, and fourpence the remainder of the year; for a man, twopence the year round.

Gideon Alvord, of South Hadley, was afterward the ferryman, and is said to have possessed as much inquisitiveness as acquisitiveness.

Bridges.—The town voted, June 12, 1756, to build a bridge over "Bachelor's Brooke," in the public road leading from the meeting-house to Cold Spring. The present bridge, connecting the village of South Hadley Falls with Holyoke, is 1500 feet long, and was erected as a free bridge in 1870-71, taking the place of a swing-ferry.

WARS.

FRENCH-AND-INDIAN WAR.

South Hadley participated to some extent in the later wars with the Indians and French, but met with little of disaster.

In the company of Maj. Seth Pomeroy, of Northampton, at the siege of Louisburg, in 1745, were two men from South Hadley. Phinneas Smith, under Col. William Williams, and Joseph Cook, whose company is not given, were also participants in the siege. Samuel Goodman was taken prisoner at Fort Massachusetts in the following year, and carried to Canada, where he died March 21, 1747. The names of the six brave soldiers from South Hadley and Amherst, who aided in the defense of Fort No. 4, Charlestown, N. H., are given in the history of the town of Amherst, in this volume.

Job Alvord was ensign under Capt. John Burk, in 1757, and was present at the capitulation of Fort William Henry. He was made lieutenant in 1759, or previously. John Woodbridge, Jr., was lieutenant in 1760, and had been previously commissioned. He was reputed to have been present at the taking of Quebec. Asahel Judd was an ensign in service in Nova Scotia, where he died in 1756.

The following served as privates in the years named, respectively: 1755, Titus Smith, Noah Goodman, Daniel Crowfoot, Josiah Snow, John Church, John Hillyer; 1756, Samuel Henry, Elisha Taylor, Eleazar Loveland, Moses Taylor; 1757, John French, Jesse Bellows, Obed Severence (died); 1758, Oliver Taylor, Benjamin Pierce, Asa Goodman, Seth Smith, Josiah Henry, William Gaylord, Jr., Benjamin Church, Philip Smith, James Patrick, John Marshall, Samuel Rugg, Joseph Hillyer, Thomas Fairfield, Joel White, Ebenezer Stoddard, James Ball (aged forty-four); 1759, Simeon Goodman, William Taylor, Jabez Kellogg, Titus Pomeroy, Martin Wait, Nathaniel Bartlett, Timothy Hillyer, Jr., Joel Church, Silas Smith, Ephraim Smith, Samuel Wheeler, Joshua Taylor (aged fifty-three); 1760, Samuel Ball, Nathaniel Gaylord, John Camp, Jr., Thomas Rockwood, Azariah Alvord, Jabez Snow, Thomas Stanley (died), Artemas Newton (died); 1761, Daniel Taylor (died), Eliphalet Gaylord, Eleazar Olmstead; 1762, Simeon Church, Gershom Barton.

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

Though territorially separated from the mother-town many years previous to the Revolution, South Hadley was still united to it in sympathy concerning the vital questions which affected the public weal. The inhabitants of both were alike tenacious of their rights, and in their own way gave voice to their feelings in opposition to the usurpations of the king. They shut out from their households the obnoxious tea and British merchandise, and appointed the usual committees of "correspondence," "safety," and the like, between the years 1774 and 1778. Names conspicuous on these committees in South Hadley were Ens. Daniel Nash, Lieut. Luke Montague, Deacon David Nash, Maj. Josiah White, John Gaylord, Philip Smith, Ens. Noah Goodman, Capt. Moses Montague, Joseph Cook, Jonathan White, Jonathan Preston, Reuben Judd, Nathan Alvord, Joseph Moody, Silas Smith, Nathaniel White, Joseph Kellogg, John Chandler, Enoch White, David Mitchell, Josiah Moody, Charles Chapin, Deacon Daniel Moody, and Ezra Day.

South Hadley was represented at the convention at Northampton in September, 1774, to consult concerning the general distress occasioned by the attacks of Parliament upon the constitution of the province, and in the several provincial Congresses at Concord, Cambridge, and Watertown,* in 1774 and 1775; and meantime took steps to secure peace and good order at home, and aid the suffering poor of Boston.†

The most notable document, illustrative of the troubles of the period and of the way in which they were met, was incubated some time prior to the actual outbreak of hostilities, and should have created, if it did not, a sensation. The following is that document, unmutilated:

"To the Committee of Correspondence at Boston, Gent'm: Your Pamphlet being Read in a regular Meeting of the Inhabitants of South Hadley, the Meeting took the contents into Consideration, and appointed a Committee of seven men to consult and report to the Meeting at a proposed adjournment what is proper for this District to do Respecting the premises; at a Legal Meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the District of South Hadley, held by adjournment on the 18th day of January, 1773, the above-said Committee Reported an answer to the Town of Boston, touching the matters in which they Invited the several towns to shew their Sentiments. Said report is as follows:

"Gent'm, the proceedings of the Town of Boston under the Present Exigencies we Esteem very Laudable, and worthy of a Metropolis; we Concur in general with your Sentiments in Stating the rights of the Colonists & Provinces and of the Infringements of those Rights; we hold fast our Loyalty to our Sovereign, yet we groan under our burdens, but do not Despair of Redress; if the impotunity of a poor Widow may move an unjust Judge to avenge her, how much more may we hope for redress by frequent application to a Gracious King? The Wheel of Providence often Crushes oppressors, and they are made to fall into the Pit which they digged for others. For Freeborn Loyal Subjects, intending and Really accomplishing the Design of Enlarging their King's Dominions, to be kept under a MILITARY GUARD will naturally and unavoidably Create Such Resentments and Indignation in the minds of the Subjects as is no ways Consistent with the Honour of a Prince Governing a free people. Indignity Cast on a Person or a people creates great resentments in the Sufferer. Prohibiting Slitting-mills is Simular to the Philistians Prohibiting Smiths in Israel when they had subdued them, and Shews that we are Esteemed by our Brethren in Grate Briton as a sort of Vassals to them. What if some impudencies have hapned in time past and Some Exceptionable proceedings have been perpetrated when we were almost Desperate and Ruine at the Door? What man will not Sudenly throw out his arme to prevent his Neighbor from thrusting his Finger in his eye, even although his arme might hapen to strike the face of his Superior? Must we be therefore alwais after Stigmatized as traitors on that account? Not to be tedious, We Esteem our Selves embarked in the same Botom with the rest of our Neighbors, and we are willing to have it Known and Transmitted to Posterity that we Esteem our Selves Burdened and are willing to join in all proper Constitutional measures to obtain Relief. Our Representative being Elected by Joint Ballot by several other Towns with us, we Canot with Good propriety give him instruction without consulting with the other Electors, which we have not yet had opportunity to do; we are willing this letter may be communicated to him, whereby he may be acquainted with our Sentiments.

* The representatives from South Hadley and Granby to the Congress at Watertown, in 1773,—Phineas Smith and Noah Goodman—were directed to carry with them their firearms and ammunition.

† The committee appointed to collect donations for the Boston sufferers consisted of Mrs. Josiah Moody, Joel Church, Reuben Smith, John Gaylord, Abraham Day, and John Chandler.

"The question being put whether the foregoing report be accepted, it unanimously passed in the affirmative; and thereupon it was ordered that the Same be Entered in the District Book, and that the Town Clerk Transmit a Copy thereof, Signed by him, to the Committee of Correspondence in Boston.

"SILAS SMITH, Moderator."

Plain, and plain-spoken indeed, was this, and the logical forerunner of the subsequent determination of the inhabitants, June 20, 1776, that it was their mind "that Independence should be declared."

The following action was taken Nov. 7, 1774: "Voted, that we allow at the rate of two shillings a day for the time spent in training the men that List to go at a minit's warning on any sudden emargancy. Voted, to chuse four men to Inspect the District about Drinking East india tee;" and on March 6, 1775, it was voted, "that the minit-men train one-half day in a week six weeks from this time, at one shilling each a time, and that the Committe of Corospond be a Committy to form sum mathud for the District to Cumin to for the preventing unnessary Disorders arising." It was also at the same time

"Resolved, That a Commitee of sober, Discreet persons be apointed, whose business shall be to promote Peace, Amity, & good order, and to quiet all disturbances that may arise between Neighbour and Neighbour, and to prevent or suppress all uprising, tumults, riots, or mobs among our Inhabitants or in our Neighbouring Tounds (if their assistance shall be askt), and that if any Person or persons of this District shall be moveing, stirring up, or assisting any Tumultuous, Rioutous, or Mobish Company or assembly without first informing such committe and obtaining their aprobation (which is not to be granted but in case of extreme necessity), such person or persons shall be deemed as high offenders against the common Right and Liberties of Englishmen, and shall themselves Forfit and be excluded from the Protechin or assistance of their Neighbours in case they shall need the same in their own defence, and shall for the future be deemed unworthy of any Post, offis, or trust in this District."

The recorded action of the inhabitants, in the following year, concerning the pending issue, is in no sense ambiguous:

"June 20, 1776.—At a meeting of Inhabitants of South Hadley, held at four o'clock in the afternoon at the Meeting-House, then met and made choice of Jabez Kellogg, Moderator to regulate the business of said meeting; and it was put to vote whether it were their minds to Declare Independence, and it Past in the affirmative by a Grate majoriti. JABEZ KELLOGG, Moderator."

Prominent among the officers of the Revolution was Benjamin Ruggles Woodbridge, son of Rev. John Woodbridge, the second pastor of the church at South Hadley. He was born Oct. 16, 1733; became a man of distinguished wealth and influence, and as a colonel in command of a regiment was early in the field, after the affair at Lexington, at the head of his Minute-Men. He died at the age of eighty-six, March 8, 1819.

The town, through its delegate, Noah Goodman, at the convention held in Boston, Jan. 9, 1788, voted for the adoption of the proposed United States Constitution, and in this differed from the neighboring towns of Amherst and Granby, and others in the county of Hampshire.

REBELLION RECORD.

The following enlisted from South Hadley in the infantry of Massachusetts:

SECOND REGIMENT.

Charles E. Dix, Robert Goodbeer, Reuben Miles, Frank Otto, Warren A. Root, Abraham Akers, Olof Benson, John Crosby, William Jones, John Land (or Lard), Thomas Morris, John McGuire, Thomas Moran, Patrick Mark, John O'Neil, Patrick O'Brien, George W. Pierce, William Ryan, George Spear, Francis Smith, Charles Van Meter, Louis Williams, Harris Wilton, Charles Hix.

FIFTH REGIMENT.

Edward Smith, William Manly.

TENTH REGIMENT.

Morris Brick, Edward Brick, James Hayes, John H. Halstead, Oscar Hosmer, Luther Hitchcock, Oliver Mather Keyes, George Porter, Neville Powers, John E. Squiers (sergt.), John Elliot Snow, Alfred H. Tinckham (corp.), Albert S. Witherell, Michael Brew.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

Thomas Ingram.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT.

Charles Miller.

NINETEENTH REGIMENT.

Patrick Cronin.

TWENTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

James Burnham, Hiram W. Forbes.

TWENTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

John Henry, John Kaufman.

TWENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

Horace Akers, Flavius A. Post (corp.), Albert T. Chapin (corp.), Melancthon H. Day, Francis D. Gleason, Lewis Gleason, Charles B. Hadley (corp.), Carl Lippman, Patrick Murray, William H. Moody, Edwin G. Pierce, R. C. Thorp, William Wardwell, Dexter Barnett, Edwin G. Pierce, Hiram Aldrich, Lyman B. Abbott, Edgar C. Brewster, Henry Smith.

THIRTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

Timothy Garvey, Theodore Sedgwick Haven, Jerry Mahoney, Charles L. Moody (sergt.), Harlow Newton, Charles H. Parker, Dwight B. Taylor, Augustus Oakley (corp.), William Ayres.

THIRTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

Peter Baum, Joseph N. Clark (5th sergt.), George M. Coombs, Richard Clark, George D. Haven, Michael Kenney, James Kenney, John Kirkpatrick, William Marshall, Edward Murphy, Charles M. Stebbins, Tracy T. Shumway, David B. West, Charles H. West, John Wagner, John W. Benway, John Foley, Michael Kennedy, Patrick Moriarty, Peter Armstrong, Jas. Cosgrove, George B. Gillingham, Thomas Leach, Austin J. Lyman (2d lieut.), George McCoombs, Charles Deland.

THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

W. T. Abbott (corp.), Charles Bishop, William H. Cook, T. A. Church (corp.), Henry Doelbrek, George T. Enderston, Edwin C. Hanks, George L. Montague, Lucien Moody, William W. Meservey, Neville Preston, Edmund R. Pearson, Nathan C. Snow, Davis L. Wetmore, Heber Black, John Lashaway.

FORTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

Henry A. Clark, Nathaniel H. Ingraham, William F. Ingraham, Josiah Moody, Charles S. Moody, Thomas White.

FORTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

Joseph Miller, Robert Dillon, James W. McFarlane.

FIFTY-SECOND REGIMENT.

John P. Beckwith, Charles E. Benway, Henry M. Blackmer, Edwin W. Bennett, Henry E. Bates (corp.), Charles H. Church, William E. Congdon, Eugene M. Clapp, Lowell M. Chandler, Gottlieb Feustel, Philip Gunderman, Christopher Gunderman, George W. Gordon, Peter Gilligan, Warren A. Graves, Henry A. Graves, Luther A. Harmon, Wilder F. Haskell (sergt.), John Holihan, Albert D. Judd, Burritt Judd, Thomas Kenney, Thomas Kilmurry, Henry W. Lamb, George V. Nash, Henry Oakley, Halsey B. Philbrick (corp.), Conrad Rising, Charles C. Smith, Charles E. Smith, Daniel Sullivan, Henry W. Smith, Joseph Suhaneck, Edward Suhaneck, Henry B. Thayer, Seth A. Williams (lieut.).

FIFTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

John Pindoe.

FIFTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

Lauren Pierce, Edwin G. Price.

FIFTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

James Bonner, Victor Piezette.

REGIMENT NOT GIVEN.

Albert W. Ingraham, Elijah Lyman Moody, Edwin G. Carley (also 4th Art.), James Mason, Terence L. Fox, Henry E. Ballou, Willard Fitch, Lauren Pierce, John Smith.

FIRST HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Dennis Curran, Edmund C. Chapin (also 3d Batt. and 1st Cav.), John S. Moulton, John Moriarty.

SECOND HEAVY ARTILLERY.

James Boyle.

HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Thomas Darey, George Cole.

FOURTH ARTILLERY.

Edwin G. Carley.

FIRST CAVALRY.

Henry M. Goddard, James Kinnie, Henry W. Smith (lieut.), George Baker, Louis Lafontaine, John Williams.

THIRD CAVALRY.

George Brown.

FOURTH CAVALRY.

James R. Crittenden, Tertius Cooley, George A. Hinks, Andrew McElwain, Charles Alphonse, Charles Clark, Jonas Marvin.

TWELFTH CAVALRY.

John C. Fremont, William H. Lambert, Frank White.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NINTH CONNECTICUT INFANTRY.

James Edwards.

ELEVENTH CONNECTICUT INFANTRY.

Henry Bischoff, Bernhardt Herter, William Holdfuss.

SEVENTH MAINE INFANTRY.

Emery D. Ingraham (master of band), William Smith (band).

EIGHTY-SECOND PENNSYLVANIA INFANTRY.

John L. Matthews.

NINTH NEW YORK BATTERY.

Albert E. Porter.

NEW YORK ARTILLERY.

Herman Poppe.

U. S. ARTILLERY.

George C. Duvell.

U. S. REGULAR ARMY.

John Ashburn, John Cara, David Degrand, Hugh Murphy, John Riley, Henry Rooney, Thomas Riley, Thomas Smith, William Schofield.

NECROLOGY.

John Prentiss Beckwith, died on steamer "Illinois," in New York harbor, Dec. 2, 1862.

Henry E. Bates, died in marine hospital, New Orleans, Aug. 16, 1863.

Warren A. Graves, died on board boat, July 27, 1863.

William F. Ingraham, died in hospital at Newbern, N. C., Jan. 24, 1864.

Josiah Moody, died at Newbern, N. C., Jan. 14, 1863.

Jerry Mahoney, killed in battle at Port Hudson.

George Varnum Nash, died at New Orleans, April 25, 1863.

Henry Oakley, died at Mound City, Ill., Aug. 6, 1863.

Neville Preston, wounded at Spotsylvania Court-House; died at Sickles' hospital, May 30, 1864.

Charles C. Smith, died at home, from hardships of army life, Sept. 4, 1863.

Conrad Rising, died; place not stated.

R. C. Thorp, died; place not stated.

Edwin G. Carley, died; place not stated.

Joseph Miller, taken prisoner; died at Andersonville, Ga., about Sept. 1, 1864.

WOUNDED.

Michael Brew, at Fair Oaks, in head and arm.

T. A. Church, at Petersburg, in head.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JOSEPH CAREW

was born in Springfield, Mass., Sept. 5, 1807. His father was Joseph Carew of West Springfield (head of Main Street), born in 1773, where he owned and carried on a large farm and tannery. Mr. Carew's mother was Laura, daughter of Charles and Laura Bugbee. She was born in Brimfield, Mass., July 19, 1786. Joseph was one of six children,—Frances M., Lucius M., Joseph, Caroline, Laura, and Hannah S. He received an academic education at the Springfield and Monson Academies, being two years at the latter. At the age of seventeen, in the autumn of 1824, he entered the dry-goods house of Howard & Lathrop, then the leading dealers in Springfield.

Howard & Lathrop during that year built a small mill at South Hadley Falls, Mass., for the purpose of manufacturing book-, news-, and writing-paper. They also had a general store connected with this mill, and, early in 1825, Mr. Carew was transferred to this store, where he remained until 1830. During that year he was sent on a collecting tour South, and was some six months in Washington, D. C., where he formed the acquaintance of the celebrated "Duff Green," publisher of The Globe, by whom he was introduced to many of the notables of the day in Washington. The Globe was printed on paper made by his employers. Upon his return to South Hadley Falls in July of the same year, he took entire charge of Howard & Lathrop's mill, and con-

Joseph Loring

MARTIN WAIT BURNETT,

one of the leading citizens of South Hadley, Mass., was born on the 10th day of September, 1814, and is descended, in the fourth generation, from David Burnett, who removed from England to America about the year 1700, and settled at Easthampton, Long Island, N. Y. Stephen, his son, was a farmer.

Jonathan, son of Stephen, about the year 1760, changed his place of residence to South Hadley, Mass., settling in Pitchwam, now a part of Granby. He had a family of seven children, viz.: Mehitabel, who married Samuel Smith, Esq., of Granby; Bela, who resided in Granby, also; Enoch, whose residence was in Belchertown; and Arza, Stephen, Jonathan, and Ruth (who married Nathaniel Ingraham), all residents of South Hadley.

Jonathan (2d), son of Jonathan, married Salome Wait, daughter of Martin Wait, Nov. 26, 1805. They had a family of nine children,—David, born Sept. 14, 1807, died at Grand Rapids, Mich., June 26, 1875; Sarah, born Dec. 17, 1809, married Erastus Taylor; Jonathan, born March 3, 1812, died April 15, 1816; Martin Wait (the immediate subject of this notice), born Sept. 10, 1814; Anna, born Feb. 10, 1817, married Albert Walker, died at Utica, N. Y.; Jonathan, born March 20, 1819; Jane, born March 22, 1821, married Emerson Gaylord, of Chicopee;

Photo. by T. R. Lewis.

M. W. Burnett

Theodore, born June 10, 1823 (deceased); and Clara, born April 15, 1828, wife of C. H. Goodman, of Springfield.

Martin W. was married, Sept. 16, 1841, to Lavinia, daughter of Eldad Smith, and granddaughter of Ephraim Smith and Samuel Alvord.

Mr. Burnett has had a family of six children,—Sarah Lavinia, born Sept. 3, 1844, died Sept. 23d, of same year; Charles Martin, born April 21, 1846, married Alice Gilmore, of Springfield, and has one son, Charles Martin, born June 24, 1873; Eldad Smith, born May 20, 1848, died Aug. 4, 1849; Austin Walde, born March 24, 1852; Adelia Smith, born June 20, 1855, married Joseph Edward Miller, and has one son, Henry Burnett, born Jan. 7, 1879; and Annie Jane, born March 11, 1862. Mr. Burnett, in early life, learned the carpenter's trade, but engaged in the sash, door, and blind business, for J. N. Hastings, in 1835. In 1867 he became a member of the firm of Howard & Gaylord, and is interested to some extent in several of the manufactories of Holyoke and South Hadley Falls. He has been largely connected with town affairs, having been an officer the most of the time for sixteen years. He is also much interested in parish matters, and has been an officer of the Evergreen Cemetery Association since its organization, in 1868. He represented the Fourth Hampshire District in the Legislature of 1878. His record has been that of an upright and useful citizen.

CAPTAIN BROUGHTON ALVORD.

Alexander Alvord was born in Somerset Co., England, probably about 1620. He was an early resident of Windsor, Conn., and moved to Northampton, Mass., about the year 1661, where he died, Oct. 3, 1683; he married Mary Voar, at Windsor, Conn., Oct. 29, 1646.

Thomas Alvord, son of Alexander, was born in Windsor, Conn.; married Joanna Taylor, at Northampton, Mass., March 22, 1681.

John Alvord, son of Thomas, was born in Northampton, Oct. 19, 1685; died at South Hadley, Aug. 10, 1733. He resided at Northampton and South Hadley; married Dorcas Lyman, March 12, 1733.

Gad Alvord, son of John and Dorcas, was born in 1729; died in Wilmington, Vt.; married Lydia Smith, Nov. 17, 1750.

Samuel Alvord, son of Gad and Lydia, was born in South Hadley, Nov. 27, 1751; died in South Hadley, July 9, 1814, aged sixty-three; married Miriam White.

Calvin Alvord, son of Samuel and Miriam, was born Aug. 3, 1779; married Mary Brewster, daughter of Jesse Brewster; died Nov. 18, 1857.

Broughton Alvord, son of Calvin and Mary, and whose portrait appears upon this page, was born Jan. 14, 1802, and had two brothers and two sisters, —Calvin, Jesse, Ruby, and Mary Ann, all being dead except Mary Ann, who lives with him, neither of the two sisters having married.

Gad, Samuel, Calvin, and Broughton were all born on the old home farm of John Alvord, in South Hadley.

Mr. Alvord received his early education in the district schools of South Hadley, and commenced his business life as a boatman on the Connecticut

Photo. by T. R. Lewis.

Broughton Alvord

River, in 1826; afterward was captain of a boat; after that became agent and part owner in the transportation company, with his headquarters at Hartford during the season, passing the winters at home, in South Hadley. In 1846 the company sold their business to the Connecticut River Railroad. Mr. Alvord is the only one of the company living at the present time. He was one of the projectors of the Parsons' Paper Company, organized in 1853; one of the directors from its organization, and a stockholder in the Holyoke Paper Company since 1864. He has been the president of the Valley Paper Company since its organization, in 1866. He is a stockholder in the Third National Bank of Springfield; the Agawam National Bank; the First National Bank of Chicopee; one of the directors in the Hadley Falls National Bank, and also in various other corporations. Capt. Alvord is a thorough Democrat, voting first for Gen. Jackson at the time of his election.

He has served the town as one of the selectmen for fifteen years, and during the whole time of our civil war was one of the foremost to uphold the government by his position and means. He is held in high esteem by men of all parties for his strict integrity and sound judgment; and all have united to induce him to take a seat in the Legislature, but to no purpose, as he would not consent to the use of his name, preferring the quiet of home to the excitement of political life.

Photo. by T. R. Lewis.

Moses Montague

DEACON MOSES MONTAGUE, of South Hadley, is of a distinguished English family, which traces itself back to the time of William the Conqueror. The ancestor of the American branch was Richard Montague, of Bourney, England, who emigrated to America about 1645. Settled first at Wells, in Maine; thence removed, in 1646, to Boston; thence, in 1651, to Wethersfield, Conn.; and thence, in 1659, to Hadley, where he died, Dec. 14, 1681, aged fifty-seven. He was married in England, in 1640, to Abigail Downing, of Norwich, England, by whom he had five children, one of whom, John, was born in 1655, and died in Hadley, in 1732. John married, in 1681, Hannah, daughter of Chileab Smith, of Hadley, by whom he had nine children, the fourth of whom, Peter, was born in 1690, and married, Dec. 15, 1715, Mary Hubbard. He settled in South Hadley, in May, 1719.

In January, 1720, there were one hundred and seventeen names on the list of those who took up their land in South Hadley, and according to that valuation Peter Montague stood third in amount of property, the value of his land being £151 14s. This land has never been out of the Montague family. Peter had nine children, the fifth of whom, Moses, was born Nov. 17, 1724, and died Dec. 18, 1792. He gained the rank of captain in the war of the Revolution. In 1748 he married Sarah Graves, of Sunderland, by whom he had ten children, the tenth of whom, Elijah, was born April 21, 1770, and died Feb. 22, 1843. In 1794 he married Rachel Lyman, of Hadley, by whom he had four children, the second of whom was Moses, the subject of this sketch, born Sept. 8, 1797, and being, as will be observed, the sixth generation of the family living in America. In October, 1820, he married Harriet Smith, a woman highly esteemed in the community for her unobtrusive goodness and moral worth, and most loved by those who knew her best. She died Nov. 1, 1876. Nine years ago they celebrated their "golden wedding," at which were present a great number of friends to extend their congratulations, and to express by words and acts their appreciation and approbation of their honorable, useful, and Christian lives.

There are now living five of the ten children born to them, and thirteen grandchildren. One of the sons, Elliot Montague, has twice represented his district in the General Court, and now holds responsible offices in the town and parish. Another, Col. George L. Montague, received the commissions of first lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel in the late war of the Rebellion; was brevetted colonel for "distinguished gallantry at the battle of Spottsylvania Court-House, Va.," and was commander of the 37th Massachusetts Infantry during some of the severest campaigns and battles of the "Army of the Potomac."

While Moses Montague was still a youth he became convinced of the curse of dram-drinking, which was then the invariable practice, and was one of the earliest to stoutly protest against it by word and example. Uninfluenced by persuasion, and undeterred by threats, he maintained his aggressive attitude against the evil, and for many years waged an unequal warfare, with few friends or supporters. But again was proved the truth of the saying, that "one with God is a majority," and at last came the great temperance revival which crowned his hopes with success. He became a member of the church in 1819, was appointed deacon at the age of twenty-five, and has been connected with the Sabbath-school as superintendent or teacher till the present time. He has always been prominent in town and church matters, liberal in his subscriptions for good causes, a zealous advocate for good schools and good preaching, and, like the representative Puritan descendant that he is, always aggressive for the right. Of positive and independent habits of thought, he could maintain with good reasons his opinions once formed, and the direct and indirect influence he has exerted upon the community is one not easily measured.

In person, Deacon Montague is about six feet four inches in height, and weighs two hundred and fifteen pounds; and it is noteworthy, as showing the rugged stock from which he sprung, and the result of his own simple, temperate habits of life, that he has never been confined to his bed from sickness a single day of his life, and now, at the age of eighty-three, he is in possession of all his faculties, and is remarkable for his physical and mental vigor.

HIRAM SMITH.
[DECEASED.]

Photos. by T. R. Lewis.

Hiram Smith

tinued in this position until the spring of 1847, when this mill and that of D. & J. Ames, adjoining (the first paper-makers in this part of New England), were burned. Howard & Lathrop sustained such severe loss as to cause their failure, and terminate their business at South Hadley Falls.

In 1848, Mr. Carew and others organized the Carew Manufacturing Company, the number of stockholders being twenty-five. Since then they have been reduced to seven, Mr. Carew having a controlling interest. He was elected agent and treasurer, and as such has remained since. The mill was burned in 1873, but immediately replaced by a much more costly structure of brick, 150 by 40 feet, with marble facings and trimmings, three stories high, with a two-story wing 50 by 20 feet. The machinery includes five five-hundred pound engines, one eighty-inch Fourdrinier machine, and two artesian wells with a capacity of two hundred and forty gallons per minute, being the first artesian wells used for this purpose. Mr. Carew was also one of the first stockholders and directors of the Third National Bank of Springfield.

In 1864 he built and presented to the Church Society the Congregational Church at South Hadley Falls, upon which he expended twenty-five thousand dollars. In 1870 he gave a scholarship to Amherst College, and in 1873 presented five thousand dollars for a lectureship in the Theological Seminary at Hartford, Conn.

Mr. Carew's son Frank was associated with him in business up to the time of his death, which occurred on Aug. 1, 1877. Frank was married, Oct. 22, 1863, to Josephine F., daughter of Abram Hawkins, Esq., and left three children,—Mary F., born June 12, 1866, in Paris, France; George and Frank (twins), born in South Hadley Falls, Mass., Jan. 7, 1870. These three grandchildren are all of Mr. Carew's family left to him, their mother having died Jan. 7, 1870.

Mr. Carew was married, Sept. 24, 1833, to Miss Eliza Randall, daughter of Josiah Randall, Esq., and had only two children,—George Bishop, who was born June 17, 1836, and died June 23d of same year, and Frank, born April 15, 1838. Mrs. Carew died May 7, 1874.

Mr. Carew is still an active and enterprising business-man, although seventy-two years of age, and always ready to assist every worthy enterprise.

HIRAM SMITH,*

son of Deacon Silas Smith, born Sept. 23, 1793. His mother was Mary, daughter of Eliphaz Moody, of South Hadley Falls, Mass., born Aug. 13, 1796, whom his father married June 2, 1817. Hiram Smith early turned his attention to navigation on the Connecticut River, and by his energy and business ability probably did more than any other person to open up the commerce of the Upper Connecticut. This was before the days of railroads, when the river was the great highway of commerce in Western Massachusetts. Indeed, so great was his influence at one time, and so far reaching his ideas and plans, that he was universally known on the river as "King Hiram." He was a valuable and useful citizen, and served his town in various offices for many years. He represented South Hadley in the General Court of Massachusetts. He was frequently called upon to set off widows' dowers, and to administer on the estates of deceased friends, as well as attend to other kinds of public services, being known far and wide as a man of most excellent judgment and of strict integrity. In the latter part of his life he was engaged in farming.

HIRAM SMITH,

son of the above, was born July 24, 1824, and like his father has taken a prominent place as a citizen and business-man in the old town where so many of his ancestors have resided before him. Jan. 19, 1848, he married Harriet S. Coney, niece of Capt. Broughton Alvord, and has had a family of four children, viz., Ellis Dwight, born July 10, 1849, died April 22, 1851; Hattie V. A., born July 11, 1850, died Oct. 10, 1852; J. Belle, born Nov. 22, 1858; and Fred Merwin, born Sept. 18, 1862.

Mr. Smith for several years past has been postmaster at South Hadley Falls, and is engaged in general mercantile business at the same place. He has always taken an active interest in town and church matters, being a member of the Congregational Church of South Hadley Falls.

ERRATUM.

In the biography of Jos. Carew, where mention is made of his marriage, the name Miss Eliza Randall, should read Miss Eliza Bardwell, daughter of Josiah Bardwell.

of Hampshire, and is bounded on the north by the town of Enfield, in the same county, and by the town of Hardwick, in Worcester County; on the south by the town of Palmer, in Hampden County; on the east by the towns of New Braintree and West Brookfield, in Worcester County; and on the west by the town of Belchertown, in Hampshire County. It is about four and a half by six miles in extent, and has an area of about 18,000 acres, and is the second town in point of population and manufacturing importance in the county.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is pleasantly situated and well watered. The Ware River originates in the western part of Worcester County, draining most of the country west of the Wachusett, and is supplied partly from ponds, which, with the great extent of open country drained by it, gives it a character of stability not gained by mountain streams. It enters Ware at the northeast corner, and goes out near the southwest, keeping near the eastern and southern boundary. This stream been fully utilized, and is in prosperity. The Swift River forms the western boundary. Three distinct ranges of hills traverse the town north and south, between which exist intervals of fair productive character, and each of which is watered by a brook of some consequence. Commencing at the east, these are named respectively Muddy, Flat, and Beaver Brooks, all affluents of the Ware River. The highest elevation in the town is Coy's Hill, on the eastern border, which attains an altitude of 500 feet above the river.

The soil of the town is of a somewhat inferior quality, save in the valleys, where it is capable of successful cultivation. Its appearance has frequently excited the comments of strangers and others, which the residents now repeat with some relish, since, in spite of adverse conditions, they have outstripped their neighbors in cultivated crops. Dr. Dwight passed through a corner of the town in 1810, and in his "Travels" makes the following remark:

"Ware borders on Belchertown, southeastward. Its soil is generally of a very inferior quality. A traveler formerly passing through this town observed that

* Deceased.

HIRAM SMITH.
[DECEASED.]

Photos. by T. R. Lewis.

Hiram S.

tinued in this position until the spring of 1847, when this mill and that of D. & J. Ames, adjoining (the first paper-makers in this part of New England), were burned. Howard & Lathrop sustained such severe loss as to cause their failure, and terminate their business at South Hadley Falls.

In 1848, Mr. Carew and others organized the Carew Manufacturing Company, the number of stockholders being twenty-five. Since then they have been reduced to seven, Mr. Carew having a controlling interest. He was elected agent and treasurer, and as such has remained since. The mill was burned in 1873, but immediately replaced by a much more costly structure of brick, 150 by 40 feet, with marble facings and trimmings, three stories high, with a two-story wing 50 by 20 feet. The machinery includes five five-hundred pound engines, one eighty-inch Fourdrinier machine, and two artesian wells with a capacity of two hundred and forty gallons per minute, being the first artesian wells used for this purpose. Mr. Carew was also one of the first stockholders and directors of the Third National Bank of Springfield.

In 1864 he built and presented to the Church Society the Congregational Church at South Hadley Falls, upon which he expended twenty-five thousand dollars. In 1870 he gave a scholarship to Amherst College, and in 1873 presented five thousand dollars for a lectureship in the Theological Seminary at Hartford, Conn.

Mr. Carew's son Frank was associated with him in business up to the time of his death, which occurred on Aug. 1, 1877. Frank was married, Oct. 22, 1863, to Josephine F., daughter of Abram Hawkins, Esq., and left three children,—Mary F., born June 12, 1866, in Paris, France; George and Frank (twins), born in South Hadley Falls, Mass., Jan. 7, 1870. These three grandchildren are all of Mr. Carew's family left to him, their mother having died Jan. 7, 1870.

Mr. Carew was married, Sept. 24, 1833, to Miss Eliza Randall, daughter of Josiah Randall, Esq., and had only two children,—George Bishop, who was born June 17, 1836, and died June 23d of same year, and Frank, born April 15, 1838. Mrs. Carew died May 7, 1874.

Mr. Carew is still an active and enterprising business-man, although seventy-two years of age, and always ready to assist every worthy enterprise.

HIRAM SMITH,*

son of Deacon Silas Smith, born Sept. 23, 1793. His mother was Mary, daughter of Eliphaz Moody, of South Hadley Falls, Mass., born Aug. 13, 1796, whom his father married June 2, 1817. Hiram Smith early turned his attention to navigation on the Connecticut River, and by his energy and business ability probably did more than any other person to open up the commerce of the Upper Connecticut. This was before the days of railroads, when the river was the great highway of commerce in Western Massachusetts. Indeed, so great was his influence at one time, and so far reaching his ideas and plans, that he was universally known on the river as "King Hiram." He was a valuable and useful citizen, and served his town in various offices for many years. He represented South Hadley in the General Court of Massachusetts. He was frequently called upon to set off widows' dowers, and to administer on the estates of deceased friends, as well as attend to other kinds of public services, being known far and wide as a man of most excellent judgment and of strict integrity. In the latter part of his life he was engaged in farming.

HIRAM SMITH,

son of the above, was born July 24, 1824, and like his father has taken a prominent place as a citizen and business-man in the old town where so many of his ancestors have resided before him. Jan. 19, 1848, he married Harriet S. Coney, niece of Capt. Broughton Alvord, and has had a family of four children, viz., Ellis Dwight, born July 10, 1849, died April 22, 1851; Hattie V. A., born July 11, 1850, died Oct. 10, 1852; J. Belle, born Nov. 22, 1858; and Fred Merwin, born Sept. 18, 1862.

Mr. Smith for several years past has been postmaster at South Hadley Falls, and is engaged in general mercantile business at the same place. He has always taken an active interest in town and church matters, being a member of the Congregational Church of South Hadley Falls.

W A R E.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THE town of Ware lies in the southeast part of the county of Hampshire, and is bounded on the north by the town of Enfield, in the same county, and by the town of Hardwick, in Worcester County; on the south by the town of Palmer, in Hampden County; on the east by the towns of New Braintree and West Brookfield, in Worcester County; and on the west by the town of Belchertown, in Hampshire County. It is about four and a half by six miles in extent, and has an area of about 18,000 acres, and is the second town in point of population and manufacturing importance in the county.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is pleasantly situated and well watered. The Ware River originates in the western part of Worcester County, draining most of the country west of the Wachusett, and is supplied partly from ponds, which, with the great extent of open country drained by it, gives it a character of stability not gained by mountain streams. It enters Ware at the northeast corner, and goes out near the southwest, keeping near the eastern and southern boundary. This stream affords fine water-power, which has been fully utilized, and is the foundation of the town's material prosperity. The Swift River forms the western boundary. Three distinct ranges of hills traverse the town north and south, between which exist intervals of fair productive character, and each of which is watered by a brook of some consequence. Commencing at the east, these are named respectively Muddy, Flat, and Beaver Brooks, all affluents of the Ware River. The highest elevation in the town is Coy's Hill, on the eastern border, which attains an altitude of 500 feet above the river.

The soil of the town is of a somewhat inferior quality, save in the valleys, where it is capable of successful cultivation. Its appearance has frequently excited the comments of strangers and others, which the residents now repeat with some relish, since, in spite of adverse conditions, they have outstripped their neighbors in cultivated crops. Dr. Dwight passed through a corner of the town in 1810, and in his "Travels" makes the following remark:

"Ware borders on Belchertown, southeastward. Its soil is generally of a very inferior quality. A traveler formerly passing through this town observed that he thought the land was like self-righteousness, for the more he had of it the poorer he would be."

* Deceased.

Some ingenious rhymster has also produced the following stanza in regard to the town:

" Dame Nature once, when making land,
Had refuse left of stone and sand.
She viewed it well, and threw it down
Between Coy's Hill and Belchertown,
And says, 'You patry stuff, lie there,
And make a town and call it Ware!'"

RAILROADS.

The Ware River Railroad, now under lease to the Boston and Albany Railroad for the term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years, traverses the town diagonally, following the course of Ware River. The company was incorporated May 24, 1851, and the section was built from Palmer to Gilbertville (Hardwick) in 1870 at a cost of $250,000, and at an expense to the town of Ware of $50,000. The original company becoming embarrassed, a new corporation was formed in June, 1873, retaining the name. The road is fifty-two miles long, and has a station at Ware village.

NEWSPAPERS.

The Village Gazette was the first newspaper started in Ware. The first number was issued July 7, 1847, by Hemenway & Fisk, and was neutral in politics. On March 15, 1848, Mr. Fisk disposed of his interest to Mr. Hemenway, but continued its editor until Jan. 1, 1849. During the same month Mr. Hemenway sold out the establishment to Mandell & Hathaway, who continued it, with an alteration of its title to The Ware Gazette, until the summer of 1850, when the subscription list was purchased by J. F. Downing. Mr. Downing founded upon this list the Ware American, and by the aid of an association of gentlemen was enabled to enlarge his paper, and to continue its issue until the following autumn, when he disposed of his list to the proprietors of the Springfield Republican.

The Ware Offering, a monthly publication, designed for factory operatives, was started in January, 1848, by S. F. Pepper, but only reached three or four numbers. The Ware Weekly Courier was commenced Jan. 1, 1848, by C. H. & W. F. Brown. The paper was a sort of reprint of the Worcester Ægis, having a Ware heading and special local items. But three numbers were published. Two newspapers are now distributed in the town, made up on the same plan as the Ægis, and are entitled the Ware Standard and Ware Gazette. The former is issued by the Palmer Journal, of which it is a partial reprint, and is under the local management of Marvin L. Snow; the latter is a similar offshoot from the Barre Gazette, and is locally represented by R. L. Hathaway. Each has a Ware heading, and contains Ware local items.

SETTLEMENT.

Two different versions of the circumstances that preceded and attended the first settlement of the town have been given:

"The story in Barber's 'Historical Collections of Massachusetts' is, that the principal part of Ware was a tract of 10,000 acres, granted to the soldiers in the Narragansett war,—that they viewed the lands as of little value, and afterward sold them to John Read, Esq., of Boston, for two coppers per acre.* The true history of the 10,000 acre tract is this. The first settlements in the western part of Massachusetts were made at Springfield, in 1636, which in process of time embraced Suffield, Enfield, and Somers within its bounds. Those towns, as well as Woodstock, were settled from Massachusetts, and were under her jurisdiction. The charter of Connecticut, granted by Robert, earl of Warwick, in the reign of King Charles, in 1631, conveyed 'all that part of New England, in America, which lies and extends itself from a river there called the Narragansett River, the space of forty leagues upon a straight line near the sea-shore towards the southwest, west and by south or west, as the coast lieth towards Virginia, all the breadth aforesaid, throughout the main lands there, from the Western Ocean to the South Sea.' When the line was run by Connecticut, it took in the towns above named. Massachusetts declined giving them up. A long controversy ensued, which lasted sixty-six years. In 1713 an agreement was made between the colonies that the line should be run according to the charter. Massachusetts should retain jurisdiction over the towns settled by her, and should grant as an equivalent as many acres of unimproved land to Connecticut.

* "There is a deed on record at Springfield, dated Sept. 10, 1740, from John Read to Thomas Read, of 'one full half right or share in a township lately granted by the Great and General Court of the Province to the officers and soldiers which was formerly in ye fight with the Indian Enemy at the falls on Connecticut River, commonly called the Falls Fight, which township lyeth near or adjoining to Deerfield, in ye county of Hampshire, of which fight my honored Father, Thomas Read, deceased, was then and there one of the soldiers.' The township here referred to is Bernardston, and the fight the battle at Turner's Falls, during Philip's war, in 1676. It may have been confounded with the tract in Ware owned by Mr. Read, who was a lawyer of some eminence in Boston, and owned other large tracts of land. Another deed is on record at Springfield, of 23,040 acres, on the southerly side of Deerfield, made by agents of the town of Boston to him. Templeton and Westminster were Narragansett towns."

"On running the line, it was found at Connecticut River to run ninety rods north of the northeast bounds of Suffield, and that Massachusetts had encroached upon Connecticut 107,793 acres. She made a grant of that quantity of land to Connecticut, which was accepted as an equivalent. This tract included Belchertown, Pelham, part of Enfield, and the 10,000 acres in Ware. The whole was sold soon after, in 1716, in sixteen shares, for the sum of £683, New England currency, which was a little more than a farthing per acre. The money went into the funds of Yale College.

"The towns of Suffield, Enfield, Somers, and Woodstock continued in Massachusetts till 1747, when they were taken into Connecticut.

"Among the purchasers of the equivalent lands were Gov. Belcher and John Read, Esq., of Boston, Nathan Gould, Esq., the deputy-governor of Connecticut, and Peter Burr, Esq., one of the assistant judges.

"The records of Springfield contain a deed of mortgage from John Read, Dec. 12, 1722, 'Of all that my Ten Thousand acres of land, being near Brookfield, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, being that two-sixteenth parts of the lands commonly called the Equivalent Lands, which in the late division of the Equivalent Lands fell to the Hon. Nathan Gould and Peter Burr, Esq., and to the said John Read.' It was known afterward as 'the Manor of Peace,' as being a peace-offering to Connecticut.

"The southeast corner of the Read tract was near where the barn of George Gould now stands; thence the line run due north to Hardwick line, passing west of Muddy Brook, and near George Osborn's Land; thence west to Swift River, and south by the river to Palmer, or the 'Elbows,' as it was then called, from the angles made by the branches of the Chicopee River. The south line was a continuation of the south line of Belchertown, bearing E. by N. This tract covered all the western portion of the town. The tract west of Swift River was called Cold Spring, and went into the hands of Gov. Belcher, and, when incorporated, was called Belchertown.

"The eastern part of the town was included in a purchase made of the Indian proprietors Dec. 27, 1686. 'John Magus, Lawrence Nassowanno, attorneys to Anogomok, Sachem of the tract of land called Wombemesisecock, James and Simon, sons and heirs of Black James, Sachem of the Nipmug country, for divers good causes and considerations, especially for and in consideration of the sum of twenty pounds current money of New England,' conveyed to Joshua Lamb, Nathaniel Paige, Andrew Gardner, Benjamin Gambin, Benjamin Tucker, John Curtis, Richard Draper, and Samuel Ruggles, of Roxbury, Mass., 'a certain tract or parcel of land, containing by estimation twelve miles long, north and south, and eight miles wide, east and west, situate, lying, and being near Quabaug, commonly known by the name of Wombemesisecock, being butted and bounded southerly upon the land that Joseph Dudley, Esq., lately purchased of the Indians, Easterly the southernmost corner upon a pond called Sasagookapaugh, and so by a brook that runneth into said Pond, and so up Northerly unto a place called Ueques, and so still northerly until it meets with a River called Nenameseck, and Westerly by the River until it comes against Quabog bounds, and joins unto their bounds, or however otherwise butted and bounded.'

"It would be difficult now to trace these lines, except the one formed by Ware River, which it appears was called by the Indians 'Nenameseck.' It appears from the proprietors' records, where the deed is recorded, that they claimed the land from Rutland, now Barre, on the north, to the Quabaug River, in Warren, covering Hardwick, parts of Ware, Palmer, and Brookfield, and that part of Warren north of the river. South of the Quabaug belonged to Brimfield. The same proprietors bought about the same time, of the Indians, the tract now forming the towns of Leicester and Spencer.

"The first attempts made to survey and lay out the lands was in 1727 at which time only two of the original proprietors were living, when they petitioned the Legislature to confirm the territory to them, which was refused. In 1728 a committee, one of whom was the Rev. Timothy Ruggles, of Rochester, son of one of the purchasers, and father of the afterward famous Brigadier Ruggles, was chosen to lay out a town six miles square within their claim; but it was not until 1732 that the Legislature confirmed to Joshua Lamb and others the tract of six miles square, then called Lambstown, and which was afterward incorporated as the town of Hardwick."

The southern part of the town, and all east of the Read manor, as far north as Brookfield line extends, was included in what was then called the "Elbows," for the facts relating to the grant and early settlement of which the reader is referred to the history of the town of Palmer, in this volume.

The most ancient document relating to the history of Ware is the following petition, dated in 1673, thirteen years before the Indian deed to the proprietors of Hardwick, which is copied from the original in the archives of the commonwealth; and with the grant, and the deed following it, the title of the territory of Ware village can be easily traced to the present proprietors:

"To the Honoured Governour, Deputie Governour, Magistrates, and Deputies now assembled and holding Generall Court in Boston.

"The humble petition of Richard Hollingsworth, of Salem, most humbly sheweth:

"That your humble petitioner's father came into this country about forty yeares since, and brought a great family with him, and a good estate. And being the first builder of vessells, being a ship-carpenter, was a great benefit to this country, and as great or greater than any one in the infancy of the country of a private man, as it is fully knowne, yett gained not himselfe an estate, but spent his own that he brought; and notwithstanding all his service and the largeness of his family, being twelve in number, he never had more granted him by the countie but fortie-one acres of upland, and not one acre of meadow, and the land lying soe remote from the towne of Salem it proved little worth to him or his, and none of his children have never had anything, but have lived by their labour with God's blessing; and your petitioner hath used maretan employment, and through many dangers and with much difficultie gotten a livelyhood for himselfe and his family, and, being brought very low by his loss by the Dutch taking all from him, is constrained to apply himselfe unto yourselves whom God hath sett as fathers of this Commonwealt.

"And doth most humbly beseech you seriously to consider the premises, and if it may stand with your good liking and charitie to grant unto him a competent parcell of land that he may sitt downe upon with his family, viz., his wife and six children, for he would leave the seas had he competence of land whereby, with his own industry and God's blessing, he might maintaine his family. And he shall take it as a great favour. And, as in duty bound, shall ever pray, &c."

"In answer to this petition, the Deputys Judge meet to graunt the petitioner five hundred acres of land where he can find it free from any former graunt, ye Honorable Magistrates consenting hereto.

"8, 11, 1673.

"Consented to by the Magistrates.

"WILLIAM TORREY, Chairman.

"EDWARD RAWSON, Sec'y."

"Hollingsworth never located the land granted by the General Court to him. His heirs afterward sold the grant to Samuel Prince, of Rochester. June 14, 1715, it appears by the records of the council, 'a plot of 500 acres was presented by Samuel Prince, lying on Ware River, surveyed by William Ward, being a grant of that quantity to Richard Hollingsworth in 1673.' It was ordered, that the plat be confirmed as Hollingsworth's grant, if that grant has not been laid out before."

"The plat and the order indorsed on the back of it cannot be found. Very few papers of that kind between 1710 and 1730 are among the archives of the commonwealth, and it is supposed they were destroyed when the State-House was burned in 1741.

"Tradition has always connected with this grant an obligation to maintain mills at the falls, but the records disclose no such condition. The following deed, copied from the Springfield Records, will throw light on the earliest conveyances:

"To all People unto whom this Present Deed of sale shall come, Jonas Clarke, of Boston, within the County of Suffolk in New England, Mazier, Sendeth Greeting.

"Know Ye, that I, the said Jonas Clarke, for and in consideration of the sum of Four hundred pounds to me in hand at and before the ensembling and delivery hereof well and truly Paid by Jabez Olmsted, of Brookfield in the County of Hampshire,* in New England aforesaid, Husbandman, the Rec^t whereof I do hereby acknowledge, have given, granted, bargained, sold, conveyed, and confirmed, and by these Presents do give, grant, bargain, sell, convey, and confirm unto the said Jabez Olmsted, his heirs and assigns forever, all that my certain tract or parcel of land situate, lying, and being within the Province of the Massachusetts bay, in the Road from Brookfield to Hadley, Containing by estimation five hundred acres, more or less, as the same is delineated and decyphered in a Plan thereof on file among the Records of the General Court or Assembly of this Province, which said land, upon Wednesday, twenty-fifth day of May, was allowed and confirmed as the Five hundred acres of land granted unto Richard Hollingsworth, Anno 1673, by the said General Court, and is the same land which the said Hollingsworth's heirs sold lately unto Samuel Prince, late of Rochester, Yeoman, who sold the same to Thomas Clarke, of Boston, aforesaid, Merchant, of whom I purchased the same land, together with all and singular the trees, woods, underwoods, profits, privileges, and appurtenances, to the said granted land belonging or in anywise appertaining, and the Reversion and remainders thereof." [Here follow the usual covenants of warranty.] "To Have and to Hold the said given and granted land and premises with the appurtenances, unto the said Jabez Olmsted, his heirs and assigns forever, to his and their only proper use, benefit and behoof from henceforth and forever.

"In witness whereof, I, the said Jonas Clarke, have hereunto set my hand and seal the second day of April, Anno Domini one thousand seven hundred and twenty-nine, and in the second year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, King over Great Britain, &c.

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of } JONAS CLARKE and seal.
Moses Rice. Benjamin Rolfe.

"Received the day and year above written, off the within-named Jabez Olmsted, the sum of four hundred pounds, being the consideration-money within expressed.

"JONAS CLARKE.

"SUFFOLK, ss. Boston, April 2, 1729. The above-named Jonas Clarke personally appearing, acknowledged the above-written instrument to be his act and Deed.

"Before me, SAMUEL SEWALL, Just. Peace.

"Received April 24, 1732, and recorded from the Original."

"The southeast corner of this tract was near the north line of Hon. Joseph Cummings' farm, on the side-hill, above J. H. Cummings'. Thence the line ran north, taking in the lower falls, and extending to the farm now owned by Mrs. Miner. Thence it ran west to the Read manor, and south, on its east line, to the southwest corner on the plain west of Muddy Brook, between land of John Gould, and the farm formerly owned by Deacon Enos Davis, covering nearly the whole territory of what is now this village."

"Upon this tract the first settlements in the town were made. Capt. Jabez Olmstead came from Brookfield probably in 1729, and built mills upon the falls. He erected a house east of the Bank. The well now used for the hotel next the Bank was dug for his house, which afterward was a tavern. It was a large two-story house, called 'the Great House,' and was standing when the first movements were made to erect factories here in 1813. Alpheus Demond occupied it for a year or more, and it stood till 1821.

"Jacob Cummings came very soon after, from Killingly, Conn., and was one of the most influential men in the establishment of a Church and Society. He located upon the farm now owned by Jonah Beaman, and owned that and the one owned by his great-great-grandson, Joseph A. Cummings. This tract was first laid out to Stewart Southgate, clerk of the proprietors of the Elbows.

"What is now the southeast corner of the town was first settled by Isaac Magoon. He and his son Isaac, Jr., owned the farms now owned by George Gould, George C. Boyle, and Josephus Lamberton,—about 700 acres. These lands then belonged to the proprietors of the Elbows, now Palmer. Their grant covered all the lands not included in the 10,000 acres and the 500 acres, except 1443 acres in the northeast corner of the town, and some small portions since added to this town from Brookfield.

"The first settlers on this tract were what would be called in these days squatters. Judah Marsh came from Hatfield or Hadley about 1730, and settled near Marsh's mills. He married a daughter of Capt. Jabez Olmstead, and his descendants now occupy some portions of the land granted to him and his brothers. The petition and grant may interest the descendants. They are copied from the originals in the Secretary's office at Boston:

"To his Excellency Jonathan Belcher, Esq., Captain-General and Commander-in-chief of His Majesty's Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, &c., The Honorable His Majesty's Council and House of Representatives in General Court assembled at Boston, Oct. 3, 1733.

"The Petition of us, the subscribers, Humbly sheweth, That your Petitioners are now actually dwelling on a tract of the unappropriated lands of this Province, in the county of Hampshire, bounded south partly by that tract of land called the Elbows and partly by Brookfield township, East by Ware River, North by land lately granted to Col. Lamb and Co., and west by that part of the Equivalent lands belonging to John Read, of Boston, Esq., containing fourteen hundred and forty-three acres, as per a plat of said land herewith presented more particularly appears, and on said tract of lands we have lived, some of us, three years, where we have spent the most of that little substance we have; and we assure your Honours it was not the extraordinary goodness or quality of the lands that induced us to go upon it, for a considerable part of said tract is Ledges of Rocks and very Rocky, so as to render it unprofitable and almost useless (as those that are acquainted with it can Testifie), but that which induced us to settle on it was our necessity; our principle dependence for the support of ourselves is husbandry, and we had not a foot of land to imploy ourselves and families upon, were exposed to idleness and pinching want, and being then unsensible how highly the court resented such a way of settling, and apprehending that the principle thing insisted on was that there should be no trading or stock-jobbing, but an actual settlement and improvement in husbandry by the grantees themselves, with which we were ready to comply.

"Wherefore, being thus unhappily intangled on said Land, with great submission we most humbly move that this great and Honorable Assembly would condescend to exercise their charity and Pitty towards us in granting us (out of said land, including the spots we have already begun on) so much Land as may be a competency for us to improve for a livelyhood for ourselves and children; we have no tho't of any other, but with submission to spend the remainder of our lives and substances on the spot, are content and ready to submit to any injunctions or Limitations within our reach, this Great and Honorable Court shall think meet to lay upon us, who, as in Duty bound, shall ever pray.

his

"JOHN X CLEMENS.
mark.

"THOMAS MARSH.
"WILLIAM CLEMENS.

his

"JONATHAN X ROOD.
mark.

"JUDAH MARSH.

† It appears by the Palmer records that 100 acres adjoining Jabez Olmstead's farm was granted to his eldest son.

* Worcester County was not established till 1731.

"In the House of Representatives, Oct. 29, 1733. Read and ordered that the prayer of the Petition as particularly set forth in the vote on the plat of the lands hereto annexed.

"Sent up for concurrence,

"J. QUINCY, Speaker.

"In Council, Oct. 29, 1733. Non-concurred, and ordered that a committee be appointed to view the lands and report.

"The House non-concurred in this vote, and the petition was not called up again until 1737."

"Here follow the plat of the survey, with the oaths administered by Timothy Dwight, Esq., of Belchertown, to Nathaniel Dwight, the surveyor, and to William Clements and Jonathan Rood, the chain-men.

"In the House of Representatives, Jan. 3, 1737.

"Read and ordered that the petition be revived, and that the plat be accepted, and that the lands therein delineated and described be and hereby are confirmed to the said Thomas Marsh, William Clements, John Clements, Jonathan Rood, Judah Marsh, and Samuel Marsh, their heirs and assigns respectively, provided each of the grantees do within the space of five years from this date have six acres of the granted premises brought to English grass, or broken up by plowing, and each of them have a good dwelling-house thereon of eighteen feet square, and seven feet stud at the least, and each a family dwelling therein that they actually bring to the settlement of said Lands by themselves, or their children as above laid; provided, also, the plat exceeds not the quantity of fourteen hundred and forty-three acres, and does not interfere with any former grant, and also that the grantees do, within twelve months, pay to the Province Treasury five pounds each for the use of this province.

"Sent up for concurrence,

"J. QUINCY, Speaker.

"In Council, Jan. 4, 1737. Read and concurred.

"SIMON FROST, Deputy Sec'y.

"Consented to. J. BELCHER."

"It appears to have been the custom of the Indians to burn over the territory of Ware, to aid them in securing game. The practice has destroyed the forests, to a great extent, and doubtless injured the soil. Brookfield was settled as early as 1673, and the inhabitants used these lands for pasturing, and continued the practice of burning to improve the feed. Brookfield pastures was their common name. So bare of timber was the country that the early settlers of Warren, on coming to the top of Coy's hill, could discern a stray beast anywhere in this whole valley.

"The town does not appear to have been settled very rapidly. The soil was poor, and we cannot appreciate the hardships the early settlers encountered. In 1742, when, by the aid of Mr. Read, they petitioned to be incorporated as a town, it seems there were but thirty-three families in the town.

"The Read Manor was the first located in 1713.

"The Hollingsworth grant, taking in the tract now occupied by the village and the water-power, 1715. The Elbow tract was laid out in 1732. And the Marsh and Clements grant in 1733."

The petition of the settlers to be incorporated as a town, above referred to, was as follows:

"To his Excellency William Shirley, Esq., Captain General and Governour in Chief, the honorable the Council and Representatives in General Court assembled 26th May, 1742. The petition of Thomas Marsh and others, to the number of thirty-three house-holders, about and between Ware River and Swift River, near Brookfield, humbly Sheweth: That your Petitioners are settled on a tract of land bounded, beginning at the Southwest Corner of the ten thousand acres of Equivalent land at Swift River, thence running due east to Brookfield Bounds, thence on Brookfield to Ware River, thence on Ware River to Hardwick, thence on Hardwick to the ten thousand acres of Equivalent lands aforesaid, and thence on the Bounds of the said ten thousand acres, including the same unto the first-mentioned Boundings. They dwell at a great distance from any place of public worship, most of them six or seven miles, and therefore cannot enjoy that privilege in their present condition, but as their Hearts are sincerely desirous of the Public Worship of God, they persuade themselves they shall be able cheerfully to bear the Charge that will attend it. But as some of them belong to the town at the Elbows, some to Brookfield, and the rest of them live on farms of the Province Grants, they cannot properly and lawfully Proceed to erect and maintain the Public Worship of God among them without the aid of this Court, and therefore Pray this honorable Court, by a suitable Committee of this Court, to inquire into their state and circumstances, and make them a separate and distinct Township or Parish, and your Petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray, &c.

"JOHN READ, for the petitioners,

"JABEZ OLMSTEAD.	PAUL THURSTON.	JOSEPH MARKS, SEN.
JERM. OLMSTEAD.	EDM'D. AYRES.	JOSEPH MARKS.
ISRAEL OLMSTEAD.	ISAAC MAGOON, JUN.	JOSEPH BROOKS.
JACOB CUMMINGS, JUN.	WM. PATTERSON.	BENJ. SHIPLE.
NAHUM DAVIS.	JOSEPH SIMONS.	JOHN ANDERSON.
JAMES CUMMINGS.	JOB CORLEY.	THO'S. CHAPIN.
JOS. MARSH.	SAM'L MARSH.	DANIEL THURSTON.
RICH'D ROGERS.	JUDAH MARSH.	ISAAC MAGOON.
JACOB CUMMINGS.	EM'UM MARSH.	JOHN POST.
SAM'L ALLEN.	THOMAS MARSH.	SAM'L DAVIS.

"In the House of Representatives, June 2, 1742. Read and ordered that Capt. Partridge and Capt. Converse, with such as the honorable Board shall join, be a Committee to view the State and Circumstances of the Petitioners. They giving seasonable Notice to the Inhabitants or Proprietors of Brookfield and the Elbows (so called), and the Inhabitants of Western, who may be affected thereby, that they may be present at the meeting of said Committee if they see Cause. The Committee to report as soon as may be what they judge proper for the Court to do in answer to this Petition. Sent up for concurrence. T. Cushing, Spk'r. In Council June 8, 1742. Read and Concurred, and Joseph Wilder, Esq., is joined in the affair.

"J. WILLARD, SECT.

"Consented to, W. SHIRLEY.

"Copy examined by J. WILLARD, SECT.

"The Committee appointed on the Petition of Thomas Marsh and others, living near Ware River, in the County of Hampshire, have attended on said service, been upon the Spot, viewed the Lands Prayed for to be erected into a township, inquired into the Circumstances of the petitioners, and heard the objections of some of the Inhabitants of Kingstown,* and are of opinion that the Petitioners at present are not sufficient in order to erect a Town, with privileges, &c. But inasmuch as they Live at a weary great distance from any place of public worship, and meet with great difficulty thereby, we are further of opinion that the Petitioners living Northward of a Line Run due east† from the Southwest Corner of the land Belonging to John Read, Esq., to Western Line, be freed from all Taxes to any other place or Town during the Pleasure of the General Court, so that they may be able to Provide Preaching among themselves, which is submitted in the name and by order of the Committee.

"Dec. 4, 1742.

"JOSEPH WILDER.

"In council Read and ordered that this Report be accepted, and also that the Lands within the limits above mentioned, and the Inhabitants thereon, be erected into a Precinct, and that the said Inhabitants have the Powers and Privileges which other Precincts do, or by Law ought to enjoy, and that they be and hereby are obliged to maintain the Public worship of God among them in the Support of a learned orthodox minister. Sent down for Concurrence.

"J. WILLARD, SECT.

"In the house of Representatives, Dec. 7, 1742. Read and Concurred.

"Attest, ROLAND COTTON, CLERK, Dom. Rep.

"Consented to, W. SHIRLEY.

"Copy examined per J. WILLARD, SECT.

"The following deed from Mr. Read will show that he took some interest in establishing religious institutions here:

"To all People to whom this writing shall come, I, John Read, of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, Send Greeting. Know Ye, that for the founding and Indowment of a Parish Church on the Ten Thousand acres of Equivalent lands, lying on the East side of Swift River, upon the Road from Brookfield to Hadley, and now called the manor of Peace, I do hereby give, grant, convey, and confirm unto Jabez Olmstead, Gent., and Isaac Magoon, Yeoman, living near the said manor, and William Blackmer, John Davis, and Benjamin Lull, of the said manor, Yeomen, the Sixth lot of land from the North of the fourth Tier of lots from the East in the manor of Peace, Extending South on a four-rod highway a hundred rod wide, and from thence West and by South half a mile long. Also, part of the fifth lot near against the middle of that extending west and by south on the Main road twenty rod wide, and from thence North twenty-four rod long, with the appurtenances. To Have and to Hold the Sixth lot and part of the fifth lot aforesaid, with the appurtenances to them, the said Jabez Olmstead, Isaac Magoon, William Blackmer, John Davis, and Benjamin Lull, and their heirs forever, in special Trust and confidence for the only uses, intents, and purposes hereafter exprest, viz., for the use of the first minister of God's Holy word and Sacraments, who shall be freely chosen by the Inhabitants, freeholders of the said manor, and such others as the laws of the Government shall join in one Parish with them, or by the major part of them, and thereupon be lawfully Instituted and Ordained to that holy office there, and such his successors forever, in pure and perpetual Almes, and for these special purposes, viz., the three acres, part of the fifth lot aforesaid, for the founding and continuance of a Parish Church and Christian Burying-place forever: and the Sixth lot for a Glebe thereunto annexed for the improvement of such Minister and his Successors at their discretion towards their maintenance and support forever. In witness whereof, I hereunto put my hand and seal this nineteenth day of September, Anno Dom. seventeen hundred and forty-eight.

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of }
"JOSEPH AYRES, LEMUEL BLACKMER. } "JNO. READ, and Seal

"Hampshire, ss. At an Inferior Court of Common pleas, held at Northampton by adjournment on the first Tuesday of March, Anno Dom. 1757. Then Lemuel Blackmer, one of the Witnesses to ye within written Instrument, appearing, made solemn Oath that he saw John Read, Esq., now deceased, in his lifetime, sign, seal, and Execute the within instrument as his act and deed; that he signed as a Witness to the same, and saw Joseph Ayres sign as a Witness also, at ye same time.

"Attest, J. WILLIAMS, CLERK.

"Rec'd March 24th, 1757, and Recorded from the Original.

"EDW'D PYNCHON, REG'R."

"The warrant for the first meeting of the precinct was issued Feb. 18, 1742-43, by William Pynchon, Esq., of Springfield. It will be remembered that the change from the old style to the new was not recognized in this country until 1752. Previous to which the year commenced on the 25th of March, and the dates upon our records, between the 1st of January and that time are double. The first meeting was March 15, 1742-43, at the house of Jabez Olmstead, near where the

* Now Palmer."

† The south line of the Equivalent ran east by north. The strip between these lines was called "The Garter."

Bank now is, where they met for some years. Jacob Cummings was the Moderator of the first meeting, and he with Edward Ayres and Joseph Simons were chosen Precinct Committee, John Post, clerk. The object of this meeting, after choosing Precinct officers, was to raise money to defray the expenses of the act of incorporation, and for preaching the Gospel. It was voted to raise ten pounds and six shillings, old tenor, to pay the charge of the committee, surveyor, and chainmen, and to raise forty pounds, old tenor, to hire preaching with. In consequence of the depreciation of the currency at that time, two shillings and eightpence, sterling, was the value of twenty shillings, old tenor."

The measures adopted by the precinct for the establishment of religious worship, or for the regulation of parish affairs, are considered in the "Religious History" of the town.

THE FIRST SETTLERS.

"Capt. Jabez Olmstead is supposed to have come from Brookfield, and to have made the first permanent settlement in 1729. Of his former history but little can be learned. He must have been a man of property, as he paid £400 for the tract he purchased here, as appears by the deed. He is described as 'of Brookfield, in the county of Hampshire.' When that town was incorporated, in 1718, it was 'agreed the said town to lye to the county of Hampshire,' where it continued to belong till Worcester county was established, in 1731. Tradition represents Capt. Olmstead to have been a man of great shrewdness and energy, and that Indian blood ran in his veins. He was a mighty hunter, and is said to have been an officer in the expedition against Louisbourg, upon the island of Cape Breton, in 1745. The following anecdote is related of him. On the return of the army to Boston from Louisbourg, he was invited with the officers to dine with Governor Shirley. The pudding he found to be too hot, and taking it from his mouth, and laying it upon the side of his plate, he said he would keep it to light his pipe with.

"He had two sons, Israel and Jeremiah. To the oldest 100 acres of the Elbow tract was granted, adjoining his farm. They both married and had children. He had one daughter, Hannah, who married Judah Marsh. He does not appear to have taken a very active part in town affairs.

"John Post, the first precinct clerk, was a relative of Olmstead, and lived upon the Lothrop farm, which was part of Olmstead's purchase. His wife's death is recorded March 20, 1745.

"Isaac Magoon came from Ireland with the colony that settled in Palmer in 1727. The farm allotted to him by the committee of the legislature was at the southeast corner of the Read Manor. He built where Christopher Boyle now lives. Isaac, Jr., lived where Josephus Lamberton now lives. They owned a large tract—about 700 acres—in the strip of land between the south line of the manor and the south line of the town. Isaac Magoon, Jr., afterward bought of Capt. Olmstead's heirs the mills and the tract of land in the village, about 600 acres. He had two sons, Alexander, who lived at the mills, and Isaac, who lived where Christopher Boyle now lives. Isaac married Lucretia, daughter of John Downing, and had thirteen children. One son, Dr. Isaac Magoon, went to Michigan. One daughter married Eliphalet Marsh. Allen Grover's first wife was another daughter. Alexander had two sons, Isaac, who died on the Red River, September, 1808, and Alexander, who died in Salem, N. Y. Isaac's son James married Mehitabel Ellis, a daughter of Ebenezer Gould, in 1810. There are no descendants left in town of a family as numerous as any other, probably, one hundred years ago, and possessing about 1400 acres of the best land in the town.

"Jacob Cummings came from Killingly, Conn., soon after the first settlements were made, and was the most prominent man in the precinct and town for many years. He was one of the first deacons in the church, acted as moderator of the first meeting of the parish, was one of the precinct committee, and when the town was incorporated in 1762, one of the first board of selectmen and town treasurer. He bought—probably of Stewart Southgate—the farm now owned by Josiah Beaman, and the one owned by his great-great-grandson, Joseph A. Cummings. He had five sons, Jacob, Benjamin, Abraham, Isaac, and Solomon. Jacob had no sons that lived to have a family. Abraham's daughter Hannah married Thomas McClintock, the father of Benjamin and Levas McClintock. Jerusha, another daughter, married Thomas Bacon, in 1780.

"Benjamin had three sons, Daniel, Simeon, and Joseph. Daniel died young. Simeon had two sons, Simeon and Nichols; the latter went into the State of New York. Simeon had four sons and one daughter, Lewis G., William, Simeon, and Nichols, and the wife of Daniel Dunbar (2d).

"Joseph married Temperance Nye, in 1775; had seven sons and four daughters. One son died young. Benjamin lived in North Brookfield. Simeon died in town. Braddish lives in Illinois, and Estes in Worcester. Jacob Cummings died Feb. 27, 1776, aged eighty-three. His posterity still live in the town. Benjamin, his son, died Dec. 14, 1803, aged eighty-seven. Joseph, son of Benjamin, died June 30, 1826, aged seventy-three.

John Davis came, as is supposed, from Oxford, before 1750, and settled where Samuel M. Lemmon afterward lived. He was chosen deacon when the church was formed in 1751, and was one of the first board of selectmen. He had four sons, Nathan, David, Josiah, and Abijah. Nathan married a daughter of Jonathan Rogers, who kept a tavern where Robert Tucker now lives. He had sons, Nathan, Elihu, Enos the deacon, Pliny, Rodney, and Leonard.

"Enos married Submit Bush, daughter of Solomon Bush, in 1797, and had sons, Rev. Emerson Davis, of Westfield, and Solomon B.

"William Brakenridge, who was the prominent man here for more than thirty years, one of the first board of selectmen, and the first representative to the Provincial Congress, and town clerk for eighteen years, came to this country from Ireland, in 1727, when four years of age, with his father James, a native of Scotland, who was one of the first settlers of the Elbow tract. There is in the Brakenridge family an ancient manuscript music-book, upon the fly-leaf of which is written, 'Mr. Jacobus Brakenridge, His Music Book, made and taught per me, Robt. Cairnes, at Glenreacoll, Sept. 1715.' Besides the scale and rudiments of music, it contains the date of his marriage, 1720, and the births of his children, giving the day, the hour, and the time in the moon, with other memoranda. On one page is written, 'We departed from Ireland, July 16, 1727, and my child died on the 19th of Aug.' Another son was born in November following, to whom the same name was given. His sons were James, who settled in Ware, afterward removed to Bennington, Vt., and went as minister to England; William, born Sept. 19, 1723, who settled in Ware in 1746; Francis and George, who remained in Palmer.

"William married Agnes Sinclair, who came with her parents in the same vessel with him from Ireland, and had four sons, William, James, George, and Francis. He took up about 1000 acres of land on the north part of the Elbow grant, built a house in the centre, where Francis Homer Brakenridge now lives, and planted his four sons around him. His education was imperfect, but his native good sense and sound judgment gave him a leading influence in the town.

"William married Thankful, a daughter of Judah Marsh; had two sons, William Sinclair, who is dead, and Judah Marsh, whose son, Joseph C., now lives where his father did.

"James married a daughter of William Coney, and had four sons, James, who is dead; Allender, Reuben Moss, and William, all deceased. William's son, James, still lives in town.

"George married Persis Jeslyn, of New Braintree, and had six sons.

"Francis married Lydia Pepper, and had one son, Francis, who is dead. His son, Francis Homer, is now living in town.

"William Brakenridge died Feb. 16, 1807, aged eighty-four.

"Judah Marsh came from Hatfield or Hadley, in 1730, and settled near the mills built by him, and afterward known as Marsh's Mills. Thomas, Ephraim, Samuel, and Joseph, who were in town in 1742, were probably his brothers. He married a daughter of Capt. Jabez Olmstead, and had sons, Elijah, Joel, Thomas, Jonathan, Judah, and a second Joel.

"Thomas had four sons, none of whom are in town. Jonathan had four sons, among whom were Jacob and Foster. Jacob's son, John P., living here. Dwight Foster, living here, son of Foster. Judah had five sons. James Sullivan is now living in town. Joel's son, Joel S., is now living in Springfield. Judah Marsh died May 7, 1801, aged eighty-nine.

"Samuel Sherman, one of the first board of selectmen, came from Rochester, and settled at first upon the farm now owned by Anson Bassett; he afterward lived south of Asa Brakenridge's. He married, for a second wife, Jerusha Davis, by whom he inherited the farm now owned by Samuel Morse. He had by his first wife two sons, Thomas and Prince, and by his second, Reuben, Samuel, and Ebenezer. Reuben is dead, but has a grandson, Thomas F., living in town.

"Ebenezer died in Ohio; had two daughters, who became the wives of Downing Gould and Edward Pope.

"Samuel Sherman died Feb. 5, 1811, aged eighty-eight.

"Deacon Thomas Jenkins lived where Charles Howe now lives. He was a deacon indeed it seems, for the mild and serious rebuke he gave to the son of a neighbor who incautiously said 'I row,' in his presence, was never forgotten. He was one of the delegates to the Provincial Congress with Capt. Brakenridge. He has no descendants in town.

"Deacon Maverick Smith lived where Andrew Harwood now lives. He has no descendants in town.

"Joseph Foster lived between the village and Joseph A. Cummings'. He had a family of eight children, and was a man of character and influence, and one of the first delegates to the Provincial Congress, in 1775. No descendants of his live in town.

"Samuel Dunsmore was a native of Ireland, and settled where Edwin Barlow now lives. His daughter Miriam married James Lamberton, and was the mother of Samuel D. Lamberton, of Brookfield, and of Rufus Thrasher's wife, both of whom are dead.

"James Lemmon came from Ireland when four years of age, and settled on the farm afterward owned by his grandson, Samuel Lemmon, in the southwest part of the town. His mother was a sister of James Brakenridge, who settled in Palmer. His son James lived where Miriam Lemmon afterward resided. He was the only Irishman, it seems, that settled upon the manor. They usually sought the low meadow-lands.

"John Downing came from Springfield, bought of Timothy Brown in 1752, and kept a tavern on the old road, west of Muddy brook, on land now owned by Wallace C. Sheldon. He had one son who was drowned June 10, 1771, while attempting to rescue Reuben Davis, who was also drowned. One daughter married Isaac Magoon, another David Gould.

"Deacon Daniel Gould came from Sharon in 1773, and settled on the Miner & Yale farm. He was the first representative elected under the Constitution, and had much to do with town business. He had sons, Daniel, Lewis, Aaron, and Seth. He died July 10, 1834.

"David and Ebenezer, his brothers, came soon after. David married Lovisa, daughter of John Downing, in 1780, and lived near where Joseph A. Cummings now lives. He has grandsons, George, John, and James, now living in town. His daughters became the wives of Thomas Sherman, Joel Rice, and William S. Brakenridge. He died August 22, 1817, aged sixty-seven.

"Ebenezer Gould, married Mille, daughter of William Coney, in 1782, and had sons, Leonard, who is dead, and Ebenezer, who lives in Illinois. Wm. O. Gould, his son, is the only descendant of the family in town.

"Deacon William Paige came from Hardwick in 1777, and lived where Stephen Bonney now lives, formerly occupied by Rev. Ezra Thayer. He had a son William, who died without issue, and eight daughters. One married Dr. Rufus King; one Benjamin Cummings; one Simeon Cummings; and one Azel Washburn. He died June 23, 1826.

"Phille Morse came from Sharon soon after the town was incorporated. He married a daughter of William Coney, and lived upon the farm now owned by his grandson Samuel. Another son, Braddish, died young. A daughter married Prince Andrews; one, Calvin Ward;* and the youngest, David Lewis.

"William Coney came from Sharon during the Revolution, and built his habitation among the rocks, as coneys are wont to do, and where his grandson, Thos. A., now lives. It was then in Brookfield; being colliers, they seem to have sought the wood rather than the land. His son, Capt. Oliver Coney, came earlier, and owned the farm where the widow of George Rich now lives. He died Dec. 13, 1830, aged eighty-one.

"Jeremiah Anderson was a native of Ireland, and came here soon after the Precinct was established, lived where Ebenezer Barlow afterward lived, in the N. E. corner of the town, and had a family of eleven children. His son William was born Aug. 18, 1749, and lived near the centre of the town.

"William's son, Amasa, was born November 6, 1776, and married Thankful Brakenridge in 1802. Nathaniel was born June 15, 1783, and married Salome Snell, in 1813, both of whom have descendants living in town. Samuel D. was another son, who inherited Samuel Dunsmore's farm for his name.

"Thomas Andrews was here quite early. John Aaron and Prince were his sons, and have descendants in town. Aaron married Betsey, daughter of Simeon Cummings. Prince married Clarissa Morse.

"James Lamberton was one of the original settlers in Palmer. He came from Ireland, and lived where Charles R. Shaw afterward did. He had sons, John, who was a bachelor, like his uncle John before him, James, Seth, and David. James married a daughter of Samuel Dunsmore for his first wife, and lived on the farm now occupied by B. McClintock. He afterward lived where Alfred and Gideon do, who are his sons by a second wife.

"Seth married Elizabeth Eddy, of Brookfield, and lived where his son Joseph recently did.

"Dr. Edward Demond came here from Reading, and was, probably, the first physician here. The record of the births of his children begins in 1735, but some of them were probably born before he came to this town. He lived where Geo. W. Wetherell recently did, and had sons, Edward, Thomas, Abraham, and Stephen, and five daughters. A daughter married Elijah, son of Judah Marsh, in 1759.

"William Bowdoin, Esq., came here in infancy, about 1762. He is supposed to have been a natural son of a brother of Governor Bowdoin, whose name he bore. He was raised in the family of Solomon Bush, near Marsh's Mills, received his education in the common schools, and, having a taste for reading and a tact for business, he acquired a character and influence no other man ever gained in this town. He was chosen town clerk in 1789, and held the office for twenty-two years in succession. He was again elected in 1830, and held the office until his death, Sept. 23, 1831. He represented the town eleven years in the Legislature, being the only one chosen from 1795 to 1812, and was a delegate to the convention for revising the constitution in 1820. In 1801 he was elected a justice of the peace, and did most of the business of that nature in this town for nearly thirty years. He wrote a very plain, legible hand, and the perfect state of the town records is owing very much to his care. He transcribed the records of the births, deaths, and marriages, by vote of the town, in 1789, which are very complete of some of the earlier families. He was twice married, and had fourteen children. His son, Hon. William Bowdoin, of South Hadley, became a member of the Senate from Hampshire County; James was a representative from New Braintree; John, from Ware; and Walter H., from Springfield.

"Jabez E. Bowdoin, a grandson, lives in town, and is the only descendant here."

TAVERNS.

It is probable that houses of public resort have been kept in the town since the earliest time.

The first regular tavern was kept by John Downing, on the old road west of Muddy Brook, on land now owned by Wallace C. Sheldon, as early as the year 1752. The first tavern kept in the southwest part of the town was by Timothy Babcock, about the year 1815. Another was kept near the same period at Ware Centre. In 1814, Alpheus Demond built the "old yellow tavern-house," next to Dr. Yale's drug-store, and it was kept as a public-house for many years. The Ware Hotel was built in 1825, and was a handsome structure for the period. It was kept for many years by various proprietors, and was destroyed by fire in December, 1864.

The Hampshire House was erected by Capt. Joseph Hartwell, at the close of the war of the Rebellion. It was first kept by Sawyer & Rodman, followed by P. C. Sawyer, George Osgood, Mills & Crosby, Mills & Barber, then the latter alone, and since April 1, 1872, by Reuben Snow.

The Delavan House, standing on the site of the Ware Hotel, has been kept by a number of persons. The present proprietor is E. N. Adams.

* Calvin Ward died a few years ago in St. Charles, Illinois.

STORES.

The inhabitants of the town traded at the towns of New Braintree and West Brookfield for a long time, and the establishment of regular home enterprises of a mercantile character was of a comparatively recent date. Small stores were first kept in the West Parish by different persons. Lot Dean probably had the first, about a mile west of the present village, prior to the year 1820. Eli Snow had one about the same period, near the church, at Ware Centre.

The principal stores of the town were established after the growth of Ware village began, in the year 1824. The first was kept by the Ware Manufacturing Company. It stood on the corner near Dr. Miner's drug-store. The same company built a brick store, now occupied by the counting-room of the Otis Company, and kept it as a store and counting-room for a long time. The first post-office was also kept there. Joel Rice & Co. succeeded in the proprietorship of this store, and George W. Porter became the proprietor of the one first erected. Mays & Freeman had a store about the same time, where Calvin Hitchcock now trades.

Some time after, Azon Maynor erected a store where Dr. Miner's drug-store is, and John L. Gallond traded soon after where Dr. Yale now has a drug-store.

There are now twenty stores in Ware village, besides two drug-stores. Most of these have sprung up since 1839, at which date the south side of Main Street, now occupied by a row of stores, was an open common. Those who have been longest in trade are Addison Sandford, since 1844, and Calvin Hitchcock, who came in the spring of 1858. They have also been the largest dealers in town. Joseph R. Lawton has been in the clothing trade for upward of twenty years.

PHYSICIANS.

There have been a large number of physicians who practiced in Ware. Dr. Edward Demond is mentioned in the town-records in 1760, and Shubal Winslow in 1776. Dr. Billings practiced in 1779. Dr. Elias Bolton came from Mendon about 1780. After him was Dr. Walker, who came from Windham, Scotland Parish, Conn. He lived near the old Durant place, and remained about six years. Dr. Lethridge is mentioned in the town-records in 1785, and Dr. Howe the year following. Dr. Rufus King came from Brookfield in 1789, and practiced for a great many years, dying in the town at an advanced age. His son Jonathan still lives in town.

Drs. Horace Goodrich and Anson Moody, natives of South Hadley and college classmates, both settled about 1826, and engaged in practice at first in partnership. Dr. Moody removed to North Haven afterward, and died there. Dr. Goodrich remained until about 1853, when he removed to East Windsor, Conn.

In 1843, Dr. Ebenezer C. Richardson came from Watertown, where his father was a physician, and established himself in Ware, and is now the oldest physician in the town.

Dr. David W. Miner studied with Dr. T. H. Brown, of Worthington, and Drs. J. M. Brewster and H. H. Child, of Pittsfield, and located in Ware in the year 1845. He practiced for a number of years with Dr. Goodrich, then succeeded him, and has been in regular practice since.

Dr. John Yale studied with Dr. Goodrich, and engaged in practice at New Hartford, his native place. He returned in 1846, and has been regularly in practice since.

LAWYERS.

The first lawyer of note in Ware was Homer Bartlett, who came from Williamstown in 1825, and remained until 1832, being also cashier of the bank. In 1832 he became the agent of the Hampshire Manufacturing Company, and continued for a number of years. In 1841 he removed to Lowell, and passed the closing years of his life in Boston, where he died recently at an advanced age.

Henry Starkweather came from Williamstown about 1828, and studied with his brother-in-law, Homer Bartlett. After his admission he practiced in partnership with Mr. Bartlett, and was also cashier of the bank. He removed to New York in 1834.

Hon. Reuben A. Chapman* removed from Monson to Ware in 1832, and after two years formed a copartnership with Hon. George Ashmun, of Springfield, in 1834, and removed to that city.

In 1831, Barlow Freeman settled in Ware, and remained until 1835, when he removed to Jacksonville, Ill., and soon after died there.

Francis P. Stebbins came from Brimfield in 1835, practiced about two years, and removed to Oswego, N. Y., where he died in 1845.

Samuel T. Spaulding came in 1846, and after practicing for a number of years removed in the year 1858 to Northampton. He was judge of Probate, and died recently while an incumbent of that office.

Arthur L. Devens, brother of the United States Attorney-General Chas. Devens, came from Northfield in 1846, and engaged in practice in Ware. He subsequently became agent for the Otis Company, and served in that capacity from 1852 to 1859. He closed his life in the city of Boston.

W. S. B. Hopkins came from Northampton about 1860, and engaged in practice in Ware. He served in the war of the Rebellion as colonel, and at the close of the war practiced law first at Greenfield, and since at Worcester.†

William P. Strickland came from Sandisfield about 1862, and removed to Northampton in 1865. He is now clerk of courts of Hampshire County.

The only attorneys now in practice in Ware are Franklin D. Richards, who came from Belchertown about 1862, and Henry C. Davis, a native of the town, who has been in practice for a number of years.

STAGE-ROUTES, ROADS, BRIDGES, AND POST-OFFICES.

When stages first passed through Ware from Brookfield to Northampton they passed along the southern border of the town, crossing the river near Gideon Lamberton's.

"No roads appear to have been laid out previous to the incorporation of the town. The inhabitants made use of such as nature had provided, with very small improvements. It appears that the road from Brookfield to Hadley passed through this town over the summit of Coy's hill (a high bridge between this town and Brookfield and Warren), down by the Coneys, and crossed the river at the old bridge place, nearly a mile above the village, passing down the west side of the pond near the village, crossing Muddy Brook at the present bridge between the parishes, then by the old Downing place, on Wallace C. Sheldon's land, and nearly by the present road to the Swift River bridge, and the old Babcock tavern. This was probably used in 1660, when the first settlements were made at Brookfield."

The road from Swift River to New Braintree was the important road, passing through the centre of the town, and over the hill by the old Durant place, crossing Muddy Brook at the present bridge, between the parishes, and passing north of the Lothrop farm. A portion of it has been discontinued.

The first bridge across the river in the village was nearly opposite the large stone factory. Timbers were laid across the rocks near the upper stone bridge for foot passengers, but no permanent bridge was erected there until after the factories were built. At that time the only road to Brookfield was over the Coney Hill. It cost $20 per ton for transportation of goods from Boston, and it was a hard week's work for a conveyance to go and return.

POST-OFFICES.

The first post-office was established in 1815, at the house now occupied by Daniel Griffin. Timothy Babcock was the first postmaster. In 1824 the office was removed to the village, and Joseph Cummings was appointed postmaster. He was succeeded by Joel Rice in 1832. In 1840, Lewis Babcock was appointed, and was succeeded by Ansel Phelps, Jr., in 1843. Addison Sandford was appointed in 1845, and filled the office for twenty-one years. John W. Cummings, the present incumbent, was appointed Feb. 15, 1866.

The first pound was built in 1762; was of stone, round in form, three rods in diameter, and stood near the meeting-house. Joseph Foster built it at a cost of £3 10s. In 1747, Isaac Magoon's barn served as a pound. The second pound was erected in 1788, by Abraham Joslyn, for £5 10s.; was 36 feet square, and stood on the site of the old one.

PROMINENT MEN.

Deacon Joseph Cummings was born in Ware, March 5, 1784, and always occupied the farm which was the possession of his great-grandfather, Jacob Cummings, one of the earliest settlers of the town, in 1730. Jacob Cummings was the most active man in the establishment of religious worship, the erection of a meeting-house, and the organization of a church, and was the first deacon of the church organized in 1751. Joseph Cummings, with only the advantages of the common schools, acquired a good education, and was employed as a teacher for many years, having taught seven winters in New Braintree, at wages much above the ordinary standard of those days. He was a skillful surveyor, and for many years did the most of that business as well as that of conveyancing in the town and vicinity. A man of excellent judgment, and modest and winning manners, he gained the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He was always the man for counsel. He represented the town in the Legislatures of 1816, 1817, and 1822, and in the constitutional convention of 1853. He was a member of the State Senate in 1831 and 1832. In 1835 he was elected a commissioner for Hampshire County, and held that office for eighteen years.

When quite young he united with the First Congregational Church, and was chosen a deacon in 1815, when thirty years of age. He held that office until the organization of the church at the village, in 1826, when he was elected first deacon, and stood as a pillar of that church until he was seventy. He died April 3, 1860, at the age of seventy-six.

Alpheus Demond was born in Paxton, Worcester Co., Mass., Aug. 15, 1779. In early life he was a successful merchant in Spencer. In April, 1813, in connection with Col. Thomas Denny, of Leicester, he located in Ware, and began the manufacturing enterprises that are elsewhere referred to. The death of his partner, Col. Denny, in December, 1814, and the close of the war with Great Britain arrested their manufacturing enterprise for a time; but when it was revived by other parties in 1821, Mr. Demond was employed to superintend much of the work, and was identified with the interests of the place until increase of years compelled him to retire from active business. He was the patriarch of the village, and a pioneer of manufacturing in that part of the State. He filled many town offices with great acceptance, and represented the town in the Legislatures of 1826 and 1833.

Soon after he came to Ware he united with the Congregational Church in the centre of the town, by profession, and became one of its active and efficient members. In 1826 he took a prominent part in the establishment of the Congregational Church, and was an active and earnest member until his death, Aug. 27, 1859, at the age of eighty. He left behind him a widow and seven children.

Hon. Orrin Sage was the youngest son of William and Bathsheba (Hollister) Sage, born in Middletown, Conn., Jan. 17, 1791. His mother died when he was seven months old. At the age of thirteen he went into the family of an older brother, a merchant in Middletown, and obtained his education in the common schools and in the store of his brother. In 1811 he commenced trade in the town of Blandford, Hampden Co., and remained there until 1848. He represented the town of Blandford in the Legislatures of 1831, '32, and '34, and was Senator from Hampden County in 1836-37. Mr. Sage removed to Ware in 1848, where he passed the remainder of a long, honorable, and useful life. He was president of the bank, and held the office until it became a national institution in 1865, and was a director and vice-president until his death. He united with the Congregational Church in Blandford in 1822, and took a leading part in the erection of a new church building, the support of the gospel, and in various benevolent objects. When he left Blandford he gave a fund of $1000 to the church, and afterward presented them a parsonage. He also presented the town of Ware a beautiful lot of 25 acres for a cemetery, in which his remains now rest. To Williams College he gave a scholarship of $1000, and more recently endowed the professorship of history and political economy with a fund of $30,000. To the town of Osage, the county-seat of Mitchell Co., Iowa, of which he was one of the founders, and which was named for him, he gave nearly 700 acres of land to establish a public library, and erected a handsome brick building for its use. His other donations and charitable enterprises have been numerous.

* See chapter on the Bar.

† See history of 31st Massachusetts Infantry.

He was twice married. One of his daughters is the wife of Hon. William Hyde, President of the Ware National Bank. Mr. Sage died at Ware, June 23, 1875, at the age of eighty-four. By his last will he made the following bequests: To the Congregational Society of Blandford, Mass., for ministerial fund, $5000; to the town of Ware for care of cemetery, $3000; to the East Congregational Society of Ware, for parsonage, $5000; to Foreign Missions, $10,000; to the American Home Missionary Society, $5000; to the American Missionary Association, $5000; to Hampton Institute, $1000; to Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, $1000; and to Williams College, $20,000, making his gifts to the college $51,000, the largest donor it has had.

Hon. George H. Gilbert came from North Andover, in the year 1841, and established himself in the manufacturing business in Ware, the particulars of which are elsewhere noticed. His business-life was remarkably successful. He was a man of strict integrity, self-reliance, and perseverance. He established the now flourishing village of Gilbertville, in the town of Hardwick. He was a devoted member of the Congregational Church, gave liberally and without ostentation to various benevolent enterprises, and served two terms in the State Senate, acting as chairman of the committee on manufactures. He died May 6, 1869, at the age of sixty-three years, leaving an ample fortune and a flourishing business.

Hon. Charles A. Stevens came to Ware from North Andover, Mass., with Mr. Gilbert, and has been successfully engaged in the manufacturing business. He was a member of Governor Bullock's council in 1866 and 1867, and a representative in the National Congress in 1875, being elected to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Alvah Crocker, of Fitchburg.

Joel Rice came very early from Spencer, and passed his life in Ware—a prominent business-man, and enjoying the confidence of the people to a remarkable extent.

Emerson Davis, D.D., was a son of Deacon Enos Davis, and a native of Ware. He graduated at Williams College in 1821, was a teacher in Westfield Academy, a tutor in Williams College, pastor of the church at Westfield for upward of thirty years, and a prominent member of the Massachusetts Board of Education. He received the degree of D.D. from Williams College, and was a trustee and vice-president of that institution for many years.

Hon. William Bowdoin, late of South Hadley, was a native of Ware, and a son of Wm. Bowdoin, Esq. He practiced the profession of the law for many years in South Hadley, and represented the county of Hampshire in the State Senate in 1840 and 1841. The honorary degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Williams College in 1832.

Hon. James Brakenridge was a son of Wm. Brakenridge, and was born in Ware. He afterward removed to Bennington, Vt., and went as minister to England. His grand-nephew, Wm. S. Brakenridge, was born in Ware, and has served two terms in the State Senate.

Rev. Loranus Crowell, also a native of the town, graduated at Middletown, Conn., in 1840, has been a presiding elder of the Methodist Church, and is now preaching at Lynn, Mass.

Other men of prominence have been Hon. William Hyde, the president of the Ware National Bank, who, besides filling various offices of responsibility in church and town, served in the State Senate in 1851; Hon. Francis De Witt, for one year a member of the State Senate, and Secretary of State for two years; and Lewis N. Gilbert, nephew of George H. Gilbert, who has served two years in the State Senate.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION.

Ware was incorporated as a town Nov. 25, 1761. The first warrant for a town-meeting was issued by Eleazar Porter, Esq., of Hadley, Feb. 23, 1762, and the meeting held March 9th. William Brakenridge was chosen clerk. He had been clerk of the precinct from 1757, and held the office until 1777. The first board of selectmen were Samuel Sherman, William Brakenridge, John Davis, Jacob Cummings, and Judah Marsh, who were also assessors; Jacob Cummings, treasurer. The first town-meetings were called in his Majesty's name, which continued till 1776. Then they were called "in the name of Massachusetts and the people," or "the government and the people of Massachusetts Bay, in New England," till the adoption of the State Constitution, in 1780, when the present style was adopted, "in the name of the commonwealth of Massachusetts."

The town derived its name from the river which passes through it, which bears the same name from the sources to its junction with the Chicopee, of which it is the middle and longest branch. It abounded with fish, the falls being a famous place for taking salmon. Weirs or wears were constructed to aid in taking them, and hence the name of Wear River, which was afterward spelled Ware.

The Indian name of the river, "Nenameseck," probably means a fishing-basket, or a place where fish were taken in baskets, being compounded of "Nama," a fish, and "Manseck," a basket.

The following persons have filled the principal town and precinct offices since the incorporation, and served as representatives from Ware:

COMMITTEE OF THE PRECINCT.

- 1743.—Jacob Cummings, Edward Ayres, and Joseph Simonds.
- 1744.—Jabez Onstead, Jacob Cummings, Edward Ayres.
- 1745.—Thomas Marsh, Jacob Cummings, Wm. Blackmer.
- 1746.—Jacob Cummings, Samuel Huggins, Wm. Blackmer.
- 1747.—Jacob Cummings, Judah Marsh, Moses Allen.
- 1749.—John Davis, Jacob Cummings, Joseph Simonds.
- 1750.—Jacob Cummings, Timothy Brown, John Davis, Joseph Scott, and Edward Demond.
- 1751.—John Davis, John Cummings, Timothy Brown, Joseph Scott, and Joseph Wright.
- 1752.—Jacob Cummings, Bamiam Lull, Judah Marsh, Samuel Davis, John Davis.
- 1753.—Wm. Blackmer, Wm. Brakenridge, John Downeing.
- 1754.—Jacob Cummings, Edward Demond, Israel Onstead.
- 1755-56.—Samuel S. Hermon, Wm. Brakenridge, Jacob Cummings.
- 1757-58.—Wm. Brakenridge, Samuel Sherman, Jonathan Rogers.
- 1759.—Wm. Brakenridge, Edward Ayres, Joseph Foster.
- 1760.—Jacob Cummings, John Davis, John Downing.
- 1761.—Jacob Cummings, Wm. Brakenridge, Samuel Sherman.

SELECTMEN.

- 1762.—Samuel Sherman, Wm. Brakenridge, John Davis, Jacob Cummings, Judah Marsh.
- 1763.—Wm. Brakenridge, Jacob Cummings, John Davis.
- 1764.—Wm. Brakenridge, Samuel Sherman, John Downing.
- 1765.—Samuel Sherman, Maverick Smith, Isaac Magoon.
- 1766.—Wm. Bell, Isaac Magoon, Abraham Cummings.
- 1768.—John Downing, Jonathan Rogers, Isaac Cumming.
- 1769.—Jonathan Rogers, Joseph Foster, Benjamin Cummings.

- 1770-71.—Benjamin Cummings, Samuel Blackmer, Samuel Dinsmore.
 1772.—Isaac Magoon, Samuel Dinsmore, Abraham Cummings.
 1773.—Samuel Dinsmore, Joseph Gray, Joseph Foster.
 1774.—Samuel Dinsmore, Benjamin Cummings, Joseph Foster.
 1775.—Joseph Foster, Maverick Smith, Samuel Dinsmore, James Lamon, Samuel Blackmer.
 1776.—Samuel Dinsmore, Joseph Foster, Benjamin Cummings, John Downing, James Lamon.
 1777.—Samuel Dinsmore, Joseph Foster, Maverick Smith, David Brown, Daniel Gould.
 1778.—Joseph Paterson, Alexander Magoon, Oliver Coney.
 1779.—Samuel Dinsmore, Oliver Coney, Alexander Magoon, Joseph Foster, James Lamon.
 1780.—Wm. Brakenridge, Abraham Cummings, John Bullen, Thomas Jenkins, Edmond Capon.
 1781.—Capt. Brakenridge, Lieut. Cummings, John Bullen, Deacon Jenkins, Lieut. Tuffs.
 1782.—Wm. Paige, Alexander Magoon, Seth Shaw, Jonathan Foster, John Bullen.
 1783.—Samuel Dinsmore, John Adams, Wm. Page, Jonathan Foster, Seth Shaw.
 1784.—Samuel Dinsmore, Capt. Brakenridge, John Adams, Lieut. Cummings, Wm. Paige.
 1785.—Capt. Brakenridge, Lieut. Quintin, John Adams, Samuel Dinsmore, Isaac Pepper.
 1786.—Capt. Brakenridge, Moses Brown, Isaac Pepper, Simeon Cummings, Daniel Gould.
 1787.—Capt. Brakenridge, Samuel Dinsmore, John Quintin, Daniel Gould, Jacob Pepper.
 1788-89.—Capt. Brakenridge, Samuel Dinsmore, John Quintin, Daniel Gould, Jacob Pepper.
 1790.—Samuel Dinsmore, John Quintin, David Brown, Wm. Brakenridge, Wm. Paige.
 1791.—Samuel Dinsmore, John Quintin, David Brown, William Paige, William Anderson.
 1792.—Samuel Dinsmore, John Quintin, David Brown, George Brakenridge, Simeon Cummings.
 1793.—David Brown, Simeon Cummings, Judah Marsh, Isaac Pepper, Wm. Paige.
 1794.—David Brown, Simeon Cummings, Isaac Pepper, Judah Marsh, George Brakenridge.
 1795.—Simeon Cummings, Judah Marsh, Daniel Gould, Isaac Pepper, David Brown.
 1796.—Daniel Gould, Isaac Pepper, Thomas Quintin, Joseph Cummings, Jonathan Marsh.
 1797.—Isaac Pepper, Jonathan Marsh, George Brakenridge, Joseph Cummings, Wm. Paige.
 1798.—George Thrasher, Isaac Magoon (2d), Joseph Cummings, Stephen Pepper, James Brakenridge.
 1799.—Jonathan Marsh, George Thrasher, Isaac Magoon (2d), George Brakenridge, Seth Lamberton.
 1800.—George Brakenridge, Isaac Magoon (2d), James Brakenridge, Isaac Pepper, David Brown.
 1801.—David Brown, Isaac Magoon (2d), Francis Brakenridge.
 1802.—Joseph Cummings, John Andrews, Francis Brakenridge, Samuel Brown, John Shaw.
 1803.—George Brakenridge, John Andrews, Samuel Brown, John Shaw (2d), Ebenezer Sherman.

- 1823.—Warner Brown, Aaron Gould, William S. Brakenridge, Horace Goodrich, Leonard Gould.
 1824.—Leonard Gould, Alpheus Demond, Warner Brown, William S. Brakenridge, Horace Goodrich.
 1825.—Alpheus Demond, Foster Marsh, Alexander Brakenridge, William Paige, Jr., John Pepper.
 1826.—Aaron Gould, Samuel Gould, Lee Sprague.
 1827.—Stephen Witherell, Benjamin Wilder, William Brakenridge.
 1828.—Benjamin Paige, Alfred Lamberton, Thomas Wilder, Samuel Phelps, Darius Eaton, Jr.
 1829.—William Bowdoin, Thomas Wilder, William S. Brakenridge, Darius Eaton, William Lazell.
 1830.—Thomas Wilder, Thomas Snell, Jr., Joel Rice, Darius Eaton, Reuben Lazell.
 1831.—Aaron Gould, Joel Rice, Thomas Snell, Jr., Royal Bosworth, Reuben Lazell.
 1832.—Joseph Cummings, Thomas Snell, Royal Bosworth, Alexander Brakenridge, Edmund Freeman.
 1833.—Aaron Gould, Alpheus Demond, Alexander Brakenridge, Edmund Freeman, Alfred Lamberton.
 1834.—Foster Marsh, Aaron Gould, Jason Gorham.
 1835.—Jason Gorham, Judah M. Brakenridge, Enos Davis.
 1836.—Joseph Cummings, Thomas Snell, Joel Rice.
 1837.—Alexander Brakenridge, Wm. Woolworth, Ebenezer Gould.
 1838.—Horace Bartlett, Jesse B. Wetherbee, Alpheus Demond.
 1839.—Jesse B. Wetherbee, Jason Gorham, Gideon Lamberton.
 1840.—Joseph Hartwell, Avery Clark, John Bowdoin.
 1841.—Levans McClintock, Lewis G. Cummings, Haskell Cummings.
 1842.—Thomas Snell, Darius Eaton, Freeman Pepper, Jr.
 1843.—Freeman Pepper, Jr.,* Franklin Brakenridge, John Bowdoin.
 1844.—John Bowdoin, John Tolman, Darius Eaton.
 1845.—Joseph Eaton, Thomas Snell, John Gardner.
 1846.—Wm. Hyde, John Gardner, Joseph Hartwell.
 1847.—Wm. Hyde, Chas. A. Stevens, Ebenezer Gould.
 1848.—Wm. Hyde, Chas. A. Stevens, Seth Gould.
 1849.—Seth Pierce, Elbridge G. White, Lewis Demond.
 1850.—Lewis Demond, Seth Pierce, Ambrose Blair.
 1851.—Samuel T. Spalding, Robert Tucker, Harrison French.
 1852.—Samuel T. Spalding, Robert Tucker, Addison Sandford.
 1853.—Addison Sandford, Geo. H. Gilbert, Haskell Cummings.
 1854.—A. Sandford, Lorenzo Demond, Wm. S. Bassett.
 1855.—Wm. S. Brakenridge, Joseph Hartwell, Ward Davis, Jr.
 1856.—Charles A. Stevens, Addison Sandford, Nathaniel H. Anderson.
 1857.—Otis Lane, Lorenzo Demond, N. H. Anderson.
 1858.—Otis Lane, Ambrose Blair, George Rich.
 1859.—Otis Lane, George Rich, Samuel H. Phelps.
 1860.—S. H. Phelps, G. H. Gilbert, Lucas Gibbs.
 1861.—S. H. Phelps, Lucas Gibbs, Wm. A. Root.
 1862.—Otis Lane, W. A. Root, J. H. Pepper.
 1863.—Otis Lane, John H. Pepper, Darius Eaton.
 1864.—Otis Lane, Wm. E. Bassett, Andrew J. Harwood.
 1865.—Barnabas Snow, David P. Billings, Otis Lane.
 1866.—Otis Lane, Chas. A. Stevens, A. J. Harwood.
 1867.—Otis Lane, Charles A. Stevens, Andrew J. Harwood.
 1868-71.—S. H. Phelps, Robert, Olney Goff, Od, Francis Blair, J. Tyler Stevens, hon, William B. Lawton, erson, Patrick McMahon, ahon, Calvin Hitchcock, er, James W. Brakenridge.

TOWN CLERKS.

ings, 1744; John Davis, 1748; Timothy William Brakenridge, 1757; Maverick 2; Abraham Cummings, 1777; David d Brown, 1786; William Paige, 1787; 1811; Joel Rice, 1825; Leonard Gould, 29; William Bowdoin,† 1830; Leonard Gould, 1831; George W. Porter, 1832; Jason Gorham, 1837; Lewis Demond, 1839; Francis De Witt, 1850; William H. Willard, 1853; E. L. Brainerd, 1855; R. L. Hathaway, 1856 (September 27th); Stephen B. Witherell, 1858 (November 4th); Francis De Witt, 1861; S. B. Witherell, 1863; George K. Cutler, 1866; Lewis P. Edwards, 1868; Hubert M. Coney, 1872; Almer F. Richardson, 1876.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM WARE.‡

William Brakenridge, Joseph Foster, and Thomas Jenkins to Provincial Congress in 1775.

Under the Constitution.—Daniel Gould, 1787; Isaac Pepper, 1788, 1795; William Bowdoin, 1798, 1801-4, 1806-12; Enos Davis, 1813-14; William Paige, Jr., 1815; Joseph Cummings, 1816-17, 1822; Aaron Gould, 1824-25; William Paige, Jr., Alpheus Demond, 1826; Aaron Gould, 1827-29; Samuel Phelps, 1829; Joel Rice,

* Died in office, and was succeeded by John Tolman.

† Died in office.

‡ In the years not named the town was not represented.

*How Charles E. Stevens son of How.
 Charles A. Stevens served in the State Senate in the years 1889. 1890.*

Morse.

- 1814.—William Bowdoin, Thomas Snell, Thomas Patrick, Calvin Morse, Amasa Anderson.
 1815.—Enos Davis, Jesse Lewis, Alpheus Demond, Calvin Morse, Thos. Patrick.
 1816.—Enos Davis, Alpheus Demond, Daniel Gould, Jr., Abner Lewis, Amasa Anderson.
 1817.—Benjamin Paige, Alpheus Demond, Amasa Anderson, Abner Lewis, John Gardner.
 1818.—Enos Davis, Richard Lewis, Aaron Gould, Joseph Cummings, Jr., Benjamin Paige.
 1819.—Joseph Cummings, Jr., Aaron Gould, William Coney, Alpheus Demond, William Paige, Jr.
 1820.—William Bowdoin, John Brakenridge, Benjamin Paige, Foster Marsh, Simeon Cummings.
 1821.—Foster Marsh, John Brakenridge, Joel Rice.
 1822.—Foster Marsh, John Brakenridge, Warner Brown.

1830; Aaron Gough, Joel Rice, 1831; Allender Brakenridge, Homer Bartlett, 1832; Alpheus Demond, Enos Davis, 1833; Calvin Morse, Benjamin Wilder, 1834; Thomas Wilder, John Osborne, Jr., 1835; Thomas Wilder, Reuben Lazell, 1836; Edmund Freeman, Reuben Lazell, 1837; Thomas Snell, Royal Bosworth, 1838; Thomas Snell, Jason Gorham, 1839; John Bowdoin, Nelson Palmer, 1840; Joel Rice, 1841; Ebenezer Gould, 1842; Horace Goodrich, 1843; Jonathan Harwood, 1844; Ansel Phelps, Jr., 1845; Samuel M. Lemmon, 1846; Avery Clark, 1847; Ira P. Gould, 1851; Harrison French, 1852; Charles A. Stevens, 1853; William E. Bassett, 1854; Freeman W. Dickinson, 1855; Samuel H. Phelps, 1856; George H. Gilbert, 1857; Benjamin Davis, Jr., 1858; Lewis Demond, 1860; Samuel Morse, 1861; Joseph Hartwell, 1863; Luther Chapin, Jr., 1864; William E. Lewis 1866; Henry Bassett, 1868; Benjamin F. Angell, 1870; John W. Robinson, 1872; Henry C. Davis, 1874; Addison Sandford, 1876; Frederick N. Hosmer, 1879.

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

WARE VILLAGE,

situated on Ware River, is a thriving manufacturing place. It sprang up about the year 1824, when the manufacturing enterprises of the town first began to assume importance, and has steadily increased. Prior to that time the business of the town had been principally transacted at the centre, and it was not until 1847 that the place for holding town-meetings was transferred to the village.

The latter comprises a population of about 3000, nearly three-fourths of the population of the town, and is regularly and uniformly laid out and lighted with gas. It contains two hotels, five churches, five factories, a large number of stores, and many handsome dwelling-houses, and is the place of residence of a large number of persons of wealth, refinement, and culture.

Several serious conflagrations have occurred in the village since its existence. The first of these was the burning of the large brick factory of the Otis Company in 1845. The block on the west side of Main Street, opposite the Hampshire House, was burned in 1848 or '49; the Ware Hotel in December, 1864. Sanford's store was burned in March, 1866 or '67. The town-hall and Unitarian Church Nov. 6, 1867, and the Baptist Church in 1860.

WARE CENTRE

is situated about two miles west of the village. Here the first meeting-house of the town was erected and the earliest meetings of the settlers held, and for many years the inhabitants "went up" there "to worship God." Flat Brook, coming down from the north, passes through the village, and its power has been utilized from the earliest day by various small industrial enterprises.

The hamlet contains a Congregational Church, a saw-mill, a shoe-factory, a blacksmith-shop, and a number of pleasant dwelling-houses. It was here that the celebrated "Snell's augers" were first made.

EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS.

The first action of the town upon the subject of schools, as appears by the records, was in January, 1757, when it was "Voted to David ye Peraish into two parts for a scool, and flat Brook to be ye deviding Line."

"Voted Joseph Scott to take care of the West part. Voted William Brackenridge to take care of the East Part."

At this time no money was raised for schools, nor does any appear to have been raised for any other purpose than for preaching until after the incorporation of the town in 1762. At the first town-meeting it was voted to divide the town into four quarters, by a line running east and west by the meeting-house, and by Flat Brook north and south. At the same meeting it was "Voted, to raise £12 for Skoling," and that "Eatch Quarter shall Skool out there part within the year or be forit."

The same sum was granted the year following and in 1766. In 1771 only £4 was raised; in 1772, £14; and in 1774, £15.

For several years thereafter no money was raised for schools. The town-meetings were mostly occupied in providing soldiers for the Revolutionary army, and in paying them and providing for their families.

In 1782, £20 were appropriated for schools, the districts remaining as formerly. In 1785 it was voted to divide the town into six districts, and the location of school-houses was then first determined as follows:

"One school-house to be near Mr. Joseph Chandler's house, one by the pound, one by Mr. James Lamon's, one by Phinehas Converse's, one by Moses Davis's, and one by John Gilmore's."

The year following £72 were raised to erect these houses.

In 1787, £36 more were raised, and, in 1791, £12 were raised to build a school-house in the middle of the town.

In 1794, £48 were granted for schools. This was during the ministry of the Rev. Reuben Moss, who did much to raise the character of the schools. For nearly twenty years not a teacher was employed from out of town, while all the neighboring towns sought teachers in Ware. Hon. Joseph Cummings taught seven winters in New Braintree, receiving $20 per month, being much more than was usually paid in those times. Another early teacher was Samuel Clerk, for whose benefit the following vote was passed in 1783:

"Voted, to allow Mr. Samuel Clerk an order for £1 17s. 6d. for his keeping school, and also Interest for Two orders from the time they became dew."

In 1797 the town voted to divide the school money into eight parts, £10 to each district. The appropriation for schools in that year was $266.67, and this amount was regularly increased at intervals, until in 1840 it had reached $1250. The appropriation in 1878 was $6800.

At the present time there are 19 schools in the town,—one high school, in which the higher branches of education are taught and preparation made for college, a high and grammar school, and grammar, intermediate, primary, mixed, and district schools. The number of pupils in attendance upon all the schools of the town on March 1, 1878, was 856, of whom 690 attended the village schools. The whole are under the control of a board of six, two of whom are chosen annually for three years.

RELIGIOUS.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

"Up to the time of the organization of the East Congregational Society, in 1826, there was but one religious society in town. All the business relating to the settlement and support of ministers was transacted in town-meeting. On May 5, 1743, the Precinct 'voted to hire Mr. Dickinson to preach among us until the forty pounds we granted is spent.' In March, 1744, sixty pounds were raised for the support of the gospel, and several candidates employed. In November, 1745, Mr. Henry Carey was invited to settle as their minister, but declined.

"Soon after the incorporation of the precinct efforts were made to build a house of worship, but they could not agree upon the spot. Nathaniel Dwight, of Belchertown, was employed to find the geographical centre of the town, which is a few rods north of the meeting-house now standing in the west parish. In 1748 it was voted 'to build a house 40 by 35, 18 feet posts, to pay twelve shillings, old tenor, for common laborers, eighteen shillings for team and cart.' But nothing efficient was done until September, 1750, when it was voted to build a house 30 by 25, 15 feet posts. 'Voted, to raise the sum of thirty pounds thirteen shillings and four pence, lawful money, to defray the charges of building and covering the meeting-house. £20 13s. 4d. to be paid in labor and covering and slitwork, provided that every freeholder will pay to the committee or collector the labor or materials his due proportion; that he shall be assessed upon suitable notice, and four pounds for to procure nails for the meeting-house. Voted, that labor shall be set at the value of eighteen shillings per day, and team work answerable, and boards at nine pounds, equal to old tenor, and shingles at four pounds ten shillings, old tenor.' Jacob Cummings, Joseph Scott, Edward Ayres, Samuel Allen, and John Taplin were chosen building committee. It was some years before the house was completed, if it was ever entirely done. 'Sept. 4, 1760, it was voted to have an alley three feet wide between the men's and women's seats.' In June, 1762, 'voted to allow Thomas Andrews six pounds to plaster the meeting-house over head.' Sept. 24, 1766, 'Voted, that Thomas Andrews shall halve the boards overhead in the meeting-house, and is to have what the workmen judge it worth for said halving.' It was used as a place of worship until the year 1800, when the house that has been recently remodeled in the west parish was built.

"March, 1750-51, 'it was voted to ordain the worthy Mr. Grindall Rawson in this precinct, on the second Wednesday in May next.'

"Mr. Rawson's salary for the first two years was to be £45, the third year three pounds to be added, and four pounds annually afterward till it should be sixty pounds, and £100 settlement. He was ordained May 8, 1751.* The same day a

* The council at the ordination of Mr. Rawson were church was organized, but it is not known of how many members it consisted. It must have been small, as the whole number which had been admitted at the time of Mr. Rawson's dismission, Jan. 19, 1754, was but 43. But little is known of Mr. Rawson's history or character. Traditional accounts represent him as a man of little seriousness, comeliness, or refinement. Some disaffection seems to have shown itself soon after his settlement, for May 12, 1752, it was voted 'to reconsider the vote giving Mr. Rawson a call, and for paying the salary and settlement.' The collectors neglected or refused to collect the taxes for his salary, and a petition was sent to his Majesty's council and House of Representatives, asking power to excuse the collectors, and choose others in their stead, which was granted.
Rev. John Campbell, of Oxford.

"Grindall Rawson, of Hadlyme, Conn.

"It does not appear that any council was called to dissolve the connection. Mr. Rawson was afterward settled in Yarmouth, Mass., in 1755, where he remained but a few years. He is believed to have been a chaplain in the Revolution.*

"After Mr. Rawson's dismission, there does not appear to have been regular preaching for some time. The poverty of the people rendered it exceeding difficult to collect the taxes. It appears the precinct 'voted, Jan. 1, 1755, that the collectors of Ware River Parish that are behind in their collections, pay in and make up their collection to the Parish Committee, excepting so much as the court assigned to Mr. Rawson, by the hand of Mr. Edward Ayres, for this reason, that the Parish Treasurer is reduced to such low circumstances that the parish are not willing to trust any more in his hands.'

"In the fall of 1758 the church and Precinct called Mr. Ezra Thayer to become their minister, and he was ordained Jan. 10, 1759. His salary was to be £40 for three years, then £3 to be added yearly till it became £55, and as settlement £100. A deed of the parsonage land is acknowledged by him as part of the settlement, £66 13s. 4d. He lived where Stephen Bonney now lives. To this time the church had no confession of faith, and one was proposed by the ordaining council and adopted. The half-way covenant plan prevailed to considerable extent, and injured the prosperity of the church. Mr. Thayer continued to be minister till his death, Feb. 12, 1775. Seventy-nine were received into the church in full communion during his ministry.

"Mr. Thayer was a native of Mendon, graduated at Harvard College, 1756. He is said to have been a plain man, of pleasing address, and to have secured the confidence of the people. The town erected a tombstone to mark the place of his burial, as a token of their respect.

"In 1780, Mr. Winslow Packard was invited to become the minister, but declined this, as well as a renewal of the call. In 1785, Mr. Jeremiah Hallock preached as a candidate, and an unsuccessful attempt was made to settle him. While he was preaching in town, an unusual interest was manifested in religion. He was afterward an eminent minister at Canton, Conn., and an interesting memoir of him was compiled by Rev. Cyrus Yale, of New Hartford, Conn.

the people. Twice during his ministry he was afflicted with derangement, and died at the age of fifty.†

"July 9, 1810, Rev. Samuel Ware was invited to settle as minister, and was ordained October 31st. Salary, $400, and a settlement of $500, if he should remain fifteen years. He was a useful minister, and was much blessed in his labors for more than fifteen years, and gathered 197 into the church—177 by profession, and 20 by letter from other churches. He was dismissed in consequence of ill health, in 1826, and the following vote, passed by the town July 3d, will show the esteem in which he was held: 'Voted unanimously, that, agreeably to his request, we dismiss and cordially recommend the Rev. Samuel Ware as an exemplary Christian, and an able, judicious, and faithful minister of the gospel.'

"July 19, 1826, Rev. Augustus B. Reed, a native of Rehoboth, and graduate of Brown University in 1821, was installed as pastor of the church and people. The same council dismissed Mr. Ware. To this time all business pertaining to the affairs of the parish had been done in town-meeting. Mr. Reed continued the minister of the first parish until June 5, 1838, when he was dismissed on account of feeble health. He died in town, Sept. 30, 1838, aged nearly forty.

"Rev. Hervey Smith, his successor, was installed Sept. 19, 1838, and dismissed in 1840.

"Rev. William E. Dixon, of Enfield, Conn., a graduate of Williams College, was ordained Jan. 14, 1841, and dismissed May 26, 1842.

"Rev. David N. Coburn, from Thompson, Conn., a graduate of Amherst College, was ordained Sept. 21, 1842, and was dismissed April 17, 1854."

Rev. Seth W. Banister, the successor of Mr. Coburn, was installed May 23, 1855, and dismissed June 1, 1857. Rev. Ariel P. Chute, the next pastor, was installed Sept. 22, 1857, and dismissed May 21, 1861.

Rev. William G. Tuttle, the present pastor of the church, is a native of Littleton, Mass., graduated at Amherst College in 1846, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1849. He was for over nine years pastor of the Congregational Church at Harrisville, N. H., and was installed pastor of the church in Ware Oct. 10, 1861. During his ministry 127 persons have been added to his church, and several remarkable seasons of revival have occurred, notably in 1865, 1868, 1871, 1872, 1874, and 1876.

The deacons of the church since its establishment have been Jacob Cummings, chosen 1751, resigned 1768; John Davis, Maverick Smith, chosen 1768, ins, chosen 1768, resigned 1789; resigned 1815; Daniel Gould, Joseph Cummings, chosen 1815, en 1815, resigned 1835; Warner 1830; Enos Davis, chosen 1830, s, chosen 1835, resigned 1851; resigned 1853; Milton Lewis, nderson, chosen 1853. The last e, erected in the centre of the tions, until the year 1800, when used until 1843, when it was sing used for the new structure, sent house of worship. It has, ble alterations and repairs.

132,—45 males and 87 females, bath-school comprises 122 mem- dandance of 76. Superintendent, ian, Wm. Marsh. Number of

ATIONAL CHURCH.

case of population in Ware vil- e to establish a Congregational ingly, in the month of April, and on April 12th a church was the house of worship now occupied by the society was erected. It has been remodeled several times, is a comely and substantial structure, and contains a handsome organ. The society also has a neat chapel on Water Street, which was erected in 1857, at a cost of $5000.

† Mr. Moss married Mrs. Hadasah Cheesbrough, of Stonington, Conn., where some of his descendants now live. He built the house now owned by Charles Hathaway. It was afterward owned by Rev. Mr. Ware.

Each with his delegate.

* There have been three ministers of the same name,—Grindall Rawson, who graduated at Harvard College, 1678, settled in Mendon, 1680, where he died, 1715.

Another Grindall Rawson graduated at Harvard College, 1728; was settled as the first minister in South Hadley, 1733, where he is spoken of by President Edwards as a successful minister. He was afterward settled at Hadlyme, Conn., 1745, where he died, in 1777. Grindall Rawson, the first minister in Ware, graduated at Harvard College, 1741, and died in 1794, aged seventy-three. The first was probably the grandfather, the second an uncle, of the latter.

1830; Aaron Gould, Joel Rice, 1831; Allender Brakenridge, Homer Bartlett, 1832; Alpheus Demond, Enos Davis, 1833; Calvin Morse, Benjamin Wilder, 1834; Thomas Wilder, John Osborne, Jr., 1835; Thomas Wilder, Reuben Lazell, 1836; Edmund Freeman, Reuben Lazell, 1837; Thomas Snell, Royal Bosworth, 1838; Thomas Snell, Jason Gorham, 1839; John Bowdoin, Nelson Palmer, 1840; Joel Rice, 1841; Ebenezer Gould, 1842; Horace Goodrich, 1843; Jonathan Harwood, 1844; Ansel Phelps, Jr., 1845; Samuel M. Lemmon, 1846; Avery Clark, 1847; Ira P. Gould, 1851; Harrison French, 1852; Charles A. Stevens, 1853; William E. Bassett, 1854; Freeman W. Dickinson, 1855; Samuel H. Phelps, 1856; George H. Gilbert, 1857; Benjamin Davis, Jr., 1858; Lewis Demond, 1860; Samuel Morse, 1861; Joseph Hartwell, 1863; Luther Chapin, Jr., 1864; William E. Lewis 1866; Henry Bassett, 1868; Benjamin F. Angell, 1870; John W. Robinson, 1872; Henry C. Davis, 1874; Addison Sandford, 1876; Frederick N. Hosmer, 1879.

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

WARE VILLAGE,

situated on Ware River, is a thriving manufacturing place. It sprang up about the year 1824, when the manufacturing enterprises of the town first began to assume importance, and has steadily increased. Prior to that time the business of the town had been principally transacted at the centre, and it was not until 1847 that the place for holding town-meetings was transferred to the village.

The latter comprises a population of about 3000, nearly three-fourths of the population of the town, and is regularly and uniformly laid out and lighted with gas. It contains two hotels, five churches, five factories, a large number of stores, and many handsome dwelling-houses, and is the place of residence of a large number of persons of wealth, refinement, and culture.

Several serious conflagrations have occurred in the village since its existence. The first of these was the burning of the large brick factory of the Otis Company in 1845. The block on the west side of Main Street, opposite the Hampshire House, was burned in 1848 or '49; the Ware Hotel in December, 1864. Sanford's store was burned in March, 1866 or '67. The town-hall and Unitarian Church Nov. 6, 1867, and the Baptist Church in 1860.

WARE

is situated about two miles first meeting-house of the town meetings of the settlers held, tants "went up" there "to coming down from the north, its power has been utilized for small industrial enterprises.

The hamlet contains a Congregational shoe-factory, a blacksmiths-dwelling-houses. It was here augers" were first made.

EDUCATION

The first action of the town appears by the records, was in

"Voted to Divide ye Peraish into two deviding Line."

"Voted Joseph Scott to take care of ridge to take care of the East Part."

At this time no money was appear to have been raised for preaching until after the income. At the first town-meeting it into four quarters, by a line meeting-house, and by Flat B same meeting it was "Voted, to raise £12 for Skoling," and that "Each Quarter shall Skool out there part within the year or be forfeit."

The same sum was granted the year following and in 1766. In 1771 only £4 was raised; in 1772, £14; and in 1774, £15.

For several years thereafter no money was raised for schools. The town-meetings were mostly occupied in providing soldiers for the Revolutionary army, and in paying them and providing for their families.

In 1782, £20 were appropriated for schools, the districts remaining as formerly. In 1785 it was voted to divide the town into six districts, and the location of school-houses was then first determined as follows:

"One school-house to be near Mr. Joseph Chandler's house, one by the pound, one by Mr. James Lamon's, one by Phinehas Converse's, one by Moses Davis's, and one by John Gilmore's."

The year following £72 were raised to erect these houses. In 1787, £36 more were raised, and, in 1791, £12 were raised to build a school-house in the middle of the town.

In 1794, £48 were granted for schools. This was during the ministry of the Rev. Reuben Moss, who did much to raise the character of the schools. For nearly twenty years not a teacher was employed from out of town, while all the neighboring towns sought teachers in Ware. Hon. Joseph Cummings taught seven winters in New Braintree, receiving $20 per month, being much more than was usually paid in those times. Another early teacher was Samuel Clerk, for whose benefit the following vote was passed in 1783:

"Voted, to allow Mr. Samuel Clerk an order for £1 17s. 6d. for his keeping school, and also Interest for Two orders from the time they became dew."

In 1797 the town voted to divide the school money into eight parts, £10 to each district. The appropriation for schools in that year was $266.67, and this amount was regularly increased at intervals, until in 1840 it had reached $1250. The appropriation in 1878 was $6800.

At the present time there are 19 schools in the town,—one high school, in which the higher branches of education are taught and preparation made for college, a high and grammar school, and grammar, intermediate, primary, mixed, and district schools. The number of pupils in attendance upon all the schools of the town on March 1, 1878, was 856, of whom 690 attended the village schools. The whole are under the control of a board of six, two of whom are chosen annually for three years.

Representatives continued.

Charles E. Stevens 1882. William C. Eaton. 1885. Levi H. Robinson 1887. Calvin Hitchcock 1888. William S. Hyatt 1892. Frederick A. Volk 1893. Frank M. Sibley 1895. George D. Storv. 1896. William A. Newcomb. 1898.

west parish was built.

"March, 1750-51, 'it was voted to ordain the worthy Mr. Grindall Rawson in this precinct, on the second Wednesday in May next.'

"Mr. Rawson's salary for the first two years was to be £45, the third year three pounds to be added, and four pounds annually afterward till it should be sixty pounds, and £100 settlement. He was ordained May 8, 1751.* The same day a church was organized, but it is not known of how many members it consisted. It must have been small, as the whole number which had been admitted at the time of Mr. Rawson's dismission, Jan. 19, 1754, was but 43. But little is known of Mr. Rawson's history or character. Traditional accounts represent him as a man of little seriousness, comeliness, or refinement. Some disaffection seems to have shown itself soon after his settlement, for May 12, 1752, it was voted 'to reconsider the vote giving Mr. Rawson a call, and for paying the salary and settlement.' The collectors neglected or refused to collect the taxes for his salary, and a petition was sent to his Majesty's council and House of Representatives, asking power to excuse the collectors, and choose others in their stead, which was granted.

* The council at the ordination of Mr. Rawson were

Rev. John Campbell, of Oxford.

"Grindall Rawson, of Hadlyme, Conn.

"It does not appear that any council was called to dissolve the connection. Mr. Rawson was afterward settled in Yarmouth, Mass., in 1755, where he remained but a few years. He is believed to have been a chaplain in the Revolution.*

"After Mr. Rawson's dismission, there does not appear to have been regular preaching for some time. The poverty of the people rendered it exceedingly difficult to collect the taxes. It appears the precinct 'voted, Jan. 1, 1755, that the collectors of Ware River Parish that are behind in their collections, pay in and make up their collection to the Parish Committee, excepting so much as the court assigned to Mr. Rawson, by the hand of Mr. Edward Ayres, for this reason, that the Parish Treasurer is reduced to such low circumstances that the parish are not willing to trust any more in his hands.'

"In the fall of 1758 the church and Precinct called Mr. Ezra Thayer to become their minister, and he was ordained Jan. 10, 1759. His salary was to be £40 for three years, then £3 to be added yearly till it became £65, and as settlement £100. A deed of the parsonage land is acknowledged by him as part of the settlement, £66 13s. 4d. He lived where Stephen Bonney now lives. To this time the church had no confession of faith, and one was proposed by the ordaining council and adopted. The half-way covenant plan prevailed to considerable extent, and injured the prosperity of the church. Mr. Thayer continued to be minister till his death, Feb. 12, 1775. Seventy-nine were received into the church in full communion during his ministry.

"Mr. Thayer was a native of Mendon, graduated at Harvard College, 1756. He is said to have been a plain man, of pleasing address, and to have secured the confidence of the people. The town erected a tombstone to mark the place of his burial, as a token of their respect.

"In 1780, Mr. Winslow Packard was invited to become the minister, but declined this, as well as a renewal of the call. In 1785, Mr. Jeremiah Hallcock preached as a candidate, and an unsuccessful attempt was made to settle him. While he was preaching in town, an unusual interest was manifested in religion. He was afterward an eminent minister at Canton, Conn., and an interesting memoir of him was compiled by Rev. Cyrus Yale, of New Hartford, Conn.

"In July, 1785, Mr. Benjamin Judd was invited to settle as a minister, and was ordained Oct. 12. He probably came from the county of Berkshire, as his ordination sermon was preached by Rev. Daniel Collins, of Lanesboro'. Dr. West, of Stockbridge, Rev. Mr. Perry, of Richmond, and Rev. Mr. Munson, of Lenox, were members of the council. The people were not united in calling Mr. Judd, and unhappily difficulties soon arose, which resulted in his dismission, Sept. 28, 1787, and no minister was settled for five years.

"In March, 1792, the church and town gave an unanimous invitation to Mr. Reuben Moss to become their minister, and he was ordained June 21st. He was a native of Cheshire, Conn., graduated at Yale College, 1787, and studied theology with Rev. Dr. Trumbull, of New Haven. He received £80 salary, and £150 settlement.

"Mr. Moss continued in the ministry in Ware until his death, Feb. 17, 1809,—more than sixteen years. He was a very successful and devoted minister. During his labors, 50 were added to the church,—42 by profession, and 8 by recommendation from other churches. He was a man of ardent piety, of refined feelings, and somewhat distinguished as a Biblical scholar. As a preacher, he was plain and practical, and enforced his instructions by a blameless example. Many now remember him as the faithful and affectionate friend of the young. He was particular in his attention to the district schools. At the time of his settlement they were in a low and disorderly state, but they very soon became very much improved through his attention and influence. By his effort in this department of his labors, he was instrumental in preparing a large number of young men to engage in the instruction of schools in this and neighboring towns. No town in this vicinity, it is said, furnished so many teachers. The tone of moral feeling and the standard of education were greatly raised among the people. Twice during his ministry he was afflicted with derangement, and died at the age of fifty.†

"July 9, 1810, Rev. Samuel Ware was invited to settle as minister, and was ordained October 31st. Salary, $400, and a settlement of $500, if he should remain fifteen years. He was a useful minister, and was much blessed in his labors for more than fifteen years, and gathered 197 into the church—177 by profession, and 20 by letter from other churches. He was dismissed in consequence of ill health, in 1826, and the following vote, passed by the town July 3d, will show the esteem in which he was held: 'Voted unanimously, that, agreeably to his request, we dismiss and cordially recommend the Rev. Samuel Ware as an exemplary Christian, and an able, judicious, and faithful minister of the gospel.'

"July 19, 1826, Rev. Augustus B. Reed, a native of Rehoboth, and graduate of Brown University in 1821, was installed as pastor of the church and people. The same council dismissed Mr. Ware. To this time all business pertaining to the affairs of the parish had been done in town-meeting. Mr. Reed continued the minister of the first parish until June 5, 1838, when he was dismissed on account of feeble health. He died in town, Sept. 30, 1838, aged nearly forty.

"Rev. Hervey Smith, his successor, was installed Sept. 19, 1838, and dismissed in 1840.

"Rev. William E. Dixon, of Enfield, Conn., a graduate of Williams College, was ordained Jan. 14, 1841, and dismissed May 25, 1842.

"Rev. David N. Coburn, from Thompson, Conn., a graduate of Amherst College, was ordained Sept. 21, 1842, and was dismissed April 17, 1854."

Rev. Seth W. Banister, the successor of Mr. Coburn, was installed May 23, 1855, and dismissed June 1, 1857. Rev. Ariel P. Chute, the next pastor, was installed Sept. 22, 1857, and dismissed May 21, 1861.

Rev. William G. Tuttle, the present pastor of the church, is a native of Littleton, Mass., graduated at Amherst College in 1846, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1849. He was for over nine years pastor of the Congregational Church at Harrisville, N. H., and was installed pastor of the church in Ware Oct. 10, 1861. During his ministry 127 persons have been added to his church, and several remarkable seasons of revival have occurred, notably in 1865, 1868, 1871, 1872, 1874, and 1876.

The deacons of the church since its establishment have been Jacob Cummings, chosen 1751, resigned 1768; John Davis, chosen 1751, resigned 1768; Maverick Smith, chosen 1768, deceased 1789; Thomas Jenkins, chosen 1768, resigned 1789; William Paige, chosen 1789, resigned 1815; Daniel Gould, chosen 1789, resigned 1815; Joseph Cummings, chosen 1815, resigned 1826; Eli Snow, chosen 1815, resigned 1835; Warner Brown, chosen 1826, deposed 1830; Enos Davis, chosen 1830, deceased 1837; Abner Lewis, chosen 1835, resigned 1851; Thomas Snell, chosen 1837, resigned 1853; Milton Lewis, chosen 1851; Nathaniel H. Anderson, chosen 1853. The last two are the acting deacons.

The original meeting-house, erected in the centre of the town, was used, with modifications, until the year 1800, when another was built. This was used until 1843, when it was remodeled, its frame-work being used for the new structure, which is substantially the present house of worship. It has, however, undergone considerable alterations and repairs.

The present membership is 132,—45 males and 87 females,—and 34 absentees. The Sabbath-school comprises 122 members, with an average attendance of 76. Superintendent, W. L. Brakenridge. Librarian, Wm. Marsh. Number of volumes in the library, 150.

EAST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

In 1825, owing to the increase of population in Ware village, it was deemed advisable to establish a Congregational society at that place. Accordingly, in the month of April, 1826, a society was organized, and on April 12th a church was constituted. The same year the house of worship now occupied by the society was erected. It has been remodeled several times, is a comely and substantial structure, and contains a handsome organ. The society also has a neat chapel on Water Street, which was erected in 1857, at a cost of $5000.

†Mr. Moss married Mrs. Hadassah Cheesbrough, of Stonington, Conn., where some of his descendants now live. He built the house now owned by Charles Hathaway. It was afterward owned by Rev. Mr. Ware.

Rev. Robert Breck, 1st Church, of Springfield.

" Caleb Rice, of Sturbridge.

" David White, of Hardwick.

" Noah Mirick, of 4th Church, Springfield (now Wilbraham).

" Thomas Skinner, of Westchester, in Colchester, Conn.

" Benjamin Bowers, of Middle Haddam, Conn.

" Isaac Jones, of Western (now Warren).

" Pelatiah Webster, of Quabbin (now Greenwich).

Each with his delegate.

* There have been three ministers of the same name,—Grindall Rawson, who graduated at Harvard College, 1678, settled in Mendon, 1680, where he died, 1715.

Another Grindall Rawson graduated at Harvard College, 1728; was settled as the first minister in South Hadley, 1733, where he is spoken of by President Edwards as a successful minister. He was afterward settled at Hadlyme, Conn., 1745, where he died, in 1777. Grindall Rawson, the first minister in Ware, graduated at Harvard College, 1741, and died in 1794, aged seventy-three. The first was probably the grandfather, the second an uncle, of the latter.

The first pastor was Rev. Parsons Cook, ordained June 21, 1826, and dismissed April 13, 1835. He was succeeded by Rev. Cyrus Yale, of New Hartford, Conn., who was installed June 11, 1835, and dismissed, to return to his former field, Aug. 3, 1837. Rev. Jonathan Edwards Woodbridge, a native of Worthington, Mass., and a college classmate of Rev. Mr. Cook, was installed May 2, 1838, and dismissed Dec. 28, 1840, to become one of the editors of the New England Puritan, in connection with Mr. Cook. Rev. Nahum Gale, a native of Auburn, Mass., and a graduate of Amherst College in 1837, was the next pastor, ordained June 22, 1842, and dismissed in June, 1851. He was succeeded by Rev. Theron G. Colton, who was installed Sept. 2, 1851, and dismissed March 26, 1855.

Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D.D., the present pastor, is a native of Royalston, Mass., who graduated at Amherst College in 1840. He was for eleven years pastor of the Congregational Church at Phillipston, in Worcester County, and was installed over his present charge Dec. 5, 1855. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Williams College.

The deacons of the church have been Joseph Cummings, chosen in 1826; resigned 1853. Luther Brown, chosen in 1826; resigned 1841. Thomas Thwing, chosen in 1826; resigned 1837. John Tolman, chosen in 1837; resigned 1853. Wm. Hyde, chosen in 1837. Lewis Demond, chosen in 1844; resigned 1867. Francis De Witt, chosen in 1854; resigned 1863. W. S. Brakenridge, chosen in 1854; resigned 1860. Otis Lane, chosen in 1861. Henry Ives, chosen in 1864; resigned 1867. John W. Cummings, chosen in 1867. Lewis N. Gilbert, chosen in 1869.

The present membership is 350; of Sabbath-school, 250; average attendance on Sabbath-school, 200; volumes in library, several hundred; superintendent of Sabbath-school, George G. Hall.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.*

The Methodist Church in Ware was organized about the year 1826, probably by Joshua Crowell, a Methodist local elder, residing at the centre, and Luther Payne, a local preacher and class-leader, residing at the village. The earlier meetings were held at private houses, often at Mr. Payne's, sometimes in an unoccupied portion of the mill, and in the school-houses on North Street and in the south part of the village. Meetings were also held for a time in an upper room in a house opposite to where the church now stands. A meeting-house was erected in 1844, under the pastorate of Rev. D. Sherman, D.D., for many years a presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal Conference. The church was raised and enlarged by the addition of vestries, a vestibule, and tower in 1848, under the pastorate of Rev. C. L. Eastman, now pastor of the "Seaman's Bethel," Boston.

Early in the history of the society they were supplied with preaching frequently by local preachers in the vicinity, Mr. Crowell and Mr. Payne often performing this service. The first regularly-appointed preacher from the Conference was Rev. William P. White, stationed here in 1833. Mr. White's successors have been somewhat numerous, as until recently, by a law of the church, no minister could remain a pastor of the same church more than two successive years, and later only three years. Prominent among the early preachers were W. P. White, Samuel Palmer, James O. Deane, Thomas Marcy, David Sherman, Ichabod Marcy, C. L. Eastman, and J. W. Dadmun.

Among those who have served more recently appear the names of N. H. Martin, William Gordon, Linus Fish, Geo. F. Eaton, William M. Ayers. The present pastor is Rev. J. Peterson, who has been here two years. The present membership is 160; Sunday-school membership, 170; volumes in Sunday-school library, 350; Sunday-school Superintendent, David L. Barlow; Secretary and Treasurer, John T. Winslow; Librarian, Arthur Strahan; Chairman of Board of Trustees, Benjamin Davis; Treasurer, Henry C. Davis, Esq.; Secretary, J. P. Crowell. There are also nine stewards, of whom R. N. Roberts is Recording Steward, D. C. Gates, District Steward, and S. F. Gates, Treasurer.

* Contributed by the pastor, Rev. John Peterson.

BAPTISTS.

This denomination existed for many years in the west part of the town of Hardwick, at first as the Hardwick Baptist Church, and then as the Hardwick and Ware Baptist Church. In 1846 the society removed from Hardwick to Ware, and became established at the village under the name of the Ware Baptist Church.

The first pastor was Rev. Amory Gale, a graduate of Brown University, who was ordained November 11th of that year. He was dismissed in 1850, and was succeeded on August 22d of that year by Rev. J. A. Bullard, of Middletown, O., who was dismissed to Troy, N. Y., in April, 1853. Rev. George E. Fuller became the next pastor soon after the withdrawal of Mr. Bullard, and died while discharging his duties on June 6, 1856. He was succeeded by Rev. J. E. Wiggins, of Lowell, Mass., who was ordained Feb. 10, 1857, and dismissed to South Chelmsford, Mass., Sept. 19, 1858. Rev. J. F. Jones was the next pastor, and was installed Jan. 1, 1859, and remained in that relation until October, 1860, when the house of worship, which had been dedicated in the fall of 1847, was destroyed by fire. After this disaster but a few meetings were held; the society virtually dissolved, and now has no active existence.

FIRST UNITARIAN.

This society was organized Oct. 7, 1846. Prior to its establishment several liberal movements had been undertaken in the town without success. In the autumn of 1845 the nucleus of the present society was formed, and met in the east brick mill, now owned by the Otis Company. Rev. George Channing preached the first sermon, and regular services were held by him, Rev. Mr. Alden, and others until the approach of winter. Meetings were then held in the Water Street chapel of the East Congregational Church. In the spring of 1846 a house of worship was begun on the spot where the church now stands, and on the 24th of January the basement was consecrated and occupied by the vestry. Here the society worshiped until the completion of the church in the following summer.

In 1848 the society received from the church in Bolton, Mass., the gift of a complete and beautiful communion service, which is still in use. The pulpit Bible was presented by the ladies of the Springfield Society, and the bell by Thomas Cordis, of Boston.

The first regular pastor was Rev. George S. Ball, who was ordained Oct. 13, 1847, and resigned, because of ill health, July 6, 1849. The next was Rev. George T. Hill, of Hubbardton, who was installed Sept. 22, 1852. Rev. S. F. Clarke, of Athol, was installed Dec. 24, 1856, and died in the pastoral office March 27, 1861.

From the time of Mr. Clarke's death until April, 1862, the church was closed, with the exception of a few weeks when it was occupied by the East Congregational Society. Rev. John W. Hudson then supplied the church for a time, and was regularly ordained pastor May 6, 1863, and resigned Feb. 24, 1865. He was succeeded by Rev. William G. Newell, of Rockland, Ill., who was installed May 10, 1866, and resigned June 18, 1867.

Nov. 6, 1867, the town-hall was burned, and the church which stood near it was also destroyed, including a fine organ, put in but a few weeks before. Services were then held in the chapel of the East Congregational Society and in Music Hall.

The next regular pastor was Rev. Thomas Timmins, who was installed June 19, 1872, and resigned Oct. 18, 1873. He was followed by Rev. John L. Lyon, who was installed Oct. 28, 1874, and resigned June 5, 1875; and he by Rev. John L. Marsh, the present pastor, who was ordained Dec. 16, 1875.

The present house of worship was dedicated Sept. 14, 1869. The number of families connected with the parish is 60; members of Sabbath-school, about 60; number of volumes in the library, about 500; Superintendent of Sabbath-school, Rev. John L. Marsh; Assistant Superintendent, Charles Sibley; Librarian, Worthington Gates.

ST. WILLIAM'S CHURCH (ROMAN CATHOLIC).

The Catholics established themselves in Ware about 1850, and in 1855 erected a large church edifice, which is still standing. The movement was at first a missionary enterprise, and was connected with the church at Chicopee Falls for a number of years. It became a separate parish about the year 1860; and Rev. P. Haley was the first pastor, and remained four years. He was succeeded, Aug. 15, 1864, by the present pastor, Rev. William Moran. The parish is a large one, comprising about 1100 people. The church also contains a fine organ.

THE CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF MOUNT CARMEL (ROMAN CATHOLIC).

July 9, 1871, the French Catholics of Ware, feeling the need of church services in their own language, undertook the establishment of a separate parish. Ninety-nine families, comprising 697 persons, 443 of whom were communicants, united and formed the parish.

The first services were held in Music Hall, and the first mass was celebrated July 16, 1871, being the feast of Our Lady of Mount Carmel.

The first pastor was Rev. L. G. Gaganier, who withdrew in March, 1873, and was immediately succeeded by the Rev. Charles Boucher, the present pastor, who was transferred from the parish of St. Hilaire, Province of Quebec, Canada.

The first collection was taken July 31, 1871. The property on which the edifice was erected was purchased November 7th of the same year, and with the parsonage adjoining the church, at a cost of $4000. The corner-stone was laid May 20, 1872, and the church dedicated Nov. 17, 1872. It is a handsome brick structure, located on Bank Street, and has been thoroughly finished and tastefully embellished in the interior, under the supervision of Rev. Father Boucher. The cost was about $12,000.

The parish is now in a prosperous condition, comprises 130 families, 700 persons, and 596 communicants, and has already organized a flourishing mission at Gilbertville, in the town of Hardwick, where a large church has been erected.

Other religious movements, mostly of a missionary and tentative character, have taken place in the town, but attained no special strength or prominence.

BURIAL-PLACES.

There are six burial-places. Of these the oldest is what is known as the "old burying-ground," which is situated about half a mile from the village, on the Palmer road. It was probably first occupied soon after the settlement of the town. No burials have taken place in it since 1826. It is now covered by a forest of small pine-trees, but is kept in good condition. Most of its graves have sunk out of sight, and are not marked by tombstones. Of these but eight are standing, the oldest being that of Miss Sally, daughter of Samuel and Anna Dinsmore, who died Feb. 13, 1786, in her eighteenth year.

The next burial-places in point of age are those at Ware Centre,—one standing near the church, and the other a few rods farther off. The first was laid out soon after the incorporation of the town, and has been in use ever since. Among its ancient tombstones one of the oldest and most interesting bears the following inscription:

"In memory of Rev. Ezra Thayer, the Learned, Pious, Faithful, & Deservedly esteemed Pastor of the Church of Christ in this town, who died Feb. 12th, 1775, in the 44th year of his age, & 10th of his ministry.

"Go, Reader, Mind
The better part;
Believe the Gospel,
Mend thy heart
Go learn to live
And learn to die;
For thou must
As well as I."

The other yard, at the centre, was presented to the town by Isaac Pepper, Oct. 19, 1795, on condition that the town should fence it with a convenient wall, and originally comprised 145 rods. It was laid out soon after, and in April, 1809, was enlarged to one acre. It contains a large number of graves. Among the oldest tombstones, and those which contain the most unique inscriptions, which abound in the yard, are the following:

"This stone is erected to the memory of Mr. Benjamin Comings, who died Feb. 29th, 1805, in His 38th year.

"My soul doth leap to think how deep
My Saviour's love hath been;
I am carr'd out in thought devout
On things that are unseen.
This real view appears most true,—
That Jesus was the Man
That did agree with God for me
Before the World began.
Lord, when shall we like angels be,
And travel through the air;
And all Thy Host travel that course,
And meet to-gether their."

"In memory of William Coney, of Brookfield, who died Nov. 1st, 1805, in his 79th year.

"A Husband kind and good, a parent dear,
To all obliging, and to all sincere;
True to his God, the orphan's friend and guide,
He liv'd beloved, and lamented did."

A cemetery near the East Congregational Church has been occupied since 1826, where some families having lots still bury their dead.

The Aspen Grove Cemetery is one of the largest and handsomest places of burial in Western Massachusetts. It comprises 25 acres of land, situated in the northwest part of Ware village, and was presented to the town in the year 1853, by Hon. Orrin Sage, the donation being acknowledged by the town in the passage of appropriate resolutions, which are contained in the town records. At the time of his decease, on June 23, 1875, Mr. Sage left a bequest of $3000 in his will, to constitute a fund for keeping the cemetery in permanent repair. It is fenced with a substantial stone wall, is beautifully laid out in walks and drives, and contains many handsome lots and monuments. Near the main entrance stands the soldiers' monument, which was erected by the town in 1867. Some of the lots are free to the residents of the town; others are sold at a moderate price, and the actual burial expenses of each deceased resident are defrayed by the town.

The sixth is the Catholic cemetery, which adjoins St. William's Catholic Church and contains a great many graves. It was laid out in the year 1850.

NOTES FROM THE RECORDS.

A few notes from the records will best illustrate the usages and customs of the past and the manner of conducting town business. In Ware, as in many other towns in the commonwealth, it was the custom, instead of hailing all new-comers as welcome accessions to the strength of the community, to warn them to depart, lest they should become a charge to the town. In March, 1765, the town allowed William Bell 12 shillings for warning out several and carrying out some. In 1790 the constable was directed to warn 51 persons, whose names were given, to depart from the limits of the town, with their children, and all under them, within fifteen days.

April 19, 1757.—"Voted to hire preaching for the summer. Voted to raise upon the polls and estates the sum of £13 6s. 6d., for preaching and boarding of ministers, and going after ministers. Voted Joseph Foster to go after ministers. Voted John Downing to provide a Law-Book."

Sept. 24, 1766.—"Voted to allow William Bell four shillings for the milch of a cow one month to Uriah Bush."

May 9, 1768.—"Voted to raise two pounds to provide Rumb for the raising the Bridge over Ware river."

March, 1781.—"Voted to pay James Lemmon for six journeys to Belchertown and two quarts of Rum, thirteen shillings and six pence."

Oct. 22, 1787.—"Voted to allow William Paige for keeping the Ecclesiastical Council, which is as follows, viz.—seven pence per meal, 212 meals; two pence a lodging, 68 lodgings; four pence for keeping a horse 24 hours, 76 horses; four gallons and a half of new rum, three shillings per gallon; two gallons of old rum, five shillings per gallon."

Nov. 2, 1801.—"Voted that the selectmen give a general invitation to all the inhabitants of the town of Ware to work on the road one or more days, leading from Swift River to the line of New Braintree free gratis, said selectmen to find them what spirits they shall think necessary."

Feb. 9, 1782.—"Voted to allow Joseph Paterson 6 shillings for one pair of shoes he let Thomas Steel, a soldier, have."

May, 1782.—"Voted that Capt. Brakenridge as a committee agree with Rev. Mr. Tuttle to supply the pulpit for one year, on condition that if the town can get a young man upon probation, Mr. Tuttle to give way."

March 1, 1784.—"Voted to allow Mr. Andrew Harwood eight dollars, it being a counterfeit bill, New Emission."

March, 1784.—"Voted to employ Mr. Tuttle one year, or until a young man can be employed in the town."

March, 1785.—The town voted "to adopt Dr. Watts' Psalms and Hymns to be sung in this congregation.* Voted that they begin next Sabbath."

Previous to this, Tate and Brady or Sternhold and Hopkins had been used, and the change was made while Rev. Jeremiah Hallock was preaching here, and probably through his influence. The chorister was chosen by the town, and the custom was for the whole congregation to join in singing, the deacon reading one line at a time.

Sept. 1, 1786.—"Voted that the selectmen shall take Ruth Hinds and put her to any person that will take her."

Sept. 8, 1788.—"Voted to vandue Rebekah Allen to the Lowest bidder." These votes refer to the custom of putting the poor out for support, which was common in all the towns.

1790.—"Voted to allow a bounty on crows' heads." "Voted to allow 8d. per head for all that is kild in this town within six months from the date."

In 1800 the meeting-house was built in the middle of the town. In April, 1801, "chose Capt. Wm. Doane to see that the deck of the cupola is corked and made tight, so as to prevent the water from penetrating through, and also to finish glazing said cupola and other panes of glass which are broken in the meeting-house, and fasten the upper casements of the windows so as to prevent them from making an interruption in time of public worship."

Nov. 2, 1801.—"Voted that the front door of the meeting-house be bolted as soon as the speaker hath entered."

May, 1810.—"Voted to raise fifty dollars, to be appropriated to the instruction of singers, and that those who belong to Mr. Burt's society receive their proportion of said fifty dollars."

In September, 1807.—"Voted that there may be a Bell placed upon the deck of the cupola in this town upon some conditions."

"Voted not to choose a committee to receive subscriptions. Voted that Isaac Pepper, Rufus King, Benjamin Paige, Ebenezer Titus, Benjamin Davis, Nathaniel R. Anderson, Gould Parsons, Isaac Pepper, Jr., Samuel Conkey, William Paige, Jr., Thomas Patrick, and Waters Allen, together with such as shall hereafter become subscribers, have liberty to hang a bell upon the deck of the cupola in this town, provided the bell be purchased and hung upon said deck free from any cost or expense upon said town either by tax or otherwise."

No bell was placed upon the church until after Mr. Reed's settlement, in 1826. Dec. 15, 1828.—"Voted to give leave to have stoves erected in the meeting-house in the centre of the town, if it be done without expense to the town."

After the factories were built, an attempt was made to change the name of the town. In January, 1825, "Voted to petition to have the name of the town changed to Waterford." It does not seem to have been prosecuted. In May, 1827, "Voted to raise a committee of five to petition the Legislature to survey a Rail Road from Boston to the Hudson River in the state of New York. Chose Alphens Demond, Homer Bartlett, William Bowdoin, Thomas Snell, and Benjamin Paige." About this time there was some difficulty between the village and the old parish. An attempt was made by the village to be incorporated as a town, which was opposed. At the election of representatives, in 1828, the closest contest was had that ever existed in the town, which seems to have been hinged upon this controversy. Aaron Gould had 170 votes, Foster Marsh, 170, Joseph Cummings, 1. Whereupon the town voted not to send that year. The matter was adjusted by dividing the lines between the parishes, and the village was incorporated as the East Congregational Society. The parish lines began at Samuel Gould's southeast corner, by Palmer line, and on his line to Ware River, thence up the river to Muddy Brook, up Muddy Brook to the old road to New Braintree, north of J. Hartwell's farm, thence on that road to the turn east of Nathan Coney's, thence to Darius Eaton's north line, and on that to Brookfield.

* The article in the warrant was, "To see if the Congregation will concur with the Church in adopting Doctor Watts' version of Psalms and Hymns, to be sung in public worship."

The alteration of the constitution, making the support of religion a voluntary thing, in 1833, rendered parish lines of no value.

SOCIETIES AND CORPORATIONS.

WARE NATIONAL BANK.

The Ware National Bank was incorporated as the Hampshire Manufacturers' Bank, Feb. 26, 1825, with a capital of $100,000. In 1836, 1848, and 1853, $50,000 was added each year to the capital, and, in 1857, $100,000. In December, 1864, the bank was changed to a national corporation, under the name of the Ware National Bank. In 1869 the capital was increased to $400,000. While a State bank the corporation paid in dividends $520,500; since it became a national bank, and up to October, 1878, the amount of dividends paid was $514,800.

The presidents of the bank have been Elnathan Jones, of Enfield, from 1825 to 1827; Joseph Bowman, of New Braintree, from 1827 to 1848; Orrin Sage, of Ware, from 1848 to 1865. William Hyde, the present president, then succeeded. The cashiers have been Homer Bartlett, of Ware, from 1825 to 1832; Henry Starkweather, of Ware, from 1832 to 1834; William Hyde, of Ware, from 1834 to 1865; Henry Ives, of Ware, from 1865 to 1867, when William S. Hyde, the present cashier, was elected. The directors of the bank are William Hyde, William S. Hyde, Otis Lane, and Addison Sandford, of Ware; William Mixter, of Boston; Nathan Richardson, of Warren; and Emmons Twitchell, of Brookfield.

THE WARE SAVINGS BANK

was incorporated in 1850. Joel Rice was treasurer until 1857, when Otis Lane, the present treasurer, succeeded. The present officers are Hon. William Hyde, President; Hon. C. A. Stevens, Hon. L. N. Gilbert, and Joseph Hartwell, Esq., Vice-Presidents; Otis Lane, Treasurer; F. D. Gilmore, Assistant Treasurer. Hon. William Mixter, of Boston; Nathan Richardson, of Warren; Addison Sandford, David P. Billings, Calvin Hitchcock, and Charles D. Gilbert, who together constitute the Board of Trustees.

The last statement of the bank, published Jan. 1, 1879, was as follows:

Deposits.....	$1,565,872.59
Profit and loss.....	39,045.91
Guarantee fund.....	9,881.09
Bank stock.....		$290,500.00
Public funds.....		350,000.00
Railroad bonds.....		238,000.00
Loans to towns.....		58,500.00
Loans on real.....		474,066.22
Loans on personal.....		184,086.17
Loans on public funds.....		1,650.00
Loans on bank stock.....		11,300.00
Loans on railroad stock.....		3,000.00
Cash.....		23,687.20
	$1,614,789.59	$1,614,789.59

Surplus, January 1, 1879.....	$24,407.76
Guarantee fund.....	11,838.42
	$36,246.18

EDEN LODGE, A. F. AND A. M.,

was chartered June 8, 1864, with the following charter-members: George Robinson, Samuel H. Phelps, Franklin D. Richards, E. D. Winslow, W. C. Sheldon, H. S. Parsons, and D. W. Miner. The sessions of the lodge are held at Masonic Hall, in Sandford's building, Ware village. The present officers of the lodge are George S. Marsh, W. M.; Charles S. Robinson, S. W.; George E. Fairbank, J. W.; Addison Sandford, Treas.; Levi W. Robinson, Sec.; John W. Robinson, Marshal; Jasper L. Fairbank, S. D.; Henry Connell, J. D.; Thomas Renison, S. S.; Walter P. Sutcliffe, J. S.; Rev. John L. Marsh, Chaplain; George G. Hall, Organist; George E. Ballard, I. S.; Lyman Taylor, Tyler.

The Past Masters of the lodge have been George Robinson, J. W. Robinson, William O. Gould, and H. F. Barnes.

KING SOLOMON CHAPTER, R. A. M., was chartered June 12, 1860, with the following charter-members: Stephen Douglas, John T. Jordan, David Allen, John Warner, Elias Smith, John Crosby, Henry Fobes, Thomas Smith, Simeon Pepper, all resident in or near the town of Enfield, Mass. The present officers of the chapter are Elgin R. Foster, M. E. H. P.; William T. D. French, E. K.; Sylvester W. Bangs, E. S.; Aram Warburton, C. H.; Walter P. Sutcliffe, P. S.; Thomas Rennison, R. A. C.; Joseph L. Cowles, Treas.; John T. Winslow, Sec.; Henry O. Caryl, M. 3d V.; John H. Chaffee, M. 2d V.; Daniel W. Ainsworth, M. 1st V.; Rev. John L. Marsh, Chaplain; Wales H. Newland, S. S.; William Kennedy, J. S.; Lyman Taylor, Tyler.

The Past High-Priests of the order have been George J. Sanger, D. B. Gillett, George Robinson, F. A. Spear, A. Sandford, and J. Gates.

WASHINGTON COUNCIL, R. AND S. M.,

was chartered June 11, 1873, with the following charter-members: John T. Jordan, Elias Smith, George Robinson, Edward P. Howard, Horace Hunt, Charles D. Johnson, Henry Fobes, John F. Phelps, Marshal Fox, Hubert M. Coney. The present officers of the council are James Ripley, T. I. M.; Aram Warburton, D. M.; Charles S. Robinson, P. C. of W.; John W. Robinson, Recorder; Addison Sandford, Treas.; Walter P. Sutcliffe, C. of G.; Thomas Rennison, C. of C.; John H. Chaffee, S.; Daniel C. Gates, Chaplain; Lyman Taylor, Sentinel. The past T. I. Masters have been J. F. Phelps and H. M. Coney.

THE YOUNG MEN'S LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

is a direct descendant of the Ware Literary Association, a society which formerly existed in the town, and whose object was the encouragement and development of literary tastes among its members. Differences arising in that association regarding the policy and expediency of admitting ladies to its membership, certain of its members withdrew from the society March 30, 1871, and, with others, formed another association, known as the Young Men's Debating Society. This association established a reading-room, and also a library, the nucleus of the latter being the circulating library of the Ware Mechanics' and Manufacturers' Association, an old and defunct organization. The former was incorporated as the Young Men's Library Association, under the general laws of the State, in 1873, and since then has received assistance from the town.

The association is distinct from the town, yet receives regular support from it, the amount of the last appropriation being $892.18. The library is open to all the citizens of the town, and comprises 3490 carefully-selected volumes, classified upon the Dewey system. About 1000 persons draw books from the library, the weekly circulation being nearly 400 volumes. The influence of the institution is shown in the fact that the works of fiction now drawn from the library are but 60 per cent. of the whole number withdrawn, against 83 per cent. the first year, and 75 per cent. in 1875 and 1876.

The officers of the association are: President, J. H. G. Gilbert; Vice-President, W. C. Eaton; Clerk, M. L. Snow; Assistant Clerk, E. C. Merriam; Treas., D. F. Marsh; Auditor, Geo. S. Snow. The directors are J. H. G. Gilbert, W. C. Eaton, W. H. Cutler, C. C. Hitchcock, and F. D. Gilmore.

ENCAMPMENT J. W. LAWTON, POST NO. 85, G. A. R.,

was organized May 12, 1869, and meets the second and fourth Thursdays of each month in G. A. R. Hall, Sandford's block. The present officers are G. E. Fairbank, P. C.; H. Connell, S. V. C.; John Lashua, J. V. C.; E. E. Richardson, Adj't; G. S. Marsh, Q. S.; Dr. E. C. Richardson, S.; D. C. Spear, Chap.; M. G. Miller, O. D.; S. Grendell, O. G.; M. Keefe, S. M.; W. McMahon, Q. M. S. The Past Post Commanders have been S. B. Bond, Wm. E. Lewis, George S. Marsh, H. M. Coney, Chas. S. Robinson, Aram Warburton.

THE ST. JEAN BAPTISTE SOCIETY was organized about 1873, and meets the first Sunday of every month in Guild's Block, Main Street. The present officers are: President, J. H. Allard; Vice-President, E. Chapdelaine; Secretary, Joseph Richardson; Corresponding Secretary, Joseph Deslauriers; Treasurer, Moses Deslauriers; Assistant Treasurer, Joseph Allard. The objects of the association are mutual help and fraternal co-operation.

THE ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS

meets semi-weekly at Hibernian Hall, in Guild's Block. The present officers are: Pres., P. H. Monahan; V. P., Wm. J. Canavan; F. S., John Shay; R. S., E. A. Mooney; Treas. John Kelly.

Besides these organizations there are others, such as the Reform Club, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Young People's Temperance Society, which are doing a good work in the town, and other benevolent and social organizations.

THE WARE FIRE DEPARTMENT

was organized in 1845. The present officers of fire district No. 1 of the town of Ware are: Clerk, C. E. Blood; Treasurer, A. Sandford; Prudential Committee, George C. Holden, F. P. Clark, George Gould; Chief Engineer, S. D. Marsh; First Assistant, George E. Fairbank; Second Assistant, N. J. Dillon; Third Assistant, Owen McCardell; Fourth Assistant, W. C. Sheldon.

Oregon Engine Company, No. 3, was organized in July, 1877. The present officers are: Foreman, Henry Caryl; First Assistant, Henry Connell; Clerk, M. F. French; Treasurer, C. E. Blood; Steward, Luther Fairbank. The company has an excellent hand-engine in use, and a second, which was run by the extinct Columbia Company, is also in the village.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The falls at the village afford a fine power, the river falling more than 70 feet in less than that number of rods. As early as 1730, Capt. Jabez Olmstead came from Brookfield, and, purchasing land near the river, built two mills upon the falls. His heirs sold the mills, with about 600 acres of land, covering the whole territory of the village, as far west as Muddy Brook, to Isaac Magoon; from him, in 1765, the property passed to his son Alexander. At this time the mills consisted of a saw-mill and a grist-mill, which were widely known as Magoon's Mills.

In April, 1813, Alpheus Demond and Col. Thomas Denney purchased of James Magoon, a grandson of Alexander, the mills, with about 400 acres of land, for $4500. They built a new dam on the middle falls, repaired the saw-mill and grist-mill, started two carding-machines, and began the manufacture of machinery. In 1814 a cotton-mill was built on the middle falls, where the new mill now stands. At this time there were no mills in this part of the State, except a small one at Worcester, and one at Monson. The power-loom was unknown, the intention being to make yarn to be put out to and woven in hand-loom. The death of Col. Denney, at Leicester, in December, 1814, seems to have thrown a dark cloud over the manufacturing prospects here. Mr. Demond, either from the want of capital or from some other cause, being unable to carry on the business, the mills stood still until 1821.

Ware Company.—In April, 1821, the property, including mills, machinery, and land, was sold to Messrs. Holbrook & Dexter, of Boston, for $15,000 (a loss to the former owners of nearly $12,000). A company was soon formed, including a number of Boston capitalists, and in 1823 the Ware Company was incorporated, with a capital of $600,000. They built the same year a woolen-mill on the south side of the river, opposite the cotton-mill, taking their power from the river at the middle falls. This is the only mill that was built prior to 1845 that is still standing, and even this has been greatly enlarged and improved, being now nearly four times as large as formerly. In 1824 this company built a large mill, 271 feet long and one story high, taking water from the upper falls. It was built on the spot where the upper brick mill now stands, and to put in the foundation, and build the canal, wheel-pits, and raceways, was a very expensive undertaking, much of the work being rock excavation. The plans were on a large scale, but caused the death of the company without its making a dividend.

Hampshire Manufacturing Company.—In 1829 the Hampshire Manufacturing Company was incorporated, with a capital of $400,000, and purchased all of the property of the Ware Company. In 1836 they enlarged the woolen-mill and furnished it with 7 sets of new machinery. In the great financial crash of 1837 the Hampshire Company failed, a dividend never having been declared from either the earnings or the capital.

Otis Company.—In 1839 the Otis Company was organized, with a capital of $350,000. They purchased all the property of the Hampshire Manufacturing Company on the north side of the river, and increased their capital to $500,000. In June, 1845, the mill built by the Ware Company in 1824 was destroyed by fire. The company immediately began the erection of a new brick mill on the same site, 200 feet long by 50 feet wide, and five stories high. They also built one the same year, of stone, of the same size, on the fall below. In 1856 and 1857 the old mills on the middle falls were taken down, and a new mill was erected, 200 feet long by 53 feet wide, and six stories high. In 1869 an addition of 50 feet in length was made to this mill, making it 250 feet long by 53 feet wide. The mill is built of brick, and is to-day as handsome a factory as can be found in Western Massachusetts. In 1861 the Otis Company, in connection with Mr. Stevens, built a new dam of granite, quarried in the western part of this town, at the middle falls. In 1864 they removed the looms from the new mill, and, replacing them with knitting-machines, began the manufacture of hosiery. This branch of their business proving successful, they have constantly added new machines, not only for the manufacture of hosiery, but also for making gentlemen's underwear. The knitting-machines are all of the best English workmanship, and were imported by the company direct from England.

The company are now running in their three mills 26,568 spindles, 76 looms, and about 75 knitting-machines, which produce annually 214,000 dozen of hose and gentlemen's underwear, and 6,000,000 yards of denims, stripes, tickings, and fancy duckings. The value of these goods is upward of $1,200,000, and 2,500,000 pounds of raw cotton are consumed in their manufacture. The monthly pay-roll amounts to over $25,000, and the company employs 1100 persons. The company also have a large mill at Palmer, Mass., which is treated of in the history of that town. The agents of the company, since its organization, have been: from 1839 to 1852, Henry Lyon; from 1852 to 1859, Arthur L. Devens; from 1859 to 1866, S. J. Wethrell; from 1866 to 1867, J. H. Sawyer; from 1867 to 1870, S. J. Wethrell; from 1870 to 1871, S. B. Bond; from 1871 to date, E. H. Baker.

Gilbert & Stevens.—In 1841, Messrs. George H. Gilbert and Charles A. Stevens came from North Andover, in the eastern part of the State, and purchased of the assignees of the Hampshire Company all the property belonging to them on the south side of the river, including the water-power, land, woolen-mill, and machinery. These gentlemen formed a co-partnership under the name of Gilbert & Stevens, and began the manufacture of broadcloth. In 1846 they built a new mill on the fall below the one they then occupied, and put in four sets of woolen machinery. The mill was five stories high, and 80 feet long by 50 feet wide, and was built of granite taken from a quarry on the road to Warren. In 1844 this firm turned their attention to the manufacture of fine flannels, and so great was their success that their goods not only took the front rank in this country, but at the "World's Fair" held in London, in 1851, they were awarded the highest prize (a gold medal) over all the competitors of the Old World. In 1851 the firm of Gilbert & Stevens was dissolved, and a division of the property was made, Mr. Gilbert taking the new mill, or, as it was called, the "Granite Mill," and Mr. Stevens receiving the old, or "Ware Woolen-Mill."

George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company.—Mr. Gilbert continued the manufacture of white flannels, and in 1857 began the production of opera flannels. In 1860 he purchased the property in Hardwick known as the "Old Paper-Mill." Removing the old mill, he erected a large brick factory 130 feet long by 55 feet wide, and four stories high. He also built many other buildings and laid the foundation of a village, which has since received the name of Gilbertville, in honor of its founder. About this time the firm of George H. Gilbert & Co. was formed, Mr. Lewis N. Gilbert being admitted as the junior partner. In 1862 this company added to their other business the manufacture of balmoral skirts. So popular did these goods prove that for several years the company was unable to supply the demand, though they kept a large part of their works running by night as well as by day. In 1867 they built another large mill at Gilbertville, 230 feet long, 68 feet wide, and five stories high. In 1869 the firm of George H. Gilbert & Co. was dissolved, and the George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company was incorporated, with a capital of $350,000. Mr. George H. Gilbert was the president and Mr. Lewis N. Gilbert the treasurer of the corporation. Mr. George H. Gilbert died May 6, 1869, at the age of sixty-three years. At his death, Mr. Lewis N. Gilbert was chosen president and Mr. Charles D. Gilbert treasurer of the corporation. J. H. G. Gilbert is secretary. They are now running in their mills at Gilbertville 28 set of cards and 271 looms. In their mill in Ware they have 7 set of cards and 80 looms, besides the machinery necessary for finishing all the goods manufactured by them at Gilbertville. They employ upward of 700 hands in all their mills. This company produces annually over 3,500,000 yards of various grades and styles of fine flannels, consuming about 2,000,000 pounds of wool per year. Their monthly pay-roll for all of their mills is about $14,000.

Ware Woolen-Mills, Charles A. Stevens & Co.—Mr. Stevens, since the dissolution of the firm of Gilbert & Stevens, in 1851, has continued the manufacture of fine white flannels, and within the last few years has been extensively engaged in the production of opera flannels. He has enlarged the old mill built by the Ware Company in 1825, by the addition of another story, and about 60 feet to its length. In 1870 he built a new building just east of the old mill, which is known as the "Ware Opera-House," not on account of its musical capacities, but because it is used almost entirely for the production and finishing of opera flannels. Mr. Stevens has admitted his son, Mr. Charles E. Stevens, into partnership, and the firm is known as Charles A. Stevens & Co. When running full the firm produces about 600,000 yards of fine opera flannels annually, using about 325,000 pounds of wool, and employing about 175 persons.

Other industries have existed at various times. The principal of these has been the manufacture of straw goods, which was commenced in Ware in 1832 by John B. Fairbank, and afterward pursued by Avery Clark, Lorenzo Demond, C. E. & H. S. Blood, and others. The manufacture of wagons, boots and shoes, and other small industries is still carried on to some extent in the town.

THE OTIS COMPANY'S GAS-WORKS are located on Monroe Street, in the south end of the village. They were first owned by the Ware Gas-Light Company, organized in 1854, and consisting of the Otis Company and Charles A. Stevens. The company dissolved in 1862, when the Otis Company became sole proprietors. The works supply gas through the village, and manufacture about 2,000,000 feet annually. William Metcalf has been the superintendent of the works for the past twenty-two years.

C. A. Heims

MILITARY.

The military record of Ware is highly creditable. To the earlier wars the town sent a number of her citizens whose names it is impossible now to give. During the war of the Revolution, when money was scarce, the inhabitants, being poor, suffered great hardships. They do not seem to have been destitute of patriotism, for the records show that they made great efforts to comply with the requisitions for men and supplies. On Aug. 29, 1774, fifty pounds of powder and two hundred pounds of lead were provided by the town, and a committee of correspondence, consisting of John Downing, Wm. Brakenridge, Joseph Foster, Maverick Smith, Benj. Cummings, Samuel Dinsmore, Lemuel Blackmer, Abraham Cummings, and Thomas Jenkins, was chosen. On December 26th, of the same year, James Lemmon, Jonathan Rogers, Daniel Gould, and Joseph Patterson were added to the committee.

In 1777 the town "voted to raise eight men for the Continental army, and to give each man £20 as a bounty from the town." In 1778, "voted to raise the clothing for the soldiers, to allow $6 a pair for shoes, $4 a pair for stockings, 10 shillings a yard for cloth a yard wide. Edward Demond, Jr., to provide 21 yards." These prices were in consequence of the depreciation of the Continental money.

"In August, 1786, the rebellion began to make trouble in Western Massachusetts, and a town-meeting was called on the 18th to 'see if the town will choose a delegate or delegates to attend at a county convention that is appointed to be holden at Hatfield, on Tuesday, the 22d of August inst., at 10 A.M., at the house of Col. Seth Murray, to see if a constitutional way of relief or some legal method cannot be proposed for the security and safety of the good people of this commonwealth, against the burdens and distresses that prevail at the present day.' Capt. Bullen was chosen to go to the convention. David Brown, Isaac Pepper, and Daniel Gould were chosen a committee to give directions to Capt. Bullen. In November, Isaac Pepper was chosen delegate to a convention at Hatley, and in Jan., 1787, to another at Hatfield.

"Voted to send a petition to the General Court for a Redress of Grievances, chose a committee of five men to make a draft of a Petition, chose Isaac Pepper, Lieut. Cummings, Mr. Samuel Dinsmore, Capt. Brakenridge, and Mr. William Paige."

"Feb. 1, 1787, voted to send three men as a committee to General Lincoln and Capt. Shays to consult on some measures for peace; chose Capt. Brakenridge, Mr. Parker, and Moses Brown.

"Voted that this town do not allow of any property being brought and kept in this town as prizes, except the person bring a receipt, that possesses said property, from the commander of the department from whence such property is brought, that they have a warrant to the same."

"Voted that this Town, as a town, do not allow of any sleighs, horses, or persons being stooped on the Public Roads by any Persons."

"After the disturbances growing out of the Shays war were passed, the oath of allegiance to the government was required to be taken by town officers, and for several years it was copied into the records and signed by those of whom it was required."

Jan. 15, 1787, "voted to read a copy of a Petition Drawn up by the Convention. Voted that the people are Dissatisfied with Grievances under the Present mode of Government. Voted the 12 articles of Grievances adopted by the Conventions."

The feelings of the town with reference to the rebellion of Shays were in sympathy with the movement, though the names of the soldiers who served in the insurrection, if any, are not known.

With the war of 1812 the town did not sympathize, although a number of citizens were drafted and marched to Boston. Among these were Capt. Scott and Allender Brakenridge. The story is told of the latter, that upon being asked the date of Capt. Scott's commission (with a view of fixing his seniority), he replied "that he was unable to say, but had heard that Capt. Scott was Orderly Sergeant under Pontius Pilate."

WAR OF THE REBELLION.

The record of few towns was more patriotic in the late Rebellion than that of Ware. As early as May, 1861, meetings began to be held in the town, and were continued during the war. The resolutions adopted evince the most patriotic spirit and the most self-sacrificing devotion to the Union cause, and the quota of volunteers for the suppression of the Rebellion was promptly furnished.

MILITARY RECORD.

The following is the list of soldiers who served in the army during the Rebellion, as compiled from the town records:

Isaac Alexander, Julius G. Barnes, William H. Bacon, John Buckley, Luke H. Blackmer, Marble F. Bacon, Perez Blackmer, Abmus Bliss, Thomas Brash-nahan, Nelson F. Bond, Wyatt M. Bassett, Matthew Bannister, George F. Barr, Albert Bennett, Henry P. Brainard, Sylvester B. Bond, Martin L. Barnes, Newell A. Bacon, Frank Baker, Charles H. R. Ball, Daniel Buckley, William A. Barton, E. A. Bassett, William Bartlett, Joseph Batiste, Daniel W. Barton, Henry S. Blood, Lucius H. Chilson, Edwin H. Coney, Charles Converse, Julius A. Cushman, Thos. Cavanaugh, Daniel Coombs, Hugh Costello, George S. Canterbury, Henry O. Caryl, George Cashell, Hubert M. Coney, Frederick Corbit, Marcus W. Cowles, James Craven, James Connell, Otis Cummings, Charles Crocker, James Dempsey, Thos. Donovan, Edward Dowd, Alexander Dick, George H. Demond, James Davis, Jr., John W. Dunbar, Lawrence Dunbar, Francis Denny, Alpheus Demond, Frank H. Eastwood, Luther Fairbank, Alfred Fisherdict, Jas. S. Fisherdict, Eugene Fletcher, Elmer H. French, George E. Fairbank, Joseph Foster, Charles Fletcher, Sebastian Grundell, J. Duff Green, J. Graham, Walter F. Gardner, John M. Gibbs, John Glun, Michael Goodwin, H. V. B. Grout, John W. Gage, Joseph D. Green, Thomas H. Gaynor, Luther Gilbert, Orran H. Howard, Warren V. Howard, William F. Hatstatt, Daniel Hampton, Edward A. Howland, Henry C. Hastings, Harrison Hill, Patrick Hayes, W. S. B. Hopkins, Newton F. Hitchcock, Wm. A. Howard, Otis Holden, Daniel Holden, Charles Hunnum, John C. Johnston, J. Edward Jennings, Emery W. Johnson, Charles A. Johnston, James Kenney, John S. Kilmer, Ransom Kendali, David Kennedy, Jos. W. Lawton, Charles T. Lamberton, John Lashua, David P. Lamb, Wm. E. Lewis, Henry C. Lamberton, E. F. Mudgett, Wm. McMahan, Alexander Murdock, Richard McNaney, Patrick McMahan, Robert L. Mahon, George L. Marsh, John F. Mott, John McKellup, Michael McKinney, Patrick Maloney, Michael O'Brien, James W. Olney, Thomas O'Sullivan, Clark J. Osborn, Lewis C. Olds, Daniel L. Osborne, Henry S. Osbourne, Charles Parmenter, Emerson O. Puffer, John F. Phelps, Joseph Quirillian, Thomas Ronan, Thomas E. Raymond, Henry M. Robbins, Jos. D. Rogers, Joseph Stone, Charles Snow, Samuel H. Sawin, Royal A. Smith, James O. Seaniens, Charles Seaniens, Milton Sagendorph, Edward Sagendorph, Silas A. Spooner, Charles F. Stearns, Frank D. Stearns, Robert C. Sally, Francis N. Simonds, George W. Snow, George W. Stevens, William D. Snell, Theodore D. Shaw, Michael Thornton, Dennis Towne, Hollis Turner, Dwight A. Taylor, Daniel Tierney, Frank E. Tisdale, James W. Tisdale, Charles E. Tisdale, Alonzo White, Henry Walker, Ezra P. Warburton, Hiram A. Wilcox, Jr., J. H. Wilcox, Chaucey Wilcox, William Witherow, Charles E. Woodward, John Woodis, Hiram Warburton, Wales J. Wilder, William H. Washburn, Asa Breckinridge, Chauncey Converse, Hiram Cowles, George P. Davis, Alpheus Demond, William B. Gould, John R. Greenleaf, Samuel A. Hall, — Haskell, William F. Howard, John W. Howe, J. Gilbert Hill, Charles S. Knight, Stillman C. Lord, John W. Robinson, W. E. Wright, J. W. Hastings, Patrick Boyle, John Boyle, Henry Burton, Silas A. Barton, Horace Cowles, James L. Dunbar, George F. Dunbar, Edward L. Foster, William H. Gibbs, Sidney Hewitt, William Hastings, Alva A. Knights, Timothy Lond, George S. Marsh, David Rogers, William Towne.

On March 4, 1867, the town, in recognition of the patriotic services of her soldiers who fell in the war, appropriated the sum of $1200 to the erection of a monument to their memory. It stands in Aspen Grove Cemetery, near the principal entrance, and presents a beautiful and imposing appearance. The inscription on the face is:

"OUR PATRIOT SOLDIERS, 1865.

"N. C. Andrews, G. F. Barr, J. Buckley, O. Cummings, J. M. Dunbar, A. Fisherdict, J. M. Gage, J. Glynn, W. Hastings, J. C. Johnston, R. McNancy, A. B. Murdock, J. J. Rogers, F. H. Saunders, G. W. Snow, J. W. Tisdale, J. Woodis, C. H. R. Ball, E. A. Barr, H. A. Crocker, G. F. Dunbar, F. H. Eastwood, J. S. Fisherdict, W. F. Gardner, H. V. B. Grout, W. F. Howard, J. W. Lawton, M. McNancy, L. C. Olds, T. Ronan, W. D. Snell, J. Stone, W. Witherow, W. E. Wright.

"1867."

On the right side are the names of P. Malony, P. Denny, T. Stafford, W. F. Hatstat, H. A. Wilcox, G. Gashell, D. Combs, N. A. Graw.

For assistance rendered in the compilation of this history, the writer is chiefly indebted to the Hon. William Hyde, whose excellent address, delivered at the opening of the new town-hall, March 31, 1847, supplemented by his personal co-operation, has been of great value. Thanks are also due to Otis Lane, Esq., Hon. Chas. A. Stevens, Benj. Bond, the town clerk, pastors, merchants, manufacturers, and other citizens, who have cordially assisted in the work.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

HON. CHARLES A. STEVENS

was born at North Andover, Essex Co., Mass., Aug. 9, 1816. His father, Nathaniel Stevens, was one of the earliest woolen manufacturers in this country, and was an officer in the war of 1812. His grandfather served in the Revolutionary army, and was in the battle of Bunker Hill. His great-grandfather was killed at Lake George during the French-and-Indian war. Their record was one of brave and faithful service.

Mr. Stevens received his education in the common schools, and at the Franklin Academy, in Andover, Mass. He then spent a year in travel and study abroad, returning to this country in August, 1841, when he commenced business as a manufacturer of woolen goods, at Ware, Mass., in company with the late Hon. George H. Gilbert, under the firm-name of Gilbert & Stevens. The firm was dissolved in 1851, Mr. Stevens taking the old mill, where he continued in the same business. In 1872 he formed a copartnership with his eldest son, Charles E. Stevens, under the firm-name of Charles A. Stevens & Co.; which business relations still exist.

Mr. Stevens commenced his political life as a Democrat, but he would not follow his party when to follow it was to sustain slavery, and he was one of the first to enter the anti-slavery ranks. It meant something and cost something in those days to take this position. He remained a leader and earnest worker in the Free-Soil party, and has ever been on the side of freedom and equal rights for all.

He has held many offices in the town, and trusts of a public nature. Mr. Stevens was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1853, and was on the committee on banks and banking, and he took an active part in shaping the legislation on this subject. He was a delegate to the Republican Convention which nominated Lincoln in 1860, and also to the convention which nominated Grant in 1868. He was a member of the Governor's Council in 1866 and 1867. He was a member of the 43d Congress from the 10th Massachusetts District, filling the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Alvah Crocker.

Mr. Stevens married, in 1842, Maria Tyler, daughter of the late Jonathan Tyler, of Lowell, Mass. He has two sons and one daughter.

ENFIELD.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THE town of Enfield is situated in the eastern part of the county of Hampshire, and is bounded on the north by Prescott and Pelham, on the south by Ware, on the east by Greenwich and Hardwick, and on the west by Belchertown, in the same county. It occupies a territory about five and a quarter miles long and three and a half wide, comprising about twelve thousand acres of land. The eastern and western lines of the town are quite irregular; the northern and southern are nearly east-and-west lines.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is neither mountainous nor very level; the surface is interspersed with hills of respectable proportions. Great Quabbin Mount lies south of the village, and attains an elevation of about 500 feet above Swift River. Mount Ram, north and west of the main village, rises to an altitude of 300 feet, while Little Quabbin, which lies north and east of the village, is somewhat smaller. The view from the summits of these mountains is truly picturesque, overlooking a wide range of country. Smaller hills exist in different parts of the town.

The town is well watered by the east and west branches of Swift River, the latter partly separating Enfield from Belchertown. The east branch furnishes several fine water-privileges, which have been utilized by the manufacturing enterprises of the town from an early day. Cadwell Creek, an affluent of the west branch, waters the western section, while several small brooks exist in other parts of the town.

Trane and Morton ponds are small bodies of water in the southeastern part of the town.

The soil of Enfield is productive, though not of the richest character, producing the cereals, with the exception of wheat, in fair abundance. The best land lies in the valley, through which flows the east branch of the river.

Indian arrow-heads, and other Indian relics, that are occasionally found in the neighborhood of Little Quabbin, evince the former occupation of the soil by the red man.

RAILROADS.

The Springfield, Athol, and Northwestern Railroad traverses the town north and south. It was first located in the fall of 1872, and has two stations in the town,—one at the lower village and another at the upper village, which latter is designated as "Smith's Station." Another railroad, known as the Massachusetts Central, has been located and partly finished, but has not yet been put in working order.

SETTLEMENT.

Of the condition and character of the territory of Enfield prior to its first settlement by the whites but little information can be given. The Indians left the neighborhood some time before the settlement, and lying, as it did, between the two routes of travel from Boston westward, its location was mostly unknown. Tradition says that the soil was considered very good, and that it was covered with a forest of very heavy timber. The land on the hills is said to have been very fertile, not only producing large trees, but grass in abundance. Great Quabbin was thought by the early inhabitants to contain valuable ores; noises and explosions were frequently heard in the hill by people living on the east side, and the quaking is said to have been so heavy at times as to rattle the dishes on the shelves in the houses.

The territory of Enfield was originally included within the limits of the town of Greenwich, being known before the incorporation of the latter town by the general name of Quabbin. Part of the town was also comprised in the "Equivalent lands" referred to in the history of Ware.

The exact date of the first settlement of the town cannot be given. The first grant of the land was made by the General Court on Jan. 14, 1736, to whom and under what conditions a reference to the history of the town of Greenwich will fully disclose. It is probable that the first settlement of the town commenced about that date. David Patterson, the "first native of the town," was born in the year 1735, and was a son of John Patterson, whose name is mentioned in the original grant, and who may be said to have been the first white settler of Enfield. He located about a mile south of the village, and built his first rude dwelling near a high rock, that stood on the Josiah W. Flint farm. He brought with him two sons, William and James. They settled on the present McMillin farm, in the north part of the town, soon after their father located.

RES. OF HENRY FOBES, ENFIELD, MASS.

RES. OF J. J. HOWE, ENFIELD, MASS.

RES. OF L. F. SHEARER, ENFIELD, MASS.

RES. OF DAVID BLODGETT, ENFIELD, MASS.

John Patterson, with the Stevensons (of whom David was one) and McMillins, who settled in the town soon after Patterson, about the year 1742, were Presbyterians, from the North of Ireland. The young Pattersons were "mighty hunters" and expert wrestlers. David Patterson had three sons,—Robert, Oliver, and John. He was a superior wrestler, and it is said that on one occasion a messenger came down from New Salem for him at midnight to visit the latter place to wrestle with a man who had overthrown all competitors. He responded to the call, laid the champion on his back, and returned the same day. Of the Stevensons there were four brothers. Edward and Isaac were hatters, and lived and worked in the Hooker house; their shop for felting and dyeing hats was on the bank of the river below the house. John lived on the farm situated on the hill north of the Lamson place.

Another early settler of the town was John Rea, who resided, in 1764, south of the village, near the Bondsville road. Several brothers lived in town about the same time. They were large land-owners, and built several houses. Some of them subsequently removed to Pittsford, N. Y.

A man by the name of Carver settled early in the town, and owned a large tract of land on the south side of the Swift River, including the farms of S. Boynton and S. S. Pope, and a wide strip of land on that side down to the Cabot place.

Other families who settled early in the town, all of them prior to 1793, were Sylvanus Howe, son of Lieut. Howe, who preceded him, and who lived on the road to Belchertown, about two miles from the village of Enfield, where his son, Joseph J. Howe, now resides; Daniel Howard, who located on the "old Howard place," where his father had preceded him, and where his descendants, the Crosbys, still reside; David Newcomb, who lived in the east part of the town; Capt. Joseph Hooker (grandfather of Gen. Joseph Hooker, prominent in the late war), who was a large tract-owner in the town, owning most of the land between the two villages, and who lived on the spot now occupied by the residence of Edward P. Smith; Robert Field, also a large tract-owner, and a man of enterprise, public spirit, and great personal popularity, and who lived opposite the present residence of Chas. Richards, Esq.; Benjamin Harwood, who early left Hardwick, where he was born, settling first in Greenwich, where he married a daughter of Rev. Robert Cutler, the first minister of that town, and who settled finally at the upper village of Enfield, where he passed the remainder of his life; Nathan Hunting, who settled on the Cabot place, and early engaged in the business of a miller; Caleb Keith, who settled in the west part of the town; William Stone, who located where Ezra Cary now lives; Ebenezer Daggett, who located where Warren Sadler now resides, and who had a blacksmith-shop near his house; James Richards, who was born Dec. 13, 1766, and who finally settled in the east part of the town, where Sidney R. Richards now resides, passing an honorable and useful life, and leaving a posterity that have been an honor to his name and to the town in which they were born; Joseph Ruggles, who lived about four miles south of the village; Abner Eddy, who resided where Washington Aldrich now lives; Ebenezer and Barnabus Rich, the first of whom owned an early grist-mill in the town, and lived where Benj. Harwood now resides, and the latter of whom served in the Revolutionary war; Joseph Fobes, who lived in the south part of the town; William Morton, who lived on the old Monson turnpike, where L. M. Morton now lives, and Nathaniel Lane, who lived about half a mile south of the village, where Geo. L. Richards now lives.

Other early families were those of Oliver Kinsley, who lived in the south part of the town, near where John Rohan now lives; Phineas Howe, who lived on the place now occupied by C. M. Howe; John Rich, father of William, who lived where the Thurston family now resides; Moses Colton, who occupied the house now the Swift River Hotel; Simeon Stone, who lived in the old "Flemming house;" Paul Paine, who resided on the old Monson turnpike, near the Richards place, and who was a sea-captain; Rufus Powers, who resided at the upper village, where Mr. Bliss now lives; Ichabod Randall, who came from Bridgewater, and settled, as early as 1775, in Enfield, in the south part of the town, on the place now occupied by Alvin Randall, and whose descendants still live in town; and Simeon Waters, who settled early in the town, and was a cloth-dresser and wool-carder by trade, and who removed to Millbury about 1830.

Other early names are those of Rider, Cadwell, Clifford, Colburn, Drake, Collins, Wheeler, Mitchell, Lathrop, Ruggles, Swetland, Pratt, Underwood, Winslow, Bailey, Rice, Briggs, Gross, Gibbs, Clark, Torrance, Lyman, Osborne, Forbush, Messinger, Woodward, McIntosh, Adams, Chickering, Bartlett, Shearer, Newell, Gilbert, Hanks, Barton, Lamson, Kentfield, Weeks, Cary, Snow, Pope, Smith, Hawes, Woods, and Jones.

All traces of most of these earliest families have entirely disappeared from the town, and concerning those that are still nearly or remotely represented in the town but little reliable information can be obtained. Mention may be made of a few.

The Woods family is one of the earliest of those now represented, and has probably contributed more than any other to the industrial, educational, and moral development of the community.

Aaron Woods came from New Braintree, at the age of twenty, and settled in Enfield about the year 1780. He established himself south of the village, purchasing Great Quabbin Mountain and the adjoining land. On that mountain he erected his first dwelling-house, which finally gave way to a second. This house was afterward removed and remodeled, and is now the farm-house of Capt. William B. Kimball. Mr. Woods had a family of ten children,—five sons and five daughters. The names of these children were Aaron, Moses, Leonard, Sally, Josiah B., Catharine, Serena, Patty, Jonathan E., and Anna. Anna died quite young.

Aaron, the eldest, left home at an early age and learned the trade of nail-making, removed to Canada and taught school during the war of 1812, and, having married, returned to Enfield about 1825 or 1826. He located where his widow, Mrs. Caroline Woods, now resides, and engaged in the manufacture of hand-cards and card-clothing. His children now living are Leonard, who resides in Boston and is a broker by profession; J. Edwards, who keeps a store in Enfield and is postmaster of that town; Josiah B., residing in Enfield; Caroline M., also living in Enfield; Harriet D., formerly a teacher in the State Primary School at Monson, but now residing in Enfield; and Catharine, who married John N. Lacy, of Palmer, Mass.

Moses, the next child, left town early, and learned the trade of a wool-carder and cloth-dresser, and, after living at South Hadley Falls and Montague, married and returned to Enfield about 1824 or 1825. He built the house where J. Scott Wilder now lives, and after residing there for a time removed to a farm in the south part of the town, now occupied by Henry Webster, and there died, in 1845.

Leonard, the third child, was born May 7, 1792, and early in life located near the present site of the Minot Manufacturing Company's mill. The house which he first occupied stands near the residence of Augustus Moody. He afterward resided where Mrs. Martha S. Howe now lives. He was largely interested in the manufacture of cards and woolen cloth in Enfield. His children were Anna, the wife of Ariel Parrish, superintendent of public schools in the city of New Haven, Conn.; Rufus D., residing in Enfield; Persis C., the wife of Rev. George C. Curtis, D.D., of Canandaigua, N. Y.; Charlotte, deceased, wife of Daniel B. Gillett, of Enfield; Amanda M. and Susan H., both deceased; Leonard A., who died young; Elizabeth E., wife of Rev. Benj. Labaree, a missionary in Persia; and Ellen, who died young. Sally and Catharine Woods lived in Enfield until their decease.

Josiah B. first located in the village, but finally erected the building and lived where Capt. Wm. B. Kimball now resides. He was long and successfully identified with the manufacturing enterprises of the town. He had children: Henry, who died young; Josiah B., Jr., who also died young; Charlotte J., the wife of Edward P. Smith, of Enfield; Fanny, wife of Capt. Wm. B. Kimball, of Enfield; Anna and Elizabeth, who died young; Mary, wife of W. E. Chandler, of New Haven; and Robert M., pastor of the Congregational Church in Hatfield, Mass.

Patty became the first wife of Ichabod Pope, of Enfield, and died without children; Serena became the second wife of Mr. Pope, and had three children, all of whom are now living in Providence, R. I.

Jonathan E. settled in Enfield, and married a granddaughter of Gen. Ebenezer Mattoon, of Amherst. He had one child, who died young and was buried with its father, the wife following soon after.

Freeman Pope came from Bridgewater, and settled in 1799 in the south part of the town of Enfield, on the farm now occupied by Lyman D. Potter. His son Ichabod was born in Bridgewater in 1796, and is one of the oldest of the early residents of the town now living. Solon S. Pope was born Oct. 28, 1805, in Enfield, and is still living in the town. Wm. R. Pope, of Providence, R. I., was born in Enfield in 1803, and passed a large portion of his life in the town. Melenette, a daughter of Freeman Pope, was born in 1800, and is also residing in Providence. The remainder of his eleven children are deceased.

Jesse Fobes came from Bridgewater in 1796, and settled in an old house that stood on the Fobes farm, about thirty or forty rods from the present residence of Deacon Henry Fobes, who was four years of age when his father came to town. Judge Charles Forbes,* of Northampton, judge of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, a son of Jesse Fobes and half-brother of Henry, was born in the town, and removed to Northampton in 1818.

The Jones brothers, who afterward became prominently identified with the business interests of Enfield, came to town with their mother, who became the wife of Robert Field, Esq., in the first part of the present century. Their names, in the order of age, were Elnathan, Marshall, Thomas, and Samuel, and the impress of their energy and business qualifications is still felt in the town, where some of their descendants reside.

Elihu Lyman, Esq., located in Enfield early in the present century, and married a daughter of Robert Field, Esq. He was one of the first lawyers who practiced in town, built and resided in the present Congregational parsonage building, and died there.

Ephraim Richards came from South Deerfield to Enfield, in 1811, having formerly resided at Ashford, Conn., Holden, Mass., and Montague, Mass. He was a merchant and manufacturer in Enfield, and a man of prominence until his death.

He was a representative to the General Court several terms, the first treasurer of Enfield, and a member of the last Constitutional Convention. His sons, Chas. Richards, Esq., trial-justice, and George L. Richards, still reside in the town.

Hartford Hawes came from Rentum by way of Belcher-town, where he tarried for a time, and settled in Enfield in 1811, in a house that stood about where George L. Richards' orchard now is. He died at the age of seventy-five. His sons, Lewis and John H., still reside in the town, the former having pursued the occupation of a shoemaker for the last twenty-seven years.

David and Alvin Smith came from Granby about 1820, and located at the upper village, where they carried on the manufacture of satinette warps until the formation of the Swift River Company, in 1852. They were then joined by their brother Edward, who, with his sons, Edward P. and Henry M., still conduct the manufacturing enterprises of the upper village, which is denominated "Smith's" by the railroad company. To the energy and business ability of this family the upper village is indebted for its present importance.

David Smith had, for children, Cornelia, who married Seth Richards, a native of Enfield, and a wealthy resident of San Francisco, Cal.; Edwin, who died in Boston; Edwin W., connected with Smith's American Organ Company, in Boston; David, Jr., who graduated at Williams College, now deceased; and Henry W., connected with Smith's American Organ Company, in Boston.

Alvin had children: Frank, deceased; Jane, still residing in Enfield; Isabella, wife of Hon. Rufus D. Woods, of Enfield; Samuel D., who is at the head of Smith's American Organ Company, Boston; and Richard B., a former merchant of Boston, now deceased.

Capt. Benjamin F. Potter settled in Enfield about 1825, and was a mason by trade, as well as a farmer. He located where his son, Lyman D. Potter, now resides. Another son, Nathan D. Potter, also resides in town, and is the agent of the Springfield, Athol, and Northeastern Railroad Company. A third son, H. M. Potter, is one of the deputy sheriffs of the county, at Northampton.

The early inhabitants of the town came mostly from Bridgewater and Easton. They liked the hills; and, as they rode mostly on horseback, they did not need good roads. There were formerly at least ten inhabited houses on Great Quabbin Mountain; now there are none. Game was very plenty in those days. Wolves were frequently heard howling in the night, and bears were quite numerous. Benjamin Cooley, who lived on the Hale farm, now in Greenwich, is said in one fall to have caught bears enough to buy a yoke of oxen that cost $40. A man named Weeks is said to have caught salmon in the west branch of Swift River at an early day.

Ephraim Woodward, another early inhabitant, went to Northampton with an ox-cart, and, being late at night in returning home, was attacked by a pack of wolves. He jumped into his cart, and with an axe kept them at bay until he reached a settlement. On the westerly point of Great Quabbin Mountain is a pinnacle which was called the "Telegraph." In Revolutionary times a man named Grant began to arrange there a point for telegraph signals. The first station east was in New Braintree, and west was Mount Holyoke. Before the work was completed the war closed, and it was abandoned.

TAVERNS.

It is impossible to name with certainty the first house of public entertainment in Enfield. Tradition says that early taverns were kept where Lyman D. Potter's barn now stands, and another where Daniel B. Gillett resides. One of the earliest known inns was kept by Robert Field, Esq., in the old Field residence. Another early tavern stood about where Charles Richards' residence now stands, first by Peleg Canedy, and after him by Ebenezer Heald and Samuel Kennedy. What is known as the "Old Tavern Stand," opposite the Congregational Church, was erected by Simon Stone, and kept after him by Luke Stone for a long time, and still later by Nichols Varney, Jonah Gross, Joab Bartlett, and Charles Scott, who closed it and removed to Ambrose Packard's tavern, the present Swift River Hotel.

This building was formerly the residence of Reuben Cooley, an early settler of the town. It was remodeled and repaired by Ambrose Packard about 1825 or 1826, and kept by himself and various persons, including Patterson, Charles Scott, Church & Moody, L. V. B. Cook, Daniel Downing, in 1852; Rufus Church, a man named Gates, Henry Frink, Ruddock

* Name changed by act of General Court.

& Bliss, Col. Wilson Andrews; then a man named Estey, John G. Merriam, and Chester S. Hastings, in turn; and finally, April 1, 1866, or 1867, by A. M. Howard. Edmund G. Wells, the present proprietor, took it from Howard, June 22, 1872. About the year 1867, Joseph E. Woods kept a tavern for a short time in the old Hooker house.

STORES.

One of the first stores was by Field & Canedy, the early part of the present century, where the Congregational parsonage now stands. It was afterward kept by Field & Dickinson, John Boyden, Ebenezer Heald, Marshall S. and Thomas Jones, and Jones, Woods & Co.

In the year 1805 or 1806, Alfred Arnold opened a store in a building standing where Haskell's store now is, and was succeeded by Francis Howe.

Joseph Jones kept a store at an early day in the batting- and wicking-mill that stood near the site of the present grist-mill of the Minot Manufacturing Company. Jones & Belcher also kept store there for a short time.

The store at present occupied by J. E. Woods was built, about the year 1830, by Jones & Cutler, who traded there for several years. It has since been kept by Jones & Saxton, Saxton & Field, S. F. Howe, Ephraim and Charles Richards, and Oliver Bryant, about the year 1841; Oliver Bryant alone, Cyrus F. Woods, Woods & Hale, George L. Wilson, George E. Walker, and finally by J. E. Woods, who took it Sept. 1, 1872.

The building in which Ira Haskell does business was erected about the year 1825, and was first occupied for trading purposes by Brown & Andrews, and afterward by Oliver Bryant & Co., E. Richards & Co., Ezra Cary, Warner & Leland, Leland & Gillett, Johnson & Morton, Johnson & Daniels, Haskell & Towne, and Ira Haskell for the last decade.

In March, 1828, J. M. Crosby, a grandson of the first minister of the town, settled in Enfield, and engaged in tailoring over the store now occupied by J. E. Woods. Several years after he removed to the corner now occupied by Gould's tin-shop, and traded in ready-made clothing, boots, and shoes, and carried on a general business. In the year 1861 he changed the character of the enterprise to that of a general dry-goods and grocery business, in which he remained until November, 1876, when a fire destroyed not only his store, but all the buildings up to and including the residence of Charles Richards, Esq.

J. M. Crosby, Jr., a son of Mr. Crosby, then opened a general store in the old town-hall, and continued in business there until his death, in June, 1878. J. M. Crosby is now running the store at that place, closing up his son's estate and pursuing at the same time the tailoring business.

Tucker & Northam had a store for a time opposite the present post-office. E. P. Tucker followed alone, and then Joseph Jones for a short period.

The store at the upper village was opened by E. P. Smith in 1854, and has been kept continuously since by him.

Horace Hunt came from Prescott, and in 1872 erected a store east of the railroad. He traded there for about six years, and then sold to William F. Howe, in May, 1878, who now trades at that point.

Several smaller establishments of various kinds exist in the town, among which the most prominent are the meat-markets of L. S. Boynton and Benjamin J. Harwood.

PHYSICIANS.

The first practitioner of medicine who resided in the town was Dr. William Stone, who lived where Ezra Cary now resides, and practiced in the first part of the present century. The next was Dr. Rice, who was accidentally shot at a regimental muster in Hadley. Dr. Rufus Stone engaged in practice some time after, and is mentioned in the Greenwich records as early as 1818. Other physicians have been Drs. Alvord, Brigham (afterward superintendent of the Utica, N. Y., Insane Asylum), Cleveland, who built the house back of the hotel, practiced for a number of years, and then removed to Springfield; J. N. Hastings, a contemporary of Cleveland, and who subsequently removed to South Hadley; Claggett, who died in town; Gray, Church, McGregor, Wright, Beamis, Smith, E. H. Rockwood, who came from Longmeadow and practiced a great many years; Joseph Hastings, who came from Palmer, and a nephew of Dr. J. N. Hastings; Perkins, a contemporary of Hastings; Ward, Joseph Winslow, a physician of great popularity, and at one time a partner of Dr. Perkins; Norman A. Smith, Knights, Edwin A. Kemp, who removed to Great Barrington in 1876, and Solomon R. Towne, who settled in town June 10, 1876, and is still in practice. John Northam practiced dental surgery in the town for a long time. John N. Felton, D.D.S., settled in the town in October, 1875, and now practices that profession.

LAWYERS.

The town has had a goodly array of lawyers. The first was Joshua N. Upham, who came from Brookfield early in the history of the town, and married Mary, a daughter of Robert Field, Esq. He was an active man, and it is said he could jump over a span of horses standing side by side. He lived but a few years. The next was Elijah Alvord, who came from Greenfield; Warren A. Field followed for a short time; Elihu Lyman came soon after, and was followed by Epaphras Clark, who was admitted to the Bar in 1819, practiced first in Granby, and, removing to Enfield, practiced for a long time. He is credited with the delivery of one of the briefest and most pointed legal arguments on record. The next was Hon. George Ashmun; he was admitted to the Bar in 1830, and immediately settled at Enfield; in a few years he removed to Springfield and formed a copartnership, which lasted for many years, with Hon. Reuben A. Chapman. He was subsequently a member of the State Legislature, of the National House of Representatives, and its speaker in 1840, and was in practice many years in the city of Washington.* William M. Lathrop followed next, and Epaphras Clark was the last regular practitioner in the town.

ROADS AND STAGE-ROUTES.

The first record of a public highway through Enfield was one from Pelham line to Chicopee in 1754; the second, from Palmer to Greenwich in 1761; the third, from Belchertown to Hardwick in 1763. Between the last date and 1794, the majority of the public highways now in use were laid out, although many of them have been altered since. In 1801 a turnpike-road was granted from Belchertown through Enfield to Hardwick line, and the Monson turnpike was run through the east part of the town in 1803. One or more proprietary roads were laid in the territory of Enfield as early as 1740.

The principal stage-route in early days was the Northampton, Worcester and Boston line, whose stages arrived in the town every other day, their arrival causing great excitement and interest.

OLD HOUSES.

Among the oldest houses now standing, mention may be made of the Reuben Fleming house, near Hunt's store; the John Crosby house, one mile south of the village; the Widow Aaron Wood's house; and the one where Deacon Moore lives, which was early occupied by a Mr. Messinger.

MEN OF SPECIAL NOTE.

Among the men of special note that Enfield has produced or fostered may be mentioned Elihu Lyman, Esq., who was a lawyer of reputation, and the first State Senator from the town. He died at an early age, while in the discharge of the duties of that office, in 1826.

* See history of the Bar, general chapters.

Hon. Josiah B. Woods, a native old resident of the town, now deceased, was State Senator in 1845, a member of the last State Constitutional Convention, and a business-man of superior ability and integrity.

Hon. Daniel B. Gillett was State Senator in 1866, and is now the treasurer of the Minot Manufacturing Company.

Hon. Rufus D. Woods, a native and present resident of the town, was State Senator in 1872, and has filled other offices of trust and responsibility, being at one time president of the South Hadley Falls Bank.

Robert Field, Esq., was also a prominent citizen of the town in its early history, was noted for his breadth of thought, liberality, high Christian character, and business qualifications, and in recognition of whose worth the town was named.

Judge Charles E. Forbes, of Northampton, an eminent lawyer and learned judge of the Supreme Court of the State, was also a native of Enfield. He was appointed justice of the Court of Common Pleas in 1847, and of the Supreme Court in 1848.

Other citizens of note have been Solomon Howe, who was a printer, musician, and singing-master, and published singing-books, spelling-books, almanacs, and hymn-books.

Sylvanus Lathrop was a skillful draughtsman and architect; designed and built the present graceful steeple on the Congregational meeting-house, when only twenty years of age, and in 1816 removed to Pittsford, N. Y., took a section of the Western Canal to build, and made money; then removed to Pittsburg, Pa., built a bridge over the Allegheny River, and was appointed the head of a committee to clear the snags and obstructions which hindered navigation.

David Smith, J. B. Woods, Frederick Downing, Benjamin Harwood, and others, were skillful mechanics, and the latter had several sons who were very ingenious men.

Timothy and Lemuel Gilbert, the celebrated piano-makers of Boston, were natives of Enfield; and the Smiths, of organ-making fame, in the same city. Other citizens have graduated at various colleges, entered the professions, and become useful and respected in their chosen callings.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION.

The territory at present comprising the town of Enfield was originally the south parish of the town of Greenwich, which was incorporated June 20, 1787, and embraced all of the south part of Greenwich and parts of Belchertown and Ware. The town of Enfield was duly incorporated Feb. 15, 1816, the following being the words of the act referring to its territorial limits:

"That all the lands in the towns of Greenwich and Belchertown which are comprised within the limits of the South Parish, of the town of Greenwich, as they are now settled and established according to the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to divide the town of Greenwich into two parishes, and for including the northeast corner of the town of Belchertown in the South Parish,' passed on the twentieth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven; an Act in addition thereto passed on the twenty-second day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, together with the farm of Robert Hathaway, in said Greenwich, with all the inhabitants dwelling thereon, be, and hereby are, incorporated into a town by the name of Enfield, and vested with all the powers, privileges, rights, and immunities, and subject to all the duties and requirements, of other towns of this commonwealth."

The town derived its name from Robert Field, one of its early settlers.

The first town-meeting was held on Monday, March 4, 1816, at the meeting-house, by virtue of a warrant issued by Elihu Lyman, a justice of the peace, and directed to Ebenezer Winslow, one of the principal inhabitants of the town. Benjamin Harwood officiated as moderator, and among the officers chosen were Simeon Waters, Clerk; James Richards, Benjamin Harwood, and Jesse Fobes, Selectmen; Ephraim Richards, Treasurer; and Capt. Sylvanus Howe, Alden Lathrop, and Oliver Patterson, Assessors. Minor officers were also chosen, such as a constable, a collector, surveyors of highways, tithingmen, hog-reeves, surveyors of lumber, and a school committee.

Other matters relating to the organization of the town are elsewhere presented. The town appropriations for the year 1878 were: contingencies, $1000; highways and bridges, $2400; schools, $1300; paupers, $600; interest, $1150.

The following persons have filled the principal town offices, and served as representatives to the General Court, viz.:

SELECTMEN.

- 1816.—James Richards, Benjamin Harwood, Jesse Fobes.
- 1817.—Benjamin Harwood, Jesse Fobes, Sylvanus Howe.
- 1818.—Jesse Fobes, Sylvanus Howe, Simeon Waters.
- 1819.—Jesse Fobes, Ephraim Richards, Thomas Cary.
- 1820.—Ephraim Richards, Thomas Cary, Sylvanus Howe.
- 1821.—Ephraim Richards, Elihu Lyman, Thomas Cary.
- 1822.—Elihu Lyman, Benjamin Ruggles, Sylvanus Howe.
- 1823.—Benjamin Ruggles, Packard Ford, Rufus Powers.
- 1824.—Packard Ford, Rufus Powers, Simeon Waters.
- 1825.—Thomas Cary, Micah Gross, Henry Fobes.
- 1826.—Thomas Cary, Henry Fobes, Daniel Ford.
- 1827.—Thomas Cary, Daniel Ford, Benjamin Ruggles.
- 1828.—Thomas Cary, Benjamin Ruggles, Ambrose Packard.
- 1829-30.—Jesse Fobes, Rufus Powers, Sylvanus Powers.
- 1831.—James Richards, Sylvanus Howe, Daniel Ford.
- 1832.—James Richards, Sylvanus Howe, David Smith, Jr.
- 1833.—David Smith, Freeman Pope, Jesse Fobes.
- 1834-35.—James Richards, Epaphras Clark, Alden Mitchell.
- 1836.—Sylvanus Howe, Alden Mitchell, Benjamin F. Potter.
- 1837.—Alden Mitchell, Asa Shaw, Daniel Ford.
- 1838-39.—Asa Shaw, Thomas Cary, Henry Fobes.
- 1840-41.—Asa Shaw, Henry Fobes, Timothy Brainard.
- 1842.—Henry Fobes, Timothy Brainard, Levi W. Lombard.
- 1843-45.—Levi W. Lombard, Epaphras Clark, Ransom Wood.
- 1846.—Ransom Wood, Henry Fobes, Edward Cary.
- 1847.—Edward Cary, Ransom Wood, Solon S. Pope.
- 1848.—Edward Cary, Solon S. Pope, Alvan Randall.
- 1849.—Edward Cary, Henry Fobes, Alvan Randall.
- 1850-51.—Daniel Ford, Joseph Root, Ransom Wood.
- 1852.—Alvin Smith, Ezra Cary, Asa Shaw.
- 1853.—Ezra Cary, Daniel Trask, David Blodgett.
- 1854.—Barnabas Blair, Daniel T. Trask, Solon S. Pope.
- 1855.—Barnabas Blair, Shubal Kentfield, George L. Shaw.
- 1856.—Barnabas Blair, Shubal Kentfield, Jr., George L. Shaw.
- 1857.—Ezra Cary, Augustus Moody, Barnabas Blair.
- 1858.—Augustus Moody, John L. Wilson, N. W. Aldrich.
- 1859.—John L. Wilson, Gideon P. Bartlett, Joseph Root.
- 1860.—Micah H. Gross, Gideon P. Bartlett, Davenport Allen.
- 1861.—Micah H. Gross, Davenport Allen, Henry M. Potter.
- 1862-63.—Ezra Cary, D. B. Gillett, Edward Cary.
- 1864.—Same three up to June 11th, and then Cyrus F. Woods, Micah H. Gross, and Henry M. Smith were chosen.
- 1865.—Cyrus F. Woods, M. H. Gross, Lyman D. Potter.
- 1866.—Micah H. Gross, Edward P. Smith, Ira D. Haskell.
- 1867.—Joseph Root, Santford B. Collins, Elbridge E. Cabot.
- 1868.—Elbridge E. Cabot, Joseph Root, William B. Kimball.
- 1869.—Henry M. Potter, Albert R. House, Ira D. Haskell.
- 1870.—Ira D. Haskell, E. E. Cabot, J. L. Wilson.
- 1871-73.—Ira D. Haskell, Elbridge E. Cabot, Horace Hunt.
- 1874.—E. E. Cabot, N. D. Potter, John Eddy.
- 1875-76.—Ira D. Haskell, L. D. Potter, A. J. N. Ward.
- 1877.—L. D. Potter, E. E. Cabot, Ira D. Haskell.
- 1878.—R. D. Woods, L. D. Potter, B. F. Davis.

TOWN CLERKS.

- 1816, Simeon Waters; 1817-28, Freeman Pope; 1828-31, Eliphaz Jones; 1831-42, Alfred Arnold; 1842-50, Luther Chapin, Jr.; 1850, Norman A. Smith; 1851-54, Oliver Bryant; 1854-56, Luther Chapin, Jr.; 1856-66, Joseph S. Jones; 1866-78, Augustus Moody; 1878, William B. Kimball.

REPRESENTATIVES.

- 1816-20, Benjamin Harwood; 1820-22, Jesse Fobes; 1823, Ephraim Richards; 1826-27, Ephraim Richards; 1828-30, Rev. Joshua Crosby; 1831-32, Thomas Cary; 1833-36, Epaphras Clark; 1837-38, Daniel Ford; 1839-40, Ichabod Pope; 1842, Ephraim Richards; 1843, Luther Chapin, Jr.; 1845-49, Alvin Smith; 1850, Henry Fobes; 1851, Timothy Brainard; 1852, David Cutting; 1853, George L. Shaw; 1857, Rufus D. Woods; 1861, Augustus Moody; 1865, Joseph Root; 1868, Edward Smith; 1874, Benjamin F. Davis; 1876, Wm. B. Kimball.

VILLAGES.

The town virtually contains but one village, which is situated near the geographical centre. For the sake of convenience its northern extremity is known as the "upper village," and is about a mile from the larger and more central portion of the village. At the lower or larger part of the village are located the Congregational church and chapel, the Methodist church, the town-hall, Masonic building, Swift River Hotel, the depot, a grist-mill, blacksmith-shop, several stores, the mills of the Minot Woolen Company, the old cemetery, and many private residences, some of which are of the latest style of architecture, and present a tasteful and home-like appearance.

The "upper village" contains the mills of the Swift River Company, a saw-mill, store, railroad depot, and a number of residences, of which some are not inferior in architectural beauty to those at the lower village.

These villages are pleasantly located in the valley through which flows the east branch of Swift River. The inhabitants are noted for their wealth, refinement, culture, and for their hearty support of church institutions.

The post-office in Enfield was established about the year 1820, and the first postmaster was Elihu Lyman. Prior to that date it was carried from Belchertown by a post-rider, Capt. Joseph Hooker filling that position for a long time. The second postmaster was Eliphaz Jones, and since the expiration of his term of office it has been filled by Oliver Bryant, Daniel B. Gillett, James Leland, Lyman Morton, C. F. Woods, John G. Merriam, Erskine E. Butler, John L. Wilson, George E. Walker, and the present incumbent, J. E. Woods, who was appointed in the fall of 1872.

THE EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS

of the town received early attention. In January, 1759, a committee of three was appointed by the town of Greenwich to divide the town into three parts for the establishment of schools. All south of Wm. Fisk's and Benjamin Cooley's (now the Hale farm) was to constitute the south district, now Enfield.

In the month of November, 1765, a committee that had been appointed to locate school-houses fixed the one in the "south quarter on the south side of the road, by a little brook to the west of John Rea's," and that became the first school-house built in the town, and stood near the present road leading from Enfield to Bond's village. (Fuller information in regard to the early schools of this section will be found in the history of Greenwich.)

An old resident of the town furnishes the following interesting facts concerning the schools of his day :

"The first school that I remember was kept in 1800 and 1801 by a Miss Ellis or Alice Allen, in a corn-house belonging to Joseph Ruggles, on the farm where Watson Hawks now lives. Soon after, a school-house was built near the same farm, on the opposite side of the road. The house was built 18 feet square, and for a long time remained unfinished. The first teacher there was, I believe, Daniel Lamson, probably about the year 1801-2; the next, Thomas Cary; and after him Willard and Leonard Gould, Town, Mellen, McClintock, Newell, Brainard, Pepper, and others whom I do not recollect. A Miss Abigail Gould taught in the summer. Some of these were very good teachers for those times, but many of them taught only the three R's. They generally boarded around in families who sent children, according to the number sent; green wood, mostly 8 feet long, was furnished in the same way. Those who flogged the most were considered the best teachers, as they were supposed to keep good order. In this house, about the year 1812, were packed about 60 scholars, and, what with flogging and smoke, there was frequently not much studying until afternoon. We usually had about two months' schooling a winter. Here, after I was twelve years old, I attended three winters, and graduated. Since that time I have not had much leisure for study or reflection. This was in the South District. I cannot remember much about the school in the Centre District. I know the South was thought the best school. I believe there were but two school districts in the place at this time."

The town has now eight district schools, with an attendance of 181 pupils, and an average attendance of 142. The whole are under the nominal control of a board of nine committeemen, three of whom are elected annually for three years. A special board has the direct supervision of the schools, consisting at present of W. B. Downing, Nathan D. Potter, Wm.

B. Kimball, and H. E. Brown. The amount of the last appropriation for schooling purposes was $1300, other funds raising the sum to $1621.82.

A number of excellent private schools formerly existed in the town.

RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The south parish of Greenwich was incorporated June 20, 1787, the principal cause of the division into parishes being the great inconvenience experienced by the inhabitants of the south part of the town in attending worship at so great a distance as Greenwich Plains. The Congregational form of worship was the one that received earliest support. A meeting-house, on land presented by Capt. Joseph Hooker, was built in the parish in the years 1786 and '87, and accepted Oct. 15, 1787. Movable benches were first placed in this church. Pews were substituted in 1793. In 1814 a belfry was erected, and a bell, the gift of Joseph Keith, afterward placed therein. In the year 1835 the pews were displaced by slips, and other alterations and improvements made. The house was repaired about 1855 and an organ added. In 1873 it was again repaired and a considerable addition was made to the rear of the church, and an elegant organ took the place of the old one, at a cost of about $2500. The edifice now presents an attractive appearance, the steeple being graceful and unique in design, and containing a costly town-clock. The interior of the church is neat and appropriately embellished, and its acoustic properties are excellent.

The first regular pastor of the church was Rev. Joshua Crosby, who was called May 12, 1789, and installed December 2d following. He was furnished with a farm bought of Barnabas Fay as settlement, and had a salary of £70 a year, his firewood being also furnished by the parish.

Mr. Crosby came from the Cape, and served as a chaplain in the Revolutionary war. He entered Brown University, but, being unable to meet his expenses, left after a year or two, and studied for the ministry with a Mr. Forster, of New Braintree. He was noted for superiority in athletic sports, was one of the first trustees of Amherst College, and after the death of the first president of that institution filled that office pro tempore until another was chosen. He was a vigorous and earnest sermonizer, his discourses being more remarkable for their vigor and force than for superior literary merit. He continued his pastoral relations to the church until his death, Sept. 24, 1838.

Rev. Sumner G. Clapp was settled as colleague of Mr. Crosby Jan. 9, 1828, and dismissed March 28, 1837. His successor was Rev. John Whiton, who was settled Sept. 13, 1837, and dismissed Sept. 29, 1841. On the 16th of February, 1842, Rev. Robert McEwen was settled as pastor. He was of Scotch descent, and some of his ancestors were in the battle of Culloden. He was a good and talented man, but was compelled to give up his charge because of ill health, and, much to the regret of his parishioners, was dismissed by council Dec. 10, 1861.

His successor was Rev. John A. Seymour, who was installed April 17, 1862. Having been appointed district secretary of the American Tract Society, for the States of Ohio and Indiana, he preached his farewell sermon Feb. 3, 1867, and was dismissed by council July 29th of the same year.

Rev. Edward C. Ewing, the present pastor, was called Aug. 28, 1867, and installed Oct. 9th, following. Mr. Ewing at the time of the call was pastor of the Congregational Church at Ashfield, Mass. He is a graduate of the class of 1859 of Amherst College, and has filled his present pastoral office with great acceptance.

The names of the first purchasers of pews in the meeting-house, in 1793, were Calvin Kinsley, Sylvanus Howe, Daniel Hayward, Simon Stone, David Newcomb, Joseph Hooker, Robert Field, John Sawin, Benjamin Harwood, Benjamin Rider, Nathan Hunting, Caleb Keith, William Stone, Joseph Ruggles, Abner Eddy, Ebenezer Rich, Reuben Colton, Barnabas Rich, Nathaniel Boker, Joseph Fobes, David Swetland, William Morton, John Eaton, Moses Colton, Jonathan Hunting, Nathaniel Lane, John Bailey, William Patterson, John McIntosh, and William McIntosh.

Parochial affairs were conducted by parish officers from 1787 until 1816, when the town was incorporated; by the town from that date until 1831, when the parish was reorganized and still continues. The present deacons are Henry Fobes, W. S. Moore, and Augustus Moody.

The church is in a prosperous condition, comprising a membership of 265 persons; of Sabbath-school, 275; number of volumes in the library, 675; Superintendent, A. J. N. Ward.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church grew out of certain internal troubles that disturbed the peace of the Congregational Church. Rev. J. Knight, who was stationed at Greenwich and Ware, preached the first Methodist sermon in Enfield, in the "old tavern stand" building, now standing opposite the Congregational church. In 1835, Rev. Messrs. Philetus Green and Philo Hawks were stationed at Greenwich. They held meetings in Enfield at the old brick school-house, over the river, and a class was formed, of which Brother Kitchen was made leader.

After a brief interval, work was again resumed in 1842 by Brothers H. Morgan and J. Lewis, of Greenwich, and meetings were held in the town-hall. It was during that year that the first services of the denomination were held in the daytime. In the same year, Rev. Samuel Tupper, a young man from Nova Scotia, arrived in Boston in search of work. The opportunity to labor in Enfield was offered him. He accepted it Oct. 4, 1843. The Methodist Society was organized on the 15th of the same month, with 16 members.

Rev. Mr. Tupper remained in charge of the society until the spring of 1844. Since that time the several pastors have been as follows: 1846, Moses Palmer; 1847-48, John W. Dadman; 1849, Edward A. Manning; 1850, John Paulson; 1851, Daniel Ames; 1852-55, David Kilburn; 1856-58, Nathaniel J. Merrill; 1859-61, William M. Hubbard; 1862, John Capsen; 1863-64, Gilbert R. Bent; 1864-65, David K. Bannister; 1866, J. W. Bassett; 1867, James W. Fenn; 1868-69, John W. Lee; 1870, N. M. Granger; 1871-72, George Hewes; 1873, Nathaniel F. Stevens; 1874-76, William Wignall. The present pastor is Rev. J. Alphonzo Day, who is now (1879) in his second year.

In the spring of 1847 a contract was entered into for the erection of a church edifice at a cost of $1700, and it was dedicated Jan. 19, 1848. In the following spring ground was broken for a parsonage, and it was finished the same year. During the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Wignall the church was frescoed inside, painted outside, carpeted throughout, and furnished with a new pulpit-set.

The active membership of the church comprises 25; average attendance upon Sabbath-school, 35; volumes in library, 236; Superintendent of Sabbath-school, Dwight Parker.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The town of Enfield has two. The principal of these is situated back of the Congregational meeting-house, on the hill, in a picturesque and peaceful spot. It was laid out in 1788, in accordance with a vote of the parish, passed March 29th of that year, as follows:

"Voted, to give Capt. Hooker three pounds ten shillings for a certain tract of land for a burying-yard."

The area of the original ground was one acre and a half.

In this ground repose the remains of many of the earliest and most honored citizens of the town. The oldest stone now standing is that of Miss Mary Patterson, who died Nov. 10, 1790, in the twentieth year of her age. Other early ones are those of Daniel Howard, who died May 11, 1793, in his fifty-second year, and Deacon Ebenezer Rich, who died Dec. 3, 1811, in his eighty-first year.

Another stone furnishes the following information: "Mr. David Patterson, died April 19th, 1814, in his 79th year.

"Here lies entomb'd beneath the ground
The first man born within this town;
Faith in his Saviour he professed,
We trust with him he's now at rest."

The other burial-place is at Packardsville, just within the borders of Enfield. It is a small plat, containing but few stones, and has been in use for upward of one hundred years.

In this connection it may not be uninteresting to peruse a few

NOTES FROM THE TOWN RECORDS.

One of the first subjects to receive the attention of the new town (a church being already established) was that of education, and April 1, 1816, $300 was appropriated for schools. On the same date provision was made for the ringing of the meeting-house bell at stated hours in the day. It was also "Voted, that Ebenezer Winslow sweep the meeting-house for one dollar and fifty cents per year, to sweep it six times per year and after every town-meeting."

The amount of money voted for the year 1816 was $1166.67.

April 7, 1817, Hosea Hooker was allowed $2 for the use of his yard for a pound, and he continued to exercise the functions of pound-master for many years thereafter.

April 3, 1820, Lieut. Joseph Keith presented a bell to the town, on condition that it should be forever kept and used for the accommodation of the town, and preserved in good repair and condition.

Oct. 16, 1820, Benjamin Harwood was chosen to represent the town in the Constitutional Convention, to be held at Boston, Nov. 3, 1820. In April, 1822, the sum of $50 was appropriated to support church music. On Dec. 11, 1826, $75 was appropriated to support a singing-school the ensuing winter. In the month of March, 1827, a committee was chosen to dispose of the old bell and buy a new one. In the following year the town was divided into eleven highway districts. In 1832 measures were taken to build a new bridge over the river on the road to Ware; and in the following year like action was taken toward building a bridge over the west branch of the river, on the road leading to Amherst. In 1844 a committee purchased in behalf of the town the farm of Ezekiel Keith, called the "Dale farm," for the sum of $1900, to be used as a "poor-farm."

INCIDENTS.

About the year 1819 a great flood occurred in both branches of the Swift River. The waters carried away both the bridges at the villages and Hunting's bridge, besides doing great general damage. None so serious has occurred since. The lower village has provided for such a contingency by the erection, in 1878, of an elegant and substantial iron bridge over the river at a cost of $1650, exclusive of the cost of the piers and abutments.

There was formerly a great amount of musical talent in Enfield that was at one time well developed under the instruction and direction of Benjamin Harwood, Esq., who was not only a teacher but a composer of music. Still later there was a musical society formed, Col. Barr, of New Braintree, a noted teacher, being president. Under his instruction the society attained great perfection, and the church music was of a high order.

SOCIETIES.

BETHEL LODGE, F. AND A. M.

The charter for this lodge was granted Sept. 14, 1825, to the following members: Prince Ford, William Stone, Jonathan Russell, Alden Lothrop, Eliphaz Jones, Emory Fisk, Abner Pepper, and Nathan Weeks. It flourished for a considerable time, comprising in its membership some of the leading citizens of the town, but during the turbulent scenes that attended what is known as the "anti-Masonic period" the lodge suspended, and surrendered its charter.

RES. OF LYMAN D. POTTER, ENFIELD, MASS.

RES. OF EDWARD P. SMITH, ENFIELD, MASS.

On Jan. 22, 1858, the charter was restored to the following petitioners; Aaron Woods, Henry Fobes, Nathan Weeks, J. B. Woods, John Crosby, Ichabod Pope, and Daniel Ford. Since that time it has had a prosperous career and is in a substantial condition, comprising a membership of 52, officered by the following persons: John W. Felton, W. M.; Willard E. Johnson, S. W.; Luman P. Peirce, J. W.; James G. Ford, Treas.; Robert D. Bussey, Sec.; William B. Kimball, Chaplain; Waldo H. Peirce, S. D.; Henry E. Keopke, J. D.; Samuel L. Howe, S. S.; A. W. Peirce, J. S.; William S. Douglass, Marshal; Thomas H. Gates, Tyler.

The first sessions of the lodge were held in the "old tavern stand," opposite the Congregational Church, but in the year 1826 the lodge erected the building now occupied by them, and the first meeting was held therein September 19th of that year. Previous to the granting of the charter the lodge worked under a dispensation. It is the mother of Eden Lodge, of Ware, and Vernon Lodge, of Belchertown.

The Past Masters of the lodge have been as follows: 1825-29, Henry Fobes; 1829-33, Aaron Woods, Jr.; 1858, Josiah B. Woods; 1859, John Crosby; 1864, Cyrus F. Woods; 1867, William S. Douglas; 1868, George S. Dixon; 1870, Henry E. Brown; 1871, William S. Douglas; 1873, Wm. B. Kimball; 1876, James G. Ford; 1878, John W. Felton.

SWIFT RIVER GRANGE, NO. 61, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY, was organized in 1874, being designed to encourage improvement in agricultural affairs, and to disseminate useful information in regard to that pursuit. The society is in a prosperous state, meets monthly, and is officered by Wm. B. Kimball, Master; H. E. Brown, Overseer; Lyman D. Potter, Treas.; and B. F. Davis, Sec.

THE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

of the town have been varied and diverse in character. The east side of Great Quabbin Mountain is covered with a fine-grained sandstone formation, which was early made into whetstones of an excellent quality, and which derived their name from the mountain on which they were found. The manufacture and export of these stones at one time constituted a principal branch of industry in the town, and was pursued by various persons, including Wm. Hutchinson and Titus and Ichabod Randall.

The industries of a minor character that have existed in the town have been numerous. Kingley Underwood had a blacksmith-shop very early in the history of the town, that stood about where the machine-shop now stands at the mill privilege. Ephraim Richards made potash, and had a distillery for making cider brandy back of the present residence of Chas. Richards, Esq., about 1815. Thomas Cary had a tannery half a mile below the village, on the Belchertown road, about the year 1800. Tertius Walker also had a tannery at the village, in the "old tannery building," at an early day.

The dam at the lower village of Enfield was built about fifty feet above its present location, prior to the year 1770, by Ephraim Woodward, who erected a saw-mill thereon. He sold to Ebenezer Rich, who built a grist-mill, and Robert Field about the year 1773 put up a clothier's shop. A blacksmith-shop, with a tilt-hammer, was soon after erected by Robert Field and others, who also operated an oil-mill. Reuben Colton had a fulling-mill and cloth-dressing shop just below Haskell's store. There were also other improvements at this point. Calvin and Charles Lawson made cut nails from plates by means of a machine, and headed them by hand. Under the bridge was a mill-stone for grinding whetstones, and, about 1804, James Harrison, an Englishman, set up a carding-machine for making rolls from wool, it being the first of its kind in that part of the country.

The dam at the upper village was erected in 1812, and a cotton-yarn factory was built the year following by a company of neighbors, of which John Allen was superintendent and agent. It ran for a few years, when larger mills were erected, that made not only yarn, but wove it into cloth, which put a stop to domestic weaving. There were also a saw-mill, blacksmith-shop, shingle-mill, and other works erected on this privilege at an early day.

Some time about the year 1816, Wyatt Barlow built a dam half a mile down the river, where he manufactured satinets. The mill was soon after burned, and the site abandoned. A large business was also carried on in other branches of industry at early dates, such as hat-making, cloth-dressing, scythe-, hoe-, ax-, plow-, saddle-, and harness-making. Robert Field made potash, the Joneses had a distillery below Haskell's store, where they made whisky, and Arnold & Colton before them distilled potatoes. Hosea Hooker had a saw-mill at an early day at the west end of the village. It was afterward destroyed by fire.

The Swift River Company dates its origin back to the small beginnings which were made in cotton manufacturing by the old firm of D. & A. Smith, composed of Alfred, David, and Alvin Smith, who succeeded to the control and management of the industries that already existed there, and which have been already referred to, in the year 1821. The factory was burned in 1836, but immediately rebuilt. They carried on the enterprise until the year 1852, when they were joined by Edward Smith. The Swift River Company was then formed, and consisted of Alfred, David, Alvin, and Edward Smith. The new company started the mill on satinets, and also continued making cotton-warps. They added several sets of satinet-machinery, and made other improvements. They ran that way until the year 1863, when the capacity of the mill was more than doubled, the cotton-warp-machinery was thrown out, the old mill was thoroughly remodeled, and eight sets of machinery were started on all-wool fancy cassimeres, and are still engaged in that manufacture. The number of hands employed by the company is about 100. The amount of stock annually used up is from 300,000 to 400,000 pounds, and the average annual production is about 300,000 yards. The quarterly pay-roll of the company is about $8000. The original capital stock of the company was $40,000, and the amount has never been changed. The present stockholders of the company are Edward P. and Henry M. Smith, of whom Edward Smith is president and treasurer.

In addition to the woolen business conducted by the company, they have also a saw- and grist-mill, planing-mill, and machine repair-shop.

The Minot Manufacturing Company has a less remote origin. The first mill for making cloth at the lower dam was built by Elihu Lyman and Ichabod Pope about the year 1825. It was used in the manufacture of satinets, and was run by Elihu Lyman, Ichabod Pope, Abner Hale, and Moses Woods. The enterprise was not a profitable one, and was succeeded by the Swift River Manufacturing Company, which was organized by Marshall and Thomas Jones, Leonard and Josiah B. Woods, Ephraim Richards, George Howe, and a few others. This company not only manufactured satinets, but also carried on the carding business, which Leonard Woods had established about 1820. Their factory was burned in 1830. A stone mill was then erected, but the inside, with all its machinery, was burnt out in 1848. The walls were not injured, and the factory was again rebuilt and is still standing.

The Swift River Manufacturing Company was short-lived. The business was divided up. M. S. & T. Jones continued the manufacture of satinet, and the Woods, with Marshall Jones, carried on the carding business, under the name and style of Jones, Woods & Co. In 1837, M. S. & T. Jones failed, and the Minot* Manufacturing Company was incorporated, on

* The maiden name of Robert Field's wife, the mother of the Jones brothers.

April 7th of that year, having as incorporators Marshall Jones, Leonard Woods, and Alvin Smith, with a capital stock of $75,000. The company, with an occasional change of owners, has been running ever since, at first manufacturing satinets, but now Shaker flannels and light-weight cassimeres. The present company consists of the George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company, of Ware, Edward B. & D. B. Gillett. They have two mills, with five sets of machinery, employ about 50 persons, manufacture about 300,000 yards annually, and pay out to employes about $1200 a month. The company also owns the grist-mill on the opposite side of the road, near the bridge, and the present officers are E. B. Gillett, President; Charles D. Gilbert, Secretary; and D. B. Gillett, Treasurer.

After the failure of M. S. & T. Jones, and the formation of the Minot Manufacturing Company, Leonard and Josiah B. Woods carried on the carding business with great success until the year 1850. They were then succeeded by Rufus D. Woods and D. B. Gillett, under the name of Woods & Bro. In 1852 the partnership was dissolved, and Rufus D. Woods erected a mill at Holyoke, Mass., and engaged in the manufacture of card-clothing until the year 1857, when he re-established the carding business in Enfield for two years. He then sold the machinery to Stedman & Fuller, of Lawrence, Mass., who, after continuing the business for one year in Enfield, removed the machinery to the former place.

Alvin Smith, Oramel Walker, and Albert Warren commenced the manufacture of card-clothing in the year 1847, and about 1850 removed the business to Lawrence, Mass.

Anson M. Howard, formerly proprietor of the Swift River Hotel, has been engaged since the summer of 1876 in manufacturing steel type, for use in type-writing, and other goods. His shop is on the east bank of Swift River, between the upper and lower villages. Mr. Howard is a skillful mechanic, and has taken out several valuable patents for useful inventions made by him in the manufacture of type, and machines for making them.

THE MILITARY RECORD

is necessarily brief, as the town was not incorporated until after the termination of all the earlier wars, and its history during those periods is identified with that of the town of Greenwich.

Those citizens of the town who served in the Revolutionary war, some of them from other towns, were Joshua Crosby, Benjamin Rider, Giles Rider, Barnabas Rich, — Pratt, — Newcomb, and John Stevens. The latter was present at the battle of Bunker Hill, and only escaped being killed, by the thrust of a British bayonet as he was leaving the fortifications, by having in his knapsack a loaf of bread that had been left in the oven too long before he left home, and had grown very hard. This checked the bayonet and saved his life.

In Shays' rebellion there were many active partisans in the town, but the only citizens who are known to have taken part were Benjamin Harwood, Joseph Fobes, Jr., and John Rea.

In the war of 1812, Ichabod Pope, Daniel Ford, Roswell Underwood, Henry Fobes, Joshua Crosby, Samuel Rich, Rugles Harwood, Samuel Barton, Packard Ford, Daniel Eddy, and Kingsley Underwood represented the town.

The record of the town in the late Rebellion is of the most honorable character. Money and men were promptly supplied to fill the ranks of the army and answer the demands of the war. The following is the list of soldiers who served in the army:

William M. Ayers, John L. Barton, Dexter Barton, Charles L. Burton, Francis L. Bester, Isiah N. Bester, Dwight Clark, Benjamin F. Conkey, George S. Corkine, Ira Currie, Ambrose B. Cowan, Julius C. Davis, Charles M. Carter, Thomas Devine, Patrick Boyle, Lewis H. Donning, Thomas Dwyer, Joseph Cadieux, Frederick C. Eager, Walter R. Gardner, John R. Greenleaf, Jr., Michael Gleason, George L. Gibbs, Oscar S. Griswold, Michael Hughes, Colman Hanks, Ira L. Jones, Martha L. Jones, Charles F. Jones, Andrew J. Jones, Albert F.

Johnson, John W. Keith, Peter King, Jr., Justin Knight, Edmund Miller, John Merriam, Clark Lelabridge, Joshua C. Lazelle, Alexander McClellan, William Mahony, William W. Morse, Michael McMillan, Charles McClure, Alfred E. Manley, Anthony McGowan, Edwin H. Moore, William Newbury, John H. Newcomb, Calvin D. Newell, Charles W. Newell, Orin A. Powell, George W. Porter, Harvey Packard, George A. Pierce, Lafayette Smith, Henry D. Southwick, Lynnan F. Shearer, Marshal Rider, Edward O. Randall, Henry A. Randall, Briham D. Sprout, John Sullivan, John W. Sadler, Warren M. Sadler, Charles Trumbull, Charles Underwood, Edwin F. Ward, Edward Wilder, Aaron Woods, James E. Woods, Willard A. Witherehl, Daniel Welch.

In the compilation of the history of this town, generous assistance has been rendered by a large number of its citizens, to whom thanks are due, and especially by Ichabod Pope, Hon. Rufus D. Woods, Charles Richards, Esq., William B. Kimball, Henry Fobes, Horace Hunt, and the pastors and manufacturers of the town.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

EPAPHRAS CLARK

was the son of Kenaz and Abigail Clark, and was born in Westhampton, Mass., where his boyhood was passed, June 28, 1790. His education was obtained in the common schools of his native town. He had a strong desire for a collegiate education, and in his twenty-first year began to study under the care of the Rev. Enoch Hale, pastor of the Congregational Church in Westhampton, and in nine months he was prepared to enter the Sophomore class of Williams College, where he graduated, in 1815, with high honors, being the valedictorian of his class. His father aided him in his collegiate course by removing with his family to Williamstown. Soon after his graduation he was offered a tutorship in the college, but declined on account of failing health. He studied law with Mr. Lathrop, a distinguished lawyer, at West Springfield, and began the practice of law in Granby, Mass., where he married Ruth M. Smith, daughter of Levi Smith of that town. He soon removed to South Hadley, Mass., where he remained five years, continuing the practice of his profession. From there he removed to Enfield, Mass., where he resided for upward of thirty years, being the only lawyer in the town. He generally held some important town office, was a trial-justice, and was a member of the State Legislature for five successive terms. He was, politically, first a Whig, and subsequently a Republican.

During the war of the Rebellion he was strongly interested in the success of the Union cause. Too advanced in life to enter the service, he did much toward stimulating others in the patriotic work of the hour. He eagerly read the news from the seat of war almost to the day of his death, April 30, 1864. He was, with one exception, the oldest member of the Hampshire Bar, the one older being Dyer Bancroft, Esq., of Cheshirefield, Mass. Mr. Clark was familiar with the literature of his day, had a remarkably retentive memory, and could repeat page after page of the poets Young, Milton, Cowper, etc. He possessed a fund of anecdotes, was quick at repartee, having that rare wit which amuses and cheers, but never wounds. He was a genial companion, having a kindly interest in all whom he knew. He united with the Congregational Church in Enfield in 1848, and was a consistent Christian.

The following, from an obituary notice which appeared in the Hampshire Gazette, was suggested to the editor by the late Judge Spalding, of Northampton: "Epaphras Clark was a man of sound morals, strict integrity, and fine literary culture; distinguished for his modest, quiet, and unassuming bearing. As a lawyer he was safe in counsel, clear in argument, and was always held in high esteem by the public."

Cephas Clark

Photo. by Moffitt.

Kingsley Underwood,

KINGSLEY UNDERWOOD.

Kingsley Underwood, son of Daniel Underwood and Experience Kingsley, was born in Woodstock, Conn., March 2, 1770. His grandfather was one of the original settlers of the town, and died in 1772 upon the farm which he had cleared from forest. His father met with an accident, from the effects of which a lingering illness ensued, and he died in October, 1779. There was no one in the family, therefore, of an age to serve in the Revolutionary army but the boy. Kingsley well remembered the time when the Minute-Men set out for Roxbury and Cambridge, and he retained through life a most vivid recollection of the events of the war. In the absence of so many men, the women and children suffered great hardships, especially in collecting wood for fuel. Kingsley, when only nine years old, aided by his younger brother, had to go into the woods with a hatchet and cut down such trees as he could manage, and drag home the limbs in a hand-cart. His first schooling was for a few days in the winter of 1779-80. The school was two and a half miles distant, and, as the snow was deep and the roads were not broken out, the boy went on snow-shoes. He made good use of his time, however, and in those few days learned to read. When he was about thirteen, and his mother had married again, Kingsley was befriended by a kind neighbor, 'Squire Fox, who sent him to school about six months, and this was the sum-total of his education, except what he gained unaided, yet he read the Bible through eight times before he was sixteen. Later in life he read many books, especially after he was forty, in which period he was a diligent student, and he came to be as well informed as most professional men. He served an apprenticeship to a blacksmith in Sturbridge, Mass., and afterward, in that town, at the age of twenty-three, was married to Elizabeth Allen, daughter of John Allen, a lineal descendant of Rev. James Allen, who came from England and settled in Dedham in 1629. A year later he removed to Enfield, Mass., where he spent the remainder of his life. He set up a triphammer-shop, and toiled strenuously at his trade; but while still in middle life he was compelled to give up business on account of incurable lameness. But the events of his life were neither striking nor important; it is with the character of the man that we have to do. That a man born in penury, inured to hardship from tender years, and furnished with less than seven months' schooling should become a creditable scholar and a forcible writer, and, guided solely by native taste, should become familiar with the rarest stores of English poetry, is a triumph worth holding up for emulation. He was afflicted with an obstinate habit of stammering, and his ordinary speech was painful to hear; but in singing or reading poetry, the nervous tremors ceased and the metre of the verse flowed in an unruffled current. His descendants well remember his rapt look and his beaming but misty eyes when repeating some grand Miltonian line. The great Puritan bard was his idol, and, as he read, the majesty of his verse seemed moving to solemn music in his brain. He was an Abolitionist from the first, and devoted most of his time to the work. For many years he cast the single anti-slavery vote in his town, and cheerfully bore the jeers of the shorter-sighted, confident of the coming justice of time. He had a ready wit and a talent for off-hand rhymes which made him a favorite in all companies. He died Nov. 2, 1849, in his eightieth year. His descendants are widely scattered, and at this date, April, 1879, only one son survives.

HATFIELD.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

HATFIELD is the northernmost of the towns of Hampshire County which lie upon the west bank of the Connecticut River. It is bounded north by Franklin County, east by Hadley, south by Hadley and Northampton, west by Northampton and Williamsburg. It is finely situated above the great bend of the river, comprising a large extent of rich alluvial plains. The farm acreage is 8339 acres, according to the census of 1875.

The title to the soil of Hatfield was derived direct from the Indians, with the approval of the provincial authorities. The first purchase by the Hadley proprietors was Dec. 25, 1658, and comprised a large extent of territory upon the east side of the Connecticut River. No part of this became the property of Hatfield. The second purchase was made July 10, 1660, and comprised the "lands on the west side from Capawong Brook (now Mill River) on the south to the brook called Wunckcompss, which comes out of the great pond, and over the brook to the upper side of the meadow called Mincommuck on the north, and extending westerly nine miles into the woods." This was the beginning of what afterward constituted the town of Hatfield. The price paid was 300 fathoms of wampum and sundry gifts. The deed was signed by Umpanchala, and approved by his brother Etowomq. The "Chickens," or planting-field, was reserved, and also the liberty to hunt deer and other wild animals, to take fish, to set wigwams on the commons, and to cut wood and trees for use.

The third purchase was the meadow called Capawonk, lying in the south part of the town, and this came under the jurisdiction of Hatfield at the time that town was incorporated.

The deed for this is dated Jan. 22, 1663. It was sold to Hadley by the Northampton planters for £30. They had bought it of the Indians in 1657 for 50s.

Oct. 19, 1672, the town of Hatfield purchased a tract to the north, comprising what is now the town of Whately, and a portion of the north part of Hatfield. This was the land of the Indian chief Quonquont, and the deed was signed by his widow, Sarah Quonquont, his son, Pocunohouse, his daughter, Majasset, and two others. The price paid was 50 fathoms of "wampumpeag." The south line was from a walnut-tree standing by the river, in Mincommuck Meadow, westerly into the woods. It was bounded on the north by Weekiannuck Brook, where the Pocumtuck path crosses it, the line running east to the great river and west six miles into the woods.

Of these four purchases, the last three cover the present territory of Hatfield. Every man's deed is really based on these, and we must suppose the lands subject to the original reservations, and that the descendants of Umpanchala and Quonquont have still a right to hunt and fish along these streams, and plant their wigwams on the common.

NATURAL FEATURES.

A large portion of this town consists of the valuable meadows bordering the Connecticut River. Mill River (not of Williamsburg) enters the town from Franklin County about the middle point of the north line, flows due south until it receives an important tributary from the west, where it deflects sharply to the east, and by an irregular route, almost doubling upon itself, finally enters the Connecticut on the north side of the great Hadley curve. The western branch above described is formed of Broad Brook and Running Gutter. The southern part of the town within the bend of the Connecticut and along the lower portion of Mill River is swampy. The only hills are in the west part of the town,—two ranges, one just west of Mill River, known as "The Rocks," the other parallel to it and on the west line of the town, known as Horse Mountain. Great Pond lies north of the centre, on the east side and not far from the Connecticut.

In the variety of rocks and minerals the hill-towns west far exceed Hatfield in richness and beauty. But along the outlines of Hatfield and in its general formation there is much to be studied of the great truths of creation, written upon the rocks and the soils and the river-beds. The sweep and power of currents, the abrasion of banks, the cutting of new channels, and the creation of new meadow-lands may all be studied here; and while the student of nature traces this wonderful story beneath his feet and along the broad Connecticut, he may lift his eye and read the grander lessons of the mountains that are outlined against the sky and bound this alluvial plain.

EARLY SETTLEMENT—SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

Hatfield was settled at the same time as Hadley, 1659 to 1661. Together the two towns became the property of a colony from Wethersfield and Hartford, Conn.

Differences with reference to church organization led to the removal. The faith and firmness of the fathers are thus clearly indicated. So conscientiously and tenaciously did they cling to what they deemed to be right that they were ready at any time to abandon home and lands and found new settlements, facing for this purpose not only the hardships of the forest, but the dangers of a savage foe.

"These settlers were men of wealth and high social position, and were regarded by Massachusetts authorities as a most desirable addition to her population. They had, as their subsequent history proved, the self-reliance and earnestness and courage which usually attach to men who strike out a new path for conscience' sake."

It is thought that a few families spent the winter of 1659 and 1660 in the new colony at the present site of Hadley village. The following summer, 1660, it is understood that six families located on the west side of the river, now Hatfield, though the land was not divided until a year later.

Among these six Richard Fellows is said to have been the first, and he established himself at the south end of the present village, just below the intersection of the Northampton road, as appears by a list hereafter given. The other five families were Richard Billings, Zechariah Field, John Cole, John White, Jr., and Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr. It is not certain that either Fellows or the others located on the lots they afterward received at the regular division. They would, however, very likely be permitted to keep what they had really occupied.

This was the beginning of the town of Hatfield nearly two and a quarter centuries ago: six families, separated from their companions on the other side, grouped in the forest at the south end of the present street, the new settlement of Northampton, their nearest neighbors, on the south, and all around the unbroken forest.

The records of the various proceedings show more in detail the steps taken for settlement.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The first town-meeting in Hadley—which then included Hatfield—was held at the house of Andrew Warner, Oct. 8, 1660.

Voted that all who sit down on the west side of the river (Hatfield) shall be one with those on the east side in both ecclesiastical and civil matters that are common to the whole, they paying all charges from their engagement and all purchase charges from the beginning. Those admitted for inhabitants on the west side of the river are to be inhabiting there in houses of their own by next Michaelmas (Sept. 29, 1661), and to sign an engagement by themselves or some others for them.

Most of those who wished to settle on the west side of the river signed an engagement for themselves or their friends to be dwellers there before Sept. 29, 1661.

Some signed at the meeting October 8th, others November 1st, and some in January, February, or March, 1661. Twenty-five persons "manifested an intention" before March 25, 1661, to establish themselves on that side of the river in the new town, viz., Aaron Cook, Thos. Meekins, Wm. Allis, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., John Coleman, Isaac Graves (with his father, Thos. Graves), John Graves, Samuel Belden, Stephen Taylor, John White, Jr., Daniel Warner, Richard Fellows, Richard Billings, Edward Benton, Mr. Ritchell (with his son), Ozias Goodwin, Zechariah Field, Lieut. Thomas Bull, Gregory Wilterton, Nathaniel Porter, Daniel White, William Pitkin, John Cole, Samuel Church, Samuel Dickinson.

Of these 27 persons, Aaron Cook and Samuel Church did not remove to the west side of the river. Ozias Goodwin, Lieut. Bull, Gregory Wilterton, and William Pitkin continued to reside at Hartford; Nathaniel Porter at Windsor; Mr. Richell (and son) and Edward Benton at Wethersfield. Seventeen appear to have become permanent residents on the west side, and thus constituted the first settlers of Hatfield. They were from Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield, Conn., except Thomas Meekins and William Allis, who belonged to Braintree, Mass.

Several families whose names were afterward very prominent in all the public business of Hatfield, as Hastings, Partridge, Williams, Smith, and others, settled a few years later.

The home-lots in Hatfield village were assigned so that they were owned from 1668 to 1672 about as follows, commencing at the north end, east side of the street, at the old highway to the river (present Bliss Hotel corner): Thomas Bracy; Hezekiah Dickinson, 20 rods wide; William Scott, 20 rods wide; Daniel Belden, 16 rods wide; Samuel Allis, 16 rods wide; Samuel Marsh, 16 rods wide; Nathaniel Foote, 16 rods wide; a space left for a street; Philip Russell, 4 acres; Samuel Gillett, 4 acres; John Wells, $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres; John Coleman, 16 rods wide; Samuel Belden, 8 acres; William Gull, 8 acres; Samuel Dickinson, 8 acres; Edward Benton, Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., 6 acres; John White, Jr., Nicholas Worthington, 8 acres; Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., 8 acres; Richard Billings, Samuel Billings, 8 acres; Daniel Warner, 8 acres; Thomas Bull, by the town to Mr. Atherton, 8 acres.

Returning to the north end, and beginning on the west side of the street, opposite the Bliss Hotel, the proprietors were William King, afterward Samuel Field, 16 rods wide; Benjamin Wait, 16 rods wide; John Graves, Jr., 16 rods wide; Samuel Foote, 16 rods wide; Robert Danks, 16 rods wide; space for Deerfield lane; Isaac Graves, Jr., 16 rods wide; Samuel Northam, 16 rods wide; Richard Morton, 20 rods wide; a town-lot, 16 rods wide; space reserved for street; John Hawks, 4 acres; Mill lane; Samuel Kellogg, 4 acres; Obadiah Dickinson, 4 acres; John Allis, 8 acres; Daniel White, 8 acres; Wm. Allis, 8 acres; Thomas Meekins, Thomas Meekins, Jr., 8 acres; Eleazer Frary, 8 acres; John Graves, 8 acres; Isaac Graves, 8 acres; Stephen Taylor, Barnabas Hinsdale, 8 acres; Ozias Goodwin, Mr. Hope Atherton, 8 acres; Zechariah Field, John Field, 8 acres; highways to Northampton; John Cowles & Son, 8 acres; Richard Fellows, Widow Fellows, 8 acres.

This plat or survey seems to have been made as early as 1661, for in the Hadley records it appears that a committee was appointed for that purpose January 21st of that year.

The Hill, so called, west of Mill River was not settled until after King Philip's war. But the mill is of very early date, and by the time the oath of allegiance was administered, 1678, there were doubtless some living out there.

Upon the settlement of Hatfield Street, as given above, Sylvester Judd, in his valuable history of Hadley, makes the following general remarks:

"The home-lots of John Hawks and Philip Russell, and all south of them were granted by Hadley. Those above or north of them were granted by Hatfield, of which some were forfeited and given to others.

"Hatfield regranted the lots of Goodwin, Benton, and Bull. Mr. Atherton, the first minister, lived on the Goodwin lot, as did his successor, Mr. Chaucey. Barnabas Hinsdale married the widow of Stephen Taylor and lived in her house. Thomas Meekins, Sr., removed from the street and lived near his mill.

"John Coleman, about 1678, changed his residence and lived on the Benton lot, and Samuel Belden resided on Coleman's first lot. No one lived on the lot assigned to Thomas Bull for many years.

"The greater part of the lots were of 8 acres; some were only 4. Those on the east side were short in the upper part, the 4-acre lots being 16 rods wide. The length of the street on the west side was 340 rods, estimated from the intersection of the highway to Northampton to the north end. The street formerly extended farther south than now, against the home-lots of Cowles and Fellows.

RES. OF WM. HENRY DICKINSON, HATFIELD, MASS.

"The owning of meadow-lands in small parcels rendered the fencing of the whole in one enclosure a matter of importance, and the town of Hadley, as afterward that of Hatfield, early made it a matter of official care.

"Great Pansett and Little Pansett were fenced in 1662, from the Connecticut at the lower end round to the Connecticut east of the village.

"In 1669 the fence of Little Pansett was ordered to be made with ditch, posts, and two or three rails on the same.

"Numerous provisions appear in the town records of Hatfield with regard to fencing, as well as the time when cattle could be turned in to feed in common after gathering crops."

In 1669 the citizens of Hadley presented to the General Court a protest against imports or customs duties. This was signed by twenty-eight from the west side, including most of the names already mentioned among the early proprietors. This being eight years after the first settlement shows that the number had not increased very rapidly.

In the original distribution of lands, the meadows on the west side (Hatfield) are thus described:

1st. The "Great North" or "Upper" Meadow, including a swamp adjoining, was separated into six divisions, and each west-side proprietor had a lot in each division, and some lots were reserved.

This is still known as North Meadow, and occupies the northeast corner of the town, next the Connecticut River and the Whately line, bounded partly on the west by Great Pond, containing about 1000 acres.

2d. "Little Meadow" was situated at the north end of the street, and part of it east of North Meadow. It was in two divisions. This meadow is still known by the same name. It lies just north of the Bliss Hotel corner, but is really a part of the meadow already described.

3d. The South Meadow, or "the meadow adjoining the street" at the south end, was called Wequettayag by the Indians, and commonly Great Pansett in the records.

It contained about 430 acres, with little or no waste land. The proprietors of Hadley (east side) had the west part, called 205 acres, and the proprietors of Hatfield (west side) had the east part, about 225 acres, including Indian Bottom. This last name was given to a tract of land adjoining the Connecticut, on the South Meadow, north of Hadley village. When the Indian chief Umpanchala sold this meadow and other lands, June 10, 1660, he reserved the Indian planting-ground. He sold a part of this soon after, and the whole in a few years. From this reservation of Indian planting-ground, the whole has been called Indian Bottom, or Indian Hollow. Most of it is productive and valuable mowing-ground. The area of this has been considerably increased by deposits of alluvial matter through the action of the river for two hundred years, Hadley losing, Hatfield gaining.

Daniel Dickinson, who died in 1825, told Elijah Bardwell that he once had a 3-acre lot in Indian Hollow, which grew into $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres in about fifty years. The whole width of the river has been changed at that point, Hadley losing, Hatfield gaining.

4th. The Southwest Meadow, which Hadley obtained of Northampton, was called Capawonk in old times, and afterward Amponchus, Little Pansett, Little Pontius, etc. It is separated from Great Pansett by Mill River.

The west-side inhabitants (Hatfield) had the upper part, denominated the Plain, at two acres for one. The east side (Hadley) had all Capawonk except the plain. After being equalized, and ponds and worthless swamps rejected, the number of acres was about 157. This is still known as little Pansett.

The number of west-side proprietors who drew lots in the South Meadow was 22, and the amount of estates £2500. Twenty-three proprietors had lots in the North Meadow, and some were reserved.

After the township was divided, it was estimated that Hadley had two-thirds of the improvable or interval land, and Hatfield one-third,—Hadley about 1600 acres; Hatfield about 800.

"So they made an end of dividing the country, as in the days of Joshua. The important business was performed harmoniously. No man claimed or received a great estate. No one had over $50\frac{1}{2}$ acres of interval land. The vast extent of upland was open to all equally for food, timber, and pasturage."

This division evidently took place from 1661 to 1663.

From the town records we take the following valuable document:

"The oath of allegiance, which by order from our Honored General Court was to be taken respectively in each town of this County, and was administered by the Worshipful Major Pynchon to the several inhabitants and persons within the township of Hatfield, being convened together in Hatfield, Feb. 8, 1678.

"Rev. John Wise (perhaps), Nathaniel Dickinson, John Coleman, Philip Russell, John Field, Obadiah Dickinson, Nicholas Worthington, Moses Craft, Samuel Marsh, Samuel Kellogg, Benjamin Wait, James Brown, Samuel Graves, Sr., Daniel Belding, Peter Plympton, Benjamin Barrett, John Evans, Stephen Belding, Simon Williams, Wm. Kings, Thomas Meekins, Sr., Samuel Belding, Sr., Daniel White, Eleazer Frary, John Loomis, John Cowles, Thomas Hastings, Wm. Bartholomew, Samuel Belding, Jr., John Clary, Joseph Thomas, Samuel Field, Wm. Scott, Robert Bardwell, Samuel Foote, Ephraim Hinsdale, Wm. Armes, Samuel Graves, Jr., John Wells, Jr., Joseph Field, Wm. Gull, Edward Church, Daniel Warner, John Wells, John Allis, Samuel Dickinson, Samuel Allis, Quintan Stockwell, Walter Hickson, John Downing, Sampson Frary, Isaac Graves, Benjamin Hastings, Stephen Gennings, Jacob Gardner, John Graves, Thomas Braiye, Samuel Harrington, Benjamin Downing, Robert Poick.

"The above-named persons, their names were here entered this Feb. 23d, 1678, by me.

"SAMUEL PARTRIGG, Recorder."

The above shows probably the names of all the male inhabitants twenty-seven years after the settlement. The early permanent settlers are thus all named, though doubtless others came and went, remaining for short periods. The family names given above are still very largely found in Hatfield at the present time,—as Billings, Graves, Wells, Dickinson, Evans, Bardwell, Coleman, and others.

The statement of the home-lots on Hatfield Street affords the means of tracing at the present time very nearly the ancient landmarks, and locating the settlers as they lived in the old days when the Indians were thick in the forests around, and when unslumbering vigilance alone could save life and home and family.

PHYSICIANS.

In April, 1679, Thomas Hastings, of Hatfield, petitioned for license to practice physic and chirurgery. The subject was referred to the next court. No license is found on record, but he undoubtedly was authorized to practice the next year. For many years he was the physician and surgeon for Hatfield, Hadley, Deerfield, and other towns. Sometimes his ride extended to Springfield, Suffield, Westfield, Enfield, and Brookfield. Yet his time was but partially occupied with his professional business. His bills were small, and his income could not have been great. He kept the town school several years. At his death, in 1712, the amount due to his estate was only £39, and the whole was estimated at but £225.

His son, Thomas Hastings, Jr., was a man of very similar employment,—practicing medicine and teaching,—his ride extending over the surrounding country, like his father's. He died in 1728.

The large amount of other valuable material embodied in this sketch compels the omission of any extended notice of the physicians of the town. In the chapter upon the medical societies of the counties they will appear to some extent.

Dr. Daniel White was a noted physician of the present century.

MERCHANTS, STORES.

Zachariah Field was a trader in the early years. His operations were extended to buying furs of the Indians. He probably kept only a few goods to exchange with the Indians and supply some of the simplest wants of the settlers. He imitated the fashions of modern times by failing in 1664.

During the succeeding hundred years there is very little to be obtained concerning the stores. The Partridges, Dickinsons, Smiths, and Allises being merchants in part, at least, it is understood the earlier members of those families were also. Samuel Partridge's store of 1790, and for twenty or thirty years, stood where John A. Billings now resides.

The old Dickinson store was on or near the site of the present residence of W. H. Dickinson.

Nathaniel Dickinson was the first to bring in modern crockery, perhaps one hundred and thirty years ago. Trenchers for plates had been used before that time. Mrs. Bardwell having bought a set of the new plates, her husband, not approving of the extravagance, and having a chance to set the table for the slaves without the assistance of his better half, took down those choice new plates and had the slaves eat from them first, as a practical joke at the expense of his good wife.

"Landlord Allis" had a store probably in the Revolution and later at the place next north of the present residence of W. H. Dickinson. The store was managed largely by one of the Waits.

Eurotas Hastings was a merchant for a series of years. Elijah Bardwell, to whom we are indebted for many of these items, relates an anecdote showing the use of liquors in olden times. Goods were largely brought by the river from Hartford. Of course, navigation closed at the setting in of winter, and merchants intended to have full supplies in store by that time. In March, 1821, or 1822, Mr. Bardwell was in the store, and Mr. Hastings inquired about teams to go to Hartford for goods, saying he had seven hogsheads of rum when the winter set in, but it was all gone!

John Hart's store was at the south end of the village.

TAVERNS.

In the times of the Revolution and for some years after, the public-house of "Landlord Allis," alluded to in connection with his store, was a noted resort and a favorite with the traveling public. A cousin of the proprietor (perhaps he was), coming there one day pretty full of New England rum or something stronger, and hearing of a rather pleasant room given to a negro, and somewhat disgusted at such practical evidence of equality, is said to have actually led his horse up the stairs to see the room. The horse walked up, but wouldn't walk down, and it was necessary to throw the animal and drag him down.

There was a tavern, between the Revolution and 1800, where David Billings now lives.

Ebenezer White kept tavern, and his father before him. This was at the site of the present place of John T. Fitch. It was continued by the widow of Ebenezer for a short time.

At this old tavern there was a famous celebration upon the receipt of the news of peace, in 1816.

Ebenezer Dwight had a tavern for a few years (1815 to 1820, perhaps) where Alfred Graves now lives.

Dr. White kept a public-house thirty-five or forty years where Daniel W. Wells now resides, commencing 1800 or earlier; the present building is the same.

John B. Morton kept a tavern, 1820 to 1830, in what is now a tenement-house, next south of the residence of W. H. Dickinson. Aaron Dickinson had a public-house for many years at North Hatfield; continued until business was destroyed by the opening of the railroads.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Hatfield may have had 30 families in 1670. The persons taxed in 1678, after the Indian war, were 48, and in 1682, 57. The number of families in 1682 may have been 48 or 50. They had five selectmen and other town-officers as in Hadley. The herdmen and shepherds were employed, and also men to burn the woods in the spring.

In 1692, Hatfield began a contest with Hadley, demanding that the river should be the boundary between them, and attained her object in 1733.

The attempt of Hatfield to carry her south line into territory long in the possession of Northampton failed, in 1720, after a dispute of twenty-six years.

Col. Samuel Partrigg, or Partridge, was powerful in Hatfield, and was for many years a very prominent man in the Connecticut Valley.

Landlord Allis is said to have had the first carpeted room in town.

It is a traditional anecdote that Roger Dickinson, who had a family of girls and desired to have them educated, in the early days when there were no "Smith's Female Colleges," went to Elijah Dickinson to secure his assistance in urging the matter before the town. The latter himself approved of educating the girls, but was doubtful of success in securing an appropriation. Said he, "Roger, it is all right, but do you suppose they will vote any money to teach the shes?"

The Bliss fulling-mill was at the site of the pistol-factory, in a room under the old grist-mill.

There were several families at North Farms in early times, where there are now no buildings, but the plowshare often turns up bricks and other relics of settlement. Here were the Fields, Bardwells, Gulls, Arms, and others. Elijah Bardwell, to whom we are indebted for many of these items, supposes that the buildings burnt by the Indians "outside the fortifications" were located there.

There were Indian burials near North Farms, and the bones coming to the surface in cultivating the ground have often been taken away as relics.

An elm of immense proportions stood till within a few years in front of the present church. It was a monarch of the ancient forest. Oliver Wendell Holmes, who often admired it, pronounced it the largest tree in New England, and the "autocrat of the breakfast-table" is good authority. It was broken badly by the wind a few years ago, and safety compelled its removal.

A peculiar family item appears in the lists of early settlers,—that middle names were very rare until quite a recent period. A petition of a hundred years ago, with 40 or 50 signers, shows no middle names. A list of voters of 1825 has only 7 such, and very many old people now living have only one prefix to the family surname. Junior and senior were more frequent in old times than now.

The barn of Elijah Bardwell is the old meeting-house of 1750, and the sills are still sound. In this building are timbers taken to build this from the house of 1668, and Mr. Bardwell has two timbers from that earliest house in his well-room.

The old difficulties of "seating the meeting-house" are alluded to elsewhere. On one occasion, when there was considerable dissatisfaction, and some audible expression of it, Thomas Banks, who had been assigned what was deemed the poorest seat in the house, rose amid the other speech-makers and said, "I am thankful for a seat anywhere in the house of God."

The old Murray place was the present place of Samuel F. Billings. A daughter of Mr. Murray was the wife of Brig.-Gen. Maltby, who commanded the Hampshire County men in the campaign for the defense of Boston, war of 1812.

The first school-house, and the place of all the schools for a hundred years, or most of them, stood in the street a short distance south of the meeting-house. The second school-house, mentioned often in the records as the place of town-meetings, was built of brick, much or all of the material being taken from the old fortified houses of the early settlement. It appears that palisades were not the only protection resorted to. Some of these fortified houses had brick walls a foot or more in thickness, and perhaps that accounts for the ill success of the Indians in some of their attempts at slaughter.

The list of lot-owners and their location, already given, suggests many interesting facts of the early times. The house of Benjamin Wait stood on the present place of J. Morton, west side, near the north end of the street. From there were taken the wife and the children, to rescue whom he made the trip to Canada.

Rev. Hope Atherton, the first minister, lived on the present place of Erastus Billings.

Elijah Bardwell gives the tradition that one man, wounded almost to death at Bloody Brook, actually worked his way on his hands and knees to Hatfield, reaching there some days after the battle, was taken in, cared for, and his life saved.

The names of the prominent public men of the town in early times are very largely shown in the lists of public officers and representatives to the General Court, and many others are mentioned in lists of committees upon churches, schools, and burial-places.

Eminent men, natives of this town, are numerous, but it seems difficult to procure a full list. There may be mentioned, Jonathan Dickinson (1688 to 1747); was an able clergyman and author; Elisha Williams (1694 to 1755), president of Yale College from 1726 to 1739; Oliver Partridge (1712 to 1792), often a member of public bodies; Oliver Smith, founder of the famous Smith charities; and still others.

Mr. S. G. Hubbard states that the Meekins House, now owned by H. S. Hubbard, and known as the Roswell Hubbard place, was fortified in the old times. The building is very likely the oldest in town. It is stated that the chimney was laid up with clay mortar.

The earliest three marriages recorded appear to be Daniel Belding to Elizabeth Foote, Nov. 10, 1670; Joseph Leonard to Mary Fellows, March 24, 1672; John Graves to Mary Brunson, July 20, 1671.

The earliest three births recorded are Hannah, daughter of John and Deborah Cowles, born Nov. 24, 1668; John, son of Richard and Ruth Morton, born Jan. 21, 1670; Jonathan, son of John and Deborah Cowles, born Jan. 26, 1670.

The earliest three deaths: Hannah, daughter of Samuel and Hannah Gillet, "sorely burnt," and died February, 1670; John, son of Rachel and Ruth Morton, April 26, 1670; John, son of John and Martha Hawkes, July 6, 1671.

REMINISCENCES OF MR. MOSES MORTON.

He was born in 1790. His father was Josiah. His grandfather, Moses. His great-grandfather, Abraham, and Abraham was the son of Richard, the pioneer. The children of Josiah, besides Moses, were Rodolphus, Leander, and two daughters, Abigail and Sally. Josiah was in the Revolutionary war, and participated in the battle of Saratoga. Moses was one of the defenders of Boston, in 1814. He relates with much glee what a pleasant time they had down there; never enjoyed himself better in all his life. He says: "For those valiant services they gave me two land-warrants, and at last a pension; curious idea, wa'n't it, after seventy years to give me a pension for just that nice little parade down to Boston? I was a quartermaster under Col. Voluntine. I was a sergeant in the home company. They called on Hatfield for a detail of fourteen men, among them a captain and a lieutenant; but they two whined and took on so dreadfully the officers let them off and took two sergeants, Jonathan Porter and me. That is the way I got into the excursion."

Mr. Morton married into the Dr. Lyman family. He has used tobacco all his life, and relates how Rev. Dr. Trask, the great apostle of the Anti-Tobacco movement, came to expostulate with him, and if possible convert him. "Tobacco will hurt you,—shorten your life," said Trask. "Will it?" replied Mr. Morton. "Now, look here, Trask! I married into a minister's family, and I have seen lots of ministers' meetings at the old Lyman homestead, and they all smoked, and I can give you the names of twelve that lived to a green old age and almost died in their pulpits." Mr. Trask gave him up as a hard case.

Mr. Morton says the old militia-trainings were great affairs when he was a boy. The troops used to parade in the Main Street, in front of Dr. White's tavern, and also deploy and go through their drill on the wide common in front of the present post-office.

Jonathan Lyman, who studied law and settled in Hatfield, procured the establishment of the post-office, and Dr. Daniel White was the first postmaster. Dr. White kept it at his tavern, where Elisha Wells now lives. Dr. Lyman's homestead was on a lot now owned by Marcus Morton; the buildings gone.

The old church stood opposite in the street.

The school-house was farther south, opposite Dr. White's tavern. Dr. John Hastings, like his ancestors, was a teacher for some years. Mr. Morton well remembers when he was promoted up-stairs to the higher school. He recalls other teachers as Ephraim Hastings, Levi Field, and Mr. Huntington.

Mr. Morton says when he was ten years old there was not a buggy nor a cutter in town. There were no draw-chains for horses, and no leather tugs. The tugs were ropes, the lines were ropes. The people had double sleighs, and rode to meeting in them during the winter; in the summer went on foot.

The first chaise in town was assessed for taxation at $60, but by accident was written down $600, and the owner paid the tax all the same without grumbling. He says he used to read Addison and Goldsmith when young, and not such trash as the young people have at the present time.

From old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

"I, Curson, Teacher of the Proprietors' School, Northampton, begs leave to inform the public that he intends to open a Subscription School at Hatfield the 1st day of January next, where youths will be carefully and expeditiously instructed in various branches of useful Literature. For terms and other particulars gentlemen are desired to apply to Col. Chapin, of Hatfield.

"DEC. 16, 1786."

Nov. 27, 1792.—"Oliver Smith advertises a brown Heifer, two years old past with a bob-tail, lost in the Hatfield woods. Note.—This Heifer was a part of the wealth now blessing so many through the 'Smith charities.'"

1792.—"Benjamin Smith and Oliver Smith dissolve partnership by mutual consent."

The Smith store was on the ground of the present church.

Trades' unions were not unknown eighty years ago. An adjourned meeting of house-joiners and cabinet-makers of Hampshire County was held at the house of Landlord Billings, in Hatfield, the first Wednesday of March, 1796.

June 25, 1804.—"Saddles exchanged at an ordination. Adna Smith complains that he lost 'an almost new saddle, seat of neat's leather, round tuft nails, and pad faced with red plush,' was taken, and one 'poorer, much poorer,' left in its place."

ORGANIZATION.

The inhabitants of Hadley who settled upon the west side of the Connecticut suffered so many inconveniences by reason of the broad stream which separated them from those upon the east that they were obliged immediately to have something of a separate organization. Accordingly, "west-side meetings" were held the very first year of settlement; and there is still preserved in the town-clerk's office of Hatfield an early book of records dating back to 1660,—a venerable relic which the town-fathers might well order printed entire at the public expense. They were perhaps first kept on loose sheets of paper, and afterward written out in their present form by the first town-clerk, John Allis, about 1670. This, with the two small volumes of town-records that follow, constitutes some of the earliest and most valuable manuscripts extant in this valley. Northampton was only settled seven years before these records commence. Indeed, the earliest births, deaths, and marriages of Northampton are in this old Hatfield office, dating back to 1655.

These "west-side meetings" transacted a variety of business with reference to divisions of lands, laying out roads, building fences in common, making police regulations, and establishing public worship. Mr. Hope Atherton, the first minister, was procured through the action of these meetings. All this was permitted by the town of Hadley, but this quasi civil organization could not meet the wants of the case.

A striking description of the difficulties of the crossing of the river will be found under the head of churches. A definite application was made to the General Court for incorporation. If there was any reluctance upon the part of the citizens of the east side, it was soon removed. The General Court received the petition favorably, the consent of Hadley was obtained, an act of incorporation was passed, and "Hadley west side" gave way to its successor, the town of Hatfield.

"In answer to the petition of the inhabitants of Hadley, on the west side of the river, that they may be allowed to be a town of themselves distinct from Hadley on the east side, the Deputy of Hadley certifying that that town hath consented to release them if this Court do approve thereof, &c., this Court do therefore allow them on the west side of the river to be a township distinct from them on the east side of the river, and do grant them a tract of land westward six miles back into the woods from the Great River; their southerly bounds to be Northampton northerly bounds, and the land which Hadley reserves to themselves, and from their said southerly line to run up the river northerly upon the square six miles; their northerly bounds likewise to run back from the Great River six miles westward, as before, reserving proprieties formerly granted to any person, and that this town be called 'Hatfields.'"

The name is said to have been derived from one of the Hatfields in England, perhaps from Hatfield Broad Oak, in the county of Essex, so named from a splendid specimen of the oaks of that section.

Soon after the passage of the act the new town was fully organized by the election of the usual town-officers, and the adoption of all needful measures with reference to roads, bridges, and common fences. The early volumes of the town-records form a mine of quaint and curious information,—all of it so valuable in an antiquarian sense that it is difficult to choose what to take and what to leave, and so extensive as to render it impossible to quote a tithe of it for this chapter. The most important school, church, and military matters appear elsewhere.

May 21, 1688.—"Voted as to the poor, those who want maintenance, the Selectmen, every one of them as appertaineth to them as agents, shall have inspection over them, their occupation and their children, that their things and their labor be put to the best advantage."

Also voted, "Whereas Capt. Allisey hath procured standard weights and delivered them to the Selectmen for keeping to order, the Selectmen have committed them to the custody of Samuel Belding, Sen., to be put into a bag and secured for the sealer's use annually."

Who has the bag now? Will some deliver in old garrets and chests bring them out and try the merchants' scales by them now after nearly two hundred years?

The taxes levied by the General Court upon the town were for some of the early years the following: June 25, 1716, £63 10s. 6d.; July 5, 1718, £41 2s. 9d.; June 30, 1719, £18 14s. 4d.; July 23, 1720, £28 1s. 6d.; June 17, 1796, £42.

In 1735, John Fitch built an oil-mill in Hatfield.

It appears from some items in the records that cattle were fattened for market in Hatfield as early as 1696, and that it was not then a new business.

From 1783 to 1786 the town of Hatfield strenuously opposed a division of the county.

At this time, too, many votes were passed in favor of retrenchment, the lowering of official salaries, and various other reforms, and precise instructions were often voted to the representative at the Great and General Court.

The danger of a war in 1797 called out the following vote:

"To give those men who shall turn out voluntarily as soldiers, which are required of this town, agreeably to a resolve of Congress in June last, nine shillings, as a bounty to each one, and if they actually march, 8 dollars a month."

May 15, 1780, voted that the town are desirous that Dr. Joseph O. Cone settle in the town as a physician, and he was offered the opportunity of teaching school.

An early lightning-rod,—town voted one for the meeting-house Oct. 17, 1775.

There was a cider-mill in front of the Widow Hastings' house in 1736, as permission was then voted to remove it to some other locality.

May 23, 1770, a vote was passed consenting to the organization of the northern portion of this town into a separate district. This was the origin of the town of Whately.

At the same meeting consent was voted to the inhabitants of the western portion of this town to form a separate district, and this was the origin of the town of Williamsburg.

Place of the Town-Meetings.—This is not always noted in the records. As there was a meeting-house when the town was organized, they were doubtless held there, as was the custom in New England towns. They were sometimes called "at the brick school-house," and were probably held in one or the other of those buildings until the erection of the town-house.

While the "west side" was a part of Hadley, the following selectmen of the latter town appear to have lived in what is now Hatfield: 1660, Nathaniel Dickinson (perhaps); 1662, Thomas Meekins, Wm. Allis; 1663, Thomas Meekins, John White; 1664, Wm. Allis, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr.; 1665, Thomas Meekins, Isaac Graves; 1666, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., John Coleman; 1667, John Cole, Daniel Warner; 1668, Nathaniel Dickinson, Jr., Samuel Belding; 1669, Thomas Meekins, William Allis.

SELECTMEN.

- 1670-71, January.—Nathaniel Dickinson, Sr., William Allis, John Cowles, Sr., Isaac Graves, John Coleman.
 1672-76.—Records lost for these five years.
 1677, January.—Thomas Meekins, Lieut. Allis, Edward Church, Samuel Belden, Daniel White.
 1678.—Thomas Meekins, Daniel Warner, John Coleman, Philip Russell, Daniel White.
 1679, January.—Thomas Meekins, Edward Church, John Allis, Samuel Belden, Sr., Eleazer Frary.
 1680.—Thomas Meekins, Daniel Warner, Philip Russell, John Allis, Samuel Dickinson, Sr.
 1681.—Edward Church, Thomas Meekins, Eleazer Frary, John Allis, Mr. Nicholas Worthington.
 1682.—Thomas Meekins, John Allis, Daniel Warner, John Coleman, John Cowles.
 1683.—Thomas Meekins, Samuel Belden, Sr., Samuel Dickinson, John Allis, Edward Church.
 1684.—Thomas Meekins, John Allis, John Coleman, Joseph Belknap, John Hubbard.
 1685.—Thomas Meekins, John Allis, Daniel Warner, Edward Church, John Hubbard.
 1686.—Thomas Meekins, Philip Russell, John Coleman, Daniel White, Eleazer Frary.
 1687-88.—John Hubbard, Edward Church, Samuel Belden, Sr., Samuel Partrigg, Eleazer Frary, Samuel Marsh.
 1689.—Capt. Allis, Daniel White, Samuel Dickinson, John Cowles, John White.
 1690.—John Hubbard, Sr., Samuel Belden, Sr., Samuel Dickinson, Sr., Richard Morton, Sr., Samuel Partrigg.
 1691, December 7th.—Deacon Church, Deacon Coleman, John Wells, Sr., Samuel Belding, Jr., Samuel Partrigg.
 1692, December.—Samuel Belding, Sr., Samuel White, Samuel Dickinson, Saml. Marsh, Samuel Partrigg.
 1693, March.—Samuel Partrigg, Sr., Samuel Belding, Sr., Samuel Dickinson, Lieut. White, Samuel Marsh.
 1694.—Deacon Church, Deacon Coleman, Ensign Frary, Benjamin Hastings, Samuel Partrigg.
 1695.—Samuel Partrigg, Deacon Coleman, Samuel Dickinson, Sr., Samuel Marsh, John White.
 1696.—Samuel Partrigg, Samuel Belding, Nathaniel Dickinson, Ensign Frary, Mr. Joseph Belknap.
 1697.—S. Partrigg, D. Coleman, S. Marsh, Samuel Belding, Jr., Benjamin Hastings.
 1698.—Samuel Partrigg, Lieut. White, Ens. Frary, Samuel Dickinson, John White.
 1699.—Samuel Partrigg, Deacon Church, Deacon Coleman, John Graves, Sr., Isaac Hubbard.
 1700.—Samuel Partrigg, Samuel Belding, Sr.; Samuel Marsh, Sr., Ens. Frary, John White.
 1701.—Samuel Partrigg, Deacon Church, Daniel Warner, Samuel Billings, John Dickinson.
 1702.—Samuel Partrigg, Deacon Coleman, Samuel Belding, Sr., Samuel Marsh, John White.
 1703.—Col. Samuel Partrigg, Deacon Church, Deacon Coleman, Samuel Marsh, Sr., John White.
 1704.—Deacon Coleman, Samuel Marsh, Jr., John White, Jonathan Graves, Sr., Thomas Hastings, Jr.
 1705.—Ens. Frary, Dr. Hastings, Samuel Marsh, Jr., John White, Daniel Warner.
 1706.—Deacon Marsh, Dr. Hastings, Sergt. White, Samuel Gunn, Jonathan Smith.

- 1707.—Ens. White, Daniel Warner, Thomas Nash, Isaac Hubbard, Thomas Hastings.
- 1708.—Deacon Marsh, Ens. White, Isaac Graves, Jonathan Smith, Thomas Hastings, Jr.
- 1709.—Deacon Marsh, Ensign White, John Dickinson, Samuel Billings, Thomas Hastings, Jr.
- 1710.—Thomas Nash, Daniel Warner, Isaac Hubbard, Henry Dwight, Thomas Hastings, Jr.
- 1711.—Deacon Marsh, Ens. White, Samuel Billings, Ichabod Allis, Thomas Hastings, Jr.
- 1712.—Ens. White, Isaac Graves, Isaac Hubbard, Henry Dwight, Thomas Hastings, Jr.
- 1713.—Deacon Marsh, Deacon White, Daniel Warner, Isaac Hubbard, Thomas Hastings.
- 1714.—John Graves, Sr., John Dickinson, Henry Dwight, Samuel Gunn, Thomas Hastings.
- 1715.—Deacon White, Henry Dwight, Isaac Hubbard, Ichabod Allis, Thomas Hastings.
- 1716.—Col. Partridge, John Dickinson, Daniel Warner, Richard Billings, Joseph Smith.
- 1717.—Col. Partridge, Deacon John White, Lieut. Henry Dwight, Samuel Billings, Thomas Hastings.
- 1718.—Sergt. John Dickinson, John Wells, Joseph Smith, Nathaniel Coleman, Thomas Hastings.
- 1719.—Col. Partridge, Daniel Warner, Thomas Nash, Samuel Billings, John Field.
- 1720.—Capt. Henry Dwight, John Dickinson, Jonathan Smith, Nathaniel Dickinson, Thomas Hastings.
- 1721.—Col. Partridge, Deacon John White, Nathaniel Smith, Richard Billings, Thomas Hastings.
- 1722.—Col. Samuel Partridge, Dr. Thomas Hastings, John Dickinson, Joseph Smith, Joseph Kellogg.
- 1723.—Deacon John White, Samuel Billings, John Dickinson, Nathaniel Dickinson, Thomas Hastings.
- 1724.—Col. Partridge, Col. Henry Dwight, Nathaniel Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, John White.
- 1725.—Daniel Warner, John Dickinson, Dr. Hastings, Ichabod Allis, Henry Dwight.
- 1726.—John Dickinson, Deacon Nathaniel Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, Richard Church, Jonathan Coles.
- 1727.—Capt. Dwight, Nathaniel Smith, Deacon White, Joseph Smith, Ichabod Allis.
- 1728.—Samuel Partridge, Esq., John Dickinson, Jonathan Graves, Richard Billings, Jonathan Morton.
- 1729.—Capt. Dwight, Jonathan Morton, Deacon Dickinson, John Dickinson, Samuel Billings.
- 1730.—John Dickinson, Richard Church, John Smith, John Hubbard, Daniel White.
- 1731.—Capt. Dwight, John Dickinson, Jonathan Morton, Ens. Billings, Richard Billings.
- 1732.—Deacon Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, Mr. Israel Williams, Thomas Nash, Samuel Bodman.
- 1733.—John Dickinson, Capt. Coleman, Capt. Partridge, Jonathan Morton, Nathaniel Gunn.
- 1734.—Capt. Coleman, Capt. Williams, Richard Billings, Deacon Dickinson, Oliver Partridge.
- 1735.—Capt. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Jonathan Morton, Nathaniel Gunn, Samuel Bodman.
- 1736.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. Williams, Jonathan Morton, Deacon Dickinson, Richard Church.
- 1737.—John Dickipson, Ichabod Allis, Richard Billings, Oliver Partridge, Capt. Williams.
- 1738.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. Williams, John Dickinson, John Hubbard, Richard Billings.
- 1739.—Capt. Coleman, Oliver Partridge, Maj. Williams, John Dickinson, Deacon Bodman.
- 1740.—John Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, Oliver Partridge, Abraham Morton, Richard Billings.
- 1741.—John Dickinson, Nathaniel Coleman, John Belding, Joseph Billings, Ebenezer Morton.
- 1742.—Oliver Partridge, John Hubbard, Maj. Williams, Ens. Dwight, Obadiah Dickinson.
- 1743.—Maj. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Daniel White, Seth Dwight, Thomas Nash.
- 1744.—Israel Williams, Oliver Partridge, Daniel White, Nathaniel Coleman, Joseph Billings.
- 1745.—Israel Williams, Oliver Partridge, John Hubbard, Daniel White, Seth Dwight.
- 1746.—Capt. Coleman, Oliver Partridge, John Hubbard, Deacon Bodman, Lieut. Billings.
- 1747.—Maj. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Ebenezer Morton, Daniel White, Deacon Bodman.
- 1748.—Maj. Israel Williams, Capt. Nathaniel Coleman, Ebenezer Morton, John Hubbard, Samuel Bodman.
- 1749.—Col. Williams, Capt. White, Deacon Bodman, Sergt. Thomas Nash, Oliver Partridge.
- 1750.—Col. Williams, Deacon Hubbard, Deacon Bodman, Oliver Partridge, John Dickinson, Jr.
- 1751.—Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Dickinson.
- 1752.—Col. Williams, Capt. White, Deacon Bodman, Lieut. Dickinson, Oliver Partridge.
- 1753.—Col. Williams, Capt. White, Oliver Partridge, Lieut. Billings, John Dickinson, Jr.
- 1754.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Billings, John Dickinson, Jr.
- 1755.—Col. Williams, Deacon Hubbard, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Joseph Billings, John Dickinson, Jr.
- 1756.—Capt. White, Oliver Partridge, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Billings, Lieut. Dickinson.
- 1757.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Joseph Billings, Lieut. Oliver Dickinson.
- 1758.—Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Oliver Dickinson.
- 1759.—Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Deacon Bodman, Capt. White, Elisha Hubbard.
- 1760.—Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Deacon Bodman, Lieut. Dickinson.
- 1761.—Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Capt. Dwight, Deacon Bodman.
- 1762.—Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Capt. White, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Oliver Dickinson.
- 1763.—Col. Williams, Capt. White, John Dickinson, Elisha Hubbard, Elijah Morton.
- 1764.—Capt. Seth Dwight, Lieut. Joseph Billings, John Dickinson, Elijah Morton, Elisha Hubbard.
- 1765.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. Seth Dwight, Elisha Hubbard, Wm. Williams, John Dickinson.
- 1766.—John Dickinson, Elisha Hubbard, Ensign Allis, Perez Graves, Lieut. Samuel Smith.
- 1767-68.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. Seth Dwight, Lieut. Joseph Billings, Lieut. Oliver Dickinson, Wm. Williams, Esq.
- 1769.—John Dickinson, Perez Graves, John Hastings, Elijah Morton, Eben. Cole.
- 1770.—Oliver Partridge, Capt. Dwight, Lieut. Dickinson, William Williams, Esq., Elijah Morton.
- 1771.—John Dickinson, Elijah Morton, Perez Graves, John Hastings, Elihu White.
- 1772.—Wm. Williams, Elijah Morton, Oliver Partridge, John Hastings, David Billings.
- 1773.—Oliver Partridge, Elijah Morton, David Billings, John Hastings, Perez Graves.
- 1774.—Dr. Elijah Morton, John Dickinson, Perez Graves, John Hastings, Oliver Partridge.
- 1775.—John Dickinson, Elijah Morton, Phineas Frary, Perez Graves, John Hastings.
- 1776.—John Dickinson, John Hastings, Elijah Morton, Perez Graves.
- 1777.—John Dickinson, John Hastings, Perez Graves, Elijah Morton, Jonathan Allis.
- 1778.—Col. Dickinson, Deacon Elijah Morton, John Hastings, Esq., David Morton, Elihu White.
- 1779.—Col. Dickinson, Deacon Elijah Morton, John Hastings, Lieut. Elihu White, Jonathan Allis.
- 1780.—Deacon Elijah Morton, Oliver Partridge, Capt. Perez Graves, Phineas Frary, Benjamin Wells.
- 1781.—Oliver Partridge, Deacon Elijah Morton, Capt. Perez Graves, John Hastings, Esq., Benjamin Wells.
- 1782-83.—John Hastings, Esq., Deacon Elijah Morton, Jonathan Allis, Elihu White, Col. Seth Murray.
- 1784.—Elijah Morton, John Hastings, Esq., Jonathan Allis, Lieut. Elihu White, Col. Seth Murray.
- 1785.—Elijah Morton, John Hastings, Esq., Lieut. David Billings, Benjamin Smith, Capt. Silas Billings.
- 1786.—John Hastings, Esq., Lieut. David Billings, Capt. Silas Billings, Elijah Morton, Benjamin Smith.
- 1787.—Lieut. David Billings, Deacon Elijah Morton, John Hastings, Esq., Capt. Silas Billings, Benjamin Smith.
- 1788.—Hon. John Hastings, Deacon Elijah Morton, Lieut. David Billings, Capt. Silas Billings, Lieut. Lemuel Dickinson.
- 1789.—Deacon Elijah Morton, John Hastings, Esq., Lieut. David Billings, Capt. Silas Billings, Lieut. Lemuel Dickinson.
- 1790.—Capt. Silas Billings, Lieut. Elihu White, Lieut. Samuel Partridge, Benjamin Smith, Silas Graves.
- 1791.—Lieut. David Billings, Lieut. Samuel Partridge, Capt. Silas Billings, Benjamin Smith, John Hastings, Esq.
- 1792.—Lieut. Samuel Partridge, Silas Graves, Deacon Elijah Morton, Ensign Elijah Smith, Seth Bardwell.
- 1793.—John Hastings, Esq., Lieut. Samuel Partridge, Capt. Silas Billings, Benjamin Smith, Esq., Capt. Jonathan Porter.
- 1794.—John Hastings, Benjamin Smith, Lemuel Dickinson, Elijah Morton, Jonathan Porter.
- 1795.—John Hastings, Capt. Porter, Samuel Partridge, Benjamin Smith, Esq., Capt. Billings.
- 1796.—John Hastings, Esq., Samuel Partridge, Benjamin Smith, Jonathan Porter, Lieut. Elijah Smith.
- 1797.—John Hastings, Esq., Benjamin Smith, Jonathan Porter, Lieut. Elijah Smith, Benjamin Wait, Jr.

- 1798.—Benjamin Smith, Capt. Elijah Smith, Capt. Jonathan Porter, Lieut. David Billings, Mr. Isaac Maltby.
- 1799.—John Hastings, Lieut. David Billings, Capt. Jonathan Porter, Benjamin Smith, Esq., Capt. Elijah Smith.
- 1800.—John Hastings, Lieut. David Billings, Benjamin Smith, Capt. Jonathan Porter, Capt. Elijah Smith.
- 1801.—John Hastings, Benjamin Smith, Elijah Smith, Jonathan Porter, Lieut. Cotton Partridge.
- 1802.—John Hastings, Benjamin Smith, Jonathan Porter, Elijah Smith, Perez Morton.
- 1803.—John Hastings, Esq., Benjamin Smith, Jonathan Porter, Elijah Smith, Perez Morton.
- 1804-5.—John Hastings, Benjamin Smith, Silas Billings, Jonathan Porter, Benjamin Morton (2d).
- 1806.—John Hastings, Silas Billings, Jonathan Porter, Benjamin Morton (2d) Lieut. Rufus Smith.
- 1807-9.—John Hastings, Jonathan Porter, Deacon Benjamin Morton, Capt. Cotton Partridge, Joseph Billings.
- 1810-11.—John Hastings, Jonathan Porter, Rufus Smith, Cotton Partridge, Joseph Billings.
- 1812.—Cotton Partridge, Rufus Smith, Elijah Dickinson, Jr., Caleb Dickinson, Joseph Billings.
- 1813.—Elijah Dickinson, Rufus Smith, Cotton Partridge, Caleb Dickinson, Joseph Billings.
- 1814.—Elijah Dickinson, Rufus Smith, Cotton Partridge, Isaac Maltby, Caleb Dickinson.
- 1815.—Elijah Dickinson, Cotton Partridge, Isaac Maltby, Joseph Billings, Solomon Graves.
- 1816.—Benjamin Smith, Samuel Hastings, Erastus Billings, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., Solomon Graves.
- 1817.—Benjamin Smith, Ebenezer White, Cotton Partridge, Samuel Hastings, Erastus Billings.
- 1818.—Cotton Partridge, Ebenezer White, Solomon Graves, Erastus Billings, Israel Billings.
- 1819.—Ebenezer White, Elijah Bardwell, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., Capt. Chester Hastings, Roswell Hubbard.
- 1820-21.—Ebenezer White, Elijah Bardwell, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., William Dickinson, Roswell Hubbard.
- 1822.—Elijah Bardwell, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., William Dickinson, Roswell Hubbard, Jeremy Morton.
- 1823.—Elijah Bardwell, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., William Dickinson, Silas Graves, Roswell Hubbard.
- 1824.—Levi Graves, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., William Dickinson, Erastus Smith, Roswell Hubbard.
- 1825.—Levi Graves, Daniel Dickinson, Jr., Erastus Smith, Roswell Hubbard, Lumorn Pease.
- 1826.—Maj. Samuel Partridge, Silas Bardwell, Israel Dickinson, Jonathan Porter, Henry Hitchcock.
- 1827.—Samuel Partridge, Silas Bardwell, Rufus Cowles, Phinny Day, Elijah Hubbard.
- 1828.—Levi Graves, Caleb Dickinson, Erastus Smith, Salmon D. Bardwell, Elijah Hubbard.
- 1829.—Remembrance Bardwell, Jonathan Porter, Roswell Hubbard, Justin Wait, Ebenezer Graves.
- 1830.—Elijah Bardwell, Daniel Wait, Jonathan Porter, Jr., Moses Warner, Ashley P. Graves.
- 1831.—Capt. John White, Roswell Hubbard, Henry Wilkee, George Wait, John Fitch.
- 1832.—Rufus Cowles, John White, Solomon Graves, Jr., Joseph Smith, Jr., Justin Wait.
- 1833.—Alpheus Longley, Henry Wilkee, Aaron Dickinson.
- 1834.—Alpheus Longley, Henry Wilkee, George Wait.
- 1835.—Alpheus Longley, George Wait, John A. Billings.
- 1836.—John A. Billings, Elijah Bardwell, Moses Morton (2d).
- 1837.—Elijah Bardwell, Alpheus Longley, Israel Morton.
- 1838.—Alpheus Longley, Harvey Graves, George Wait.
- 1839.—George Wait, Harvey Graves, Solomon Graves, Jr.
- 1840.—Aretas Scott, Josiah Brown, Samuel D. Partridge.
- 1841.—Samuel D. Partridge, Aretas Scott, Alpheus Longley.
- 1842.—Alpheus Longley, Aretas Scott, Samuel P. Billings.
- 1843.—Alpheus Longley, Austin Smith, Samuel P. Billings.
- 1844.—George Wait, Alpheus Longley, Leander Cooley.
- 1845.—Elijah Hubbard, John A. Billings, Elijah Bardwell, Jr.,
- 1846-47.—Elijah Hubbard, Elijah Bardwell, Jr., John A. Billings.
- 1848.—James W. Warner, Samuel P. Billings, Lorenzo Cutter.
- 1849.—Roswell Hubbard, Wm. C. Bliss, Horace W. Field.
- 1850.—Wm. C. Bliss, Horace W. Field, Rufus Cowles.
- 1851.—Wm. C. Bliss, Rufus Cowles, Horace W. Field.
- 1852-54.—George W. Hubbard, Wm. Henry Dickinson, Reuben H. Belden.
- 1855.—Horace W. Field, Silas G. Hubbard, Alvin Sanderson.
- 1856.—Horace W. Field, Henry S. Porter, John D. Brown.
- 1857.—Henry S. Porter, John T. Fitch, Franklin Field.
- 1858.—John D. Brown, Horace W. Field, Henry S. Porter.
- 1859-60.—George W. Hubbard, James Scott, Elisha Hubbard.
- 1861.—Roswell Hubbard, Moses Morton, Lemuel Cooley.
- 1862.—R. H. Belden, Wm. H. Dickinson, J. T. Fitch.
- 1863-68.—Wm. H. Dickinson, R. H. Belden, J. T. Fitch.
- 1869-70.—F. D. Billings, Lucius G. Curtis, H. W. Field.

- 1871.—H. W. Field, J. D. Porter, Daniel W. Wells.
- 1872.—Elisha Hubbard, L. G. Curtis, Joseph Billings.
- 1873.—Joseph Billings, L. G. Curtis, A. E. Strong.
- 1874-75.—Joseph Billings, A. E. Strong, Charles L. Warner.
- 1876.—Joseph Billings, A. E. Strong, Henry G. Moore.
- 1877.—Moses E. Warner, Henry S. Hubbard, Henry G. Moore.
- 1878.—Henry S. Hubbard, Otis C. Wells, Henry G. Moore.

TOWN CLERKS.

It appears that John Allis was the first town clerk. A blurred signature, but evidently his, seems to prove that he wrote up the "west-side" records when he went into office in 1670. Indeed, he might very possibly have kept them from 1660 to 1669. He evidently kept the town records from 1670 to about 1687. The handwriting indicates that Samuel Partridge was then town clerk to March 17, 1701, when it is recorded that Thomas Hastings, Jr., was chosen. Judging from the handwriting, as the fact of election is only occasionally recorded, it is presumed that he remained in office until 1728, the year of his death.

The list is then complete to the present time.

Oliver Partridge, 1731, yearly to 1784; Samuel Partridge (2d), 1785-1803; Jos. Billings, 1804-13; Israel Billings, 1814; Joseph Billings, 1815-18; Remembrance Bardwell, 1819-33; Josiah Brown, 1834; Israel Morton, 1835-40; Rodolphus Morton, 1841; Israel Morton, 1842-44; Samuel D. Partridge, 1845; George W. Hubbard, 1846; Israel Morton, 1847; Ephraim L. Hastings, 1848-54; Wm. P. Allis 1855-57; Wm. D. Billings, 1858-79.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

It is difficult to prepare a complete list. They were generally elected at a special town-meeting in May, and these meetings were not always recorded, unless it may be proper to infer (and very likely it is) that when there is no record, there was no meeting, and no representative chosen. Undoubtedly the first was Samuel Partridge, or Partrigg, as it was then written. He was chosen April 8, 1680, as an attorney to transact various general business for the town and to attend upon the General Court. It is presumed that he had been thus employed at an earlier date. The fact of his election is mentioned again May 9, 1689. Ens. Frary (probably Eleazer) is recorded as having been chosen May 2, 1693. The next year, April 14, 1694, Samuel Partridge was again chosen, and May 29, 1695, Ens. Frary was again elected. After that date there is considerable regularity until the time of the Revolution.

Samuel Partridge, 1697, yearly to 1700; John White 1701; Eleazer Frary, 1702-3; Samuel Marsh, Sr., 1705-6; Eleazer Frary, 1707-9; John Dickinson, 1710-12; Henry Dwight, 1713; John Partridge, 1714-16; John Dickinson, 1717, yearly to 1721; Henry Dwight, 1722; Thomas Hastings, 1723; John Dickinson, 1724; Henry Dwight, 1725; John Dickinson, 1726-28; Henry Dwight, 1731.

The town, in 1732, took into consideration the notice from the General Court, and decided "they were not so qualified as to be obliged to send."

Capt. Samuel Williams, 1733;* Col. Israel Williams, 1737; Oliver Partridge, 1741, and yearly to 1747; Col. Israel Williams, 1748-49, and perhaps for several years following, when no record appears; Israel Williams, 1757; Israel Williams, 1760; Oliver Partridge, 1761; William Williams, 1763; Oliver Partridge, 1765-67; Israel Williams, 1768; John Dickinson, 1770; Israel Williams, 1771-72; John Dickinson, 1773.

Colonial representatives were probably no longer chosen.

John Dickinson was chosen a delegate to the Provincial Congress called to meet at Concord, Oct. 6, 1774. John Dickinson and Perez Graves were chosen, Jan. 9, 1775, to the Provincial Congress called to meet at Cambridge. John Dickinson, John Hastings, and Elihu White were chosen May 22, 1775, to the Provincial Congress called to meet at Watertown, their term of service to be six months, but only one to be paid for attendance at the same time. John Hastings was chosen a representative to the Provincial Legislature, May 19, 1777.

Under the State government the following constitute the list:

John Hastings, 1779, yearly to 1786; Benjamin Smith, 1787; John Hastings, 1788, and yearly to 1791; Benjamin Smith, 1792; John Hastings, 1793, and yearly to 1807; Isaac Maltby, 1808-9; Samuel Partridge (2d), 1810, yearly to 1814; Israel Billings, 1815; Isaac Maltby, 1816.

"Voted not to send from 1817 to 1822 inclusive." The town was then fined by the General Court for failing to be represented. It was voted to pay the fine, but they do not seem to have elected in 1823.

* There seems to be an omission of four years.

Levi Graves, 1824; Israel Billings, 1826; Oliver Smith, 1827-28; Israel Billings, 1829; Remembrance Bardwell, 1832-33; Elijah Hubbard, 1835; Solomon Graves, Jr., 1836; Austin Smith, 1838; Justin Wait, 1839-40; Roswell Hubbard, 1841; Samuel D. Partridge, 1842; Joseph Smith, 1843; Josiah Brown, 1846; Elisha Wells, 1848; Elijah Bardwell, Jr., 1852; Wm. H. Dickinson, 1853; Roswell Hubbard, 1854; Reuben H. Belden, 1856; Silas G. Hubbard, 1857; Wm. H. Dickinson, 1859; John T. Fitch, 1862; Joseph D. Billings, 1865; Henry S. Porter, 1868; Elisha Hubbard, 1871; Samuel P. Billings, 1874; Joseph Billings, 1878.

VILLAGES.

"HATFIELD STREET" of old times is the village of to-day. Its early settlement was the settlement of the town itself, as already shown. The street is still a broad and beautiful avenue, laid out with regard to convenience and not with any deference to the narrow business views of modern times. On either side of it were the dwellings of the first settlers of 1661, as there are now located the citizens of the present time. It is emphatically a street of the fathers, full of old historic associations, wild stories of danger as well as the gentler memories of long years of peace, contentment, and prosperity.

Here successive generations of the same families have come and gone,—“their name and memory liveth still.”

Here are yet left some of the aged elms beneath whose branches the children of other days played as the children of the present do. Mingled with them are the graceful maples of later years, together adorning the ample grounds around the dwellings and the broad street between.

In the buildings all the ages of settlement and growth are represented, except the log houses of the first and the fortified buildings of the few succeeding years.

Abandoned, doorless, windowless, are some of the old houses, around whose ample firesides the stories of the French war must have been told as the fresh news of to-day.

And some still in use have a substantial appearance, as if their foundations were laid and their superstructure erected when the men of the Continental Congress, encouraged by the resolutions from these New England towns, were laying the strong foundations of the national government and building wide and high the edifice of constitutional liberty.

Then there are the dwellings of the intervening years, and finally the elegant residences of the modern era,—since the war of 1861-65.

The business of the village is given with the sketches of the town.

The post-office in Hatfield village was probably established early in this century. Before that the town received its mail from Northampton, while newspapers were delivered by post-riders.

Dr. Daniel White was appointed postmaster about 1806. He retained the office until 1831, when John Hastings, Jr., was appointed. His successors have been the following: Alpheus Longley, Dr. Stacy, S. G. Hubbard, Josiah Brown, Erastus Billings, Josiah Wells, and the present incumbent, Mrs. Edwin Graves. She was appointed in 1869, the office being gracefully conceded to her as the widow of a soldier who lost his life in the defense of his country.

NORTH HATFIELD is a station upon the Connecticut Valley Railroad, near the north line of the town. It has a few private dwellings, a store, a school-house and post-office, the husk-factory of the Dickinson Brothers, and a saw-mill of considerable age. A grist-mill is located just over the Whately line. The station forms a convenient point of business for a neighborhood of some extent, both in Hatfield and Whately. The post-office at this village was established in 1868. Reuben H. Belden was appointed postmaster, and still retains the office.

HATFIELD STATION is near the south line of the town, some two miles from the centre of Hatfield village, and the business of the village is accommodated at that point. There are three or four private dwellings near, and the camp-meeting ground of the Methodist Conference is a little to the south, within the town of Northampton.

SCHOOLS.

Hatfield usually had a school after 1678 and probably before, and a school-house was built in 1681. Dr. Thos. Hastings was one of the teachers, but most of them were educated at Harvard College. They received from £30 to £35 a year in grain at the usual prices, and boarded themselves previous to 1700. A few girls attended the school, or might attend if they paid the same as the boys. The scholars paid about two-thirds of the salary, and the town one-third. The schools became free in 1722. These facts are shown by the town records, from which we make a few extracts:

May 21, 1688.—"Voted that the Rev. Pastor of the church be desired to see out for a schoolmaster suitable to be discharged and maintained; one-third part of the charge by the town in general, by rate or otherwise, and two-thirds by the schools, viz., male children from six years old to twelve years of age, excepting poor men that have many sons to be educated, as the selectmen shall judge meet; the sum in all to be 30 pounds."

The year before, in August, it is recorded that the "Town hath agreed that the Selectmen shall hire a good able-bodied school-master, and to allow him 30 pounds a year; and that all the boys in town that are above six years of age and under ten shall also pay to the schoolmaster 12 shillings a year, whether they go to his school or not; and that all that are under or above that age, whether boys or girls, shall also pay 12 shillings a year for the time they go to school, and this not to be understood of such as come to write; but as for such as come to write they shall allow 16 shillings per year, and what the rate shall fall short upon the whole of the sum shall be paid by the town as other sums are paid."

For a long period there was only one school in town,—probably for the first hundred years. But the fostering care of the town was steadily given to see that the boys were all taught to read and write. The girls were not supposed to require these advantages, although Hatfield broke over the old tradition against the education of girls quite early.

Aug. 27, 1688.—"Voted, Whereas in the month of June it was referred to Mr. Williams, the pastor, to get a schoolmaster, which he hath done, and procured Mr. Stephens. Now he being present, the selectmen have agreed with him that he keeping school and schooling all children sent to him between six years and twelve years of age that have first been entered in spelling and reading, and all those that are writing to be learned to write (though such as exceed that age he is to educate, as aforesaid, to their best advantage as much as in him lyes); for which the said Mr. Stephens is to receive from the selectmen the full and just sum of 30 pounds for one year, or proportionate of that sum if he should teach but half a year or three-quarters of a year."

Town-meeting, Dec. 7, 1702.—"Voted to hire Thomas Hastings, Jr., to keep the school in Hatfield for the year ensuing; for which to pay him 35 pounds in such pay as they pay their other town debts; and which year is gone on so far as from the 2d of November to the date hereof."

Dec. 1, 1783.—The town voted they would build a new school-house, and that it shall be of brick, and that it be made 25 feet long and 20 feet broad, and that Col. Chapin, Samuel Dickinson (2d), John Allis, Lieut. Samuel Partridge, and Capt. Perez Graves be a committee to build the same.

April 4, 1791.—On a motion whether the town would drop the schoolmaster and set up three schoolmistresses in his room, it was voted in the negative.

Fifty pounds was a customary appropriation for schools, 1790 to 1800.

April 4, 1796.—Voted to set up additional schools, and appointed a committee for that purpose,—John Hastings, Samuel Dickinson, Benjamin Smith, Isaac Maltby, Perez Graves.

At an adjourned meeting the town voted to set up two schools for the schooling of girls in the town four months in the year.

Dec. 7, 1812.—Voted to district the town for schools, and appointed a committee for that purpose, viz.: Joseph Smith, Daniel Wait, Perez Morton, Ebenezer White, Benjamin Smith; and the appropriation that year for schools was $550.

We add the following interesting extract from ancient records:

An account of the boys that came to school in the year 1699, from the 15th of March to the 15th of September:

Writers: Ebenezer Marsh, Samuel Wells, Joseph Waite, Jno. White. Readers: Thomas Graves, Ebenezer Field, Jr.'s, son, Samuel Dickinson, Wm. Chamberlin, Jonathan Frary, Ebenezer Dickinson, Daniel Smith, Nathaniel Warner, Isaac Graves, Stephen Belding, Daniel Warner, Abram Charles, Elisha Williams, Samuel Billings, Abram Graves, Daniel Dickinson, Jno. Brooks, Manosh Bodman, Thomas Nash, Joseph Kellogg, John Hubbard, Isaac Hubbard, Thomas Graves, Josiah Field, Joshua Field, Ebenezer Billings, Jeremiah Alvord, John Belding, John White, Ebenezer Wells. Dated Jan. 9, 1699-1700.

The sum assessed, £15, is to be "payed" to Doctor Hastings for his son's schooling* at the above^d time of half a year, &c."

Jonathan Curson, the noted teacher, was a foreigner. In the old town records of Northampton there is this entry:

Jonathan Curson was born in Dumfries, in North Britain, in 1755, March 4th, landed at Philadelphia Aug. 4, 1784, and arrived at Northampton the 8th of September following.

Like other towns, Hatfield organized under the law of 1826 by the appointment of a committee to examine teachers.

The progress of the schools since that time is shown clearly by the statistics herewith given, taken at intervals of about ten years each from the reports of the secretary of the board of education in the State.

There are now some fine school buildings in town. Besides the Smith Academy, there is a handsome public school-house in Northampton. Miss Smith died in 1870, founding and endowing the academy with the sum of $75,000. In her will the following gentlemen of Hatfield were named as trustees: Joseph D. Billings, George W. Hubbard, Jonathan S. Graves, Alpheus Cowles, Silas G. Hubbard, Frederick D. Billings, William H. Dickinson, and Daniel W. Wells, their office to continue during life, and vacancies to be filled by the board. George W. Hubbard, removing from the town, resigned, and Chas. K. Morton, of Hatfield, was chosen to fill the vacancy. The board of trustees was incorporated by act of Legislature, in 1871, and organized with the following officers: Joseph D. Billings, President; William H. Dickinson, Vice-President; and Silas G. Hubbard, Secretary and Treasurer. To the trustees is committed the entire oversight of the academy, and the care and management of its funds.

SMITH ACADEMY, HATFIELD, MASS.

near it, and in other parts of the town good schools exist in buildings of fair size and convenience.

From Hatfield has gone out the educational influence and the wealth that has founded Smith College, intended to be the most advanced school for the education of girls in the Union or the world.

SMITH ACADEMY.†

The Smiths, of Hatfield, trace their ancestry back to the early settlement of the town. Amongst the many members of the family distinguished for thrift and enterprise, two, Oliver and his nephew Austin, amassed princely fortunes, and the wealth of both was bequeathed to the public good,—that of the former to the founding of "the Smith Charities" in Northampton; that of the latter, falling to his sister, Miss Sophia Smith, of Hatfield, was by her devised to the establishment of Smith Academy, in Hatfield, and Smith College,

* Son's schooling" means son's teaching.

† By Prof. W. B. Harding.

The foundress' wishes as to the character of the school are expressed in her will. It is to consist of an English and a classical department, but other branches of learning may be taught in subordination to the above departments. True to the instincts of her sex and her enlightened sentiments, Miss Smith insists on both sexes having equal advantages in the school, and expresses it as her opinion that, in order that these may be secured, the number of female teachers should equal or nearly equal that of the males, and that the female teachers should have a voice in the management of the institution.

Of the funds, $20,000 was appropriated for the purchasing of ground and erection of a building; $30,000 for a fund the income of which is to meet the current expenses of the school; $15,000 for the erection of additional buildings when needed; $10,000 for a fund the income of which is to be used to pay the tuition and board of indigent students.

Upon their organization the trustees proceeded to execute their trust. A central and beautiful location on the corner of Main and School Streets was selected, and a building of brick, fine in architectural design and well adapted to its purpose, was erected. The basement story contains the laboratory, a room now occupied by the town library, and two large rooms for gymnasia. In the second story are the cabinets, the library, two large rooms devoted to school purposes, various recitation- and dressing-rooms.

In the third story is the hall, capable of seating 400, finished in Gothic style and finely frescoed, also ante-rooms, etc. The building is capped by a steeple, containing a bell weighing 800 pounds. The building was finished in the spring of 1872.

Wilder B. Harding, A.M., was chosen principal. Mr. Harding was born in Putney, Vt., in 1839; graduated at the State Normal School, in Westfield, Mass.; fitted for college at Williston Seminary; and graduated at Yale College in 1867. Subsequently he was admitted to the Bar, but his tastes led to his discarding law for the vocation of teaching. At the time of his election to the principalship of the academy, Mr. Harding was associate principal of Stamford Military Institute, at Stamford, Conn. Mrs. W. B. Harding was chosen preceptress; William B. Russell, of Hatfield, instructor in vocal and instrumental music; and Miss Louisa M. Graves, of Hatfield, instructor in French and drawing.

The school was opened Dec. 4, 1872, with an attendance of 32 boys and 25 girls. In July, 1878, Mrs. Harding resigned her position, and Miss Mary E. Houghton, of Putney, Vt., a graduate of the normal school, in Westfield, was chosen her successor.

The classical and English courses are wholly separate, and each is four years in length. In their scope, and the culture imparted, they resemble closely like departments in the best schools of New England. Boys and girls are thoroughly fitted for college, business, or teaching. Culture in orthoëpy, elocution, reading, and in the various rhetorical exercises is made an object of special attention. The sentiment of the trustees, its teachers, and its friends has ever been that the forces of the school should be devoted to solid attainments, rather than mere effect.

The institution graduated its first class of five members in June, 1876,—Carrie E. Graves, Charles A. Wight, M. Antoinette Morton, Emma E. Porter, all of Hatfield, and Fannie E. Woodard, of Halifax, Vt.

The library, cabinets, and laboratory are not yet extensive, but they are sufficiently full, and are well adapted to meet the present wants of the school. The town library, numbering upward of 2500 volumes, is accessible to the students.

Upon the basis indicated by its founders, the academy will develop its strength and influence. In a sense, its coming history is not problematical. Both sexes will always assemble beneath its roof, and its course will always flow hard by the time-honored landmarks of learning. Possessed of a solid financial basis, and situated in the garden of the Connecticut River Valley, amidst a population enterprising and refined, Smith Academy is destined to occupy a prominent place among the foremost educational institutions of the State.

To this notice of the schools of Hatfield we add the following list of graduates, natives of Hatfield, prepared for this work by Samuel D. Partridge, of Orange, New Jersey:

Rev. Samuel Allis, Harvard College, 1724; Edward Billings, Harvard College, 1731; Joseph Billings, Yale College, 1797; Edward C. Billings, Yale College, 1853; Charles M. Billings, Amherst College, 1863; Arthur W. Billings, Scientific Course, Yale College; Nathaniel Chauncey, Yale College, 1702 (the first graduate of Yale College); Jonathan Dickinson, Yale College, 1706 (the first president of New Jersey College); Moses Dickinson, Yale College, 1717; Benjamin Dickinson, Harvard College, 1723; Azariah Dickinson, Yale College, 1730; Josiah Dwight, Yale College, 1715; Joseph Dwight, Harvard College, 1722; William Graves, Yale College, 1785; Thaddeus Graves, Amherst College, 1856; Jonathan Hubbard, Yale College, 1724; John Hubbard, Yale College, 1747; John Hastings, Yale College, 1815; Jonathan H. Lyman, Yale College, 1802; Joseph L. Morton, Yale College, 1857; John Partridge, Harvard College, 1705; Oliver Partridge, Yale College, 1730; Samuel Partridge, Yale College, 1767; Samuel D. Partridge, Amherst College, 1827; Joseph L. Partridge, Williams College, 1828; George C. Partridge, Amherst College, 1833; Charles Smith, Amherst College, 1841; William Williams, Harvard College, 1705; Elisha Williams, Harvard College, 1711 (the third president of Yale College); Solomon Williams, Harvard College, 1719; John Williams, Harvard College, 1751; Israel Williams, Yale College, 1762; George W. Waite, Amherst College, 1861.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Six schools; attending in the summer, 196; average, 171; winter, 303; average, 282; in town, between 4 and 16, 300; summer schools, 22 months; winter, 18 months; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 3 males, 6 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $26; female, $11.71.

January, 1847.—Eight schools; attending in summer, 131; average, 118; winter, 197; average, 160; in town, between 4 and 16, 241; attending under 4, 6; over 16, 29; summer schools, 27 months; winter, 29; total, 56; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 4 males, 4 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $22.75; female, $13.

January, 1857.—Seven schools; attending in summer, 175; average, 133; winter, 221; average, 181; attending under 5, 17; over 15, 26; in town, between 5 and 15, 191; summer teachers, 6 females; winter teachers, 1 male, 6 females; summer schools, 27 months, 11 days; winter, 26 months; total, 53 months, 11 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $37.50; female, $19.90.

January, 1867.—Eight schools; attending in the summer, 243; average, 188; winter, 298; average, 251; attending under 5, 6; over 15, 26; in town, between 5 and 15, 289; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 9 females; summer schools, 23 months, 15 days; winter schools, 25 months, 5 days; average wages of female teachers per month, $27.

January, 1878.—Seven schools; repairs, $10; attending, 314; average, 205; under 5, 5; over 15, 14; in town, between 5 and 15, 313; teachers, 12 females; school, 61 months, 5 days; average wages of teachers per month, $30.50; taxation, $2000; expense of superintendence, $30; printing, $15; vested funds, $36,000, yielding an income of $3500; income of local funds and dog tax, $86.70; 1 incorporated academy; 60 scholars; tuition, $460.44; town share of State fund, $216.50.

CHURCHES.

In the movements for a separate town, convenience of divine worship and attendance on ordinances were made the principal reasons. The crossing of the river and its dangers are graphically depicted in the petition to the General Court.*

Without waiting for the formal action of the General Court, the people determined to provide themselves with preaching. In a west-side meeting, held Nov. 6, 1668, a committee was chosen to provide a boarding-place for a minister during the winter, and to arrange for his comfortable maintenance. On the same day a committee was named to draw up a list of all the timber suitable for building a meeting-house 30 feet square, to proportion out the work to each man, and to call on men to fell timber or do other work in connection with the project.

On the 21st of November they chose Thomas Meekins, Sr., William Allis, and Isaac Graves a committee to procure a minister. A call was extended to Rev. Hope Atherton, May 17, 1669, at a salary of £50.

The next year separate action by the "west-side" people as a part of Hadley came to an end, and the "town of Hatfield," Nov. 25, 1670, voted to Mr. Atherton the ministerial allotment in the meadows and a home-lot of 8 acres, and voted to build for him a sufficient dwelling-house and to allow him £60 a year salary, two-thirds to be paid in good merchantable wheat and one-third in pork. This additional provision was mentioned: "If our crops fall so short that we cannot pay in kind, then we are to pay him in the next best way we have."

The date of the formation of the church is not known. It has been stated at 1670. Records show that a fast was held on the 21st of January, 1671, in view of the great work of "setting up the ordinances"; also, that on the 26th of the same month the town voted that all the members of other churches in the town should be those "to begin in gathering the church," and that they should have power to choose three persons to make up nine to join in the work. All this shows that the organization of the church followed the fast rather than preceded it, making the organization to date somewhere near the 1st of February, 1671. The historian of Whately states the organization as about April 1, 1671.

Mr. Atherton died comparatively young. He never recovered from the hardships suffered in the Turner's Falls fight and the retreat, May 17, 1676. He died in June, 1679.

The first meeting-house, mentioned above as having been commenced November, 1668, was soon after completed,—at least, sufficient for public worship. It was improved about twenty years later. The early records include a great variety of town votes with reference to the meeting-house, provisions for sweeping, bills for shingling, and all the details of work. Very little discretion was left in these early times to a building committee. They were instructed very precisely when, where, and how. At the time of the repairs, in 1688, the vote of this town was not so minute as on some other occasions: "Voted, as to repairs upon the meeting-house, that Deacon Church and Goodman Belden, Sr., hire workmen and get it forthwith done on the town's charge." The location of this first house was probably not far from the site afterward occupied by the second.

* See page 333 of this work.

BUILDING OF THE SECOND MEETING-HOUSE.

March 6, 1748.—Voted to build a new meeting-house, 58 feet in length and 45 in width, the height to be left to the advice of the carpenters employed to build.

Building committee, Col. Williams, Oliver Partridge, Capt. Coleman, Capt. Dwight, Capt. White, Ens. Dickinson, and Deacon Hubbard.

Dec. 4, 1749.—Voted an appropriation of 4000 pounds, old tenor, for the new house.

March 5, 1749.—Voted by the town that the sum granted in December last to be employed for building a new meeting-house shall, by the assessors, be reduced to lawful money, and the rates be made by them accordingly; yet, notwithstanding, the several persons that shall be contained in said bills of assessment shall have liberty to discharge the respective sums assessed, in bills of credit of this province, at the rate set or fixed by law.

June 8, 1750.—Voted, that they will speedily pull down the meeting-house now standing in the town, in order to employ such of the timbers as are suitable in building the new house.

Dec. 3, 1750.—One hundred and sixty pounds more were voted to finish the house.

The house was probably finished during the next year, but the whole business was not adjusted until 1755, when the committee to settle with the building committee reported that there was left of the sum granted by the town "£45 13s. 5d. and 1f.," and that the accounts of the committee were "right cast and well vouched."

At the same meeting, voted that suitable ornamental steps should be provided for the meeting-house, and that the casings of the timber in the meeting-house "be decently colored."

The building of this house was followed by numerous records about the "seating." To the people of the present time many of these seem ludicrous in the extreme. Human nature then was no doubt very similar to that same troublesome article of the present time, and great dissatisfaction often occurred. Votes were reconsidered; parties once seated were permitted to exchange with each other; new committees upon seating were appointed; and the struggle recorded upon the books only faintly pictures the talk, the murmurs, the gossip, that must have existed among the congregation. It required strong faith, patience, and piety to surmount all this, preserve the worship of God nobly and steadily, and hand down to modern times inviolate the traditions and the ordinances of the gospel.

The third and present meeting-house is comparatively modern, the corner-stone having been laid May 23, 1749. It is a handsome edifice, standing upon the west side of the street.

The second house, removed at the erection of the third, stood in the centre of the broad street, a little south of the present location. It was sold and remodeled into a barn upon the Bardwell place, where it still stands, showing even yet, in its steep roof, its outer finish, and its clapboarding, something of its antique and venerable character. The beams were largely what builders know as heart-timber.

Record of the Pastors.—1st. Rev. Hope Atherton, supposed to have begun preaching for the west side 1668 or 1669; died June 8, 1677. 2d. Rev. Nathaniel Chauncey, installed in 1683. He died while in the pastorate, Nov. 4, 1685. 3d. Rev. Wm. Williams was ordained in 1686; he preached for fifty-five years, and died in the pastorate Aug. 31, 1741. 4th. Rev.

Timothy Woodbridge was ordained Nov. 14, 1739, as colleague of Mr. Williams, and was his successor. He too died in the midst of his pastoral work, June 3, 1770, aged fifty-eight. 5th. Rev. Joseph Lyman, ordained March 4, 1772. He was an ardent patriot, and his name is very prominent in the affairs of the Revolution, then commencing. His pastorate extended over a long period of years, down to 1828, his death occurring March 27th of that year. 6th. Rev. Jared B. Waterbury, installed as colleague of Mr. Lyman, Jan. 10, 1827; dismissed Feb. 24, 1829. 7th. Rev. Levi Pratt, ordained June 23, 1830; dismissed May 9, 1835. 8th. Rev. Henry Neill, ordained April 16, 1840; dismissed April 15, 1846; he was the father of Prof. Neill, now of Amherst College. 9th. Rev. Jared O. Knapp, installed Dec. 11, 1850; dismissed April 10, 1855. 10th. Rev. John M. Greene, ordained Oct. 20, 1857; dismissed Feb. 17, 1868. 11th. Rev. Wm. L. Bray, installed Jan. 12, 1869; dismissed Nov. 22, 1869. 12th. Rev. John P. Skeele, installed May 4, 1870; dismissed April 29, 1873. 13th. Rev. Robert M. Woods, ordained Nov. 21, 1877. Rev. Wm. Greenwood, as stated supply, preached for nearly two years previous to the settlement of Mr. Woods.

Record of Deacons.—The church has no separate record of its existence prior to 1772, and the names of those who filled the office of deacon before that time are gathered from the town records where they incidentally occur: Edward Church, supposed to have been elected in 1670. John Coleman, supposed to have been elected 1670; died Jan. 22, 1712. Samuel Marsh, probably chosen 1706; died Sept. 7, 1728. John White, probably chosen 1712. Nathaniel Dickinson, probably chosen 1726. Nathaniel White, probably chosen 1735. Samuel Bodman, probably chosen 1735. John Hubbard, probably chosen 1746; died Sept. 14, 1778, aged eighty-six. John Belding, probably chosen 1746. John Smith, probably chosen 1750. Simeon Wait, probably chosen 1764. Elijah Morton, elected Nov. 25, 1772; died Oct. 5, 1798, aged eighty. William Williams, elected Nov. 25, 1772. Obadiah Dickinson, elected April 8, 1773; died June 24, 1788, aged eighty-four. Jonathan Porter, elected May 23, 1785; died April 25, 1833, aged eighty-one. Lemuel Dickinson, elected May 23, 1785. Cotton Partridge, elected Feb. 28, 1799; died Nov. 13, 1846, aged eighty-one. Benjamin Morton, elected Jan. 7, 1807; died Feb. 4, 1810, aged fifty. Moses Warner, elected March 1, 1810; died Aug. 1, 1828, aged seventy-four. Joseph Billings, elected Oct. 30, 1817; died May 23, 1850, aged seventy-four. Rufus Cowles, elected Aug. 31, 1827; died Feb. 6, 1840, aged fifty-seven. George W. Hubbard, elected July 10, 1849; resigned Aug. 30, 1870, removed to Northampton. Erastus Cowles, elected Aug. 28, 1850; resigned Sept. 11, 1861. James Porter, chosen Sept. 11, 1861. Alpheus Cowles, chosen Oct. 21, 1869. Caleb Dickinson, chosen Oct. 21, 1869; resigned April 8, 1875. Jonathan S. Graves, chosen April 1, 1875. Daniel W. Wells, chosen April 8, 1875.

April 8, 1875, the system of choosing for a term of four years was adopted, one to be elected each year.

Additional Items.—The meeting-house of 1668 had galleries, a turret, and a bell. The bell was to be rung at nine o'clock. The building stood with the ends east and west, the pulpit at the west end, a door at the east, with a broad centre aisle leading up to the pulpit. It was voted in 1699 to build a new house, but the old edifice survived that vote nearly or quite fifty years. The town built a house for Mr. Atherton, 40 feet long, 20 feet wide, double story.

As in other towns, there are numerous traditions of the convivial habits of the early ministers, so different from the present time. In their associations and councils they usually remained over-night, and had their flip regularly in the morning. It was the custom to drink it before washing for breakfast. If a man overslept, he was condemned to lose his flip unless he made up on the spot a verse of original poetry. On one occasion a victim is said to have perpetrated the following:

"They say our forefathers, like goats,
First washed their eyes, and then their throats;
But we, their sons, grown more wise,
First wash our throats, then our eyes."

He probably received his dip.

Present Organization (March, 1879).—Pastor, Rev. Robert M. Woods; James Porter, Alpheus Cowles, Jonathan S. Graves, Daniel W. Wells, Deacons; the deacons and two others, Henry S. Hubbard, Oscar Belden, Church Committee; James Porter, Clerk of Church; George A. Billings, Clerk of Parish; Joseph S. Wells, Superintendent of Sunday-school; communicants, 262; congregation, not far from the same; attendance at Sunday-school, 175 to 200. A branch school is maintained at North Hatfield in the school-house, occasionally at West Hatfield also.

This is the only church in town. Methodist meetings were held for a time, 1844 to 1846, in the town-hall, but no society was formed.

BURIAL-GROUNDS.

There is a tradition of early times, as stated by Mr. Elijah Bardwell, that a few early burials took place upon the bank of the Connecticut River, in nearly an east direction from the meeting-house. This theory has some force from certain items in the records; these imply the opening of the cemetery upon the hill as being some twenty years after the settlement. If there were burials at the point mentioned, all trace of them was long ago lost, the field being entirely a cultivated one, with neither stone nor memorial.

The "old cemetery," so called, upon the hill was the principal place of burial for one hundred and sixty years. There the generations one after another have been gathered to their long sleep. The ground is in very fair preservation considering its age. It is properly fenced, and small appropriations are usually voted by the town for its care each year. Some years ago the graves were leveled and the ground put in condition to be neatly mowed. There are many dates upon these old stones that form a valuable key to unlock much of the family history of the olden time. Genealogical students of the early names will find here ample materials. These inscriptions, together with the births, deaths, and marriage records of the town clerk's office, are ample to enable many families to write their own domestic history with great fullness and accuracy.

There are thought to be few or no places of private burial upon the farms and homesteads of Hatfield. In 1849 three new burial-places were established by vote of the town. The central one is west from the public buildings, and has a handsome location. Thirty years has sufficed to bring to its sacred inclosure a large number of the dead. Mrs. Remembrance Bardwell was the first person buried there. The ground has been appropriately laid out, considerable done in the way of ornament, and many fine monuments erected. There is another cemetery in the western part of the town, near the residence of Mr. Amariah Strong, another east of North Hatfield, near the residence of Oscar Belden, and still another in the northwest part of the town.

The following is an extract from the town records:

Oct. 17, 1783.—"Voted that the town will cause the burying-ground in said town to be decently fenced, that Capt. Graves, Samuel Church, and Deacon Morton be appointed a committee for that purpose; that the committee endeavor to lease the feeding of the burying-ground for sheep, horses, or calves to any one who will fence the same: if no one accepts, then the town will pay for the fencing."

TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, ETC.

The Hatfield Social Library was an old organization with quite a valuable collection of books. Supplemented by the liberality of Miss Smith, the founder of Smith Female College, it has become a valuable town library, and is kept at the academy.

There is a grange of the Patrons of Husbandry located in Hatfield, having an active existence. Various temperance associations and societies for benevolent and religious work have existed from time to time, and several such are in existence now.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

1st. Just south of the intersection of the Northampton road with Hatfield Street is the point of first settlement, according to tradition,—the Fellows homestead, the present place of Saml. F. Billings. All that is known seems to be that he was that one of the six who built the first house and began to live here a little in advance of the others, possibly only a few days, or at most a few weeks.

2d. The battle-ground of Oct. 19, 1677, is not closely described by any of the historians. "The town" of that period was the present village, or rather the one main street, Meekins' grist-mill probably being the only building west. If the place was protected then by a line of palisades nearly parallel with Main Street and thirty or forty rods west of it, and perhaps with flanking-lines at the north and south ends, the line of battle formed by the whites can hardly be understood and have it correspond with the earlier descriptions of the fight.

Supposing the fortifications were not then erected, or that they were so incomplete or weak that the Indians easily penetrated them, then the attack of the Indians would naturally be from the north and west; the attack would be repelled from the east; Capt. Appleton would be at the lower end of the village; Capt. Mosely in the vicinity of the present church; and Capt. Poole north, in the vicinity of the Bliss Hotel. The fight would be mostly along the line of the present street, or rather west of it, as the Indians do not seem to have succeeded in burning any buildings in the village, unless at the north end. The retreat of the Indians would naturally be, as the writers have described, over Mill River, to the west. Precise location is undoubtedly difficult. The "engineers" of the whites, if they had any, have left no maps for our study. Antiquarians can safely locate the fighting and the "lines" almost anywhere in or on either side of the main street.

3d. The "Indian Bottom," the reserved planting-ground of Umpanchala, is rich in the eloquent associations of antiquity, but it loses something of its romance when it is remembered that the manly Indians left their squaws to do the digging and raise the corn, while they "loafed" at Umpanchala's fort and planned blood-and-thunder campaigns against each other, or against the whites.

4th. The Indian fort itself, near Halfway Brook (perhaps within the town of Northampton), is a place worthy of study, as that was the last fortified point held by the Indians in the fair Nonotuck valley. From here they moved northward, returning in after-years only for pillage and slaughter, as they were incited by the French leaders from Montreal and Quebec. The spring of water from which the Indians drank still bubbles from the ground, but the war-whoop has died away, its nearest representative being the whistle of the locomotive as it nears the Hatfield Station,—a place that ought to be called Umpanchala, in memory of that proud chieftain of the forest.

5th. There is a curious hill or mound not far distant from the mouth of Halfway Brook. It is on the farm of Henry S. Hubbard. A heavy growth of pine-trees has recently been cut off. It is nearly circular, with an area of perhaps half an acre, and is surrounded by a swamp. The location is such as Indians were accustomed to choose for a strong fortified post. Its more precise situation may be stated as being in the eastern angle between the Northampton road and the one running southeast from the railroad station, and not far from the intersection of the roads. Mr. S. G. Hubbard states that this has been overlooked by antiquarians. Umpanchala's fort may have been on this hill; or, if the fort was at the mouth of Halfway Brook, then this may have been a fortified outpost.

6th. Among the places of historic note there must also be mentioned the Hubbard mansion, on Hill Street, and next to the old cemetery. This was the famous tavern of the Revolutionary era. It was opened by Elisha Hubbard about 1760. He died in a few years, and before the war commenced. Hubbard had also kept a store. After his death his widow continued the public-house. There were eight children, six of them daughters. One of the sons was the grandfather of H. S. and S. G. Hubbard. At this tavern Epaphroditus Champion, quartermaster upon Gen. Washington's staff, made his headquarters for a considerable portion of the Seven Years' War. The beef purchased for the supply of the Continental army was largely obtained in the Connecticut Valley; and even in those days Hatfield was a noted point for fat cattle. Here, too, were quartered during one winter the staff-officers of a French regiment, part of Count Rochambeau's army. They amused themselves during these months between the summer campaigns in various ways. The old windows in the house, before it was repaired some years ago, were marked with various mottoes and epigrammatic sentences, written with a diamond by these learned Frenchmen. It is characteristic of that era of French belief that there was not found a quotation from the Bible among them, but they were drawn from a wide variety of classical authors. In this old house there was at one time a large amount of books in the low rooms of the rear chambers; these were mostly destroyed in various ways. In the front attic there were others, still preserved, heavy old Latin folios. Miss Louisa Hubbard, who is excellent authority upon family traditions and early town annals, supposes these to have been left here either by teachers or students in Master Curson's old classical school of nearly one hundred years ago. However, as there are said to have been many theological works among the lost portion, it is possible they are the remains of the library of some of the earlier ministers. It should be added that Gen. Champion's stay may have been prolonged at Hatfield by the charming society in which he found himself placed, as well as by his patriotic desire to secure good beef for the army. If here was the romance of war and love, the course of the latter evidently ran smoothly, for he married one of the daughters of Mrs. Hubbard, proving himself no doubt a gallant champion in peace as well as in war.

The tavern was closed perhaps about 1800, but Mrs. Hubbard lived until the year 1816. Miss Louisa Hubbard, spoken of above, had the particular care of her during the last ten years of her life, and the former is, therefore, an important link between the Revolutionary age and the present. Mr. S. G. Hubbard remembers to have seen in his boyhood the quartermaster, Gen. Champion, and describes him as a man of splendid personal appearance, "six feet six" in height, and well proportioned.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The soil of Hatfield is fertile, affording productive and remunerative results in return for the labor of the agriculturist. The rich alluvial fields have advantages unsurpassed in the valley of the Connecticut. Large crops of rye, Indian corn, broom corn, and tobacco are produced. The three great leading staples have been in succession, and to some extent at the same time, fat cattle, broom corn, and tobacco.

For more than a century and a half the fattening of beef was a business in which the farmers took a laudable pride, and for which this town became famous. In the earlier times, and down to a comparatively late period, it was a great financial success. Fortunes were made by means of it. The sharp competition from the Western States has largely diminished this business in the last few years.

Very early the broom corn business was undertaken. The acreage planted, the amount raised, and the brooms made were all on a scale of considerable magnitude.

At the decline of this, the tobacco business followed, and during the greater portion of the last twenty-five years has been very successful. In the years of expansion, 1863 to 1874, the price was high, and every effort was made to develop large crops and to raise the most valuable kinds. Everywhere the large tobacco barns form a distinguishing feature among the buildings of the town. Some of them are of handsome construction, with ventilating-doors and the best conveniences for hanging, drying, stripping, packing, etc.

In the recent reduction of prices the business has of course declined, and, as in most other branches of industry, embarrassment has followed, and considerable financial disaster. Still, the town is so thoroughly engaged in the culture of tobacco it will not be easily relinquished. A handsome brick building was erected as a tobacco warehouse a few years since, which an innocent stranger might easily mistake for a public-school building or the rooms of a Young Men's Christian Association.

Broom corn has been reintroduced during the last five years, and there is again quite a quantity raised in town.

As to the manufacture of brooms during the palmy days of the business, it was carried on mostly by individuals, a large number of the farmers making up their own brush.

Mills, Manufactures, etc.—The water-privilege at the present pistol-factory was improved in 1661, one of the earliest grist-mills in Western Massachusetts having been erected there by Thomas Meekins. The town of Hadley granted him the site, and officially promised him all their grinding, provided he lived up to the contract and "made good meale." The difficulty of crossing the river from Hadley was so great that the town employed two grist-carriers, who called upon the people regularly every Tuesday and Saturday, took their grists over to Meekins' mill, and returned them when ground. They were paid 3d. per bushel for carrying. Mr. Meekins did not, however, hold this east-side business for more than five or six years, a mill being erected at North Hadley in 1667. It is understood that this first mill was a little above the pistol-factory. Either there or at the present site on the other side of the stream there has thus been grinding done for two hundred and eighteen years. At first the mill was out there in the woods, with no other buildings. It was liable to constant danger from the Indians.

Thomas Meekins (either father or son) was killed in the skirmish in the meadows, mentioned elsewhere, and, at the mill itself, one or more persons were killed. But the records do not indicate that the mill was ever burned by the enemy. It was probably closely watched, and great care taken to save it. The present proprietor is Richard T. Smith, the legitimate successor of Thomas Meekins in running the "old corn-mill" of 1661.

Besides the corn-mill, Thomas Meekins and Robert Boltwood were authorized, Jan. 27, 1662, to set up a saw-mill on the east side of Mill River; and they might fell oak- or pine-trees—except rift timber—in the great swamp beyond Mill River, and within eighty rods of the mill on this side. The mill seems to have been built in 1664 or 1665, and, when completed, it probably put an end in this vicinity to the old, slow, and laborious process of "pit-sawing." Thomas Meekins is also said to have had a saw-mill, on the west side near his grist-mill, in 1669.

A little below, on Mill River, Seth Kingsley improves a water-privilege with a low dam, securing power enough to run a cider-mill, a circular-saw, and wood-turning works.

Opposite the present grist-mill are the pistol-works. They were established about 1873, by Prescott & Porter. They were succeeded by Henry Dickinson, and he by the present proprietors, Hyde & Shattuck. They make pistols, revolvers, and breech-loading shot-guns.

On the Running Gutter branch of Mill River is the Fitch saw-mill, rather a modern affair, still in operation. No other water-privileges on these streams are improved except at North Hatfield.

At the pistol-factory buildings there was for a time an establishment for the manufacture of buttons from vegetable ivory, by Harvey Moore.

The first distillery in Western Massachusetts is said to have been erected in 1785, at the place of the present husk-factory, North Hatfield. Rye was then drawn very largely to Providence, Rhode Island, and Gen. Murray, Gen. Dickinson, and Seth Bardwell formed the plan of having it distilled at home instead of drawing away. They secured one Mr. Harding as the superintendent of the distillery. His son became the distinguished portrait-painter of that name in after-years.

During the Revolutionary war, Rev. Joseph Lyman and Samuel Smith engaged in the manufacture of saltpetre, the business being stimulated by the bounty offered by the Continental Congress. The saltpetre was obtained largely from the earth taken from under the church and other old buildings.

There have been several tanneries in town at various times. One by Ziba Allen stood near the present residence of Alfred Graves, 1812 to 1820, or about that time. Mr. Allen was familiarly known as "Ziba the tanner." The Partridges had a tannery on the present place of John A. Billings. Silas Porter & Son opened a tannery and carried on the business for several years at the present place of John H. Sanderson. This was abandoned about thirty years ago. Another tannery was run by Quartus Knight, near the present pistol-factory.

Quartus Kingsley, Samuel Hastings, and Remembrance Bardwell ran a distillery during the war of 1812, and for some years.

The ten leading articles of farm produce for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values: Butter, $29,484; firewood, $7446; tobacco, $155,248; hay, $65,189; milk, $33,375; manure, $35,270; corn, $18,390; beef, $10,266; pork, $13,473; potatoes, $8488.

MILITARY.

Hatfield, having been settled during the last few years preceding the King Philip war of 1675, shared in the excitement of that struggle. Homes were guarded with ceaseless vigilance; crops raised and harvested in peril of life; the fear of the tomahawk and scalping-knife was felt in every dwelling. Troops were stationed at Northampton, at Hadley, Hatfield, and other places, but no amount of preparation was sufficient to prevent the stealthy attack of the cunning foe. The fearful tragedy at Bloody Brook occurred Sept. 18, 1675, barely fifteen miles from Hatfield. During the weeks that followed, Capt. Mosely's command, which, marching out from Deerfield, had severely avenged the slaughter at Bloody Brook, was a part of the time stationed at Hatfield, and also Capt. Poole's company.

Oct. 17, 1675, the Indians were reported in force at Deerfield, and in the evening only a mile from Hatfield. Troops from Hadley were brought across the river, but wearied themselves by a night's march without finding the enemy. The 18th passed in hasty preparation for the attack expected every hour. Northampton was asking for troops, but none could be spared. The event proved the wisdom of remaining to defend Hatfield, for late in the afternoon of the 19th suddenly the war-whoop was heard, and a force of 700 or 800 Indians burst upon the town. In spite of the preparations and the long watching, the attack was even then something of a surprise.

The engagement that followed was a battle of some magnitude, not a mere skirmish. Capt. Appleton's company, from Hadley, held the left, Capt. Mosely the centre, and Capt. Poole the right. The Indians were repulsed at every point. Arms and discipline proved too much for numbers. The Indians, in retreating, burned a few barns, and drove off a number of cattle. They were, however, encumbered with the dead which they carried from the field, and in crossing Mill River lost many of their guns. The whites killed were Thomas Meekins, Nathaniel Collins, Richard Stone, Samuel Clarke, John Pocock, Thomas Warner, Abram Quiddington, William Olverton, and John Petts, mostly from Hadley.

In the spring of 1676, Capt. Mosely was again stationed at Hatfield. Immediately following the attack of March 14th, upon Northampton, the Indians approached Hatfield, but the troops there, with others from Hadley, presented too strong a force, and the Indians retreated.

The great battle of Turner's Falls, May 19, 1676, was participated in by Hatfield men. In returning, the Indians rallied and harassed the wearied army. Turner himself fell near Green River, and the army arrived at Hatfield with a loss of 33 men, all but one killed on the return.

There is a story of wonderful endurance connected with this affair. Jonathan Wells, of Hatfield, was wounded, escaped, and lost his way; fell from his horse in the present town of Greenfield, and, after hair-breadth escapes from Indians, obeyed a dream as to his right course, reached Hatfield, recovered, and lived to a good old age.

William Allis, son of Sergt. William Allis, was killed at "the Falls fight," as recorded in the town book. Samuel Gillit and John Church, Sr., are recorded as "lost in the Falls fight."

Rev. Hope Atherton, the Hatfield minister, who had been with the army in the Falls fight, also lost his way; actually endeavored to deliver himself up to a company of Indians, but they, afraid of his sacred character as a minister, which they in some way understood, refused to touch him, and he finally reached home after many days' suffering.

The severe blow to the projects of King Philip given at Turner's Falls did not put an end to the dangers of war. May 30, 1676, only twelve days after that battle, 600 to 700 Indians again attacked Hatfield, and this time succeeded in effecting the destruction of many buildings. Their first work was to set on fire twelve buildings without the fortifications. Most of the men were at work in the meadows. The palisaded houses were attacked at every point. They were defended bravely by the few men that were not in the meadows, aided by the women. A part of the savages were busy killing or driving off cattle, and a company of 150 pushed out for the meadows to engage the planters. The flames of the burning buildings were seen at Hadley, and twenty-five young men crossed the river to aid in defense. Boldly rushing upon the savage host just as the planters were likely to be overwhelmed, they killed five or six at the first discharge, then drove them back to the town, inflicting terrible slaughter, and losing five of their own number. The Indians were then driven out of the village. The records do not show that they had captured any prisoners, nor does it appear that any of the inhabitants of Hatfield were killed. Of the five that were killed, John Smith was from Hadley, two others were from Connecticut, and two from the garrison at Hadley.

The close of the King Philip's war, by the death of the great chief in the fall of 1676, put an end to the most serious dangers. Still the settlements were not even then safe. French policy was evidently at work instigating Indian attacks. Sept. 19, 1677, a party of about 50 Indians fell upon Hatfield, shot three men outside of the fortifications, and, breaking through, inflicted terrible slaughter upon men, women, and children, captured and carried away a large number. The attack was at eleven o'clock in the morning, and while the principal part of the men were at work in the meadows. The killed were Isaac Graves, Sr., and John Graves, Sr., John Atchison, John Cooper, Elizabeth, the wife, and Stephen, son, of Philip Russell, Hannah, the wife, and Bethia, daughter, of John Coleman, Sarah, the wife of Samuel Kellogg, and their son, Joseph Kellogg, Mary, the wife of Samuel Belding, Elizabeth, a daughter of John Wells, and Thomas Meekins,—13 in all. The captives were two children of John Coleman, Goodwife Waite and three children, Mrs. Foote and two children, Mrs. Jennings and two children, Obadiah Dickinson and one child, a child of Samuel Kellogg, a child of Wm. Bartholomew, and a child of John Allis, —17 in all. Six or seven others were wounded and not carried off by the Indians. One of Mrs. Foote's children was killed by the Indians afterward, and one of Mrs. Jennings'. A child was born to Mrs. Waite in Canada. The prisoners, with others from Wachusett, were all taken, a sad and weary company, to Sorel, Canada. Efforts to rescue them were immediately made. Benjamin Waite and Stephen Jennings obtaining a commission from the Governor of Massachusetts, proceeded by way of Albany, the Hudson River, and Lake Champlain to Chamblee, in Canada, arriving there late in December. The negotiation was long and tedious; by the aid of the French authorities and the payment of £200 ransom, the captives that survived were finally gathered. The homeward route could not be taken till spring; the captives were at Albany May 22d. The almost triumphal procession home, the reuniting of families, the tearful memories of the dead mingling with the joy of the saved,—all this must be left for the imagination to paint.

With reference to the battle of Sept. 19, 1677, and the general subject of fortifications, Samuel D. Partridge, of Orange, N. J., a descendant of the early pioneer, and himself a careful student of early times, writes:

"The attack seems to have been a complete surprise, and the first thought of every one was probably to take refuge in the fort, and whatever fighting was done must have taken place around the palisades, and I have good reason for believing that those were at the south end of the street. I learned from my grandmother, who was born in 1732, that the place on which she and myself were born (the homestead now owned by John A. Billings) was within the fort. Between forty and fifty years ago, the late Sylvester Judd, of Northampton, and I, made an examination, and were able to trace the line of palisades from the lot now occupied by Erastus Billings through that of David Billings and that of John A. Billings, and through several lots above his. I do not remember the precise point at which our examination ended, but an impression was made on my mind that the palisades extended well up toward 'Middle lane.' The line was so well defined that it was then easy to trace it through the lots mentioned, being, according to my recollections, some two or three hundred feet west of the street. This location of the stockade is supported by the fact that the women and children killed and the houses burned were in the northern part of the village and outside the fort.

"In the attack of May 30, 1676, the fighting began near the river, opposite the north end of Hadley Street, and continued all the way up to the town."

The peace that followed was interrupted at last by the "Queen Anne's war" of 1702, which once more involved the colonies.

In this Hatfield seems to have escaped attack. The fury of the Indians and their savage leaders, the French, was poured upon the doomed town of Deerfield, Feb. 29, 1704. Before that fearful slaughter was fairly over with, men from Hatfield were rushing to the rescue, aroused by two fugitives fleeing breathless and exhausted to that town,—Capt. Stoddard and a son of Capt. John Sheldon. The Hatfield men, with some not captured at Deerfield, pursued and attacked the Indians, but were compelled to retire from the unequal contest, losing nine of their number,—Sergt. Boltwood, Samuel Allis, Robert Boltwood, Joseph Catlin, Samuel Foot, David Hoyt, Jr., Jonathan Ingram, Sergt. Benjamin Waite, and Nathaniel Warner.

This closed the share of Hatfield in the Indian wars. The French war of 1756-64 brought terror to the Connecticut Valley, and revived the fears of Indian massacre, but no actual invasion of the towns occurred,—the scenes of 1704 were not repeated. This town furnished several soldiers for this "French war," as did the whole of the Connecticut Valley. Samuel Partridge, of Orange, N. J., has a muster-roll of seven companies in the regiment, commanded in this war by Col. Oliver Partridge, his ancestor. The residence of the soldiers is not given in the paper.

Miscellaneous Items of Indian Warfare.—After the Deerfield massacre, Feb. 29, 1704, the company that gathered from below to rescue the captives, and who engaged in what is called "the fight in the Deerfield Meadow," included 22 from Hatfield.

In 1690 palisades were erected for defense in Hatfield. The space inclosed was 229 rods on one side and 246 on the other, besides the ends. The line could still be traced thirty or forty years ago. This indicates that the fort or palisaded inclosure of fifteen and twenty years before had been allowed to fall into decay, and was rebuilt.

In 1690, Major Pynchon estimated the number of soldiers in Hatfield at 80.

Richard Fellows, Jr., of Hatfield, was killed in the battle for the capture of the Indian fort that was half-way between Hatfield and Northampton, not far from the westerly bend of the Connecticut, in the summer of 1675. Samuel Gillet, John Church, and William Allis, Jr., of Hatfield, were killed in the battle on the return from the Turner's Falls fight. Samuel Belden, of Hatfield, who was in the Turner's Falls fight, lived for more than sixty years after that event. A daughter of Benjamin Waite, born in Canada during the captivity, and named Canada from that fact, became the wife of Joseph Smith, of Hadley. He was a son of John Smith, who was one of the 25 men that went over to the defense of Hatfield, and was killed near the village. Canada Waite was the grandmother of the late Oliver Smith, whose name will ever remain in honorable remembrance in connection with the noble "charities" provided by his will.

Indian Slaughters.—The following records are found in the town-books of Hatfield, evidently written in the form of a diary at the time the events occurred. As original authority they are of great value, though they relate, in several instances, to matters beyond the limits of Hatfield, and may repeat an incident or two already mentioned.

An Account of the Desolation of Deerfield, the last Day of February, 1704.—Four hundred of French and Indians (as is thought) assaulted the fort, took it, and killed and captured 162 of the inhabitants, and consumed most of their estates into flames.

Slain in the fort, John Catlin and his son Jonathan, John French, Samson Frary, Mercy Rood, Jonathan Kellogg, Philip Metoon and his wife and child, Henry Nym, Mary Mercy and Mehitable Nym, Alice Hawks, John Hawks, Mary and William Brooks, Samuel Smood and wife and two children, Sergt. Benoni Stebbins, Deacon Sheldon's wife and her daughter Mercy, Samuel Hinsdell, Mary and Thomas Carter, Joseph Ingingson, Thomas Selden, Goody Smood, Andrew Stevens, David Alexander, Mrs. Williams, Jerusha and John, her children, Sarah Field, Martin Smith, Sarah Price.

Slain in the fight in Deerfield Meadow: of Deerfield, David Hoyt, Jr., and Joseph Catlin; of Hatfield, Sergt. Benjamin Waite, Samuel Allis, Samuel Foot; of Hadley, Sergt. Boltwood, his son Robert, Jonathan Ingram, and Nathaniel Warner, Jr.

Women and children slain in the journey to Canada, 20 persons, viz., Lieut. Hoyt, Jacob Hickson, Goodwife Brooks, Goodwife Belden, Goodwife Carter, Goodwife Nym, Goodwife Frary, Goodwife French, Goodwife Warner, Widow Coss, Goodwife Purny, Elizabeth Hawks, and six more children, and Frank, the negro. (The list only counts 19.) Died at Canada, in 1705, Zebedee Williams, Goodwife Jones, and Abigail Furbitt.

May 10, 1704.—John Allen and his wife slain by Indians at Deerfield.

May 12, 1704.—Pascommuck Fort taken by the French and Indians, being about 72. They took and captured the whole garrison, being about 37 persons. The English pursuing of them caused them to knock all the captives on the head, save five or six. These they carried to Canada with them. The others escaped, and about seven of those knocked on the head recovered, the rest died. Capt. John Taylor was killed in the fight, and Samuel Bartlett wounded.

July 29, 1704.—Thomas Bettys slain by the Indians coming post from Boston.

July the last, 1704.—One Benton, and William Olmstead, soldiers, slain the Indians, and two of the enemy slain.

July, 1706.—Judah Trumbull and Widow Gash (perhaps) slain by the Indians.

July, 1707.—Edward Bancroft slain at Westfield.

1704.—Some time in July (19th), Thomas Russell, at Deerfield, and one, Kindney, an Indian, at Hatfield Mill, slain by the Indians.

July 9, 1708.—Samuel Persons, of Northampton, slain by the Indians, and his brother Joseph slain or captured; found killed and scalped.

July, 1708.—A fort taken at Skipmuck, where were killed Aaron Persons, Wm. Hubbard's son, and three more, and one taken and two wounded.

Oct. 13, 1708.—Abijah Bartlett, of Brookfield, was killed, and John Green, Joseph Ginnings, and Benjamin Ginnings wounded, and a boy of John Woolcot's captured.

Oct. 26, 1708.—Brother Ebenezer Field was slain by the enemy in going to Deerfield, near the Muddy Brook.

August, 1708.—One Barber, of Windsor, was slain a hundred miles up the Great River, and Martin Kellogg, Jr., taken, and one of the enemy slain and another wounded.

May, 1709.—John Wells, of Deerfield, slain by the enemy near the Lake, and John Burt killed or taken or lost at the same time; and in that expedition about eight of the enemy slain.

April, 1709.—Melumane Hinsdale taken captive.
 June 23, 1709.—Joseph Clesson and John Arms taken captive.
 June 24, 1709.—Joseph Williams slain, and Matthew Clesson and Isaac Metume wounded,—said Clesson died four days after of his wound.
 Aug. 8, 1709.—John Clary and Robert Granger slain at Brookfield.
 July 22, 1710.—John Grovenor, Ebenezer Howard, John White, Benjamin and Stephen Ginnings, and Joseph Kellogg were slain at Brookfield.
 Aug. 10, 1711.—Samuel Strong captured and his son slain by the enemy at Northampton going into their south meadow gate in the morning.
 Aug. 22, 1711.—Benjamin Wright wounded.
 July 29, 1712.—Joseph Wright's son, of Springfield, taken captive.
 July 30, 1712.—Samuel Andross killed upon the scout above Deerfield, and Jonathan Barrett and William Sandford taken captive.
 In August, 1723, the enemy killed Thomas Holton and Theophilus Merriman at Northfield. Two days following, they killed Rev. Joseph Willard and two sons of Ens. Stevens, of Rutland, and carried captive two other of his sons.
 Oct. 11, 1723.—The enemy assailed Northfield, killed Ebenezer Sevnors, and wounded Enoch Hall and Her Stratton, and Samuel Dickinson was captured.
 June 18, 1724.—The enemy killed Benjamin Smith, and took Joseph Allis and Aaron Wells captives. Allis was killed the next day.
 June 27, 1724.—The enemy killed Ebenezer Sheldon, Thomas Colton, and John English, an Indian, above Deerfield.
 July 10th, Samuel Allen and Timothy Childs wounded at Deerfield. August following, Nathaniel Edwards slain, and Abram Miller wounded at Northampton. The next day Nathaniel Bancroft wounded at Westfield.
 The enemy wounded Deacon Samuel Field, of Deerfield, Aug. 25, 1725, a ball passing through the right hypochondria, cutting off three plaits of the mesenteria, which hung out of the wound in length almost two inches, which was cut off even with the body, the bullet passing between the lowest and the next rib, cutting, at its going forth, part of the lowest rib; his hand being close to his body when the ball came forth, it entered at the root of the ball of the thumb, cutting the bone of the forefinger, passed between the fore and the second finger, was cut out, and all of the wounds cured in less than five weeks by Dr. Thomas Hastings.
 Sept. 11, 1726.—The enemy came upon Fort Dummer scouts and killed one John Pease, of Enfield, one Bedortha, of Springfield; took Nathaniel Chamberlain and one Farragh and one Baker captives, and carried them to Canada; one Steel escaped.
 July 5, 1745.—The enemy took one Phipps as he was hoeing corn at the place called the Great Meadow, above Fort Dummer, carried him about half a mile, then killed him and mangled his body in a most inhuman manner.
 On July 10, 1745, the enemy killed Deacon Fisher at Upper Ashuelot, within about sixty rods of the garrison.
 Oct. 11, 1745.—About fourscore French and Indians assaulted the Fort at the Great Meadow, and took captive Nehemiah Stow and killed David Rugg coming down the river in a canoe.
 April 19, 1746.—The Indian enemy captivated Capt. Spafford, Stephen Farnsworth, and one Parker. They were taken between the fort at No. 4, above the Great Fall and the mill, in that township, and on Monday following Moses Harvey was shot upon by the enemy in the road between Deerfield and Northfield, who fired upon the enemy and escaped.
 April 23, 1746.—The enemy assaulted the upper Ashuelot, killed one Bullard and an aged woman named Keny, and took one Blake captive and burned a number of buildings in that place.
 On the 25th of April, 1746, one Holton, of Northfield, went over to Lunenburg, and on his return was killed by the enemy.
 May 5, 1746.—At the township called No. 4, one Putnam was slain by the Indian enemy, as he, with others, was going from the fort to a barn.
 May 6, 1746.—Deacon Timothy Brown and one Moffett, a soldier, were captivated at the lower Ashuelot.
 May 9, 1746.—About fifty of the enemy assaulted Deacon Sheldon's fort at Fall Town and wounded John Burk.
 May 10, 1746.—The enemy fired upon Sergt. John Hawks and one Miles near the province fort at Hoosick, and wounded them both. On the same day the enemy killed Matthew Clark, of Colerain, and wounded his wife and daughter.

REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

At a full meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Hatfield, Sept. 22, 1768, Oliver Partridge was chosen moderator; the letter from the selectmen of Boston was read, and a committee appointed to reply on behalf of the town of Hatfield, viz., Col. Williams, Col. Partridge, Capt. White, William Williams, and O. C. Dickinson.

Adjourned to the next day, and the committee reported a lengthy paper. They doubted the dangers inferred by the Boston people from the troops about to be sent from England; they considered the language of the last General Court unnecessarily harsh toward the king, and the fears of the people about the coming troops needless:

"To suppose what you surmise they may be intended for is to mistrust the king's paternal care and goodness.

"If by any sudden excursions or insurrections of some inconsiderate people the king has been induced to think the troops a necessary check upon you, we hope you will by your loyalty and quiet behavior soon convince his majesty and the world they are no longer necessary for that purpose.

"Suffer us to observe that in our opinion the measures the town of Boston are pursuing and proposing unto us and the people of this province to unite in, are unconstitutional, illegal, and wholly unjustifiable, and what will give the enemies of your Constitution the greatest joy subversive of government and destructive of the peace and good order which is the cement of society.

"Thus we have freely expressed our sentiments, having an equal right with others, though a lesser part of the community, and take this first opportunity to protest against the proposed Convention, and hereby declare our loyalty to the king, and fidelity to our country, and that it is our firm resolution to the utmost of our power to maintain and defend our rights in every prudent and reasonable way, as far as is consistent with our duty to God and the king."

This paper was unanimously adopted by the town.

It is evident that at this time the friends of the king, the adherents of royal authority, were in full power in Hatfield, and controlled public sentiment. But a comparison of the committees appointed and the town officers chosen at this period, as elsewhere given, shows that the royalists in Hatfield soon lost power, and were not entrusted with public offices to any extent, until some years after the Revolution had been accomplished. Another class of men—Whigs, friends of the colonies, friends of independence—came to the front and moulded the popular will.

July 8, 1774.—At a legal meeting took into consideration what might be proper for the town to do with regard to their entering into a covenant to withdraw all commercial intercourse with Great Britain, by a disuse of their manufactures until such time as the general interests of the colonies are settled, and our charter rights restored, and appointed a committee to confer with other committees about that matter, viz.: John Dickinson, Elihu White, Perez Graves, John Hastings, Elijah Morton. The expenses of the committee were also voted, and the proceedings directed to be recorded in the town book. Elijah Morton was moderator of this meeting.

The names differ very much from the committees of six years before.

July 29th.—The matter was further considered, and it was voted that the committee should write to the provincial committee, expressing the fact that the town is highly pleased with the appointment of said committee to sit in General Congress with the committees from other colonies, and are entirely willing to come into any measure that the General Congress shall agree and determine upon that may have a tendency to remove our grievances. Action upon the non-importation covenant was deferred until after the Congress should have met.

Aug. 24, 1774.—John Dickinson, Elijah Morton, Perez Graves, were appointed delegates to a County Congress to meet at Hadley Aug. 26th, to determine what measures are most advisable for the towns to come into with regard to the late acts of Parliament superseding the charter of the province, and vacating some of the inalienable rights and privileges therein contained.

Sept. 21, 1774.—Appointed John Dickinson, Elihu White, and John Hastings, to attend a County Congress at Northampton on the 26th instant. At the same meeting a committee of correspondence was appointed, viz.: JOHN DICKINSON, ELIJAH MORTON, REMEMBRANCE BARDWELL, PHINEAS FRARY, JONATHAN ALLIS, DAVID WAIT, PEREZ GRAVES, ELIHU WHITE, JOHN HASTINGS.

Voted that the selectmen be directed to procure forthwith a sufficient stock of powder, lead, and flints, for the use of the town.

The royalist sentiment of 1768 was no longer popular.

Oct. 6, 1774.—Appointed John Dickinson delegate to the Provincial Congress to meet at Concord on the second Tuesday of this month.

Dec. 5, 1774.—Voted the constables should pay over the provincial tax to Henry Gardner, of Stow, the receiver-general appointed by the Provincial Congress,—and the town would discharge said constables upon their exhibiting a receipt from said Gardner. A like vote was passed with reference to any province moneys in the hands of under sheriffs.

This was decisive revolution,—transferring the taxes to the new provincial authority.

Jan. 9, 1775.—John Dickinson and Perez Graves were appointed delegates to the Provincial Congress called to meet at Cambridge Feb. 1st. David Wait, Eleazer Allis, Daniel White, Jr., Seth Murray, and James Porter, appointed a committee to receive and convey any donations to the poor of Boston who are now suffering in the common cause. Committee of Inspection directed to enforce the recommendations of the Provincial Congress,—JOHN DICKINSON, ELIJAH MORTON, ELIHU WHITE, JOHN HASTINGS, JONATHAN ALLIS, PHINEAS FRARY, BENJAMIN WELLS, SILAS GRAVES, and SETH MURRAY.

Voted to the Minute-Men as compensation for time spent in learning the military art, 1s. each for the three half-days already spent, and a like sum for three half-days more. Higher sums were voted the officers.

The thanks of the town were voted to Rev. Mr. Lyman for his sermon last Thanksgiving, and a copy desired that it might be printed. It is presumed it was a "sermon on the times."

John Hastings, Elijah Morton, and John Allis were named as a committee for the above purpose.

June 12, 1775.—Elijah Morton, moderator; the committee of inspection reported with reference to their proceedings in the case of persons suspected of being inimical to the cause of the colonies; and the town approved the following declaration as proper to be required to be signed by all such persons:

"We do hereby freely and voluntarily make the following declarations, viz.: That we do wholly and entirely renounce Gen. Gage as a Governor of this province, and will pay no regard to his proclamations, or any other of his acts or doings, but, on the other hand, he ought to be considered and guarded against as an unnatural and inveterate enemy to the country by every person that is a true friend to his country; and also we do hereby engage that we will join our countrymen upon all occasions in defense of the rights and liberties of America; especially we will use our influence in order to prevent the late Acts of Parliament with regard to this province being put into execution, and will bear our full proportion of men and money for the purposes aforesaid, as occasion may call for the same."

It was voted if any such suspected persons should neglect or refuse to sign such declaration they should be proceeded against as provided by the Provincial Congress.

July 12, 1776.—Voted the sum of £85 10s. be paid to 15 effective men that may appear in behalf of the town of Hatfield, to go and join the northern army. John Dickinson, John Hastings, and Perez Graves were appointed a committee to attend to that business and see that the men pass muster and enlist.

Early in the summer of 1776 it was voted by the town to instruct their representative at the present General Assembly to use his endeavors that the delegates of the colony at the Congress be advised that, in case the Congress should think IT NECESSARY FOR THE SAFETY OF THE AMERICAN UNITED COLONIES TO DECLARE THEM INDEPENDENT OF GREAT BRITAIN, THE INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN OF HATFIELD WITH THEIR LIVES AND FORTUNES WILL SOLEMNLY ENGAGE TO SUPPORT THEM IN THE MEASURE.

March 10, 1777.—Voted that the militia officers, selectmen, and committee of correspondence be directed to obtain, if possible, by subscription a sum sufficient to encourage Hatfield proportion of men to enlist into the war for three years.

May 19, 1777.—Appointed John Hastings a representative, and a committee to draw up instructions for him, viz.: John Dickinson, Elijah Morton, Phinehas Frary, Jonathan Allis, Elihu White.

May 8, 1778.—Voted a committee to adjust the past services of the inhabitants of this town, and report what each man hath done in the present war.

May 11, 1778.—Voted to raise 180 pounds to procure men for the army.

Oct. 30, 1778.—Voted 100 pounds to procure powder, lead, and steel. Voted 140 pounds to obtain clothing for Hatfield Continental soldiers.

May 20, 1779.—Passed in the affirmative, that the town desired to have a new form of government or constitution, though 61 voted in the negative.

June 24, June 29, July 1, and July 8, 1779, several votes were passed to encourage men to join the Continental army.

Aug. 12, 1779.—Deacon Elijah Morton chosen a delegate to the convention to form a new constitution.

Sept. 6, 1779.—Chose Maj. Seth Murray and Col. James Chapin delegates to attend a county convention, to be held at Northampton, to consider the propriety of fixing the price of things.

Sept. 24, 1779.—The recommendations of the Northampton Convention were not approved.

Several subsequent votes are recorded with reference to enlisting soldiers, raising money for bounties, or for clothing and provisions. Unfortunately the names of those going into the army are not given, and no list of Revolutionary soldiers can be made from the town books. The votes we have given show the opening of the contest, the determination of the people, and the progress of the struggle.

SHAYS' REBELLION.

Oct. 17, 1783, the town appointed Deacon Elijah Morton and Col. Israel Chapin delegates to appear at a convention appointed to be held at Col. Seth Marsh's, in Hatfield, on the 20th instant. Voted that the said delegates do not sit with the convention unless there appear delegates from a major part of the towns in the county of Hampshire. Delegates are recorded as elected to other conventions of the county, but they appear to have been held to deliberate on the proposed division of the county, on the time and place for holding the courts, and not directly in the interest of the Shays rebellion.

Hatfield was the place of Shays' conventions, and therefore appears as an active participator in them, according to the general histories of that period, and perhaps justly so. The first large gathering of insurgents occurred in this town April, 1782, when 300 persons made this a rallying point, and, marching upon Northampton under Capt. Reuben Dickinson, demanded and secured the release of three prisoners confined in the jail.

The convention of Aug. 22, 1786, held at Hatfield, was rather of a formidable affair. Fifty towns were represented. The assemblage continued for three days. Here was drawn up the famous list of grievances given in the general history,—a list which, sent into the surrounding towns, had a decided influence in leading many to adopt the views of the insurgents. At one time the State forces were quartered at the present place of John D. Brown's residence, while the Shays forces were at the lower end of the street. There were seven sons of one man by the name of Ransom, of Coleraine, here at that time. Some man relating the occurrence said Coleraine had sent forty-two feet of Ransom, the sons averaging six feet in height.

As one of the sad incidents of that dangerous period we give the following inscription:

"To the memory of James Walker, who, respected by the brave, beloved by his country's friends, dear to his relatives, while manfully defending the laws and liberties of his country, nobly fell by the impious hand of treason and rebellion on the 17th of February, 1787, in the thirty-second year of his age. Citizen, passing, drop a tear, and learn to imitate the brave!"

WAR OF 1812.

Approaching this stormy political period of New England history, we find the following in Hatfield records:

April 4, 1808, town cordially approved of the address of the selectmen of the town of Northampton; express gloomy apprehensions of an unnecessary war, but intimate their readiness to co-operate with the government in defending our national honor.

Feb. 8, 1809, a town-meeting was called to consider the alarming state of public affairs, and voted to concur with the two branches of the Legislature in recommending "a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer," viz., Thursday the 16th instant. And the following resolutions were voted:

"Whereas, the people have a right in a peaceable manner to request the Legislature, by way of addresses and petitions or remonstrances, for a redress of grievances they suffer; and whereas, the aspect of our public affairs is alarming almost beyond a precedent,—our citizens suffering (as we think) needless and most extraordinary privations, public confidence tottering to its base, and government endeavoring to palm upon us laws in our opinion unconstitutional, arbitrary, and oppressive; and whereas, during the administration of Washington and Adams, when our country was emerging from the horrors of a cruel and relentless war, when a form of government was to be established embracing the union of these States, when the hatchet of war with the savages upon our frontier was to be buried, when ways and means were to be devised to cancel our national debt, when commercial treaties with European nations were to be established, our country rose to wealth and greatness unparalleled in the history of the world; therefore,

"Resolved, That it is a departure from their policy and measures that has produced these evils and brought the nation to the brink of wretchedness and ruin.

"Resolved, That the embargo is unnecessary and oppressive.

"Resolved, That we view the late law for enforcing the embargo as a death-blow to our civil liberties; as by it the sanctuary of our dwellings is made liable to search and our property to seizure upon the suspicion only of the mere creatures of the President; as by it the breath of the Executive may constitute the law of the land; and, above all, that the civil is made subservient to the military power.

"Resolved, That we view with anxiety and concern the late extraordinary augmentation of military power, without so much as an intimation from our government of their object and design.

"Resolved, That the President ought to distrust, and that we hold in contempt the opinion of, those who would treat us as rebels and term us the most worthless part of community, because we do not hold out our hands to the chains and tamely submit to arbitrary power.

"Resolved, That we have ever viewed the returning of the British treaty by the President without submitting it to the Senate as an impolitic measure, and of Hatfield, son of Joseph and Lois (White) Smith, was born April 1, 1792. He was a descendant, in the sixth generation, of Lieut. Samuel Smith, who emigrated from England to Massachusetts Bay in 1634, resided some years in Wethersfield, Conn., and removed to Hadley, Mass., in 1659.

JOSEPH SMITH,

His ancestor of the next generation, John Smith, was killed by the Indians, in Hatfield Meadows, in 1676.

His grandfather, Samuel Smith, was commissioned a lieutenant by Gov. Phipps, Sept. 10, 1755.

His father and two uncles were soldiers in the Revolutionary army, one of them holding a lieutenant's commission.

His great-grandmother, Canada Waite, was born in Canada while her mother was a prisoner, having been captured by the Indians at Hatfield a short time previous.

She was named in commemoration of that captivity.

Joseph Smith was commissioned a lieutenant in the militia in 1815; a justice of the peace in 1843; represented his town (elected by the Democratic party) in the General Court the same year; and held various other offices in the gift of his fellow-citizens. He was a firm supporter of the church and parish of his native town.

He married, Jan. 28, 1823, Hannah White, daughter of Amasa and Eunice White Wells.

He was a nephew of Oliver Smith, Esq., founder of the "Smith Charities," and a brother of Miss Sophia Smith, founder of Smith College, of Northampton, and Smith Academy, of Hatfield. He died Oct. 20, 1861.

Joseph, an infant son, died May 28, 1836.

Mrs. Smith was born Aug. 26, 1795, and died March 10, 1879.

With the exception, perhaps, of one year, she visited Saratoga every summer, beginning with the year of her marriage, a period of fifty-five years.

Joseph Smith

RESIDENCE OF JOS. S. WELLS, LATE RESIDENCE OF MRS. J. W. SMITH, DECEASED, HATFIELD, MASS.

in our opinion it is through the means and measures of our Administration that all essential differences with Great Britain have not long since been amicably and honorably adjusted.

"Resolved, That we esteem our national Constitution as an invaluable legacy from our political fathers, and if necessary will yield our lives and fortunes a cheerful sacrifice to defend it, and we do hereby exhort our fellow-citizens to rally around it as the standard of political safety, and to esteem no sacrifices too great to preserve it. And as we have heretofore petitioned the President and Congress in vain, therefore,

"Resolved, That the selectmen be a committee to prepare a respectful petition to our Legislature, praying that honorable body to use all constitutional means in their power to procure our enlargement, that so agriculture and commerce may again receive the rewards of industry and enterprise."

It does not appear who drafted the above resolutions, but they certainly form an able and eloquent State paper, however much the principles involved may seem to us of the present time as equaling the States' rights assumptions of South Carolina and the other States of the late Confederation.

OFFICIAL ACTION IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Hatfield, like its sister towns of the valley, was prompt in patriotic work when the storm of civil war burst upon the country.

1861.—A town-meeting was held May 6th, at which Moses Morton, Wm. H. Dickinson, George Waite, J. D. Billings, George W. Hubbard, Elijah Bardwell, and Erastus Cowles were authorized to borrow on behalf of the town the sum of $5000, to be expended by them as they might deem expedient, on such soldiers from this town and their families as shall be mustered into the United States service during the continuance of the present war.

It was also voted to furnish each volunteer with a uniform, if needed, and a sufficient amount of money to make his monthly pay $26.

Voted, that the town will provide liberally for the families of the volunteers; then, giving three cheers for the Star-Spangled Banner, they adjourned for two weeks.

May 20th, it was voted to pay each volunteer in the 10th Regiment for time spent in drilling as the committee shall deem just.

All this was a liberality scarcely equaled by towns at that early date.

1862, April 7th.—The treasurer was fully authorized to borrow money for State aid to soldiers' families in accordance with the law upon that subject.

July 18th.—It was voted to pay a bounty of $100 each for volunteers, and, in case of the death or disability of any one, aid was promised to his family until it was able to support itself.

The assessors were directed to abate the taxes of volunteers.

August 25th.—The bounty of $100 each was extended to nine months' men equally with those enlisting for three years.

These votes were so full, and the authority given to the excellent war committee and to the selectmen so unlimited, that no town action was taken in 1863.

1864, April 4th.—A bounty of $125 each was voted to fill the quota of the town under the calls of October, 1863, and those of February and March, 1864.

Individuals had advanced money for recruiting purposes, and this was refunded by vote of the town.

To avoid any delay, the treasurer was authorized to borrow money to anticipate the collection of taxes.

1865, May 23d.—A tax of $3755.50 was voted for the purpose of refunding sums advanced by individuals, to be paid in two equal instalments,—1866 and 1867.

The assessors were also requested to assess "upon the polls and estates" a sum sufficient to pay each drafted man who furnished an accepted substitute an amount of not more than $300,—the tax list to be delivered to the collector without a warrant.

Hatfield furnished 146 men for the war, and this was a surplus of seven above all demands. Two were commissioned officers. The whole amount of aid paid solely by the town was $14,994.71. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $1,071,747, and the population 1337. Aid to soldiers' families, afterward paid back by the State, was, in 1861, $154.55; 1862, $1291; 1863, $2406.07; 1864, $2026.82; 1865, $800; total, $6678.64.

Private liberality was abundant.

The ladies sent to the soldiers and to the hospitals during the war contributions of money and supplies to the amount of $3000, and $1000 was sent by citizens generally through the Christian Commission.

Of the soldiers furnished, a large number were citizens of the town, and their names are appended to this sketch. Twenty lost their lives. The recruits hired elsewhere make up the 146 credited to Hatfield in Col. Schouler's history.

Dwight Morton, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. C; disch. Feb. 28, 1863, for disability.
Jonathan D. Warner, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. C; app. hospital steward, Oct. 1862; trans. to 37th Inf., June 20, 1864.
Dwight S. Strong, musician, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf.; disch. Sept. 3, 1862, by order of War Department.
Lyman B. Abbott, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. March 30, 1861, to the credit of South Hadley; disch. June 21, 1865.
Richard B. Abbott, enl. Sept. 21, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. April 10, 1865.
Henry M. Hitchcock, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864; app. Feb. 20, 1864, hospital steward.
Frederick Klistener, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; reported missing in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, vol. ii. page 527; was a prisoner.
Simon Schaefer, enl. Sept. 1, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. A; taken prisoner; disch. June 26, 1865.
Cordean Sweet, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. for disability, Jan. 1, 1863; re-enl. Jan. 5, 1864; disch. Nov. 7, 1864, for disability.
John Richards, enl. April 15, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. C; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864; died of wounds, June 9, 1864, at Cold Harbor, Va.
Calvin L. Coville, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. June 21, 1865.
Elihu Coville, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; died of wounds, July 22, 1863, at Gettysburg, Pa.
David B. Curtis, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. June 21, 1865.
Charles E. Hubbard, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. April 18, 1863, for disability.
Jerome E. King, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. June 21, 1865.
Lorenz Sietz, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. June 21, 1865.
John H. Vining, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; died of wounds, June 12, 1864, at Cold Harbor, Va.
Oliver S. Vining, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. April 16, 1863, for disability.
Charles L. Waite, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; died Feb. 13, 1863, at White Oak Church, Va.
Oliver Warner, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; disch. June 21, 1865.
Henry H. Field, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
J. D. Warner, hospital steward, enl. Dec. 21, 1863, 37th Inf.; unaccounted for in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, 1868, page 776, vol. ii.
Edwin Graves, 1st sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; died of wounds, May 21, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.
Emerson L. Coville, sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; wounded; disch. Jan. 7, 1865, for disability.
John W. Field, sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; killed May 6, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.
Wm. A. Champney, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. F; app. hospital steward, Oct. 27, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
Joseph Richards, enl. Dec. 30, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. C; died July 11, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.
Wells Clark, enl. Dec. 26, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. G; re-enl. Feb. 17, 1864; died of wounds, May 23, 1864, at New Orleans, La.
Dwight D. Graves, sergt., enl. Nov. 23, 1861, 32d Inf., Co. B; pro. to 1st sergt. at re-en., Jan. 5, 1864; 2d lieutenant, April 1, 1865; disch. June 29, 1865.
Wm. R. Waite, enl. Nov. 27, 1861, 32d Inf., Co. B; disch. to re-enl. Jan. 4, 1864.
Josiah H. Potter, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Henry P. Billings, 2d lieutenant, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Fernando B. Bennett, sergt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died June 22, 1863, at Port Hudson, La.
John E. Doane, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
Charles K. Morton, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Alvin D. Dinsmore, musician, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Dwight G. Abells, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Ebenezer C. Anderson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died July 1, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
Henry F. Anderson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
John Beck, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

Lambert J. Bristol, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
 Jeremiah Brown, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 George Chandler, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Myron D. Cooley, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
 Whitney F. Cooley, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
 Augustus D. Cowles, enl. Oct. 11, '62, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
 Henry A. Dickinson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; died March 22, 1863, Baton Rouge, La.
 Lucius Field, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; died soon after his return, from disease contracted in the service.
 Alonzo Hallett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Seth W. Kingsley, enl. Nov. 18, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
 George L. Marsh, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, '63.
 Josiah L. Morton, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Alvin L. Strong, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 John E. Waite, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Daniel W. Wells, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Judson W. Harris, corp., enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. C; disch. July 1, 1864; died at Alexandria, Va., Sept. 12, 1864.
 James H. Abbott, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. C; killed May 12, 1864, at Spottsylvania, Va.
 Charles L. Bardwell, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. C; disch. Aug. 16, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d Regt., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 Charles W. Evans, enl. Jan. 21, 1864, 10th Inf., Co. C; trans. June 21, 1864, to 37th Inf.; disch. July 16, 1865.
 Philetus Averill, Berdan's Sharpshooters.
 Joseph Billings, enl. Sept. 15, 1863, 2d H. Art., Co. F; disch. Sept. 3, 1865; previously served a short time in the 25th Inf.
 Charles S. Babcock, enl. March 12, 1862, 21st Inf.; wounded Dec. 13, 1862; also May 10 and Sept. 30, 1864; re-enl. March 15, 1864; pro. to 2d lieu. Nov. 29, 1864; trans. to 36th; disch. June 8, 1865.
 Henry F. Bardwell, enl. Sept. 18, 1861, 25th Inf., Co. K; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864.
 Michael Burke, enl. Aug. 9, 1864, 30th Inf.
 Anthony Bolack, enl. Nov. 15, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; died June 20, 1863, at Brasher City, La.
 Caleb D. Bardwell, enl. Sept. 8, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. K; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
 George W. Bliss, regular army.
 Elbridge G. Clifford, enl. July 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. I; died of wounds, Oct. 10, 1862.

Edward C. Cowles, enl. Sept. 21, 1861, 25th Inf., Co. K; re-enl. Jan. 18, 1864; disch. June 29, 1865.
 Peter Carter, enl. in 2d Regt.
 Lysander Chaffin, enl. in 37th Regt.
 Alonzo Dennis, enl. Nov. 18, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; died Dec. 12, 1862, at Fort Jackson, La.
 — Davis, enl. in 21st Regt. (not Hatfield), probably.
 Frederick Evans, enl. Sept. 22, 1863, 2d H. Art., Co. E; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
 Thomas Frary, enl. Oct. 10, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. D; died Nov. 6, 1864, at Morehead City, N. C.
 James McCue, enl. July 29, 1863, 22d Inf., Co. H; wounded May 5, 1864; trans. to 32d Inf.; died April 25, 1865, at Baltimore.
 Patrick Morrissey, enl. Jan. 10, 1865, 24th Inf., Co. K; disch. Jan. 30, 1866.
 Thomas Puffer, enl. Aug. 15, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. B; disch. March 13, 1862, for disability.
 Christopher D. Hooker, enl. Dec. 31, 1863, 4th Cav., Co. G; wounded at Williamsburg; disch. May 26, 1865.
 William H. Hooker, enl. Dec. 31, 1863, 4th Cav., Co. G; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Lorenzo L. Hawkins, enl. Aug. 5, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. B; wounded and missing since Dec. 13, 1862.
 Michael Hennessy, enl. July 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. K; trans. to 4th U. S. Art., Oct. 25, 1862; died in the service.
 James Hoare, enl. Aug. 25, 1863, 22d Inf., Co. D; died of wounds, Aug. 2, 1864, at Alexandria, Va.
 Liberty Holmes, enl. Jan. 4, 1864; rejected Jan. 9th.
 Alpheus H. Hathaway, enl. Oct. 10, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. C; died May 16, 1864, at New Orleans.
 James Halligan, enl. in 27th Regt.
 Raymond E. Rogers, enl. Aug. 15, 1864, 2d Cav.; disch. July 20, 1865.
 Jeremiah O'Sullivan, enl. Aug. 15, 1864, 2d H. Art.; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
 Alvah A. Sutton, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. E; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Ebenezer F. Stone, enl. Aug. 12, 1864, 27th Inf.; unassigned; disch. Sept. 1, 1864, for disability.
 Obadiah Smith, enl. Dec. 25, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. G; disch. Nov. 27, 1862, for disability.
 James Shea, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, in navy; disch. July 30, 1865; absent, sick.
 Lewis Sikes, enl. in 1st Conn. Batt.
 Luke Zebo, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. E; disch. June 9, 1865.
 Francis Wemit, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. E.

WILLIAMSBURG.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

WILLIAMSBURG lies northwest from the county-seat, and distant about eight miles. It is bounded north by Goshen and Franklin County; east by Franklin County and Hatfield; south by Northampton and Westhampton; west by Chesterfield and Goshen. It has a farm acreage of 15,092 acres. This town is the "Hatfield addition," sometimes called "Hatfield three-mile grant," and "Hatfield woods." This was a tract six miles long and three miles wide, granted by the General Court to Hatfield in 1695-96. It therefore became the absolute property of that town, and was divided up among the people. The present boundary lines of Williamsburg are very nearly identical with those of the "grant," though not entirely so. The title to the soil of Williamsburg is thus traceable back to the direct grant from the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is beautifully situated upon the eastern slope of the Green Mountain range. The climate is mild and healthy. The surface of the town is diversified, forming in many places landscapes of great beauty, rising at some points into grandeur and sublimity. Here are cataracts tumbling through deep glens; hills interspersed with pleasant valleys; towering heights, with wild ravines, all combining to delight the eye and kindle the enthusiasm of a lover of nature. The general slope of the surface is south and west, and the whole town is drained by Mill River and its tributaries.

The main valley lies nearly in the centre of the town from the north line to the village of Williamsburg. It then deflects to the east, entering the town of Northampton below Hayden-ville. From the west five branches flow through transverse valleys, dividing that portion of the town into separate parts, some of them tracts of lofty altitude, and others of lower elevation with broken surfaces. Three of these branches have special names,—Mill Brook, Meekins' Brook, and Unquomunk Brook. From the east there is one tributary of Mill River, formed of Potash Brook and "Joe Wright's" Brook. This flows nearly south, uniting with the main stream beyond its eastern bend. There is another branch of Mill River, known as Beaver Brook, rising in the east part of this town, and entering the territory of Northampton before uniting with the main stream. This system of streams renders the town noted for its valuable water-power; particularly was it so in the early years, when the streams were of greater volume than they are since the forests have been cleared.

A large number of separate elevations abound, and several of them have local names, as High Ridge and Walnut Hill in the northeast; Davis Hill, Shingle Hill, and Horse Mountain in the southeast; Merritt's Hill, Walnut Hill No. 2, Walcott Hill along the western boundary; Scott's Hill, Petticoat Hill, Unquomunk Hill, and Miller's Hill in the south.

Mill River, rising north and west in Goshen, Conway, and Ashfield, collects the waters of an extensive region, and furnishes a chain of water-power more than twelve miles long. The land was originally covered with a forest of heavy timber,—chestnut, hickory, walnut, oak, pine, maple, beech, cherry, and sycamore. There were also wild plums and grapes in considerable abundance.

The peak of the High Ridge has an altitude of 1480 feet, and was made a signal-station in the trigonometrical survey of the State. From the heights in the north nearly the whole valley of the Connecticut in Massachusetts may be seen, including Mount Tom, Mount Holyoke, and a wide range of other hills and mountain-slopes,—a view of more than seventy miles in extent.

From the old Johnson homestead, on Walnut Hill, more than twenty churches are visible, and the general scene is one of surpassing beauty.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

The first settlement of Williamsburg was made by John Miller, of Northampton, about the year 1735. A log house was built on the hill northwest of the present village of Haydenville. It stood very near the present residence of John Miller, a grandson of the pioneer. He had become acquainted with this country in the hunting excursions for which he was famous. He had trapped beaver along the creek which bears that name. He purchased a tract of 900 acres at $1 per acre. This land extended south to the Northampton line, north to Skinnerville, west to South Street, and east far enough to embrace nearly the present village of Haydenville. The tract was heavily timbered. Mr. Miller was a powerful man physically, capable of severe toil and great endurance. Out there in the forest he must have been able for many years to join with Alexander Selkirk in singing, "I am monarch of all I survey." According to previous writers, it was seventeen years before his first neighbor, Capt. Samuel Fairfield, moved in and settled upon the present Delevan place. With his habits as a hunter, Mr. Miller must have enjoyed the location, unless perchance the danger from the Indians, who were a continual source of alarm through all these towns for twenty years later, may have occasionally disturbed him. Game was all around him, and in great variety. Deer, bears, wolves, catamounts, and wild turkeys roamed the forest in abundance. The smaller tribes of wild game also abounded, and the streams are said to have been literally alive with the luscious trout waiting to furnish a dinner for the daintiest epicure. Numerous exploits of Mr. Miller in hunting are related. On one occasion he proposed to a Mr. Day, who was burning a coal-pit near him, to go out hunting. Mr. Day declined, and Mr. Miller went alone. He soon found a splendid buck, and shot him. Going up to secure his prize he found another buck caught, by his horns being entangled with those of the one shot. Taking out their hearts, he carried them back and exhibited them to the astonished coal-burner. Mr. Day exclaimed, "The old boy! I am sorry you got either one."

Mr. Miller kept from nine to twelve traps set for wild animals. At one time he had several about the carcass of a horse, near the residence now of Robert Damon, on South Street. Several traps were carried away by the animals, and, following their trail, he found a large catamount perched on a tree, with two of the missing traps attached to his legs, and also another catamount with one of its feet in another of the traps. He shot them, securing both the game and the traps. There was then a bounty of $7 a head on these animals.

About 1745-50, perhaps earlier, there was opened from Northampton to Pittsfield the old road, alluded to in other town histories, passing through Williamsburg. This road was the stage route of later years, though that finally went by way of Roberts Meadow to Chesterfield.

In 1752, Samuel Fairfield moved out to the neighborhood of Mr. Miller and opened a tavern; this was to accommodate the travelers that were beginning to go over this route. We are obliged to suppose so, for with only Fairfield and Miller there would be no pressing neighborhood necessity for a tavern.

This account locates Fairfield in Williamsburg nearly twenty years before the town was incorporated. He was a nephew of John Miller, and is supposed to have lived in the family of the latter for some years prior to 1752.

Capt. Fairfield was prominent in all the early town affairs, moderator of the first town-meeting, and chosen to many important offices. His advice was relied upon largely by the incoming settlers. His farm was a part of the original Miller tract.

Descendants of both these pioneer families are still residing in town and upon the land of their ancestors,—five generations upon the same soil. The John Miller farm of 1879 was the John Miller farm of 1735, one hundred and forty-four years ago, and is still one of the best in town.

It is not easy to trace the other early settlers in exact chronological order. It is claimed by citizens residing in the north part of the town that there were locations in that section some years previous to these dates, but considerable inquiry has failed to verify this conclusion to any great extent. The general theory is that the danger of Indian attack was too great to render settlement safe anywhere in these "far-away" places until the surrender of Quebec, in 1759.

Admitting the above account of Miller and Fairfield, it is evident they risked the dangers and were not molested, and so it may be possible others did somewhere upon the present territory of Williamsburg.

The following is the usual story of early settlement:

Williamsburg being nearly the same as the "addition" which was obtained of the General Court by the town of Hatfield, in 1695, its general settlement was first made from that town. Persons owning land in the "addition" began to clear up the forest, commencing labor without moving, and then in a few years located with their families.

Other settlers were from Northampton, only eight miles distant. Still others were from Braintree and Martha's Vineyard; others were from Sunderland and from Hadley.

In the earliest attempts of the Hatfield men to settle the "addition," they were compelled to go in parties of five to fifteen or twenty armed for defense. Few ventured to settle there permanently until after peace was secured by the surrender of Quebec, in 1759; and even then broken bands of Indians still roamed up and down the Connecticut Valley, rendering lonely, isolated settlements unsafe. For six years or more after the general occupation of Williamsburg, most of the men returned every night to their families.

The following statement gives the places from which the various families came to Williamsburg:

From Northampton were the Pomeroyes, Dwights, Fairfields, Millers, Clevelandes, and Clarks. From Belchertown the Hannums. From Martha's Vineyard, the Cleghorns, the Maybews, Stewards, Bartletts, and many others. From Braintree and the old Plymouth colony, the Haydens, the Thayers and Bradfords. From Hatfield, the Williams family, the Hubbards, the Bodmans, the Warners, the Graves, the Hills. From southeastern Massachusetts and eastern, the Hydes, the Coffins, the Allens, the Butlers, the Washburns. From London, or Lancaster, the Nash family. From Sunderland, a portion of the Hubbards. From Sunbury, Conn., the Littles, and Joseph Strong. From Rehoboth, the Suddens, and Simeon Strong. From New Hampshire, the Starks. From Wellington, Conn., the Johnson family. The general period of settlement was from 1760 to 1771, the district being incorporated at the latter date.

The early settlers of Williamsburg located on the higher points of land. Thus the population first centred on Meeting-House Hill and Petticoat Hill. At one time the school district which comprised the latter place was the most populous of any in town, and the idea was seriously entertained of locating the meeting-house there. Both of these localities, early rivals, are now the most sparsely settled of any in town. The effects of trade and manufactures have wholly reversed the original tide of settlement. The site of the present central village was formerly a swamp, covered with hemlock-trees and alder-bushes. When a settlement sprang up at this point, it was at first known, somewhat in derision, as the "city."

The story of early settlement is intensely interesting, but its minute details of privation and suffering can only appear in a brief form in this printed volume. There is everywhere in this valley a vast amount of traditional family history. The descendants are still here of the men who conquered not only the hardships of the forest, but the dangers of a wily Indian foe; who at Louisburg and Quebec wrested from France the empire of the St. Lawrence and transferred it to the English crown; who, later still, calmly threw off the yoke of British dominion and established the free commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The following catalogue of early settlers is based upon the assessment-roll of 1772, but includes a few other names, and in some instances those of later settlements: John Burroughs, homestead in the north part of the town. James Bangs, homestead the present place owned by Wm. Skinner at what was the village of Skinnerville; he was a carpenter. Silas Billings, homestead the present place of Prescott Williams. Simeon Burroughs, in the north part of the town. Thomas Beebe, homestead half a mile north of Prescott Williams, on Walnut Hill. Samuel Bagley, homestead the present place of Richard Cahill. Abner Cole, homestead probably the present place of Cyrus Miller, half a mile east of Haydenville.

Nehemiah Cleveland, homestead on Petticoat Hill next above the Washburn Hill; sons, Roswell, Nehemiah, Amasa, Uriah. Edward Curtis, homestead on the hill, a little below the old meeting-house. Josiah Dwight, place identified elsewhere. Samuel Day, homestead two and a half miles northwest of Haydenville. William Fenton, homestead on "the Hill," and moved to Goshen in early times. Samuel French, north part of the town. Nathan Frost, homestead the present Bartlett place, on Meeting-House Hill; John Frost kept a tavern there.

Samuel Fairfield, the second pioneer, known as Capt. Samuel, and very prominent in all early public affairs, homestead the present Delevan place; children by first marriage: Ira N., settled on the present place of Royal C. Fairfield; Mrs. Elias Root and Mrs. Simeon Parsons; by second marriage: Martha and Phebe, who died unmarried, and Samuel, the youngest, who married Elizabeth Miller (the "Aunt Betsey" of the present time).

Andrew Gates, homestead a mile above Haydenville. Wm. Guilford, homestead on Petticoat Hill; one son, John, went west; Ebenezer remained in Williamsburg. Josiah Hadlock, homestead north part of the town. Amasa Frost was a man of considerable prominence and lived on Meeting-House Hill.

Perez Graves, homestead on the mountain, a little south of Unquomunk Ridge, known afterward as the "Guilford farm;" children: Dexter, Williamsburg; Israel, Northampton; Perez, Jr., Chesterfield; Eli, Easthampton; Lyman, Williamsburg; Elijah, Southampton; Eunice, Mrs. Melzar Warner, Williamsburg; Anna, Mrs. Zenas Wright, Northampton; Susan, Mrs. Herman Smith, Northampton.

Samuel Graves, homestead at the foot of the mountain, below Unquomunk Ridge; children: Samuel, settled west; Joseph also; Martha, died young; Sally, became Mrs. Hubbard, of Sunderland.

Elnathan Graves, homestead at the foot of the mountain, below Unquomunk Ridge; children: Chester, died in infancy; Elnathan, settled on the old homestead; Fidelia (Mrs. Henry Lord), Williamsburg; Lydia (Mrs. Joel Hayden), Williamsburg; Emily (Mrs. Samuel Williston), Easthampton; Minerva (Mrs. Eleazer Coleman), Easthampton; Mary Ann (Mrs. Eli Graves), Easthampton.

Elisha Graves, homestead at the foot of the mountain, below Unquomunk Ridge; children: Josiah, Edward, and Elisha, who settled in this or neighboring towns, and two daughters, Abigail and Polly.

Thomas Howe was here very early; homestead the present place of Wm. Leonard. Prescott Williams states the tradition that some supernatural powers were charged on "old Mrs. Howe" at one time,—really, the fearful imputation of witchcraft. To test the question, she was once induced to come into the present house of Prescott Williams and pass through a door over which was nailed a horse-shoe. As no witch could do that, and as Mrs. Howe did, she was entirely cleared in public estimation. Her innocence was affirmatively established.

Sampson Hill, homestead at Williamsburg village, used to tend one of the early mills. Benjamin Hadlock, a joiner and carpenter, known as "Master Hadlock," homestead in the north part of the town.

John Miller, the first settler, elsewhere mentioned. His children were three sons—Stephen, Cyrus, John—and one daughter,—Mrs. Asahel Wright, of Northampton.

Aaron Miller was a brother of John Miller. Alexander Miller lived in the north part of the town.

John Nash, homestead the place in later years of William A. Nash. Children: Moses, died in infancy; Judith (Mrs. David Phinney), Hatfield; Moses (2d), John, Samuel, Thomas, all settled in Williamsburg; William became a minister; and Elijah settled in Conway.

Elisha Nash, homestead the place in later years of Oliver Nash. Children: Elizabeth (Mrs. Nehemiah Frost), Hinsdale; Rebecca (Mrs. Amasa Frost), Hinsdale; Hannah (Mrs. Seth Paine), Ohio; Sarah (Mrs. Joseph Meekins), Williamsburg; Martha (Mrs. James Bangs), Canada; Persia (Mrs. Reuben Saxon), Vermont; Elisha, Williamsburg; Catharine (Mrs. Phineas Hubbard), Canada; Submit died in infancy.

Asa Ludden, homestead on Petticoat Hill, and perhaps Ezra, Joseph, Lucy, James, Seth, and Levi in the same vicinity. Daniel May, probably on Nash Street. James Porter, homestead in the north part of the town. Samuel Partridge, homestead a portion of the present farm of Erastus Graves. Ebenezer Paine, homestead a part of the present farm of Prescott Williams.

Isaac Phinney, homestead near Chesterfield line; buildings gone. Children: David, Isaac, Nathan, Zenas, Mrs. Roswell Cleveland, Mrs. Cyrus Miller, Mrs. Elisha Graves.

Eleazer Root, north of Haydenville; was a brother of Elias Root, who was a son-in-law of Samuel Fairfield. James Smith, on Walnut Hill; a daughter was Mrs. Wm. Bodman. Ezra Strong, on Petticoat Hill. Thomas Spafford lived at Haydenville; went West at an early day. Wm. Stephenson, on Petticoat Hill. Seth Tubbs, on Walnut Hill. Joshua Thayer, homestead on Meeting-house Hill. Abel Thayer, on the Gere place. Amos Truesdell, north part of the town; never married; known as Uncle Amos. William Wales. The Wales family lived near the Phinney place, on the old Chesterfield road.

Noah Washburn, homestead where Lauriston Washburn lived in later years. He had one son, Stephen. The children of Stephen were Amos, who settled in this town; Polly (Mrs. Gross Williams); Sally (Mrs. Eleazer Hillman, and after the death of her husband she married Seth Johnson, of Dana); Ruth, the wife of Rev. Hosea Ballou, the distinguished Universalist minister.

John Williams, 1773, homestead the present place of Prescott Williams. Children: John and Jonah, Goshen, Gross, Joseph (father of Prescott), Abner, Williamsburg; Mrs. Nathan Starks, Mrs. Stearns, and Abisha, who died young.

Mather Warren, on Mountain Street; and probably Joseph, also Thomas, Warren. Aunt Betsey Fairfield says that a daughter in one of the Warren families was the first child born in town. John Wait, on Mountain Street; and probably Elijah also. Jonathan Walcott, Jr., near the Chesterfield line. Samuel Bradford was known as Dr. Bradford, and was a man of education and ability; his descendants are still in town.

Joseph Bodman, 1775, from Hatfield, homestead the place ever since owned by the Bodmans, in Williamsburg village. He lived to be about one hundred years of age. Children: Manoah, Williamsburg; Martha (Mrs. John Hillman), Williamsburg; and after Mr. Hillman's death, Mrs. Nathaniel Frary, Hatfield; Samuel, who died young; Joseph, Jr., who settled in Williamsburg; Naomi; Luther.

Samuel Bodman, 1774, brother of Joseph, homestead where the public-school building now stands.

William Bodman, a third brother, 1770, homestead the present place of Dennis O'Brien. The present house is said to have been built in 1765. Children were William, Polly, Hepzibah, Artemas, Sylvester, Alfred, Solomon, Annie, Theophilus, and Pamela.

John Graves, homestead a mile and a half east of the meeting-house, on the Hatfield road. Children: Samuel Dwight, Deacon Erastus, Mrs. John Montague, Sunderland; Mrs. David Miller, Williamsburg; Mrs. Elam Graves, Williamsburg.

Ebenezer Hill, 1785 to 1790, from Petersham, homestead on the Conway road, two and a half miles from the village. Children: Joseph, Whately; Sampson, on the old homestead. The latter was a Revolutionary soldier for a short time. Descendants are still in town.

Thomas Meekins, 1761, from Hatfield, homestead the present place of Christopher Meekins. The first log house was near the present house. One son died young. Joseph and Stephen settled in Williamsburg. The latter was the father of the present Dr. Thomas Meekins.

Dr. Elijah Paine, 1772, homestead at first the old Skeff house on the hill, afterward on the farm where he spent his life, a mile north of the old church. Children: Electa (Mrs. Frost), Geneseo, N. Y.; Elijah, Ashfield; Seth, Brecksville, Ohio; John, Pembroke, N. Y.

James Claghorn, 1772, from Martha's Vineyard, was married three times. By the first marriage he had eight children; by the second, six; and by the third, four. William, the oldest, settled in Jefferson Co., N. Y. Three daughters married and went to Ontario Co., N. Y.; two to Cummington. Other children went to various parts of Ohio and New York; one to Middlefield. Benjamin settled in Williamsburg.

Capt. Jonathan Warner, homestead on Mountain Street, was a builder, and erected many of the old-time meeting-houses. He was in the war of the Revolution. His commissions, signed by John Hancock, are preserved by his descendants. He was wounded in the shoulder,—probably at Saratoga,—and it troubled him through life. Children: Paulina, who died in infancy; Mrs. John Wells, Matthew, Mrs. Elisha Nash Conway, Mrs. Thomas Nash, Ebenezer, Silas, Jonathan, Job, Melzar, Mrs. Joseph Warner, Mrs. Elisha Graves.

The names of Joshua Warner, Joel Warner, Paul Warner, and Downing Warner, Jr., also appear on the roll of 1772.

Obadiah Warner, homestead on Mountain Street, was a noted dealer in horses. One son went South and attained high distinction in public life.

Caleb Johnson, 1789, from Willington, Conn., homestead on Walnut Hill; buildings gone; were on the present farm of William A. Nash. Children: Sally (Mrs. Zephaniah Alden, and after Mr. Alden's death she married Bela Burnett); William, Isaac, who died in infancy; Benjamin (father of B. S. and C. B. Johnson, the latter of Easthampton); Caleb, Polly, who died unmarried; Isaac.

Rufus Hyde, 1774, from Norwich, Conn.; a blacksmith; he worked near the place in later years of Eleazer Hyde. About 1795 he opened a shop with a trip-hammer at what is now Searsville. Children: Eleazer, Rufus, Stephen, Mary, Josiah.

Benjamin Pomeroy, 1780, from Northampton, homestead the place in later years of Deacon William Pomeroy, in the south part of the town. Children: Samuel, Montreal; Lydia (Mrs. Elnathan Graves, and the originator of the sewed-button business); Selah, Josiah, Esther (Mrs. Gaius Searle), Southampton; Lucy (Mrs. Phineas Graves), Hatfield; William, Polly (Mrs. Moses Montague), Sunderland.

The names of Seth Pomeroy and Josiah are upon the assessment-roll of 1772.

Ichabod Hemenway, 1770, from Framingham, homestead the place in later years of James and Obed Hemenway. Children: Elizabeth, Lucretia, Lovina, Asa, Elijah, Aaron, and James.

Deacon Joseph Carey, from Mansfield, Conn., about 1755, homestead the place in later years of John C. Williams. There were, in 1800, nine families living directly north of Deacon Carey's. All disappeared. Deacon Carey's widow lived to be ninety-four years old.* John Starks was a son-in-law of Deacon Carey. A son of Starks lived to be eighty-two.

Jesse Wilde, homestead on the Hill, near the new cemetery. It is related of his wife that she carried a half-bushel of corn to Hatfield mill on her back, and brought back the meal in the same way.

Elisha Allis is said to have built the first house on the Hill, the one owned in later years by Leonard Strong. Simeon White, homestead near the Whately line; went to Jefferson Co., N. Y., at an early day. Asa White, on the Hill. Children: Asa, Jr., settled in New York; Mrs. Phineas Hubbard, Stanstead, Conn.

The following names are also found on the roll of 1772, but their locations are not easily determined at the present time: George Andrews, Benjamin Blanchard, Samuel Barber, Asa Brown, Moses Carley, Richard Church, Caleb Conant, Anson Cheeseman, Gaius Crafts, William Dunton, George Dunn, Thomas Fenton, Thomas Flow, Thomas Fance, Thomas French, Samuel Hontanton, Lucy Hubbard, Abijah Hunt, Seth Hastings, Daniel Hollis, Joseph Janes, James Janes, Russell Kellogg, Smith Kennett, Thomas Lothing, John Meekins, William Reed, Hezekiah Reed, Benjamin Reed, Enoch Thayer, Asa Thayer, Joseph Torrey, Asaph Wales.

REMINISCENCES OF MRS. FAIRFIELD.

She was born July 5, 1785, and is therefore several years older than the Federal Constitution. She was the daughter of Cyrus Miller, and a granddaughter of the earliest pioneer, John Miller. She was seven years old when he died. She remembers hearing the wolves howl, a sound not familiar to the ears of any other living person now in Williamsburg. She gives vivid accounts of the home industries of the old time. She learned to spin when she was five years old, standing tip-toe to reach the thread when others had left the wheel for a few minutes. Then her parents had a little wheel made to fit the little girl's height, and she soon was able to spin a usual day's work. She recalls the days of tallow candles made with tow wicks, the latter spun at home; the whole a home-made affair, as was nearly everything else of olden time. She remembers going up in childhood to the Williams' store, that stood in the present burnt district of Williamsburg. She says, "I first went to school at Samuel Fairfield's house; once, crossing the river with my older sisters (they were ahead of me), on the last inclined plank I slipped, fell in, and was drowned,—fact. They brought me to, I suppose, somehow. Then I fell out of a little chair into the fire and nearly burned to death. I have been through fire and flood, but somehow I have outlived a good many others. I am contented and happy, have everything I need for my comfort, and am thankful for that while so many are 'failing up.'"^{*} She said the catechism in her childhood to Rev. Joseph Strong. One of her early teachers at the little school was Patty Russell, of Northampton.

Mrs. Hayden (grandmother of Lieut.-Gov. Hayden), like others mentioned, went to mill at Hatfield sometimes with a grist of corn, a small one probably, on her back, walking there and back, sixteen miles. Aunt Betsey says "Uncle Amos Truesdell" used to tell her these stories when she was a little girl.

* See Hampshire Gazette, 1822.

John Miller set out the first orchard in town, and sometimes made a hundred barrels of cider a year. In those times they obtained sweet apples by sending to Connecticut very particularly for seed.

And so "Aunt Betsey Fairfield," a genuine historic link between the past and present, survives to tell to the present generation the stories of the early labors, the early economies, and the early industries of Williamsburg. With the calmness of Christian faith she "waits all her appointed time" till her change shall come.

The first milling, as shown above, was at Hatfield. A Mr. Wilkie, one of Burgoyne's Hessians, settled near the Whately line. His wife took a grist, horseback, over there once, and returned late, in the dark. So doubtful was the road, she finally encamped over-night only half a mile from home.

THE BUTTON BUSINESS.

In the history of the Graves family occurs one of the most noted instances in the world of a small beginning developing into a great enterprise,—that of the sewed-button business. This was the foundation alike of the fortunes of the Hon. Samuel Williston, and the prosperity of Easthampton, with all the incidental consequences—educational, benevolent, and literary—that have resulted from Mr. Williston's numerous benefactions.

Of Mrs. Elnathan Graves the senior, Henry S. Gere, in his sketches of Williamsburg, wrote:

"A button on her husband's coat was worn through; she took it off, examined it, covered it over, and sewed it on to the coat again, asking, 'Why may not these buttons be made at home?' instead of being imported, as all the sewed buttons were at that time. Acting upon this inquiry, she made a few for a sample, and carried them to Shepard & Pomeroy, an old mercantile firm in Northampton, one of the partners being a relative of hers. They were pleased with the suggestion, and pleased with the buttons, saying to her, 'Try the experiment, Mrs. Graves; we will assist you.'

"The first material she used for covering was English lasting, which made a beautiful button. In about two weeks she had finished seven gross, for which they paid her fourteen dollars, the materials costing not far from fifty cents a gross. These buttons were favorably received in New York, and sold for an advanced price. All the buttons she ever made were disposed of to this one firm. But the great obstacle in the way was the want of molds; there were none to be found save here and there a string of dingy bone molds of foreign make, which had seemed to have always been where they were found—no call for them before.

"At length she applied to Mr. Jewett, on Elm Street, in Northampton, a man who could do anything and everything. Nothing doubting, he undertook to supply the need, and turned for her with a foot-lathe twenty gross of hard-wood button-molds, for which she paid 33½ cents a gross—a price less than he cared to make them for, and more than she cared to give; hence he turned no more. Perseveringly she worked on, getting the molds as best she could, employing a few hands, the demand for the buttons constantly increasing, when sickness and change in the family inclined her to give up the business, having tried the experiment something more than two years.

"Mr. Williston, her son-in-law, taking from her the design, carried forward the business with great advantage, importing the materials for covering, turning the molds by water-power in immense quantities for a cent or two a gross, employing hundreds of hands for many years until the button machinery was invented. Then with a click on went the cones; click again, and out rolled the flexible shank buttons. And here endeth the sewed button business."

Elnathan Graves, the son of Mrs. Graves, and the present county commissioner, is able to give many interesting incidents of this affair. As a boy, in the year 1826, he went with his mother in her search after button-molds, and also in her efforts to procure materials and in selling the buttons. He well remembers the call upon the Elm Street wood-turner and the incidents of the conversation. Mr. Jewett, though somewhat astonished at the proposed attempt, was satisfied it could be done, and soon agreed to make the effort. When, a few months later, she was one day cutting out by hand the square pieces for the covers and trimming them at considerable waste of time and material, she suddenly said, "Why can't I have a round chisel made to cut these out?" Young Graves, who by this time had unlimited confidence in his mother's abilities, said he would go and see what could be done at Mr. Hitchcock's tool-works. Mr. Hitchcock laughed at the boy's earnestness and his explanation of what his mother wanted. "A round chisel! Why, boy, who ever heard of such a thing!" "Well, my mother says she believes one can be made." "Your mother says so!" "Yes, sir; and I tell you she knows." Mr. Hitchcock soon yielded to this woman's idea and to the zeal of her young advocate. He agreed to try to make one, and succeeded; and so "the round chisel" for cutting button-covers, invented by Mrs. Graves, took its place among the other notable inventions of the world.

Mr. Graves relates the story (perhaps told in print before) that Mr. Samuel Williston, at this time without means and somewhat despondent over the failure of his business plans, came out one day to Williamsburg and said, "Mother Graves, if you will put in $25 and lend me $25, I will go to New York and see what can be done about this button business." Mrs. Graves declined to invest in the traveling expenses of her son-in-law, but he borrowed the $50 of some one else and made the trip. As the world knows, he was able afterward to repay the $50 and donate something besides to Amherst College and other institutions.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Carey was the first physician, but there is little or no record of his labors. Dr. Francis Manter was perhaps the next, and he died in the house occupied in later years by Lewis Bodman. Dr. Daniel Collins was a physician of great prominence (see his biography). Dr. Thomas Meekins, educated partly in the office of Dr. Collins, became to some extent his associate and successor (see sketch elsewhere). Dr. Sumner Nash became prominent and successful on the Thompsonian system, dying, however, at the age of twenty-one, just as he was entering upon a large practice. Dr. J. Dunham Greene practiced in Williamsburg in 1857 and for a few years after, removing finally to Rutland, Vt. At Haydenville was located Dr. Isaac Johnson, who studied with Dr. Collins. He died soon after commencing practice in 1818. Dr. Washington Shaw, a native of Plainfield and a graduate of the Berkshire Medical Institute, commenced practice in Haydenville in 1841, continuing until his death, Aug. 22, 1854. Dr. W. M. Trow commenced practice in Haydenville as Dr. Shaw's successor Aug. 24, 1854, and remained for several years, leaving in June, 1877. Roswell S. Hillman, a botanic physician, commenced practice in 1853, and secured in a short time a numerous class of patrons, scattered over a wide range of country. From 1800 to 1805, Dr. Titus practiced in Williamsburg. His business declined under the sharp competition that ensued after Dr. Collins settled in town, and he finally removed elsewhere. At Haydenville, Dr. Greenleaf, the present physician (March, 1879), came soon after Dr. Trow left. Dr. Palmer settled in Williamsburg village in 1874, and he is also the present physician at that point. He succeeded Dr. Johnson, who was lost in the flood. Dr. Johnson had been in active practice for twelve years.

LAWYERS.

Elisha Hubbard was a noted member of the legal profession. He practiced law from about 1815 until his death, in 1853, almost forty years. Addison H. White was educated as a lawyer, and after practicing a few years at Covington, Ky., returned to Williamsburg somewhat out of health. He did law business after that for some years in his native town. We may add, however, the name of Manoad Bodman, who was the predecessor of Hubbard,—a peculiar and well-known character.

PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Capt. Samuel Fairfield opened the first tavern soon after his settlement here. Tradition differs somewhat as to the date, but the investigations of B. S. Johnson, Esq., are excellent authority, and conclusively show that it was as early as 1752. In support of this is the well-understood fact that when he first opened this public-house it was the only one between Northampton and Pittsfield. His building was the first frame house erected in the town of Williamsburg, and was at first so small an affair that it was known somewhat derisively as "Fairfield's Shelter." This old tavern-stand was the present Delavan place, in Haydenville. Near it stood a large oak-tree, under which tables were often set. This was full-grown when Capt. Fairfield settled here. It was blown down in 1853.

This old tavern of Capt. Fairfield was a noted resort in the times of the Revolution. Burgoyne's army, while on their way as prisoners to Boston in the fall of 1777, are said to have encamped here and eaten one meal under and around the old oak.

Earlier in the same year Capt. Fairfield himself gathered the company raised for the valley of the upper Hudson around this same old oak, and had a dinner of venison before beginning their perilous march. A company of Indians once encamped here, and amused themselves throwing their tomahawks at the tree. The tavern was discontinued at the death of Capt. Fairfield (1803).

Joshua Warner, on Mountain Street, probably opened a tavern as early as 1772, at the place in later years of Jonathan Dickinson. It was continued some twelve years or more.

Josiah Dwight kept tavern as early as 1774,—very likely several years earlier than that, as the first town-meeting (1771) was held there, though he is not spoken of as an innholder. It was on Meeting-House Hill, the Holgate place of later times.

Ezra Clark opened a tavern in 1783 in what is now Haydenville, the Dexter Tower place of later times. He continued it until his death, in 1800, or about that time. His son, James Clark, succeeded him. In 1813 he sold to Caleb Johnson & Son, who kept it until 1821, when it was closed. During the war of 1812 this was a noted stopping-place for the soldiers, and no doubt it was the scene of many sharp bar-room discussions over that war, which was so unpopular in this section. This historic old building was burned April 10, 1866.*

Elijah Wait opened a tavern about 1784 on the farm next east of the Jonathan Warner place, mentioned above. This was upon the Hatfield road, and there was considerable travel along the route. This was afterward known as the Cleveland Tavern.

In 1781, Joshua Thayer opened a tavern a short distance from the old meeting-house on "the Hill." His successors were Nathan Phinney, Josiah Hannum, Obed Smith, Deacon Partridge, Obadiah Skiff, A. W. Fox, and Jeremiah Hubbard. The latter closed the house as a tavern in 1831. It had been a favorite resort for fifty years. Near this tavern was the parade-ground in the old training-times.

Dr. Elijah Paine kept a tavern in 1779, and for a few years after that, at the place now occupied by Samuel G. Bagg.

John Frost kept a public-house in 1794 on the place now owned by Francis Porter. He was followed for a few years by Simeon Bartlett.

Elisha Hibbard came from Hatfield in 1788, and settled on the farm now owned by Robert P. Loud. In 1796 he moved into the village and opened a store, but in 1800 he established a hotel, which continued in the Hubbard family until 1851. After that it was continued by Edward Bridgman, D. H. Giles, Henry Wells, Roswell Hubbard, Samuel B. Wood, and is the present well-known Hampshire House.

Nearly opposite this, on or near the present "burnt district," was the hotel, for thirty years or more, of Gross Williams. The present Orcutt House is a modern enterprise, having been opened in 1873.

At Haydenville, after the close of the Ezra Clark tavern, in 1821, there was no public-house until 1844. In the fall of that year a hotel was erected by Spencer Root, and opened for business by E. G. Brown. Successive proprietors were Hiram Bagg, E. G. Brown again, Shaw & Belcher. They were succeeded by Luther Loomis & Son. The Haydenville House at the present time is kept by the Loomises, father and son, who have been in the livery business for many years, and are closely identified with the general interests of Haydenville since 1837.

A tavern was built by James Bangs, about 1800, in Haydenville, and known in late years as the Sherwood place. The landlord was Nathan Phinney, but the tavern was only kept two or three years.

MERCHANTS.

At Williamsburg village, Abner Williams commenced trade (1802, 1803) in a building southwest of the bridge near the Goshen branch. He was a blacksmith, and at first only kept a few goods in a small room off of the shop. The business grew upon him. He abandoned blacksmithing, and devoted himself to trade. About 1810 he sold out to his son, Phineas Williams, who associated with himself Southworth Jenkins. They continued for a few years, and then sold to Gross Williams, a brother of Abner.

Earlier than this enterprise was the store of Zabdiel Thayer, on the site of the present store of T. M. Carter. Gross Williams succeeded him, and then, as above stated, he bought out the other store, and continued in trade there until 1840. He did a large and important business. He owned 400 acres of land, covering a large portion of modern Williamsburg.

Thomas Mayhew was an early merchant on the Hill, and the first postmaster of the town.

Isaac Gere removed from Northampton to Williamsburg about 1825. He opened a store at the place where Lewis Bodman afterward traded. He also engaged in manufacturing in a building upon the site where Thayer's factory was subsequently located.

Russell Hill and Clement Coffin opened a store about 1824 on the site of Henry Stearns' residence in later times. The next year they sold to Enoch James. Lewis L. James was afterward a partner in the same business, the firm-name being E. & L. L. James. In 1846, Lewis James went to New York, and Enoch James continued the store until 1853, when he sold to his son, Henry L. James, who continued the business, and the store has remained in the same family and at the same place to the present time (March, 1879).

The first store in town was opened by Asa White, on the Hill. It took about ten days then to go to Boston for goods and return. He continued until 1812, when he removed to Chesterfield. He was one of the three said to have wielded almost unlimited influence in Williamsburg, the other two being William Bodman and Deacon Nash.

At Haydenville, in 1838, Joel and Josiah Hayden erected a building for a store, and in November of that year opened a general trade. Before this they had sold goods considerably to their workmen, using a room in the factory building.

They continued in trade five years, doing a business of $25,000 yearly. Hayden, Wells & Co. succeeded them, the partners being Josiah Hayden, Samuel S. Wells, and Dorman T. Warren. In 1848 the firm was changed to Wells, Hyde & Co., consisting of S. S. Wells, E. H. Hyde, D. T. Warren, and Rollin L. Dawson. In 1851, S. S. Wells retired, and the firm-name was changed to Hyde, Warren & Co. Hayden & Kingsley succeeded (Josiah Hayden and Sereno Kingsley); Josiah Hayden followed for two years; Shaw & White (James B. Shaw and Stephen D. White) next traded there for four years. In May, 1859, Tileston & Smith (Henry L. Tileston and Warner S. Smith) followed in trade at the same store, and then the firm in a few months again changed to W. S. Smith & Co. (O. Connor entering in the place of Tileston). It passed again to Tileston & Smith, and Smith retired. The store burned in 1865, and was not rebuilt.

* Gazette, April 17, 1866.

The Waite store was first established in 1853, by D. G. Littlefield and D. F. Morton, who commenced trade in April, 1854. Mr. Littlefield retired from the business in January, 1855, and Mr. Morton continued it alone until the partnership of Morton & Waite was formed a few months later. In 1865 sold to C. D. Waite, the partnership proprietor mentioned, and he has continued it to the present time (1879).

In 1850, Shaw & Gardner (Henry Shaw and Wm. W. Gardner) opened a store in the building afterward occupied by Boland & Graves. This was the second store in Haydenville. This was sold to Mr. Littlefield and two of his brothers, who conducted the business until about 1853. They were succeeded by Morton & Waite, as stated above, who soon after built the present Waite store. The Littlefield building was occupied as a store by Boland & Graves, and later by Henry L. Tileston. In 1867 he was succeeded by Amos G. Ballou, who sold in 1868 to Smith & Fay, the present proprietors.

The following notices are from old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

Feb. 20, 1793.—Partnership between Joseph Bodman, Jr., and Caleb May dissolved,—tanners, Williamsburg.

Nov. 21, 1793.—Partnership between Stewart & Jackson, blacksmiths, dissolved,—Northwest of Searsville.

Edward Wright, post rider from Northampton to Williamsburg, calls for his pay.—Jan. 20, 1794.

Jan. 28, 1795.—Samuel Pomeroy calls upon his customers to settle "or they may expect to read that melancholy mean to the damage of the said Samuel, as he saith the sum of, &c."

Dec. 2, 1794.—Abner Williams calls for money, so that he can buy "goods as usual and more."

Feb. 5, 1796.—Seth Dwight, being about to remove from the State, calls upon those indebted to pay up, assuring them that 1000 sixpences make 50 pounds.

Oliver Thayer, of Williamsburg, who came from Braintree in 1783, and settled, was the first that bought and slaughtered animals for the fresh-meat market. He commenced about 1787, and for many years brought his meat to Northampton in panniers or baskets, one on each side of his horse. He came once or twice a week during about four months, beginning in June. For four or five years he sold veal, lamb, and mutton, at twopence, twopence halfpenny per pound, and rarely at three. He did not bring beef. He sold butter at sixpence.

ORGANIZATION.

For some years after the settlement this territory remained a part of Hatfield. It became a thriving and growing place. A school-house was built, other improvements made, and the need of a separate organization was soon apparent. The town of Hatfield consented by a vote in 1770, and on the same day also authorized the formation of the town of Whately. The General Court passed an act of incorporation April 24, 1771.

Williamsburg was organized "by authority of his Majesty," but it soon passed in the rapid progress of events under the authority of the "State of Massachusetts Bay."

BOUNDARIES NAMED IN THE ACT.

"South on Northampton, west on Chesterfield, north on Conway, and east by a line parallel to and at the distance of half a mile from the east line of the 'three miles additional grant,' so called, in Hatfield; and that Samuel Fairfield and Andrew Gates and the lands and farms they respectively now own, not included within the bounds aforesaid; and also that part of the farms John Nash and John Meekins now own, not included within the said bounds; also Russell Kellogg, John Wait, Elijah Wait, Joshua Warner, Jonathan Warner, Downing Warner, Thomas Warren, William Warren, Mathew Warren, and the Widow Warren, mother of the Warrens above named, with the lands they now respectively own there, which lie east of the aforesaid east boundary line of the said district, and westward of a line running from the north line of Northampton to the south line of Conway, parallel to the east line of the said three miles addition, and striking the most easterly part of the farm of the said Warrens on Horse Mountain, so called, together with the lands of John Miller, of Northampton, which lie west of the top of the aforesaid mountain, shall be and hereby are annexed to the said district so far as to do duty and receive privileges as fully in every respect as if they and their said lands were included within the bounds of the said district."

The first district-meeting was notified by John Nash, pursuant to the warrant of William Williams, Esq., of Hatfield. It met at the house of Josiah Dwight, May 6, 1771. The proceedings are shown in the records, as herewith given from the town books. The name Williamsburg was probably given in honor of the Williams families of Hatfield, some of whom may have specially assisted the people of this district in procuring incorporation or favored the new settlement in other ways.

At the first legal district-meeting in Williamsburg, on May 6, 1771, Samuel Fairfield was chosen Moderator. Voted to adjourn the meeting over to the school-house; John Nash was chosen District Clerk and Treasurer, and sworn; Amasa Frost and Thomas Warren chosen Constables, and sworn; Joshua Warren, Josiah Dwight, John Nash, chosen Selectmen and Assessors, and sworn; Joshua Thayer, Jonathan Warner, chosen Wardens, and sworn; Abel Thayer, Abijah Hunt, Mather Warren, Elisha Nash, chosen Surveyors of Highways, and sworn; Richard Church and Russel Kellogg, chosen Tythingmen, and sworn; Jesse Wild, Joseph Carey, chosen Fence-Viewers, and sworn; Jonathan Warner, chosen Clerk of the Market, and sworn; Andrew Gates, Downer Warner, chosen Deer-Reeves, and sworn; Joshua Thayer and Joseph Torrey, chosen Hog-Reeves, and sworn; Josiah Hayden and Amasa Graves, chosen Field-Drivers and sworn; Levi Ludden, chosen Surveyor of Clapboards and Shingles, and sworn. Voted, that the Selectmen be Assessors.

The following additional notes are taken from the records:

May 13, 1771.—Voted, that Jonathan Warner, Josiah Dwight, and John Nash be a committee to petition for a land tax, said affairs to be conducted according to the direction of said committee. Voted, that the Selectmen lay town ways where they are needed. Voted, that the Selectmen purchase a town book. Voted, that Amasa Frost, Josiah Hayden, and Abel Brown be a committee to erect a pound. Voted, that highway work to the first of October be two shillings eight pence per day; after that, one shilling and nine pence; and that a team at highway work to the first of October be three shillings per day; after that, one shilling and ten pence, and that the surveyors shall, if any men or teams fall short of full days' work, return their work as so much short of the above-mentioned price as in their judgment they fall short of full day's work. Voted, to raise twenty-five pounds for the repair of highways. Voted, that each of the constables be paid by the district twenty shillings for their service this year.

May 20, 1771.—At a legal district-meeting, John Nash was chosen Moderator. Voted, that Amasa Frost, Joseph Carey, and John Nash be a committee to settle our proportion of the province tax with the towns of Hatfield and Whately. Voted, that every man keep his swine within his own inclosure.

Dec. 2, 1771.—Bills allowed: To Ebenezer Fitch, of Hatfield, 3 days laying town ways, 18 shillings. To John Nash, for cash he paid at court when he went as agent for the town, 3 shillings 4 pence. To Mr. Elijah Parsons, for preaching 26 Sabbaths, 26 pounds.

Other extracts from the town records appear under the head of schools, churches, etc.

SELECTMEN FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE DISTRICT.

- 1771.—Joshua Warner, Josiah Dwight, John Nash.
- 1772.—Samuel Fairfield, Josiah Dwight, John Nash.
- 1773.—Samuel Fairfield, Josiah Dwight, Abel Thayer.
- 1774.—Samuel Fairfield, Josiah Dwight, Samuel Bodman.
- 1775.—Samuel Fairfield, Abel Thayer, Jonathan Warner.
- 1776.—Samuel Fairfield, Elijah Paine, Russell Kellogg.
- 1777.—William Bodman, Josiah Dwight, Samuel Day, Abel Thayer, Elijah Paine.
- 1778.—Elijah Paine, Josiah Dwight, Samuel Bodman.
- 1779.—Samuel Day, Josiah Dwight, Abel Thayer.
- 1780.—Samuel Fairfield, Josiah Dwight, Abel Thayer.
- 1781.—Samuel Day, Josiah Dwight, Joseph Bodman.
- 1782.—Elijah Paine, Josiah Dwight, Abel Thayer.
- 1783.—Samuel Fairfield, Josiah Dwight, Abel Thayer.
- 1784.—Elisha Allis, Josiah Dwight, Jonathan Warner.
- 1785.—Elisha Allis, Elijah Paine, Benjamin Pomeroy.
- 1786.—Elisha Allis, Abel Thayer, Josiah Dwight.
- 1787.—Samuel Graves, Abel Thayer, Josiah Dwight.
- 1788.—Elisha Allis, Abel Thayer, Josiah Dwight.
- 1789.—Samuel Graves, Josiah Dwight, Elisha Allis.
- 1790.—Samuel Graves, Elisha Hubbard, Abel Thayer.
- 1791.—Samuel Graves, Elisha Hubbard, Elisha Wells.
- 1792.—Elisha Nash, Elisha Hubbard, Benjamin Pomeroy.
- 1793-95.—Elisha Hubbard, Samuel Graves, Asa Ludden.
- 1796-98.—Asa Ludden, Elisha Wells, Elkanah Thayer.
- 1799-1802.—Asa Ludden, Samuel Graves, John Wells.
- 1803-5.—Abel Thayer, Moses Nash, John Wells.
- 1806-7.—Elisha Wells, Moses Nash, John Wells.
- 1808-10.—Elisha Wells, John Wells, Asa Ludden.
- 1811.—Elisha Wells, John Wells, Joseph Bodman, Jr.
- 1812-13.—Elisha Wells, John Nash, Joseph Bodman.
- 1814.—John Wells, Sylvanus Hubbard, Joseph Bodman.
- 1815.—Elisha Hubbard, Jr., Sylvanus Hubbard, Joseph Bodman.
- 1816.—Thomas Nash, Sylvanus Hubbard, Joseph Bodman.
- 1817-18.—Josiah Dwight, Sylvanus Hubbard, Matthew Coffin.
- 1819-22.—Josiah Dwight, Sylvanus Hubbard, Samuel Graves, Jr.
- 1823-26.—Josiah Dwight, Josiah Hannum, Samuel Graves.
- 1827.—Samuel Graves, Sylvanus Hubbard, Levi Hitchcock.
- 1828.—Samuel Graves, Cornelius Tileston, Jr., Levi Hitchcock.
- 1829.—Elisha Hubbard, Jr., Cornelius Tileston, Jr., Levi Hitchcock.
- 1830.—Samuel Graves, Thomas Mayhew, Levi Hitchcock.
- 1831.—Samuel Graves, Edward Gere, Levi Hitchcock.

1832.—Thomas Mayhew, Edward Gere, James Mayhew.
 1833.—Elisha Hubbard, Jr., Sylvanus Hubbard, Samuel Graves.
 1834.—Elisha Hubbard, Jr., Enoch James, Jason Miller.
 1835.—Elisha Hubbard, Jr., Isaac Gere, Leonard Dwight.
 1836.—Melzar Warner, Isaac Gere, Leonard Dwight.
 1837.—John Wells, Salmon H. Clapp, Leonard Dwight.
 1838.—Henry Merritt, Salmon H. Clapp, Spencer Root.
 1839-40.—Leonard Dwight, Hiram Nash, Spencer Root.
 1841-42.—Leonard Dwight, Hiram Nash, Joel Hayden.
 1843.—William A. Nash, Hiram Nash, Joel Hayden.
 1844.—William A. Nash, Lewis Bodman, Butler Merritt.
 1845-46.—William A. Nash, Lewis Bodman, Stephen Meekins.
 1847.—Edwin Everett, Hiram Nash, Erastus Graves.
 1848.—Henry Merritt, Hiram Nash, R. H. Fairchild.
 1849-50.—Lewis Bodman, Erastus Graves, R. H. Fairchild.
 1851-52.—Elnathan Graves, Hiram Nash, Samuel S. Wells.
 1853.—Elnathan Graves, Lewis Bodman, Samuel S. Wells.
 1854.—Elnathan Graves, William A. Nash, Francis S. Warner.
 1855.—William A. Nash, Francis S. Warner, Thomas H. Ives.
 1856.—William A. Nash, Otis G. Hill, Royal C. Fairfield.
 1857.—Edwin Everett, B. F. Sears, Royal C. Fairfield.
 1858.—Hiram Nash, D. F. Morton, Elnathan Graves.
 1859.—Hiram Nash, D. F. Morton, Joseph T. Thayer.
 1860.—William A. Nash, D. F. Morton, William E. Thayer.
 1861.—William A. Nash, William E. Thayer, Nathan C. Wrisley.
 1862-65.—Thomas Nash, Elnathan Graves, Nathan C. Wrisley.
 1866.—Thomas Nash, Elnathan Graves, Oliver Nash.
 1867.—Thomas Nash, Elnathan Graves, Nathan C. Wrisley.
 1868-69.—Thomas Nash, Elnathan Graves, Thomas S. Hayden.
 1870.—William E. Thayer, Elnathan Graves, C. D. Wait.
 1871.—William E. Thayer, E. W. Merritt, C. D. Wait.
 1872-73.—Thomas Nash, E. W. Merritt, Benson Munyan.
 1874.—B. S. Johnson, John O'Neil, Benson Munyan.
 1875-76.—Aaron R. Morse, John O'Neil, T. M. Carter.
 1877-78.—Thomas S. Hayden, John O'Neil, T. M. Carter.
 1879.—Thomas Nash, John O'Neil, Benson Munyan.

A noted instance of long service among town officers is that of B. S. Johnson, who has been elected assessor twenty-eight years,—first in 1851; then from 1856 to 1864 inclusive; next from 1867 to 1874 inclusive; and again commenced a new term of service in 1878.

TOWN CLERKS.

John Nash, 1771; Simeon White, 1772-73; Elijah Paine, 1774-76; Elisha Nash, 1777-78; Josiah Dwight, 1779-89; Asa White, 1790-93; Seth Dwight, 1794; Elisha Hubbard, 1795-1805; Obadiah Skiff, 1806-19; Elisha Hubbard, Jr., 1820-24; Hervey C. Thayer, 1825-27; Isaac Gere, 1828-31; Elisha Hubbard, 1832; Thomas Meekins, 1833-34; Ambrose Stone, Jr., 1835-40; Wm. Stearns, 1841; Otis G. Hill, 1842-44; Wm. Stearns, 1845; Otis G. Hill, 1846-54; Henry Stearns, 1855; Otis G. Hill, 1856; John B. Gleason, 1858-60; T. M. Carter, 1861-80.

DELEGATES TO THE PROVINCIAL CONGRESS AND TO CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS.

March 13, 1775.—Russell Kellogg chosen to attend the Provincial Congress at Concord, "he to find horse, and give his time by agreement, the town to bear his charges or expenses."

1820.—John Wells chosen to Constitutional Convention.

1853.—Hiram Nash chosen to Constitutional Convention.

Wm. Bodman represented the town in the State Convention that ratified the Constitution of the United States in 1788.

REPRESENTATIVES TO GENERAL COURT.

Josiah Dwight, 1778; Joshua Johnston, 1779; Josiah Dwight, 1780-82; Wm. Bodman, 1783-96; Elisha Hubbard, 1800-1; Wm. Bodman, 1805-6; Capt. John Wells, 1808-12; Thomas Mayhew, 1813-16; Joseph Bodman, 1819; John Wells, 1821-24; Elisha Hubbard, Jr., 1826-31; Samuel Graves, 1832-33; Dr. Thomas Meekins, 1834-35; Isaac Gere, 1836-37; Elisha Tileston, 1839-40; Ambrose Stone, Jr., 1841-42; Joel Hayden, 1844-45; Erastus Bodman, 1846-47; Hiram Nash, 1849-50; Hiram Hill, 1851-52; Samuel S. Wells, 1852; Joseph Bodman, 1853; Erastus Graves, 1855; Dr. Thomas Meekins, 1856; Otis G. Hill, 1857; Albert D. Sanders, 1859; Elnathan Graves, 1859, extra session; Hiram Nash, 1860-61; Daniel F. Morton, 1863; Thomas Nash, 1866; Stephen M. Crosby, 1869; Thomas M. Carter, 1872; Henry L. James, 1875; Aaron R. Morse, 1877.

VILLAGES.

WILLIAMSBURG VILLAGE

was settled later than other parts of the town. Between the location of Fairfield and Miller at the site of Haydenville, and the Dwights and Mayers on "Meeting-house Hill," was a distance of three miles. In early times the road was a sort of bridle-path, marked out by blazed trees.

The present place of Williamsburg village was low ground, covered with hemlocks and alder-bushes. The village grew up by reason of the development of the water-privilege at the junction of Mill Brook with Mill River. Its early settlement and general business are shown elsewhere.

Before the damage done by the flood of 1874, it was a large and thriving village. The houses then destroyed have not been rebuilt to any extent, and there is yet to be seen evidence of the ruin then wrought.

In the village are the Congregational and Methodist churches, the school building, and the town-hall. There are some pleasant homesteads and fine private residences, especially on South Street and on North Main Street.

The buildings along South Main Street were mostly destroyed by the reservoir disaster. The station upon the railroad is half a mile or more from the centre of the village.

Williamsburg is an important point of stage communication with several western towns. Stages leave every day for Chesterfield and Worthington by one line, and for Goshen and Cummington by another. From Worthington and Cummington, lines daily connect with Hinsdale on the Boston and Albany Railroad. Williamsburg is thus the point of railroad business for a large extent of country in Western Hampshire County, said to be the focal point of seven towns.

Its present business (March, 1879) may be stated as follows: The stores of E. M. Carter, L. D. James, Wm. E. Thayer, S. K. Wait; H. L. James, woolen-factory; W. E. Thayer, hardware-factory; H. G. Hill, buttons, button-molds; H. W. & J. W. Hill, tassel-molds and other varieties of wood-work; Woodward and Lyman, buttons, button-molds; Hill & Warner, grist-mill; hotels, Hampshire House and the Orcutt House; shops of various kinds; Smith's Insurance Agency.

The post-office was the only one in town for many years.

ADDITIONAL ITEMS.

From 1816 to 1860 there was a store kept on the lot next east of Lewis Bodman's residence. The first building used was moved away and became a store-house for A. E. Lyman's rake-factory. This was erected in 1816, by Erastus Hubbard and Augustine W. Fox. They traded for three or four years, and sold to Abner Williams, who traded there for a time. His successors were D. W. Graves, Isaac, Edward, and Frederic Gere; D. W. and Ebenezer Graves, Alvah Miller, and W. F. Bodman (the latter from February, 1837, to 1858), then a Union Company, and lastly T. M. Carter and Wm. B. Avery. Lewis Bodman about 1837 moved the old Mayhew store from the Hill to the village. This was burned in 1860.

In July, 1831, Ezra, Willison, and Sears, sons of Eliphalet Thayer, purchased of Edmund Taylor a valuable property along Mill Brook, including an old saw-mill and a grist-mill. Sears Thayer sold out in a short time. The others erected a store, and, besides ordinary mercantile business, they carried on an extensive trade in clocks. They made the cases in the old mill buildings, and brought the running parts from Connecticut. They employed six or eight peddlers. They dissolved. Ezra continued business for a time, met with large losses, and finally removed to Cayuga Co., N. Y. Willison Thayer gave his exclusive attention to clocks for a time, but gradually changed to other articles, including hardware and furniture. In 1848 he erected the three-story factory of granite and wood at a cost of $5000. Soon after, W. E. Thayer became associated with him, and the firm added the making of wooden buttons, the first made in this country. William Thayer died in 1859, and W. E. Thayer continued the business. He soon after erected a new factory near the fork of the Goshen and Chesterfield roads.

Isaac Gere and Edward Gere, whose names became intimately associated with the mercantile and manufacturing interests of Williamsburg, were sons of Isaac Gere, a well-known citizen of Northampton in the olden times. They removed to Williamsburg after graduating from college, and went into business there. Edward afterward removed to New York.

Tanning was carried on for many years by Graves & Lamb, and by Joseph Bodman and Stephen Hopkins.

Earlier than this, tanning was done in the building opposite the old Deacon Bodman homestead, by Samuel Bodman. Horse-power was used in grinding the bark. In this building was a printing-office for a short time, and here was published a book known as "Bodman's Orations."

While Bodman & Hopkins were associated in tanning, they added the manufacture of boots and shoes. This was continued afterward by Luther & Walker Rice.

Williamsburg Post-Office.—This was established about 1814 or 1815. Previously, Williamsburg had been supplied from the Northampton office. Thomas Mayhew was the first postmaster, and he kept the office on the hill until 1824, when it was removed to the village, and kept in the store of the Messrs. Thayer. Mr. Mayhew remained postmaster until 1839, but after the removal to the village Wm. E. Thayer was deputy. Lewis Bodman was appointed in 1839, Mr. Metcalf in 1848, Lewis Bodman again in 1852, followed by the present incumbent, H. L. James.

In 1812, Prince and Phineas Williams built and operated a cotton-factory on Mill Brook, at the site of Mr. Thayer's factory in later years. The firm suffered a severe loss at the conclusion of peace in 1816, and the business closed.

Joseph and Southworth Jenkins devoted the building to a grocery-store for a time, and then Isaac Gere began to manufacture broadcloth there. His successors (though in a great variety of businesses) have been Edward & Charles Talbot, Mason & Moffit, J. Pierson, Charles Gloyd, Ezra Thayer, Marcus & Henry Way, D. W. Graves, O. G. Spellman, and Wm. E. Thayer.

A second cotton-mill was erected by Erastus Hubbard and Edmund Taylor. This flourished only during the war with England.

In 1806, and for several years, a fulling-, dyeing-, and dressing-mill was operated by Sylvester, Artemas, and Theophilus Bodman, sons of William Bodman.

SEARSVILLE

is on Mill Brook, northwest of Williamsburg village. It takes its name from Nathaniel Sears, who carried on manufacturing operations there for many years. The water-privilege at this point is valuable, and has been improved from early times down to the present.

Searsville was happily exempt from the disaster of 1874. It is, however, situated upon the stream at the head-waters of which are the great Goshen reservoirs. There is felt here by some persons a nameless dread of a possible similar catastrophe from them.

The danger is doubtless somewhat imaginary. The dams of the Goshen reservoirs are very solid structures; they have been carefully examined, as the whole system of reservoirs is and will be, and a close supervision is kept of them. It is believed the damage by the flood of Dec. 10, 1878, was less in all this valley by reason of the Goshen reservoirs. They held back a large amount of water at the time, and prevented the quantity coming down from being of as great volume as it otherwise would have been.

Searsville has now but little business. The saw-mill of G. M. Bradford is used, and a blacksmith-shop has a good business. The old woolen-mills stand idle, as such machinery does at so many other points in these "hard times" of 1879.

William E. Thayer's present business of making hardware at Williamsburg commenced at the site of the old cotton-spinning-works of Capt. Southworth Jenkins of 1812. After Jenkins, Isaac Gere, 1822 or so, opened a woolen-factory in the same building and used the same wheel. He sold to David Mason, who, associated with Mr. Moffett, continued the factory. Ezra Thayer and Mr. Gloyd succeeded them. Next was the firm composed of Mason and two Talbots, brothers of the Governor. The latter spent some months in Williamsburg at one time. Finally, William E. Thayer took the property on the west side of the river, and by prudent, quiet industry has developed a safe and successful business.

About the year 1806, Stephen Graves started a mill for fulling, dyeing, and dressing cloth. He continued for a few years at Searsville.

Versel Abell manufactured woolen yarn, flannel, and fulled cloth. His mill stood south of the river and a few rods north of the Sears factory.

In 1819, Nathaniel Sears came to this point with a capital, it is said, of only $50. He obtained a right in the old water-privilege of Stephen Hyde, put up a small building, and commenced cloth-dressing. In 1828 he enlarged his building, put in machinery for manufacturing, but continued the custom dressing-work. In 1837 and '38 he built his main factory, the old one burning after he commenced the new. In 1853 he devoted his mill exclusively to the manufacture of white flannel.

Josiah Hannum was one of the most successful mechanics in Williamsburg. For thirty-five years he made axes. He occupied for fifteen years the house that stood opposite the old meeting-house. His shop was up the road, on the east side, about twenty-five rods above the meeting-house.

He worked at this place until 1811; then he bought the old Seth Paine farm. He built a shop west of the road leading to Goshen. During the war with Great Britain steel rose to one dollar a pound. At that time Mr. Hannum bought a quantity of steel and iron in Montreal. He got it home to Williamsburg by sleighing. He had a large market West. His make amounted sometimes to one hundred and ten axes a week, mostly ground and ready for use.

He died about 1836. The Hannums and the Hydes (the latter having a trip-hammer) became known far and wide as axe-makers, and the latter as scythe-makers also.

Levi Hitchcock built below Sears' mill about 1831 and made axes, and Benjamin K. Baker about 1835.

SKINNERVILLE

was on Mill River, below Williamsburg, below the mouth of Unquomunk Creek. It is spoken of under the head of "Factories," and in the account of the disaster of 1874.

HAYDENVILLE.

This was the earliest settled point in Williamsburg, but the village is mainly the growth of the last thirty-five years. It is situated near the south line of the town. The village derived its name from the Haydens, who were so largely instrumental in developing the manufacturing interests of the place. Other public-spirited citizens were associated with them, but the Haydens were cordially recognized as the leaders in every important business. The public buildings of the place are the Congregational church, the Catholic church, and the school building. There are many substantial private dwellings.

The Post-Office was established in 1839, with a daily mail to and from Northampton and Williamsburg. At the opening of the railroad, the service was increased to twice each day, and later to three times. Josiah Hayden was the first postmaster. His successors have been Ellsworth H. Hyde, Maj. Lewis Warner, Stephen W. White, Spencer Root, Frederick L. Hayden, and Joel Hayden, Jr., who is the present incumbent of the office.

The Fire-Engine Company was organized in 1848. An engine was purchased at a cost of $500 (the town paying $250 and individuals the remainder). Samuel S. Wells was chosen Foreman; J. A. Root, Assistant Foreman; Clerk, H. L. Tles-ton; Second Assistant Foreman, J. B. Hayden. The company was disbanded after a few years.

The Haydenville Gas-Works were wholly a private matter, and belonged to the Hayden Manufacturing Company. A few private houses were lighted, and the streets and the mills. The works were not rebuilt after the flood of 1874.

Business of Haydenville (1879).—The Hayden Company manufacture brass goods. William B. Hale operates the old cotton-factory. There are a variety of mechanic shops. The hotel and livery business of Luther Loomis & Son, who are also extensive farmers, and do a large firewood business. The merchants are noted elsewhere.

SCHOOLS.

A school-house had been built before the town was organized. It was a substantial structure of hewn logs, used several years for town-meetings and for religious worship as well as for education.

It stood on the hill. The first town-meeting was called at the house of Josiah Dwight, but, after organizing, an adjournment was made to the school-house.

Dr. Meekins locates Josiah Dwight at the forks of the Ashfield and Chesterfield roads, and infers that the pioneer school-house was near the present place of Wm. Leonard.

The votes passed at various meetings of the town show the steps taken to found the system of public schools.

May 13, 1771.—Voted to give the proprietors of the school-house two-thirds of the cost that they were at for the building thereof, and that each proprietor's bill of cost be accepted by a committee chosen for that purpose. Voted that the committee consist of Joshua Warner, Jonathan Thayer, Abel Thayer. Voted that Amasa Frost, Joshua Warner, Jonathan Warner be a committee to repair the school-house in such a manner that it shall be fit to meet in for public worship according to their best discretion. Voted to raise ten pounds to repair the school-house.

March 18, 1777.—Voted that there be five women schools kept up from the 1st of May till the 1st of October. Voted to have two men's schools three months in the winter season.

Dec. 3, 1777.—Voted to have a woman school four months in the summer season in the centre of the town, and as many more women's schools in the remote parts of the town as may be necessary to accommodate the whole. Voted to hire a school four months in the winter season in the centre of the town. Voted to raise money sufficient to pay all the charges. Voted that James Bangs, Lieut. Joshua Warner, Elisha Allis, Abijah Hunt, and Elisha Nash be a committee for the schools to provide the tutors, and appoint the places for the schools to be kept.

The appropriations of early times seem small in amount compared with those of later years, but for the times they were no doubt equally liberal.

The school district at Haydenville was formed Dec. 3, 1810, consisting of James Clark, Ira N. Fairfield, Josiah Hayden, Daniel Hayden, Aaron Hemenway, Jesse Wilde, Beriah Shepherd, Samuel Wales, Joshua Thayer, Jr., Lieut. Joshua Thayer, Daniel Truesdell, Pliny Kingsley, Cyrus Miller, Simeon Guilford, and the Widow Parsons.

Samuel Fairfield and Elias Root declined to be set off from the central district at that time, though living adjoining the others.

The first school-house was erected in 1811, at the southern end of the dugway. There had, however, been a school at this point as early as 1790, kept in the house of Samuel Fairfield.

Eunice Mather is remembered as an early teacher. The brick school-house that used to stand near the old Fairfield homestead (the Delevan place) was built in 1839.

Twenty years later the fine building now standing next west of the meeting-house was erected for a school building and a public hall. Its cost was $5500, of which the district paid $2500, and individuals the remainder. Wm. K. Searles, of Easthampton, was the builder, and W. F. Pratt, of Northampton, the architect. Four teachers are employed at the present time (1879).

At Williamsburg village the public school, though not a high-school, has a good building, and there are usually employed three teachers.

Dr. Meekins recalls a few names of early teachers,—Seth

Warner, Mr. Cooley, Dr. Smith, Salmon H. Clapp, Mr. Ludden, from Southampton, and Erastus Hubbard. Rev. Mr. Strong had a few students at various times, assisting them in preparing for college.

To the notice of the schools we add a list of natives of Williamsburg who were college graduates:

Ansel Nash, Williams College, ministry.

John White, Williams College, law.

Chester White, Yale College.

Addison H. White, Yale College, law.

Elisha Hubbard, Jr., Yale College, law.

Wales Tileston, Yale College, ministry.

Bainbridge Rice, Yale College, teaching.

Chester Lord, Amherst College, ministry.

John B. Miller, Union College, ministry.

Charles Lord, Amherst College, ministry.

William Ludden, Yale College, teaching.

William H. Hayden, Yale College, business.

Henry Warren, Wesleyan College, ministry.

William Warren, Wesleyan College, ministry.

Davis H. Mayhew, Williams College, teaching.

Other professional men who did not graduate from college were Alanson Nash, Hiram Nash, Manoah Bodman, and Hiram Warner, lawyers; Thomas Meekins, Thomas Meekins (2d), Isaac Johnson, Roswell S. Hillman, Morris Dwight, Edwin Bartlett, Sumner Nash, physicians; William Nash, a minister.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Eight schools; attending in the summer, 343; average, 251; winter, 343; average, 220; in town, between 4 and 16, 343; summer schools, 33 months, 7 days; winter, 20 months; summer teachers, 9 females; winter, 5 males, 3 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $16.50; female, $11.42.

January, 1847.—Nine schools; attending in summer, 259; average, 207; winter, 312; average, 208; in town, between 4 and 16, 374; attending under 4, 10; over 16, 14; summer schools, 27 months, 21 days; winter schools, 20 months, 14 days; total, 48 months, 7 days; summer teachers, 9 females; winter, 5 males, 4 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $20.60; female, $10.04.

January, 1857.—Twelve schools; attending in summer, 275; average, 221; winter, 205; average, 164; attending under 5, 12; over 15, 4; in town, between 5 and 15, 305; summer teachers, 1 male, 10 females; winter, 3 males, 7 females; summer schools, 35 months, 14 days; winter, 29 months; total, 64 months, 14 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $35.75; female, $16.27.

January, 1867.—Thirteen schools; attending in the summer, 412; average, 325; winter, 412; average, 329; under 5, 13; over 15, 89; in town, between 5 and 15, 469; summer teachers, 2 males, 11 females; winter, 3 males, 10 females; summer school, 59 months, 10 days; winter, 35 months; average wages of male teachers per month, $52.75; female, $24.87.

January, 1878.—Thirteen schools; repairs, $12; children attending, 460; average, 284; under 5, 1; over 15, 35; in town, between 5 and 16, 464; teachers; 3 males, 16 females, 2 of them normal; school, 100 months, 2 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $57.11; female, $32.28; taxation, $2800; expense of superintendence, $50; printing, $18; vested funds, $16,485; income, $1157; other income and dog tax, $116.69; 2 high schools; 3 teachers; 90 scholars; supported by taxation; 9 months, 15 days; salary of principals, $610 and $394; town share of State funds, $229.70.

CHURCHES.

The first thought in early New England settlements may have been to secure a home for themselves and families, but the next was to make arrangements for public worship. And so we infer that meetings were held during the few years of settlement preceding civil organization. The pioneers were between two old towns, Hatfield and Northampton, and had assistance from the ministers of both places.

When the first town-meeting was fairly over and the civil officers installed in their places, a second meeting was held May 13, 1771, only a week later than the first.

The business at this was to provide for religious services, as the following proceedings show:

May 13, 1771.—At a legal district-meeting Simeon White was chosen moderator. Voted to raise £20 to be laid out in preaching before next March meeting. Voted that Samuel Fairfield, Jonah Dwight, and John Nash be a committee to lay out the money voted for preaching, according to their best discretion. Voted that public worship on Lord's day from the first of May to the first of October begin at ten of the clock in the morning, and at two of the clock in the afternoon, and from the first of October to the first of May to begin half an hour after ten in the morning and at one in the afternoon. Voted that the selectmen provide a signal to notify the time when to begin public worship. Voted that Joshua Thayer have fifteen shillings for blowing the conk shell and keeping the school-house fit for public worship this year. And further action was had at subsequent meetings.

Oct., 1771.—Voted that Deacon Amasa Frost, Deacon Carey, Samuel Fairfield, Josiah Dwight, and John Nash be a committee to wait on Mr. Elijah Parsons, and give him a call to come and preach here six Sabbaths on probation, in order to his settling in the ministry in this place.

This movement was still further prosecuted.

February, 1772.—A committee was chosen "to give Mr. Elijah Parsons a call to come and settle in the ministry in this place, and that said committee offer Mr. Parsons One Hundred Pound settlement, and the first year after his settlement here to offer him Sixty Pound salary, to rise two Pound each year until it come to eighty pound a year; also that after Mr. Parsons is settled in a family of his own, they will give him six Pounds annually to be paid in wood or labor, which he chooses."

March 23, 1772.—Voted "That the monies that may arise from the sale of discontinued town ways shall be appropriated to encourage a minister of the Gospel to settle in Williamsburg," etc.

Aug. 10, 1772.—A committee was chosen to "make further trial to get Mr. Parsons to settle in the ministry."

They were not successful, but July 14, 1773, Rev. Amos Butler was settled on the same salary offered to Mr. Parsons. Under the care of Mr. Butler the church made some advances, and the discipline of it with respect to a strict observance of the Sabbath was peculiarly marked. He died in the thirtieth year of his age.

June 5, 1778, the town "voted to build a meeting-house, and cover the outside by a town rate." A committee of nine were chosen "to proportion to each inhabitant of the town what material to find toward the meeting-house." "Voted that the pews be sold according to wheat at 4s. per bushel, and rye at 3s., and Indian corn at 2s. per bushel." The meeting-house, 60 feet by 45 feet, was raised the following year on the summit of Village Hill. It was dedicated in October, 1787, but does not appear to have been entirely finished until 1790.

March 13, 1780.—It was "voted to raise £1500 to be layed out in preaching." December 11.—"£3000 laid out in preaching." These sums were of course in the depreciated Continental currency. The salary of Mr. Strong, second minister, was fixed by the town at "£70, one-half to be paid in silver money" (not Continental currency), "and the other half in the produce of the earth, and to find him his firewood as long as he is our minister." "The produce of the earth" given to Mr. Strong was annually 25 bushels of wheat; 20 of rye; 33 of Indian corn; pork, 5 cwt.; butter, 55 pounds; cheese, 100 pounds; flax, 120 pounds; sheep's wool, 50 pounds.

The increase of the church in numbers was rapid. Previous to Mr. Strong's settlement 53 had been added to the original 21 members, making 74 in all. In May, 1789, the number of actual members was 199, and in March, 1794, 316. In 1789 there were added above 70 to the church. This was called, by way of eminence, the great reformation. It is said that two or three brethren had especially prayed for such a work for nearly twenty years. Mr. Strong died Jan. 1, 1803, aged seventy-four. During his pastorate of nearly twenty-two years, 239 persons united with the church by profession. Seven children, all professedly pious, survived him. One of them, Joseph, entered the ministry.

The Rev. Henry Lord, the third minister, was ordained June 20, 1804. An ordination in those days, when ministers were really settled for life, was a great occasion. It was prepared for by a solemn fast, and people came to attend it from far and near.

Mr. Strong was a veteran, his successor was a youth; but his ministry was almost equally blessed with revivals of religion, those of 1816, 1819, and 1831 being the most general.

In 1814 the church formed itself into a religious tract society, allowing others to meet and act with them, and persons were appointed in every district to "solicit and collect monies."

April 6, 1820.—It was "voted that Deacon Hubbard, Deacon Mayhew, Deacon Bodman, Capt. Nash, Willard Starks, and Rev. Henry Lord be committee to make arrangements for Sabbath-school, and superintend the same the ensuing season." This is the earliest notice the records afford of a Sabbath-school. Before that the children were called out into the aisles once a month, long rows of them, to recite the Assembly's Catechism to the minister. For a long time after Sabbath-schools were commenced they were for children only, and the principal exercise was reciting of Scripture, the catechism, and after a while of hymns. One girl became able to repeat the whole book of John.

In those days Sabbath-evening meetings were held in the school-house, which stood nearly opposite the parsonage. It was not customary for the minister to attend. One of the deacons opened the meeting, and called upon a brother deacon or leading member to lead in prayer. This brother perhaps excused himself, saying, "It isn't my turn; I prayed the last Sunday night," and desired to join with Brother So-and-so. When the proper person had been found to perform this service and the prayer was ended, a sermon would be read. Young Christians were not encouraged to take a part, but were expected to sit in silence and listen. In Nash Street similar meetings were held, but some ardent converts, not unencouraged by Mr. Lord, determined to break through the barriers of formality and custom, and speak and pray as the Spirit should give them utterance, and they effected a change.

During Mr. Lord's pastorate of thirty years, 243 persons united by profession. He was cut off by typhus fever at the age of fifty-three. Mr. Butler, Mr. Strong, and Mr. Lord were all buried in the old cemetery.

The fourth pastor was Rev. William Lusk, and his four years' pastorate was an eventful one. The parish, now distinct from the town, undertook the building of a new meeting-house. The ground was purchased in November, 1835, for $700, and the house erected the following season, at an expense of about $4500. Thus the place of worship followed the movement of population from the hill to the valley.

A revival occurred in 1837 and 1838. Adults were now first brought into the Sabbath-school, which rose in numbers to over 300. Old and young were encouraged to exercise greater activity and freedom in conference meetings. A new era seemed opening, but Mr. Lusk asked a dismission. Admissions by profession during this pastorate, 139. Salary, $600.

The Rev. David E. Goodwin ministered to this church about fifteen months, and admitted to the communion six persons. Young, devoted, and well beloved, disease cut him down, and he sleeps beside the first three.

Rev. M. G. Wheeler's ministry of three and a half years was marked by a revival and the addition of 55 persons.

Rev. S. C. Wilcox was here two years and nine months. Admitted 13 members. Salary, $650.

The pastorate of Rev. E. W. Root lasted five and a half years. Three interesting events marked the first year of his ministry,—a spiritual refreshing; the building of the parsonage, costing with the land $2300; and the dismission of 17 members, March 2, 1851, to assist in founding the Union Church, Haydenville. He admitted 30 members. Salary, paid semi-annually, $650, until 1854, when it was changed to $600 and use of parsonage.

Rev. F. T. Perkins' ministry of three and one-fourth years covered that year of revivals, 1858, in which this church fully shared. A large number of the present members united July 4th and September 5th, of that year. In 1859 the church edifice was raised up, and a vestry built beneath it. The cost of the vestry and of some repairs was $3300. Mr. Perkins welcomed to fellowship 80 persons. Salary, $750, at first, paid quarterly, and use of parsonage; afterward increased to $800.

During the next two years, Rev. James M. Phillips was acting pastor.

The Rev. E. Y. Swift's pastorate commenced June 26, 1862, and lasted six and one-fourth years, or longer than any other since Mr. Lord's.

There was another revival in 1864, and the same year Mr. Swift raised $1500 among his people for the purchase of an organ. He admitted 40 members. Salary, $800, paid quarterly, with parsonage; increased to $1000 in 1863.

Summary Statement of Pastors.—Rev. Amos Butler, ordained July 14, 1773; died Oct. 18, 1777. Rev. Joseph Strong, installed Dec. 26, 1781; died Jan. 1, 1803. Rev. Henry Lord, ordained June 20, 1804; died Nov. 22, 1834. Rev. William Lusk, installed Jan. 20, 1836; dismissed Feb. 7, 1840. Rev. David E. Goodwin, ordained Jan. 13, 1841; died May 2, 1842. Rev. Melancthon G. Wheeler, installed Oct. 18, 1842; dismissed March 1, 1846. Rev. Samuel C. Wilcox, installed Feb. 10, 1847; dismissed Nov. 14, 1849. Rev. Edward W. Root, ordained Oct. 23, 1850; dismissed May 15, 1856. Rev. Frederick T. Perkins, installed Feb. 3, 1857; dismissed May 7, 1860. Rev. James M. Phillips, acting pastor summer of 1860 to April 1, 1862. Rev. E. Y. Swift, installed June 26, 1862; dismissed Sept. 25, 1868. Rev. Wm. W. Parker, installed Feb. 24, 1869; dismissed Jan. 7, 1873. Rev. John F. Gleason, ordained Jan. 7, 1873; dismissed Dec. 14, 1875. Rev. S. O. Kendall, stated supply from February, 1876, to May, 1878. Prof. Tyler, of the Female College, supplies at the present time (March, 1879).

Record of the Deacons.—Amasa Frost, elected 1771; died Jan. 6, 1795. Joseph Carey, elected 1771; died May 30, 1803. Elisha Allis, elected June 13, 1785. Nehemiah Cleveland, elected June 13, 1785. Elisha Nash, elected May 27, 1790; died Sept. 15, 1827. Asa Ludden, elected May 27, 1790; died April 8, 1825. Samuel Graves, elected Aug. 16, 1804; died Aug. 21, 1821. Zechariah Mayhew, elected Aug. 12, 1813; died May 29, 1830. Sylvanus Hubbard, elected Dec. 16, 1813; resigned May 6, 1847. Joseph Bodman, elected May 29, 1817; died March 2, 1847. Joseph Ludden, elected Feb. 2, 1832; died May 12, 1836. Gershom Rogers, elected Oct. 4, 1832; resigned March 4, 1840. William Pomeroy, elected Nov. 23, 1838; resigned March 1, 1866. Washington Shaw, elected May 6, 1847; resigned March 2, 1851. Erastus Graves,* elected May 6, 1847. Jonathan W. Nash, elected Jan. 2, 1852. Henry Stearns, elected Sept. 2, 1852; resigned Dec. 3, 1868. William A. Hawks,* elected March 1, 1866. E. M. Johnson, elected Nov. 12, 1869; lost in the flood May 16, 1874. H. H. Miller, chosen Jan. 7, 1875; died Oct. 7, 1875. Lewis H. Porter,* chosen Jan. 6, 1876. Elnathan Graves,* chosen March 3, 1877.

Additional Items.—The first members of the church whose signatures were attached to the covenant, and may still be seen in the early book, were Thomas Nash, Thomas Warren, John Nash, Jonathan Warner and wife, Amasa Frost and wife, Joseph Cary and wife, Richard Church, Jesse Wild and wife, Elisha Nash and wife, Samuel Fairfield and wife, Josiah Dwight and wife, Joshua Warner and wife, and Hezekiah Reed,—twenty-one in all. The date of organization was July 3, 1771. The master-builder of the first meeting-house was Capt. Jonathan Warner. It had all the distinctive features of the old New England meeting-houses so often described,—square pews, high pulpit, with sounding-board over it, deacons' seat almost under the pulpit, the tall spire of one hundred and nineteen feet pointing heavenward. The first meeting-house stood on what has been known as the Leonard Strong farm, now owned by E. A. Porter. It was north-westerly from Porter's house, on the same side of the road, and nearly opposite the present house of L. H. Porter. Some traces of the foundation yet remain. The old school-house of hewn logs was a little farther north, on the other side of the road.

Present Organization (March, 1879).—Church Committee consists of the deacons, and Phineas Nash and Henry W. Hill; Church Clerk and Treasurer, W. A. Hawks; Parish Clerk, Henry W. Hill; Superintendent of Sunday-school, Henry M. Porter. Communicants, 214; congregation, about the same; attendance on Sunday-school, 125 to 150; Sunday-school library, 450 volumes. The church voted to elect deaconesses at the same meeting that they adopted the stated terms of service for deacons: Mrs. William A. Nash, Mrs. Henry H. Tilton, Mrs. John W. Woodard, and Mrs. R. Baxter Rice, now in office.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

For several years previous to 1832 preaching had been maintained by this denomination in Williamsburg. Rev. Mr. Chamberlain was here as early as 1826-27. Meetings were held in Haydenville at the button-factory. Earlier than this, the first beginnings of Methodist work for this section were at Leeds, within the town of Northampton. An early local minister was Orrin Munyan, living at Leeds. Thomas Musgrave, of Leeds, was a leading man in the work. Josiah Hayden was a local preacher, and the entire family of the Haydens were either Methodists or inclined to that denomination. The meetings were changed from Haydenville to Williamsburg village, probably just after the burning of the cotton-factory in 1832. A favorite place of early meetings at Williamsburg was at "Mother Hannum's," now a tenant-house owned by Hiram Hill; also the brick school-house, at Searsville, and the present house of Prescott Williams. Ephraim Scott and Rev. J. D. Bridge were early preachers at this point. A church was organized in 1832, but the books of the society that are now preserved give no record of the first members. The meeting-house was erected the same year, largely by the liberality of Joel and Josiah Hayden. It has been remodeled and improved one or more times, the last being the same year of the great disaster, 1874.

The church has had a varied history. During the years that the great anti-slavery excitement pervaded the churches so extensively this society became Wesleyan, probably under the lead of Rev. Orange Scott, who held a camp-meeting here near the present residence of Calvin Hill. The church, however, in a few years again became "Methodist Episcopal," and has continued so to the present time.

Early Methodist families—1830 to 1835, or about that period—were Ludo Thayer, Prescott Williams, Butler Merritt, John Williams, William Lewis, Elisha Nash, Hiram Nash, Mather Warren, Pliny Warren, James Nichols, Andrus Gillett, Willis Thayer, Mrs. Otis Hill, Edward Gere, Joseph Lewis, Mrs. Gere (now Mrs. Vining), mother of H. S. Gere, editor of the Hampshire Gazette, Stephen Meekins, and Chester Upton. Josiah Hayden was class-leader.

Other early names of either members or friends who paid to build the meeting-house and found the society may be mentioned: Pardon, Edwin, and John Bradford, Justin Hillman, Cyrus Miller, John Miller, William and Joseph Loomis, Robert Fairfield, Andrus Gillett, Henry Little, and Persis Lyon.

Ministerial Record.—D. Leslie, 1833; E. M. Beebe, 1834-35; Wm. Smith, 1836-37; George May, 1838-39; J. A. Merrill, 1840; I. Marcy, 1841; Mosely Dwight, 1842-43; F. P. Tracy, 1844-45; John H. Twombly, 1846; E. S. Potter, 1847-49; William Butler, 1850; H. M. Nichols, 1851-52; H. M. Bridge, 1853; A. S. Flagg, 1854-55; Lorenzo White, 1856-57; Mr. Eastwood, 1858. The records are lost, and the present officers do not recall the names of any minister for 1859-60. N. J. Merrill, 1861; John Peterson, 1862-63; A. Sanderson, 1864-66; W. I. Pomfret, 1867-69; J. W. Fenn, 1870-71; E. R. Thorndike, 1872-74; I. Candlin, 1875; C. H. Vinton, 1876; H. Matthews, 1877; and present pastor (March, 1879).

* Present deacons (March, 1879).

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF HAYDENVILLE.

The increase in the population of the village that followed the modern development of manufacturing interests very soon led to a movement for a church organization. Several preliminary meetings were held during the winter of 1848-49. March 19th a society was formed under legal warrant, and arrangements were made for erecting a house of worship. The building committee were Joel Hayden, R. H. Fairfield, and Spencer Root. The Longley place was purchased for a site; the building was raised May 13, 1850, and in February, 1851, the edifice was completed. It is 75 feet long by 48 wide. It has a handsome spire 150 feet in height. The cost of this was about $12,000; two-thirds of this was given by Joel Hayden; others contributed probably with equal liberality in proportion to their financial ability.

The church was organized March 4, 1851. The original members were Joel Hayden, Braddock Davol, Silas Warner, Albert D. Sanders, Thomas H. Ives, Quartus L. Dickinson, R. H. Fairfield, Washington Shaw, Elam Graves, Quartus Kingsley, John Miller, Spencer Root, Jonathan Dickinson, Elisha Tileston, Samuel S. Wells, Isabella Hayden, Harriet C. Graves, Caroline Fairfield, Jane Sanders, Relief S. Ives, Mary F. Johnson, Emily Fairfield, Patty Graves, Eunice B. Graves, Polley Kingsley, Sarah Miller, Sally Root, Lucretia Dickinson, Sabrah Tileston.

On the evening of the same day the house was dedicated. The next day, March 5th, Rev. Edward Sweet was ordained as the first pastor.

The first parish assessors were Messrs. Shaw, Sanders, and Ives.

The organization of the church was effected with great harmony, notwithstanding the people of Haydenville were nearly equally divided between those of Methodist views and those of Congregational preferences.

A Sunday-school was immediately instituted, and has been steadily maintained with a good average attendance.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Edward Sweet, ordained March 5, 1851; dismissed March 7, 1854. 2d. Rev. E. W. Cook, installed June 14, 1854; dismissed to accept a call to the church in Townsend, April 1, 1858. 3d. Rev. Cyrus Brewster, installed Aug. 18, 1858; dismissed Dec. 18, 1863. 4th. Rev. George W. Phillips, ordained September, 1864; dismissed April, 1868. 5th. Rev. M. B. Ainger, installed Dec. 31, 1868; dismissed in June, 1870. 6th. Rev. James P. Kimball, installed November, 1871; dismissed May, 1876. 7th. Stated supply, Rev. W. S. Hawks, from Oct. 26, 1876, to July, 1878, followed by other temporary supplies. 8th. Rev. Dr. Marsh, present acting pastor (1879).

Record of Deacons.—A. D. Sanders, chosen March 4, 1851, declined to serve; R. H. Fairfield, chosen March 4, 1851, declined to serve; Elam Graves, chosen in place of Sanders, and now in office; Thomas H. Ives, chosen in place of Fairfield, died in 1870; Dr. Wm. Trow, chosen in place of Ives, 1871, removed from town; Otis W. Lawrence, chosen 1877, and now in office.

CATHOLIC CHURCH OF HAYDENVILLE.

The establishment of this church was due to the large number of Catholics that came to Haydenville as operatives in the factories. They not only sought for the forms of religious worship to which they had been accustomed, but the leading citizens of the place, with wise liberality, favored the enterprise, believing that its influence would be for good over that portion of the population inclined to Catholic usages. These citizens have not seen any cause to regret their action.

The house of worship was built in 1864, at an expense of about $1200. It is a fine edifice, and occupies a handsome site, which was donated by Hon. Joel Hayden.

Father Morse was the first pastor, and to his vigorous administration—his wise and conciliatory course—the congregation are greatly indebted for the substantial church and flourishing society.

The edifice has a seating capacity of about 500 persons, and the services are largely attended.

BURIAL-PLACES.

Soon after the organization of the town the following action was taken:

Voted to purchase land at or near the southeast corner of Jesse Wild's farm he lives upon to add to the land left for a town way at the east end of said Wild's farm, enough to lay out one acre and a half in a form suitable for a burying-place.

Voted that Simeon White, Samuel Fairfield, and John Nash be a committee to lay out the land for the burying-place and to get the land cleared, fenced, and rented out, all to the best profit of the district.

That is now known as the old burial-ground, northwest of Williamsburg village. It is still in use to some extent, and is in fair preservation.

There is a burial-place on Mountain Street, dating back to early times. It is still used for occasional burials, and is fenced and cared for by the town.

Burials have seldom taken place on private lands.

Upon the farm of Levi B. Nash there were buried some members of the Green family.

The graves have no monuments with inscriptions.

One other place of private burial is mentioned, but the remains were removed.

At Williamsburg village is the new cemetery, having a fine location and ample grounds. It is on the Hill, a little farther out than the old, and upon the opposite side of the street.

HAYDENVILLE CEMETERY.

The land occupied by the cemetery was conveyed to the town by Joel and Josiah Hayden, May 2, 1853, and transferred to the incorporated association March 22, 1859. The first work was done by a committee of the town. The Haydenville Cemetery Association was formed Nov. 3, 1858. At the first meeting the following officers were chosen: Moderator, L. K. Baker; Clerk and Treasurer, Albert D. Sanders; Directors, Joel Hayden, Sereno Kingsley, B. S. Johnson. The first person buried in the grounds was Josiah Hayden, father of Joel and Josiah, who died July 26, 1847, aged seventy-nine.

Present Officers.—Clerk and Treasurer, Joel Hayden; Directors, Sereno Kingsley, B. S. Johnson.

B. S. Johnson has been superintendent from the formation of the association to the present time.

SOCIETIES, BANKS, Etc.

A Masonic lodge has existed for some years in Haydenville. Before the disaster of 1874 it had a fine lodge-room over the savings-bank in the extension of the brass-factory. Since then and now it has a lodge-room in the second story of Miller's Block.

A YOUNG MEN'S INSTITUTE was organized in January, 1860, as follows: President, Albert D. Sanders; Vice-Presidents, Daniel F. Morton, Chauncey Rice; Secretary, Britton Richardson; Treasurer, Joel Hayden, Jr.; Directors, Stephen Crosby, L. K. Baker, M. P. Burley, Calvin Fisher, Wm. O'Brien, Philip Ryan. The objects of the institute were the moral and intellectual culture of the members. The members above sixteen years of age paid $2 per annum, those under sixteen $1. It numbered at one time fifty or more members, and had a career of usefulness for some years.

THE HAYDENVILLE CORNET BAND

was organized in 1857, under the lead of A. V. Shannon. It was composed of sixteen members. E. D. Ingraham succeeded Mr. Shannon as leader, and remained in that position two and a half years, being succeeded in 1856 by Thomas Gill, from Worcester. Charles Horford, Wm. O'Brien, and James H. Chamberlain held official positions for many years. The band is in great favor on public occasions, and its services are called for at celebrations and at political gatherings.

THE HAYDENVILLE SAVINGS-BANK was incorporated March 17, 1869. An organization under the charter was effected in December, 1870, and business was commenced Jan. 2, 1871. The first officers were Lieut.-Gov. Joel Hayden, President; Richmond Kingman, Wm. M. Trow, Wm. Skinner, Joel Hayden, Jr., Henry L. James, Vice-Presidents; Stephen M. Crosby, Secretary; B. S. Johnson, Treas.

In the disaster of 1874, when the building in which it was located was destroyed, the bank-safe was carried down stream some thirty rods, and remained in the mud and water three days. The contents were practically uninjured. After drying and cleaning them of mud the documents were legible and the securities in good order. The actual loss to the bank by the flood was less than $100.

WILLIAMSBURG LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

was organized Dec. 21, 1876, each member paying an admission fee of $2, and annual dues $1. Gifts have been received as follows: E. C. Bodman, of Toledo, $250; Luther James, Ann Arbor, $200; Mrs. Samuel Williston, Easthampton, $100. The present board of directors are L. D. James, President; James M. Foster, Vice-President; John W. Hill, Secretary; Wm. A. Hawks, Librarian and Treasurer; Charles Short, Mrs. L. D. James, Miss Minnie Bodman. Number of volumes, 100 of history; 79 of biography; 55 of travel; 49 of science and art; 222 fiction; 32 poetry and the drama; 52 miscellaneous, with a collection of public documents. It is an enterprise of great merit.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

Several of these appear in the general narrative, and need no further description. The site of the first meeting-house, with all of its sacred associations, and the story of the Revolutionary war meeting held there, when the messenger with the news of Burgoyne's advancing forces burst in upon the morning sermon, forms a point worthy of note. The location of John Miller's first log cabin, where he settled all alone in the forest, daring all the risks of savage attack and welcoming the howl of wild animals, will always have a special interest to the student of pioneer life. The Delevan place, Capt. Fairfield's ancient tavern, and the place of the old historic oak must enter into this catalogue; and many other places with similar associations will occur to those who read the annals of the town. Finally, the broken reservoir and the scarred channel below will, for generations to come, be pointed out as the scene of the most terrific disaster of modern times.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The occupation of early times was chiefly agriculture. The extensive and valuable forests gave rise to a large amount of wood and lumber business. Charcoal was burned to some extent for market. All the crops usual to these hill towns were raised. The soil was productive, and yielded fair returns for the labor of the pioneers. The mountain slopes afforded excellent pasturage for the fattening of beef and the success of the dairy. In later times, of course, the mills and factories absorbed general attention. When the business of manufacturing prospered, the farmers prospered; mechanics had abundant employment, and merchants made quick and profitable sales. When manufactures diminished, all other departments of business were embarrassed. Hence the disaster of 1874 was a blow to all. In the place of wealth there came to many poverty. In the place of business activity came stagnation, paralysis. In the place of abundant facilities, demolished factories, ruined machinery, and crippled resources. The danger of living near the banks of the streams, together with the hard times, reduced the value of homesteads. There were many to sell and few to buy. With a third of the business and wealth of the town swept away, and much of it irrecoverably lost, merchants could no longer make extensive sales. Men of abundant means who seemed to stand the first shock of the disaster proved to be more embarrassed than was expected, and some went down in the storm of commercial distress that followed the flood.

For five weary years Williamsburg has not only mourned over the dead, over pleasant homes desolated and destroyed, but over the ruins of business life. Yet heart and hope remain. The courage of brave men to face business disaster has been sorely tested. There is a native strength of character, a heroic firmness, that comes out clearly in this time of trouble. A portion of the factories were rebuilt soon after the flood. With the revival of business throughout the country there will no doubt come to Williamsburg a reasonable share; and though many years must elapse before the wealth of former times will again exist in this valley, yet a fair degree of success will no doubt reward the patience and perseverance of those who abide by the old homesteads, walk in the old ways, and practice the old virtues of the fathers,—honesty, industry, economy.

Among other varied productions of agriculture, it ought to be noted that this town produces large quantities of apples now, as it did in former years. One of the finest orchards in Massachusetts is that of Prescott Williams. He has 20 acres of young, thrifty trees, constituting an orchard that resembles those of the best fruit-growing districts in Western New York.

MILLS, FACTORIES, ETC.

Haydenville.—The earliest improvement of the water-privilege at the present site of Haydenville was the erection of a saw-mill in 1785, by Samuel Fairfield and John Miller, upon the place where the pen-factory afterward stood. The old saw-mill was still standing there in 1824, but was soon after removed.

A grist-mill, the first and only one ever operated in Haydenville, was erected about 1800, by Lieut. Joshua Thayer, and stood near the old Cornelius Tileston place. Soon after this mill was built, a freshet swept away the dam and turned the mill partly over.

The current of the river was turned into the highway, and completely took possession of it as far down as the dugway hill. A large hole was made in the road, in front of the mill, and the public travel was compelled to pass around it for several years. The hole was finally filled, but it was distinguishable for many years. The dam was never rebuilt; all traces of the mill were swept away, and thus ended the brief history of the grist-mill of Haydenville.

In 1837, Esdras F. Fairfield and Cyrus Miller built a saw-mill nearly opposite the thread-factory of later years. Its water-power was lost by the construction of the dam for the cotton-factory, and the mill itself was burned in 1847.

The foundry was probably established as early as 1824. David Hyde, George W. Holmes, Wm. Lewis, Lyman Litchfield, Josiah Hayden, and John A. Root were proprietors at various times. The latter commenced about 1839, in the building used by his predecessors, where the pen-factory of later years stood. In 1844 he erected the large buildings east of the hotel, and the business afterward passed to Boland & Graves, who continued it for many years.

The business was not resumed after the flood. The brass business was carried on there for a time. The business was run by the Hayden Foundry Company for several years.

The erection of the first mill for manufacturing purposes in Haydenville was commenced in 1809, by Daniel and David Hayden (uncles of Joel and Josiah), Seth Thompson, and Melitier Everett, of Foxboro'. This mill was of wood, two stories high and 31 feet square. The building stood on the site of the present brass-works. The proprietors put in 128 spindles, and commenced manufacturing cotton yarn. The mill was run from 1812 to 1818. At the time the mill was opened cotton yarn was selling at one dollar a pound for No. 16. During the war with Great Britain the business was very flourishing, but on the conclusion of peace it gradually failed, and was closed. From 1818 to 1822 the building stood unused. At the latter date Joel Hayden and James Congdon purchased the property, rebuilt the dam, made a new canal, repaired the building, and commenced the manufacture of power-loom for weaving broadcloth. They continued that business until 1828. The firm-name was Congdon & Hayden.

In 1825, Guy Trumbull was admitted, and the style of the firm became Congdon, Hayden & Co. Mr. Congdon withdrew in 1827. Josiah Hayden, Jr., came into the partnership, and the name was changed to Hayden, Trumbull & Co. The mill was enlarged in 1825 to twice its original size, and various kinds of machinery were manufactured. Mr. Trumbull died in 1828. In 1831, Joel and Josiah Hayden, who now constituted the firm, commenced the manufacture of japanned buttons, tin buttons, button-molds, and metal-shanked lasting buttons, having previously manufactured door-locks and harness-trimmings. Early on Sunday morning, Nov. 4, 1832, the mill was entirely destroyed by fire. It was insured for $2500. In the spring of 1833 the work of rebuilding was commenced, and the building then erected was the main portion of the one that was destroyed in the disaster of 1874. It was 64 by 32 feet, and three stories in height. Two wings, two stories high, were afterward added, making the length 104 feet in all. On opening the new factory the Messrs. Hayden separated their business, both continuing. The making of machinery was given up, and the button business continued.

Joel Hayden commenced experimenting with pruned or lasting buttons by machinery, the same buttons that were afterward described as "flexible-shanked lasting buttons." The first of these buttons made in this country were made at this factory. The flexible buttons took the place of the sewed buttons then made by Mr. Williston, of Easthampton, and Messrs. Hayden and Williston entered into a joint arrangement for the manufacture of these buttons. They employed about 200 hands, mostly females. In 1848, Mr. Williston bought out Mr. Hayden's interest and removed the business to Easthampton.

In August, 1846, Joel Hayden and A. D. Sanders commenced erecting a stone dam near the old saw-mill dam, about a third of a mile below the one at the button-factory, and in 1847 erected the cotton-factory. This mill was fitted up with 4000 spindles,—the building being 132 feet long, 46 wide, and 4 stories in height. Its capacity was equal to 18,000 to 20,000 yards of sheeting per week. Seventy or eighty hands were employed. A. D. Sanders was the first general manager, and later Stephen M. Crosby became superintendent. In 1857 the partnership of Hayden & Sanders was superseded by an incorporated association, known as the Hayden Manufacturing Company. The entire stock was, however, held by the Haydens and by Sanders. The goods of this mill immediately attained a high rank in the market. The same mill is still in operation. The dam was destroyed and the buildings somewhat damaged, but not destroyed, in 1874. In 1858 the saw-mill erected by Messrs. Hayden & Sanders was converted into a factory for the manufacture of glazed thread. This business passed to the Hayden Manufacturing Company, and Britton Richardson was the superintendent of that department. This was discontinued after a few years; building afterward used for the manufacture of tobacco.

After the button business was removed, in 1848, locks and other varieties of hardware goods were made by Hayden & Sanders, and in January, 1851, Hayden & Sanders commenced the manufacture of plumbers' goods on a small scale, occupying the button-factory, which had stood unused after the removal of the button business. One hundred hands were soon employed. Besides Hayden & Sanders, Sereno Kingsley and Edward W. Gere were members of the firm, under the name of Hayden, Sanders & Co. Mr. Gere was at the head of the New York house that was established in connection with the business. The men engaged in it were all practically fitted by their previous training and experience to successfully carry on the business. This afterward was better known as Hayden, Gere & Co.'s Brass-Works. After the flood the buildings were replaced, and the business is still carried on, about 200 hands being employed.

In 1833, on the erection of the brick building, Josiah Hayden, as already stated, commenced business alone, manufacturing japanned buttons and button-molds, using a part of this factory, and employing 8 to 12 hands. He continued this branch of business for sixteen years, or until 1849. Ten years before, he began to make steel pens with Andrew Adams, of Middletown, Conn., as foreman. He returned to Connecticut after three years' service, and Mr. Burke became foreman. In 1845, Mr. Hayden sold out his interest in this business to Williston and William E. Thayer, who removed the manufacture to Williamsburg village.

In the autumn of 1845, Josiah Hayden associated with himself Rollin Dawson, of Syracuse, N. Y., and commenced the manufacture of gold pens, and continued the business until March, 1848. Dawson, Warren & Hyde succeeded to the business, to which they afterward added the manufacture of fine jewelry. Mr. Warren conducted the business in New York.

In 1844, Josiah Hayden began to manufacture horn buttons, erecting for that purpose the building afterward known as the pen-factory. Mr. Hayden visited Europe to acquire information on this business, and brought back with him a number of skilled operatives,—among them A. P. Critchlow, John Tonnichliff, and Joseph B. Whitehouse (afterward well known in these manufacturing villages). The business was not, however, very remunerative. Mr. Hayden removed to South Boston, and his business operations were not resumed in Haydenville.

In April, 1846, William I. Johnson commenced manufacturing machinery in the old foundry building, and in November of that year formed a copartnership with Charles B. Johnson, under the firm-name W. I. Johnson & Co. In January, 1848, Mr. C. B. Johnson retired on account of failing health. W. I. Johnson conducted the business alone for a few months, and then relinquished it to John A. Root, the proprietor of the foundry. This passed into the hands of Boland & Graves.

Skinnerville.—The foundation of that village, of which scarcely anything now remains except the site,—and that torn to pieces by the great flood,—was begun in 1832, by Joseph I. Lewis and J. J. Goodell. They built a small factory and commenced the manufacture of bits and stocks. Mr. Goodell remained about two years, and after his removal Mr. Lewis made britannia spoons, harness-trimmings, and faucets. In 1842 he moved to Sing Sing, N. Y. He was succeeded by the partnership of Simeon P. Graves and Charles Hayden. In 1845 the business passed to Col. Reed, who proceeded to manufacture tacks; Mr. Josiah Hayden was also interested in the enterprise. Samuel S. Wells was the next proprietor, taking possession in 1851. In 1853 he sold out the property to Mr. Wm. Skinner, of Northampton, and removed to South Boston. Mr. Skinner, taking possession in March, 1854, entered with great energy upon the manufacture of sewing-silks and twists. His success soon required increased facilities. In 1857 he erected a factory 80 feet long and 30 wide and three stories high. His business steadily increased. His silks were noted for their excellence, and found a quick demand in market. The thrift and energy displayed by Mr. Skinner soon created a neat village, which clustered around the factory where the numerous operatives lived. The business was continued, greater facilities were secured, more hands employed, and the place appropriately became known as Skinnerville. His works were called the Unquomunk Mills. This business continued in active operation down to May 16, 1874. The great flood of that morning destroyed the mills and the village. Mr. Skinner, after some hesitation, decided not to rebuild either upon that site or anywhere upon Mill River. This was a matter of serious regret to the citizens of Williamsburg, and Mr. Skinner was probably loath to leave the place associated with nearly eighteen years of his active life. But business considerations prevailed. He located at Holyoke, and Skinnerville exists only upon the maps published before 1874.

Water-Power improved in the Town generally.—On Beaver Brook, in the southeast part of the town, was the earliest saw-mill erected in Williamsburg, and probably the first improvement of a water-privilege for any purpose. It stood a short distance above the Mather Warren saw-mill of later years, and was erected, it is supposed, in 1770. It is further stated of it that it was once burnt by the Indians, and also that lumber for the meeting-house in Hatfield was sawed there. The date given does not accord with either of these incidents. Indians are not generally understood to have done any work of destruction here as late as 1770, and there was no meeting-house built in Hatfield between 1750 and 1849. The statement might, however, apply to lumber for repairs that were made at various times. On the whole, the date of the erection of the mill is very "clearly" in doubt. The Mather Warren mill below was built in 1822. This was abandoned some years since.

On Beaver Brook also was a wood-turning establishment, sometimes locally called the "fiddle-shop." It was near the present place of Francis Loomis.

On Joe Wright's Brook was an early saw-mill, owned by the Warrens (Seth and Aaron). This dated back probably to the first settlement of the town. On the same site was afterward a saw-mill, and also a "gimlet-mill," so called. The buildings are still standing, but no business is carried on there.

In the south part of the town, on Unquomunk Brook, was a saw-mill in early times. It was built near the present house of Almon Warner, and was established by his father.

Farther north, on Meekins' Brook, was an early grist-mill, near the present place of Christopher Meekins and M. Guilford. The dam was some distance above, and the water was brought to the mill in a ditch. It is the opinion of Dr. Meekins that this was built as early as 1770, which is the same date mentioned above for the saw-mill on Beaver Brook. This grist-mill was tended by Amasa Graves.

On the main stream of Mill River, above Williamsburg village, was a saw-mill in early times, a half-mile or more below the reservoir. This was so old an affair as to be nearly forgotten by many citizens. Some of the foundation timbers were uncovered by the great flood of 1874.

On the northwestern branch, uniting somewhat south of the reservoir, was another saw-mill, known as Merritt's; this was abandoned twenty years ago or more. On the main stream, above Williamsburg village a mile or so, was a saw-mill, built by Leonard Dwight. It was at the place where Robert Dorsey now has a quarry. At the west side of the town, on Mill Brook, flowing down from Goshen, were the mills of Asa White,—wood-turning shops. These were very near the town line. At the place now called Searsville was a saw-mill as early as 1810, run by Eleazer Hyde for several years.

The pioneer at this point was Rufus Hyde, who was a blacksmith, and came to Williamsburg in 1774. He worked at his trade in an ordinary shop for several years. In 1795 he built a larger shop, with a trip-hammer. This was continued for nearly or quite forty years by Mr. Hyde, and by his sons succeeding him. The Hydies were "skilled in all manner" of iron-work; axes, scythes, and other tools were made here, and went far and wide through the country. The axe-making works of the Hannums were on the hill back from the stream.

Abell's clothing-works were established quite early at this place, followed by a woolen-mill on a large scale.

Stark's cotton-mill was also located at Searsville. There were also wood-turning works.

When the earlier woolen-mill went down it was rebuilt by Nathaniel Sears. Between Searsville and Williamsburg was a grist-mill of later date.

The old tannery at Williamsburg was established by Deacon Joseph Bodman, probably about 1820. He carried it on during his life, and his son, Erastus Bodman, succeeded him for a time. After him there was a firm, Graves & Lamb, who ran it for a time. The buildings had been appropriated to manufacturing purposes before the flood of 1874. Since that event the buildings have stood unused.

At Williamsburg, Hill's grist-mill was erected pretty early, near the bridge at Hiram Hill's present place. The mill was built by his grandfather. It stood on the west side of the stream. There was a saw-mill upon the east side, opposite.

Edmund Taylor had a grist-mill, probably from 1820 to 1830, on Mill Brook, at or near the site of H. G. Hill's wood-turning works.

William Wing had a fulling-mill at Searsville in the early part of this century.

There was also a clothier-shop at Williamsburg village, at the same water-power that is now employed by Woodward & Lyman for making buttons. The cloth-dressing was by Abisha Stearns.

Nearly opposite Carter's store, south side of the bridge, was Alfred Bodman's clothier establishment.

Ambrose Stone, from Goshen, came to Williamsburg and established a woolen-factory, on a small scale at first, on the site of the present James Factory. After a few years the property passed to Lewis Bodman and W. S. Pierce. At the death of Mr. Pierce it was sold to E. L. James, and has been known as the "James Factory" ever since. It is still in operation.

Gross Williams had a noted cider-mill, at the site of Woodward & Lyman's works. A distillery was connected with it. Williams also had potash-works near where Royal Rice now lives.

Henry James, with the same power, ran plane-making machinery until he was burned out.

Lewis Bodman had a woolen-yarn factory at Searsville for many years.

At the present time (1879) there is in operation at Williamsburg a grist-mill with a single run of stones, operated by H. G. Hill, and doing a good business. There is a saw-mill above toward Searsville, operated by the Bradford Brothers.

The ten leading articles of farm production for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values as stated:

Butter, $13,320; beef, $17,832; hay, $29,127; manure, $7775; potatoes, $5063; tobacco, $5540; milk, $4784; pork, $3860; firewood, $8379; apples, $2350.

THE MILL RIVER DISASTER OF 1874.

A notice of this fearful event must necessarily have a place in these sketches, difficult as it is to secure accuracy of statement in a case where the ruin was so quickly wrought and estimates of time by eye-witnesses differ so much.

THE RESERVOIR.

This was situated on the east branch of Mill River, about three miles from the village of Williamsburg, and in the north-eastern part of the town. The stream which supplied it has its rise only a short distance above. At the village of Williamsburg this east branch unites with the west branch, and forms Mill River proper, which flows through Haydenville and Florence, and empties into the Connecticut at Northampton.

The reservoir was constructed in 1865, and finished the middle of December, though it was not filled until the following spring.

The contractors were Emory B. Wells, of Northampton, and Joel Bassett, of Easthampton. The price paid them was $35,000. The stipulations in substance required the dam to be a stone wall resting on solid rock or hard pan 8 feet wide at the bottom, and sloping so as to be 2 feet in width at the top. It was to be 42 feet in height above the bed of the stream. This wall was to be laid in the best known cement, so that, as the projectors claimed, it would be like a single shaft of granite. This wall was to be enveloped by a mass of earth rising 2 feet higher than the wall and covering it, as a protection from frost. This mass of earth was to be 16 feet or more in width on the top. From the top the earth was to slope downward on the upper side at an angle of 30 degrees; on the lower side at an angle of 45 degrees. This was to give an entire thickness at the bottom of 120 feet; the greater mass of which was to be on the upper side of the stone wall. For regulating the flow of water there was to be an iron tube 2 feet in diameter, inclosed in masonry, extending through the dam, nearly in the centre and projecting a few feet beyond the earthen wall above and below; the tube to be opened and closed by gates. The dam was completed. The public generally gave little attention to the work while it was in progress. No suspicion of any real danger seems to have arisen, or, if there did, no public expression was given to the fear.

It was supposed that the clear-headed capitalists who had made this valley to resound with the busy hum of industry, who had built such a magnificent chain of mills and factories, thoroughly understood their own business. The people saw only a gigantic enterprise of capital, which would make the power that gave life to their villages only more permanent, and their own means of prosperity only more certain.

The dam was high enough to raise a pond covering 111 acres, and averaging 24 feet in depth. The water never rose quite to the crest of the dam, being kept about two feet below by a waste-weir.

Thus was this vast volume of water gathered as a magazine of power above the villages of the valley; containing, when full, the enormous amount of 116,043,840 cubic feet.

The reservoir was placed in charge of a watchman, who was paid $200 a year to open and shut the gates and keep an oversight of the works. No system of signaling down the valley was provided. The watchman was George Cheney, who lived in a small house near by. Mr. O. G. Spellman was Mr. Cheney's superior officer, having the general oversight of the reservoir, and resided at Williamsburg village. The reservoir was built and owned by the associated mill proprietors, under the name of "The Mill River and Williamsburg Reservoir Company."

THE SITUATION.

The reservoir had been in use eight years. Holding ready such a volume of water, the mills had been enabled to run steadily through the dry season without interruption or any great diminution of power. Along the river below were the villages of Williamsburg, Skinnerville, Haydenville, Leeds, Florence, and Northampton. At all these there were many dwelling-houses standing near the river. In a mountainous region freshets were of course expected, but previous to the reservoir system the danger had never been sufficient to deter the people from building convenient to the mills or upon the pleasant meadows that lay along the stream. To seek the high ground for their homes had never seemed necessary. Little loss of life had ever occurred in New England by freshets; damage to property was to be endured as one of the incidental expenses in carrying on business along these rapid streams.

Besides the dwellings, there were the factories that had created as it were three of these villages and enriched them all.

At Williamsburg, Skinnerville, Haydenville, were the business enterprises mentioned elsewhere. For the mills at Leeds and Florence reference is made to the history of Northampton.

Thus in the month of May, 1874, there was standing all along this valley a costly array of mills, factories, shops, offices, and banks. Nearly all were in operation. The financial crash of the previous year, while it had diminished the amount of business, had not wrought the ruin it afterward caused in closed mills, silent factories, and paralyzed trade. Especially had its iron pressure not been severe in this valley, full of wealth, energy, and activity. This was the situation May 15, 1874. The stream was low; families retired to rest with no thought of impending danger; mill-owners, bankers, capitalists were engrossed in their schemes for the future; all was peace, prosperity, comfort, and domestic happiness. The morning of the 16th dawned,—the fatal day had come.

THE ALARM.

The reservoir was full. George Cheney was at his post of duty. It was his work to inspect the dam every morning. That morning about six o'clock he looked over the condition of affairs, and found them satisfactory. The gate was closed, as it had been for several days. The water was flowing over the waste-weir at the west end. He returned to the house, and the family sat down to breakfast. As they were finishing the meal a great noise was heard, and Cheney's father, who was standing by the window, exclaimed, "For God's sake, George, look there!" About 40 feet in length of the earthy portion of the dam upon the lower side beyond the gate was giving out, shooting down stream. Cheney took in the situation at a glance. Instantly he dashed down the bank and opened the gate full width, hoping to relieve the immense pressure. Pausing an instant, he saw portions of the exposed wall falling and streams of water forcing their way through. He was convinced the whole would give way soon. Hurrying to the barn, he threw a bridle upon his horse, and, springing upon the unsaddled animal, he began that wild ride which has passed into history. Dashing along the road that skirted the bank of the stream, and directly in the track of the coming flood, but fifteen minutes are said to have elapsed when he had passed over the three miles and reined up at the house of Mr. Spellman. Cheney said to him, "The reservoir is going." Spellman, who had seen it the night before and considered it safe, could not believe the frightened messenger, and replied, "No; it can't be possible." A few minutes here lost by indecision were full of peril; but, soon convinced that the danger was real, he sent Cheney to Belcher's for a fresh horse to ride down and give the alarm. Collins Graves, on his morning ride delivering milk, saw Cheney and Belcher, heard the fragmentary story the former was telling, and replied, "If the dam is breaking, the folks below must know it," and drove out for Haydenville. The Williamsburg bells were rung at a quarter before eight o'clock. About fifteen minutes, it is supposed, elapsed between the time Cheney reached Spellman's and the time when Graves started.

Graves made directly for the manufactories, supposing others would easily hear the warning, but the operatives would be prevented by the noise of the machinery. At Skinnerville he was but a short time ahead of the flood, though he himself was not aware of that fact. At Haydenville there was less time, but it sufficed to save many lives that must have otherwise perished. Here, Myron Day, seated in a light wagon, catching the word from Collins Graves or others, and seeing the flood itself above the brass-works, started on the instant for Leeds. Lashing his horse into a foam, he barely kept ahead of the seething waves, until, dashing into the defile

Cyrus Miller

CYRUS MILLER is a grandson of John Miller, the first settler of Williamsburg. The history of the latter is very fully given in connection with the general sketch of the town. John Miller had three sons, Stephen, Cyrus, John, and one daughter, Mrs. Asa Wright, of Northampton.

This early pioneer lived for a year or two in the log house first erected by him, and then built a larger one. In the year 1735 he erected the house that until recently stood upon the old farm, and this is said to have been the first frame house in town. John Miller died Sept. 7, 1792, aged eighty years. His wife, Martha, died Nov. 24, 1805, aged eighty-seven years. Their son Cyrus succeeded them on the old farm, and died June 17, 1825, aged sixty-eight years. He married, in 1781, Sarah Phinney, who survived him many years, and died March 24, 1859, at the age of ninety-eight years and four months.

Her father, Isaac Phinney, was from Cape Cod. He first removed to Hardwick, and then to Williamsburg, in 1772. He bought a tract of land east of the present church at Haydenville, containing sixty acres, and gave in exchange for it a side-saddle.

The children of Cyrus Miller, Sr., were twelve in number, six boys and six girls, four of whom are now living: Cyrus (the subject of this sketch), aged eighty-two; John, aged seventy-nine; Mrs. Betsey Fairfield (a notice of whom appears in the general history), aged ninety-four; and Mrs. Sarah Graves, of Sunderland, aged ninety-two; their united ages being three hundred and forty-seven years.

Mrs. Sarah Miller, wife of Cyrus, Sr., was thirteen years old at the time of the famous Boston Tea-Party, Dec. 16, 1773, having been born the same year that the French power upon this continent was annihilated by the fall of Quebec.

She united with the church of Williamsburg when Rev. Joseph Strong was pastor, and on the formation of the Haydenville Church, in 1851, she united with that, at the age of ninety-one.

Cyrus Miller, the younger, was educated in the common schools of his native town, attending at Williamsburg, two miles distant. He has passed a long and useful life; a man of strong, practical common sense, of excellent judgment, a safe counselor, and a reliable friend. He married, first, Harriet Kingman Hannum, and second, Philena Ford, who had one son, Galusha F., at the time of her marriage with Mr. Miller. The children of Mr. Miller by his second wife were Edwin F., Arthur T., and Lewis C.

Cyrus Miller's business has been that of farming, having through life tilled the fields of his ancestors. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and afterward a Republican, but has never been willing to share in the excitements of political life. He was a Methodist in his religious sentiments, and assisted liberally in establishing and sustaining the Methodist Church of Williamsburg.

At the formation of the Congregational Church of Haydenville, which was very much of a union non-sectarian organization, he united with that, and has been a useful, consistent member to the present time.

Mr. Miller was a severe sufferer by the flood of May 16, 1874. The water, coming with mighty force and breast high, poured into the house in which he lived, the family barely escaping with their lives by fleeing to the high grounds.

Mr. Miller is now passing a serene old age, surrounded by his family and friends, and esteemed by the community in which he has lived from his childhood.

Daniel Collins

DR. DANIEL COLLINS, a son of Rev. Daniel Collins, a Congregational clergyman, of Lanesboro', was born in that place, Oct. 2, 1780; graduated at Williams College, in the class of 1800, and settled in Williamsburg, in 1804, for the practice of medicine. For forty years he was the principal physician in the place, and was constantly occupied in a large and laborious practice. His business was not limited to this town, but a large share of it was done in the neighboring counties. As a physician, Dr. Collins occupied a commanding position. He was skillful in the diagnosis of disease, and this was peculiarly his forte. He was a man of excellent judgment, and in the practice of his profession always acted promptly and energetically in accordance with his own convictions. He was a man of liberal feelings, whose breast was always open to the relief of suffering and want, and whose generosity, though unostentatious, knew no reserve. Dr. Collins, in his younger days, had in charge a large number of young men who were in the pursuit of a classical or scientific education. At his death, in November, 1857, he bequeathed to the town the sum of $12,000 for the support of schools.

He was never married, and left the remainder of his property, about $1200, to various benevolent societies. Dr. Collins was an earnest and active politician; at first a Federalist, then joining and leading the anti-Masonic party, and in his later years an unflinching Democrat. The latter party, under his leadership, increased largely in point of numbers. He always refused political distinction, and at one time, when supported for the Legislature, declined in favor of Dr. Meekins. Some peculiarities further illustrative of his character may be of interest. In personal bearing, Dr. Collins was reserved and dignified; in form, tall and slim. His language was given with scrupulous regard to grammatical accuracy. He seldom attended church, save in the early years of his practice, but was always present at the funerals of his old friends and patrons.

In business affairs he was ever reliable. His word was regarded as good as his note. He paid his indebtedness with remarkable punctuality, and with strict regard to justice. It was a common thing for him to pay more than was demanded of him. He would often say, in his emphatic tone, "That isn't enough,—you can't live so."

These generous qualities gave him great influence with all classes, and over some minds he exercised almost complete sway. He always responded promptly to the call of his patients, and his singular appearance as he rode along on horseback—always at a moderate gait, however urgent the demand—will long be remembered. No man who ever lived in the town was capable of using more severe and cutting sarcasm than

Dr. Collins, but underneath a rough and sometimes repulsive exterior beat a warm and generous heart.

The beautiful marble monument erected over his grave bears the following inscription: "Daniel Collins, M.D., born in Lanesboro', Oct. 2, 1780; located in Williamsburg in 1804; was the principal physician in the town for forty years. Died Nov. 6, 1857, aged seventy-seven years. Punctuality, activity, energy, and fidelity in the discharge of his duties marked his character."

"The brittle thread of life is broken,
The body lies in its kindred dust;
The spirit dwells with God."

The Rev. Mr. Perkins, pastor of the Congregational Church, delivered an eloquent discourse on the day of his funeral, from which the following paragraph is extracted:

"You now part with one who has been with you from his early manhood—for the period of fifty years; one, as I judge, naturally of a noble nature, keen perceptions, kind feelings; however affected by his single life, or unfavorably manifested in sudden expressions, still kind, as many a house of sickness and heart of sorrow has testified, and as a loving, feeble, long-bedridden sister has often borne witness, in grateful acknowledgments, for pecuniary aid. A man independent in his purposes and judgments; far as the east from west from cringing subservency and fawning sycophancy; quick in thought and expression, able to see through men at a glance; hence tossing them into the scales as readily as a drug for weight, and out again as unhesitatingly; of strictest integrity, that made him impatient of all unfairness; with a high sense of honor that flashed and burned at wrong, no matter against whom committed, himself or a stranger. A man with a high idea of what a man should be, and with feelings outraged by immorality, which burst forth in language not justified. A man with traits nobler, if sharper, than common."

"You part not only with an old citizen, but with an old family physician. The full measure of this in the case of one who has been your physician more than half a century, no language can express. In how many touching scenes has he shared! By how many tender sympathies has he been connected with your families! His feet have pressed every inch of your streets. He made every object a witness to his professional faithfulness, in season and out of season. All your homes have been familiar with his footsteps. Your doors have gladly opened at his coming. Your families have experienced his tender care and warm sympathies. To a great congregation now gone he has ministered. You do well to remember him kindly, and to bury his faults willingly."

near Leeds, a glance backward showed the torrent just above. Shouting the alarm with all his might, he escaped by turning sharply up the hill to the left,—the rider, the warning, the flood, all reaching the doomed village of Leeds at nearly the same time. On first entering Haydenville, Graves gave notice at the brass-works, and then rode to Hart's barber-shop and to Elam Graves' store, then turned around to ride back, not knowing even yet how fearful was the coming danger. Entering the dugway northward, he met Jerome Hillman riding down from Skinnerville, who shouted, "Turn around! the reservoir is right here." The action of these three men—Cheney, Graves, and Day—saved many lives, though Day more fully than the others understood the coming peril, and appreciated its rapidity and its destructiveness. He rode knowing it was just behind him, for he had seen it.

As in all similar cases, it is easy to see afterward what might have been done. Had Cheney burst into the streets of Williamsburg with a loud cry of alarm, and not consulted Spellman, ten minutes—perhaps fifteen—would have been saved. Had Spellman, himself, really felt the truth of Cheney's words, quicker movements would have followed. If Graves had time to ride into Haydenville, give an alarm, call at two places, try to ride back, then turn around and still alarm others, it seems as if there was time for all to have escaped in that village, had the alarm first brought been caught up and given with a loud cry on the instant. Yet honor is justly due to these men who made the wild valley ride, for their services in saving life. Their names have gone into poetry and history with the long list of men, in all climes and ages, who have risked their lives to save others.

The cry given by them was caught up, and scores of brave men performed deeds of heroism,—in many cases dying in the attempt to save their families or their neighbors.

Jerome Hillman, above alluded to, had ridden from Skinnerville to Haydenville for the morning's mail, and started home, when he saw the flood coming, and was obliged to turn and go back to Haydenville, meeting Collins Graves, as stated. His own wife had perished as the wave rolled over Skinnerville.

Two other names should at least be added to the number of those who carried the fearful news of the coming flood. Robert P. Loud, living in sight of the reservoir, happening to step to his door, saw the dam when it gave way. Instantly comprehending the danger, he started on a run for Williamsburg. He made the two and a half miles' distance in an incredibly short space of time. On foot, panting, almost breathless, he urged some other person, at one point, to go the rest of the way; the other not believing in the necessity, Loud rallied again, and ran on. He was just in time; hurried down the street to Adams' saw-mill; could not make Mr. Tilton, who was at work there, hear, but threw a stick at him, and pointed up stream.

It is a question whether it was not Loud that really started whatever public cry there was at Williamsburg. All the descriptions written, and all that can now be told by eye-witnesses, indicate that the coming of Cheney, the talk at Spellman's, the getting of a horse at Belcher's, and the starting off of Graves, was all a sort of a silent affair,—no public outcry until Loud's alarm was emphasized by the sight of the flood itself. Loud was seriously injured by his exhausting run. There is still another link in the transmission of the alarm. Thomas Ryan worked in the Haydenville mill. His family lived just below Williamsburg. One of his sons was at Williamsburg, and heard the talk between Belcher and Cheney. The boy had an old horse, but he drove out at once; alarmed his mother, so that the family escaped. His mother sent him on to Haydenville to tell his father. He rode down, following Graves, a few minutes later. He was with Hillman when Graves met the latter, and rode into Haydenville with them. He went to the mill and told his father. It helped confirm the news brought by the others. From the testimony, it appears there was not much public outcry until Graves entered the village a second time with Jerome Hillman. It was then that the shout arose, "The reservoir is right here!"

Myron Day fully understood the danger, and is said to have shouted all along the road to Leeds. Thus was the alarm given from the reservoir above to the villages below.

THE FLOOD.

Not many minutes had passed after George Cheney started before the dam began to crumble more and more; great masses of earth slipped away from before the wall. The wall itself fell away faster and faster, and soon, with a sudden roar, the great mass was carried out at once. The imprisoned waters, pouring through with indescribable fury, began their terrible work of destruction. For three miles they had only the channel and the original banks of the stream to spend their force upon. Neither dwelling nor mill was in their way, nor was human life exposed until the village of Williamsburg was reached. But in all this upper channel the flood left a wondrous story of power clearly written in the uncovered primeval rocks, the torn hill-sides, the upturned trees, and the bowlders tossed like bubbles upon the wild current. The approach of the flood upon the settled portions of the valley is variously described by eye-witnesses.

"To one the thick-coming mass of water seemed like the heaviest ocean waves; to another the sound was like the tearing of shingles from many buildings; to a third it sounded as the heavy sullen thunder that succeeds the summer storm. It was preceded and surrounded by a dense spray or fog thick as the heaviest smoke."

At Skinnerville, Williamsburg seemed enveloped in smoke, and one remarked to another as the bell rang, "They are all burning out up there." The height of the flood-wave cannot be accurately stated. It varied of course with the nature of the valley, widening out and lowering upon the alluvial meadows, and rising higher in the narrow portions between the hills. It is usually spoken of as 20 feet high, but its spray was thrown 40 feet in height at some places. It struck Williamsburg very soon after Graves left. Cheney undertook to follow Graves, but was cut off within two hundred yards and obliged to return. The intervening minutes had been a wild scene of hurrying to and fro, rapid flight, and fearful struggles to alarm and save the people, and yet many of the lost, it is supposed, had not heard the alarm or understood it, and were carried away to certain death with never a word of warning.

"The waters came down the reservoir stream with awful force, and, ignoring the old channel to the east, surged against the buildings on the street leading to the depot, taking off all the houses on the back street from Adams' mill to Dr. E. M. Johnson's, thus marking out a new channel almost directly south, until it struck the hill, which stemmed the current again to the east. In a brief time—scarcely fifteen minutes—the water had passed so that its path could be traced. The channel was obliterated as it had been known, and in its place was the jagged, scarred bed of the destroying stream."

The flood having passed Williamsburg and the wider flats between there and the railroad station, at the latter point it was crowded back by the form of the hills to the original channel, and roared by "with all of its burden of crushed houses, barns, trees, logs, stones, cattle, and human beings." It poured itself over the pleasant meadows above the village of Skinnerville. The operatives in the great mill, 75 to 80 in number, had escaped, owing their lives wholly to the warning of Collins Graves and their own prompt action. Barely reaching the railroad embankment, they turned and saw the "immense wave fold in its tremendous clashing arms of timber the solid brick factory," and, crushing it like an egg-shell, the whole was borne down in the overwhelming current. As at Williamsburg, stores and dwelling-houses were torn from their foundations and swept away,—a whole village destroyed by water as completely as Herculaneum or Pompeii of old by lava. The stream, with all these accumulated materials borne upon its surface, or swept along by its resistless power, flowed onward through the narrow defile of the hills, lifting itself to its full height above the village of Haydenville. There was no pause in its onward course to save the wealth of capital, or the greater wealth of human life, in that beautiful and thrifty place.

Two hundred and twenty men were at work in the factory, and all save one escaped. He lost his life trying to return for a pair of boots, against the warning of his companions. These men owe their escape to the alarm brought by Ryan, Graves, and Hillman, for with the noise of the machinery around them they would hardly have noticed the flood in time to seek safety in flight; and whether these three knew the real danger or not, whether they rode or drove to Haydenville, it is certain they carried the news there somehow, and did it before the flood struck the place.

The old foundry was struck by a floating house and demolished, and then the waters hurled the same building like a battering-ram against the side of the great factory; a breach was made, the centre fell in, the ends folded together, and "the solid structure melted away as if it had been snow."

"An instant sufficed for the destruction of everything touched by the mountainous flood, which rolled on in its appalling force for a briefer time than many a dream, speedily became exhausted, and in an hour the river had nearly subsided to its wonted bed; the citizens walked the streets once more and began the dread search for the dead. The river-flats and all the banks were crammed with the debris. Great drives of timber; trees intermingled in the strangest, most shocking way with women's clothing,—less often with men's; with mattresses, quilts, and sheets; with belting and machinery from the mills; with fragments of bills and letters; with soap and potatoes and stove-wood; with rocks and stone steps; with fragments of chairs and tables, and now and then a piece of a piano or a cabinet-organ; with little children's hats and tiny shoes; with household utensils and all the fragments of manufacture and of domestic life; these with now and then a poor horse with agonized mouth and staring eyes, or a faithful ox or cow; and then, most horrible and soul-harrowing, the bruised, disfigured, and sometimes maimed bodies of human beings which an hour before had been in the full flush of life,—these were the ever-recurring pictures."

Such was the flood. A simple test of its power is afforded by the statement that two mill-stones weighing a ton are said to have been carried from near the store of Mr. Ross to the button-factory, a distance of half a mile.

THE LOSS OF LIFE.

This is the most appalling part of the destruction, and was perhaps never paralleled by any similar disaster from a similar cause. It required heroic hearts to commence in a business-like way the work of gathering the bodies of the dead. To think over the affecting incidents that were crowded into that brief hour would have unmanned the firmest. Emotion had to give way to earnest labor. The largest proportion of the bodies were obtained in a short time. All day long, Saturday and Sunday, the sad work went on. At Williamsburg the dead were gathered in the town-hall. They were of all ages and conditions; the gray-haired grandsire, the aged mother, manhood in its prime, youth in its strength, childhood in its innocence, were all there.

Quite a number of bodies were so deeply buried amid the ruins all along the valley that they were only found after many days.

The following is a list of the names of the lost in the flood of May 16, 1874, with their ages:

Williamsburg.—Mrs. Susan M. Lamb, fifty-four, wife of George S. Lamb; George Ashley, sixteen; E. C. Hubbard, fifty-six; Emma C. Wood, twenty-five, of Chicopee, and her son, Harold H. Wood, one; Dr. Elbridge M. Johnson, thirty-six; Mrs. Mary F. Johnson; Edward M. Johnson, eight; Mary H. Johnson, six; Charlotte Johnson, four; Mrs. Johnson, sixty-nine, mother of Dr. Johnson; Theodore J. Hitchcock, thirty-four; William H. Adams, fifty-one; Archie Lancour, twenty-one; Mrs. E. M. Chandler, thirty-nine, Mary Chandler, nine, wife and daughter of Conductor Chandler, of the New Haven and Northampton Railroad. Mr. Chandler left his wife and daughter in bed to take his train about six A.M. He first heard of the loss of his family on the arrival of his train in the depot at New Haven, less than four hours after leaving home. The bodies of his wife and daughter were in their night-clothes, and probably they were in bed when the house was carried off. Mary Scully, twenty-six; John Scully, three; Elizabeth Scully, eight months; Mary Brennan, sixty-two; Michael Burke, sixty-one; Michael Burke, nine; Jennie Burke, eight; Annie Burke, five; Frederic Burr; James Stevens, fifty-four; Mary J. Adams, thirty-six; William Adams, seven; Henry Birmingham, forty-eight; Laura Birmingham, forty-four; Mary Birmingham, twenty; Lillie D. Birmingham, sixteen; Carrie Birmingham, eight. Mr. Birmingham was superintendent of James Mill. The entire family were lost. Elizabeth W. Kingsley, sixty; Annie R. Kingsley, twenty-five (wife of E. D. Kingsley); Nellie J. Kingsley, three; Lyman Kingsley, one; Mrs. Sarah S. Bartlett, twenty-five; Viola B. Colyer, four; Mary Carter, twenty-eight; Alexander Roberts, forty-two; Carrie H. Roberts, thirty-seven; Nellie Roberts, seven; Olive F. Roberts, two. Mr. Roberts was engineer of the train leaving Williamsburg at about eleven A.M. His entire family, except a son of sixteen years, were lost. The son was taken from the flood while clinging to the limb of a tree, unconscious, and almost in the throes of death. John Atkinson, forty-eight; Mary Ann McGee, fourteen; Jeremiah Ward, seventy-one; Electa Knight, eighty; Spencer Bartlett, seventy-five; Soloma Bartlett, fifty-five; Mrs. Sarah Snow, seventy-eight; Willie H. Tilton, four; Eliza Downey, twenty-eight; Edmund Downey, two; Johanna Downey, fifty-four; Frank Murray, twenty-five; Mary Murray, twelve.

Haydenville and Skinnerville.—Mrs. Sarah Hillman, thirty-eight; Mrs. Christiana Hills, forty-six; Eli Bryant, seventy-three; Robert Hayden, five; Mrs. Mary Morris, fifty-six; Johanna Williams, twenty-two; Francis Brodem, twenty; Grace Thayer, five; Freddie Thayer, eight months; John L. Kaplinger, seventy-six; Mrs. Mary Hogan, fifty; Edward Moakler, sixty; Agnes Miller, ten; George Miller, eight; Willie Miller, one; Mrs. Margaret Wilson, forty-four; Matilda Wilson, eleven; Rosa Wilson, seven; Margaret Wilson, four; Mrs. Theresa Posie, forty-five; Isabella Posie, twenty-two; Georgiana Posie, fourteen; Nazarene Posie, eleven; Mrs. Margaret Macey, fifty-two; Mrs. Rosa Bessonette, twenty-two; Joseph Bessonette, nine months; Stephen Kelley, fifty-six; Mrs. Mary Kelley, fifty-nine.

Leeds (in the town of Northampton).—Mrs. Edward Hannan, twenty-eight; Bridget Hannan, seven; Edward Hannan, four; John Hannan, two; Michael Hannan, five months,—all of one family; Mrs. Sarah J. Ryan, twenty-two; Charlie Ryan, four; Mrs. James Fennessy, thirty-eight; John E. Fennessy, six; Catherine A. Fennessy, two; Andrew Fennessy, thirty-seven; Ellen Fennessy, eighty (mother of Andrew Fennessy); Ellen Fennessy, forty (wife of Andrew Fennessy); Nellie Fennessy, eleven; Mrs. Dunlea, seventy-five; Mrs. Robert Fitzgerald, forty-five; Charles Fitzgerald, twenty; Annie Fitzgerald, seven; and Mrs. Robert Fitzgerald's children,—Lottie, three, Tommy, nine, Bertha, two; Mrs. J. P. Cogan, forty-five; Anna J. Cogan, twenty-two; Grace Cogan, eighteen; Carrie Bonney, seventeen; Samuel Davis, thirty-six; Patrick O'Neill, thirty-five; Mrs. Louis Bronlette and four children, ages and names unknown; Alexander Laney, forty; Mrs. Patrick, sixty-two, and her children,—Charles, twenty-four, Mary, twenty-two, and Julia, seventeen; Mary Rouse, thirteen; Mrs. Sarah Shaughnessy, thirty-nine; Mary E. Woodward, twenty; Lizzie Carpenter, sixteen; Capt. T. F. Vaughn, fifty-two, station agent at Leeds; Amos Dunning, seventy-seven; Mrs. Mary Bagaley, of Fitchburg; Mrs. Kate Hurley, sixty; Evelina Sherwood, eighteen; Ralph Isham, thirty-one, bookkeeper in Warner's button-factory; Arthur Sharp, sixteen; Terry Dundan, nine; George Clancy, three; Clara Clancy, two.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Hiram Nash

HON. HIRAM NASH.

With the first settlers of New Haven the records disclose the name of Thomas Nash, who came to this country with his family from London, England, landing July 26, 1637, at Boston, Mass. From there the following year he removed with the new colony to New Haven. He was a gunsmith by trade, and appears to have been a man of a high order of intellect, and had charge of the armory at New Haven, and manufactured and repaired arms for the colony. He died about the year 1658. He had five children. The youngest, Lieut. Timothy Nash, was born in Leyden, Holland, in 1626, and came with his father to Boston as given above. He married Rebekah Stone, daughter of Rev. Samuel Stone, of Hartford, Conn., in February, 1660. He lived in Hartford, but in the year 1664 removed to Hadley, Mass., where he was a man of influence, having represented his town in the Legislature of Massachusetts in 1690, 1691, and 1695. He died March 13, 1699, in his seventy-third year. His children were twelve in number. Thomas Nash, the eldest son, was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1661. He married, August, 1683, Hannah Coleman, daughter of Deacon John Coleman, of Hatfield, Mass. In 1688 he removed from Hadley to Hatfield with his family. He died Jan. 18, 1727. He had a family of five children. The second son, Thomas, was born Feb. 26, 1692, and settled in Hatfield. On the 8th of June, 1727, he married Martha Smith, daughter of Joseph Smith and Canada Waite, his wife; her mother derived the name of Canada from the fact that she was born in Canada while her grandmother was a captive of the Indians. Thomas Nash lived in Hatfield the most of his life, but near its close, or about 1766, he removed with his two sons, John and Elisha, to Williamsburg, Mass., where he died, March 12, 1783, in the eighty-first year of his age. Thomas Nash was one of the thirty members who constituted the church in Williamsburg, July 3, 1771.

Deacon Elisha Nash, his youngest son, was born Oct. 1, 1744, in Hatfield. He married, Aug. 13, 1767, Elizabeth Smith, daughter of Moses and Hannah Smith, of Amherst, Mass.

Deacon Nash was married four times, but his ten children were all by Elizabeth Smith, his first wife. He was held in high estimation for promptness, honesty, foresight, and prudence, and was ever a prominent man in the town. He died Sept. 15, 1827. His son Elisha, and the father of Hon. Hiram Nash, whose portrait is given with this sketch, was born March 24, 1778, and married Experience Cleghorn, Nov. 25, 1799. He lived in Williamsburg, Mass., and died May 14, 1846, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

There were eleven children. Hiram Nash was born Feb. 13, 1809. His education was received in the common schools of his native town, and his occupation has always been that of a farmer. He has held many offices in his day, is a man of sound judgment, and has a wide acquaintance. In 1848 he was in the Legislature, and again in 1849, and was chairman of the joint standing committee on agriculture. Was a State Senator in 1858 and 1859.

A fellow-townsmen thus speaks of him:

"As a legislative officer, Mr. Nash has always given excellent satisfaction to his constituents by the judicious discharge of his duties and by his genial temperament and courteous address." Was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1853.

In 1862 was appointed United States assistant assessor of internal revenue.

Mr. Nash is independent in politics, with anti-slavery and Democratic tendencies. He married Lucinda Hitchcock, daughter of Levi Hitchcock, of Williamsburg, Sept. 12, 1832, and by this union there were born to him two children,—Elnor L. and Sophia L., both of whom were married to Lester W. Carr, of Williamsburg, the former being deceased.

Mr. Nash lives on the old homestead, which was owned and occupied by his father and grandfather before him.

ELNATHAN GRAVES.

Deacon Elnathan Graves was born in Williamsburg, May 20, 1813. His father was Elnathan Graves, and between him and his paternal American ancestor there are the following generations: Perez, Elnathan, John, and Isaac. Thomas Graves came to this country from Scotland in 1640, settling in Stratford, Conn. From there he removed to Hatfield, Mass. in 1645, and died in 1662. Dea. Graves' grandfather, Perez Graves, was an officer in the Revolutionary war, and furnished the government with large quantities of saltpetre.

Deacon Graves has held many offices, having been selectman and assessor for fourteen years; was in the Legislature one year; two years president of the Hampshire, Franklin, and Hampden Agricultural Society; chosen by the same society, for a term of three years, a delegate to State Board of Agriculture.

In 1868 was elected special county commissioner, and again in 1871. In 1874 was elected county commissioner, and now holds the office, having been re-elected in 1877. He is a member of the First Congregational Church in Williamsburg, and in 1876 was elected deacon.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadoo.

Upon the organization of the Haydenville Savings-Bank, he was chosen one of the trustees; was elected president of the same institution in 1878, and again in 1879.

Deacon Graves has followed farming as a business. Was educated in the common schools. He married, in 1834, Mary Sanderson, daughter of Elijah Sanderson, of Whately. By this union he had three children,—Henry Lord, Collins, and Nathan Sanderson,—all living in Williamsburg. Mrs. Graves died in March, 1846. In 1847 he married his second wife, Mary P. Clapp, daughter of Bella P. Clapp, of Williamsburg, and two children were born to them,—Emily Williston, who died December, 1877, and Freddie who died in March, 1857.

Recapitulation.—Williamsburg, 57; Skinnerville, 4; Haydenville, 24; Leeds, 51; total, 136.

THE LOSS OF PROPERTY.

The value of the property swept away from the Williamsburg street was estimated at the time at $100,000, not including the damage to the meadow-land or to the water-privilege. There were 25 houses carried away between the upper part of the village and the depot, together with the Spellman button-factory and the Adams flouring-mill.

At Skinnerville the silk-factory and the tenement-houses, with nearly all that constituted the village, were gone; at Haydenville the great brass-works factory and many buildings besides, together with dwelling-houses. The entire damage is difficult to estimate. It has been described as destroying "a third of the town," and perhaps correctly.

THE INVESTIGATION.

The result of the coroner's inquest may be said to have fixed the responsibility, not upon any one party, but upon several. 1st. The Legislature should never have permitted the creation of reservoirs in the State without more rigid restrictions. 2d. The mill-owners attempted too much economy in the execution of the work,—they wanted a safe dam, but they desired to have it built for as small a sum of money as possible,—and the superintendence during the building was not close enough. There was no one man who was solely responsible for a steady and persistent oversight of the construction and firmness to compel contractors to do the work well. Several officers seem to have been in charge, and each supposed the other was attending to it, while none of them really were exercising the vigilance required. 3d. The contractors undoubtedly did faulty work. The ground was not properly cleared; the best cement was not used; stones of the proper size were not put in; and public sentiment evidently settled its severest censure upon them. Finally, the dam was not thoroughly built; but it is believed by many that it would never have given way, had it not been for two special reasons.

One citizen living near, who saw the progress of the work very often, states that a spring of water was found, which was not properly guarded against in the subsequent construction. The workmen placed a barrel there, and let it fill for use. When the dam was carried up higher, this was simply covered up and left. It is stated that the barrel may be seen in the ruins at the present time. This spring was the point of saturation that damaged all the eastern part of the lower earth-bank, and the point at which the mass that Cheney saw move out became loosened on the morning of May 16th.

Again, the waste-weir was intended to keep the water about two feet below the crest of the dam, so that the earth-covering of the wall would not be saturated. It is a common remark in Williamsburg that Gov. Hayden was always fearful as to the safety of the reservoir, that he visited it often, and while he lived insisted that the gates must be opened sufficiently to keep the water down to the bottom of the waste-weir,—that water should not be allowed to flow over that to any extent.

At the time of the disaster (some witnesses state it at two or three days previous) the gates had been closed, and the water was flowing over the waste-weir between ONE AND TWO FEET DEEP.

The State assisted the town in repairing roads and bridges by a liberal appropriation of $100,000. It relieved the burden that would otherwise have been almost impossible for the people to bear.

MILITARY.

Williamsburg was not settled early enough to share very much in the alarms of Indian wars. But the people found themselves compelled to meet at once the questions involved in the opening Revolution. How well they met the crisis, how promptly they acted, and how bravely men went forward to the post of duty and of danger, appear from the following records:

Sept. 20, 1774.—Voted that Samuel Fairfield, Elisha Nash, and Russell Kellogg be a committee to meet delegates from other towns at Northampton.

Oct. 3, 1774.—Voted to send Russell Kellogg to the Provincial Congress at Concord. But there was some hesitation, for October 7th it was voted not to send Russell Kellogg to Concord.

REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Another meeting, October 24th, probably upon the same subject, was dissolved without action.

Dec. 26, 1774.—A committee of inspection was, however, appointed, according to the advice of the Continental Congress: ELISHA NASH, JOSIAH HAYDEN, CAPT. SAMUEL FAIRFIELD, RUSSELL KELLOGG, SAMUEL DAY, ABEL THAYER, WM. BODMAN, JOSIAH DWIGHT, JONATHAN WARNER.

March 13, 1775.—Voted to send Russell Kellogg to the Provincial Congress at Concord. Voted to raise minute-men, to be ready to march at the tap of the drum, without further notice, for the military service of the colony.

March 13, 1775.—Voted to give minute-men 8 pence per day, and officers 1 shilling 4 pence, and a sergeant to have 1 shilling per day for exercising themselves in training till the 13th day of March, 1775, and after that, till the middle of May, a soldier is to have 9 pence per day, and an officer to have 1 shilling 6 pence per day; a fifer, drummer, and a sergeant to have 1 shilling a day all the time.

There seems to have been some personal feeling, for at one time they voted that no delegate should go to the Provincial Congress, and further voted that "Samuel Fairfield should carry the resolves against Mr. Josiah Dwight being a delegate to the Provincial Congress."

July 15, 1776.—Voted to raise money to give the nine soldiers an encouragement to join the Continental army in Canada,—namely, £6 to each. The selectmen were appointed a committee to pay them.

Previous to this, in March, 1776, nine soldiers had been furnished to the Continental army. Thirteen soldiers from this town were in the Northern campaign of 1777.

In the Burgoyne campaign, after the British captured Fort Ticonderoga, a messenger with the news reached Williamsburg Sunday morning. He reined up at the church door in the midst of the sermon, and proclaimed his message of alarm. Church services gave way to a war-meeting on the spot. Capt. Fairfield called for men and arms, and fifty volunteers were obtained before night. The names of a part enrolled at that time are preserved as follows:

Thomas Vinton, Eleazer Hill, Amasa Frost, John Miller, John Wait, Jonathan Wolcott, Samson Hill, Jacob Robinson, Thomas Thatcher, Thomas Howe, Downing Warner, Samuel French, Andrew Gates, Josiah Dwight, Samuel Bradford, Elisha Nash, Jesse Wild, Bethuel Smith, Isaac Finney, Daniel Fuller, John Bagley, Ezra Strong, John Williams, Amasa Graves, Simeon Barrows, Rufus Hyde, Richard Church, Ichabod Hemmenway, Samuel Fairfield, Abel Thayer, Jonathan Warner, Elisha Graves, Nehemiah Washburn. Some of these men hired substitutes, but the majority went into the service.

May 19, 1777.—Money was raised by subscription to hire soldiers:

	£	s.
Amasa Graves.....	10	00
Simon Burroughs.....	2	10
Rufus Hyde.....	2	10
Richard Church.....	10	00
Ichabod Hemmenway.....	2	10
Samuel Fairfield.....	5	00
Abel Thayer.....	5	00
Jonathan Warner.....	2	10
Elihu Graves.....	2	10
Nehemiah Washburn.....	2	10
	£45	00

June 4, 1777, it is recorded that Jonathan Warner procured a soldier for the town by the name of Joel Wiles, and he was paid £56 10s. as bounty.

Capt. Warner was wounded at the battle of Saratoga while making a charge with the bayonet; a ball struck him in the shoulder.

Francis Warner, a grandson of Capt. Jonathan, resides at Haydenville.

Oct. 13, 1780, it was voted to procure the beef for the army assessed upon the town, and Joseph Carey, Elisha Nash, and Asa Ludden were appointed a committee for that purpose. It was voted to pay £170 Continental currency per hundredweight. This is a good specimen of the fate of inflated paper-money.

The above minutes from the town records clearly indicate the spirit of the people.

At the time of the Lexington alarm 10 men left Williamsburg under Capt. Abel Thayer, "too impatient," one writer says, "to wait for 21 more, who soon followed them."

John Starks was in the battle at Saratoga and also on Long Island, and was also stationed at Great Jones Street, New York, when the British came over from Newtown and landed at Kipsey's Bay. John Allen was in the hottest of the fight at Bunker Hill and also at Bemis Heights, Saratoga, where Gen. Frazer was killed.

Starks was in the campaign of 1776, and was sent with the Rangers to protect the frontiers along the western line of Lake Champlain to Canada. So were Amasa Frost and Nehemiah Frost.

This town passed a resolution favoring national independence some weeks before the Declaration was pronounced by the Continental Congress, as did other towns in the vicinity.

SHAYS' REBELLION.

The name of this town does not appear with any prominence in the published accounts of Shays' rebellion, and yet it is well known that the citizens of this town were many of them favorable to the cause of the insurgents.

The town was represented in the various county conventions called to consider the public distress; but many attended these and sought redress of grievances who never approved the subsequent movements of the Shays men, and did not share in them.

WAR OF 1812.

In 1812, Williamsburg was represented by the following delegates in the county convention held to express opposition to the war, viz., William Bodman and John Wells.

William Bodman was appointed a delegate from Hampshire County to the subsequent State convention.

July 6, 1812, the following record appears:

"At a legal meeting voted unanimously that a war with Great Britain, at a time when to say the least we have as good a cause for a war with France, is totally inexpedient and impolitic, and we have reason to fear will lead to an alliance with that nation whose friendship is certain ruin."

It will be easily inferred that this town had no soldiers in the regular army during this war, which bore so heavily upon the commercial interests of New England and awoke such strong opposition. When Governor Strong called out the militia for the defense of Boston, this town like others furnished its quota. It is understood the following went: Jonathan A. Gillett, Wm. Hemenway, Capt. Southworth Jenkins, Jonathan Dickinson, Jason Hemenway, James Hemenway, Benjamin Claghorn, Benjamin Dole. Capt. Jenkins was in command, and 8 or 10 men constituted the Williamsburg quota.

MEXICAN WAR.

Charles Hopkins, son of Stephen Hopkins, was in the Mexican war, and was killed.

SOLDIERS' LIST.

Jerome E. Hillman, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1864, re-enl. Dec. 15, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans., June 21, 1865, to 20th; disch. July 16, 1865.
Otis H. Potter, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; died April 15, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La., and buried there. One of the town's most promising young men; a good speaker; enlisted himself and inspired others.
Henry D. Claghorn, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; died 1864, at Mound City, Ill.

Newman W. Bartlett, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. March 6, 1864, for disch.
Willard Thayer Wagoner, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; died soon after return.
Wm. D. Adams, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Oliver Ames, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Jared L. Bardwell, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

CIVIL WAR, 1861-65.

The first legal town-meeting to consider war matters was held on the 2d of May, 1861. The committee on resolutions, consisting of H. H. White, D. F. Morton, and Wm. A. Nash, reported the following:

"Whereas, a crisis has arrived in the history of our general government which calls for every one, whether in his national, state, county, town, or individual capacity, to speak out his sentiments and use prompt and energetic action in sustaining the government against the rebellion that is now aiming to undermine its foundations; therefore,

"Resolved, By the inhabitants of Williamsburg now in town-meeting assembled, that we tender to it all the men and means we possess in proportion to our ability, and that we raise the sum of $2000, to be placed in the hands of a committee to be expended in whole or in part as necessity may require, under the direction of the town, for the benefit of such persons as have volunteered or may volunteer as soldiers from the town and for the use of their families.

"Resolved, That it is not only one of the legitimate, but imperative, duties of the general government to enforce its laws in every one of the States of the Union, whether it has seceded or not; and that it has a perfect right to call out troops for that purpose whenever it may deem it wise and judicious so to do; and that there is no alternative for patriotic citizens but to aid them to the extent of their power."

The resolutions were adopted. Lewis Bodman and D. F. Morton, with the selectmen, were made a committee to disburse "the money raised for volunteers and their families." They were instructed to furnish equipments for volunteers, and to pay to each $10 a month while in service.

June 17th, this vote was reconsidered, and the selectmen were authorized to borrow $1100 to fulfill contracts already made, and to carry out the provisions of the law for State aid for families.

Sept. 1, 1862.—It was voted to raise by taxation $6100, to pay bounties to volunteers who enlist to the credit of the town.

November 17th.—The treasurer was fully authorized to borrow money to pay State aid to families "until the 1st day of March next."

Other meetings were held in the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, at which all necessary steps were taken to fill the several quotas called for from time to time, paying such bounties as seemed necessary.

Williamsburg furnished 250 men for the war, which was a surplus of 29 above all demands. Four were commissioned officers. This statement is from Schouler's "History of Massachusetts in the War."

The whole amount of aid paid solely by the town was $20,000. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $906,206, and the population 2095. Aid to families reimbursed by the State, 1861, $135.36; 1862, $932.37; 1863, $2053.01; 1864, $589.79; 1865, $687.89; total, $4398.42.

The village of Haydenville and its immediate vicinity furnished 100 of their own citizens.

Contributions by ladies and by citizens generally were prompt and liberal, and were sent through the various channels of benevolence during all the war.

The following list is designed to include the name of every resident of Williamsburg who served in the army, but to exclude the names of recruits hired abroad, in Boston or elsewhere. It will be noticed by the statistics given above that the number of soldiers furnished by Williamsburg was equal to one-eighth of the whole population, and the war-expenses equal to about nine and a half dollars each for the whole people, —men, women, and children. Such records need no comment. They prove that the heroism of the fathers survives in their children.

George O. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Henry A. Bisbee, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Edmund Black, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; re-enl. Dec. 15, 1863, 37th Regt., but rejected Jan. 5, 1864, on examination.
Andrew Breckenbridge, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Patrick McGee, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Thomas Meekins

During the reign of Charles I. more than twenty thousand Puritans were driven from England to the New World by the political and ecclesiastical tyranny of Earl Strafford and Archbishop Laud. Among the number were Thomas, Thomas, Jr., and Helon Meekins, who landed in Boston, in 1636, where they took the oath of freemen. Helon was drowned in Boston Harbor, and Thomas, Sr., soon returned to England; Thomas, Jr., removed to Braintree, where he remained until 1661, when, with his son Thomas, born in 1643, he joined a colony from Hartford, who established themselves on both sides of the Connecticut River, at Hadley. They soon became prominent in local affairs, Thomas, Sr., being the first signer of the west side petition to the General Court, May 3, 1667, "to vouchsafe your poor petitioners that favor as to be a society of ourselves, and have liberty to settle a minister to dispense the ordinances of the Lord unto us."

This movement resulted in the incorporation of the town of Hatfield, May 31, 1670. The elder Thomas was a millwright. He built and owned the first grist-mill in Hatfield, in 1661, and, with others, saw-mills in Hadley and Northampton. Thomas, Jr., and his servant, Nathaniel Collins, were slain by the Indians, Oct. 19, 1675, while on a scouting party in King Philip's war. The following letter, written the next year, and now in possession of Dr. T. W. Meekins, of Northampton, gives a good idea of the every-day life of the settlers at that time. It is directed: "This for loving Master Thomas Meekings, living at hatfield, this deliver."

"Loving and much respected master, my saving remembrance unto you and my dame, hoping you are well as I am at the riting hearof, blessed be god for it. My wiff desiars to be remembered to you and my dame, and wee are yet in oure habitation thro god's marsi, but we are in expectation of the enimi everi day, If god be not the more marsifull unto us. I have been out 7 weeks myself, and if provision had not grown short wee had folerd the enimi into youre borders, and then I woldd have given you a visit If it had been posibel; for I went out a volintere under Ca. wardsworth, of Milton, but he is caled hom to scout about there oune toun, and so I left off the desine at present.

"there is many of oure frends are taken from us. Ca. Jonson, of Roxberi, was slaine at naragansit, and will lincorn died before his wounds was cured; and filap Curtis was slaine at a wigwame, about mendham, but we have lost but one man with us these wares. My mother vose Is ded, and my sister swift. I pray remember my love to John elis and his wiff and the Rest of oure frends; and however it is like to fare with us god knows, and wee desiar to Comit all oure affairs into his hands. So having nothing els, desiring youre praiars for us, I rest your servant,
"JOHN SHARPE.

"MADRINIER, 8 of the 1st mo., 1676."

Thomas, son of Thomas, Jr., born Nov. 8, 1673, settled in Hartford, and afterward went South. John, born Jan. 12, 1672, remained in Hatfield. He was a well-to-do farmer, as were all the sons for several generations. His son Thomas, born October, 1718, was succeeded in the next generation by another of the same name, born in 1743, who removed to the northwestern part of Williamsburg, in 1764. His sons were Thomas, Stephen, and Joseph. Thomas died young. The sons of Stephen were Thomas, Stephen, and Christopher. Thomas, the eldest, was born Dec. 1, 1796. Of a not robust constitution, and unable to perform hard work, he early resolved to obtain what was then considered an education, and, notwithstanding some discouragement by his family, he found time to acquire a sufficient knowledge of Latin and Greek, in addition to the usual English branches, to fit himself for a teacher. His tutors were Rev. Henry Lord and Elisha Hubbard, Esq.

In 1818, after a year or two in the village schools, he accepted an invitation to North Carolina as assistant in an academy, of which Davis H. Mayhew, formerly of Williamsburg, was principal. At the end of three years he returned to his native place, and in 1824 commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Daniel Collins, and graduated at Berkshire Medical College, after three years of office-work and two full courses of medical lectures. He at once commenced practice in Cummington; but, a more promising field presenting itself in Worthington, he soon removed to the latter place, where he remained until invited to return to Williamsburg by many of the prominent citizens, including his former preceptor, Dr. Collins, between whom and himself there existed a warm friendship until the death of the former, in 1857.

The invitation was accepted, and in August, 1828, he was settled as a physician in Williamsburg, where he still resides. In the fall of the same year he married Hannah, daughter of Isaac Little, Esq., by whom he had two children,—Thomas W., born June 16, 1830, and Caroline A., born March 18, 1833. His wife died Dec. 12, 1844, and their daughter, Caroline, Feb. 16, 1846. He was married, again, to Maria S., daughter of Spencer Goodman, Sept. 19, 1845.

Dr. Meekins has always been one of the leading men in town affairs, naturally taking much interest in the schools in his younger days. He was three times elected to the General Court, in 1834 and 1835 as a representative of anti-Masonic sentiment at the time of the Morgan excitement, and again, in 1854, as a mark of the respect of his fellow-citizens, irrespective of party. In politics he has been conservative. A Whig from the birth to the death of the party, a firm adherent of Clay and Webster, and no sympathizer with the earlier abolitionists, he went, with many conservative Whigs, to the Democratic party, with whom he has since acted.

Thomas W., his son, received an academic education at Williston Seminary, Easthampton, remaining there from the spring of 1842 until the fall of 1846. The following May he commenced a two years' course of study in dentistry with Dr. J. W. Smith, of Northampton, which was supplemented by a three years' course in the Berkshire Medical College, from which he graduated in November, 1852. He succeeded to the practice of Dr. Smith, May 1, 1853, and has continued it to the present time. Jan. 23, 1857, he married Harriette R., daughter of Benjamin M. Hill, D.D., of New York. Their sons are Thomas Hill, born Dec. 25, 1857, and Edward Munro, born Dec. 30, 1860.

Photo. by Hardie & Schadee.

Benjamin S. Johnson.

BENJAMIN SIDNEY JOHNSON was born in Williamsburg, Hampshire Co., Mass., Oct. 24, 1813. The branch of the family to which he belongs is of English origin and of Puritan antecedents, but the time of their emigration to this country is not at present definitely known. Caleb Johnson, the earliest progenitor of whom there is certain knowledge, and of whom B. S. Johnson is a descendant in the fifth generation, is known to have been a resident of Willington, Conn.

His grandson, Caleb Johnson, was born there, March 6, 1757. The latter removed to Hadley, Mass., in 1785, where his son Benjamin (the father of our subject) was born the same year; and in 1789, Caleb removed to Williamsburg, being one of the early settlers of that town. His farm was situated on what is known as Walnut Hill, and there Benjamin S. was born. At the age of three years his father removed from Walnut Hill to that part of the town now known as Haydenville, and in 1822 to Northampton, where he lived until the time of his death, Sept. 29, 1855, occupying a farm about equidistant between the village of Haydenville on the one side, and of Leeds, in Northampton, on the other. On this farm Benjamin S. Johnson lived until 1871, when he removed to Haydenville, where he now resides, having the previous year been chosen treasurer of the Haydenville Savings-Bank.

His early education was such as could be obtained in the common schools of that day. Some years before leaving the farm he commenced doing business as an insurance agent, the making of deeds, and the various other duties usually required of a justice of the peace in a community where there was no regular justice in active business. He discharged the duties thus entrusted to him in so satisfactory a manner that they increased from year to year, and he found but little time for farming operations. He early became interested in the temperance cause, and for more than forty years has been a thoroughgoing and consistent temperance man.

Early in life he showed a fondness for politics, and much earlier than most boys began to take a deep interest in questions of that nature, and for several years before he could vote was an active political worker. He was connected successively with the National Republican and Whig parties; and in 1840, upon the formation of the Liberty party, he became an influential member of that organization. When the Liberty party became merged in the Free-Soil party, in 1848, he gave it his hearty support, and was chairman of the county committee. In 1854 he identified himself with the Republican party, and was for years one of the members of the county committee. Taking a deep interest in everything that relates to the early history of the section of country where he resides, he has spent much time and given valuable assistance to persons who have written its history. He has a remarkable faculty for remembering historical and political dates and events.

Though not a church member, he has been a constant supporter of the religious interests of his neighborhood, and soon after the formation of the Haydenville parish he was chosen one of the assessors, and has served in that capacity twenty-one years. He was one of the earliest directors of the Haydenville Cemetery Association, and has been its superintendent since its organization.

In 1851 he was appointed a justice of the peace for Hampshire County, and subsequently a justice of the Quorum throughout the State, which office he now holds. In 1871 he was appointed notary public for Hampshire County, and his commission was renewed in 1878. In 1871 he was chosen one of the commissioners of insolvency for his county, and re-elected in 1874, but declined further service in 1877. He has served his native town of Williamsburg as selectman, assessor, and overseer of the poor, besides holding other offices of trust in the gift of the people. He commenced the insurance business in 1860, which he has continued to the present time, and during that period has held the agency of large and important companies, and transacted quite an extensive business in that line. He has acted as conveyancer for many years, and at present is probably more familiar with the titles to real estate than any one in town. For years the drawing of wills and the settlement of estates has been an important branch of his business, and the satisfaction so frequently expressed by his heirs at the manner in which these responsible and often delicate duties have been performed is an evidence of the justice he has endeavored to mete out to all parties. That he has established a character of fairness and impartiality in his dealings will be inferred from the fact that he is often called upon to act as a referee in the settlement of disputes which arise, and it is unquestionably true that many expensive lawsuits, with their attendant neighborhood quarrels, he has helped to settle in this way.

On March 7, 1839, he married Mary F. Abercrombie, granddaughter of the Rev. Robert Abercrombie, of Pelham. She was a native of Amherst, though a resident of Pelham at the time. She died March 4, 1871. Their children were Horace W., Mary Ellen, who died Oct. 27, 1855, Clarissa, or Clara Lucinda, Alice A., and Sarah A.

Inheriting in a large measure the characteristics of his maternal ancestors, Mr. Johnson possesses great activity, energy, and a determined will, which enables him to overcome difficulties that would discourage many men, and few among those who started in life with him have accomplished more in their generation. Especially is this true considering the limited advantages of his early years. His life adds another illustration of what, under our institutions, may be done by a man who uses well the powers with which he has been endowed, and strives to make the most of his opportunities in the community in which his lot is cast.

- Joseph W. Strong, sergt., enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; died in New York on the way home; buried in Williamsburg.
- Frank C. Clapp, enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Charles E. Tileston, capt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Calvin C. Walbridge, sergt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Francis H. Holmes, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Edmund Duggan, enl. Dec. 17, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. K; trans. June 21, 1865, to 20th Inf.; disch. June 24, 1865.
- Edward Ryan, enl. Dec. 29, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. Dec. 29, 1864, for disab.
- John Reynolds, enl. Dec. 17, 1863, 37th Inf.; unassigned recruit; died Jan. 17, 1864.
- Wm. S. Phillips, corp., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
- Myron Ames, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans., Feb. 11, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.
- Lyman C. Bartlett, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; killed May 12, 1864, at Spotsylvania, Va.
- Thomas Brazel, enl. Nov. 30, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans. Dec. 30, 1863, to 20th Inf.; disch. June 21, 1865; absent; wounded.
- Wm. H. Cook, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; died Sept. 2, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.; substitute; name retained because he died in the service for the town.
- Emery E. Cowan, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans. July 2, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.
- Gilbert W. Thomas, enl. Aug. 31, 1864, 2d H. Art., Co. G; disch. June 26, 1865; had previously served in the 10th; also nine months in the 52d.
- Wm. F. Knapp, enl. Sept. 26, 1864, 2d H. Art.; disch. Sept. 7, 1864, rejected recruit.
- John W. Miller, enl. Aug. 26, 1864, 17th Inf., Co. F; disch. July 27, 1865, order of War Department (probably from Goshen).
- Martin Cahill, corp., enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. I; disch. July 1, 1864.
- John Moore, sergt., enl. Aug. 12, 1863, 11th Inf., Co. H; killed Oct. 27, 1864, at Petersburg, Va.; perhaps a sub.; name retained because he lost his life in service for the town.
- Samuel W. Hayden, Nov. 19, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; re-enl. Aug. 26, 1864, 2d H. Art., Co. G; disch. June 26, 1865.
- Charles G. Hillman, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; died March 3, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
- Medad C. Hill, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Jonathan O. Howard, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Henry S. Leonard, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Henry D. Miller, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Charles R. Kaplinger, enl. Aug. 26, 1864, 2d H. Art., Co. G; trans. Jan. 17, 1865, to 17th Inf.; disch. June 30, 1865, by order of War Department.
- George Stevens, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; reported missing; probably died in the service; his widow draws a pension.
- Caleb F. Tufts, enl. Dec. 18, 1863, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. June 26, 1865; probably from Westhampton.
- William Sheridan, enl. Oct. 1, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. H; died Nov. 11, 1862, at Annapolis, Md.
- Robert Elder, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. K; killed June 5, 1864, at Cold Harbor, Va.
- Thomas Ellsworth, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; unaccounted for in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, vol. ii. page 789.
- James W. Hillman, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
- George L. French, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
- Martin Hathaway, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; died April 24, 1862, at Newbern, N. C.
- Luther Loomis, Jr., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; died June 1, 1862, at Newbern, N. C.
- John McCaffery, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; died Sept. 4, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.
- Charles Morganweek, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 23, 1864 (Easthampton).
- Charles H. Otto, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Jan. 1, 1863, for disability.
- Calvin Johnson, enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. I; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.
- John Elder, enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. K; re-enl. Dec. 30, 1863; disch. July 14, 1865.
- James R. Londergon, enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. K; disch. Oct. 16, 1861, for disability.
- Edwin Whitney, 1st lieut., enl. Nov. 26, 1862, 10th Inf.; disch. July 1, 1864.
- George F. Polley, sergt.-maj., enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf.; re-enl. same rank, Dec. 21, 1863; pro. to 1st lieut., May 6, 1864; killed June 20, 1864, at Petersburg, Va.
- Hugh McGee, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Feb. 21, 1864; trans. June 20, 1864, to 37th Inf.; injured in the hand, and disch. Feb. 14, 1865.
- Jacob Herman, enl. Sept. 3, 1864, 2d Cav., Co. D; disch. June 26, 1865.
- John Burke, enl. Feb. 8, 1865, 2d Cav., Co. G; disch. July 20, 1865.
- Thomas Ryan, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H. Rodolphus Vining, enl. Aug. 30, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.
- James P. Warner, enl. Dec. 16, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans. June 21, 1865, to 20th Inf.; disch. July 16, 1865.
- Stephen G. Warner, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; killed Dec. 13, 1862, at Fredericksburg, Va.
- Samuel W. Williams, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
- Albert F. Damon, enl. Feb. 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. I; trans. Oct. 23, 1862, to U. S. Cav.
- Almeron Damon, enl. Feb. 27, 1864, 21st Inf., Co. I; trans. to 36th Inf.; disch. July 12, 1865.
- Thomas Sexton, enl. Aug. 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. I; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.
- Benson Munyan, musician, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf.; disch. Aug. 30, 1862, by order of War Department.
- Frank Kinslow, corp., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
- Wm. W. Newman, corp., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A; died Nov. 18, 1862, at Newbern, N. C.
- Thomas J. Partridge, 1st sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; killed April 12, 1865, before Richmond.
- Patrick Donovan, sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 15, 1865, for disab.
- David B. Miller, sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; killed April 6, 1865, at Sailors' Creek, Va.; was at home at town-meeting just about a month before his death.
- Richard M. Porter, sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; died Aug. 29, 1864, at Alexandria, Va.
- Moses S. Ames, corp., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; killed Sept. 19, 1864, at Winchester, Va.
- Edward McCaffery, corp., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 9, 1865, by order of the War Department.
- William Wright, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; trans. Dec. 19, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.
- Wm. Hamilton, sergt., enl. Sept. 4, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. K; disch. June 21, 1865.
- Samuel W. Cowles, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; died Feb. 6, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
- Charles M. Gillett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Nathan S. Graves, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Chauncey Guilford, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Ira N. Guillo, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Willis Guilford, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Francis W. Moore, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Monroe M. Morton, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; died Feb. 26, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
- Azro B. Niles, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; died June 20, 1863, at Baton Rouge, La.
- Edward S. Perkins, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Joseph T. Thayer, Jr., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- James Adams, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 7, 1865.
- Wm. H. Bartlett, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 7, 1865.
- Wm. S. Brown, enl. Sept. 11, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864; re-enl. Dec. 28, 1864, U. S. V. V.
- John Buchanan, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; died Sept. 4, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.
- Thomas Dooley, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
- John Donovan, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 23, 1863.
- Lewis T. Black, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. E; pro. to sergt., June 22, 1863, in the 20th, and trans. June 19, 1864, to 37th Inf.; disch. July 16, 1865.
- Levi Black, sergt., enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. E; disch. July 1, 1864.
- Charles E. Adams, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. E; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 21, 1863.
- Samuel C. Bodman, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. E; disch. July 1, 1864.
- Albert E. Pelton, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. E; re-enl. Dec. 21, 1863; trans. June 19, 1864, to 37th Inf.
- William H. Bemis, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. H; disch. May 29, 1865.
- John S. Kaplinger, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
- Michael Londergon, enl. Dec. 17, 1863, 37th Inf., Co. H.
- William Madden, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. Feb. 19, 1864, for disab.
- Arthur T. Merritt, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; killed May 6, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.
- Clark G. Rice, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
- Michael Rowe, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; unaccounted for in adjt.-general's report of volunteers, 1868, vol. ii., page 789.
- J. P. Coburn, enl. 10th Inf., Co. C.
- George Hathaway.
- P. W. Kingsley, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- Henry C. Burly, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- Henry Guyer, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- Frederick Goodrich, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- John Atwood, enl. 10th Regt., Co. B.
- James Welsh, enl. 10th Regt., Co. K.
- Newell Rice, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- Henry A. Ives, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- Joshua A. Loomis, capt., enl. 10th Regt., Co. C; wounded.
- Frederick O. Hillman, enl. 10th Regt., Co. C.
- Levant French, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A.
- Henry C. French, enl. 10th Regt., Co. E; died in the Peninsula campaign.
- J. H. Obernupt, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A.
- Albert Fry, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A.
- Albert Myers, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A.
- Emerson Torrey, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A.
- Joseph L. Hayden, capt., enl. 37th Regt., Co. H; wounded.
- Charles N. Clark, enl. 37th Regt., Co. H.
- Edward P. Nichols, enl. 37th Regt., Co. H.
- Henry H. Field, enl. 37th Regt., Co. H.
- Thomas Whalen, enl. 37th Regt., Co. H.
- Francis G. Bardwell, enl. 52d Regt., Co. I.
- Wm. Cowles, enl. 52d Regt., Co. I.
- Sereno Clapp, enl. 31st Regt.; died soon after return.
- Charles B. Newton, enl. 52d Regt., Co. I.
- George Mentor, enl. 21st Regt.
- Thomas Stephens, enl. 21st Regt.
- Whitney L. Williams, enl. 1st Cav.

PLAINFIELD.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

PLAINFIELD occupies the northwest corner of Hampshire County, and is centrally distant from Northampton nineteen miles, air-line measurement. It is bounded north by Franklin County, east by Franklin County, south by Cummington, and west by Berkshire County. The reason why it is a part of Hampshire County may simply be that at the time of the division of old Hampshire the people desired to have it so. Perhaps the arrangement cannot be improved even now, though direct stage communication is eastward and northward into Franklin County rather than southward. The farm acreage is 11,961 acres. A large portion of the town was originally included in Cummington, and was a part of Township No. 5, the title being direct from the colony of Massachusetts Bay. To this was added, Feb. 4, 1794, a portion of Ashfield, with the families of Joseph Clarke and Joseph Beals, and June 21, 1803, one mile in width from the southerly portion of the town of Hawley. This was a part of certain equivalent lands originally granted to the town of Hatfield and located in Hawley. This introduced into deeds the term "Hatfield Equivalents."

Jason Richards states that the northeast part of this town, comprising 600 acres, was a tract granted to Mr. Mayhew for missionary and perhaps legal services among the Indians; that it was transferred soon after to one Wainwright, and was known by his name. James Richards originally lived on the south boundary of this estate, and was appointed an agent to have the care of it.

Plainfield was made an important point in the trigonometrical surveys of the State, and the exact position of the meeting-house was given as latitude $42^{\circ} 30' 50''$; longitude $72^{\circ} 57' 47''$.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface of the town is rough and mountainous. Ranges of hills extend from northeast to southwest through the eastern portion. Separate elevations are found in the west. Several such also occur among the ranges of the east. These have only local names. One on the south boundary west of the centre is named Deer Hill. This is a beautiful, symmetrically-shaped elevation, attracting much attention from tourists.

The town is situated just south of the dividing ridges between the waters of the Deerfield River and those of the Westfield. Several rivulets that flow down these valleys rise not far from the northern boundary. But the town is drained southwardly by three tributaries of the Middle Branch of the Westfield River. The central one is known as Mill Brook. This affords water-power of considerable value. From the slopes of the hills in the west there are a number of small streams that, flowing into Berkshire County, form another tributary of the Middle Branch.

In the east there are several streams that unite farther south than Plainfield, under the name of Swift River, and this becomes still another tributary of the same Middle Branch of the Westfield. Meadow Brook and Still Brook are among these. North Pond is a beautiful sheet of water, dotted with islands, lying in the northwest part of the town. Crooked Pond is also in the same vicinity.

With all this combination of hill, valley, and stream, Plainfield has romantic and picturesque scenery. Geologically, Plainfield possesses many interesting features in common with the other towns lying along this mountainous range.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Plainfield was settled from 1770 to 1780. Mr. McIntyre was probably the first pioneer to penetrate the forests and establish a home for his family. His precise location is not determined. From the early records of Cummington we obtain the names of others who came to Plainfield about the time of the Revolutionary war.

The name of Dr. Fay appears in 1774 as one permitted, with Dr. Bradish, to open a hospital for inoculation. If this is the Nathan Fay whose homestead Deacon Hamlin supposes to have been on West Hill, in Plainfield, it would indicate his settlement, and that of others, at or before that date. We obtain no further names from the records until five years later.

At the first town-meeting in Cummington (1779), Lieut. Joshua Shaw was chosen one of the selectmen. Andrew Cook and Isaac Joy were named among the surveyors of highways. Caleb White was chosen a deer-reeve. Lieut. Colson was chosen upon the committee of correspondence. These five families were undoubtedly settled here between 1774 and 1779. It is not probable that all the settlers were appointed to office, and hence there must have been a few other families that came in during that period of five years.

In March, 1780, at the town-meeting of Cummington, Lieut. Samuel Noyes apparently took the place of Lieut. Colson upon the committee of correspondence, indicating his settlement here that year or earlier. At this same date, 1780, there occurs also the name of Ebenezer Bisbee, and this agrees with the statements of his son. Abraham Beals and John Streeter were appointed surveyors of highways in Cummington, 1780. The same year we also find the names of Wm. Robbins and Jonathan Munroe, also Noah Packard. We thus determine seven more families, giving twelve names, in all, of those appointed to office. This statement indicates the settlement of twenty to twenty-five families in Plainfield by 1780. This applies to only that part of Plainfield taken from Cummington. The section afterward annexed from Ashfield may have also had one or more settlers by 1780, as well as the two tiers of lots taken from Hawley.

Plainfield was thus settled during the Revolutionary war. Notwithstanding the civil commotions, hardy pioneers were continually pushing westward from the towns of Abingdon and Bridgewater, which, with others, seem at that time to have constituted a human hive, teeming with inhabitants, and sending out swarms to settle Western Hampshire. Under their efforts, "the wilderness blossomed as the rose, and the desert became a fruitful field." In their system of town-meetings they brought with them the great principles of local home rule, the very sources of constitutional liberty throughout the world. In their religious institutions they kept unbroken the faith of their fathers, kindling its altar-fires upon every hill-top, and sending forth streams of light and truth to illuminate the dark places of the earth.

SPECIAL FAMILY NOTES.

Isaac Joy, Sr. Warrant for first town-meeting issued to him; homestead was in the south part of the town, now owned by Nelson Shaw; buildings gone. Among his children were Isaac, Jr., Plainfield; Joseph, Plainfield (father of Leonard Joy, now living in town); Hannah (Mrs. Taylor, Hawley). The children of Isaac, Jr., were Lucinda (Mrs. Taylor, Hawley); Mrs. James Cook, Plainfield; Mrs. Abisha Nash, Plainfield; Alonzo, Plainfield; Zenas, Northampton; William, Stamford, Vt.; Isaac, went from town early. The children of Joseph were Leonard, Plainfield; James, Plainfield; Polly (Mrs. Beres Patrick), Plainfield, moved to Ashfield; Merila (Mrs. Dura Torrey); Electa (Mrs. Levi Clark); Clarissa (Mrs. Levi Campbell).

Mr. McIntyre. Supposed to be the first settler; homestead probably near where Mrs. Mary Dunning now lives. The marriage of two who were probably his daughters is given elsewhere; and there is also recorded the death of Widow McIntyre (1802), aged eighty-three, who was very probably the wife of this first pioneer.

Simon Burroughs. There was one son, Simon, Jr.; the family went West at an early day. Lieut. Ebenezer Colson, homestead a little southeast of the village, now owned by O. C. Shumway. The family removed to Hamilton, N. Y. Their children were Ebenezer, Jr., Josiah, Russell, Lyman, Allen, and Bonaparte.

Lieut. Joshua Shaw, first town-clerk; one of the first selectmen of Cummington (1779); homestead on the present farm of O. C. Shumway; one son, Thomas, afterward town-clerk.

Lieut. John Packard was here several years before the town was organized, as his name is among the town officers of Cummington (1779). Children: John, Plainfield, later to Ohio, and Mrs. Eldridge, who also went West, to Ohio.

Lieut. John Cunningham (1783-84), homestead on the so-called Strong place, now owned by Lewis Shaw. Of the children, there were John, Jr., Ohio; Jones, Ohio; James T., Artemas, Amos, and Cyrus. Two daughters; they went West at an early day.

Josiah Torrey, homestead on West Hill. Of the children, John settled in Cummington; Josiah in Plainfield; Mrs. John Ford, Cummington; Mrs. Ebenezer Shaw, Cummington.

Solomon Nash, homestead where Oren Tirrill, Jr., now lives; family went West at an early day; one son was Reuel. Nathan Fay, homestead on West Hill; probably was the owner of a tract now the farm of Oren Tirrill. William Daniels.—A blacksmith at the centre, of that name, worked opposite the present house of Charles N. Dyer. The Daniels homestead was in the southeast part of the town. Jacob Clark, homestead southeast part of the town, residence of Seth W. Clark. Children: Jacob, Jr., Mrs. James Jewell, Mrs. Daniel Coe, Sally (died unmarried), Lucy, Hannah, Nancy, Levi, David, Chester, and Alanson.

Abijah Pool, homestead a mile east of the centre; buildings gone. Of the children, Jephthah entered the ministry; Abijah, Ohio; Mrs. Jessie Dyer, Ashfield. Jonathan Munroe, homestead south of the centre, the farm now owned by Lewis Shaw; formerly known as the Caleb Beals place. Daniel Streeter, homestead where Lorenzo Joy now lives perhaps, or near there. Of his children, Ozias settled in Adams; Salem, Daniel, Levi, Matilda, Chester, in Plainfield.

Lieut. Samuel Noyes, first surveyor of lumber, was here very early. Jonathan Noyes, perhaps a son, was a resident of Plainfield very early. Homestead where Edwin Kinney now lives. Children: Jonathan, Susannah, Vesta, Ira, Cephas, Sally, Samuel, Jason, Niles, Webster.

Azariah Beals, homestead on West Hill, the George Vining place; buildings gone. Samuel Streeter, homestead present place of Joseph Sears, north of the church. Children: Hannah, Joanna, died young; Jacob, went West; Susannah, Anselm, went West; Lucena, Arnold, Plainfield; Truman, went West; Samuel, Jr., went West; Nahum. John Streeter is also mentioned among the early pioneers.

Caleb White, a town officer of Cummington, 1779. Homestead south of the centre, near where Orson S. White now lives; the house gone; an old well marks the spot. Children: Ziba, Plainfield; Samuel, Plainfield (father of Orson S. White).

Josiah Shaw, homestead where Freeman Shaw recently lived. Among the children were Josiah, Jr., Plainfield; Samuel, the well-known physician; Dana, also physician; Elvira, who died unmarried at an advanced age; Nancy (Mrs. Edmund Campbell); Freeman, who lived and died on the old homestead.

Elisha Bisbee. He was a brother of Ebenezer. His home was near Henry Packard's place,—a part of Ebenezer's farm. He moved to Meredith. He is said to have had nineteen children. Benjamin Bullen, homestead was on a part of the farm owned by John Hamlin. Asa Streeter lived over the line, in Cummington, as now understood; grandfather of several now living in Cummington. Solomon Pratt, homestead in the east part of the town. Abraham Clark was another of the brothers of Jacob Clark. Homestead, Lyman Thayer's place. Children: James, Elijah, Samuel, Betsey, Lydia.

Joseph Cook, homestead perhaps in the neighborhood of Andrew Cook; among his children were Levi, Jason, Laura, Clarissa, Electa. Jacob Joy, homestead where Edwin Dyer now lives. Children: Cyrus, Plainfield; Nathan, New York City; Lucy, Lurinda; Ira, living in Hawley; Sally, Orsenus, who went West, supposed still living; Horatio N. Jeremiah Robinson, homestead where Osman Thayer now lives. Children: Mrs. Isaac Bisbee; Clara, died young; Mrs. Ezra Williams, Joshua, William, Seth. Andrew Cook, appointed a town officer of Cummington, 1779; homestead southeast part of the town. Children: Hannah and John, and perhaps others.

John Jones, homestead east of the centre; he had a son, Jacob. John Shaw, homestead present place of Samuel Loud. Of the children were Mrs. Samuel Loud, and Oakes Shaw, who went West. Ebenezer Bisbee, homestead the present place of Henry Packard, southwest part of the town. Children: Isaac, Barton, James, John, Nabby, Jennette; Arza, died young.

James Richards, homestead the present Ansel Cole place. He came from Abingdon 1787 or 1788. Children: James, one of the founders of American missions; William, also a foreign missionary; Austin, who entered the ministry; Jason (2d), still living at Plainfield Centre; Nancy, Jason (1st), and another died in infancy; Joseph, who became a physician; Lydia (Mrs. Ebenezer Snell), Cummington; and Sally (Mrs. John Mack), Plainfield.

John Hamlin, of Bridgewater, came to Cummington with his mother, a widow, when he was thirteen years old, in the year 1776. He used to say he remembered hearing the announcement of the Declaration of Independence talked of as something just done when they came through Northampton. He married Sally Town, and settled in Plainfield in 1790; homestead the present place of James Warner. Children: John, died young; Oren, died young; Reuben, settled in Plainfield; Mrs. Otis Pratt, Plainfield; Mrs. John Ford, Cummington; Lyman, Western New York and Michigan; Freeman, Plainfield, still living; Mrs. Mason Ames, Chester; Horace, now living, Granville, Ohio; John (2d), died young.

Andrew Ford, homestead south of the Cudworth place. Of his children were Elias, Levi, Andrew, Jr., Ebenezer, Polly, Elizabeth, Matilda, and another. Perhaps the Andrew Ford of the early records was the father of the one here mentioned.

Elijah Ford and Solomon were brothers of Andrew, Sr. The latter died Oct. 16, 1790. Caleb Beals, homestead where Lewis Shaw now lives. Among the children were Jacob, Plainfield; Comfort, Plainfield; David, Plainfield; Nancy, died unmarried; Betsey (Mrs. Ira Hamlin); Eben, Plainfield; Elijah, Plainfield.

Abijah Snow, homestead on the West Hill; a man of considerable note. Joseph Clark, a brother of Jacob Clark. Jacob Hawes, homestead where Albert Gurney now lives; family went West fifty years ago or more. Ephraim Lloyd, homestead where William Jones now resides. Of his children were Charles, who settled in Cummington, and Huldah. Benjamin Dyer, homestead present place of Samuel Bartlett, Ashfield, near the Plainfield line. Children: Benjamin, Jr., Plainfield; Jacob, Ashfield; Anson, entered the ministry at the West, a missionary to the Indians; Mrs. Hiram Beales, Ashfield; Christopher, Ashfield; Alvin, now living near the old homestead; Randall, Ohio.

Rev. Moses Hallock, homestead present Spearman place, Plainfield Centre. Children: William A. Hallock, the well-known agent, for so many years, of the American Tract Society; Gerard Hallock, editor of the Journal of Commerce; Martha, who died unmarried; Leavitt, Plainfield; Homan, the type-manufacturer. He first was a missionary in Smyrna, and returned to make type.

Abel Warner, homestead where Francis Joy now lives. Of his children were Ira, Lorenzo, Polly (Mrs. Leonard Joy), Theodore, Sylvanus, Justus Warner (father of the author, Charles Dudley Warner), Sally (Mrs. Taylor), Fanny (Mrs. Reuben Hamlin), Rosamond (Mrs. Townsley).

Elijah Warner, homestead south part of the town. Children: Betsey (Mrs. Simeon Streeter), James, Melancey (Mrs. Howlet), Cushing, William, Elijah, Jr., Wells, Roswell, Jennette. Cushing, Wells, and Jennette—all unmarried—reside on the old homestead.

Barnabas Packard (son of Barnabas of Cummington) was an early settler of Plainfield. His homestead was in the southwest part of the town. Of his children, Barnabas settled in Plainfield; Norton, Pittsfield; Milton, Missouri; Roswell, Racine, Wis.; Achsah (Mrs. Hiram Upham); Patty (Mrs. Nathan Beales). Sally and Ruby died unmarried.

Asa Joy came to Plainfield very early; he had two sons, John and Walter, and one daughter, Ruth, who died unmarried. Stephen Hayward, appointed on a committee to lay out roads in No. 5, Sept. 26, 1764. He was very probably a brother of Joseph Hayward, the grandfather of Stephen Hayward, now living in Plainfield; but, according to the family tradition as stated by the latter, they did not settle here, nor in Cummington, though they were proprietors,—the Haywards of Cummington being more distant connections, if related at all. To throw more light on this point, however, we add the statement (as furnished by Stephen) of his grandfather's family of Concord, Joseph Hayward. Children: James, of Plainfield, as elsewhere stated; John, Concord; Simeon, Phillipstown; Stephen, who went West; Joseph, New Hampshire; Asa, died young. There were also six daughters.

Noah Packard, homestead present Roswell Davison place. Children: Mrs. James Bisbee; Iram, who went to Ohio; Mrs. Jacob Porter, Cummington; Olive, who died unmarried; Noah, who went through to Ohio on foot, starting the day after he was twenty-one; David, who later in life went to Ohio.

Joseph Beals came in 1779 and settled opposite the present residence of Albert Dyer, in a small house afterward burned, as stated in the tract "Mountain Miller." He then built on the other side a house which is a part of the present dwelling, the kitchen being the identical room where his conversion took place, as stated in the tract. He afterward removed to where Nelson Cook now lives. Children: Samuel, Plainfield; Joseph, who succeeded his father for many years in the mill; Robert (father of Mrs. Albert Dyer); Lydia, died young (the first death described in the tract); Polly (the other death mentioned in the tract); and Mrs. William Reed, Albany.

Gideon Clark, spoken of in Cummington affairs as early as 1772. James Porter came about 1780; among the children were Polly, Abigail, Hannah, and James. Jacob Nash, about 1780-83, was a Revolutionary soldier; homestead the present place of Stephen Parsons. Children: Arvin, Plainfield (father of James A., the present proprietor of the grist-mill); Roxana and Sybil, who died unmarried; Mrs. Jacob Pratt, Mrs. David Crittenden. Peter B. Beals, whose family went West at an early day. Eli and Peter were two of the children.

James Hayward came in 1793 and settled where his son Stephen is now living, at the advanced age of ninety-one. Children: Stephen, on the old homestead; James, the professor in Harvard University; Joseph, a bridge-builder of Troy, died in South America; Tilly, entered the ministry of the Swedenborgian Church, died the present year (1878). Two children died in infancy. One daughter, Mrs. Elisha Mack, of Albany. Stephen says there were five brothers came to this country originally, and all spelled their name differently.

Levi Stetson, homestead west part of the town. Children: Levi, Whitcomb, Judson, all of Plainfield; Mrs. Levi Cook, Mrs. Philip Packard. Jesse Dyer came about the close of the Revolution, and settled in Ashfield, near Plainfield, on the present farm of Alvin Dyer. Children: Jared, Plainfield; Oakes, Plainfield; Bela, Plainfield, moved to Ohio late in life; Albert, Plainfield; Samuel, Plainfield; Mrs. Ebenezer Crosby, Wisconsin; Newell Dyer (father of Charles N. Dyer, present town clerk), Plainfield.

David Whiting, came from Abingdon in 1790 or 1791; homestead in Cummington; then to Plainfield on the farm now owned by Deacon Clark; buildings gone. Children: Addison, died young; Mrs. James Joy, Mrs. James Warner, Plainfield; Mrs. Dr. Dana Shaw, moved West; Mrs. Freeman Shaw, Mrs. Freeman Hamlin, Plainfield; Randall, Plainfield, moved to New York; Theodore, New York State; Mrs. Royal Hibbard, New York; Chandler, Plainfield; Lewis, Saratoga. Oliver Tirrell, homestead east part of the town. Children: Mehitabel (Mrs. Apollos Gardner); Ezra, Jason, Jereniah, Joshua, Plainfield; Silence (Mrs. Wm. Winslow), Salome, Marila (Mrs. Daniels). Benjamin Town, homestead where Russell Tirrell now lives. Among the children were Candace (Mrs. Steele); Benjamin, Plainfield; Chloe, died unmarried; Younglove, Plainfield; John, died young.

Ebenezer Dickinson, homestead on land owned in Hawley; buildings gone. Among the children were Abner, died young; Anna; Roxana, unmarried; Elizabeth (Mrs. Coddington); Ebenezer, Jr., Hawley; Abner (2d), died young; Apphia (Mrs. Crowell Hawley); Hannah (Mrs. Hunt); Mary (Mrs. Noyes); John B., Plainfield; Erastus, a minister.

Samuel Stoddard, homestead southeast part of the town; buildings gone. Among the children were Malinda (Mrs. Lincoln), Sally (Mrs. Whitman), Sukey (Mrs. Philo Packard), Electa (Mrs. Oakes Dyer), Laura (Mrs. Packard), Mrs. Willard Beals, Mrs. Wm. Packard, Cummington. Giles Atkins, homestead extreme northwest part. Among the children were Elisha, Plainfield; Freeman, Isaac, Hawley; Sarah (Mrs. Jordan). Benjamin Gardner, east part of the town. Among the children were Benjamin, Jr., Rachel, Warren, William, Gideon. Jacob Gardner, east part of the town. Among the children were Jacob, Jr., Apollos.

George Vining, Abingdon, 1785-90; homestead west part of the town; buildings gone. Children: Melvin, who went West; Freeman, Derby, Vt.; George, Plainfield; Scott, Sand Lake, N. Y.; Marcus Cullen, Cummington; Mrs. Thomas Kingman, Mrs. Robert Beals, Mrs. Hunter Chester, Mrs. Jacob Stetson, Mrs. Joseph Woods, Springfield. Tract No. 354, American Tract Society, relates to a member of this family.

Jacob Allen, homestead on West Hill, where Mr. Brown now lives. Among the children were Mehitabel (Mrs. Dr. Richards), Molly (Mrs. John Packard, Jr.), Celia (Mrs. Daniel Richards), Jacob, Jr., Ward, Susannah, Philena, Timothy, Almon, Alden, Miranda. Family all removed from town at an early day.

Ebenezer Nash, homestead half a mile north of the church; buildings gone. Among the children were Electa (Mrs. Amos Tirrell, Jr.); Polly (Mrs. Josiah Torrey, Jr.); Vinson, Ohio; Sally, died unmarried; Diadama (Mrs. Sadler), Abisha, Plainfield.

Amos Tirrell, homestead where Merritt Torrey now lives, west part of the town. Among the children were Hannah (Mrs. Samuel Thayer), Isaac, Amos, Jr., Oren, Arza, Abraham S., Plainfield; Clarissa, died young; James, Plainfield.

Joseph Gloyd, homestead southeast part of the town. Among the children were Levi, Joseph, Jr., Bethuel, and several daughters. David Stowell, homestead east part of the town; buildings gone; land owned by William Jones. Among his children were Nahum, Sally (Mrs. Caleb Packard), David, William, Mehitable (Mrs. William Torrey), Hannah, Clarissa. Jeremiah Stockwell, homestead where James A. Winslow now lives. Among the children were Hannah, Jonathan, Plainfield; Jeremiah, Consider, Plainfield; Parley, Plainfield; Hannah, Matilda, Sally. Caleb Joy, homestead where Charlotte Lincoln now lives. Among the children were John, settled on the homestead; Sally (Mrs. Noah Pixley).

John Campbell came very early; homestead where Levi N. Campbell now lives; house near the present. Children: Ebenezer, Northampton; Levi (father of Levi N., now living at the old place); Edmund, Plainfield; Sally, Amasa, Plainfield, Vt.; Betsey (Mrs. Pool). Whitcomb Pratt, homestead west part of the town; came from Weymouth. Among his children were Jacob, Plainfield; Otis, Plainfield; Austin, Cummington; Mrs. Pool, Mrs. Charles Gloyd; two daughters were married abroad. Daniel L. Pratt, brother of the above, homestead in what is popularly known as "Shoe-String Hollow." Among his children were Harvey, who went West; William, Plainfield, then to Ohio with his father and the family. Amos Crittenden (his father probably came into town with him), homestead near where Mark Howes now lives. Among the children were Amos, Jr., Plainfield; Matthias, Plainfield; Azriel, Plainfield.

Benjamin Carr, homestead near where Deacon Barber now lives. Among his children were Oliver, Plainfield; Benjamin, Plainfield; John, Plainfield, afterward to Buckland; Lucinda, died unmarried; Dolly, died unmarried; Candace (Mrs. Howard, of Hawley); Sally, married in Buckland. Philip Packard, homestead northwest part of the town; buildings gone down; land owned by Joseph Sears. Among the children were Amasa, Ohio; Philip, Ohio; Nabby, Patty, Jane, Josiah. Benjamin Gloyd, homestead where Charles C. Gloyd, a grandson, now lives. Among his children were Stephen, Plainfield; Philena (Mrs. Consider Stockwell), Plainfield; James, Plainfield; Benjamin, Plainfield; Sarah, married in Hawley. Elijah Gloyd, homestead north part of the town; buildings gone. Elijah, Harvey, James, Almira.

REMINISCENCES OF JOHN BISBEE.

There is now living at Plainfield Centre, Dec. 26, 1878, one who was nearly four years old when Gen. Washington took the oath as President of the United States, in 1789. John Bisbee is a venerable relic of a past age. He was born July 3, 1785, and is therefore twenty-two days older than the district of Plainfield. His father, Ebenezer Bisbee, was in the Revolutionary army during the first three years or a part of that time. Of his wages he saved $20 Continental money, and depreciated at that. Coming to Cummington in 1779 with the $20, he bought twenty acres of land where Henry Packard now lives, paying out all of his money, but having left a robust constitution and an iron will to carve out a home for himself and his family. John Bisbee was born at the homestead, and has lived at Plainfield all his life except seven years spent in Cummington. He said to the writer that he had often been to the grist-mill of Joseph Beals when young; that Mr. Beals always reached out his hand quick to greet any one coming in. When asked if Mr. Beals ever told him he must be a good boy and become a Christian, he replied in substance, "His talk always looked that way."

Mr. Bisbee resides with his daughter, Mrs. Campbell, and is calmly waiting the end of life, every night at a stated hour of prayer committing himself to the arms of his heavenly Father with a childlike trust that all is well, whether the morning dawn upon him here or in the better land beyond.*

The first marriage notice upon the books of the town is the following:

"A purpose of marriage made public Aug. 11, 1785, between Elijah Ford and Amia Cook." Same date, "between Joseph Easton and Mary Wood."

It is difficult to give from the record the first birth in town, as the place is not usually mentioned, and children born in families before removing to town are often recorded afterward. The first may be the following:

"Isaac Bisbee, son of Ebenezer, born April 2, 1779."

The following early marriages appear:

Married in Ashfield, by Rev. Jacob Sherwin, Jan. 23, 1777, Amos Crittenden, of Ashfield, to Phebe McIntyre, of "Hatfield Equivalent."
Stephen Smith and Hannah McIntyre, both of "Hatfield Equivalent." July 17, 1777.

Simon Burroughs, of "Hatfield Equivalent." and Hannah Noyes, of Cummington, Aug. 20, 1782.

MERCHANTS.

Jonathan Perkins was an early merchant. His advertisements appear in the Hampshire Gazette of 1794. Jason Richards supposes Perkins did not trade after 1803 or '4. He was very likely the first merchant. Perhaps down to his time the Lazell store in Cummington may have been the principal point of trade for this section, as that was probably opened during the Revolutionary war. John Mack was also an early merchant, commencing 1803 or '4. His store was in a building south of and near to the main building now owned by Mr. Smith. About 1821 he built the store now occupied by Mrs. Packard. There he continued in trade until his death, about 1833. He had for a time associated with himself his son John, Jr. The store was then run by John and Elisha Mack. Later were Whitney Hitchcock, Aaron Sawyer, Alden Clark, Eugene Shaw, Wanton Gilbert, Charles Mack, and others down to Charles Burt, who sold to the present proprietor. Mr. Pool was an early merchant at the east corners.

The store of Iram Packard, now the dwelling-house of Levi Clark, opposite the meeting-house, was established about 1830. After Packard, Aaron Sawyer was in trade there for some years. He sold to Jacob Clark & Brother. They traded till 1858 or about that time, and then closed their business.

The present store of Leonard Campbell succeeded the hat business carried on by Ira Hamlin. Mr. Campbell opened in trade about 1852, and has continued to the present time. About 1825, and for a few years later, a store was occupied by Isaac K. Lincoln, in the eastern part of the town, opposite where Newton Lincoln now lives. He was followed for a short time by Gurney & Brother, after which the store was closed.

Abner Gurney traded at the centre for a time in the Moses Hallock building. Miss Hotchkin carried on the business of making palm-leaf hats for several years, putting out the braiding to families in the vicinity. George Vining kept store where Wesley Beals now lives,—not continued long. He also opened a tavern for a short time.

TAVERNS.

On the Joseph Sears place was a tavern probably before 1800, kept by Samuel Streeter. The present house is partly the same building, and is one of the oldest buildings in town. The tavern of Salem Streeter was on the site of the present house of Lorenzo W. Joy. The Mack tavern was opened a few years later than his store. The old house was on the site of the house at the East Corners now owned by Clark Smith. Dr. Torrey's tavern was at the East Corners, opposite the house of Clark Smith, at the corner, on what is now the place of Rev. Solomon Clark. It was afterward the residence of Dr. Porter. Later the buildings were removed. Abel Warner kept a tavern at the present place of Francis W. Joy. The change in the travel caused this to be discontinued. On the present Orange Stetson place was a tavern kept by Mr. Robbins. After Robbins it was kept by Adin Ruggles.

* John Bisbee died two weeks after the interview above given.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Solomon Bond was probably the earliest physician in Plainfield. He was here in 1794, and no doubt for some years before that time lived at the village. Dr. Barney Torrey is given in Porter's history as the next. He resided on the southeast corner, at the east end of the village. Practiced many years. Dr. Jacob Porter followed him, and had the same residence. Dr. Porter gave much attention to scientific subjects, and did not continue an active medical practice. He died about 1846-47. Dr. Samuel Shaw resided at the east end of the village, on the northwest corner. Practiced from 1824 to 1854; was widely consulted, and had an extensive practice in this and other towns. He was a fellow of the Massachusetts Medical Society. He was disabled by being thrown from his buggy, in 1854. Since that time have been Dr. Charles Booker, about one year; Dr. John Eaton, about three years; Dr. G. H. Taylor, ten or twelve years; Dr. Lamb, one year; Dr. Daniel Thayer, two years; and the present physician, Dr. G. R. Fessenden, who came to the place and commenced practice in August, 1878.

Lawyers have never found Plainfield a profitable place to practice their profession.

It is said that Wm. Cullen Bryant, during the few years that he devoted to that profession, located in Plainfield for a short time. Porter's history says several practiced for a short time each, but no one permanently. Legal papers were drawn in early times largely by James Richards, and afterward by his son, Col. Jason Richards.

The four items below are from the old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

Sept. 14, 1794.—Jonathan Perkins, merchant, advertises that all indebted must settle up by making immediate payment to Dr. Solomon Bond, and offers to take butter, cheese, flax, tow-cloth, and wheat.

Sept. 9, 1800.—The sale of patent rights and territory for the same is not a device of modern times. Samuel Davison offers the Rev. Ezra Wells' patent washing-machine and territorial rights in Hampshire and Berkshire Counties.

Sept. 9, 1812.—A pattern for young ladies. Miss Lana Smith, aged sixteen, living in Plainfield, spun and reeled 133 knots and 17 threads of good woolen yarn from one spindle in one day while the sun was up. A month later it is announced that Miss Lydia Ford, of Plainfield, on the 29th of August last, spun and reeled from one spindle 142 knots.

ORGANIZATION.

The inconvenience of attending church in Cummington, and of going to the centre of that town for public business, soon led to a proposition for a separate town. The act of incorporation was passed March 16, 1785. The Revolution was complete, but the old practice of the colonial Legislature to incorporate districts rather than towns was still adhered to in this case, and a few others. The district became a town June 15, 1807.

The following records from the books show more fully the several steps of the organization, the names of the men chosen to office, and the business transacted:

WARRANT FOR THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

HAMPSHIRE Co., ss.—To Isaac Joy, of Plainfield, in the County of Hampshire, greeting. Pursuant to an act of this Commonwealth for erecting the Northerly part of Cummington, in the County of Hampshire, into a District by the name of Plainfield, and investing the inhabitants of the said District with all the privileges and immunities that other towns or districts within this Commonwealth do enjoy; also, empowering Nahum Eager, Esq., to issue his warrant directed to some principal inhabitant of said district, requiring him to call a meeting of said inhabitants in order to choose town officers, as by law towns or Districts are empowered to choose in the month of March annually.

These are, therefore, in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to require you, the said Isaac Joy, to notify and warn the inhabitants of said district of Plainfield that they assemble themselves together at the dwelling-house of Mr. Simon Burroughs, in said Plainfield, on Monday, the 25th day of July, instant, at one of the clock in the afternoon, then and there to choose all such officers as towns within this Commonwealth are empowered to choose in the month of March annually. Hereof, you nor they may not fail. Given under my hand and seal, at Worthington, this 4th day of July, 1785.

NAHUM EAGER, Justice of the Peace.

FROM THE TOWN RECORDS.

First District-Meeting.—At a legal meeting of the inhabitants of the District of Plainfield, at the dwelling-house of Mr. Simon Burroughs, in said District, on Monday, the 25th day of July, A.D. 1785, Lieut. Ebenezer Colson was chosen Moderator; Lieut. Joshua Shaw, District Clerk; Lieut. Ebenezer Colson, Lieut. John Packard, and Lieut. John Cunningham, Selectmen; Lieut. Joshua Shaw, District Treasurer; Simon Burroughs, Constable; Isaac Joy and Lieut. John Packard, Tythingmen; Josiah Torrey, Solomon Nash, Nathan Fay, William Daniels, Jacob Clark, Abijah Pool, Jonathan Munroe, David White, and Daniel Streeter, Surveyors of Highways; Lieut. Samuel Noyes, Surveyor of Lumber; Daniel Streeter, Sealer of Leather; John Streeter, Fence-Viewer; Asa Joy and Azariah Beals, Hog-Reeves; David White, Field-Driver; John Streeter, Deer-Reeve. The meeting dissolved.

At a legal meeting of the inhabitants of the District of Plainfield at Mr. Jonathan Munroe's, in said district, on Thursday, the 11th day of August, 1785, made choice of Lieut. John Packard, Moderator. Voted to raise £14 to hire preaching the present year. Voted that Isaac Joy, Lieut. John Packard, and Lieut. John Cunningham hire a gospel minister to preach for us the present year. Voted that three days upon the poll at four shillings per day each hand, and upon the estates in proportion to our other tax, be raised to repair the highways the present year. Voted that Joshua Shaw, Simon Burroughs, and Noah Packard be a committee to request of the town of Cummington a division of the line and a settlement between the town and the district of Plainfield. Voted that Jonathan Munroe's dwelling-house, in said Plainfield, be the place to hold town-meetings, and also meetings on the Lord's Day for the future.

At a legal meeting, Sept. 5, 1785, Lieut. Ebenezer Colson, Moderator, Voted not to accept of the report of the committee appointed to settle the line between Cummington and Plainfield. Voted that the West-side-brook inhabitants should have their proportionable share of the preaching on that side of the brook. Voted that the above committee, in conjunction with a committee of Cummington, shall measure the south line of Cummington from the northwest corner of Worthington, according to the bill of incorporation of said town, and also make a line upon the east side of Cummington and Plainfield, and settle the line between Cummington and Plainfield according to the bill of incorporation. The meeting dissolved.

Jan. 23, 1786.—At a legal meeting, Lieut. Colson, Moderator, voted that a division of the county should not take place, but that the courts should be held in the centre of said county. A clause in the warrant in relation to paper currency was passed over, the town fathers not caring, perhaps, to discuss the great financial questions involved in the hard times of that period, as they are in those of the present.

Monday, March 13, 1786.—Lieut. Ebenezer Colson, Moderator. Chose Lieut. Joshua Shaw District Clerk. Chose Lieut. Ebenezer Colson, Caleb White, and David White, Selectmen; Lieut. Joshua Shaw, Treasurer; Lieut. John Cunningham, Constable; Joseph Cook, Josiah Shaw, Stephen Walker, Elisha Bisbee, Azariah Beals, Benjamin Bullin, Asa Streeter, Jared Jay, Jr., Surveyors of Highways; Solomon Pratt, Surveyor of Lumber; Daniel Streeter, Sealer of Leather; Joseph Beals, Tythingman; Abraham Clark and Joseph Cook, Hog-Reeves; Isaac Joy, Fence-Viewer; Lieut. John Packard and Jacob Joy, Wardens; Asa Dunbar, Deer-Reef. Voted to raise twenty pounds to hire preaching the present year. Voted not to raise any money for to support a school. Voted that the meeting shall be holden at Mr. Jonathan Munroe's the ensuing year. Voted to raise forty shillings to defray district charges. Voted that Andrew Cook, Abijah Pool, Lieut. John Packard, be a committee to hire a gospel minister to preach with us the ensuing year. Voted that Andrew Cook, Noah Packard, and Caleb White be a committee to settle the line between Cummington and Plainfield, according to the Bill of incorporation. Voted twelve shillings upon the Poll to repair the Highways, and upon the estates in the same proportion as other taxes. Voted that the surveyors shall prosecute those persons who shall refuse or neglect to work out what is set to them in the highway rate by the first day of November next. Voted that a road be allowed from Noah Packard's running westerly between Nathan Fay and Josiah Torrey, two rods in width, one-half on said Fay's land, and the other on Josiah Torrey's land until it strikes the road on the west end of their land, said land to be given or receipted. Voted a road from John Jones to the turn of the road between James Porter and Abraham Clark. Voted a road beginning four rods south of James Porter's land, and running easterly between Josiah Shaw's House and barn; from thence to the south side of John Shaw's dwelling-house, as it is fenced to the east line of old No. 5.

Town-meetings were held "at the house of Simon Burroughs;" "at the house of Mr. Jonathan Munroe;" "at Mr. Samuel Streeter's barn;" "at Capt. John Cunningham's new barn;" "at the dwelling-house of Lieut. David White;" "at Mr. Samuel Streeter's dwelling-house." The first town-meeting "at the meeting-house" was held Aug. 22, 1792, and they were held there continuously until March 2, 1846. July 4, 1846, a town-meeting was held at Salem Streeter's Hall, and after that to Nov. 8, 1847, inclusive. This was in the present house of Lorenzo W. Joy. Feb. 7, 1848, they met "at the town-hall in said town," evidently for the first time.

The town-hall and school-house, combined, was finished the summer before. The proceedings to secure the erection of the building began two years earlier than this, and were as follows:

"March 4, 1846.—Voted to choose a committee of three to consult, examine, inquire, and ascertain how, where, and on what terms and conditions, and at what expense, the town can best build a town-house, and to report at a future town-meeting."

Capt. James Cook, Josiah F. Rude, Freeman Shaw, were said committee. The committee reported July 4, 1846, that an arrangement had been entered into with a committee of the centre school district to jointly erect a building for town and school purposes, the district to furnish the ground, and pay four-ninths of the cost of erection, exclusive of the settees for the hall; the building to be 32 by 46, according to the plan drawn. The committee estimated the expense at $900. The report was approved by the town, and the building committee on the part of the town were Josiah F. Rude, William Warner, and Jacob Pratt. Before this union with the school district, a similar movement was contemplated with the artillery company in the erection of an armory, or "gun-house," as it is known by the citizens. The plan was not, however, adopted.

SELECTMEN FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

1785.—Ebenezer Colson, John Packard, John Cunningham.
 1786.—Caleb White, David White, Ebenezer Colson.
 1787.—Ebenezer Colson, John Packard, John Cunningham.
 1788.—Isaac Joy, Ebenezer Bisbee, James Porter.
 1789.—John Packard, John Cunningham, Isaac Joy.
 1790.—James Richards, Caleb White, Ebenezer Bisbee.
 1791.—Jeremiah Robinson, John Cunningham, James Richards.
 1792-94.—John Cunningham, Ebenezer Bisbee, James Richards.
 1795.—Joseph Beals, Ebenezer Bisbee, James Richards.
 1796.—Caleb White, Ebenezer Bisbee, James Richards.
 1797.—John Cunningham, Caleb White, Ebenezer Bisbee.
 1798.—Thomas Shaw, James Hayward, Ebenezer Bisbee.
 1799.—Ebenezer Colson, Jr., Ebenezer Bisbee, Thomas Shaw.
 1800.—John Hamlin, Thomas Shaw, Ebenezer Colson, Jr.
 1801.—James Hayward, Ebenezer Colson, Jr., John Hamlin.
 1802.—Ebenezer Bisbee, Ebenezer Colson, Jr., John Hamlin.
 1803.—Peter B. Beals, James Richards, Ebenezer Colson, Jr.
 1804.—Amos Crittenden, Elijah Warner, Ebenezer Bisbee.
 1805-7.—John Cunningham, James Richards, Ebenezer Bisbee.
 1808.—Nehemiah Joy, James Richards, Ebenezer Colson, Jr.
 1809-13.—James Richards, John Hamlin, Elijah Warner.
 1814.—John Hamlin, Nehemiah Joy, Jacob Joy.
 1815-18.—James Richards, John Hamlin, Elijah Warner.
 1819.—Robert Beals, John Hamlin, Elijah Warner.
 1820.—John Hamlin, Elijah Warner, Robert Beals.
 1821.—John Hamlin, Elijah Warner, Iram Packard.
 1822.—Elijah Warner, Iram Packard, John Packard.
 1823.—John Hamlin, Elijah Warner, Iram Packard.
 1824.—John Hamlin, Elijah Warner, John Mack.
 1825.—Justus Warner, John Packard, John Mack.
 1826.—Samuel Shaw, John Packard, Justus Warner.
 1827.—John Packard, John Mack, Samuel Shaw.
 1828.—Erastus Bates, John Packard, Samuel Shaw.
 1829.—Iram Packard, Samuel Shaw, Erastus Bates.
 1830.—John Hamlin, Elijah Warner, Samuel Shaw.
 1831.—Jacob Pratt, Elijah Warner, Robert Beals.
 1832.—Isaac K. Lincoln, Samuel Shaw, Erastus Bates.
 1833.—John Carr, Samuel Shaw, Isaac K. Lincoln.
 1834.—Samuel White, Samuel Shaw, John Carr.
 1835.—Stephen Gloyd, John Carr, Samuel White.
 1836.—William Robinson, Samuel White, Stephen Gloyd.
 1837.—Jerijah Barber, Robert Beals, Stephen Gloyd.
 1838-39.—Stephen Gloyd, William Robinson, Jerijah Barber.
 1840.—Albert Dyer, Samuel White, Stephen Gloyd.
 1841.—Stephen Gloyd, Jerijah Barber, Albert Dyer.
 1842.—William N. Ford, Stephen Gloyd, Jerijah Barber.
 1843.—Elias Giddings, Stephen Gloyd, Jerijah Barber.
 1844.—Stephen Gloyd, William Robinson, Albert Dyer.
 1845.—Stephen Hayward, Stephen Gloyd, Jerijah Barber.
 1846.—Freeman Hamlin, Stephen Gloyd, Stephen Hayward.
 1847.—Jacob Pratt, Stephen Hayward, Freeman Hamlin.
 1848.—Wm. A. Hawley, Stephen Hayward, Freeman Hamlin.

1849.—Levi N. Campbell, Freeman Hamlin, Wm. A. Hawley.
 1850.—Jacob Pratt, Stephen Hayward, Levi N. Campbell.
 1851-52.—Wm. N. Ford, Freeman Hamlin, Levi N. Campbell.
 1853.—Albert Dyer, Wm. N. Ford, Levi N. Campbell.
 1854.—Wanton C. Gilbert, Lewis Shaw, Levi N. Campbell.
 1855.—Samuel W. Lincoln, Samuel Dyer, Lewis Shaw.
 1856.—Stephen Hayward, Levi N. Campbell, Samuel W. Lincoln.
 1857.—Joseph Sears, Levi N. Campbell, Samuel W. Lincoln.
 1858.—Fordyce Whitmarsh, Levi N. Campbell, Samuel W. Lincoln.
 1859.—Levi N. Campbell, Samuel W. Lincoln, Fordyce Whitmarsh.
 1860-62.—Levi N. Campbell, Samuel W. Lincoln, Merritt Torrey.
 1863.—Levi N. Campbell, Merritt Torrey, Merritt Jones.
 1864-66.—Levi N. Campbell, Joseph Sears, Merritt Torrey.
 1867-69.—Levi N. Campbell, Lewis Shaw, Jacob W. Pratt.
 1870.—Lewis Shaw, Joseph Sears, Jacob W. Pratt.
 1871.—Lewis Shaw, Jacob W. Pratt, Homer Cook.
 1872.—Levi N. Campbell, Homer Cook, Stephen Hayward.
 1873.—Lewis Shaw, Joseph Sears, Seth W. Clark.
 1874-75.—Lewis Shaw, Seth W. Clark, James A. Nash.
 1876-77.—Lewis Shaw, James A. Winslow, James A. Nash.
 1878.—Lewis Shaw, James A. Nash, E. A. Atkins.
 1879.—L. N. Campbell, James A. Nash, E. A. Atkins.

TOWN CLERKS.*

Joshua Shaw, 1785-94; John Cunningham, 1795-96; James Richards, 1797-1800; Thomas Shaw, 1801-14; John Mack, 1815-17; Cyrus Joy, 1818-20; Robert Beals, 1821-27; Justus Warner, 1828; Leavitt Hallock, 1829-30; Erastus Bates, 1831; John Mack, Jr., 1832; Jason Richards, 1833-40; Jacob Clark, 1841-43; Jason Richards, 1844-47; Levi Black, 1848-52; Freeman Hamlin, 1853-75; Charles N. Dyer, 1876-80.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

From 1786 to 1807, inclusive, Plainfield was simply a District of Cummington for the purpose of representation. During that period the representatives to the Legislature were as follows:

William Ward (Cummington), 1786-91, inclusive; James Richards, 1793; William Ward, 1796-97; James Richards, 1798; Ebenezer Snell (Cummington), 1800; James Richards, 1801; Ebenezer Snell, 1802; James Richards, 1803; Ebenezer Snell, 1804; James Richards, 1805; Peter Bryant and Adam Packard (Cummington), 1806.

From Plainfield Alone.—John Cunningham, 1808, annually, to 1810, inclusive; James Richards, 1811-12; John Hamlin, 1813-15; James Richards, 1816; Cyrus Joy, 1819; Elijah Warner, 1821; John Hamlin, 1823-26; Elijah Warner, 1827; John Mack, 1828-30; Erastus Bates, 1831-34; Elijah Clark, 1835-36; John Carr, 1837; Stephen Gloyd, 1839-40; Jason Richards, 1841-42; Jerijah Barber, 1846; Leavitt Hallock, 1849; Freeman Hamlin, 1850-51; Wanton C. Gilbert, 1852-53; Levi N. Campbell, 1854.

Under the District System.—Samuel W. Lincoln, 1860; Levi N. Campbell, 1865; Stephen Hayward, Jr., 1871; Merritt Torrey, 1877.

VILLAGES.

The only village in town is the one at the centre. It consists principally of one street, nearly three-quarters of a mile long, and extending east and west. This is intersected by the two roads from the south, which unite in one, north of the village, at the cemetery.

The principal public buildings—the meeting-house, the school-house, one store, and the former hotel—are at the West Corners. One store is at the East Corners. Along this one street are principally situated the private residences. Rev. Solomon Clark, the present pastor, resides at the East Corners, —having a residence with ample and convenient grounds attached. On the north side of the street, not far from the East Corners, is the old dwelling-house of Rev. Moses Hallock. On the whole, the village is a fair specimen of a secluded New England town, distant from railroads, having but little trade or business, yet with many things to attract a visitor, in the culture and refinement of the people, the pure mountain air, and the delightful scenery.

The post-office here was established about 1810. The first postmaster was John Mack. He was succeeded by John Mack, Jr., by Abner Gurney, by Jacob Clark, by Levi Clark, and by Leonard Campbell, the present incumbent.

SCHOOLS.

The subject of education received early attention. For twelve years or so after the first settlement, the appropriations made by Cunningham applied to a portion of the present town of Plainfield. But the population was scattering, and there were probably few schools attempted. After the town had been organized a year or two, small regular appropriations were made each year. Jacob Porter states that the average sum appropriated fifty years ago was $350. In later years this has been increased considerably. The statistics herewith given show that there has been quite a change at times in the number and arrangement of the districts,—increased to ten at one time, and reduced now to six. The loss of population has rendered this reduction necessary.

* In this town the clerk has invariably been also treasurer.

Plainfield was noted in early times for the private school of Rev. Moses Hallock. Settled here as a pastor in 1792, he immediately commenced his labors as an educator. More than 300 students received the benefit of his training. It is undoubtedly due largely to his personal influence that so many young men from these hill-towns sought and obtained a classical education. This school was a principal feeder of Williams College in early years. Poets, statesmen, editors, divines, and devoted missionaries were the graduates of Moses Hallock's school. Here in this quiet street is still seen the house where he lived, taught, and died. When the far-reaching results of his life and labors are considered, may we not pronounce this place almost sacred for its religious and classical memories? Among those students that have risen to distinction may be appropriately mentioned the names of William Cullen Bryant, James Richards, Jonas King, Pliny Fisk, Levi Parsons, William Richards, William Hale Maynard, Jeremiah H. Hallock, James Hayward, Sylvester Hovey, Prof. B. B. Edwards, Rev. Jonathan Woodbridge, Dr. Austin Richards, William Carmichael, M.D., and Rev. Dudley Phelps.

In later years, besides the excellent system of district schools, there have frequently been private schools, continuing for eleven weeks each, usually in the autumn months. These have afforded opportunities to the young people for the study of the languages and other branches of higher education. At present the schools are maintained for about six months in the year in each district,—divided into two terms, one in the spring and early summer, the other in the fall. In the winter one school only is maintained, and that at the centre. This is taught (1878-79) by Miss Tileston, and, though consisting of but a small number of pupils, offers the opportunity of a more advanced education than the district schools usually afford.

This school is in the town-hall building, and has a convenient room. The other district school buildings are in a fair condition. In some of the neighborhoods are district libraries.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Seven schools; attending in the summer, 187; average, 149; winter, 246; average, 190; in town between 4 and 16, 255; summer schools, 27 months; winter, 19 months, 21 days; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 6 males, 2 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $20.83; female teachers, $10.50.

January, 1847.—Nine schools; attending in the summer, 229; average, 165; winter, 292; average, 231; in town between 4 and 16, 277; attending under 4, 5; over 16, 41; summer schools, 24 months, 14 days; winter, 27 months, 14 days; total, 52 months; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 8 males, 2 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $20.23; females, $10.50.

January, 1857.—Ten schools; attending in summer, 130; average, 97; winter, 167; average, 116; attending under 5, 21; over 15, 37; in town between 5 and 15, 124; summer teachers, 10 females; winter, 6 males, and 4 females; summer schools, 28 months, 11 days; winter, 29 months, 16 days; total, 58 months, 7 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $20.25; female, $10.08.

January, 1867.—Ten schools; attending in the summer, 121; average, 108; winter, 160; average, 118; attending under 5, 14; over 15, 18; in town between 5 and 15, 104; summer teachers, 10 females; winter, 2 males, 8 females; summer schools, 26 months; winter, 22 months, 5 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $21; female, $10.50.

January, 1878.—Six schools; attending, 108; average, 69; under 5, 2; over 15, 19; in town between 5 and 16, 73; teachers, 2 males, 8 females; 1 from normal; school, 36 months; average wages of male teachers per month, $22; female, $20.34; taxation, $300; expense of superintendence, $47; printing, $7; income of local funds and dog tax, $26.

COLLEGE GRADUATES.

The following article, written by Rev. Solomon Clark, condenses into a brief space much valuable information upon this subject. Mr. Clark adds to the duties of his pastorate much careful historical research that amply qualifies him to do justice to Plainfield, as well as to other towns in Western Massachusetts. His contributions to the journals of the day are of standard authority upon these and similar topics. The first series embraces those who entered and graduated at Williams College, the figures referring to the year of graduation: James Richards, class of 1809; Cyrus Joy, 1811; William A. Hallock, 1819; Gerard Hallock, 1819; William Richards, 1819; Alden B. Vining, 1843; Martin S. Pixley, 1844; David Rood, 1844; Isaac Newton Lincoln, 1847; Alden Porter Beals, 1849; Stephen C. Pixley, 1852; Ephraim L. Lincoln, 1855; Samuel F. Shaw, 1855; Charles L. Shaw, 1864; Fordyce A. Dyer, 1865.

At Harvard University: James Hayward, class of 1819; Tilly Brown Hayward, 1820.

At Amherst College: Austin Richards, class of 1824; Erastus Dickinson, 1832; William A. Hallock, about 1858; Wm. A. Richards, 1861; Leavitt Hallock, 1863.

The whole number 22; 15 graduating at Williams, 2 at Harvard, 5 at Amherst.

Homan Hallock entered Amherst College, but ill health compelled him to leave. He afterward became a missionary printer on the Mediterranean. Foster W. Gilbert entered with the class of 1877, but failure of health prevented his graduating. The list of 22 comprises six pairs of brothers. It also contains the names of three sons of Deacon James Richards. Of the 22, 9 entered the ministry; 3 became lawyers; 1 was professor of Latin in Williams; 1 was professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in Harvard; 1 has long and very honorably been associated with the American Tract Society as corresponding secretary; 1 founded the New York Journal of Commerce, and was its editor and proprietor for many years; 1 died in the army; 4 devoted themselves to foreign missions; 1 is a surgeon in the navy; 5 are teachers. Two of the 4 foreign missionaries are still living in South Africa. It may be mentioned that Mrs. Byington, of Constantinople, and Mrs. David Rood, of South Africa, went from Plainfield. To the foregoing may be added the following professional men not graduates of college: Lewis Whiting, M.D., Saratoga, N. Y.; Emerson Warner, M.D., Virginia; Daniel Thayer, M.D., Plainfield; Almon Warner, Esq., a lawyer of Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. Spencer Dyer, Francis Torrey, superintendent of schools, Newark, N. J.; Rev. Jephthah Pool, many years ago a pastor in Windsor, Berkshire, Co.; Dr. Shepherd L. Hamlin, an eminent dentist, Cincinnati, Ohio; Dr. Joseph Beals, dentist, Greenfield.

The following names of professional men, mostly physicians, not graduates, and mostly natives of this town, are also added: Dr. Torrey, one of the earliest physicians that settled in this place. Samuel Shaw, M.D.; he first became associated with his father-in-law, Dr. Peter Bryant, of Cunningham, but in 1824, at the earnest invitation of the people, he removed to this his native town, and had an extensive ride for thirty years. He was a man of great physical endurance. The snows and blows and drifted roads of winter did not deter him from any professional service. He is said to have never lost a meal through sickness for forty-seven years. Dana Shaw, M.D., a brother of the foregoing, for over twenty-five years was a physician of Barre, N. H.

Jacob Porter, author of a historical sketch of Plainfield, full of valuable information. Dr. Porter's forte lay not in medical practice, but in some of the natural sciences,—botany, mineralogy, and the like. His contributions to several European societies won him considerable reputation. Joseph Richards, a brother of the missionaries, was a physician in Hillsdale, N. Y. G. Washington Shaw, M.D., settled in Williamsburg; highly esteemed as a physician and a citizen. Chilion Packard, M.D., in early life went South. Seth H. Pratt, M.D., went West many years ago. Newell White, M.D., is still living in Pennsylvania. James F. Richards, M.D., practiced ten years at Campello, in North Bridgewater, then went abroad for study, spending one or two years in London, Berlin, and Vienna. He now resides in Andover. Royal Joy studied with Dr. Shaw, and settled in Cummington.

Elisha Bassett studied law, and was for many years connected with the office of the United States District Court, Boston.

Elder James Clark and Elder Thomas Thayer were both ministers of the Baptist denomination. The former preached in Pennsylvania, the latter in the West. In all, 22 graduates, 23 professional men not graduates, and 3 who entered college without graduating; also, Mrs. Byington, of Constantinople, and Mrs. Rood, of South Africa, making the round number of 50.

To this may be added others of prominence. Hosea F. Stockwell, a lawyer of ability, having an extensive practice in New Philadelphia, Ohio. Away thirty-six years, he has only visited Plainfield twice,—once in 1850, and again recently: Horace Hamlin, brother of Deacon Hamlin, went to Ohio with others of this town forty-seven years ago, and has been for many years distinguished as a teacher of vocal and instrumental music. Charles Whittier spent his early days in Plainfield, took his first lessons on the piano here, and has since attained to distinction, being a professor in the Boston Conservatory of Music.

Mrs. Fidelia Cook, daughter of Stephen Hayward, Esq., a lady of much intellectual culture, superintended for a time the literary department of the Springfield Republican. Latterly deprived almost wholly of the use of her eyes, she has been obliged to seclude herself from the world of letters. Hon. Daniel Pratt was a lawyer, and is now a judge in Michigan. Francis Pratt, M.D., is a physician in Ohio. Newton Robinson, M.D., is a physician in Ohio. His father, Seth R., was a brother of William Robinson. John Packard was county recorder, and many years a clerk in the office (Cleveland, O.). Charles Dudley Warner, the well-known author, was a native of this town; a graduate of Hamilton College, class of 1851. Kirkland Hayward, a son of Stephen Hayward, became a distinguished engineer and president of a Western railroad; a man of great energy and executive ability. Erastus N. Bates is a prominent man in one of the Western States. He was a graduate of Williams College, and has filled numerous positions of responsibility in connection with the State government. Samuel Hallock resides at Beyroot, Syria. He succeeded his father (Homan) in the difficult task of preparing molds for the printing of the Arabian Bible. When the American Bible Society commenced the publication of the Arabic Bible in the city of New York, it is stated that only two persons in the world understood this particular business,—an aged German and Mr. Homan Hallock. When, after a few years, they transferred the work to Beyroot to save expense, Mr. Samuel Hallock, inheriting his father's skill, took the position his father had occupied, and has filled it ever since with much ability.

In this unequalled list of distinguished men we see clearly that this quiet town in the northwest corner of Hampshire County, not rich as judged by a material standard, possesses, nevertheless, a kind of wealth more ennobling and enduring, for which she may well be grateful.

CHURCHES.

Previous to the incorporation of the town, the inhabitants attended church at Cummington. But prompt measures were taken to set up public worship in the district. Sums of money were voted to secure preaching, and it is understood that various ministers from the neighboring towns preached in Plainfield during the year 1785. An effort was made to settle Rev. James Thompson, who undoubtedly preached here in 1786–87. This appears by the action taken as in other towns at the regular meetings. To support the gospel, to hire ministers, to provide for religious worship generally, was a part of the business for which districts and towns were organized, and it was attended to as regularly as any other town business, with or without a church.

July 24, 1786.—Voted, to agree with Mr. James Thompson to preach with us four Sabbaths upon probation.

O. c. 2, 1786.—Vote 1, to give Mr. James Thompson a call to settle in the work of the ministry in Plainfield. Committee to draft proposals, Deacon Samuel Pool, Lieut. Ebenezer Colson, Lieut. John Packard, Lieut. Joshua Shaw, Capt. John Cunningham. They reported it was not expedient to make any proposals "until such time as it may be known whether the Equivalent would be set to Plainfield or not," and further advised that a committee be chosen to acquaint Mr. Thompson with the above votes, and to agree with him to preach with us until such time as the matter may be properly adjusted. Lieut. John Packard, Capt. John Cunningham, and Isaac Joy be a committee to treat with Mr. Thompson.

This action ripened into a formal call May 14, 1787, with an offer of a yearly salary of £60. The invitation was declined. But other arrangements to found the institutions of religion went steadily forward. Aug. 16, 1787, a committee was appointed to find the centre of Plainfield, and to agree upon a place which they shall think most proper for erecting a meeting-house. May 23, 1791, a spot was agreed upon, and October 27th it was voted to build a house 55½ feet by 42½. November 23d a committee, consisting of Caleb White, Capt. John Cunningham, Capt. James Richards, Andrew Cook, and John Hamlin, was appointed to procure materials and carry on the building of said meeting-house in such a manner as shall be most advantageous to the district according to their best discretion. April 23d voted that the owners of pews in the meeting-house procure rum to raise said building. The meeting-house was raised soon after, but, owing to the limited resources of the district at that time, it was not completed till 1797. It was then dedicated on the 15th of June, two sermons being preached on the occasion,—one by Rev. Aaron Bascom, of Chester; the other by Rev. John Leland, of Peru.

Meanwhile, the church had been organized Aug. 31, 1786. The members admitted that day were Andrew Ford, Sarah Ford, John Packard, Hannah Packard, Andrew Ford, Jr., Sarah Ford, Solomon Nash, Martha Nash, Elijah Ford, Solomon Ford, Amy White, Martha Town, Martha Robinson, Molly Packard, Samuel Pool, Rebekah Pool, Moses Curtis, John Jones, Ruth Jones. Admitted in 1790, were Abijah Snow, Sarah Snow, James Richards, Lydia Richards. In 1791, Rebekah Walker, Betsey Burroughs, Lydia Campbell, Joseph Clark, Alice Clark, Hannah Colson. In 1792, Jacob Hawes, Betsey Hawes, Shubael Fuller, Solomon Pratt, Remember Pratt, Jacob Clark, Susanna Clark, Ephraim Gloyd, Hannah Gloyd, Abijah Pool, Sarah Pool, Silence Hammond, Joseph Beals, Jephthah Pool, Benjamin Dyer, Abigail Smith, Polly Streeter, Phebe White, Mehitable Walker, Hannah Joy, Caleb Joy, Sarah Joy, Priscilla Snow, Patty Packard, Rev. Moses Hallock, Margaret Hallock, Bethia Hosford. In 1793, Anna Ford, Sarah Burroughs, Alpheus Parse, Mary Parse. In 1794, Hannah Barton, Mary Bates, Polly Easton, David Whiting, Sally Warner, Miriam Colson. In 1796, James Hayward, Elizabeth Hayward, Hannah Stowell.

The first deacons were Messrs. John Packard and James Richards.

March 3, 1791, the church voted to give Mr. Moses Hallock a call to settle with them in the work of the gospel ministry. March 14th the district concurred with the church, and offered him £90 settlement and £45 a year salary for the first two years, then to increase £5 a year until it amounts to £60. Mr. Hallock first declined, on account of ill health; but a year later the call was renewed, and his ordination took place July 11, 1792. The sermon was by Rev. Samuel Whitman, of Goshen; text, "And they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and the profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean." This was published in pamphlet form, and is said to be now very scarce.

For the ordination of Mr. Hallock, the town voted that an invitation be extended to ministers of the gospel, candidates for the ministry, students in colleges, together with the parents, brothers, and sisters of Rev. Moses Hallock, and such others as he shall see fit to invite to an entertainment with the council, at such place as shall hereafter be appointed.

Voted that Capt. John Cunningham make the above entertainment in a decent and handsome manner, and lay his "accounts" before the district for allowance.

The ordination having taken place July 11, 1792, Capt. John Cunningham was allowed £3 9s. 6d. for boarding Mr. Hallock and keeping his horse eleven weeks, and the sum of £3 10s. 3d. for making the entertainment; from which we may infer that it was, after all, a frugal affair, economically arranged.

At this time they voted to paint the meeting-house. A question of church architecture must have arisen, as they voted that the window frames be let in between the studs.

Jan. 13, 1794, voted to receive two tiers of lots off of the southerly part of Hawley, with the inhabitants thereon to enjoy ministerial privileges with us, upon condition of their obligating themselves to bear their proportion with us in supporting the gospel. Voted that the selectmen take an obligation of the aforesaid inhabitants agreeable to the above vote. This "bond," if in existence, must be a document of considerable interest, and one which the church officers could occasionally read to the present inhabitants of "the two tiers of lots" taken from Hawley if they fail to pay their fair share of church expenses; for they must be held not only in the "bonds of the gospel," but under "legal bonds" to the church of Plainfield. This appears to be seven years before the annexation took place.

During Mr. Hallock's ministry the church prospered, and many times of special revival occurred. A writer notes one of 1790 (showing Mr. Hallock must have preached here considerably before his ordination); 17 joined the church in one day. In 1797 there was a general awakening in every part of the town, and 31 persons joined the church that year.

"July 1, 1798, 24 persons adorned the aisle at one time, and appeared to rejoice at an opportunity to confess the Lord Jesus."

In 1800 an excellent bell was procured, partly at the expense of the district and partly by subscription. It was cast at New Haven, by Fenton & Cochran, and weighed about 600 pounds. A belfry, to which was attached a lightning-rod, was erected at the same time. The same bell is still in use.

In 1808 a revival occurred, and 34 were admitted to the church on the 1st of May, and 26 on the 3d of July. In 1830 the Unitarian controversy agitated the church, and one brother was finally excommunicated for publicly dissenting from the creed and expressing his disbelief of the doctrine of the Trinity and the supreme deity of Jesus Christ.

A Sunday-school, consisting of 103 scholars, was established in May, 1819. This has ever since been continued.

In 1822 two stoves for warming the meeting-house were procured and placed near the pulpit. In 1823 an elegant copy of "Gurney's Family Bible," published in 1816, and embellished with a series of engravings by the first artists, was presented for the pulpit by James Hayward, tutor in Harvard College.

Jacob Porter says, "The practice of reading the Scriptures publicly on the Lord's day had been introduced some years before;" from which we infer they had not been so read in the earlier years. Jan. 5, 1823, 10 persons were admitted. Nov. 24, 1827, 29 persons were admitted.

June 3, 1829, the Rev. John H. Russ was ordained here as an evangelist by the Mountain Association; sermon by the Rev. William A. Hawley, of Hinsdale. Aug. 29, 1830, the church chose a committee to superintend tract distribution.

In the spring of 1829, Rev. Moses Hallock, mindful of the growing infirmities of age, and with tender solicitude for the people over whom he had ministered nearly forty years, addressed a letter to them suggesting the appointment of a successor. The letter contained this beautiful passage:

"I have entered my seventieth year, and know not the day of my death. When a parent is about to die, he endeavors to set his house in order that it may be well with his family after his decease. With equal ardor I desire that you, as a religious community, may have a good minister of Jesus Christ when my lips shall be unable to keep knowledge. Before I die I wish to see my pulpit occupied by such a minister."

The reply of the committee advising the church and town to accede to his suggestions displays equal feeling. They say:

"He hereby evinces that he seeks not ours, but us,—that he still retains an affectionate regard for the dear people over which the Holy Spirit hath so long made him overseer. And his solicitude for us extends beyond the time when he shall have ceased to be our minister, or shall have closed his eyes in death."

These proceedings resulted in the installation of Rev. David Kimball, March 2, 1831, as a colleague; but Mr. Hallock remained as senior pastor, and lived beyond the close of Mr. Kimball's ministry. On the 17th of July, 1837, he was dismissed by a higher than earthly authority from the scenes of his life-long labors. The pastorate of Rev. Moses Hallock passed into history. His life and labors were a legacy of priceless value to Plainfield, and the town stands forever honored by the ministry of this noble man, this beloved pastor, this distinguished teacher.

In 1829 the meeting-house was painted anew, and Jacob Porter, writing in 1834, rather revels in a luxurious description:

"The outside white; the inside, except the pews, a beautiful cream color. The pulpit was rebuilt in the modern style. Curtains of bombazet were furnished for the window, and the pulpit dressed with damask fringed with rich and elegant drapery, all of red, by John Mack, Esq. The house now makes a handsome appearance; indeed, it is believed that few churches erected forty years since discover so good a taste, or are in all respects so convenient."

This house was taken down in 1846, and the present one erected on the same site. The new church was erected under the direction of a building committee consisting of Cyrus Joslyn, James Cook, Josiah F. Rood. The house cost $2450, and was built by voluntary subscriptions, a large number of which were $100 each, and others $50. The pews were afterward sold and the amount refunded to the subscribers. The pews sold for $200 more than the cost of the house, and that went into the treasury of the parish.

The prudential committees are usually changed from year to year. James Winslow is clerk of the parish, and has been for several years. Deacon Hamlin is clerk of the church, and is also treasurer of the parish, which office he has filled for twenty-three years in all. The communicants number 100 to 110; congregation, 150 to 200; superintendent of Sunday-school, Seth W. Clark. Charles N. Dyer is leader of the choir. The music is still assisted occasionally by the double-bass viol, as in olden times.

In 1838, during the ministry of Rev. Mr. Goodsell, a revival occurred, and about 75 were added either by letter or profession. In 1848 occurred another revival, under Rev. Mr. Gaylord, in which 30 or more united with the church. In 1858, soon after the commencement of the labors of Rev. Mr. Clarke, a general awakening took place, and during that year and the following about 40 members were added. In 1866, 42 united. In 1876 a special work took place, as the result of which 14 were added.

Ministerial Record—1st. Rev. Moses Hallock, ordained July 14, 1792; died in the midst of his people, while still their pastor, July 17, 1837. 2d. Rev. David Kimball was installed as colleague to Mr. Hallock in 1831, and labored in that capacity four years, his services closing in 1835, though his formal dismission did not take place until Sept. 27, 1837; died in 1876, in Illinois.

3d. Rev. Dana Goodsell, installed Sept. 27, 1837; dismissed Sept. 25, 1839; died Feb. 19, 1876, in Philadelphia. 4th. Rev. Wm. A. Hawley, installed July 21, 1841; services ended July 1, 1847; formally dismissed Oct. 6, 1847; died in Sunderland, in 1854. 5th. Rev. H. J. Gaylord, installed Oct. 6, 1847; at the same time and place there was also ordained Rev. Daniel Rood as a missionary of the American Board; Mr. Gaylord was dismissed Oct. 6, 1851; remained in the ministry, and is now in Delaware. 6th. Rev. David B. Bradford, installed June 10, 1852; dismissed in May, 1854. 7th. Rev. D. B. Bradford, installed pastor June 10, 1852; dismissed May 17, 1854. Mr. Baldwin and others officiated as temporary supply from time to time. 8th. Rev. Solomon Clark; he commenced his labors in January, 1858, and has continued until the present time, being now in the twenty-first year of his pastorate.

Record of Deacons.—John Packard, chosen Nov. 15, 1792; died Dec. 28, 1807. James Richards, chosen Nov. 15, 1792; Joseph Beals (The Mountain Miller), chosen April 29, 1803; died July 20, 1813. Robert Beals, chosen Sept. 23, 1813; died July, 1844. Erastus Bates, chosen June 27, 1828; died March 13, 1836. John Carr, chosen Sept. 6, 1834; removed to Buckland; died, 1851. Wm. N. Ford, chosen Nov. 11, 1841; removed to Grinnell, Iowa. Freeman Hamlin,* chosen Aug. 30, 1844. Jerijah Barber,* chosen May 5, 1855. William A. Bates, chosen Nov. 16, 1867; removed to Windsor in a year or two. Seth W. Clark,* chosen March 3, 1877. James A. Winslow,* chosen March 3, 1877.

BAPTIST CHURCH OF PLAINFIELD.

This society was formed Feb. 25, 1833, the meeting for organization having been called by Asa Thayer, pursuant to a warrant drawn by Nehemiah Richards, Esq., of Cummington. The full church organization took place June 18th, of the same year. Elder David Wright was the moderator of the council that constituted the church. The families interested specially in the formation of this church were those of Mr. Stockwell, Thayer (Asa and Kingman), Jones, Daniels, Bezar Reed, two or three families of the Packards, Silas Shaw, Joseph Vining, the Gardner families, and several from Ashfield.

The society existed mostly in the east part of the town, and has been extinct for some years.

The meeting-house was built 1840 to 1842, and stood east of the place where Ansil Cole now lives some fifty rods. After the dissolution of the society the building was taken down and sold, 1866-67. The building was a plain, comfortable chapel, not very large.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Alden B. Eggleston. His wife was a daughter of Asa Thayer. 2d. Rev. Nathaniel McCulloch. 3d. Rev. Samuel S. Kingsley. 4th. Rev. William A. Pease. 5th. Rev. A. H. Sweet. 6th. Rev. James Clark. There were several others who preached for short periods in the few years preceding the dissolution of the society. Early deacons chosen were Asa Thayer and Jeremiah Stockwell, Jr., 1833, and, later, Jacob Jones.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The burial-grounds in this town are the following: At the centre is the principal one, situated north of the village. This was established in 1808. Lieut. Solomon Shaw was the first person buried here, though two of his grandchildren, who had died earlier, were afterward taken up and buried near him. This ground is well cared for. There is another, southeast of the village, in the Dyer neighborhood or School District No. 2. It is located in a picturesque spot not far from Meadow Brook. East from the centre, beyond the Winslow farm, is another place of burial. This is mostly a private yard, containing the remains of members of the Stockwell family. Not far from the Tirrell farm is yet another cemetery, in the southwest part of the town, on the south part of West Hill, so called. This dates back to 1800, probably. Another, near the Philip Packard place, perhaps dates back to 1810 or 1815, in the northwest part of the town. The road is now discontinued at this point and the yard unused. In the southwest part of the town, in the neighborhood of Dexter Dyer, is a small cemetery still in use to some extent. On the present Elijah Warner farm was a place of burial almost lost sight of; few traces of it remain, and no inscriptions,—a few old field-stones. This is thought to be as early as any in town. There is also another, in the south part of the town, near the Cummington line, on land now owned by Henry Streeter; the place has not been used for sixty years or more, and only a few were buried there. On the farm of Lorenzo Joy, at the centre, is the principal old place, being used until the opening, in 1808, of the one at the north.

TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, Etc.

There have, at times, been various societies for missionary and religious work. Many of them have only had a brief existence. In later years contributions are taken and forwarded more directly by the pastor and the church officers than formerly, a less number of local societies and a less number of soliciting agents being employed. Such societies were the Plainfield Tract Society, 1832; the Foreign Missionary Association of Plainfield, formed in 1824; and the Bible Association of Plainfield, auxiliary, 1826. In the effort to supply the United States with Bibles about 1830, this society paid more than a hundred dollars. The Temperance Association of Plainfield, auxiliary to the Hampshire County Temperance Society, was formed June 27, 1828, and had a flourishing existence, having, in 1834, about 500 members, none being admitted under twelve years of age. Jacob Porter wrote of the movement:

"The inhabitants have great reason to felicitate themselves on the progress of the temperance cause among them. Though this was never considered an intemperate place when compared with its sister-towns, yet a few years since there were six licensed taverns, and at the principal store there were sold 12 hogs-heads of ardent spirits in a year. Now there are but two licensed houses, and at the same store there is sold about a barrel in the same period of time. The number of intemperate persons is greatly diminished, and there is an improvement in the manners and morals of the people which is truly gratifying."

Other societies were The Home Missionary Association of Plainfield, 1831; The Female Benevolent Society, 1833; The Maternal Association of Plainfield, 1834. All these societies were the outgrowth of that active period of revival and missionary work. The interest shown by the people of Plainfield at that time appears by the fact that, in 1834, there were two life directors and one life member of the American Bible Society residing here; two life members of the American Home Missionary Society; one life member of the society for Ameliorating the Condition of the Jews; a life director and eight life members of the American Tract Society at New York.

In the last forty years various similar organizations have existed for brief periods. Temperance societies developing and strengthening public sentiment arise from time to time and give way to others. There are now no licensed sales of intoxicating liquors, and very little intemperance exists. Lyceums or literary associations for mutual improvement and mutual enjoyment have been occasionally formed. A small circulating library was established in the southeast part of the town in 1832, and lasted for a few years. A flourishing artillery company existed here at one time, and, with the aid of the State, they built an armory across the road from the residence of Col. Jason Richards. It was given up, and the building removed to the east end of the village; now the dwelling-house of Mrs. Frances Clark.

* Present deacons (1879).

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

Plainfield has, 1st, the "MOUNTAIN MILLER'S HOME," the story of whose pious life, written by William A. Hallock, has been read in many languages and stirred the Christian zeal of thousands in all parts of the world. No less than one hundred and forty thousand copies were issued the first year of its publication, in 1831, and two years later a revised edition of one hundred and sixty-eight thousand copies was printed.

He bought the mill in 1798, having removed to this town, however, in 1779. The mill and the dwelling-house, and the grounds around them, are sacred spots yet in the memory of some still living who knew the "Mountain Miller." William A. Hallock, in the tract (No. 254, American Tract Society, 150 Nassau Street, New York), writes:

"The spot where so many thus met the pious miller, and where his devout aspirations so often ascended to God, and even the pure perennial spring of water by the roadside where he used to drink, bursting from the rocks in a basin three or four feet from the ground, as if hewn by God for the purpose, and shaded by two beautiful sugar-maples, have still a sacredness around them which will remain till all who knew him and feel the value of religion shall have followed him to eternity."

The two beautiful sugar-maples are still flourishing as when William A. Hallock wrote of them nearly fifty years ago, and the spring still bubbles from the rocks. Here is still the road winding up the valley along which the pious miller so often went to the house of God, that to him was none other than the gate of heaven. These lovely hillsides and the deep valley between must have been fair and beautiful when covered with the primeval forests, robed in the verdure of summer, the gorgeous colors of autumn, or the solemn drapery of winter. Yet all this earthly beauty was to the eye of faith but a faint image of the heavenly land. It only reminded Joseph Beals, the "Mountain Miller," that

"Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood Stand dressed in living green."

The dwelling-house near the present mill is not the old home of the "Mountain Miller," though some reverent visitors have persisted in thinking so, and in going through the rooms in a dreamy, historic way. The dwelling-house of Mr. Beals was the present residence of James Cook and son, on the west side of the road, farther north; thus the miller would pass the spring in going from the house to his work. In the yard at Mr. Cook's was the funeral scene mentioned in the tract, when around the open coffin of his beloved daughter the miller talked to his neighbors upon the great themes of life, death, and eternity.

2d. The old residence of Rev. Moses Hallock, where he settled in the ministry, and where he received his students, is a place of deep interest yet to the few venerable men who still live to recall the instructions received in this beautiful mountain village, and at the fireside of that devout and holy man. Their own names may be written high upon the scroll of fame, and the wreath of civic honors may have gracefully rested upon their brows, but the name of their teacher, Rev. Moses Hallock, may well be written in close and tender association with their own. The house is a low, old-fashioned, one-story building, but of ample width, securing a large amount of room upon the lower floor and a spacious chamber above.

It is a village tradition that at times Mr. Hallock's family consisted of nine, and that these, with seventeen students, all boarded and slept in the house at once. While Mr. Hallock lived, the house was unpainted. After his death the place passed into the ownership of the Widow Mack. The house was then painted. It was sold afterward to the brothers Spierman, who now reside there. They are blacksmiths, and have for many years carried on their business in a shop erected east of the house, and next to the street. There are a few maple-trees, of considerable age, planted, it is said, by one of the sons of Mr. Hallock. The paint having nearly disappeared, the house in its outer look must be returned to nearly its former state, as occupied by Mr. Hallock. A few apple-trees near suggest the days when Wm. Cullen Bryant and other "boys" like modern students may have helped gather the fruit earlier than the ordinary season. Standing in front of the venerable building, it needs but a little effort of the imagination to people those old rooms, the spacious yard, and the street near, with the living forms of active youth; with distinguished men who in after-years left their impress upon law and literature, upon science and metaphysics, upon politics and religion.

3d. The Point of the First Settlement.—Holland's history, and other works, state that Mr. McIntyre made the first settlement of Plainfield in 1770. Jacob Porter says that he was a Scotchman, and, in the true spirit of Scotch hospitality, used to prepare a haggis at each of his daughters' weddings. That he lived somewhere on what was known as the "Hatfield Equivalent" is probable from the two marriages recorded. But the exact site of his house is not known.

4th. The meeting for the first civil organization determines another spot as one for which the antiquarian will naturally seek. In Plainfield, this was held at the house of Simon Burroughs, July 25, 1785. It stood a few rods north of the present residence of Charles N. Dyer, on the east side of the road. There are now no buildings at that point, and only a slight depression in the ground, with some other indications to identify the spot. This will be the place to unfurl the flag at the centennial celebration of July 25, 1885. Perhaps before that time some antiquarian may have discovered the old cellar of the McIntyre homestead, and another flag may wave from that.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The leading business of the town is agriculture. The cutting of firewood and lumbering were formerly important items of business, but at the present time are carried on only to a limited extent. The productions of the dairy, the sale of beef, the raising of sheep, and a variety of mixed farming employments constitute agricultural interest. Maple-sugar is sometimes produced in large quantities, reaching 26,000 pounds a year. The manufacturing interests were never very extensive, though the production of broom-handles and other small articles of wood-work has been at times an important element of prosperity. The various mills and water-privileges are stated in the following more particular account. Upon this general subject Jacob Porter, forty-four years ago, wrote as follows:

"The native timber of our forests consists principally of maple (four species), beech, birch, hemlock, spruce, fir, and cherry. From the maple large quantities of sugar are manufactured. A variety called the bird's-eye maple is highly esteemed for cabinet-work. Cherry is also much used for the same purpose. Our boards and shingles are generally made of hemlock and spruce. Large quantities of hemlock bark are used for tanning leather. It sells at about two dollars and fifty cents a cord. The price of wood for fuel standing is about twenty cents a cord; delivered at one's door, from one dollar to one dollar and twenty-five cents.

"As there is very little underbrush in our woods, our farmers are not troubled with bushes. Fields once cleared remain free from these intruders, so troublesome in the eastern part of the State.

"This township has a good strong soil very well adapted for grass. Indian corn, wheat, and rye are raised without difficulty, but not in sufficient quantities for the use of the inhabitants. Potatoes and oats of excellent quality are very easily raised. Might not molasses be profitably manufactured here from potatoes? The apple thrives well, and it is believed that the plum, peach, cherry, and grape might be cultivated with proper care. Our wild fruits, such as the strawberry and the thimbleberry, might doubtless be greatly improved by transplanting them into our gardens. Horticulture has not hitherto received that attention among us which it so justly merits. Labor is from fifty cents to one dollar a day."

How far this reflects the present time (1879) and how much it differs from the present will be readily seen. Jason Richards says that his father used to raise what wheat he needed for his own family. His stalwart missionary sons, however, grew up largely upon the "rye and Indian" of those "good old times." The living was frugal. It is a local tradition that once a doting father brought his son to Moses Hallock's school, and asked that the boy might have gingerbread. "Certainly," said the venerable teacher, and immediately requested Mrs. Hallock to sprinkle a little ginger into the Indian bread.

V. MILLS, FACTORIES, ETC.

On the brook rising northeast of the centre and flowing to the south, the upper water-privilege improved was that of Thomas Shaw's grist-mill. This dates back very early, perhaps before 1800, as Stephen Hayward, who was seven years old when his father came here, in 1793, states that he went to mill there in his early boyhood. The mill was given up about 1825 or 1826, and the privilege has not been used since.

Next below was the factory of Warner, Whiting & Co., built about 1820 to 1825. The firm consisted of Randall Whiting, James Warner, and Jacob Clark. Their principal line of work was the manufacture of satinets. They also did custom-work as a clothing establishment. They operated several looms, employing ten or twelve hands. The business was conducted by them twelve or thirteen years. It was continued for a short time by James Warner, alone, and was also operated by Gurney. The business was abandoned, and, later,—1855 to 1860,—the buildings were taken down. Traces of the old dam and raceway remain.

Much earlier than the operations of the firm above mentioned was the clothing-mill of Jacob Clark, upon the same site.

On the same stream, below, were the broom-handle works established by John White about 1836. The business was carried on eight or ten years only, when it was given up and the buildings removed. There was a saw-mill continued somewhat later. A little below was the old saw-mill of Ziba White. This was an ancient affair, dating back to 1800, or perhaps earlier. The works were allowed to go down forty years ago or more, and were not rebuilt. There is yet another mill privilege below, improved by Warner & Lloyd, about 1845. They built a saw-mill, and operated it for several years. It was then converted into a cider-mill, and that has since been abandoned. It will be seen that this little stream was for a time made to do a large amount of work.

Tracing the tributaries of Mill Brook and the stream itself, there may be noticed in the village the little brook flowing down near the town-house and by Campbell's store. A little south was an old tannery dating back toward the first settlement. It was carried on by Dorn & Remington. Traces of the old dam and works remain.

About the same time, or somewhat later, a little above were potash-works, carried on by Iram Packard.

Dorn & Remington built with the intention of doing a large business. They had a building of considerable size, and an overshot wheel of eighteen feet diameter. Their plans were not fully carried out. They moved down into the valley on Mill Brook.

Some two miles west, on another branch of Mill Brook, was a saw-mill built by Wm. Shattuck, about 1852. He operated it five or six years, and sold it to Morgan Cleveland, who carried on the business for a few years, but finally discontinued it. It failed for want of sufficient water at that point.

At the place now owned by Philander Packard, on Mill Brook, was the type-foundry of Homan Hallock. There he made the types for printing the Bible in Arabic. The building afterward was removed to Cummington. His work was of great value, requiring classical taste, inventive genius, and rare mechanical skill,—a work of unique celebrity for a retired mountain town. Homan Hallock, of whom the world has heard but little, is entitled, by his manufacture of the type that has given the Bible to 150,000,000 of people, to rank with the better known brothers Gerard and William.

Next below is the saw-mill of George W. King. This was established from 1815 to 1820 by Josiah Stetson, and is one of the few mill-sites in Plainfield that have not been abandoned. After Mr. Stetson it was owned by various proprietors, until it passed into the hands of Mr. King, about twenty-four years ago, and is run by him at the present time.

Farther down was Streeter's factory, built by Arnold Streeter, perhaps sixty years ago. The line of work was the manufacture of satinets and broadcloths, including the doing of custom-work. The mills were burned about 1826. They were rebuilt, and the business continued by the Streeters, father and son, until the buildings were again burned, in 1876. They have not been rebuilt. Before the Streeters began, there was an old clothing-mill at this point operated by Daniel Richards, by Mr. Gleason, Mr. Shattuck, and perhaps others. An old saw-mill of the first settlement was also located here. The tannery removed from the village brook, as before stated, was rebuilt by Dorn & Remington in 1830, on Mill Brook. They did a large business, having a building 100 feet by 30, with 80 vats. It was carried on by them for several years. Dorn sold out to Parsons, and the firm afterward sold to Giddings & Latham. The latter carried on the business alone for a short time. It was discontinued at Latham's death, 1851.

Below, on the main road, is the factory built by Pratt & Hamlin (Reuben Hamlin and Otis Pratt), sixty to seventy years ago, for the manufacture of satinets, broadcloth, custom-work, etc. Mr. Erastus Bates bought out Pratt. After the removal of Mr. Bates west, Reuben Hamlin carried it on a short time alone. After this the building stood unused for a few years. Mr. Jason Noyes opened a chair-factory there a short time. A few years later the business was changed by William Wilcutt, the present proprietor, to the making of broom-handles and baskets, and is continued by him—including saw-mill—to the present time.

Earlier than this factory, back to 1810 or nearly, was a flax-dressing-mill, owned by Noah and Iram Packard,—father and son.

Next, down the stream, is the grist-mill, occupying the site of the one owned by "the Mountain Miller." Joseph Beals bought the property in 1798. The mill was built several years before that, and was carried on by Jeremiah Robinson. It does not appear to be known whether there was a still earlier proprietor. After Joseph Beals' death, in 1813, the mill was carried on some years by Joseph Beals, Jr. The property was owned at one time by John Clarke, of Northampton. It then passed to Deacon Jared Bisbee, who owned it for several years. After him Joel Lyon was proprietor, and then Loren White. It was then run for a few years by Edwin Torrey. In 1861 his son-in-law, James A. Nash, succeeded to the mill, and has carried it on from that time to the present. The water-privilege is one of considerable value. The mill has a large "run of custom," and is doing an active and prosperous business. It is a tradition that the Cooks preceded Robinson in the early mill, and perhaps built it.

On the rivulets in the northwest, in the vicinity of North Pond, there were few water-privileges of sufficient advantage to tempt any one to improve them, even in the earlier years, when these mountain streams were of far greater volume than at present. On the Hallock Pond outlet was a grist-mill, known as Rice's. This was very early, as it was given up fifty or sixty years ago. On the same site was a tannery, built by Leavitt Hallock, 1840 to 1845; it was burned, rebuilt but not used again, and is still standing. This is a few rods over the line, in Hawley.

On the outlet of Crooked Pond is a saw-mill, now owned by Joseph Harlow,—pretty old,—dating back to 1812, and owned since by several different proprietors.

In the northeast corner of the town, and just upon the line of Ashfield, there is the Campbell saw-mill, the power for which is supplied by a small stream flowing easterly. The proprietor is Levi N. Campbell, and the property has been in the hands of the family for many years, having been established by Levi Campbell, father of the present proprietor.

There were several distilleries in early times for the manufacture of cider-brandy; one in the east part of the town by Deacon Stockwell sixty years ago or more, continued but a few years. In the west part of the town were distilleries for manufacturing spruce-tar; these were built and managed by Shattuck & Pratt, fifteen to eighteen years ago. There were still others, and one is run at the present time by Ezra Mason. The mining of manganese, begun to some extent many years ago, was never a success, and has not been attempted in modern times. Bricks were made at one time by Thomas Shaw, not far from his grist-mill, mentioned above.

BLACKSMITH-SHOPS.

There was one near Lincoln's store, run by Rufus Buntz. There was another at the centre, east of the brick store, by Cook & Daniels. This was an old stand, dating back nearly to 1800. Another, of later date, stood north of the brick store, where Elmer worked, and also Milton Sawyer and Clark Smith; taken down a few months ago, and rebuilt by Mr. Smith near his present barn. Another shop, near the present residence of Joseph Sears, was carried on by H. V. Curtis. The Spiermans worked there several years before they purchased the Hallock place. A small blacksmithing business is also done by Francis Joy.

The ten leading articles of farm production for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values stated: butter, $101.98; firewood, $3853; hay, $22,645; milk, $7086; potatoes, $2942; beef, $4730; manure, $3352; pork, $2942; maple-sugar, $3465; eggs, $1872.

MILITARY.

The territory of Plainfield was settled to some extent as a part of Cummingtown, and there were several soldiers of the Revolution who went from within its limits or settled there and became citizens of the town. The pensioners in 1834 were Lemuel Allis, Joseph Barnard, Ebenezer Bisbee, John Campbell, Vinson Curtis, Ebenezer Dickinson, James Dyer, Joseph Gloyd, Rev. Moses Hallock, Jacob Nash, Philip Packard, Whitcomb Pratt, James Richards, Josiah Shaw, Samuel Streeter, Josiah Torrey, and Caleb White.

Jacob Porter's history of 1834 mentions the above as living at that time, but apparently gives no full list of the citizens of Plainfield who had been in the Revolutionary service. There must have been quite a number who had died before 1834 or moved away.

Plainfield shared to some extent in the Shays rebellion. There was only a small population at that time and the town organization was scarcely made, yet the people, suffering from the depreciated currency and from the other difficulties that followed immediately upon the Revolution, undoubtedly gave some encouragement to the cause of the insurgents.

The following persons are recorded as having taken and subscribed the oath of allegiance before Samuel Mather, Esq., January, 1787, viz.: Moses Curtis, Stephen Steth, Isaac Joy, Solomon Nash, Tobias Green, Salmon Fay.

In the exciting period of 1812 to 1815, Plainfield was represented in the Anti-War Convention at Northampton by Nehemiah Joy, Esq.

For the defense of Boston, September, 1814, under the call of Gov. Strong, a few went and shared in the labors of that brief campaign. The town the next spring voted each man $2.08 for provisions found and for powder and balls. The following went: Bolter Colson, Samuel Thayer, Samuel Streeter, Jr., Stephen Hollis, Oren Tirrell, John Ford, Lazarus Bartlett, Jacob Dyer, Caleb Stowell, and perhaps others.

WAR OF 1861-65.

There appear to have been no regular meetings for official action in 1861. Two meetings were held in 1862, in the months of July and August, at which a bounty of $100 was offered to each volunteer who would enlist to fill the quota of the town. The effect of this was that 21 immediately enlisted.

The official reports show that Plainfield furnished 61 men for the war, which was a surplus of seven over and above all demands. Three were commissioned officers.

The list herewith appended is intended to include the names of citizens only, omitting substitutes, yet one or two of the latter are probably mentioned. The military record in the office of the town clerk is very full, and will grow more valuable as years roll away and the story of the fearful days of 1861-65 shall be eagerly sought and studied by the descendants of the brave men of that era. The town is indebted to Deacon Hamlin, who was then town clerk, for this accurate and faithful record.

The population in 1860 was 639. The number of men furnished was equal to about one-tenth of the whole population, and the expenses to $13 per head, men, women, and children. Assuming that the "men capable of bearing arms" are not over one-seventh of the population, being 91 at that time, it will be seen that the number furnished was equal to two-thirds of that. But not alone in this way are the patriotic services of that period to be estimated. The women of Plainfield not only saw their loved ones depart for the battle-field, virtually saying to each, "Return with your shield or upon it," but they followed the whole army with their love and their prayers. By the supplies furnished through the Christian Commission and the Sanitary Commission, and through other channels of patriotic benevolence, they contributed largely to relieve the suffering soldiers. As we now eagerly seek for every incident of the Revolutionary times a hundred years ago, so will the people of future ages linger with astonishment and admiration upon the story of 1861 and '65.

SOLDIERS' LIST, 1861-65.

Chauncey C. Shaw, enl. Sept. 9, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. H; disch. March 31, 1863, for disability; he was the first to enlist from Plainfield, a fact worthy of notice, as no bounties were offered at that time. A purse of a few dollars was made up for his benefit a few Sabbaths previous to his leaving for the seat of war.	George W. King, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.	Co. F; re-enl. June 4, 1863, 2d H. A.; disch. Sept. 3, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
Sherlock H. Lincoln, enl. Dec. 6, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. E; disch. Nov. 14, 1862, for disability, occasioned by the kick of a horse.	Josiah Rood, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died July 10, 1863, on voyage home between Newbern and Boston; his remains brought to Plainfield for burial.	William J. Nash, enl. March 1, 1864, 34th Regt., Co. D.
Hosca L. Thayer, must. Dec. 16, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. E; disch. to re-enl., Dec. 28, 1863; re-enl. Dec. 29, 1863, same regiment and company; disch. July 21, 1865, with regiment.	Theodore W. Shaw, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.	Maurice Bishop, enl. Feb. 13, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. K; died June 18, 1864, at Fortress Monroe; a substitute; lost his life in the service for Plainfield.
Henry Y. Town, enl. Oct. 18, 1861, 4th N. Y. Inf. Batt., Co. C; disch. Oct. 17, 1864.	Charles S. Stetson, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.	John C. Dean, enl. Aug. 25, 1864, 2d H. A., Co. F; disch. June 26, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
Wesley Woodward, enl. Oct. 1, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. C; disch. Oct. 1862.	Wm. E. Warner, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died June 28, 1863, at Newbern, N. C., of typhoid fever; buried at Newbern.	Arthur W. Robinson, enl. Aug. 25, 1864, 2d H. A., Co. F; disch. June 26, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
James Wetherbee, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. C; disch. Dec. 21, 1863, to re-enl.; subsequent history not known.	Henry A. Vining, enl. Dec. 5, 1863, 1st Cav., Co. I; disch. June 29, 1865.	Winthrop B. Robinson, enl. Aug. 25, 1864, 2d H. A., Co. F; disch. June 26, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
	Robert Loud, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th Regt., Co. F; re-enl. May 28, 1863, 2d H. A., Co. A; disch. Sept. 3, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.	William L. Lucas, enl. Aug. 25, 1864, 2d H. A., Co. F; disch. June 26, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
	William A. Hallock, enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 23d Regt., Co. K; re-enl. Dec. 1, 1863.	John T. Stewart, enl. Aug. 25, 1864, 2d H. A., Co.
	Allen Smith, enlisted Sept. 26, 1862, 46th Regt.,

F; disch. June 26, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
 Alfred Videtto, enl. Sept. 1, 1864, regt. not known; supposed disch. at exp. of service.
 Goodloe H. Taylor, enl. Sept. 1, 1864, 2d H. A.; disch. May 23, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
 Almon M. Warner, 1st sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; pro. to 2d Lieut., June 7, 1865; was suffering from wounds received in Virginia, April 6, 1865; disch. June 21, 1865.
 Lorenzo Streeter, corp., enl. Aug. 15, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. Nov. 21, 1863, for disability, occasioned by long marches and sufferings in the battle of Fredericksburg.
 Nelson M. Cook, enl. Aug. 15, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. Aug. 14, 1863, for disability,—bleeding at the lungs,
 William W. Van Alstyne, enl. Dec. 7, 1863, 54th Inf., Co. B; missing in action, Feb. 20, 1864; town record makes it 2d H. A., and states that he died in the service; probably one of the unknown dead on the fields of Virginia, or in the Southern prisons.

Oliver C. Burr, enl. Oct. 15, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. E; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Fordyce A. Dyer, 1st sergt., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; pro. to 2d Lieut., Jan. 28, 1863; 1st Lieut., June 8, 1863, in Heavy Artillery; died of yellow fever, Oct. 26, 1864, at Newbern, N. C.; body brought home for burial; he had been detailed as city inspector during the yellow fever in Newbern, and fell, a brave man, at his post of duty and of danger.
 Clifford Packard, corp., enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Ira W. Hamlin, corp., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Franklin Cook, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died June 20, 1863, at Beaufort, N. C., and buried at that place.
 Alden H. Dyer, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died April 19, 1863, at Newbern, N. C., of typhoid fever; remains brought to Plainfield for burial.
 Newcomb Dyer, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Charles C. Gloyd, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M.,

Co. F; disch. to re-enl. May 27, 1863; must. in again, May 28, 1863, 2d H. A., Co. A; disch. Sept. 3, 1865, by general order disbanding troops.
 J. Wesley Gurney, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. to re-enl. June 4, 1863; must. in again June 5, 1863, 2d Regt. H. A.; as a minor, his parents endeavored to detain him home, and he was arrested as a deserter; but after serving one month was honorably disch. Dec. 30, 1863.
 Stephen Hayward, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Samuel W. Jones, enl. Sept. 26, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Newell Dyer (2d), enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. C; disch. April 11, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. July 12, 1863; rejected by examining surgeon; drafted same day; supposed it not necessary to report; arrested as a deserter; served in 12th Regt., Co. C, 5 months; honorably disch. for disability, Dec. 12, 1863.
 Harrison D. Gloyd, enl. Feb. 1, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. C; disch. Jan. 31, 1865.

CUMMINGTON.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

CUMMINGTON is one of the western tier of towns in the peculiarly-shaped county of Hampshire, and is sixteen miles from Northampton, the county-seat, air-line measurement. It is bounded north by Plainfield and Franklin County, east by Goshen, south by Chesterfield and Worthington, west by Berkshire County. It contains 13,711 acres, as stated in the census of 1875. The title is direct from the colony of Massachusetts Bay, the township having been bought by Col. John Cummings, June 2, 1762, for £1800. The proprietors for whom he acted lived at Concord or near there. Systematic arrangements for settlement were made by them, committees being appointed upon roads, upon public worship, and other important matters. The town was laid out in three divisions, and the proprietors drew for their several shares in each division.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface of the country is diversified. Ranges of hills and separate elevations abound, leaving, however, a larger proportion of tillable land than in some of the neighboring towns. Remington Hill, standing alone, with an extensive area of productive land around it, is the only hill of sufficient importance to have a name attached to it upon modern maps. There are many other heights interspersed with valleys, forming delightful scenery, charming alike the poet, the painter, and the naturalist. Nearly every part of the town is drained by the streams which form the river system of the Westfield Valley. The local names of these streams are Swift River, north branch of Swift River, Shaw Brook, Roaring Brook, Childs Brook, Kearney Brook, and Whitmarsh Brook.

The winding course of the Westfield River through the town secures a large number of valuable sites for mills and manufactories. Only a small portion of the available water-power has been improved, however, few enterprises of magnitude having been undertaken. By this same river the town is divided into the "north side" and the "south side," and in the early times considerable discussion occurred as to the location of public buildings and the holding of public meetings. In later years this question seldom appears in the public records, but the town may still be said to lack a common central point to which all sections consent, and which is equally accessible for all. The natural features of old Township No. 5 are unfavorable to a hearty unanimity upon a central church or a central village.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

There is no clearer way of showing the early settlement of this town than by quoting liberally from the proceedings of the proprietors as they are preserved in the oldest book in the custody of the town clerk. The settlement was different from that of some other towns. It was not so much by individuals penetrating the forest and erecting their cabins singly and alone that the wilds of Cummington were opened up. Organization was before settlement. There was an association of proprietors to sustain and assist each pioneer; plans were made; committees laid out roads; encouragement was voted to erect mills; and lots for the support of the gospel and the support of schools were set apart. Men first came to settle No. 5 as committees, surveyors, road-makers, mill-builders—at least, it seems proper to infer that from the records. Who built the first house within the present limits of Cummington is unsettled either in tradition or history. One writer has ventured to say that Samuel Brewer is supposed to have settled here in 1761. Another authority, many years earlier, pronounces one McIntyre to have been the first settler, and the date 1770. A recent writer, who evidently failed to examine the old proprietors' book, repeats the McIntyre story, as if this was the best that could be ascertained.

The variety of statement is accounted for to some extent by the fact that Mr. McIntyre was probably an early, if not the first, settler of Plainfield,—a large portion of which town was a part of old No. 5.

NO. 5 PROPRIETORS' BOOK, 1762.

CONCORD, DEC. 21, 1762.

At a meeting of the proprietors of the Township called by the name of No. 5 (legally assembled), purchased of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, by John Cummings, Esq., of said Concord, on the 2d day of June last past, it was voted at said meeting that Charles Prescott, Esq., be moderator of said Propriety. 2d. Voted that Isaiah Barrett be Clerk of said Propriety. 3d. Voted that there be a standing committee chosen to call meetings for the future, and to act in other matters and things as shall seem best for the Proprietors. 4th. Voted that Messrs. Samuel Farrar, Col. John Cummings, and Col. Charles Prescott be the committee as above mentioned. 5th. Voted that Capt. James Haywood be Treasurer of said proprietors. 6th. Voted that Lieut. Joseph Hayward be Collector for said propriety. 7th. Voted that Messrs. Lieut. Samuel Farrar, Col. John Cumming, and Col. Charles Prescott be assessors of the Proprietors. 8th. Voted that we, the Proprietors, hear the report of a number of the Proprietors who have viewed said township No. 5. 9th. Voted that the minister's and the school lot in the first division of lots be laid where the Committee for laying out the lots shall think most convenient, and are not to be drawn for by the Proprietors. The minister's lot is No. 25, and the school lot is No. 26, laid out by said committee. 10th. Voted that the Proprietors will receive the report of the Committee, and we do receive it accordingly, which is as followeth, viz.: "Whereas, we, the subscribers, being chose by the Proprietors of the within-named township to go to said township and lay out 63 one-hundred-acre lots, accordingly have been and laid out 66 lots in form as follows, viz., 160 rods in length and 102 rods in width. The contents in each lot is 102 acres, the 2 acres in each lot being laid in order to make roads as shall hereafter be thought proper. We laid the overplus lots in order to pick them out and not have them drawn. We also have taken out the numbers following, viz., 65, 22, 15, not to be drawn.

(Signed) "SAMUEL BREWER.
"THOMAS BARRETT.
"TILLY MERICK."

After auditing the accounts of the committee and of the surveyor, the proprietors adjourned.

This committee must have spent some time in No. 5 during the summer of 1762 preceding this meeting, and one of them may have had his family with him, and made a beginning; and further, it is entirely possible that Mr. Brewer may have penetrated here, as one writer states, in 1761, made a settlement, and then interested Col. Cummings and induced him to bid the township off at the public sale, June 2, 1762. It will be seen that the first drawing of lots took place at the next meeting, Dec. 29, 1762; and these three members of the committee appear to have been present, and it hardly seems probable that their families were left in Cummington.

Dec. 29, 1762.—Proprietors met in Concord, at the house of Thomas Munn. Adjourned to the house of Jonathan Heywood. Voted a committee to prepare the lots for drawing.—Capt. James Barrett, Mr. Thomas Barrett, and Mr. Jason Barrett. Voted that any proprietors who may be dissatisfied with the lot drawn shall have the liberty of putting up on another lot in the same township, to be laid out in the same town, and adjoining to the lots already laid out. Voted that John Cummings dispose of four sixty-third parts of the township No. 5 to James McCannon, James Berry, William Park, and Samuel Hayward. Voted that the claims of the Proprietors be examined and received, and the name of each proprietor be set down against the number each proprietor shall draw.

DRAWING OF LOTS.

Joseph Bridge, Nos. 54, 55; Charles Prescott, 45, 49; Thomas Jones, 23, 30; John Cumming, 50, 68; Thomas Barrett, 53, 46; Tilly Merick, 1, 71, 29, 47; Isaiah Barrett, 3, 70; Samuel Brewer, 63, 22; Asa Douglass, 67, 55; Jonas Heywood, 19, 8; James Barrett, 43, 5; John Jones, Jr., 60; Edmund Munro, 40, 59; David Brown, 48, 41; Joseph Hayward, 9, 18, 12; Samuel Farrar, 7, 34; Charles Barrett, 51, 2; James Chandler, 42, 38; Deacon Samuel Minott, 14, 10; Asa Douglass, six rights, 64, 66, 27, 21, 24, 17; Joseph Wright, two rights, 44, 57; William Park, one right, 56; Samuel Hayward, 58; James McCannon, 4, 31; James Berry, 32; Robert Cunningham, 62; Nathan Harwood, 6; John Cunningham, 69.

Further arrangements continued to be made at various meetings held in Concord. One item was an application to the General Court, that "the township No. 5 may be made complete." The drawing of the second division of lots took place at Concord, Sept. 26, 1764. Committee: Isaiah Barrett, Jonathan Heywood, and Tilly Merick. No. 46, second division, was set apart as a minister's lot. Oliver Conant was voted a proprietor, having bought one right of Mr. James Barrett,—No. 43, first division. Voted that the clerk should draw three lots,—two for David Brown and one for John Jones, Jr., or whoever he may sell to.

DRAWING—SECOND DIVISION.

Samuel Brewer, 33, 49, 17, 21; Charles Prescott, 42, 14; Thomas Jones, 40, 18; John Cummings, 32, 34; Thomas Barrett, 23, 9; Tilly Merick, 24, 15, 1st division, 38, 47; Isaiah Barrett, 33, 20, both 1st division; Asa Douglass, 8, 16, 1st division; Jonas Heywood, 37, 11; James Barrett, 25; John Jones, Jr., 44; Edmund Munro, 20; David Brown, 19, 29; Joseph Hayward, 35, 28, 3; Samuel Farrar, 35, 1st division, 45; Charles Barrett, 50, 36, 1st division; James Chandler, 5, 12; Samuel Minott, 2, 43; Asa Douglass, 22, 4, 51, 31, 36, 39; Joseph Wright, 26; William Park, 63, 1st division; Samuel Hayward, 41; James McCannon, 37, 1st division, 16; James Berry, 52; Robert Cunningham, 10; Nathan Harwood, 1; John Cunningham, 6; Oliver Conant, 7; Stephen Farr, 28, 1st division; Stephen Hayward, 30; the Committee, 27, 13, 15, 48.

Sept. 26, 1764.—Voted that one dollar be assessed on each single right to make a convenient road, and that Samuel Brewer and Stephen Hayward be a committee to lay out said roads. Voted that there be two saw-mills set up in the township No. 5, one at the east end and one at the west end, with this encouragement: one hundred acres of land voted as an encouragement to each of those who would undertake to build these mills. One hundred acres were voted to John Cummings for this purpose, and he was to have a saw-mill ready to work July 1st next ensuing. One hundred acres were voted to Charles Prescott to build a saw-mill at the east end of the town within twelve months.

May 15, 1765.—At Concord voted Jared Smith a proprietor. Voted a committee to choose a site for a meeting-house,—Charles Prescott, Samuel Brewer, Stephen Hayward. Voted Joseph Farr, Daniel Wheeler, Ephraim Powers, Ephraim Keys, Capt. William Barron be proprietors.

Charles Prescott seems, from the record, to have built, in the summer of 1766, the saw-mill which John Cummings was to have built, and had the land voted for that purpose; but this is not sustained by tradition.

May 20, 1767.—Voted to hire a regular learned gospel minister to preach four Sabbaths next summer. Voted to raise four guineas to defray the expenses of preaching.

Rev. John Hooker, of Northampton, was requested to supply the township with a preacher four days.

The first meeting within the town was called by Charles Prescott and John Cummings, committee, to meet at the house of Mr. Stephen Warner on Wednesday, the 19th of June, 1771.

Levi Kingman states that the house of Stephen Warner was near the present sheep-barn of Andrew Brewster, southwest of Fordyce Packard's.

June 19, 1771, the first proprietors' meeting was held in Cummington.

Chose Daniel Reed Moderator; William Ward, Proprietors' Clerk; Mr. Peter Harwood, Timothy Moore, William Ward, Assessors; John Holbrook, Collector; Peter Harwood, Treasurer; Committee to lay out Undivided Land, Peter Harwood, William Ward, Timothy Moore, Nathan Harwood, and Jacob Melvin. Voted six shillings upon each right, to pay for preaching. Committee to pitch upon a meeting-house spot, Daniel Reed, Stephen Farr, and William Ward.

July 19, 1771.—Proprietors' meeting at the house of Mr. Joseph Farr, innholder, in said Township No. 5. Mr. Stephen Farr, moderator. Voted that Deacon Barrett shall have the privilege to lay his undivided land adjoining to his number 20, in the second division, if he will build a grist-mill and saw-mill within six months.

Aug. 21, 1771.—Mr. John Holbrook was appointed a committee to hire preaching as he shall receive instructions from time to time. Voted to accept of committee's report upon this site for a meeting-house, viz.: on the Widow Merick's lot, No. 71. Capt. Joseph Warren was moderator.

Aug. 21, 1771.—Proprietors voted that Justus Dwight be a surveyor to lay out undivided land.

Sept. 28, 1772.—Mr. John Reed, Moderator. Capt. Dwight, Deacon Tupper, Gideon Clark were appointed to pitch upon a site for the meeting-house. Joseph Ford, Timothy Moore, Isaac Benjamin appointed a committee to pitch upon the public lots.

Oct. 26, 1772.—Voted to ordain Mr. Jesse Reed, Nov. 25th, at the dwelling-house of Mr. Timothy Moore. Voted that Wm. Ward shall make preparation for the council.

Nov. 19, 1773.—Voted to petition the General Court for incorporation.

May 25, 1774.—Proprietors met at the dwelling-house of Mr. Moore. Voted that Doctors Fay, Mick, and Bradish have the privilege of setting up a hospital in said township, for the inoculation of the small-pox, on the southwest corner of Lieut. Joseph Warner's lot, for the space of one year from the date hereof.

This was on the present farm of Franklin Warner, according to the opinion of Dr. Joy.

Proprietors' meetings sometimes assembled at the house of Ensign Harwood.

Ebenezer Snell and Asa Hatch were appointed a committee to get the town incorporated. A proposition to set off the west part of the town to Gageborough was favorably acted upon Sept. 3, 1778. Voted Sept. 14, 1778, that Lieut. Jared Smith go to the General Court to get the town incorporated.

It is evident that the town was largely settled between 1762 and 1771. The order in which each family moved cannot be determined. The men appointed on committee by the proprietors' meetings at Concord may very likely have been the first settlers. It is said that Jacob Melvin became a settler in 1766, and that there were then but seven families in town; that all the men from these seven families assembled, cleared a house-spot, and erected a log house for Mr. Melvin, and that he moved into it the same day. It is probable that Stephen Farr, Joseph Farr, Samuel Brewer, Thomas Barrett, Tilly Merick, Stephen Hayward, Charles Prescott were these seven families; that Daniel Reed, William Ward, Peter Harwood, Timothy Moore, Nathan Harwood, with others, located during the next three or four years. The majority of the proprietors were evidently in Concord, or that vicinity, until 1770 or about that time; but in the spring of 1771 they were so largely settled here that future meetings of the proprietors were held within the township.

RESIDENCE OF L. J. ORCUTT, CUMMINGTON, MASS.

As another theory of first settlement we add that a recent writer in the Gazette, in an article upon the late Ebenezer Shaw, claims that his old place was the site of the first settlement,—the Deacon Bigelow farm.

The first frame building is said to have been erected on the present place of Alanson Reed, by John Tower. It had no floor.

PHYSICIANS.

In 1774, as noted elsewhere, Dr. Bradish, Dr. Mick, and Dr. Fay were authorized to open a small-pox hospital. Of these the name of Dr. Bradish is familiar in all the early annals of Cummington. He practiced for many years, leaving town, however, before he died. Dr. Peter Bryant came to this town considerably later than Dr. Bradish, and entered upon an extensive practice. He was widely consulted in other towns. Several students for the same profession studied in his office, and became distinguished practitioners. In the Hampshire Gazette appears the following: "Sept. 12, 1794.—Dr. Peter Bryant advertises that having provided a hospital and other suitable accommodations for inoculation, any person wishing to take the small-pox will be attended to." Dr. Shaw was in partnership with Dr. Bryant, and afterward moved to Plainfield. Dr. Howland Dawes was contemporary with Dr. Bryant, beginning to practice perhaps as early as 1780, and continuing through life in this town. Dr. Robert Robinson practiced from 1815, ten or twelve years, and moved to North Adams. Dr. Clark succeeded Robinson, and practiced for several years, down to 1834, then sold his place and practice to Dr. Royal Joy. Dr. Joy was born in this town; studied with Dr. Peter Bryant, who was then in partnership with Dr. Shaw. When the partnership was dissolved and Dr. Shaw removed to Plainfield, Mr. Joy studied with him at his office in that town; received his diploma in 1822; practiced in Plainfield four years, West Cummington eight years, before settling at Cummington village. He is still living, and has furnished many items of valuable information for this work. At West Cummington was Dr. Tobey, 1840 to 1845; Dr. Richards also at West Cummington and at Cummington village, removing later in life to Bridgewater. Dr. Barton was also at West Cummington three or four years, afterward of Worthington, and later of Hatfield. Dr. Stedman was in town a few years, 1850 to 1860. 1860 to 1865 Dr. Bemus was also here, and removed to Iowa. The present physician is Dr. Kimball, who has been in practice here but a short time, and is now the sole physician of Cummington. Dr. Joy remarks that at times Cummington has been "crowded with doctors," three or four attempting to do business at the same time. Dr. Thomas Gilfillan was the practicing physician here from 1856 or about that time down to 1874-75. With his brother, James Gilfillan, now of the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., he had fought his way up from the ranks almost of poverty to a thorough education and to distinguished prominence.

LAWYERS.

Cummington has never been a favorite place for lawyers to settle in. Lawyer Cushman is spoken of as having resided on "the Hill," in a house still standing, and as having quite an extensive legal practice.

TAVERNS.

A very early tavern was the one opened by Wm. Mitchell on the present place of Charles Streeter. Town-meetings were held there a part of the time until the meeting-house of 1781 was finished enough for that purpose. The tavern of Adam Packard, on the present Mason place in the Bryant neighborhood, was opened in 1785. The sign was a handsome affair in its day, swung in a neat frame, with the picture of a vessel in full sail, bearing the words "Entertainment by A. Packard, 1785." It is now in the possession of a granddaughter, Mrs. Pettengill, of the East village. Earlier than either of these was the tavern of Joseph Farr, who is described as an innholder July 19, 1771, located in the southwest part of the town, probably the first inn, and very likely the first house. On the main road, through the north part of the town, were two other taverns besides that of Wm. Mitchell. The second one from the east was kept by Asa Streeter, on the present place of H. S. Streeter. Then there was the Lazell tavern, on what is still known as the Lazell farm. These were all very early houses of entertainment. Others followed.

The more modern taverns are the following: A tavern was kept by Seth Williams at the lower end of the village near the present Robbins place. This was 1812 to 1815. It was continued by Sawyer, and was afterward burned with the store. Levi Kingman, in 1817, came to Cummington. In 1821 he opened a tavern nearly opposite the place where he now lives. The large building erected by him, with the elm-tree near it, was a familiar place to citizens and travelers for a dozen years or more. The Union House, now kept by Charles M. Babbitt, was erected in 1846 by Wm. White, and used as a dwelling-house for several years; afterward opened as a tavern, and been continued by various proprietors to the present time. John Ford kept a tavern at "Lightning-Bug." At West Cummington the tavern now kept by Ebenezer Hunt was opened in 1840 by Elisha Mitchell and Wm. Hubbard. Mr. Albro also kept tavern there.

STORES.

Joseph Lazell was an early merchant, 1770 to 1800. His store was in the north part of the town. The place is now owned by Clark Streeter, and occupied by a tenant. Allen Miner succeeded him. Otis & Fobes had a store near Lazell. Mr. Otis also had a distillery, for the manufacture of whisky from potatoes, a mile or so from the store near the river. A bridge is still known by his name at that place. The Lazell neighborhood lost its business partly by the setting off of Plainfield and the tendency of trade to seek the centre of a township. On "Cummington Hill," opposite the old meeting-house, Roswell Hubbard was the first merchant, perhaps before 1800. The cellar of this early store is still visible, and the present quietude of the place presents a strong contrast with the busy times of old, when the town came up to these heights not only for their theology, but for their dry-goods, groceries, rum, and codfish. Mr. Hubbard was followed by Elisha Mitchell, by Col. Swan, and by Robert Dawes. Elisha Mitchell went to West Cummington, 1822 or 1823, and opened a store there; established a large and profitable trade, continuing business for many years. At the East village was the early store of Robert Dawes & Co. Levi Kingman soon after came there, and succeeded to the business. Oak Shaw opened a store in connection with his shoe business where the present post-office is kept. Francis Bates followed him. John Albro, Luther M. Packard, and Franklin R. Joy have been subsequent proprietors. From the latter it passed to the present merchant, D. W. Lovell. N. F. Orcutt commenced trading in 1844, opening first in the building of Levi Kingman. In 1846, Mr. Orcutt erected his present buildings and moved his goods to them. He has been in business there ever since,—nearly thirty-five years in all. During the war L. J. Orcutt opened a store across the river, at the lower end of the village. Darwin Lyman succeeded him, and is the present merchant at that point. In this village is the fur business of Austin Shaw, —gloves, caps, robes, etc.

FAMILY NOTES.

A few notes upon the families of the pioneers are added. Many names have so entirely disappeared from the town that little or nothing can be obtained in Cummington concerning them.

Wm. Mitchell came from Bridgewater. He settled on what is now the place of Charles C. Streeter. He kept a public-house, and some of the early town-meetings were held there. Of his children, Cushing went to sea, and afterward lived in Dalton. Pyam settled in Cummington, and later in life moved to Genesee Co., N. Y. William, Chester, Elisha, and Bela settled in Cummington, the latter on the old homestead. Daughters were Mrs. Elisha Warner, Mrs. Seth Porter, Mrs. Stephen Warner, Mrs. Tileston, Boston; Mrs. Roswell Hubbard, Mrs. Chester Gaylord, Hadley.

Lieut. Nathan Orcutt was from Bridgewater. His homestead here was the place now owned by a grandson, Wm. W. Orcutt. Of his children, Sally became Mrs. Pyam Mitchell; Joseph, Nathan, and John settled in Cummington; Eunice became Mrs. Darius Ford; Huldah, Mrs. James Dawes. These two moved to Ohio.

Solomon Shaw, from Abingdon, settled on the place now owned by his grandson, Wm. H. Shaw (the latter being one of ten sons, three of whom were in the Union army during the late war). Of the children of Solomon Shaw, John settled in Worthington, Nathan in Stockbridge, Solomon on the old homestead. Daughters were Mrs. James W. Briggs, Mrs. Seth Reed, Mrs. Jason Burnell, and Mrs. Nathan Orcutt.

William Ward, first proprietors' clerk in the township, was from Worcester County. His pioneer home was on the farm well known in late years as the Porter place. Of his children, Trowbridge settled in Worthington; Levi, a physician, in New York City; William, in Worthington, a long-time merchant and prominent in county affairs; Artemas went West; Elizabeth became Mrs. Wm. Mitchell. A grandson, Daniel Ward, resides in Worthington.

Jacob Melvin's homestead is supposed to have been the present place of Hiram Steele. His sons went to New York City. One daughter, Mrs. Knapp, of Cummington. Fordyce Knapp, a grandson of Mr. Melvin, resides in town.

Ens. Abel Packard came from Bridgewater, 1774. His homestead was near the present Cummington village, on the way up the "Hill," where a butternut-tree is now growing from the old cellar. Of his children, Eliphalet settled in Cummington, well known for a long series of years as a magistrate, a pension agent, and in similar capacities. Theophilus and Chester first settled in Cummington, and later in life went West. One daughter was Mrs. Nehemiah Richards.

Nehemiah Richards settled where Francis Ford now lives. Of his children, Daniel was a noted teacher; Nehemiah, Rectus, Dares, Orestes settled in Cummington; Solon went West; Lysander to Quincy, Mass. Daughters were Mrs. Grimes, Mrs. Chester Mitchell, Mrs. John Orcutt. A brother of Nehemiah, Sr., settled in Plainfield.

Ebenezer Snell. His homestead was what is known as the Upper Bryant place. The site of the first log house is pointed out not far from the present barns. Of his children, Ebenezer, Jr., settled in Cummington. Thomas was the distinguished divine, and Sarah, Mrs. Peter Bryant.

Samuel Thompson was from the eastern part of the State; settled in Cummington on the well-known Thompson farm, west part of the town. He had been a soldier of the Revolution, a prisoner in the old receiving-hulk at Boston, where so many suffocated or starved to death. He barely escaped with his life. Of his children, William settled on the old homestead,—father of Mrs. Babbitt, of Cummington village; Jacob settled in Windsor, Samuel in Savoy, Joseph in Boston. One daughter, Mrs. Jesse Mason, of Cummington.

Adam Packard came with his brother Abel in 1774, and opened a public-house on the present Mason place in 1785.

Of his children, William settled on the old homestead; town treasurer forty-four years. Philo also on the old place. Abel went to Connecticut. Daughters were Mrs. Jacob Whitmarsh, Mrs. Huntington Porter, and Ruby, died unmarried.

The children of Mr. Otis, the early merchant, in the north part of the town, went West. Augustus became a prominent merchant of Cleveland, O.; Chandler, a lawyer of the same city; Francis, a physician at the West; Harrison and Lennius also went West.

Dr. Peter Bryant came to Cummington, and settled after two or three years on what has ever since been known as the Bryant place, now the residence of Francis Dawes. Of his children, Austin settled in Princeton, Ill.; Wm. Cullen was the distinguished editor and poet; Cyrus settled in Princeton; Arthur in Princeton; and John, after residing many years on the old homestead, also removed to Princeton. Of the daughters, Sarah married Dr. Samuel Shaw, and Louisa married at the West.

Tilly Merick was one of the original committee to lay out lots, in 1762. It is believed that he was one of the earliest to settle in town. He drew lot No. 71. He died in a few years,—at least, this is inferred from a proposition made in the meeting of July 19, 1771, to set the meeting-house on "the widow Merick's lot, No. 71."

Adam Porter, the first town treasurer, 1779. His homestead was west of Packard's, between that and the Bryant place. He had one son, Gannett Porter, named from his wife's family.

Samuel Dawes was from Abingdon. His pioneer homestead was the present Hiram Knapp place. Of his children, Ebenezer was a minister, preached in Scituate; Samuel and John settled in Windsor; Daniel and Mitchell in Cummington; Howland was the noted physician. One daughter, Mrs. Hatch Noyes. Hon. Henry L. Dawes, Senator, is a son of Mitchell.

Nehemiah Joy was from Weymouth; had been a soldier in the Revolution five years. Soon after the war came to Cummington; settled on a farm now the property of L. J. Orcutt. The old dwelling is now a tenant house. Of his children, Lovina became Mrs. Israel Williams, of Ashfield; Noah settled in Ashfield; Royal, a physician, settled in Cummington.

Stephen Warner was an early pioneer. The first proprietors' meeting in this town was held at his place, 1771, June 19th. This was on the old road from Fordyce Packard's to Hiram Steele's. He had several children, and the whole family removed to Ohio about 1830.

Isaac Kingman, of Bridgewater, came to Goshen, near the Cummington line, soon after the war of the Revolution, and settled on what is well known as the Shaw place. Of his children, Jemima married Asa Bates, Cummington; Isaac settled in Cummington; Parthena married Seth Ford, of Cummington; Reuben settled on the old homestead; another daughter was Mrs. Lewis Thayer, who moved to Ohio; Levi Kingman is another son, now living in Cummington, where for many years he was widely known as a merchant, tavern-keeper, and in general business. His sight failing, he retired several years since. To him we are indebted for many valuable facts concerning the town and the village.

Samuel Brewer is supposed by some to have been the first settler. He drew No. 63 and No. 22. He also bought of Joseph Bridge, apparently after the drawing, No. 55. This may indicate that he had previously settled, as some suppose, and bought another man's drawn lot to secure a homestead he had already entered upon. His actual settlement, as to both time and place, is involved in some uncertainty, for he had in his possession three different lots, as shown by the drawing.

Deacon Barnabas Packard, moderator of the first town-meeting, Dec. 20, 1779, settled on the homestead now occupied by his grandson, Fordyce Packard. Of his sons, Barnabas settled in Plainfield, and was the grandfather of Wm. Henry Packard, clerk of West Cummington Church; Philander was the father of Fordyce Packard. There was another son, Caspas, and one daughter, Mrs. Gloyd.

Peter Tower was from Hingham, and settled first at the Four Corners, east of the Bryant place, and, later, farther west. He had been a Revolutionary soldier, and was engaged in guarding the military stores at Boston during the battle of Bunker Hill. Mrs. Tower used to relate to some still living the stories of early settlement, its dangers and hardships; that she used to carry lighted brands to frighten away bears in going to a neighbor's in the evening. Of the children of Peter Tower, Nathaniel settled in Cummington, on the present place of Runy Bartlett; Peter died young; Ambrose settled in Cummington (grandfather of Mrs. Wm. Henry Packard, of West Cummington); Warren died in Cummington. Daughters were Mrs. Jonathan Miner, of Windsor; Mrs. Seth Torrey, of Cummington; Mrs. Stephen Bartlett, of Worthington.

Edward Bartlett settled in the southwest part of the town; house gone; place now owned by Luther Tower. Of his children, Edward settled in Worthington; Ephraim, in Cummington; Stephen, in Worthington; Luther, in Cummington; and Calvin in Ohio. Daughters were Mrs. Ames, Easton; Mrs. Bird, Stoughton; Mrs. Stephen Tower, Cummington; Mrs. Edward Tillson, Worthington; Mrs. Peter Bates, Ohio; Mrs. Ambrose Tower, Mrs. Morse, of Ohio, whose first husband was Peter Tower. Runy Bartlett, now living in town, is a son of Edward, Jr.

Nathaniel Tower was an early settler of Goshen; had been in the Revolutionary war. His wife, Leah, lived to be one hundred and one years old, and used to relate that she carried water for soldiers to drink at the battle of Bunker Hill. Of the children of Nathaniel, Nathaniel, Jr., settled in Goshen; Warren, in Cummington (father of Lorenzo N. Tower, of the Bryant Library); Amanda became Mrs. Runy Bartlett.

Jacob Allen came to Cummington in 1784, from Bridgewater. Jacob Gannett, 1785 to 1790, from Bridgewater.

Dr. James Bradish, physician. His homestead was the present place of Otis Bartlett. One of the sons of Dr. Bradish was Luther, afterward Lieutenant-Governor of New York.

Col. John Bradish. His homestead the present farm of Edwin Knapp. Mr. Stevens was an early settler, and it was voted to hold meetings at his house in 1773.

Charles Prescott. His name is frequent in the early arrangements of the proprietors, and it seems probable from the records that he built one or two mills; but his name is not mentioned in the records of the proprietors or those of the town later than 1771, and very likely he removed from town early, even if he came here. The family name is not among the traditions of the old people now living.

Asa Hatch was on the committee to secure incorporation, 1778, and was an early settler. Peter Harwood and Nathan Harwood were both appointed to offices and on committees, 1771, and afterward. It is concluded, from the present residence of families of the same name, that these pioneers resided within the limits of what is now Windsor.

Timothy Moore was chosen assessor at the first meeting of the proprietors in town, and meetings were sometimes held at his house. William W. Mitchell states that, on examination of the old Hampshire records at Springfield, relating to real estate in No. 5, he found the earliest deed to be from Barnabas Packard to Timothy Moore, Aug. 30, 1774, lots Nos. 41 and 44, price $300.

Rev. James Briggs resided at the present place of Daniel Dawes. Of his children, James W. settled in Cummington, and was one of the first deacons of the West Cummington Church; Clara died unmarried; and one daughter married and moved away.

Lieut. Jared Smith was sent as a delegate to the General Court Sept. 14, 1778, to secure the incorporation. He was a man of influence, and enjoyed the public confidence. Stephen Shaw was a town officer at the first town-meeting. Isaac Lazell, Edmund Lazell, Joseph Lazell. The first was the father, who only came to Cummington in his old age, and died among his children. Capt. Edmund had two sons,—one Edmund, Jr., the other, Martin, a college graduate. Joseph Lazell, the early merchant, and Isaac, were probably brothers of Edmund, Sr., though the name of Joseph does not appear to be so included in the Family Register given in the History of Bridgewater.

Seth Porter, south part of the town. A son was Jacob Porter, the well-known physician and historian of Plainfield. Daniel Reed was an early and prominent settler, as shown by the records. Moderator of the first proprietors' meeting, 1771. His homestead is supposed to be the present Clark Reed place.

Obed Shaw, homestead the present place of L. J. Orcutt, where he kept tavern at a very early day, many years anterior to Seth Williams. He had one son, Leonard Shaw, who settled near him. John Holbrook, chosen collector at first proprietors' meeting, 1771. Capt. Joseph Warner, moderator of proprietors' meeting, July 19, 1771; homestead on the present place of Franklin Warner, his grandson. Beriah Shaw, brother of Obed Abingdon; homestead the present place of Marshall Jenkins. Children: Beriah, Jr., father of Austin Shaw, of Cummington village, and Mrs. Joshua Hamlin; others died young.

Joseph Farr was an innholder in 1771, being, most probably, the first landlord in town. It was the place of John Ferguson, now occupied by John Sylvester. Stephen Farr was also in town at the same date. In the western part of the town Mrs. Mason recalls the name of Jacob Farr. He had a son, Ansil, and two sons of the latter were Benjamin and Eldredge, both of whom went West.

The inn of Joseph Farr (1771) was situated on an old through route, of one hundred years ago or more, from Northampton to Berkshire County, winding into this town for only a mile or two. This gives more force to the suggestion that the Farris were the first settlers. It is a theory worthy of credit that the first access to this town was over this old road, and that Farr's inn, a stopping-place on this road, was the first house built in Cummington. As to other names among the first settlers, considerable inquiry fails to ascertain much of Joseph Ford (1772), Isaac Benjamin (1772), Thomas Barrett (1762), David Leonard (1779), Deacon Tupper (1772), Mr. Gannett, Nathan Snow, from Abingdon, and some others.

ORGANIZATION.

The "government of the proprietors" had evidently succeeded very well in settling the township and in providing for many of the exigencies of frontier life. There had probably been little or no necessity for criminal law, and such disputes as may have arisen between neighbors had doubtless been settled by the friendly assistance of impartial friends.

It does not appear that Township No. 5 was under any local civil jurisdiction from its settlement to 1779. No writers speak of it as a part of any other town, nor is there a hint of it in the proprietors' proceedings. The town of Cummington included Plainfield when the former was incorporated, but was not apparently itself included in any other during the pioneer period, 1762 to 1779. The act of incorporation is dated June 23, 1779. The name taken at its organization—Cummington—was, of course, given in honor of the enterprising proprietor, Col. John Cummings, who was evidently the founder of the town, and deserved this recognition of his services. It does not appear that he removed to this town himself. His name is appended to the call for the first proprietors' meeting in the township, but does not occur in the subsequent proceedings. We give the warrant and the action of the several town-meetings of the first year from the records:

HAMPSHIRE Co., ss.:

To Ebenezer Snell, of Cummington, in said county, greeting: This is to require you, in the name of the government of the people of the State of Massachusetts Bay, forthwith to warn and give notice to all the male inhabitants upward of twenty-one years of age inhabiting said town to meet together at the dwelling-house of Ensign Packard, in said town, on Monday, the 20th day of December, inst., at ten of the clock in the forenoon, then and there to act on the following articles or not, as they shall think proper:

1st. To choose a moderator.

2d. To choose a town clerk, town treasurer, and all such town officers as towns by law are directed to choose in the month of March annually.

Hereof fail not to make return of this warrant to the moderator of said meeting, that the clerk of the town, when chosen, may put the same on record, together with the doings thereon, as you would answer your neglect at the peril of the law.

Given under my hand and seal at Chesterfield, this 16th day of December, A.D. 1779.

BENJAMIN MILLS, Justice of the Peace.

A true copy.

Attest WM. WARD, Town Clerk.

At a legal meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Cummington of twenty-one years of age and upward assembled at Ensign Packard, in said township, on Monday, the 20th day of December, 1779, at ten o'clock in the morning, chose Deacon Barnabas Packard, Moderator; Deacon Barnabas Packard, Town Clerk; Mr. Adam Porter, Town Treasurer; Capt. Wm. Ward, Deacon Ebenezer Snell, and Lieut. Joshua Shaw, Selectmen; Mr. David Leonard and Mr. Edmond Lazell, Constables and Collectors; Capt. Daniel Reid, Lieut. John Packard, Lieut. Wm. Mitchell, Samuel Dawes, Andrew Cook, Isaac Joy, Isaac Lazell, John Bradish, Jr., Surveyors of Highways; Jacob Melvin and Caleb White, Deer-Reeves; Lieut. Packard and Lieut. Warner, Tythingmen; Stephen Shaw, Sealer of Weights; William Mitchell, Sealer of Leather; Lieut. Colson, Sealer of Lumber; LIEUT. COLSON, LIEUT. PACKARD, LIEUT. WARNER, Committee of Correspondence.

Attest: WM. WARD, Town Clerk.

At a meeting of the Freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Cummington, legally assembled at the dwelling-house of Ensign Packard, the 5th day of January, 1780: 1st. Voted that Wm. Ward be moderator of said meeting. 2d. Voted to adjourn this meeting till the 17th of the same month, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, at Ensign Packard's.

January 17th.—Met upon adjournment at the time and place. 2d. Voted the Rev. Mr. Briggs to be town's minister. 3d. Voted that Deacon Snell, Lieut. Warner, and Ebenezer Dawes be a committee for running the line between Cummington and Windsor. 4th. Voted to allow Mr. Jacob Melvin eighteen pounds for building a pound. Also voted to allow Deacon Snell sixty pounds for entertaining the Council at the ordination of the Rev. Mr. Briggs. 5th. Voted to build a meeting-house in the centre of the town, or as near as any convenient place may be found. 6th. Further saith not. 7th. Voted not to choose a committee.

A true copy.

Attest: WM. WARD, Town Clerk.

The first regular "March meeting" assembled at the house of Ens. Abel Packard on the 6th day of the month, 1780:

1st. Voted that Wm. Ward be moderator of said meeting. 2d. Voted that Wm. Ward be Town Clerk. Voted that Lieut. Joshua Shaw, Deacon Barnabas Packard, Lieut. Ebenezer Colson be Selectmen. Voted Mr. Adam Porter be Town Treasurer. Voted Lieut. Samuel Noyes, Lieut. John Packard, and Mr. John Bradish, Jun., be a Committee of Correspondence. Voted Tythingmen, Lieut. Stephen Warner and Mr. Caleb White. Voted John Bradish, Jun., Constable; Highway Surveyors, Samuel Dawes, Asa Joy, Ebenezer Bisbee, David Leonard, Lieut. Stephen Warner, Noah Rust (probably), Abraham Beals, John Streeter, and Andrew Cook; Surveyors of Lumber, Lieut. Warner, Lieut. Colson; Hog-Reeves, Wm. Robbins, Ensign Packard, Ebenezer Bisbee, Jr., Joshua Remington, Jonathan Munroe, George Acres; Fence-Viewers, Deacon Snell, Daniel Hill; Deer-Reeves, Asa Dunbar, Noah Packard. 4th. Voted to hire collectors to gather taxes. 5th. Voted to notify town-meetings for the future by setting up notifications at a Public-House on each side of the river. 6th. Voted to mend Highways by a rate; also voted to lay out nine thousand pounds this year upon the Highways. 7th. Voted that the selectmen be a committee to fix the price of work on the Highways. 7th. Voted that Hogs shall not go at large the year ensuing. Voted that Jacob Gannet be Collector for the south side of the river, and have twenty shillings upon the hundred pounds for collecting; Isaac Joy, Collector for the north side, and have the same compensation.

A true copy.

Attest: WM. WARD, Town Clerk.

At a town-meeting held at the house of Wm. Mitchell, April 20, 1780:

Voted that Deacon Barnabas Packard be moderator of said meeting. Voted to build a meeting-house in the centre of the town, or the nearest convenient place thereto. Voted not to raise any money to build said house. Voted to divide the town into two precincts. Also voted that this be an article in the next warrant, to divide by the river if they see fit. Voted five town-meetings on the south side of the river, to four on the north. Voted to choose a committee to settle with Mr. Briggs for his last year's salary. Committee: Wm. Ward, Lieut. Shaw, and Lieut. Packard. Voted the selectmen be a committee to settle the boundary of the town agreeably to the order of the court in our incorporation.

April 25, 1780.—A purpose of marriage between Mr. Noah Benson and Mrs. Mary Murray, made public, as the law directs.

At a town-meeting, May 22, 1780, at the house of Ens. Abel Packard. Voted that Wm. Ward represent said town in the Great and General Court, to be begun and held at Boston the 31st day of May, 1780.

Two o'clock P.M., same day, Deacon Ebenezer Snell, moderator. Voted to choose a committee to make remarks upon the Constitution. Capt. Warner, Jr., Wm. Ward, Lieut. Colson, Lieut. Shaw, Ens. Packard, Deacon Snell, were chosen.

The record does not show whether they did "make remarks" or not.

Voted that Westfield River be a division line between Parishes in Cummington. Voted that Benjamin Briggs' salary for the first year begin Feb. 15, 1779. Voted that the preaching this summer be five Sabbaths on the south to four on the north side of the river, beginning on the north next Sabbath day.

At a legal meeting held to receive votes for Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Counsellors, and Senators, Sept. 4, 1780, at the house of Ens. Abel Packard, for Governor, John Hancock had 43 votes; for Lieutenant-Governor, Artemas Ward had 27 votes, James Bowdoin had 6 votes; no votes for the other officers.

At a meeting held at the house of Wm. Mitchell, Oct. 16, 1780, voted that Wm. Ward represent said town in the Great and General Court the year ensuing.

March 23, 1781.—Voted that Lieut. Stephen Warner attend a convention to be holden at Hatfield the 27th of this month.

One item of the warrant for the March meeting of 1784 was, "To see if the town will build a bridge over the Westfield River near the forge." The town, however, refused at that time. Shaw's mill is mentioned in describing roads, March 9, 1789; also Reed's ashery is mentioned about the same time. Robert Dawes' mill is mentioned under date of March 7, 1796.

As late as 1840 it was deemed necessary "to make provision for inoculating the inhabitants of this town with the cov-pox."

The first town-meeting (Dec. 20, 1779) was held at the dwelling-house of Ens. Packard. April 20, 1780, a meeting was held at the house of William Mitchell. On the completion of the meeting-house, in the fall of 1782, town-meetings were held there and in its successor down to 1840, or later. They were then held a few years at the Academy Hall. June 26, 1848, the town-meeting was held at the Baptist meeting-house, and they were continued there until 1873, when they were changed to the hall of the new school-building, and are now held there.

SELECTMEN.

- 1779.—William Ward, Joshua Shaw, Ebenezer Snell.
- 1780.—Joshua Shaw, Barnabas Packard, Ebenezer Colson.
- 1781.—Joshua Shaw, Barnabas Packard, Ebenezer Colson.
- 1782.—William Ward, Joseph Shaw, Benjamin Packard.
- 1783.—Ebenezer Colson, William Ward, Benjamin Packard.
- 1784.—Joshua Shaw, Adam Porter, Ebenezer Snell.
- 1785.—Barnabas Packard, Stephen Warner, Abijah Whitton.
- 1786.—John Bradish, Abel Packard, Jr., Edmond Lazell.
- 1787.—John Bradish, William Mitchell, Abel Packard, Jr.
- 1788-92.—William Ward, John Bradish, Abel Packard, Jr.
- 1793.—Abel Packard, Jr., Robert Dawes, Stephen Shaw.
- 1794.—Abel Packard, Jr., Stephen Shaw, Nehemiah Richards.
- 1795.—Stephen Shaw, Adam Packard, Jacob Whitmarsh.
- 1796.—William Ward, John Bradish, William Mitchell.
- 1797.—Stephen Shaw, William Ward, John Bradish.
- 1798.—Stephen Shaw, William Ward, Adam Packard.
- 1799.—William Ward, Stephen Shaw, Jacob Whitmarsh.
- 1800-1.—Stephen Shaw, Jacob Whitmarsh, Clark Robinson.
- 1802-3.—Adam Packard, Nehemiah Richards, Capt. Robinson.
- 1804.—Adam Packard, Clark Robinson, James Shaw.
- 1805.—Adam Packard, Clark Robinson, Nehemiah Richards.
- 1806-7.—Adam Packard, Nehemiah Richards, Jacob Whitmarsh.
- 1808-10.—Adam Packard, Jacob Whitmarsh, James Shaw.
- 1811.—Jacob Whitmarsh, James Shaw, James W. Briggs.
- 1812-13.—James Shaw, James W. Briggs, Robert Dawes.
- 1814.—Robert Dawes, James W. Briggs, Roswell Hubbard.
- 1815.—Robert Dawes, Roswell Hubbard, Philander Packard.
- 1816.—Philander Packard, Robert Dawes, Aaron Bigelow.
- 1817.—James Shaw, Aaron Bigelow, Jacob Whitmarsh.
- 1818.—Aaron Bigelow, Nathan Orcutt, Jr., Eliphalet Packard.
- 1819.—Eliphalet Packard, Nathan Orcutt, Jr., Daniel Richards.
- 1820.—Ebenezer Snell, Nicholas Cottrell, James W. Briggs.
- 1821.—Ebenezer Snell, James W. Briggs, Robert Dawes.
- 1822.—Eliphalet Packard, Seth Porter, James W. Briggs.
- 1823.—Eliphalet Packard, Amos Cobb, Seth Porter, Jr.
- 1824.—Eliphalet Packard, Amos Cobb, James Everett.
- 1825.—Robert Dawes, James Everett, Aaron Bigelow.
- 1826-27.—Robert Dawes, Austin Bryant, Daniel Richards.
- 1828.—Eliphalet Packard, Austin Bryant, Elias Cobb.
- 1829.—Eliphalet Packard, Elias Cobb, Philander Packard.
- 1830.—Austin Bryant, Darius Ford, Philander Packard.

- 1831.—Austin Bryant, Darius Ford, Noah T. Packard.
 1832.—Darius Ford, Alexis Painter, Eliphalet Packard.
 1833-34.—Eliphalet Packard, Alexis Painter, James Dawes.
 1835.—James W. Briggs, Elisha Carpenter, James Robinson.
 1836.—Nathan Orcutt, James W. Briggs, Elisha Carpenter.
 1837.—Nathan Orcutt, Elias Cobb, Elisha Carpenter.
 1838.—Nathan Orcutt, Eliphalet Packard, Royal S. Packard.
 1839.—Nathan Orcutt, William O. Hubbard, James Robinson.
 1840.—Eliphalet Packard, Lewis Ford, Charles O. Fanning.
 1841.—Eliphalet Packard, Lewis Ford, Elisha Gardner.
 1842.—Lewis Ford, Royal L. Packard, Charles Shaw.
 1843.—Nathan Orcutt, Royal L. Packard, Lewis Tucker.
 1844.—Nathan Orcutt, Elisha Mitchell, R. L. Packard, Charles Shaw.
 1845.—Nathan Orcutt, Royal L. Packard, Lewis Tucker.
 1846.—Nathan Orcutt, Royal L. Packard, Elisha Gardner.
 1847.—Nathan Orcutt, Royal L. Packard, Spencer Shaw.
 1848.—Nathan Orcutt, Robert Dawes, Jr., Spencer Shaw.
 1849.—Eliphalet Packard, Spencer Shaw, Lewis T. Cobb.
 1850.—Robert Dawes, Jr., C. W. Mitchell, N. F. Orcutt.
 1851.—Eliphalet Packard, C. W. Mitchell, Lewis T. Cobb.
 1852.—Franklin B. Joy, Jesse Reed, Jacob Bates.
 1853.—Josiah Barber, Lewis T. Cobb, Elisha Gardner.
 1854-56.—Nathan Orcutt, Franklin R. Joy, Josiah D. Nelson.
 1857.—Nathan Orcutt, William H. Guilford, Elisha Gardner.
 1858.—Nathan Orcutt, William H. Guilford, Lucius C. Robinson.
 1859.—Nathan Orcutt, John C. Reed, Noah L. Gloyd.
 1860.—Nathan Orcutt, William W. Mitchell, Noah L. Gloyd.
 1861.—Nathan Orcutt, William W. Mitchell, Charles Harlow.
 1862-64.—Nathan Orcutt, John C. Reed, Charles Harlow.
 1865.—L. J. Orcutt, L. E. Dawes, Cyrus M. Tillson.
 1866.—N. F. Orcutt, Henry S. Elder, Austin M. Shaw.
 1867.—N. F. Orcutt, F. D. Streeter, H. S. Elder.
 1868-69.—N. F. Orcutt, Charles Harlow, F. D. Streeter.
 1870.—N. F. Orcutt, T. H. Whitmarsh, L. H. Tower.
 1871-72.—N. F. Orcutt, Charles Harlow, Alexis Wells.
 1873.—N. F. Orcutt, E. G. Allen, Alexis Wells.
 1874.—N. F. Orcutt, E. G. Allen, Jason Willcutt.
 1875.—N. F. Orcutt, E. G. Allen, C. W. Streeter.
 1876.—N. S. Stevens, C. M. Babbitt, Fordyce Packard.
 1877-78.—N. F. Orcutt, Abraham Osborne, Lorenzo Shaw.

TOWN CLERKS.

Barnabas Packard, 1779; Wm. Ward, 1780-85; Adam Porter, 1786-92; Wm. Ward, 1793-95; Abel Packard, Jr., 1796-1816; Philander Packard, 1817-24; Nathan Orcutt, 1825-35; James W. Briggs, 1836; Eliphalet Packard, 1837-38; Nathan Orcutt, 1839; Royal L. Packard, 1840-41; Lewis Tucker, 1842; Luther M. Packard, 1843-52; Lyman E. Dawes, 1853-54; Almon Mitchell, 1855-79.

REPRESENTATIVES.

William Ward, 1786-91; James Richards, 1793; William Ward, 1796-97; James Richards, 1798; Ebenezer Snell, 1800; James Richards, 1801; Ebenezer Snell, 1802; James Richards, 1803; Ebenezer Snell, 1804; James Richards, 1805; Peter Bryant, 1806; Adam Packard, 1806; Peter Bryant, 1808-9; Abel Packard, 1810; Peter Bryant, 1811-13; Robert Dawes, 1815-16; Robert Dawes, 1818-19; Robert Dawes, 1822; Eliphalet Packard, 1825-26; Amos Cobb, 1827; Wm. Swan, 1829-30; Jonathan Dawes, 1831-33; Alexis Painter, 1834; James W. Briggs, 1835; Nathan Orcutt, 1836-37; Philander Packard, 1838-39; Joseph Orcutt, 1840-41; Royal L. Packard, 1842-43; Robert Dawes, Jr., 1844-45; Hiram Steele, 1846-47; Dr. Royal Joy, 1848-49; John Ford, 1850; Charles Shaw, 1851; N. F. Orcutt, 1852-53; Ebenezer Shaw, 1854; Spencer Shaw, 1859; Almon Mitchell, 1863; Richmond Kingman, 1868; Lysander J. Orcutt, 1874.

VILLAGES.

CUMMINGTON VILLAGE

is handsomely located in a narrow valley lying along the Westfield River. It is surrounded with a series of romantic and picturesque hills. Some of these are bold, rocky elevations; others are of more graceful curves and crowned with forests; mingling with these are the cultivated slopes of the open farming-lands and the meadows around the river; the whole forming a landscape of mingled beauty and grandeur.

Thomas Tirrell, a farmer, was an early, if not the first, settler at this point. His place was where the Widow Bradley now lives. The store of Seth Williams and his tavern were very early, dating nearly, if not quite, back to 1800.

Levi Kingman gives the following description of the village as it was in 1817: Below the bridge at the east was the house of Obed Shaw, and a little farther down the place of his son, Leonard Shaw. West of the bridge, tracing up the street, on the north side, were the store and tavern of Seth Williams, nearly at the present Robbins place. Next was the house of James Shaw, the present place of A. F. Pettengill.

Next, a house built several years before by one Miller, a shoemaker, and probably the oldest house in the village. Mr. Kingman went there for a pair of boots in 1808. Miller was a brother-in-law of Seth Williams. Next was the house of Asa Pettengill, the present place of Austin Shaw. Then above was the house of Oak Shaw, built in 1816, now the place of Richmond Kingman. Next was Lewis Thayer's house, who removed not many years later to Ohio. It was built by Josiah Hayden, and is now the place of Charles Bartlett. Beyond, on the corner opposite Lovell's store, was the old place of Squire Eliphalet Packard, between the blacksmith-shop and the main road, about the present place of E. B. Bruce. Returning to the east end of the village, and tracing the south side of the street, the first house was that of Thos. Tirrell; then a long space with no buildings as far as the present house of Austin Cowing. Levi Kingman moved to that place in 1817. Hatch Noyce had built the house. It was enlarged and improved by Mr. Kingman. Next was an old house, about in Prof. Mitchell's present garden, and a blacksmith-shop near. The old school-house was a little out of the village, on the south road, where the ruins and the brick remaining identify the spot. Some 14 houses, all told, comprised the village of sixty years ago.

Mr. Kingman, in 1818, took an interest in the store of Dawes & Co., and soon after bought the entire business. In 1820 he united the store to his dwelling, enlarged the buildings, and opened a tavern; carried on both store and tavern for some twelve years, when he retired to enter upon the business of farming with his family of growing sons.

The tavern of Seth Williams, and afterward of Mr. Sawyer, was the sole tavern for a time. This was closed out by fire about 1845. Other taverns have been that of Alonzo Gurney, for three or four years, on the present place of Francis Richards. Dr. Bemus, just opposite, also kept public-house a while. William White built the present Union House, 1846 to 1848, and it has been continued by various proprietors to the present time. E. B. Bruce kept the house 1871 to the spring of 1878. It then passed into the hands of its present proprietor, Charles M. Babbitt. It is now an excellent house, with abundant entertainment and polite attention. With the surrounding scenery and the fine opportunity for charming drives in so many directions, there are many things here to tempt the tourist and the summer visitor.

The present village, with its churches, school-building, stores, business-places, and pleasant private residences, differs very much from that of 1817.

A post-office was first established at Cummington village in 1816, or about that time. Previous to that date the mails had come to Worthington and newspapers were delivered by post-riders. The first postmaster was Maj. Robert Dawes. His successors have been James Dawes, John Albrow, Francis Bates, Col. William Swan, and the present incumbent, D. W. Lovell.

WEST CUMMINGTON

is a pleasant village finely situated at the foot of Deer Hill, upon the banks of the Westfield, with wild and rocky hills rising beyond. The place was largely founded by two men, Wm. Hubbard, who established his tannery in 1805, nearly upon the site of the L. L. Brown paper-mills, and Elisha Mitchell, who came here as a merchant in 1823, and entered upon his long and prosperous career. The Hubbard tannery did a large business, employing many men, and stimulating the whole town into a greater degree of activity than at any time before, or perhaps since.

Mr. Mitchell had a large country trade. The two men co-operated in many useful enterprises for the benefit of the place.

On the site of the Hubbard tannery, Jonah Beals' tannery had done a limited business, extending back earlier than 1790. There was also a very early saw-mill here.

A post-office was established at West Cummington about 1823 or '24. Elisha Mitchell was the first postmaster. His successors have been Josiah D. Nelson, Henry Howes, Albert Winslow, Ethan Clark, Charles Harlow, and the present officer, L. E. Bicknell.

The village at the present time comprises quite a number of private residences, the store of L. E. Bicknell, the store of Joseph Tirrell, at the old Mitchell stand, the grocery-stores of E. G. Allen and H. A. Mason, the hotel by Ebenezer Hunt, two churches, the saw-mill and turning-shop of Charles Harlow, the shop of Wm. G. Atkins, several mechanic shops, the clock-repairing establishment of Amos Eddy, the pen-holder factory by Henry Elder & Son, and the lower paper-mill of F. A. Bates, employing ten or twelve hands, and making manilla paper.

West Cummington owes its present business prosperity very largely to the excellent paper-mills located just above. The buildings were erected in the summer of 1856, being raised June 26th of that year. Nelson Shaw & Co. were the proprietors. After two years they retired, and the mills stood unused for nearly the same length of time. They were then bought by Amos Eddy and Mr. Crombie, of New York. Eddy removed to this place and experimented in the manufacture of photograph paper. After running about two years the property passed to the Hollister Paper Co., L. L. Brown, President; Stephen D. Hollister, Agent; Calvin Whiting, Superintendent and Treasurer. In April, 1870, the firm was changed to L. L. Brown & Co. In 1872 the "L. L. Brown Paper Company of Adams" was formed, and these mills became a part of their property, and remain in that ownership to the present time. Abram Osborn is the general superintendent of the company, and his son, Abram Osborn, Jr., agent and resident superintendent of these mills.

The buildings are in fine condition, having been recently repaired and improved, at an expense of nearly $5000. The amount of paper made in 1877 was 225,155 pounds. The number of hands employed is about 30. The line of work consists of fine writings, linens, bond, and fancy, of all colors. The company have a boarding-house (the old Wm. Hubbard dwelling-house) and a farm of 400 acres connected with the property. The paper is finished in Adams. The company do their own teaming,—all westward to Adams, fourteen miles. George West, the Ballston Spa manufacturer, superintended these mills just before going to Saratoga County and commencing his career of unequalled success.

SWIFT RIVER VILLAGE,

locally known as "Babylon," is situated in the southeast part of the town, at the junction of the two branches of Swift River. It comprises a few dwelling-houses, a post-office (established in 1869, with William H. Guilford postmaster; he was succeeded by John Hussey), the wood-turning shops of M. B. Crosby, J. Lovell's plane establishment, and the Guilford works, including saw-, planing-, turning-, and pen-holder-mill. The scenery in the vicinity is romantic, the hills steep, the streams rapid, and the place is subject to frequent damage by freshets.

CUMMINGTON HILL.

This well-known name designates an extensive place. First settlers are spoken of as living on "the Hill," and yet from one to two miles apart. The centre, or business point, was at the location of the meeting-house, above the pound. The store of Hubbard was located there. The old sexton, Hezekiah Ford, lived there. In front of the church site, at the intersection of the roads, is still an open space, constituting the common of old times. Intensely quiet now, it yet has many interesting reminiscences to the older people of this town and those who went out from here to settle the towns of the fertile West.

SCHOOLS.

The records of the proprietors' meetings contain no provisions for schools except the setting apart of certain lots for their future benefit. After the town was incorporated, the subject came up at the early meetings, but no definite action was taken for a year or two. March 5, 1781, a proposition to raise a sum of money for the support of schools was voted down. A year later, May 2, 1782, a more liberal view was taken, and £20 were appropriated. In 1783 and 1784 the same sum was voted. In 1785 they appropriated £30, but returned, in 1786, to £20. In 1787 the town was divided into six school districts, or "ricks," as they are described in the records.

The names of a few early teachers are gathered from an old order-book of the selectmen: Chloe Bradish, 1793; Amariah Robbins, 1795; Lieut. Nehemiah Joy, 1797; Hatch Noyes, 1794; Amos Cobb, 1797; Ebenezer Snell, Jr., 1795; Nabby Dawes, 1796; John Bradish, 1798; Clark Robinson, 1796; Miss Nancy Warner, 1799; also Leah Beals, Col. Bradley, Deborah Porter, Susannah Shaw, David Bigelow, 1800; Elizabeth Robbins, Betsey Holbrook, 1801; Nabby Reed, Hannah Williams, 1803; Seth Reed, Jr., J. Wiswell Briggs, Nicholas Cottrell, Jonathan Dawes, Rosy Warner, 1804; Philena Davison, 1805; Daniel Richards, Mehitable Allen, 1806. Nehemiah Joy taught thirty-five winter terms in succession, and afterward two more.

The school known as "the Academy," though it was not an incorporated institution, was established by a few citizens about the year 1830, and was a valuable addition to the educational facilities of the town. A large number of young people secured there the elements of a higher education.

Various teachers, some of noted prominence in later years, were employed. The names of Rawson and Brown are recalled by the people, Zalmon Richards and Eli Hubbard. The movement for an academy was led by Rev. Roswell Hawks, who had the ability to inspire other men with his own enthusiasm in the cause of education, and who assisted Miss Mary Lyon in founding Mount Holyoke Seminary. A convenient building was erected upon the west side of the street in Cummington village.

The school was continued for only ten or twelve years. The building is now a dwelling-house.

Other private schools have also been maintained at times in the town. One, rather noted for two or three terms, was taught by students from Amherst College. It was held in a hall over the old Roswell Hubbard store on the Hill. Six young men of the town, who afterward entered college and graduated, studied there at the same time,—Wm. W. Mitchell, Henry L. Dawes, Joseph Porter, Horatio Porter, Charles Packard, Cullen Packard.

From this part of old Township No. 5, the far-famed "Cummington Hill," there went out five distinguished men, all within a mile of each other, all in the Bryant School District: Wm. Cullen Bryant, Hon. Luther Bradish, Rev. Thomas Snell, Dr. Theophilus Packard, Hon. Henry L. Dawes.

The appropriations by the town from 1805 to 1828 were usually $300 annually. Two or three years of the time they increased to $400, and once to $450. In 1827 the town organized the schools under the new act by the appointment of Rev. Roswell Hawks, Daniel Richards, and Nathan Orcutt as school committee. Increased attention to education seems to have been awakened at that time. More money was appropriated. In 1838, $500 was voted; in 1839, $500, and also "the income of the surplus revenue and the sum received from the State." In 1848, and for four years following, there was annually voted $700 for schools.

The school-houses of the town are in good condition. At Cummington village is a large building, with rooms conveniently arranged for two teachers. The Bryant District has a very fine building. William Cullen Bryant made a handsome donation toward its erection.

The following is a list of college graduates natives of Cummington: Jacob Porter, Nathan Straw, Abel Packard (2d), Joseph Porter, Cullen Packard, Charles Packard, Ambrose Tillson, Royal Reed, Noah Thomas, Jr., Calvin Briggs, C. M. Briggs, Edward Hawkes, Martin Lazell, Royal Joy, E. H. Porter, Alfred Gilbert, E. N. Bates, Zalmon Richards, Francis J. Warner, and Walter G. Mitchell.

Besides these should be mentioned others, who, though not graduates, yet have in many instances a national reputation: Theophilus Packard, D.D., Thomas Snell, D.D., Hon. Luther Bradish, Hon. Joel Hayden, Wm. Cullen Bryant, Henry L. Dawes, Wm. C. Otis, Eli A. Hubbard, Shepherd Knapp.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Ten schools; attending in the summer, 251; average, 203; winter, 278; average, 230; in town, between 4 and 16, 356; summer schools, 34 months; winter, 25 months, 21 days; summer teachers, 1 male, 9 females; winter, 9 males; average wages of male teachers per month, $17.33; female teachers, $11.

January, 1847.—Number of schools, 10; attending in the summer, 292; average, 219; winter, 353; average, 279; number in town between 4 and 16, 349; attending under 4, 10; over 16, 35; summer schools, 33 months, 7 days; winter, 34 months, 21 days; total, 68 months; summer teachers, 9 females; winter teachers, 5 males, 5 females; male teachers' average wages per month, $21.80; female, $11.69.

January, 1857.—Ten schools; attending in summer, 187; average, 154; winter, 262; average, 206; attending under 5, 26; over 15, 52; in town, between 5 and 15, 196; summer teachers, 10 females; winter, 4 males, 6 females; summer schools, 29 months, 6 days; winter, 28 months; total, 57 months, 6 days; average wages male teachers per month, $18.75; female, $13.66.

January, 1867.—Ten schools; attending in summer, 228; average, 176; winter, 251; average, 202; under 5, 12; over 15, 23; in town, between 5 and 15, 222; summer teachers, 10 females; winter teachers, 10 females; summer schools, 32 months; winter, 34 months; average wages of female teachers per month, $20.80.

January, 1878.—Ten schools; attending, 202; average, 152; under 5, 7; over 15, 49; in town, between 5 and 16, 156; teachers, 1 male, 12 females; two from normal; school 61 months, 10 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $44; female, $20.67; taxation, $1200; expense of superintendence, $69.75; printing, $22; income of local funds and dog tax, $33.91; town share of State fund, $225.18.

CHURCHES.

Action to secure public worship was taken at the very outset of the settlement. There were only ten or twelve families in the town when the first vote was taken to procure a minister "four Sabbaths next summer." The location of the first meeting-house seems to have required a long discussion in nearly every town. As it was the most important building to be erected, and public worship the most important thing to be established, they evidently gave to them their most careful thought, and quite probably exercised something of the iron will which a hundred years before had made Puritans such invincible soldiers under Cromwell.

Cummington was not an exception, and the first committee "to pitch upon a site" was succeeded by many others before the place was really chosen and the house built. The following further minutes are taken from the records of the proprietors and of the town:

Dec. 28, 1772.—Voted to clear three acres for a meeting-house, spot. Voted to have two Sabbaths' preaching more.

Feb. 3, 1773.—Voted to appoint Mr. Stephen Farr, Capt. Joseph Warner, and William Ward a committee to supply the township with preaching. Voted not to send for Mr. Reed to preach on probation, nor to renew the former call.

From which it appears that the project of ordaining Mr. Reed failed at the time before appointed, and a month later the town again refused to send for him.

April 13, 1773.—Voted to meet for public worship at Mr. Packard's, in the east part of the town, and at Mr. Stevens', in the west part.

Nov. 19, 1773.—Voted that the committee agree with Mr. Porter to preach longer. Voted not to build a meeting-house.

March 21, 1774.—Voted to settle Mr. Porter as their minister in said township, and offered him forty pounds salary the first year, and raise five pounds a year until it amounts to sixty, and then stand at that; also voted him a settlement,—100 acres of land, £26 13s. 4d.

Security was, however, to be taken of him for the two lots granted to the first settled minister; which means, we suppose, that if he took the 100 acres now offered, he must not also claim the two lots originally set apart for the support of the gospel.

April 11, 1774.—Voted that the 8th day of June next be the day to install Rev. Mr. Porter. Messrs. Barnabas Packard and Timothy Moore be a committee to provide entertainment for the council.

This must have failed also, for July 18, 1774, they voted Abraham Beal, Ebenezer Snell, and Ensign Abel Packard a committee to hire preaching, and not to hire more than four weeks at a time without orders from the town.

Dec. 12, 1774.—Voted to build a meeting-house 45 by 35. Appointed David Leonard, Ebenezer Snell, and Stephen Warner a committee to build the house. Voted to hear Mr. Billings preach a few Sabbaths in the spring of the year.

Nov. 28, 1775.—Voted to hire Mr. Hotchkiss to preach four Sabbaths upon probation.

Dec. 12, 1775, the people were in a decidedly negative state of mind. They voted not to build a meeting-house in the centre of said township, and voted not to choose a committee to hire preaching. Dec. 27th, they were more affirmative again. They voted to build a meeting-house on Lot No. 71, in the first division. Negotiations to secure Rev. Mr. Briggs seem to have begun in 1778, November 23d.

Feb. 15, 1779.—Voted a call to Mr. Briggs, offering him 200 acres of land and $200 as settlement, the money estimated according to rye at 3s. 4d. per bushel, and a salary of fifty pounds the first year, adding five pounds a year until it amounts to £90.

This was accepted. The ordination was appointed for July 7, 1779, and Capt. Reed, Ebenezer Snell, and John Bradish, appointed a committee to provide a place for the council.

The record of the council is found in full in the old Proprietors' Book. John Porter was moderator, and Rev. Thomas Allen scribe; and thus Plantation No. 5 had at last a settled minister five and a half months before the town of Cummington was organized.

The first baptism occurred July 18, 1779,—Abigail, daughter of Abel and Esther Packard; the second, Aug. 29, 1779,—Bethiah, daughter of Edmund and Mary Lazell.

The ordination of Mr. Briggs is stated by Mrs. Deacon Rogers to have taken place in the open air, under some trees not far from the site of the last meeting-house on the Hill. This account is hardly consistent with the general belief that the meeting-house at that time was a mile or two farther west; and still it may be correct.

Oct. 30, 1780.—Voted to raise 55 pounds for Rev. Mr. Briggs' salary the present year, rated at rye $\frac{3}{4}$ per bushel. Voted that Capt. Reed, Deacon Snell, and Lieut. Colson be a committee to lay out the Rev. Mr. Briggs' lot of land voted him by the town.

The meeting-house "on the south side" was built so as to meet in it some time in 1781, for Oct. 4, 1781, the town voted to warn town-meetings in the future on the south side at the meeting-house, and on the north side "where they meet for public worship." Propositions to remove the meeting-house appear in the records for 1790.

In 1791 they voted to finish the old one where it stands, and not remove it. But Nov. 28, 1791, they voted to build a meeting-house on the north side of the road, by Mr. Hezekiah Ford's house; voted to move the old house to this place, and make a porch in front of it. This seems to have been done, for further arrangements about pews are soon after made, and this was the house that stood so long above the pound.

A few later notes from the town records are added:

April 1, 1805.—Voted Hezekiah Ford Jr., to take care of the meeting-house,—to wash it twice, and sweep it once a month, and sweep the alleys once a week, for $5.

April 7, 1806.—Voted to paint the meeting-house anew, and to paint it white. Committee, Abel Packard, Stephen Warner, Nehemiah Richards. At the same meeting let the care of the meeting-house to James Loud, at $4.75. Voted for the Rev. James Briggs' salary, $200.

This same year votes were passed to provide a belfry. A pew was bought of Mr. Asa Gurney to make room for an entrance from the belfry to the floor of the meeting-house. Gallery-pews were also sold, showing that the house was undergoing changes and repairs at this time. Before this subject was disposed of they voted not to open a door on the lower floor, nor to allow Mr. Gurney any damages for covering his window. The belfry was erected on condition that a bell should be placed in it by subscription, and there is the following entry in relation to it the next year: "Voted to accept of the bell, and send the tongue to Mr. Holbrook and have one bigger, or as big as he will warrant the bell with." In 1818 it was voted to unite with the church in requesting neighboring ministers to supply the pulpit while Mr. Briggs is unable. Voted to pay Rev. Mr. Chaddock seven dollars a Sabbath.

As late as 1833 church business was still done at town-meeting, $450 being voted that year for the supply of the pulpit; but that seems to have been the date when church business ceased to be done by the town.

The organization of the church is supposed to have been July 7, 1779, the same day of Mr. Briggs' ordination. The actual date is not given, but the account of the church being "embodied" follows that of the ordination so closely as to justify the above conclusion. The names of the male members only are given in the church book: Joseph Farr, Stephen Farr, Barnabas Packard, Ebenezer Snell, Ebenezer Beals, Stephen Warner, Timothy Moore, and John Reed. Undoubtedly there were at least as many females who joined from these or other families.

From the few records in possession of Deacon Rogers we add the following notes:

July 22, 1779.—Voted that the sacrament of the Lord's Supper be administered immediately after divine service, in the former part of the day.

July 29th.—Voted to admit to baptism the children of those who belonged to other churches, or had owned the covenant.

It is difficult to give much additional history of this venerable church,—the church of the pioneers, the church of the fathers. The choice of site, whether wise or not, was generally acquiesced in for fifty years or more, and up to this "Mount Zion" two successive generations came regularly to worship, those from the north side descending to the valley of the Westfield, and then climbing the heights beyond; those from the southwest coming up to meet them. This could not continue, in the nature of things. Business, which, like the pioneers themselves, first located on the hills, began to open up along the stream below. Cummington village grew up. Those living there, as well as those northeast, east, and southwest, desired to have the meeting-house removed to the village, while those beyond the hills to the west naturally objected. After considerable negotiation it was decided by a council, and consented to by this church, that a new one should be formed at the village. A few years later one was formed at West Cummington. The friends of the church upon the old historic "Hill" still persisted, and erected a new house of worship, about 1840, on the west side of the road, near Deacon Rogers', and a little north of his residence. The church organization was continued. Pastors succeeded pastors, but the number of families interested in that point was too few for strength and efficiency, and the church gradually, if not formally, dissolved. The last item of business upon the book is under date of June 17, 1869. Not long after, the meeting-house itself was sold, taken down, and the timbers used in the erection of a building for manufacturing purposes at Swift River Village.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. James Briggs, ordained July 7, 1779; died Dec. 7, 1825; a long and faithful pastorate of forty-six years. 2d. Rev. Roswell Hawkes, settled as colleague to Mr. Briggs, April 20, 1825, and after the latter's death continued as pastor; dismissed July 1, 1839. 3d. Rev. S. D. Darling, ordained Feb. 17, 1841, and services continued until Aug. 14, 1843. 4th. Rev. James D. Chapman, installed June 12, 1844. His services were continued a little more than ten years; died in town Dec. 21, 1854. 5th. Rev. Nelson Barbour appears a delegate to councils in 1856, and preached probably a year or two.

The early deacons were Ebenezer Snell, Barnabas Packard, chosen in 1799; Abel Packard, Jr., Benoni Pratt, in 1798; Jacob Whitmarsh, in 1822, resigned; James W. Briggs, in 1822; Amos Cobb, in 1822, resigned 1828; Enos Porter, in 1828. This was the last down to the division of the church.

BAPTIST CHURCH IN CUMMINGTON.

This society was organized in 1821 with 14 members, viz.: Samuel Whitman, Freedom Whitman, Nehemiah Richards, Polly Sprague, James Snow, Pamela Sprague, Elias Sprague, Susannah Thayer, Amos Tirrell, Polly Whitman, Philanthropus Hayden, Joseph Gloyd, Josiah Hayden, Asa Thayer.

During the first ten years this church received, besides these 14, 103 members. The whole number of names upon the church-record is 300. The meeting-house was erected in 1823, in the village of Cummington, at the cost of about $3000. It was dedicated Feb. 5, 1824.

List of Pastors.—Rev. Asa Todd and Rev. J. Grant served the church from their organization, 1821, until the dedication of their house, 1824. From Feb. 24, 1824, until June, 1826, Rev. Hosea Trumbull was pastor. From 1826 to 1834, Rev. David Wright pastor. From 1834 to 1839, Rev. Edwin Sandys. From 1839 until 1844, Gardner C. Tripp. In 1844 George M. Willard was ordained, and continued his labors until 1848, after which the church had no stated preaching until September, 1877, when Rev. H. C. Coombs commenced labor, and is their present pastor.

The following is a list of the clerks from the formation to the present time: Nehemiah Richards, 1821 to 1834; John Hubbard, 1834 to 1838; Alonzo Gurney, 1838 to 1842; Hiram Beals; Nehemiah Bates, 1842 to 1849.

Deacons.—Sept. 5, 1821, chose Freedom Whitman, who served thirteen years; 1834, Calvin Alexander, eleven years; 1845, Aaron Bigelow, who served until his death, Oct. 7, 1854.

The church did some earnest Sabbath-school work for several years; Zalmon Richards, now of Washington, D. C., was engaged in it actively.

From 1849 till 1875 the society met only occasionally, and seemed likely to rank among the things that were. The once numerous and prosperous church was reduced to even two or three in number, and the meeting-house used for other purposes than a temple of the living God. They met at the house of Mrs. Deacon Bigelow, July 21, 1875, and received additions increasing the number to seven, and in September, 1875, chose Lanman Snow church clerk, and Dec. 20, 1875, appointed L. Snow deacon. In 1876 commenced repairs upon the church edifice. Sept. 1, 1877, called H. C. Coombs as pastor. Since then additions have been made to the church, and the society too, and the house has been repaired.

The meeting-house of the Baptist Church was built in 1823. Levi Kingman was chairman of the committee, and managed the business. He states that it was built very cheap. Large amounts of material were given, and considerable labor. In accordance with the usual custom of those times, he rolled out a barrel of rum upon the grass for the entertainment of the people at the raising. The clerk of the society is Joseph Macomber. As stated above, the church was at one time reduced to two communicants,—Mrs. Crosby and her daughter, Mrs. Willcutt. Two were added by baptism from the same families, and Mrs. Bigelow joined by letter, from Northampton. The perseverance of these five saved and perpetuated the church.

VILLAGE CHURCH IN CUMMINGTON.

The reasons that led to the formation of this society and the successive steps taken are briefly these, as appears from the records:

The old meeting-house on the "Hill" was in a dilapidated condition for some years prior to 1836, and considerable discussion ensued upon the subject of rebuilding. Quite a portion of the congregation desired to build in the village, but could not secure a vote of the church to do so. They were themselves unwilling to contribute toward rebuilding upon the Hill. After two or three unsuccessful attempts to bring about a harmonious result, those in favor of the village location took steps to build a meeting-house there, without waiting for any further action, hoping perhaps to induce the church to remove the services there if a house was once built and offered for the purpose; or more likely they foresaw that, with the growing village and the unwillingness of the people of the east to climb the hill, a new society would be formed, and it was wise to have a meeting-house built, ready.

June 6, 1836, a meeting was held to forward this object. The land now occupied by the Union Hotel was bargained for, but not finally secured, and the site of the present house was purchased of Mr. Harvey Tirrell, for the sum of $100. The place was a fine gravelly knoll, nearly as high as the eaves of the present church, and was of such peculiar symmetrical shape that older citizens still regret its removal, thinking it was a landmark worth retaining. The hill was leveled to its present form and the house built. The building committee consisted of Jonathan Dawes, Seth Ford, and John Orcutt; about $2000 were subscribed and paid, the house raised July 16, 1838, finished during the year following, and dedicated Sept. 11, 1839. All this was done by individuals, without any parish organization. Various negotiations had preceded this, councils were summoned, and on the 1st of July, 1839, a new church was constituted, consisting of forty-seven members. Hiram Brown was elected the first clerk; Enos Bates, Joseph Warner, and Francis Bates, the first standing committee. A call was extended to Rev. Royal Reed, July 6, 1839. It was accepted, and he was installed as the first pastor of the church the same day that the house was dedicated, Sept. 11, 1839. Enos Porter and Hiram Brown were chosen the first deacons, and Francis Bates treasurer.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Royal Reed, ordained Sept. 11, 1839; dismissed Dec. 8, 1841. 2d. Rev. Theodore J. Clark, ordained Oct. 11, 1842; dismissed May 26, 1852; but, nevertheless, supplied the pulpit for several years longer, closing his labors April 10, 1859. The pulpit was then supplied temporarily by Rev. Edward Clarke, Rev. John C. Hutchinson, Rev. Mr. Hatch, Rev. Mr. Lord. 3d. Rev. J. C. Thompson, the last stated supply of the First Church, preached for this church for two-thirds of the time, from Nov. 1, 1859, to April, 1860, then gave his whole time to this church. At the same time an invitation was extended to the members of the First Church to attend public worship with the village church, and it was very largely accepted. Mr. Thompson's labors closed May 1, 1861. Various temporary supplies were obtained. 4th. Rev. J. Jay Dana was employed regularly from the second Sabbath of June, 1861. His labors closed Oct. 29, 1865. 5th. Rev. Joseph H. Felch was installed June 19, 1867. His pastorate terminated by his death, Jan. 19, 1869. 6th. Rev. Wm. M. Gay. His labors commenced April 12, 1870, closed Dec. 29, 1872. Temporary supplies followed. 7th. Rev. Mr. Alvord commenced his pastoral labor May 1, 1873; closed April 30, 1874. Temporary supplies for a year. 8th. Rev. Henry A. Ottman began his labors Oct. 1, 1875, and closed in the fall of 1877. 9th. Rev. O. S. Morris, of the West Cummington Church, divides his services with the village church, preaching for the latter in the forenoon, and is the present acting pastor.

Record of Deacons.—Enos Porter, chosen July 27, 1839, died Jan. 14, 1867; Hiram Brown, chosen July 27, 1839, moved to Illinois; Ephraim Ford, chosen March 2, 1844, died Nov. 1, 1854; Elias Beals, chosen Jan. 6, 1855, still living in town, but not acting. William H. White, chosen

Jan. 1, 1876, Henry M. Dyer, chosen Jan. 1, 1876, present deacons.

Almon Mitchell was for seventeen years treasurer, collector, and clerk of the parish. He is still serving in the latter office. The present clerk of the church is Deacon Wm. H. White.

THE METHODIST CHURCH OF CUMMINGTON was established under the labors of Rev. Wm. Willcut, 1838-40. Meetings were held to some extent in private houses, and then in the old factory, that became known as "the chapel." An amusing anecdote is related that one meeting was pretty much silenced by the noise of the water roaring through the old works, the gate having been raised above by some practical joker, who succeeded in getting into the house and securing a quiet seat before the noise of the stream fairly began. The meeting-house was built about 1840, and was a building of fair size and convenient arrangement. It stood near the forge bridge, not far from the present residence of Stephen Benjamin. The land was given by a former proprietor, James W. Briggs.

Among the men specially interested and active in establishing the church were David Tower, John Ford, and Nathaniel Bartlett. Cyrus Warner erected the house. Successive ministers were Revs. Willcut, Todd, Cushman, Green, Strong, and Gage. After the society declined, and the Methodists ceased to use the building, it was occupied to some extent by Congregational ministers for neighborhood services. These finally were given up, the pews and furniture were taken out, and the building converted into a sugar-house, which it still remains.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF WEST CUMMINGTON

originated as follows: The old society on Cummington Hill being seriously divided, a new house erected at the East village, and a general disintegration taking place, Elisha Mitchell and Wm. Hubbard, the real founders of West Cummington village, took the decisive step of erecting a meeting-house in 1839. It was built in about three months, by Mr. Crandall, of Adams, contractor, and dedicated in August. In the summer of 1840 meetings were held, and in November of that year Rev. Joseph H. Baldwin commenced his regular pastoral service. Meanwhile, the Second Windsor Congregational Church, with something of an ancient history, and located in a neighborhood known as "the Bush," not far from West Cummington, were looking toward this latter place as a favorable point to unite in a stronger church movement. This was hastened by the actual removal of some of the members to this neighborhood. This tendency culminated in a formal vote, Sept. 20, 1841, when 11 male members and 21 females changed their relations and founded this church. The male members were Jacob Snow, Jacob Whitmarsh, Samuel Dawes, Amos Ford, Isaiah Whitman, Cyrus Latham, Lyman Bird, James Whitman, Wm. Payson, Josiah Allen, John Dawes.

The pastoral record may be briefly expressed as follows: 1st. Rev. Joseph B. Baldwin, installed Sept. 1, 1841, and continued sixteen and a half years. 2d. Rev. Josiah Pomeroy, sixteen months. 3d. Rev. Sardis B. Morley, three months. 4th. Rev. Mr. Brown, one year. 5th. Rev. David Rood, a returned missionary, about six months. 6th. Rev. Henry Matson, a year and a half. 7th. Rev. Joseph B. Baldwin, four years. 8th. Rev. Charles Scott, a year and a half. 9th. Rev. Robert Samuel, a year and a half. 10th. Rev. J. U. Parsons, one year. 11th. Rev. O. S. Morris, the present pastor, who commenced his labors among this people May 1, 1873, and is now in the sixth year of his pastorate. Between these stated periods of service there were vacancies, when the pulpit was filled by temporary supplies, or services were occasionally suspended.

Record of Deacons.—John W. Bisbee, still living in Plainfield; James W. Briggs, died in Lanesboro'; Jared Bisbee, moved West; Joseph Allen, died, 1873; Darius Bird, present acting deacon; Samuel Rice, moved away; Wm. H. Packard, present acting deacon.

The clerks have been Rev. Joseph Baldwin, Deacon Joseph C. Allen, William Henry Packard. The present number of communicants, 46; congregation, 100 to 150. The Sunday-school averages 90, with a library of 200 volumes. Superintendent of Sunday-school, Mr. Corser.

The society have a good parsonage. The house of worship has been recently repaired, and is really a neat and handsome edifice. It has a fine situation, just in the rear of the village, with the beautiful slopes of Deer Hill rising to lofty heights beyond. The poet Wm. Cullen Bryant often worshiped with this rural congregation. His religious belief was here expressed by partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper with this church, thus showing that with him the closing passage of "Thanatopsis" rested, as it must rest, upon the solid and everlasting foundations of Christian faith. Near the close of his residence here in the summer of 1877, and on the last Sabbath he ever spent in Cummington, he came to this church with his daughter. The pastor was absent, and no supply for the pulpit arranged. After waiting some time, Mr. Bryant arose and said that it was evident they were to have no minister; that if the people wished he would read selections from the Bible. Then, going to the desk, he opened the sacred volume and read for some time in his own inimitable manner. Then, in devout, childlike simplicity, he closed by reciting the Lord's Prayer. To many of that audience this is the last personal reminiscence of the great poet, as he soon after left town never to return; for in the opening months of the next summer, amid the roses of June he loved so well, he passed away "like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

THE UNIVERSALIST CHURCH OF CUMMINGTON.

Before the organization of a society, and perhaps as early as 1835, occasional meetings were held, and Rev. William Wilcox, a minister of this denomination, preached in the school-house at West Cummington. Receiving considerable encouragement, a society was formed and regular services established. A council of the Universalist churches was held here in 1839, and is remembered by many as an occasion of great interest. The house of worship was built in 1845 or 1846, by Zebedee Randall, contractor; probably cost about $2000. The land for the site was given by Charles Shaw. The house is conveniently situated on the main street, and has one of the old-time spires, which have scarcely been succeeded by anything more appropriate in modern church architecture. It needs some repairs and improvements at the present time, but is otherwise a handsome edifice. Services were maintained with considerable regularity for twenty years or more. The ministers were Rev. Almond Mason, Rev. Earl Guilford, Rev. Moses Stoddard, Rev. Mr. Gifford, Rev. Mr. Plumb, Rev. Mr. Hughes, Rev. Mr. Mandel, Rev. L. W. Brigham, and Rev. Mr. Trask. The latter was the last regular minister. Since he closed his labors there have been only occasional speakers.

Those most active in establishing this church were Ebenezer Shaw, Brackley Shaw, Spencer Shaw, Charles Shaw, Jacob Bates, William Thompson, and Andrew Babbitt. The society still retains its legal organization and its property. The present clerk is Horatio Jordan, and the trustees are Almon Pearse, Charles Harlow, and Lorenzo Tower.

BURIAL-PLACES.

At a proprietors' meeting, Aug. 21, 1771, John Holbrook, Joseph Farr, and Timothy Moore were appointed a committee to lay out a burying-place. Oct. 30, 1771, voted to accept of the burying-place laid out by the committee on lot No. 71. Dec. 28, 1772, voted to clear one acre for a burying-place.

This, though not very clear in description, is supposed to refer to the one a short distance west of Bryant's summer residence. The lot No. 71 is the same as was voted by one of the early town-meetings for the location of the meeting-house, which fact may throw some light upon the location of the latter.

The small-pox hospital of 1774 may have been on the present farm of Milton Porter. There is a grave at one point and evidence of a building, though some suppose it was on the Warner farm, as stated elsewhere.

Besides this pioneer burial-place, there is the old one on Cummington Hill, which dates back at least to the location of the meeting-house near it. There is another on Thomas' Hill, in the northeast part of the town. This is in general use by the people of that section. The cemetery at the Baptist Church, Cummington village, is in very good preservation, with a portion of the lots neatly terraced, showing evidence of loving care. There is another small, but still a public, burial-place near Francis Streeter's. At West Cummington is a cemetery in which general burial occurs for that place and vicinity. Besides these public grounds, there are private family burial-places in different parts of the town, upon the farm of Ebenezer Shaw, of E. W. Tillson, of Widow Cobb, of Milton Porter, of Deacon Rogers, and on the old farm of Domer Guilbert.

TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES.

A Masonic lodge existed in this town, according to the recollections of Levi Kingman, for probably fifteen or twenty years before the Morgan excitement, when it died out. It was known as Orion Lodge. The place of meeting was in the hall over the old store bought by Mr. Kingman, 1818. When the lodge dissolved he was appointed to wind up the affairs. The property was sold, dues collected as far as possible, debts paid, and a small balance given to the American Bible Society through William Packard. The lodge celebrated St. John's Day in 1823; Cyrus Ford, chairman of committee.

Temperance societies and several benevolent or literary associations have existed from time to time, but quickly dissolved. There was an early temperance movement about 1830. Lawyer Holland, of Belchertown, came out and delivered an address in the old church on the Hill, and a society was formed. The hall over Mr. Kingman's store was extensively used from 1820 to 1835. Singing-schools met there, courts and arbitrations, religious meetings, and miscellaneous gatherings.

The Bryant Library was founded by the poet for the benefit of his native town in 1872. He devoted something like $20,000 to this purpose, about half of which is invested in buildings and grounds, comprising the library itself and a dwelling-house for the librarian and his family. The collection of books is very valuable, embracing a great variety of subjects, and particularly rich in the historical department. It is open for consultation and circulation. Mr. Lorenzo N. Tower is the present librarian (1878). The town is required, by the conditions of the gift, to make a small annual appropriation for the benefit of the library.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

It may be proper to mention as one the house of Stephen Warner, where the proprietors, in 1771, held their first meeting in town, and transacted business in due form. To reach this spot they had come down from the hills of Plainfield, from the "north side" of the river, from the extreme west and the extreme east, a few scattered pioneers,—bold spirits,—contending with the forces of nature, and equally ready to face the questions of national peril involved in the impending revolution.

Then there is the place of the first town-meeting. It was held "at the house of Ens. Packard, Dec. 20, 1779." The second, January 5th, and, by adjournment, January 17th, was also assembled at the house of Ens. Packard. The third, March 6, 1780, was held at the house of Ens. Abel Packard. It only seems a fair inference that these three were all at the same place, and, as there is no dispute that the house of Abel Packard was at the cellar with the butternut-tree growing out of it, it is a reasonable conclusion that that was the place of the first town-meeting. This view is strengthened by the fact that the inn of Adam Packard was not opened until six years later, 1785. Adam Packard was a white-haired boy of sixteen when he came to town with his older brother, Abel.

The locations of the several pioneer meeting-houses naturally have considerable historic interest connected with them. The first, a log building, said to have been not far from the present house of David Tirrell; the second, supposed to have stood at the Four Corners, east of the present residence of Francis Dawes; and the third, known to have been on the "hill above the pound," west of the high ledge. Around the doors of the first, the old pioneers, before and after divine service, must have talked over the opening events of the Revolution, the stirring news from Boston Harbor, from Lexington, from Bunker Hill, and from the Continental Congress. Around the second they conversed of the events of 1781 and 1782, the campaigns of the Carolinas, the treason of Arnold, the surrender at Yorktown, the treaty of peace, and the adoption of the Federal Constitution. The third was scarcely eight years finished when it was in mourning for the death of George Washington; and then, as forty years went by, how many solemn scenes the venerable house witnessed! There the children were baptized. With the blessing of the white-haired old minister the vows of marriage were pronounced, and around the open graves in the old cemetery, not far away, there fell upon hushed and mourning souls the blessed words of Christian hope.

These places are local in their associations, but there is another,—the birth-place of William Cullen Bryant,—which has a national, a world-wide, interest. This spot, sacred in the annals of American poetry, was on Cummington Hill. The house stood in the corner of Mr. Tower's orchard, and nearly opposite the old cemetery. Then the Bryant farm itself, where he passed his childhood, where he wrote "Thanatopsis," where are the streams and the forests whose melody breathed in the poems of his youth and inspired the songs of his advancing years. Here are the retreats of classic taste, where he loved to gather around him poets and statesmen, and with them seek relief from the engrossing cares of public life in "sweet communion with Nature in all her varied forms."

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Generally speaking, agriculture is the leading business of Cummington. It is, however, intermingled with various manufacturing and mechanical employments. In early times considerable lumbering was done. Firewood was cut for market to some extent. A number of tanneries were established, and did a profitable business. A large amount of scythe-stones were made at one period.

A writer twenty years ago said of some industries:

"The cotton-factories have become extinct. Two small woolen-factories remain in operation, which get off annually about 40,000 yards of coarse satinet. Four tanneries make 250 tons of sole-leather annually. Four scythe-stone manufactories send to market 4500 gross of that article yearly. There are also several establishments for the manufacture of clothes-frames and other wooden-wares, six saw-mills, to two of which is attached broom-handle machinery that turns out annually 50,000 broom-handles."

MILLS, MANUFACTURES.

On Swift River, near the Goshen line, was a grist-mill in early times. The site is pointed out on the Shaw farm. At Swift River village, where the two branches of Swift River unite, and a little below join the Westfield, there are located the works of N. B. Crosby. To secure ample water-power, he constructed some years ago a reservoir on the north branch of Swift River, not far from the school-house in District No. 3. Mr. Guilford made scythe-stones for a long time. A son still carries on various mechanical works at this point. Above Swift River village, on the Westfield River, was a grist-mill, and also a saw-mill, owned in early times by Moses Warner. The buildings became dilapidated, and the works were all swept away by various freshets forty years ago or more. Dr. Joy states that his father, Nehemiah Joy, with Asa Gurney and Stephen Shaw, built these mills about 1797, and that they passed to Warner next. This makes them of later date than indicated above.

Coming up the Westfield River, no other sites of ancient or present mills are found until the lower end of Cummington village is reached. There, in early times, was a grist-mill, owned by James Shaw. It was afterward changed to clothier-works. Considerable manufacturing was undertaken by a company, but the enterprise failed to be remunerative, and was abandoned. A tannery was carried on for several years at that point.

The large building standing in later years has been occupied with a variety of works. At the present time (1878) A. C. Parsons is making plane- and saw-handles to a limited extent. In the above building is also Bradley's machine-shop and the painting-rooms of C. J. Spring.

Tracing up the Orcutt Brook, a tributary of the Westfield emptying in at the village, the site of an early saw-mill may be noticed. It was owned at one time by Thomas Tirrell, and was near the bridge at Mr. Almon Mitchell's. A blacksmith-shop was also there. On the same brook, farther up in the woods, was also a saw-mill, known familiarly as "Uncle Zeke's," the proprietor being Ezekiel Reed. Lower down on the brook, nearer the Westfield, is the present establishment of the Bradley Brothers for the manufacture of various kinds of wood-work. They also have a cider-mill.

Returning to the channel of the Westfield, farther up toward the bridge, is the building known as the old cotton-factory. Mr. Kingman states that it was erected about 1812. Josiah Hayden, Asa Gurney, and James Dawes were the principal men concerned in it, though a few shares were perhaps owned by other citizens. The enterprise was not very successful, and was continued only a few years. Josiah Hayden was the father of the Haydens who were afterward so prominent in manufacturing enterprises in Williamsburg. Asa Gurney, Maj. Dawes, and his son carried on the business for a short time after Mr. Hayden left. The building stood unoccupied for several years, except as it was temporarily used for various works. John Stafford made whetstones there thirty years ago or more, and down to 1868. Penholders and other varieties of small wood-work have been made in that building, and it is still occupied for similar purposes.

On the other side of the river, above the bridge, was a factory for the manufacture of scythe-snaths, run for some years by Jordan & Rhodes. A dwelling-house now occupies the site. Above this was a factory built by the sons of Deacon Abel Packard,—Chester and Theophilus. It was upon their father's old farm. It was founded as a woolen-factory, 1820 to 1825, but was continued by them only a few years. They finally went West. The enterprise was continued by Seth Williams. He afterward closed out this and his other business, and moved away. The building is now an establishment for the manufacture of pen-sticks and towel-racks. Hylas Bradley is the proprietor, and has a saw-mill in connection with it.

On Shaw Brook, which empties into the Westfield above the Bryant Library, was a large tannery, founded, perhaps, before 1800. It was near the north line of the town, and was carried on by Mitchell, Mason & Richards. Above, on Shaw Brook, was a grist-mill,—an old affair,—abandoned many years ago, known as the Baker Mill, and thought by some to have been the first grist-mill in town.

Returning to the valley of the Westfield, and reaching the neighborhood locally known by the singular name of "Lightning-Bug," the old clothier-works of Charles Gloyd will be easily recalled by the people of Cummington, as Mr. Gloyd is said to have been found at his post, year in and year out, for nearly fifty years. Mr. Grimes and Daniel Richards are understood to have been the early proprietors, and Mr. Levi Kingman supposes the works were in operation before 1800. There was another clothing-mill by Ford at this place, and it developed into a woolen-factory. In this same vicinity was the old forge of 1780, or earlier, and it was continued to some extent in later years. In this locality, too, was a grist-mill, and afterward it was changed to a clover-seed mill. Stephen Warner and Asa Streeter were proprietors of the latter.

On one of the small streams flowing in from Plainfield was a blacksmith-shop with a trip-hammer. It was a noisy affair, being heard three miles or more. It was run by Whitman, and afterward by Asahel Bartlett. A little above, on the Westfield, was Brown's saw-mill, originally built by Mr. Bisbee, still running; broom-handles are made there. Next, up the valley of the Westfield, is the new paper-mill, built a few years since by Marshall Bates; wrapping-paper is the line of work done. Still above is an old grist-mill site, very ancient, dating back to the early settlement of the town, perhaps the first grist-mill in the west part. William Hubbard is said to have ground bark for his tannery at this place. The buildings were swept away many years ago, and not rebuilt. Next in order may be mentioned the saw-mill and bedstead-manufactory of Henry Elder. On this site was an old saw-mill prior to these modern works. The bedstead business has lately been given up for that of pen-holders. Harlow's works are next above, comprising a saw-mill and an establishment for the manufacture of various articles of wood-work. A cotton-factory once occupied this site. It was built in 1827, by John Dawes & Sons. Elisha Carpenter and Aaron Sawyer put in the machinery. It was burned in a few years, and not rebuilt. The next important point on the river is the place of the present paper-mills of the L. L. Brown Company. In old times Hubbard's tannery was established at this place. On a branch of the Westfield is the saw-mill of the Torrey Brothers, in the west part of the town, near the Windsor line, a place sometimes called East Windsor, and also "Jordanville." In this account no attempt is made to actually determine the site of the first saw-mill or the first grist-mill. Judging from the town records, and from the traditions among the people at the present time, it will be found difficult to distinguish between three of the most ancient sites, and it is very likely true that they were all occupied about the same time,—from 1765 to 1770.

Of early blacksmiths in town there may be named Nathan Snow, Solomon Shaw, Eliphalet Packard, and Capt. Whitman. Early shoemakers mentioned are Ebenezer Hunt, Alonzo Gurney, and, later, Mr. Parks.

The ten leading articles of production for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values: Butter, $11,397; firewood, $5618; maple sugar, $4989; beef, $7102; apples, $2672; hay, $29,869; milk, $13,389; pork, $3660; potatoes, $7053; manure, $7107. There were also reported, eggs, $1786; corn, $1758; oats, $1304.

MILITARY.

In the old volume of proprietors' records appears the following official action:

Sept. 29, 1774.—Voted that Capt. Daniel Reed, Ens. Peter Harwood, and Capt. Joseph Warner be a committee of correspondence. Voted to purchase one barrel of powder, half a hundred of lead, for a town store of ammunition. Ens. Packard and William Ward appointed to get the supplies and keep the same.

Oct. 31, 1776.—Voted that Mr. Snell and Lieut. Harwood be added to the committee on correspondence.

March 4, 1777.—Chose a new committee on correspondence,—Ebenezer Snell, Jonathan Ripley, Wm. Ward, Lieut. Colson, Ens. Packard, Capt. Reed, and Stephen Warner.

These proceedings were taken before the town was incorporated, while it was yet simply Township No. 5, but the meetings of the proprietors were being held in due form, and very many of the votes and doings were similar to those of a fully organized town. It is doubtful whether there is any list preserved of those who enlisted at this time in the Continental army; but such names are hereafter mentioned as the recollection of families and citizens can supply.

After the formation of the town we find the following action:

At a legal meeting held at the "Alarm Post," June 15, 1780,—

Voted a sufficient sum of money to hire four soldiers. Voted to choose a committee to hire said men, and that Lieut. Stephen Warner, Ens. Abel Packard, Capt. Nathan Snow, and Mr. Edmond Lazell be the said committee.

At a meeting, July 4, 1780, held at the "Alarm Post,"—

Voted to hire five militiamen by a committee, and that said committee continue to hire soldiers, if needed, until further order; that Sergt. John Bradish, Lieut. John Packard, Lieut. Colson, Deacon Packard be said committee.

At a meeting held at the house of Wm. Mitchell, Aug. 10, 1780,—

Voted to raise a sufficient sum of money to pay the hire of five Continental soldiers; also the hire of five militiamen obtained by the war committee. Voted to raise a sufficient sum of money to procure the articles of clothing required of the town by the General Court for soldiers.

Oct. 30, 1780, voted to raise £500 to purchase beef for the army, 2590 pounds' weight being required of the town, which shows the depreciation of the currency very clearly.

At a meeting held at the house of Lieut. Mitchell, Dec. 21, 1780,—

Voted that Mr. David Leonard, Mr. Robert Robinson, and Mr. Edmond Lazell be a committee to hire five Continental soldiers for three years, or during the war, agreeable to the order of the General Court.

March 5, 1781.—Voted to accept the accounts of the former selectmen up to this day, and raise a sum of money sufficient to purchase the last requisition of beef.

July 31, 1781.—Voted to raise a sufficient sum of money to purchase 2057 pounds of beef for the army. Voted to raise a sufficient sum of money to purchase shirts, shoes, stockings, and blankets for the use of the army.

Aug. 3, 1781.—Met at the house of Hezekiah Ford. Voted to hire four soldiers for three months, and Dr. James Bradish, Capt. Nathan Snow, and Mr. Joseph Ford were named as committee for that purpose.

These votes show that the town furnished its quota of men and its proportion of supplies for the Continental service. Quite a number of Revolutionary pensioners lived down to near the middle of this century. Daniel Timothy, familiarly known as Teague, passed his hundredth birthday.

The following names have been obtained of persons who either went into the Revolutionary service from this town, or who resided here afterward: Samuel Thompson, Nehemiah Joy, Isaac Kingman, Peter Tower, Nathaniel Tower, Caleb Packard (perhaps over the line in Goshen).

John Packard's bill of 12s. for two blankets furnished the Continental army was paid by the town, May 1, 1786.

Clark Robinson, the early settler, had three brothers killed in the Revolutionary war,—James, Bartlett, and Abner. Dr. Gain Robinson, of Cummington, was a brother in the same family.

The histories of Shays' rebellion do not show that Cummington shared to any extent in the active movements of the insurgents. The people were suffering from the "hard times," like those of other towns, and sent delegates to some of the conventions, but do not seem to have taken up arms to assist Shays.

Cummington was represented in the Northampton Convention of July 14, 1812, held to express the views of this portion of Massachusetts against the war. The public sentiment of the town is shown by the following article from the Hampshire Gazette, then, as now, the leading newspaper of the county:

July 15, 1812.—"Want of room obliged us last week to delay the publication of the following elegant and patriotic ode, from the pen of Mr. W. C. Bryant, son of Doctor Bryant, of Cummington:

AN ODE FOR THE 4th OF JULY, 1812.

TUNE.—"Ye Gentlemen of England."

"The birthday of our nation
Once more we greet with smiles;
Nor falls as yet our hapless land
A prey to foreign wiles.
Yet still-increasing dangers wake
The statesman's pious fear;
The whirling vortex of our fate
Sweeps near, and still more near;
The dreadful warning, whispered long,
In louder tones we hear."

There are seven other verses. It was evidently a good, strong Federal ode.

The young poet survived the fall of the Federal party, and lived to write the songs of his countrymen in the crisis of 1861. It was not long necessary to explain that he was "the son of Dr. Bryant, of Cummington," to designate the individual referred to.

Of the men who went to Boston at the call of Governor Strong, the following are recalled by citizens, or are known from pension certificates: Capt. Whitman, Leonard Shaw, Harvey Tirrell, Thomas Tirrell, Capt. Claggard, Solomon Shaw, Mr. Bates, Sylvanus Shaw, Nathan Mason; and there were probably others.

SOLDIERS' LIST, WAR OF 1861-65.

Nathaniel Hunt, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; disch. June 9, 1865.
Timothy D. Richardson, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; wounded severely at battle of Spottsylvania; disch. May 18, 1865, for disability.
Wm. A. Williams, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; died Feb. 12, 1863, at Falmouth, Va.
James Dorgan, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died June 18, 1864, at Philadelphia, Pa.
Darwin C. Robbins, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. Feb. 3, 1863, for disability.
Almon N. Bradley, enl. Oct. 19, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. H; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864; died Sept. 5, 1864, at Point of Rocks, Md.
Wm. H. Shaw, 1st sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; pro. to 2d lieutenant, March 4, 1865; disch. June 21, 1865. He was one of the first three months' volunteers, and was in the battle of Bull Run.
Samuel J. Hillman, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; died Sept. 4, 1862, at Stafford Court-House, Va., of brain fever.
Josiah T. Hunt, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. A; disch. Aug. 12, 1864, for disability, resulting from injuries in the service.
Wm. L. Reed, sergt., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Charles Kinney, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Luther E. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 1863; died at Brattleboro', Vt., 1863, of camp-fever.
William O. Bartlett, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; re-enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Cecil E. Bartlett, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Josiah D. Benjamin, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Calvin Cook, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Edgar W. Crane, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.

Harlan P. Porter, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; re-enl. in 4th H. Art.; di-ch. June 17, 1865.
Myron W. Reed, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Nathan A. Spooner, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Daniel Taylor, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Cyrus M. Tilson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Harrison F. Newell, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Charles A. Parker, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865. Had before served in 52d Inf., Co. I, nine months.
Harlan P. Porter, enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Edward Labarn, enl. Dec. 21, 1863, 21st Regt., Co. E; died March 26, 1864, at Camp Nelson, Ky.; probably a substitute; name retained because he lost his life in the service for Cummington.
Orrin S. Bradley, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. D; disch. July 1, 1864.
John Donovan, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. D; killed May 3, 1863, at Salem Heights, Va.
Edward P. Nally, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. C.
Robert Shea, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. C.
Thomas Gilfillan, asst. surg., enl. Dec. 12, 1863, 59th Regt.; resigned Sept. 14, 1864.
James Cahill, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. C.
Harlan W. Torrey, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A; di-ch. Nov. 15, 1861, for disability; re-enl. Aug. 12, 1862, 34th Regt., Co. B; disch. Dec. 17, 1864.
Samuel J. Dunning, enl. July 27, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A; killed at the battle of Newbern, March 14, 1862.
Martin L. Cook, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Michael Cunningham, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; died Aug. 21, 1863, of fever, at Cummington, seven days after his return.

Sylvanus Shaw, a son of Ebenezer Shaw (recently deceased), lost his life in the Mexican war, and it is said that Joshua Hathaway, of this town, was in the Mexican war, and that he also fought in the late civil war, though beyond the legal age.

OFFICIAL ACTION OF THE TOWN.

There was a town-meeting held, Aug. 31, 1861, which voted to raise $500 "in aid of families of such citizens as had or might hereafter volunteer in the United States service."

A meeting was held, July 28, 1862, at which it was voted to pay a bounty of $100 to each volunteer to fill the quota of the town, the number required being then fourteen.

According to Schouler's "History," Cummington furnished 105 men for the war, which was a surplus of 8 over all demands. Five were commissioned officers. A number of the men were substitutes, hired in Boston or elsewhere.

The following list is intended to include only actual citizens of Cummington.

The amount of aid paid solely by the town was $10,589.34. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $415,746, and the population 1085. Amount raised for aid to soldiers' families, afterward refunded by the State, was: 1862, $777.95; 1863, $2019.77; 1864, $1034.95; 1865, $1000; total, $4832.07.

Edward C. Jenkins, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; re-enl. Aug. 18, 1864, 4th H. Art., Co. K; disch. June 17, 1865.
Martin F. Jostling, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Henry N. Noyce, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; di-ch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Wm. W. Robbins, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; trans. Aug. 16, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps.
Charles W. Gurney, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. E; wounded July 3, 1863, at Gettysburg, Pa., and died July 10, 1863.
James Meacham, enl. Sept. 2, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. E.
John Dorsey, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
Charles H. Shaw, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. D; severely wounded in the Wilderness, May 5, 1864; disch. July 1, 1864.
Henry H. Hitchcock, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. June 21, 1865.
Stephen Bartlett was from Cummington, and went into a Connecticut regiment.
Charles Dawes was from Cummington, living in Easthampton, enl. in the 52d Regt. from that town.
William Nolan was from Cummington, enl. from some other town, Aug. 13, 1862, 34th Regt., Co. D; disch. with regiment.
Calvin C. Hosford, enl. Jan. 2, 1864, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 31, 1863; a prisoner at Andersonville five months; disch. July 7, 1865.
Charles W. Conn, enl. 37th Regt., 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
Onslow Taylor, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d Regt., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Levi Pratt, enl. Oct. 1862; died Aug. 14, 1863, on board a steamer on the Mississippi while returning home.
Edward C. Thayer, enl. Oct. 1862, 49th Regt.; disch. Aug. 1863.
Samuel L. Thompson, enl. Nov. 1863, 1st H. Art.; died Feb. 17, 1864, in the hospital at Arlington.
Ozro M. Bird, enl. Aug. 8, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. D; disch. June 21, 1865.

WORTHINGTON.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

WORTHINGTON lies upon the western border of the county, nearly west from the county-seat, and distant from it sixteen and a half miles, by air-line measurement. It is bounded north by Cummington, east by Chesterfield, south by Chesterfield, Hampden County, and Middlefield, west by Middlefield and Berkshire County. The area of the town is 19,637 acres by the census of 1875.

The title to the soil is derived direct from the province of Massachusetts Bay, this being one of the ten towns sold June 2, 1762. The purchaser at the sale was Aaron Willard. Not long after he transferred the same to Maj. Barnard, of Deerfield, and Col. John Worthington, of Springfield. The time when this was done is not determined, nor the consideration. There is no account of any drawing of lots, and it is inferred that the territory of No. 3 was surveyed and mapped under the direction of the proprietors, and settlers purchased from them such lots as they chose. The original price of the township is said to have been £1860.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The middle branch of the Westfield River flows nearly north and south through the northwestern part of the town, and then forms the boundary line between Worthington and Middlefield, farther south. The northeast part of the town is drained by Stevens Brook, which enters Chesterfield and flows some distance before effecting a junction with the Westfield. The southeast part is drained by Little River, which, uniting with other streams, finally becomes the eastern branch of the Westfield. An elevated range known as West Hill lies east of the middle branch, and nearly parallel to it. A few separate elevations are of some note, as Parsons Hill, Bashan Hill, Knowles Hill in the north, and White Rock in the south.

The scenery is of a varied character. Large and well-cultivated farms abound, while there are also mountain slopes still covered with forests, and beautiful, deep valleys, through which the streams flow southward with rapid current. The middle branch has a tributary from the east and one from the west, the former flowing in at the corner of Middlefield, the other at the school-house, farther north. In the south part of the town, midway between the middle branch and Little River, is the valley of the Kinney Brook.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

The first settlement was in 1763 or 1764, though no previous writer designates the exact date or determines positively the name of the first settler. Quite a number came to the "Plantation" about the same time. The openings along the old road from Northampton to Berkshire County were the first in town. There seems to be reason for assigning an early date to this road; possibly it was opened before the French war of 1756, and supplies and troops moved over it to reach Fort Massachusetts, located near Williamstown, which was the scene of much military activity. This road, entering the town at the Partridge Place, passed, in a northwest direction, by the Eager homestead, to Drury's Corners, and by what is now Worthington Corners to the present place of Alonzo Belden; then directly north to the Tillson Bartlett place, then northwest into the town of Cummington, and so westward. On this road, at the Belden place, Alexander Miller was keeping tavern in 1768, and Joseph Farr was also a tavern-keeper, in 1771, in Cummington, where Charles Sylvester now lives. Both of these men may have been there for several years previous. If this theory is correct as to the early opening of the road, men who pushed out and opened taverns between Northampton and Pittsfield undoubtedly made the first opening in the forest.

Nathaniel Daniels was settled quite early at the Tillson Bartlett place. The first night this family spent in town they are said to have encamped in the woods on the easterly slope of the hill, not far from the residence of Mirick Cole, and that mosquitoes were very prompt in their attentions to the new settlers. It is stated in Rice's history that early in the Revolutionary war the people laid out the road curving to the right from the corners to the Tillson Bartlett place, so as to give Nathaniel Daniels the benefit of the travel and take it away from Miller, the latter being a loyalist and the former a Whig. This is sustained by tradition, though a town in which Dr. Morse, the well-known Tory, had so much influence as to remain on committees of importance during nearly the whole of the war, must have out-voted him pretty decidedly when they made such a change. Along this old road Nahum Eager was located very early, and also Lieut. Timothy Meech.

From the names appearing in the town records, 1768 to 1772, and from the inquiries made by Mr. Rice in the preparation of his work twenty-five years ago, it is evident the following list comprises the pioneers before the Revolution. Several of the prominent public men of Worthington came in, however, a few years later, as Starkweather, Brewster, Parish, Ward, and others.

EARLY PIONEERS.

Nathan Leonard, homestead where his grandson, Alanson Leonard, now lives. Samuel Clapp; his first log house was near the house now owned by Dwight Stone. Nathaniel Daniels built the first frame house in town, nearly opposite to the present dwelling of Levi Blackman. Nahum Eager represented the town in the Provincial Congress at Cambridge; his pioneer home was on the place where Jonathan H. Eager now lives, a great-grandson; his sons were William and Nathaniel, of Worthington, the latter father of Jonathan H. Dr. Moses Morse, the earliest physician; his house was between the dwellings of Mr. Heman Burr and Abner Witt; the site now marked by a butternut-tree. John Kinne, homestead the place lately owned by Dr. Phelps, of Adams, at Worthington Corners. Ebenezer Leonard, homestead the place now occupied by Mr. Heman Burr. Thomas Clemmons, homestead the present place of John Campbell. Benjamin Biglow; he settled northeast of what is now the Dan Pease farm. Thomas Kinne, homestead the present Dan Pease farm. John Watt, homestead a few rods east of the site of the first meeting-house; Lyman Granger now lives there; he had one son, John. Ephraim Wheeler, homestead near the house known as the Harvey place. Mr. Collamore settled opposite Ephraim Wheeler. Alexander Miller settled on the well-known "Buffington" place, and was the first to open a tavern in town; his farm was the present Alonzo Belden place, and the house was opposite Alonzo Belden's; the well is still there, one pear-tree, and a few apple-trees.

Joseph Marsh, homestead the place now owned by Clement Burr. Amos Frink, homestead on "Cold Street;" house near the grove; known now as Frink Woods. Abner Dwelly settled at Worthington Corners, on the present farm of Horace Cole. Jeremiah Kinne, homestead where Mr. Calvin Tower now lives. Stephen Converse, homestead on the present Wm. C. Higgins place. Davis Converse, homestead same as that of Stephen Converse. Phineas Herrick, homestead on the Warren Cushing lot; house gone. Gershom Randall; he settled on the present place of the widow of Jonathan Prentice. Asa Cottrell, homestead present place of Albert Randall. Asa Burton, homestead present place of Dwight Perry. Zephaniah Hatch, homestead present place of Elihu Squires. Nathan Branch, homestead present place of Morgan Hall; one of the oldest houses in town. John Buck, homestead on ground now occupied by Billings Higgins, or near by. Timothy Meech, homestead the present place of John K. Strong; was an old tavern, east of the corners a mile. Samuel Crosby, pioneer; home where Col. Oren Stone now lives. Daniel Morse, homestead on the present Henry Bates place. John Skiff, homestead on the place now owned by Horace Cole. James Benjamin, homestead the present farm of Ira Johnson. Beriah Curtis, homestead near the present house of Alden Curtis. Jonathan Prentice, homestead the "Cushman" place, now owned by William Johnson; the house burned a few years since. Samuel Morse, homestead near the present house of Webb Alderman.

James Wybourn, homestead near the plat of ground known as the "Vineyard," on the Hollis farm. Israel Houghton, homestead nearly opposite that of James Wybourn. Col. Ebenezer Webber, homestead now the place of Charles Parsons. Samuel Day, homestead the present place of Abel Drury. Robert Day, homestead same farm as that of Samuel. Amos Day, homestead same farm as that of Samuel Day. Joseph Follett, homestead present farm of W. and M. A. Drake. Isaac Follett, homestead the same as that of Joseph. Stephen Fitch, homestead the present house of Franklin Robinson. Ezra Cleaveland, homestead a little north of the present house of George Pease. Samuel Buck, homestead the present residence of David D. Powers, and the house is said to have been erected in 1780. Edmund Pettengill, homestead present place of David Scott. James Kelly, homestead the present place of Ransom Scott. John Kelly, homestead same as that of James. Isaac Herrick, homestead south of the school-house in the Alden Curtis District; buildings gone. Joseph Prentice, homestead the present place of Thomas Hunt. John Partridge, homestead about one hundred rods north of the present place of William Leonard. Seth Sylvester, homestead a little south of the house owned by Capt. Edwin Dodge; house in the "Mills Pasture." Amos Leonard, homestead present place of Dwight Prentice. Elijah Gardner, homestead nearly west of Ring's Factory; present land of George Pease.

Joseph Dewey, homestead nearly west of the "Buffington Grove," on land now owned by Horace Cole. Luke Bonney, homestead in the present pasture of Ira Jones. David Brunson, homestead same as that of Luke Bonney; they were the first millers in town. Asa Spaulding, homestead the present place of David Reese, of Greenfield. Hezekiah Maheuren, homestead east of the grove now owned by Selden Blackman. John Howard, homestead present place of Mirick Cole. Thomas Hall, homestead farm now owned by Col. Oren Stone; buildings gone. Joseph Gardner, homestead opposite the present place of Royal Cushing. Miner Oliver, homestead where Russell Tower now lives. Capt. Constant Webster, homestead the present F. J. Robinson place. Joseph Geer, homestead where Osman Watt now lives. Samuel Tower, homestead a few rods west of the old church, near Mr. Watt's place. Nathaniel Collins, homestead south of that stated as the pioneer home of Ephraim Henick. Reuben Adams, homestead Ringville; the owner of the second saw-mill and the second grist-mill built in town. These mills were on the site of Cole & Hayden. John Drury, homestead the present place of Abel Drury. Matthew Finton, homestead on the present farm of Gordyce Bates. James Bemis, homestead the place where Abram Granger now lives. Thomas Buck, homestead the present place of Simeon Merritt. Moses Buck, homestead same as that of John Buck, already mentioned. Samuel Pettengill, homestead where David Scott now owns. Noah Morse, homestead the present farm of Lewis Adams; buildings gone. Nehemiah Prougty, homestead present place of Henry Tower. Seth Porter, homestead present place of Widow Smith. Stephen Howard, homestead present place or near that of Ira Jones. Mr. Hickbey, homestead south part of the town, near the Methodist church. Elihu Tinker, homestead the residence now of Nathan Johnson.

John Parish, homestead on Snake Hill, on land now owned by Milton Parish. Children: Roswell and Truman, went west; Oliver, Hartford, Conn.; Consider, Mississippi, still living; Justice, Hinsdale; Spencer was the father of M. J. Parish and O. B. Parish, now of West Worthington.

Of other early settlers, concerning whom but little positive information is now obtainable, Rice's history mentions William Burr, Jonas Bellows, Jonathan Eames, Mr. Wilkins, Thomas Butler, Simeon Lee, Samuel Taylor, Samuel Clay, Mr. Rice, Mr. Ford, Samuel Wilcox, Rufus Stone, Moses Ashley, Joseph French, Samuel Converse, Nathan Morgan, Lewis Church, John Ross, James Tomson, Lewis Porter, Moses Porter, Joseph Lee, Alexander Chillson.

The following settlers were somewhat later: Dr. Ezra Starkweather, from Stonington, Conn., was a Revolutionary soldier, and four of his brothers lost their lives in that struggle. He settled in Worthington in 1785.

Jonathan Brewster, from Preston, Conn., settled in Worthington in 1777; homestead present place of Daniel Pease. Children: Jonathan, Jr., Worthington; Josiah, on the old homestead; Elisha, Worthington; Moses, a physician, settled at the centre and died there; Mrs. Ezra Starkweather, Mrs. Joseph Marsh, Worthington.

Deacon Jonathan Brewster, of the present time, is a great-grandson of the pioneer. E. H. Brewster was the son of Elisha Brewster. Azariah Parsons, from Northampton, settled here in 1782; noted for his abundant charity to the poor. William Ward, from Cummington, came to Worthington a young man, in 1795, as a clerk in Mr. Gove's store; homestead afterward at the Corners; he had one son, Daniel, and one daughter, Mrs. Chauncey B. Rising. Another daughter died young.

There are some facts about early roads of considerable interest. The selectmen describe the first "as the direct road through Worthington to Boston." This road joined the Chesterfield road at "the gate," and ran northwest by the farms owned at one time by Mr. Harrington and by Mr. Drury, till it reached the Buffington place, where stood at that time the inn of Alexander Miller.

From this place it was laid out directly north till it passed the Tilson Bartlett place, and then it was continued north and west, passing through a part of Peru and Windsor, till it intersected with a road which led more directly to Pittsfield.

In later years—to make the road "more straight and direct," as the town fathers expressed it—this road was laid out over Snake Hill. Another important road laid out was from Cummington to Chester. This road passed through Cole Street, so called, and passed the inn of Capt. Daniels and the Buffington place, till it intersected a road near where Mr. Alden Curtis lived in after-years. From there it crossed directly to Middle River, where it continued on the banks of that stream until it reached Chester.

During the years 1768 and 1769–70 great activity in road-making prevailed, and twelve cross-roads were surveyed and partially opened, all of which except two were afterward abandoned. On the 17th of April, 1770, the town voted to raise £45 for repairing the highways; 3s. a day was allowed for men's work; for the work of a yoke of oxen, 1s. 6d.; and for the use of a plow, 8d. Previous to 1868 there could scarcely be said to be a road in town, bridle-paths, trails, and routes marked by blazed trees being the only highways.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Morse was the earliest physician here, and evidently a man of ability, having much public business assigned him, notwithstanding his Tory principles. Dr. Starkweather came in 1785, practiced many years, and was almost continually in public life. He died July 27, 1834. Subsequent physicians have been Dr. Marsh, Dr. Brewster, Dr. Porter, Dr. Richards, Dr. Dwight, Dr. Spear, Dr. Rodgers, Dr. Case, Dr. Peirce, Dr. Meekins, Dr. Holland, Dr. D. Pierce, Dr. H. Starkweather, Dr. Wheeler, Dr. Bois, Dr. Coit, Dr. Brown, Dr. Prevost, Dr. Lyman, Dr. Knowlton, Dr. Freeland, Dr. Smith, Dr. A. Pierce.

LAWYERS.

Joseph Lyman, Samuel Howe, Daniel Parish, Jonathan Woodbridge, Elisha Mack, Chauncey B. Rising. All of these practiced at various periods in the town, and several rose to distinction and eminence here or elsewhere.

TAVERNS.

The taverns of Revolutionary times or earlier were those of Alexander Miller, of Nathaniel Daniels, and of Lieut. Meech, already mentioned. Very early, too, on the same general route, was a tavern opposite the present school-house, north of the Eager place; also on the town-line at the Partridge place; the Isaiah Kingman House, at the present E. H. Brewster place; the Pearse House, at Worthington Corners, now kept by Mr. Winslow, is one of the oldest houses in town. The Daniels Tavern passed to the son, Capt. Dan Daniels. The latter and Mr. Kingman had each lost a leg. A traveler, meeting them both within a short distance of each other, somewhat astonished, asked if it was the custom in Worthington to take off one leg. "No," said Mr. Daniels, "but when they find a man peculiarly honest they mark him." There was also a tavern for some years at West Worthington, on the site where Mrs. Adams now lives, opened by William Williams. He was followed by Capt. Lindsay. It was closed at his death. The present Bartlett House, at Worthington Corners, has been established only a few years. A part of it was originally a wool warehouse, used by Horace Cole. Mr. Bartlett has recently enlarged it extensively, providing accommodations for summer boarders.

STORES.

The old store of William Ward was at Worthington Corners. E. C. Porter followed Mr. Ward, and continued until about 1860. The present store of Samuel Cole (formerly Horace Cole & Son) was built in 1860, the previous buildings having been burned. Isaac T. Thrasher traded a few years at South Worthington. At West Worthington Mr. Medberry traded for some years; Russell Bartlett, also, from 1830 to 1844. In 1820 the Ward store was carried on by the firm of William & Trowbridge Ward. The building is the present basket-shop of Horace Bartlett. White & Daniels were proprietors, before 1820, of the old Gove store, on the stage-road.

The following are from old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

March 19, 1790.—John Cunningham wants a boy about fourteen years of age as an "apprentice to the tailors' business."

Nov. 10, 1791.—James Blackmar gives notice that he has completed upon the most approved modern plan a linseed-mill, on the stream near his dwelling-house, in the southeasterly part of Worthington. He offers four shillings a bushel for flaxseed.

Aug. 8, 1792.—Spencer Whiting, merchant, calls on those indebted to settle up, offering to take beef, pork, flax, flaxseed, butter, cheese, salts of lye, and ashes, and offers a general assortment of West India and English goods.

March 28, 1793.—"Inoculation for the small-pox is carrying on in Worthington by the subscribers agreeable to the latest and most approved method.

"JOB MARSH, JAMES BRADISH."

July 6, 1801.—The 4th of July was celebrated here by a large concourse of people from Worthington, Chesterfield, Goshen, Cummington, and Plainfield. Rev. Thomas Allen offered a devout and fervent address to the Author of all blessings. Jonathan Woodbridge, Esq., delivered an ingenious, elegant, and well-adapted oration. Mr. Briggs made the concluding prayer. Toasts were drank, interspersed with appropriate music.

We give two: "The Commonwealth of Massachusetts,—a long tough link in the Federal chain."

"The American Fair. She will do us good, and not evil, all the days of her life."

ORGANIZATION.

The incorporation of the town followed more closely upon the first settlement than in the case of certain other towns, because the pioneers moved in nearly at the same time. The township was purchased June 2, 1762, but it was probably two or three years later that the actual settlement began; and then in four years there was sufficient population to justify incorporation. That it was incorporated as a town, and not a district, indicates a "plantation" of considerable numbers and importance. The act of incorporation was passed June 30, 1768. The town was called Worthington in honor of Col. John Worthington, of Springfield, one of the proprietors. Col. Worthington erected a grist-mill and a meeting-house at his own expense, and donated 1200 acres of land for ministerial and school purposes. He lived for many years to witness the prosperity of the town he had founded.

The territory of the town as incorporated was considerably greater than at present. It extended from Cummington, on the north, to Chester, on the south, and from Peru, on the west, to the north branch of the Westfield River. This embraced a portion of what is now Chesterfield, and also a portion of Middlefield. The place of the first town-meeting was at the inn of Alexander Miller. This was opposite the present house of Alonzo Belden. The place is identified by tradition. The old well is still to be seen. There is a single pear-tree and a few apple-trees remaining of the primeval orchard. We add a copy of the warrant and extracts from the early records, showing the officers chosen and the proceedings of the first year:

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY, ss.:

To Nathan Leonard, of Worthington, in the county of Hampshire aforesaid, yeoman.—Pursuant to an act of the province for erecting the new plantation, called No. 3, in the county of Hampshire, into a town by the name of Worthington, and investing the inhabitants of said town with all the powers, privileges, and immunities that other towns within this province enjoy, and empowering Israel Williams, Esq., to issue his warrant directed to some principal inhabitant of said town, requiring him to call a meeting of said inhabitants in order to choose such officers as towns by law are empowered to choose in the month of March annually; these are, therefore, in his Majesty's name to require you, the said Nathan, to notify and warn the inhabitants of Worthington to assemble together at the house of Alexander Miller, innholder in said town, on the first Monday in August next, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, then and there in said meeting to choose all such officers as towns within this province are empowered and enabled by law to choose in the month of March annually; hereof you nor they may not fail.

Given under my hand and seal at Hatfield, in said county, the 11th day of July, in the eighth year of his Majesty's reign, Anno Domini 1768.

ISRAEL WILLIAMS, Justice of the Peace.

WORTHINGTON, in HAMPSHIRE COUNTY, July 19, 1768.

By virtue of the within warrant, I notified the inhabitants of said town by putting up a notification at the dwelling-house of Mr. Alexander Miller, innholder, to appear at the time and place within mentioned to choose town officers as the law directs.

NATHAN LEONARD.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

At a legal meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Worthington at the dwelling-house of Mr. Alexander Miller, innholder in said town, on Monday, the 1st day of August, 1768, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, pursuant to warrant. 1st. Chose Capt. Nathan Leonard moderator.

And then the town proceeded to the choice of other town officers: Nahum Eager, Town Clerk; Capt. Nathan Leonard, Capt. Nathaniel Daniels, Mr. John Kinne, Selectmen. Mr. Thomas Clemmons took the oath of constable and leather-sealer. Mr. Samuel Clapp took the oath relating to a surveyor. Mr. Benjamin Bigelow took the oath relating to wardens. Mr. Ephraim Wheeler

HON. ELISHA H. BREWSTER.

Deacon Jonathan Brewster, from Preston, Conn., settled in Worthington in 1777. His son, Capt. Elisha Brewster, was born in Preston in 1755. He took an active part in the Revolutionary war, having early enlisted in a regiment of light dragoons for and during the war, and served as an officer of the same to its close, completing a period of seven years and six months. His regiment was exercised in cavalry tactics by Count Pulkaski, the distinguished Polish disciplinarian.

After the close of the war he served as captain of cavalry and brigade quartermaster. At the time of Shays' rebellion he volunteered his services to Gen. Shepard, and was one of his aids in that memorable insurrection.

He married, April 24, 1788, Sarah, daughter of Rev. Jonathan Huntington. Their children were twelve in number. The youngest son, and last survivor, was Hon. Elisha H. Brewster, whose portrait appears upon this page, who was born in Worthington, Aug. 5, 1809. He was educated in the common schools and at Hopkins Academy. He married, June 8, 1831, Sophronia Martha, daughter of Isaiah Kingman, of Worthington. Their children were two sons and five daughters, two of whom survive,—C. K. Brewster, of Worthington, and Mrs. George M. Green, of Danbury, Conn.

He remained for several years upon his father's farm, and in 1842 removed to the centre village, and located a little south of the church and town-house, where he commenced the mercantile business in company with his cousin, Mr. Sidney Brewster, under the firm-name of S. & E. H. Brewster. That copartnership continued ten years, when it was dissolved, Mr. E. H. Brewster retiring to attend to his increasing public duties. In 1848 he was chosen as a Whig to represent his town in the Legislature, and again, in 1853, he was chosen to the same office. In 1852 he was elected county commissioner, and held that office sixteen years. For fifteen years he was chairman of the board, and distinguished himself by his excellent judgment and the aptness and faithfulness with which he discharged the difficult and often perplexing duties of the position. At the end of his sixtieth year (in 1868), when at the height of his popularity and usefulness, he voluntarily withdrew from that office, declining the offer of a certain re-election, much to the regret of the people of the county. In 1871 he was chosen a member of the State Senate, to represent the Berkshire and Hampshire district. In 1873 he was chosen a member of the governor's council for Hampshire, Hampden, and Berkshire Counties, and was re-elected in 1874. This closed his public life.

In his earlier business years he was often called to fill various town offices, and served in almost every capacity, from constable to selectman. He could have served oftener if he had wished, for his townsmen were always willing to elect him. He was also the leading justice of the peace in his region, and was appointed one of the first trial-justices under the new law, holding the office and discharging its duties with marked ability and dignity until he resigned it several years ago. He was often called as a referee to settle disputed questions, both at home and abroad; and, after his retirement from the board of county commissioners, his services were frequently sought as counsel in important road cases. He was the principal legal adviser of the people in his section, wrote numerous wills, and settled many estates in the probate and insolvency courts,—doing more of that business, probably, than any other man in the county.

While a member of the governor's council, he was one of a committee to receive General Grant, who, as President, came on an official visit to the State. He was active in the formation of the Worthington Agricultural Society over twenty-five years ago, and was its first president. He was long connected with the old Northampton Institution for Savings as one of its trustees, and for twenty years (1848 to 1868) was one of the directors of the Hampshire Mutual Fire Insurance Company, exerting in their behalf an active and valuable influence. Ten years ago, his son, Charles K. Brewster, having become of age, the two formed a copartnership, and bought out the mercantile business of S. Brewster & Son, and that business was continued until his death, under the firm-name of E. H. Brewster & Son.

Mr. Brewster was first a Whig and then a Republican. Though a strong party man, he never allowed his party ties to prevent him from remaining true to his friends. These incidents of his political life are worthy of mention: in 1856, after he had served four years as county commissioner, the machinery of the party was turned against him, and he was refused a re-nomination. The people, however, almost against his wishes, insisted upon voting for him as an independent candidate, and he was elected by a handsome majority. At the close of his service as commissioner he was tendered a supper at the old Mansion House, in Northampton, as a testimonial to his long and faithful official work, at which an elegant gold-headed cane was presented him by the county officials. The supper was attended by about eighty of the leading men of the county. In the presentation speech on that occasion, the hope was expressed that the cane, after being a support to the recipient in his declining years, might be left as an heir-loom to his children. This wish he was careful to observe. The cane—ever highly prized by him—he left to his son, Mr. C. K. Brewster, with the request that he bequeath it to the grandson of the deceased, now a lad of six years, who bears his name.

He was a regular attendant upon divine worship, and a firm supporter of the services of the sanctuary. For thirty years he was a member of the choir, and occasionally acted as chorister. During the long pastorate of Rev. Mr. Bisbee,—twenty-eight years,—Mr. Brewster was his warm friend and supporter, and his frequent adviser. He never formally united with the church, but he had an abiding faith in its underlying principles, and his old pastor bore heartfelt testimony at the funeral to his Christian character, as exemplified in his pure and consistent life and his peaceful death.

In all of the many offices of trust and responsibility which he filled, covering a period of nearly forty years, he manifested a conspicuous capacity for public work. He was accurate, methodical, and painstaking in all that he did. His judgment was unsurpassed. He saw the vital points of questions with surprising quickness, and his peculiar aptness in adjusting affairs rendered his services invaluable in unraveling difficulties and smoothing the rough places among men. He was affable, courteous, and dignified,—so much so as to be a marked man wherever he gathered with other men. His fine physical presence and genial, sympathetic nature were also conspicuous. He was an excellent presiding officer, and in that capacity his rare urbanity, strong common sense, and courteous bearing were most advantageously displayed. He was a man of marked firmness of character, yet modest, unassuming, and retiring. He had friends, many of them, and good ones, too. His attachments were strong, his friendship true and constant. He was no fair-weather friend. He never deserted nor wavered. When once his confidence and friendship were gained, they could be relied upon. Alike in sunshine and in storm, he remained the same. He seemed to think little of himself. This was natural, for he was not a selfish man, but self-forgetful, warm-hearted, tender, and true. Mr. Brewster died Nov. 27, 1878, aged seventy years.

E. H. Brewster

Horace Cole

Mr. Cole's ancestors were among the early settlers of Chesterfield. His father, Consider Cole, was born in Plymouth, Mass., in 1762, and came to Chesterfield in his boyhood. A few years later he bought one hundred acres of unimproved land, cleared up the farm, and established a home for himself and family, having married about that time. He was also a blacksmith, and had a shop in connection with his farm, making blacksmithing his principal business. In his family there were eleven children, four of whom died young, and the remaining seven are now all dead except Horace Cole, whose portrait appears upon this page. The wife of Consider Cole died September, 1819, aged fifty-five.

Horace Cole was born in Chesterfield, June 10, 1799. He passed his boyhood at home, working in the shop and on the farm, until he was about sixteen years of age. His father having died not long before, he, with others from that neighborhood, walked to New York to seek employment.

Going out upon Long Island he engaged in building stone wall, and was also employed upon the stone dock at Williamsburg ferry, opposite the city of New York, that being the first dock built at that place.

He then returned to Chesterfield, worked a few months upon a farm, and, on the 18th of March, 1818, he again went to New York with several other young men, walking, as before, the entire distance. They expected to find employment with a company that was grading the city between Harlem and the Bowery. About the time of their arrival the company failed, and they were disappointed in their plans.

Being short of funds, and feeling the necessity of obtaining immediate employment, they went one day's journey into New Jersey in search of work. Entirely failing to secure situations, they were quite discouraged. Mr. Cole, having a cane in his hand, placed it perpendicularly on the ground and said to his companions, "Whichever way this cane falls, I am going." The cane fell toward New York City, and Mr. Cole, with earnest resolution, separated himself from the others, and wearily plodded his way back. He crossed the ferry from New Jersey, and landed in the metropolis with just three cents in his pocket. This was about four o'clock in the afternoon, and the resolute young Yankee from the hills of Chesterfield had yet to find a place for the night in a city of strangers. He found his way down into what was then known as "the swamp," among the heavy leather-dealers of the city. This was a busy place. He called upon a Quaker, one of the principal business-men of the street, an extensive dealer in leather and hides, and a man of wealth.

The merchant closely interrogated the young man as to his habits, and, being satisfied upon this point, engaged him for one year as a porter and man-of-all-work, agreeing to pay him $1 a day, Mr. Cole to board himself. With prompt kindness the merchant sent his son to find a suitable boarding place not far from the store.

Mr. Cole improved his opportunity by industry and by unflinching regularity in the performance of all his duties, and secured the confidence of his employer. He lost no time, and, just before the expiration of the year, he was promoted from the position of a laborer to that of salesman. The merchant re-engaged him at the close of the year for six months, agreeing to pay him one dollar a week in addition to his former wages. During his first year he saved $130, and in the six months' term following he made $75 by buying sheep- and calf-skins, the merchant having allowed his son and Mr. Cole to speculate a little on their own account. The truckman in the employ of this house desired to sell out, and Mr. Cole, with the permission of his employer, bought the horse and dray, paying for them $200. He was still under age, and had to procure a license to enable him to do this.

He now entered upon a course of still harder work. Doing all the carting for the house, he also bought hides of the farmers and butchers, rented a building near, cured the hides, and sold them to the country tanners. This was done early in the morning before the carting would be required. In this way a large business gradually fell into his hands. At the end of three years, having made sufficient money to enable him to enter into a still larger business, he formed a copartnership with Matthew Carroll, under the name of Carroll & Cole, removing from Jacob Street to more commodious quarters in Ferry Street. Mr. Carroll had charge of the finances, and Mr. Cole did the buying and selling. They employed a large number of men, and the business rapidly increased. After two years, Mr. Carroll's health failing, Mr. Cole's labors were largely added to.

The time of the partnership was four years, and when it expired, at Mr. Carroll's earnest request, it was continued one year longer. In the midst of this successful career Mr. Cole's own health failed, and, acting upon the imperative advice of his physician, he disposed of his business and returned to his native town, arriving there in December, 1828. There he bought a large farm, keeping a dairy of thirty cows, and shearing sometimes sixteen hundred sheep in a year. He also bought wool for the Northampton Woolen Company, and for Plattner & Smith, of Lee, Mass. In 1845 he moved to Worthington, and engaged in general merchandising with Simeon Clapp. They continued together four years. After that, Mr. Cole and C. C. Parrish were the firm for six years and a half. Mr. Parrish retiring, his son, Samuel Cole, went into the partnership, and the firm-name was H. Cole & Son until 1875, when the son succeeded to the entire business, and continues the same in Worthington. Besides his mercantile work, Mr. Cole has engaged in various other enterprises, especially the manufacturing of boots and shoes on a large scale. In 1859 his buildings—store and dwelling-house—were destroyed by fire. He promptly rebuilt them. In 1875 he erected a cheese-factory, having facilities for using the milk of one hundred and fifty cows or more. This factory he has recently sold to an association of farmers. Politically, Mr. Cole was a Whig, and in later years a Republican. He has held the position of selectman, both in Chesterfield and Worthington, and has been postmaster for many years. He is a member of the Congregational Church of Worthington.

He married, May 9, 1821, in New York, Sarah King, of that city. She died in June, 1855. Their children were eleven in number, all of whom died in childhood except the son, Samuel. Mr. Cole married (second), Oct. 14, 1857, Maria, daughter of Elijah Cole, of Worthington. She was the widow of John Kinne, of Chesterfield. She died Feb. 7, 1873, and Mr. Cole married (third), June 28, 1874, Almira, daughter of Jeremiah Hull, of Stonington, Conn. She was the widow of Calvin Gunn, of Pittsfield, Mass. Her grandfather was Judge Hull, a prominent lawyer, of Stonington, Conn.

Mr. Cole has been remarkably successful in business, and this is attributed to the close personal attention he has always given to his various undertakings. His education was only that obtained in the common schools, but he possessed great natural ability. He has been very generous in contributing to all matters affecting the public welfare of his native town. He has a large number of friends, who esteem him for his sterling integrity and strict honesty. A prominent banker of Northampton said to the writer, "Mr. Cole is the soul of honor, and his word has always been as good as his bond."

and Mr. Nahum Eager took the oath relating to fence-viewers. Dr. Moses Morse took the oath of a surveyor.

Oct. 14, 1768.—The town met at the house of Mr. Alexander Miller, in Worthington aforesaid, and then the town proceeded to the choice of Nathan Leonard deer-reeve, and he was sworn into the office; and then the town voted to adjourn this meeting to no day. Mr. John Watt took the oath of a tythingman.

October 22d.—Mr. Thomas Kinne took the oath of warden.

Oct. 11, 1768.—At a legal town-meeting held at Mr. Alexander Miller's, Dr. Moses Morse was chosen moderator; and then the town voted to lay out roads in the following places: 1st. To begin at Murrayfield line, near Mr. Thomas Kinne's, running northerly, bearing to the east, to the dwelling-house of Mr. Benjamin Bigelow, and from there to the grist-mill in said Worthington; and then a road from Murrayfield line to No. 5 line in the most convenient place; and then a road from No. 5 line, on the west end of Mr. Whipple's lot and Mr. Ford's and Mr. Rice's, out to the other road; and then to lay out a road in the most convenient place from the grist-mill to lead up to Mr. Daniel ——— into the north and south road; and then a road from Capt. Nathan ——— saw-mill in the most convenient place ——— into the county road between Mr. Ephraim ——— lot and Mr. Jonathan Eames' lot. And then the town voted to recommend the other roads to be laid out by the selectmen where they may think the most convenient place.*

The first regular March meeting was held on the 21st day of the month, 1769, at the house of Mr. Alexander Miller, innholder.

Mr. Thomas Kinne was chosen Moderator, Nahum Eager, Town Clerk and Town Treasurer; Thomas Kinne, Moses Morse, Samuel Clapp, Selectmen; Timothy Meech, Constable; Samuel Wilcox, Benjamin Bigelow, Nathan Leonard, Surveyors of Highways; Samuel Crosby, Tythingman; Daniel Morse, Rufus Stone, Fence-Viewers; John Skiff, Leather-Sealer; James Benjamin, Deer-Reeve; Moses Ashley, Nathan Leonard, Wardens. The town voted to accept of sundry roads—perhaps the same as already mentioned—one "from Murrayville to No. 5 line;" one "from grist-mill to Capt. Daniels'"; one "from the grist-mill to Mr. Biglow's."

Nov. 12, 1770.—Dr. Moses Morse and Mr. Alexander Miller chosen agents to represent the town at the county court, in relation to county roads.

March 19, 1771.—Voted sixty pounds to mend the highways, men's labor to be counted 3s. per day; yoke of oxen, 1s. 6d.; use of plow, 8d.

Dec. 23, 1772.—Voted Nahum Eager, Jeremiah Kinne, Nathaniel Daniels a committee to petition to have the provincial tax taken off.

April 2, 1778.—Voted not "to set up enoculation" at all this time.

Other extracts from town records are given in connection with churches, schools, etc.

SELECTMEN, FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

- 1768.—Nathan Leonard, Nathaniel Daniels, John Kinne.
- 1769.—Thomas Kinne, Moses Morse, Samuel Clapp.
- 1770.—Nathan Leonard, Nathaniel Daniels, Nahum Eager.
- 1771.—Joseph Marsh, John Kinne, Alexander Miller.
- 1772.—Ebenezer Leonard, Alexander Miller, Joseph Marsh.
- 1773.—Nathaniel Daniels, Nahum Eager, Thomas Kinne.
- 1774.—Nahum Eager, Nathaniel Daniels, John Kinne.
- 1775.—Nathaniel Daniels, Jonathan Prentice, Jeremiah Kinne.
- 1776.—Ebenezer Leonard, Thomas Kinne, Moses Morse.
- 1777.—Nathan Leonard, Thomas Kinne, Joseph Marsh.
- 1778.—Jonathan Brewster, Timothy Meech, John Skiff.
- 1779.—Jonathan Brewster, Moses Porter, William Burr.
- 1780.—Jonathan Brewster, Moses Porter, Joshua Phillips, Nathaniel Daniels, Zephaniah Hatch.
- 1781.—Nahum Eager, John Kinne, Jonathan Prentice.
- 1782.—Stephen Fitch, Nahum Eager, Samuel Woods.
- 1783.—John Watts, Stephen Fitch, Samuel Woods.
- 1784.—Nahum Eager, Jonathan Brewster, John Kinne.
- 1785.—Nahum Eager, Jonathan Brewster, Job Marsh.
- 1786.—Nahum Eager, Jonathan Brewster, John Kinne.
- 1787.—Jonathan Brewster, Nathan Branch, Ezra Leonard.
- 1788.—Jonathan Brewster, John Kinne, Ezra Leonard.
- 1789-90.—Jonathan Brewster, Matthew Warner, Thaddens Chapin.
- 1791-92.—Jonathan Brewster, Matthew Warner, Nathan Branch.
- 1793.—Jonathan Woodbridge, Rufus Marsh, Israel Burr.
- 1794.—Jonathan Brewster, Nahum Eager, Matthew Warner.
- 1795.—Jonathan Brewster, Matthew Warner, Jonathan Woodbridge.
- 1796.—Jonathan Brewster, Rufus Marsh, Nathan Branch.
- 1797-98.—Rufus Marsh, Elisha Brewster, Samuel Cook.
- 1799.—Elisha Brewster, Samuel Cook, Ezra Leonard.
- 1800.—Ezra Leonard, Samuel Cook, Joseph Marsh.
- 1801.—Samuel Cook, Jonathan Brewster, Jr., Eliashib Adams, Jr.
- 1802.—Samuel Cook, Jonathan Brewster, Jr., Jonathan Woodbridge.
- 1803.—Jonathan Brewster, Jr., Jonathan Woodbridge, Nathan Hazen.
- 1804.—Jonathan Woodbridge, Roger Benjamin, Elijah Curtis.
- 1805.—Roger Benjamin, Elijah Curtis, Azariah Parsons.
- 1806.—Ezra Leonard, Trowbridge Ward, Cyrus Stowell.
- 1807.—Ezra Leonard, Trowbridge Ward, John Stone.

* The omitted words above are missing from the town records, a corner of the page being torn away.

- 1808.—Jonathan Brewster, Jr., Trowbridge Ward, John Stone.
- 1809-10.—Jonathan Brewster, Jr., John Stone, Josiah Mills.
- 1811-13.—Jonathan Brewster, Jr., Josiah Mills, Roger Benjamin.
- 1814-17.—Ezra Starkweather, Azariah Parsons, Ephraim Parish.
- 1818.—Trowbridge Ward, Joseph Marsh, James Kelley.
- 1819-20.—Jonah Brewster, Josiah Mills, Roger Benjamin.
- 1821-22.—Jonah Brewster, Trowbridge Ward, William Eager.
- 1823.—Jonah Brewster, William Eager, John Stone, Jr.
- 1824-25.—Jonah Brewster, John Stone, Jr., Timothy Austin.
- 1826.—Jonah Brewster, John Stone, Jr., Joseph Bardwell.
- 1827-28.—Jonah Brewster, John Stone, Jr., Gorham Cottrell.
- 1829.—William Coit, Ansel Burr, Lathrop Reed.
- 1830-31.—Jonah Brewster, Ansel Burr, Jeremiah Phillips.
- 1832-33.—Clement Burr, Jeremiah Phillips, Luther Granger.
- 1834.—Ransloe Daniels, Ames Burr, Oren Stone.
- 1835-36.—James Benton, Elkanah Ring, Jr., Azariah Parsons.
- 1837.—Chauncey B. Rising, Jeremiah Phillips, Ames Burr.
- 1838.—Ransloe Daniels, Ames Burr, Elkanah Ring, Jr.
- 1839.—Norman Allen, Luther Granger, James Bisbee.
- 1840.—Ransloe Daniels, Elkanah Ring, Jr., Russell Bartlett.
- 1841-42.—Ransloe Daniels, Ames Burr, Russell Bartlett.
- 1843.—Ransloe Daniels, Elkanah Ring, Jr., Russell Bartlett.
- 1844.—Russell Bartlett, John Adams, Elbridge Hazen.
- 1845.—John Adams, Elbridge Hazen, Oren Stone.
- 1846.—John Adams, Elbridge Hazen, Tillson Bartlett.
- 1847.—Elbridge Hazen, Azariah Parsons, Oren Stone.
- 1848.—Elbridge Hazen, Oren Stone, Azariah Parsons.
- 1849-51.—Russell Bartlett, Milton Brewster, Ethan Barnes.
- 1852.—Elisha H. Brewster, Jotham Clarke, James Bisbee.
- 1853.—Jotham Clarke, James Bisbee, William H. Bates.
- 1854.—Jotham Clarke (died), William H. Bates, Ethan C. Ring, James Bisbee.
- 1855.—William H. Bates, William Cole, John N. Benton.
- 1856.—William Cole, John N. Benton, Edward C. Porter.
- 1857.—John N. Benton, John Adams, William A. Bates.
- 1858-59.—A. Dwight Perry, Alden B. Curtis, William Starkweather.
- 1860-61.—Horace Coe, William A. Bates, Russell Bartlett.
- 1862.—John Adams, Charles F. Cole, Aaron Stevens.
- 1863-64.—John Adams, Oren Stone, Alden B. Curtis.
- 1865-66.—John Adams, Oren Stone, Marcus A. Bates.
- 1867.—John Adams, Franklin J. Robinson, Marcus A. Bates.
- 1868-69.—William Cole, Franklin J. Robinson, E. C. Porter.
- 1870-71.—William Cole, Edwin S. Burr, Alfred Kilbourne.
- 1872-73.—A. Dwight Perry, Marcus A. Bates, Jonathan Brewster.
- 1874-75.—Jonathan Brewster, Gordyce Bates, Jonathan H. Eager.
- 1876.—Jonathan Brewster, Gordyce Bates, Charles K. Brewster.
- 1877-78.—Jonathan Brewster, Gordyce Bates, Daniel R. Porter.
- 1879.—A. J. Randall, Henry Benton, James Pease.

TOWN-CLERKS.

Nahum Eager, 1768 to 1776; John Watt, 1777; Ebenezer Leonard, 1778 to 1781; James Thompson, 1782, 1783; Jonathan Brewster, 1784, 1785; Ezra Starkweather, 1786 to 1813; Jonathan Brewster, Jr., 1814 to 1824; William Ward, 1825 to 1830; Chauncey B. Rising, 1831 to 1834; Ransloe Daniels, 1835 to 1837; Elisha H. Brewster, 1838 to 1841; Simeon Clapp, 1842 to 1848; John Adams, 1849 to 1855; C. C. Parish, 1856; Edward C. Porter, 1857 to 1867; Samuel Cole, 1868, 1869; C. K. Brewster, 1870 to 1874; Samuel Cole, 1875 to 1880.

The following is a list of representatives from Worthington in the Provincial Congress or in the Legislature of the State:

Moses Morse, Agent to the Provincial Congress, 1773; also Representative to the General Court, 1777; Nahum Eager, Representative to Provincial Congress, 1774, and to the General Court, 1781, 1783, 1790, 1791, 1792, 1794, 1796, 1797; Nathan Leonard, Representative to the General Court, 1775; Deacon Jonathan Brewster, 1778, 1779, 1782, 1784, 1785, 1786, 1787, 1793, 1795; Hon. Ezra Starkweather, 1788, 1798, 1800, 1801, 1802, 1803; Matthew Warner, Representative to the General Court, 1799; Jonathan Woodbridge, 1804, 1805, 1807; Elisha Brewster, 1806; Jonathan Brewster, Jr., 1808, 1809, 1810, 1811, 1813, 1819, 1831; Samuel Howe, 1812; Josiah Mills, 1814, 1815, 1822, 1829, 1830, 1835; Hon. Wm. Ward, 1816, 1817, 1831, 1834, 1851. Died before taking his seat at the last election. Trowbridge Ward, 1820, 1821; Jonah Brewster, 1823, 1832, 1833; Elisha Mack, 1826; Ransloe Daniels, 1836, 1845; Chauncey B. Rising, 1838, 1839, 1840; James Benton, 1840; Ames Burr, 1841, 1842; Ethan C. Ring, 1843, 1844; Elisha H. Brewster, 1847, 1852; Elbridge Hazen, 1848; Ethan Barnes, 1849, 1850; Abner M. Smith, 1853; G. B. Hall, 1854; John Adams, 1856; Wm. H. Bates, 1857; John H. Bisbee, 1864; Marcus A. Bates, 1869; Lafayette Stevens, 1875.

The place of the town-meetings has been as follows: 1768, "at the house of Alexander Miller, innholder," and to 1770, inclusive. 1770, November 12th, "at the meeting-house in said town," and down to Oct. 10, 1825. 1826, March 13th, "at the old meeting-house," and to May 14, 1827, inclusive. 1827, July 2d, "at Isaiah Kingman's," and through that year. 1828, March 12th, "at the town-house in said town," and to Nov. 12, 1849, inclusive. 1850, March 4th, "at the town-hall in said town," and down to the present time.

VILLAGES.

WORTHINGTON CENTRE.

This village is so named from its geographical position. The town-hall is located just north of the place, and also the Congregational Church. In the sharp contest over the site of the latter, 1824 and 1825, it is said to have been determined that "Watts' Pond," just over the hill to the west, was the centre of the town, with respect to territory, population, valuation, and travel. The earliest clothier-works in the town were located here, upon the present place of C. P. Hewitt, and some of the timbers have been uncovered in recent years. While the old Albany stage-route was in its prosperous days it was supposed that a village would grow up at the next four corners east. But the location of the meeting-house and the early clothier-works drew business to the centre. When the railroad was opened the old historic line of stages was abandoned. Worthington became "an inland town," and the growth of "the centre" was more decided. The stores and taverns along the line of the old road disappeared, except as they were sustained for other reasons. A very early store at the centre was kept by Francis Benjamin, on the site of Elisha Brewster's present residence. In 1837, D. T. Hewitt opened a store on the present place of his son, C. P. Hewitt, and continued in trade for a few years. Somewhat later the store of Sidney and Elisha Brewster was established. Later, the firm was Sidney Brewster & Son. They closed out, and the store was opened by E. H. Brewster & Son, and has been continued to the present time.

WORTHINGTON CORNERS POST-OFFICE.

is on the old stage-road, a mile north of "the centre." It is a pleasant rural village, containing a number of substantial and elegant private residences; the Worthington House, now kept by Mr. Winslow; the Bartlett Hotel; the store of Samuel Cole; a cheese-factory; a basket-factory; and several mechanic-shops. From this village there are three stage-lines,—one to Williamsburg and one to Hinsdale, both daily, and one three times a week to Huntington.

In the tendency of summer travel to these mountain towns Worthington Corners is receiving considerable attention of late; quite a number of boarders are wont to locate here. Several private dwellings are owned abroad, and opened as summer residences during the hot months of the year. Several places of romantic beauty are within easy drive, and there is much to attract in all parts of the town.

WEST WORTHINGTON

is located above the Falls in the Westfield River. It includes a few private residences, the mills mentioned elsewhere, a post-office, school-house, several mechanic-shops, and the Methodist church. It is on the present stage-road from Worthington Corners to Hinsdale. The post-office was established December, 1849. Russell Bartlett was the first postmaster, and retained the office until Jan. 1, 1874. David Jones took the office at that time, and is the present postmaster (March, 1879).

RINGVILLE

derives its name from the men who established the most important business there. It is a small hamlet, rather picturesquely situated at the junction of the two branches of Little River. Besides the mills, it has a post-office, school-house, shops, and a few private dwellings. The place is south of Worthington Centre, on the stage-road to Huntington.

SOUTH WORTHINGTON POST-OFFICE.

This place is below Ringville, in the valley of Little River, and in the extreme southeast part of the town. The stage-route from Worthington Corners to Huntington passes through it. The village grew up mostly through the energy, business enterprise, and public spirit of Horace Cole, who is mentioned in connection with the mills. He was the liberal benefactor of the Methodist Church, its real founder and generous supporter. The place now includes private residences, the Methodist Church, a school-house, shops, and a post-office. The latter was established August, 1867. The first postmaster was E. R. Converse. The second, and present, incumbent is Isaac D. Thrasher.

SCHOOLS.

The first school-house "was built in 1773, near the ground occupied by the dwelling-house of Mr. John Adams." Schools were at first supported largely by subscription. Appropriations in the early years were very limited in amount. The struggle to live in those pioneer times did not, however, absorb the whole attention. Education and religious worship were early cared for. The same writer before quoted says:

"When we remember that for the first four years the expenses of the town, though amounting to only forty pounds, were obliged to be defrayed with borrowed money; when we consider that the State taxes, from the want of hard money, were obliged to be paid in produce; when we contemplate the extreme low price of all kinds of labor,—we are rather surprised at what the town voted for the support of common schools than at what in their necessity they were prevented from doing."

No action by the town is recorded for three years; after that annual appropriations were generally made.

March 19, 1771.—Voted to raise ten pounds for schooling for the year ensuing.
Nov. 13, 1772.—Voted a committee to divide the town into districts,—Moses Morse, Nathaniel Daniel, Benjamin Biglow, Thomas Kinne, John Watts.
Dec. 4, 1772.—Committee reported five districts.
March 5, 1784.—Voted twenty pounds for schooling.
March 27, 1785.—Voted thirty pounds for schooling.
March 16, 1795.—Voted forty pounds for schooling.

Before the close of the last century the appropriations amounted to £60 annually. In 1833 a general rearrangement of the school districts took place.

THE MOUNTAIN SEMINARY, an incorporated institution, was established in 1837, on the common near the present store of Samuel Cole, at Worthington Corners. The school was continued for several years, supported by tuition fees alone. But other seminaries, heavily endowed, were soon after founded, and the competition was too strong for this village academy. The enterprise lasted only a few years, but it aided many young people to obtain the elements of a higher education; it secured improved methods in the common schools, and gave to the town an educational impulse that has ever since been felt.

The first teachers were Alender O. Clapp and Mary Strong. Afterward T. A. Hall, E. A. Hubbard, and J. H. Temple were employed.

The building was a convenient one, comprising two school-rooms on the lower floor, and a recitation-room connected with each. On the second floor was a large public hall, and considerably for other than school business. The institution was built by a company of shareholders, including among others Capt. Kelly, Azariah Parsons, Mr. Randall, Col. Ward, Col. Rice, C. B. Rising, and others. The building was sold finally for a turning-shop at West Chesterfield.

To this notice of the schools it is proper to add a list of the natives of Worthington who received a collegiate education:

Azariah Clark, graduated at Williams College in 1805; entered the ministry. Benjamin Mills, graduated at Williams College in 1814; settled in Illinois as a lawyer; returned to Massachusetts; died in Pittsfield. Henry Wilbur, privately educated; not a graduate; was a minister of Wendell from 1817 to 1822; also an author and lecturer on astronomy. Joseph M. Brewster, Yale College, 1822; entered the ministry; died in Peru, 1833. Daniel Parish, Williams College, 1822; studied law; practiced in Worthington and elsewhere. Jonathan E. Woodbridge, Williams College, 1822; appointed a tutor; entered the ministry; was a teacher many years at Auburndale. George Woodbridge, graduated at West Point; afterward entered the ministry, and preached at Richmond, Va. John Starkweather, Yale College, 1825; entered the ministry. Orsamus Tinker, Williams College, 1827; entered the ministry; died at Ashby, Mass., in 1838. Consider Parish, Williams College, 1828; both taught and preached at the South. Alonzo Clark, Williams College, 1828; studied medicine; appointed professor of pathology in the Medical College of New York City. J. H. Bisbee, Union College, 1831; entered the ministry. Daniel Branch, Union College, 1832; a teacher in Ohio; school commissioner in Illinois. A. Huntington Clapp, Yale College; appointed secretary of Home Missionary Society, New York. Franklin D. Austin, Union College, 1845; entered the ministry. Henry A. Austin and Samuel J. Austin, Union College, 1847; both entered the ministry. Corydon Higgins, Williams College, 1849; entered the ministry. Chas. H. Gardner, Williams College; entered the ministry, preaching and teaching in New York. James K. Mills, Williams College; entered the profession of law. W. Harmon Niles, educated under Prof. Agassiz, Cambridge. James C. Rice, Yale College, 1854; studied law; settled in New York City; entered the Union army, as elsewhere stated. Henry E. Daniels, Williams College; studied law; died young. Other professional men educated at various institutions, Ira Daniels, Ebenezer Daniels, Dr. Tinker, Franklin Everett, Hon. Saml. A. Kingman, judge in the Supreme Court of Kansas, A. D. Kingman, the brothers Marble, who went to Kentucky.

There have also gone out from Worthington many distinguished business-men who have risen to positions of public trust or been signally successful in their respective callings. Among these may be named Aaron Clark, Gideon Lee, A. P. Stone, F. Kellogg.

The life of Gideon Lee has the elements almost of a romance. Originally a shoemaker in the shop at Clark & Bardwell's tannery, he is said to have one day thrown off his apron and declared he would do such small business no longer. His after-career in New York as a leather-dealer is simply marvelous. He rose to wealth and municipal honors, being chosen mayor of the city. When he retired from business he met John Jacob Astor in the street. Mr. Astor said, "I hear you have retired, Mr. Lee; how much do you save?" "About $300,000," replied Mr. Lee. "Well, well!" said Mr. Astor. "That is just as well as if you were rich."

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Eleven schools; attending in the summer, 247; average, 213; winter, 326; average, 298; in town, between 4 and 16, 340; summer schools, 48 months, 15 days; winter, 33 months, 15 days; summer teachers, 11 females; winter, 11 males; average wages of male teachers per month, $13.45; female teachers, $4.65; does not seem possible this last could include board, but so stated in Report, Legislative Documents, 1838, page 148.

January, 1847.—Eleven schools; attending in summer, 278; average, 191; winter, 304; average, 221; in town, between 4 and 16, 356; attending under 4, 19; over 16, 32; summer schools, 55 months, 14 days; winter, 37 months, 14 days; total, 93 months; summer teachers, 11 females; winter, 9 males, 2 females; average wages, male teachers per month, $21.17; female, $12.61.

January, 1857.—Twelve schools; attending in summer, 270; average, 211; winter, 297; average, 243; attending under 5, 27; over 15, 44; in town, between 5 and 15, 267; summer teachers, 13 females; winter, 10 males, 2 females; summer schools, 44 months; winter, 35 months, 6 days; total, 79 months, 6 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $26; female, $15.50.

January, 1867.—Twelve schools; attending in the summer, 200; average, 160; winter, 225; average, 186; attending under 5, 9; over 15, 52; in town, between 5 and 15, 198; summer teachers, 12 females; winter, 6 males, 6 females; summer schools, 37 months; winter, 41 months, 15 days; average wages of male teachers, $33.33 per month; female teachers, $23.14.

January, 1878.—Eleven schools; 169 attending; average, 124; under 5, 6; over 5, 31; in town, between 5 and 16, 146; teachers, 2 males, 13 females,—1 from normal; school, 71 months; average wages of male teachers per month, $35; female, $27.65; taxation, $800; voluntarily given, board and fuel, $860; expense of superintendence, $64.55; printing, $6; vested funds, $1961.67; income, $143.20; local funds and dog tax, $228.42; town share of State fund, $223.18.

CHURCHES.

Some preparation for public worship was made the same year the settlement began. Lots for ministerial support were set apart, and the proprietors erected the first meeting-house in 1764. Some of the traditions ascribe this work wholly to Col. Worthington, but others include Maj. Barnard as one of the donors. It is not very clear that the above date is correct, though given by previous writers. When the town was organized, in 1768, they met at the tavern of Alexander Miller, and no town-meetings were called "at the meeting-house" until Nov. 12, 1770. This is a clear indication that a house was built the summer before, and that there was no other in existence sufficient to meet in, for these New England towns generally met "at the meeting-house" when they could. This conclusion is further sustained by the fact that March 5, 1770, a road was accepted extending "from the Murrayfield line to the meeting-house spot." This house stood a few rods west of the present residence of Lyman Granger.

The house remained in a half-finished state for several years. It was in the midst of the forest, and at one time it was agreed "that every male inhabitant in the plantation of sixteen years and upward should spend one day in cutting and clearing away the forest about the meeting-house." There was no pulpit at first, only a temporary stage, and rude benches for seats. The older people sometimes brought chairs. March 29, 1780, the town voted certain improvements,—“a pulpit, two deacons' seats, four seats on each side of the broad aisle, and also to lay the gallery floor and stairs.” Locations for other pews were drawn by lot, to be built by individuals on condition "that each should finish the back up to the gallery girt." Still a large part of the house was unfinished. In 1791 the people aroused themselves, and voted "that the meeting-house be taken down, moved, erected, and every way finished by the 1st day of December, in the year 1792, and that the whole expense accruing therefrom shall be paid by the inhabitants of the town by the 1st day of December, aforesaid, in the following articles, viz.: one-fourth part to be paid in cash, and the remainder to be paid in good neat cattle, or Indian corn, or rye, or flax, or beef, or pork." This vote was carried out. The town subsequently voted "to have all the pews sold at auction to the highest bidder." The amount thus obtained was £601 8s. This meeting-house was at "the centre," and occupied part of the ground now lying between the store of C. K. Brewster and the dwelling-house of Mr. George W. Noble. It was voted that "Nahum Eager, John Watts, and others have liberty to set up a steeple on the meeting-house," but they do not appear to have availed themselves of this permission.

This continued for some thirty years to be the only place of worship in town. In 1825, after a long and unpleasant contest, it was abandoned, and the present edifice erected. During the year 1870 the interior of this house was thoroughly reconstructed, at an expense of several thousand dollars. A rededication took place August 3d of that year, and was an occasion of great interest. As something unusual, we add that the business of the Congregational Society was transacted under the town warrant until the year 1865, as in the days of the fathers. In most other towns the connection between "church and state" gradually dissolved from 1825 to 1835. In Worthington the parish as distinct from the town was organized in 1865, under the Revised Statutes.

FORMATION OF THE CHURCH.

The early action of the town with reference to preaching was somewhat negative, as it first appears on the records, May 10, 1769, that they "voted to have preaching," which was affirmative enough, but that they "voted not to grant any money for preaching," "voted not to choose a committee to see about preaching," and "voted not to clear any on the meeting-house lot." But this soon changed to more positive action, as shown with reference to the building of a meeting-house.

April 3, 1771.—Voted to have Mr. Jonathan Huntington, of Windham, for their minister. Voted to maintain Mr. Huntington by a rate. Voted to give him 40 pounds salary for the first year, and to raise four pounds a year until it amounts to 60 pounds, and then to remain at that yearly.

March 11, 1773, a salary of £44 was voted to Mr. Huntington, which was probably carrying out the original agreement for the second year.

The church was organized April 1, 1771, with the following members: Thomas Kinne, Ebenezer Leonard, Nathaniel Daniels, Thomas Clemons, Ephraim Wheeler, Grace Buck, Sarah Pettengill, Sybil Holton, Meribah Converse, Sarah Huntington, Jonathan Huntington, Hannah Kinne, Lydia Marsh, Nathan Leonard, Benjamin Bigelow, Moses Soule, Samuel Converse, Edmund Pettengill, Priscilla Benjamin, Anna Williams, Mr. Bigelow, Eunice Morse, Joseph Marsh, Israel Holton, David Jewett, James Bemis, Elizabeth Bemis, Eleanor Soule, Dorothy Daniels, Abigail Maheurin.

Like most other churches, this ancient society has had its times of abundant prosperity, to be followed by seasons of depression. There have been some noted years when large numbers were added to the church. In 1780, the last year of Mr. Huntington's life, 53 united. In 1798, 54 were added. In 1808 there was a large accession. Mr. Pomeroy that year made the following entry:

"Be it forever remembered, to the glory of all-conquering grace, that after a long, dark, and stupid time, thirty-six persons, having before made a public relation of their religious experience in the meeting-house, united with this church on the first day of May, 1808."

This was only the beginning of the work, however, as 113 were received that year. In 1819, 100 persons were added. In 1827, 32 united. In 1842, 48 were received. In 1850, 49. During many other portions of its history there has also been a steady, healthy growth.

Ministerial Record.—1st. Rev. Jonathan Huntington, ordained June 26, 1771. He died while yet pastor, March 11, 1781, aged 48, and the pulpit was then supplied for some years by various preachers temporarily employed. 2d. Rev. Josiah Spalding, installed Aug. 21, 1788. His services ended in 1794. 3d. Rev. Jonathan S. Pomeroy, settled Nov. 26, 1794. His pastorate continued for nearly forty years, closing in 1832. He died at Feeding Hills, June 4, 1836. 4th. Rev. Henry Adams, settled Dec. 25, 1833; dismissed by reason of ill health in 1838. He was a native of Worthington. 5th. Rev. John H. Bisbee, settled December, 1838. He was a native of Chesterfield, but his parents belonged to the church of Worthington. Dismissed March 13, 1867, to accept a call to the church of Huntington. 6th. Rev. David S. Morgan, installed June 26, 1867. His services closed May 26, 1869. 7th. Rev. Joseph F. Gaylord; labors here commenced in the summer of 1869. Installed Aug. 3, 1870. His labors here closed April 1, 1873. 8th. Rev. Daniel Powers, commenced his labors in the spring of 1874; closed in the spring of 1876. 9th. Rev. H. M. Stone, commenced his labors in June, 1876, and closed October, 1877. 10th. A call now pending to Rev. Wm. E. Bassett (1878), who has preached for some months past.

List of Deacons.—Joseph Marsh, Nathan Leonard, 1771; Joshua Philips,* 1783-90; Jonathan Brewster,† 1789-1800; Rufus Marsh,* 1789-1802; Ezra Leonard, 1800; Ebenezer Niles,† 1801; Asabel Prentice,† 1801-6; Charles Starkweather,* 1806; Azariah Parsons,† 1811-46; Daniel Pierce,* 1828-38; Asa Marble,* 1829-37; Norman Allen,† 1836-78; Lyman White,* 1838-46; Schuyler R. Wilbur,† 1847-67; Jonathan Brewster, 1867; La Fayette Stevens, 1870. The last Jonathan Brewster is great-grandson of the first.

As already stated, during the year 1870 the inside of the church edifice was taken out and entirely remodeled, at an expense of $4000. The church at first was built by the sale of the pews, and they were owned by individuals. When it was remodeled the money was raised in the same way, the society at first paying individuals for their property in the house. To show the harmony and energy with which the people took hold of the matter, it may be stated that after the house was completed notice was given of the time the pews would be sold at auction; the people met, and in one half-day they were all sold for enough to pay all expenses and $500 over and above all, so that the church or society have no debt, nor ever had one.

Present membership, 106; congregation, about 200; attendance at Sunday-school, about 75; library, 150 volumes; A. J. Randall, superintendent; Jonathan Brewster, clerk of the church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, WEST WORTHINGTON.

This society was formed about thirty years ago, and its congregation is drawn from the immediate neighborhood around it and from portions of Peru. Soon after its formation a neat and convenient chapel was erected upon a pleasant site in the village of West Worthington.

METHODIST CHURCH, SOUTH WORTHINGTON.

This society was formed in 1828, and the congregation was gathered, to some extent, from the neighboring towns of Chesterfield, Norwich, and Chester. A small chapel of one and a half stories was built about 1829-30, costing $400. The same building is now used as a store at South Worthington. Previous to the erection of this house the meetings were held in private dwellings, in barns, and, in pleasant weather, under a maple-tree still standing there. Horace Cole states that he with six others joined the church under this tree. From D. P. Hewitt and other older citizens we learn that Mr. Cole was the chief promoter of the enterprise; that his house was open for ministers, and his barns for ministers' horses; that he was the life and soul of the church-work done at that point.

Early ministers were Rev. John Luckey, Rev. Mr. White, Rev. Mr. Scott. Elijah Cole was the first class-leader. Horace Cole, steward. A new meeting-house was built in 1847, at an expense of $2000. It has been recently repaired and remodeled, and is now a handsome, neat country church.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The following votes appear in the records:

May 10, 1769.—Voted to have a burying-place upon Mr. Alexander Miller's land, as much as shall be thought convenient. Voted to have a burying-place upon Lot No. 35, where it shall be thought most convenient. Voted to have a burying-place upon Lot No. 50.

These three were therefore the old burying-grounds of the town. There are now five under the care of the town: the Centre Cemetery, in charge of C. K. Brewster; the Corners Cemetery, in charge of C. B. Towers; the Ringville Cemetery, in charge of William Cole; the cemetery west of Ringville, in charge of G. W. Blackman; and the cemetery near the house of Lincoln Stewart, of which he has charge.

Private burials have taken place near where Emerson Friselle now lives, but the bodies were afterward removed. The Converse family and others were buried near the present place of Charles W. Smith. There is said to have been one burial on the farm now owned by Lorenzo Edwards. It is said that an Indian was buried half a mile north of the turnpike, about on the line between Hampshire County and Berkshire.

TOWN SOCIETIES.

There have been many organizations for religious work during the history of the town, especially in the early missionary period, when whatever was done locally was usually by means of a "society." These disappeared under the modern methods of acting through the pastor of the church, with less agents and less "local machinery." Temperance organizations have also existed from time to time, and though each lasted for only a brief period, yet they preserved, intensified, and perpetuated their principles, and secured for Worthington its present high character as a temperance town. Lyceums and other means of literary improvement have sometimes had

* Dismissed to other churches.

† Died.

a brief existence, calling out and cultivating talent for public speaking which might otherwise never have been known. All these organizations have left their impress for good in the improved morals of society, and have secured a higher advancement in refinement and culture.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

The West Worthington Falls are worth a visit by the tourist and the lover of nature. A cataract seventy-five feet in depth, the gorge below bordered by rocky precipices, and these surrounded by wild and romantic scenery, form a picture of perpetual beauty and sublimity. In the summer the stream diminishes in magnitude until it is a mere sparkling rivulet of silver leaping over the rocks and into the chasm below. In the winter the current is broader and stronger, and in seasons of freshet this stream, so full of beauty in the quiet summer, now roars and rushes with a force that dashes aside every opposing obstacle, and plunges madly into the gulf below. The entire fall equals 200 feet in the distance of half a mile.

Knowles Hill, a mile or more north of Worthington Corners, is an elevation from which many charming views may be obtained. It is easy of ascent, and it is proposed to erect a tower there for the accommodation of visitors.

Parsons' Hill is a high elevation in the northern part of the town, and worthy of a visit. Bashan Hill occupies the north-western angle of the town, above West Worthington, and has many attractive features. White Rock in the south, with its curious geological formation, is worthy of note.

The old stage-route has considerable interest clustering around it, for it was a line of travel in the time of the Revolution, long before the establishment of the regular stages. Troops passed over it from the Connecticut Valley to Albany. There were then the tavern of Alexander Miller, at the Buffington place; of Lieut. Meech, and that of Nathaniel Daniels, at the Tillson Bartlett place. At the last two officers were entertained, but probably not at the first, if he was an inveterate Tory, as stated in Rice's history.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The principal business is that of agriculture. A large portion of the town possesses a fertile soil, free of rocks sufficient for tillage. Other portions are excellent for grazing. In early times considerable lumber was made from the forests that covered the town, and in later years there is still something of this business done, while there are various forms of wood-work manufactured.

The town was noted for the number and quality of sheep for many years. The people shared largely in the fine-wool furor that swept over this county. And there are many of the present citizens who were obliged to sit up more nights in trying to save the lives of lambs than of their children,—lambs, as one man expresses it, which no one ought to have tried to raise north of Florida! This business, however, rapidly declined, and now there are thirteen articles of production that exceed in amount that of wool. The dairy business was also a source of former prosperity, and is considerably revived in recent years, a new impulse having been given to it by the establishment of a cheese-factory. This was built by Horace Cole, at the corners, in the winter of 1874-75. There is about $3000 worth of cheese made annually.

The exports from this town, like those of other similar mountain towns, are so numerous and of such variety as to defy classification.

MILLS, FACTORIES, ETC.

Commencing upon Stevens' Brook, at the east line of the town, there is located the grist-mill, saw-mill, and turning-works of Aaron and Lafayette Stevens; sieve-rims and other varieties of wood-work are made there. Their saw-mill is said to be upon the site of the old Col. Worthington gristmill given for the use of the town. Their water-privilege has thus been improved from one hundred and ten to one hundred and fifteen years. The first millers lived not far from here,—Luke Bonney and David Bronson. The property has been in the Stevens family over sixty years. Next above on this brook is the site of the old saw-mill of Ezekiel Tower, built forty years ago or more; abandoned perhaps in 1860; property passed into the hands of Horace Cole. Farther up, in the woods of E. S. Squires, is the site of a former grist-mill,—an old affair,—perhaps not in use since 1800. The father of Noah Hatch used to tend that mill. Above, on Bronson's Brook, a tributary of Stevens', were the wood-manufacturing works of M. A. & G. Bates,—shovel-handles and similar articles. They were burned in 1858 or 1859, having run perhaps ten or twelve years. Near this place is the Sampson saw-mill, and also grist-mill, founded not far from 1830, continued to the present time in the same family; now owned by Wm. Sampson. The grandfather of the present Wm. Sampson is said to have had a clothing-mill very early. Above the Sampsons a mile or so is the site of a saw-mill abandoned perhaps fifty years ago. It was owned by Edmund Tillson. Farther south, and west from the junction of Bronson's and Stevens' Brooks, is E. C. Brown's cider-mill of the present time, run by water-power.

On the Ringville stream, known as "Little River," at the southeast, and just at the town-line of Huntington, were formerly located the works of Mr. Weeks for the manufacture of children's sleds and wagons,—abandoned some years ago. Next above is the water-privilege at South Worthington, near the Methodist Church. Here was an ancient saw-mill, dating back to the first settlement of the town perhaps. It was burned, and Samuel Cole rebuilt it, and also a grist-mill, about 1829. He retained it but a short time, when the property passed to Horace Cole, who retained it some twelve years; since that it has been in the hands of various owners. The grist-mill was given up in 1842 or 1843. Charles Smith commenced making various kinds of wood-work. At his death, four years ago, the work stopped, and the buildings are unused. It is an excellent water-privilege. There was a grist-mill with the old saw-mill before 1820, as D. P. Hewitt states. About a mile above, on the site of Higgins' works, was also a saw-mill of early times. Lyman G. Higgins now has a basket manufactory and a saw-mill. Next above is Ringville water-privilege. This was improved by the sons of the pioneer Ring many years ago,—Elkanah Ring and Thomas Ring. First there was a grist-mill older than 1820 probably. This was changed into a manufactory of window-curtains made of wooden strips, and then to that of children's carriages. The property is now owned by Cole & Hayden, and their line of work is that of children's sleds and wagons.

At Ringville, also, on Watt's stream, a tributary flowing in at that point, was the site of a saw-mill; building still there, but dilapidated and unused. Farther up on Watt's stream was an old saw-mill, on the present Winslow property; went down perhaps thirty-five years ago. On the other branch of Little River, known on the maps as Ward's Creek, below Mr. Eager's meadow, was the earliest saw-mill in town, according to Bisbee's historical address,—a water-privilege that must have been improved one hundred and twelve or one hundred and fourteen years ago, but of which scarcely a trace remains at the present time.

On the middle branch of the Westfield, in the southwest part of the town, is the saw-mill and turning-shop of George Miller. These are upon the site of a still older saw-mill, dating back many years. The Miller buildings were damaged by the freshet of December, 1878. Mr. Miller, though in Worthington, is so shut in by the hills to the east that his route of business is the other way, mostly into Middlefield and Chester. On the tributary of the middle branch flowing in from the northeast, at the corner of Middlefield, there are not known to have been any mill privileges improved. On Fuller's Brook from the northwest, flowing in near the school-house, is the site of an abandoned saw-mill—not used for thirty or forty years—owned by one Smith. On the middle branch, above the school-house, is the steam saw-mill of F. M. Knapp, built within two or three years.

At West Worthington Falls was formerly an ancient saw-mill on the east side. This was bought some years ago by O. B. Parish, and afterward abandoned. He then built on the west side, about fifteen years ago, and opened a manufactory of picker-sticks and loom-fixtures generally. These works are still run by Mr. Parish.

At West Worthington Falls was an ancient grist-mill,—gone before 1820,—owned by the grandfather of O. B. Parish; old mill-stones still there. At that point was the Watson tannery in 1820, doing a large business; lasted for many years, but was finally abandoned. It was on the east side of the stream. A short distance above is the bedstead-factory established by Bartlett & Jones, perhaps thirty-two years ago, now owned and run by David Jones & Son. Above, north of the village, is the saw-mill, and also the grist-mill, owned by J. N. & H. Benton. These were owned by Spencer Parish, 1820 and earlier. He sold to Capt. Gaylord; Gaylord to Adams; Adams to the Bentons. Spencer Parish built them. On the same site was a saw-mill once owned by John Parish.

East of Bentons' mills, on the old stage-road, was the extensive tannery of Clark & Bardwell, located in the "Hollow," so called. This was 1820 to 1830. This was not a financial success, and Clark afterward established another on or near the site of the mills of Jones & Son. The Andrew B. Medberry tannery was also noted at an early day. It was opposite the present works of O. B. Parish. Near Worthington Corners, in the valley, was an old tannery. Extensive potash-works were carried on at that point by Col. Ward. Earlier than that Mills & Wetmore were in business at that point; no buildings there now. A brick-yard was formerly run (1800 to 1820) in the south part of the town, near where Mr. Simeon Merritt now lives.

More blacksmith-shops were maintained at an early day than now. In 1820 five were doing a good business,—Jonah Brewster, William Rice, Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Drake, and Deacon Todd. In 1878 there were barely two.

Distilleries were common in early times. In 1820 there were three in town,—those of Jonah Brewster, John Stone, Jr., and Elijah Drury.

For these facts concerning the mills and general business we are indebted to Horace Cole, Col. Oren Stone, and D. P. Hewitt. The latter, coming to Worthington in 1820, has been closely identified with the business of the town, and thoroughly conversant with public affairs. For many years he was deputy-sheriff, and it is said a criminal seldom or never escaped when Hewitt once had a warrant for him.

The ten leading articles of farm production for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values stated: Butter, $17,974; hay, $36,928; manure, $7820; firewood, $6609; maple-sugar, $7669; milk, $41,976; beef, $8546; potatoes, $8213; pork, $4607; apples, $2874.

MILITARY.

Worthington was not settled early enough to be included in the era of Indian warfare. The scenes of savage slaughter, and the ever-brooding fear of sudden attack that hung like a cloud over the earlier towns had all passed away before the first hardy adventurers settled upon the hills of Worthington. They, however, were immediately called to face the questions involved in the opening troubles of the Revolution, as shown in the following extracts from the records:

June 28, 1774.—At a town-meeting called for the purpose of "considering the alarming circumstances of the times," Capt. Ebenezer Leonard was chosen moderator. Deacon Nathan Leonard, Dr. Moses Morse, Nahum Eager, Capt.

Nathaniel Daniels, and Mr. Thomas Kinne were appointed a committee of correspondence. Then voted to adjourn three weeks, but no meeting at that time is recorded.

Sept. 20, 1774.—Voted to raise fifteen pounds for a town stock of ammunition, "such as powder, flints, and balls."

Sept. 27, 1774.—Voted to have the 7th and 8th articles of the Hampshire County Congress to be the rule of our conduct.

Nov. 15, 1774.—Voted to dissolve the former covenant relating to the non-impatriation agreement, to have it null and void. Voted a committee of inspection to put in force the resolutions of the Provincial Congress of October 21. Committee, Moses Morse, Thomas Kinne, Nathaniel Daniels. Voted to pay the Province money into the hands of Henry Gardner, of Stowe, and the collector was promised indemnity in case of any trouble arising therefrom.

Nov. 15, 1774.—Chose Nahum Eager delegate to the Provincial Congress to meet Nov. 22, 1774.

In the warrant for a meeting dated Jan. 23, 1775, are these clauses: "To see if the town will accept of and enforce the execution of the By-Laws of the Provincial Congress;" "To see if the town will send one or more delegates to the Provincial Congress to meet at Cambridge, Feb. 1, 1775;" "To see if the town will do anything to encourage the learning of military discipline for the number of men recommended by the Provincial Congress;" "To see how much money the town will vote for each day and each half day for those who instruct themselves in the military art;" "To see if the town will choose a committee to receive donations for the poor of Boston, as is recommended by the Provincial Congress." All these seem to have been passed by or voted down.

The town fathers evidently moved cautiously, but still were ready for every necessary patriotic work, as the event fully proved.

The last town-meeting called "in his Majesty's name" seems to have been Jan. 23, 1775. They are then called simply by the selectmen. "The State of Massachusetts Bay" is recognized first in the town records Feb. 25, 1777, when the committee of inspection fixed the price of labor and grain, and provisions generally.

April 2, 1778.—Voted unanimously by 111 votes to disapprove the constitution agreed upon by the General Court.

May 11, 1778.—Voted to raise $120 to purchase clothing for the army.

July 8, 1779.—Doctor Moses Morse was chosen a delegate to attend the convention called at Concord for July 14th. Dr. Moses Morse, Capt. Nathaniel Daniel, Stephen Fitch, John Skiff, Seth Sylvester, were chosen as committee of correspondence and safety.

Aug. 17, 1779.—Voted two delegates to Cambridge,—Dr. Moses Morse and Seth Sylvester.

Aug. 31, 1779.—Voted but one delegate,—Seth Sylvester. Was this a round-about process by which they set aside Dr. Morse and substituted Mr. Sylvester?

Nov. 3, 1779.—Voted to raise 600 pounds as a tax, to pay for 12 blankets, and pay mileage and bounties for ye soldiers last raised, and other necessary charges.

June 22, 1780.—Voted to raise 200 pounds Continental money as a bounty to each soldier, and make them up three pounds a month, including their Continental pay, estimating wheat at 5 shillings per bushel, rye at 3 shillings, and Indian corn at two shillings 6 pence.

July 17, 1780.—Voted that the two last soldiers for six months for this town have the same bounty that the first nine had, and that 600 pounds be raised for that purpose. Voted that each of the soldiers raised for three months have one hundred and fifty pounds as bounty, to be paid to them in two months from the date hereof. Voted that the Selectmen be empowered to purchase the Horses sent for by the Court to this town, by giving their security in behalf of the town, if they may not be had on the terms ordered by the Court, June 23, 1780.

Jan. 2, 1781.—Voted to pay the soldiers raised in July last, for the time they serve, three pounds a month, including their Continental pay.

Jan. 31, 1781.—Voted to raise 8 men to serve in the Continental army three years,—Nahum Eager, Capt. Ebenezer Webber, John Skiff, Lieut. Constant Webber, Seth Sylvester, Lieut. Timothy Meech, Ensign John Kinne, and Robert Day.

The committee could themselves have just filled the order.

Depreciated currency troubled the town fathers at that time, as appears:

July 30, 1781.—Voted that the Town treasurer should pay the Constables the whole or part of the old Continental money now in the Treasury, and take a receipt for the same obliging the repayment in the new emission at the rate of forty for one,—provided it shall answer at the State Treasurer's office, and if otherwise, to return it.

It is thus shown that earnest co-operation was given to the efforts of the committee of safety in Boston. The men capable of bearing arms—as shown from other sources than the records—were directed to meet for the choice of military officers, and were encouraged to study the military art. Immediately after the battle of Lexington, 71 men from Worthington and Ashfield marched to Cambridge. Ebenezer Webber, of Worthington, was captain of the company, while the lieutenants, Samuel Allen and Samuel Bartlett, were from Ashfield.

From this time, through all the war, no town in this section of country was more thoroughly drained of men, money, and material than Worthington. In 1780, as seen in the records given, when there came a requisition for horses, which actually could not be supplied, because they did not have them, the people then voted to give the security of the town for the price of the horses, if they could be found elsewhere. In some of the later years of the war (1779-82), such was the number of men absent in the army that there were not more than 10 or 12 men to attend church on the Sabbath from some 70 families.

It is not probable that a perfect list can now be made of those who served in the war of the Revolution from this town. The following names are preserved: Samuel Dewey, Barnabas Clapp, Lemuel Clapp, Isaac Clapp, Stephen Clapp, Gershom Randall, Samuel Buffington, Nathaniel Daniels, Jr., John Daniels, Samuel Daniels, Dan Daniels, Jeremiah Kinne, Samuel Cole, Daniel Goodman, Gershom Brown, John Howard, David Woods, Samuel Follett, Jonas Leonard, Asa Cottrell, Nicholas Cottrell, Samuel Pettengill, Elisha Brewster, Richard Briggs, Israel Burr, Roger Benjamin, Thomas Buck, Asa Jackson, Sylvanus Parsons, Moses Buck, Samuel Kingman, Alexander Kingman, Ephraim Parish, Timothy Meech, Asa Benjamin, John Stone, Nahum Eager, Lott Drake, Jonathan Ring, Rufus Marsh, Joseph Marsh, Jr., Joshua Morse. James C. Rice, in his history of Worthington, says of this period, when the men were so largely in the army:

"The females of many families worked on the farms of their husbands and brothers during the greater part of their absence in the war. Many plowed their own lands, sowed their grain, and planted and hoed their corn during the spring; in the summer and fall, gathered the hay and the harvests; in the winter months, fed and took care of the cattle in the barns, drove them to the brooks for water, and oftentimes yoked their oxen and went to the woods to cut the fuel necessary for their use."

The study of these noble sacrifices by the people of his native town no doubt inspired this heroic man, a few years later, to lay his own life—a rich and costly gift—upon the altar of union and freedom.

The people of Worthington shared to some extent in the disaffection existing at the time of the Shays rebellion, though there seems to be no evidence as to the number that actually joined "Shays' army." The insurgents, in making arrangements for raising troops, appointed at one time a large committee, of which Mr. Samuel Morse, of Worthington, was one. The town also sent to the celebrated Hatfield convention, under date of August 17, 1786, Lieut. Seth Sylvester and Lieut. Stephen Fitch. A committee to "instruct" them was also appointed,—Samuel Clapp, Constant Webster, Nathan Leonard, Ebenezer Webber, Samuel Buck, and Thomas Burch.

In 1812, Worthington was represented in the anti-war convention held at Northampton, July 14th, by Ezra Starkweather and Jonathan Brewster. The former was a member of the committee appointed to report in regard to the proper action of the convention.

A meeting was held at Northampton, Nov. 16, 1814, to consider the disastrous effect of the war, and to express an opinion upon the subject of a draft which it was supposed Congress was about to order. It resolved "that we view with indignation and unqualified disgust the project boldly avowed of introducing a military conscription,—a measure unauthorized by the Constitution, hostile to the existence of our liberties, and one to which we dare not submit, and will never yield obedience." And, as in the old Revolutionary times, a committee of safety was appointed, of which Hon. Ezra Starkweather of this town was a member, as he was also chairman of the convention. In the resolutions above mentioned the draft principle was declared "to be utterly subversive of the rights of the people and the distinct sovereignty of the States."

Were State rights ever more clearly avowed in South Carolina? With a public sentiment thus strong and uncompromising against the war policy of the administration enlistments did not occur in Worthington, and it is not known that any one from this town was in the regular army. Upon the call of Gov. Strong, however, for the defense of Boston, the following citizens of the town shared in that forty days' campaign: commissioned officers, William Ward, Wm. Rice; non-commissioned officers and privates, Thomas Hall, Joseph Starkweather, Nehemiah Tinker, Alfred Brown, John Cushing, Henry Warner, Timothy Parsons (still living, 1878), David Parsons, Luther Bartlett, Ezekiel Tower, Daniel Parish, James Hatch, Barnabas Anable, Perkins Fitch, Milton Brewster, William Brewster, Rufus Taylor, Obadiah Tower, Elijah Burr, Richard Briggs, Joseph Daily, Harvey Metcalf.

OFFICIAL ACTION DURING THE CIVIL WAR, 1861-65.

The first formal action by the town was taken May 20, 1861, when it was voted "to authorize the selectmen to borrow such sums of money as may be necessary to assist volunteers and their families when it is wanted to any amount not exceeding $2000."

Aug. 4, 1862.—Voted "to raise twelve hundred and fifty dollars to be paid to the ten volunteers called for from this town, being one hundred and twenty-five dollars each."

Aug. 28, 1862.—Voted "to raise by tax a sum sufficient to pay the nine months' volunteers one hundred dollars each."

Sept. 1, 1862.—Voted "that the treasurer be authorized to borrow a sufficient sum to pay each of the nine months' volunteers one hundred dollars until such time as the tax money be collected."

Sept. 29, 1862.—Voted "to authorize the treasurer to borrow one thousand dollars to pay one hundred and twenty dollars to each of the three years' volunteers."

Sept. 28, 1863.—Voted "to pay the town's proportion of the tax apportioned and assessed to reimburse sums paid as bounties to volunteers, agreeable to the 9th Section of the 218th Chapter of the Acts of the Legislature."

Sept. 12, 1864.—Voted "to raise one hundred and twenty-five dollars as bounty for each volunteer to be obtained on the quota of the town under the last call of the President."

May 22, 1865.—Voted "that the Treasurer be authorized and directed to borrow on the credit of the town the sum of $6563 for the purpose of refunding the several sums contributed by individuals, or sums that were obtained in any other way, which have been paid and applied for the purpose of filling the several quotas of the town of Worthington, agreeable to an act of the Legislature approved April 25, 1865."

This official record gives the facts, but only partially indicates the enthusiasm and the patriotic spirit in the hearts of the people. Brave sons of Revolutionary sires went forth to battle and to die for the flag of their fathers. Brave mothers and sisters and wives parted from their loved ones, bidding them God-speed in their heroic work. Worthington, according to the report made by the selectmen in 1866, furnished 86 men for the war, but Schouler's history states that the town filled all of the several quotas required, and had a surplus of nine over and above all demands, and must therefore have sent in all about 102 men. The list herewith added is given as corrected in Brewster's edition of Rice's history, and still further carefully examined at the present time, omitting substitutes hired abroad.

The amount of aid, paid solely by the town, was $4462. The assessed valuation in 1860 was $430,948, and the population of the town 1041. Aid to families afterward refunded by the State, 1861, $135.36; 1862, $932.37; 1863, $2053.01; 1864, $589.79; 1865, $687.89; total, $4398.42.

Liberal private contributions were made by the ladies and by citizens generally, which during all the years of the war were sent forward by various channels of benevolence to the aid of sick and wounded soldiers.

The army-list of the town may well be prefaced with the name of GEN. JAMES C. RICE, a native of Worthington, the son of William Rice, and the author of a history of the town. A graduate of Yale College in 1854, he studied law and settled in New York City. When the war broke out he immediately entered the army. He was commissioned second lieutenant, and appointed adjutant of the 39th New York Regiment, known as the "Garibaldi Guards." He was early promoted captain for meritorious service; was in the battle of Bull Run in 1861; appointed lieutenant-colonel of the 44th New York Regiment, the "Ellsworth Regiment;" he was promoted colonel, and was actively engaged through all the seven days' battles before Richmond. In command of a brigade at Gettysburg, he soon after received a commission as brigadier-general, for gallant and skillful conduct of the forces under him. He is said to have been in twenty battles, and was killed at Spotsylvania, at the close of a day of desperate fighting. Well might his friend and townsman, C. K. Brewster, Esq., the author of a revised edition of Rice's history, say of him: "New York proudly claims him among her honored dead. We, too, claim him with a just pride; here lie buried his ancestors; here he was born and reared; here is the work of his hand, telling the history of our fathers; but his greatest work was his country's; his death, a nation's loss; his march was the march of a hero; he has halted to rest and bivouacked for eternity.

"Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking;
Dream of battle-fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking."

SOLDIERS' RECORD, WAR OF 1861-65.

John J. Bisbee, enl. July 16, 1864, 42d M. V. M., Co. H; died Oct. 30, 1864, at Alexandria, Va. The only one of his company who did not survive his enlistment.

Russell H. Conwell, capt., enl. Oct. 15, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863; re-enl.; app. capt. 2d Regt., H. Art.

William C. Higgins, corp., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.

Daniel N. Cole, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. to re-enl. May 30, 1863, 2d Regt., H. Art.; died July 29, 1865, at Smithville, N. C.

Seth Cole, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.

Charles H. Conwell, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.

Charles Adams, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. D; was a prisoner; disch. March 26, 1863, for disab.; re-enl. 4th Cav.; served to the end of the war.

Edmund T. Drake, corp., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; pro. 2d lieutenant, May 15, 1865; disch. June 26, 1865; robbed of $400 in Springfield on his return; made up in part by citizens.

Abel C. Kenney, sergt., enl. Dec. 24, 1863, 27th Inf., Co. A; died a prisoner in Blackshire, Ga.

Wm. W. Ward, sergt., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 6, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. sergt. in 52d Regt., Co. C, and served full term.

Isaac C. Drake, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died June 27, 1863, at Newbern, N. C.

Jotham Drake, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died June 10, 1863, at Newbern, N. C.

Edwin Dodge, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.

Jonathan S. Higgins, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.

Elisha C. Tower, 1st lieutenant, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Charles D. Hollis, sergt., enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863; severely wounded; re-enl.

Cyrus M. Parsons, sergt., enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Alfred Kilbourn, corp., enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Castanus Brown, corp., enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Edwin N. Carr, corp., enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. to re-enl. May 30, 1863; enl. 2d H. Art., Co. A; disch. July 6, 1865; died in a few years of consumption.

Davis Bartlett, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Henry Benton, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Levi Blackman, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Ezra M. Brackett, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Uriah Brown, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Henry W. Burke, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Russell Bartlett, enl. July 31, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. I; was wounded; taken prisoner; escaped; disch. June 16, 1865.

Sereno G. Gloyd, enl. July 31, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. K; died Oct. 5, 1864, at Winchester, Va.

Ezra P. Cowles, 1st sergt., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died of wounds, April 9, 1865, at Sailors' Creek, Va.

Dorus Collier, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died Oct. 21, 1862, at Downsville, Md.

Danford Burleigh, enl. Jan. 25, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. E; trans. Sept. 30, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps; shot through the arm.

James K. Burr, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; died March 15, 1863, at Newbern, N. C., of typhoid fever.

William Cody, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Emerson B. Cushman, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. June 23, 1863, for disab.

Timothy Donohue, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. June 29, 1863.

Frank Quinn, corp., enl. Sept. 12, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; drowned Jan. 1, 1862, at Newbern, N. C.

Edgar C. Brewster, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. March 29, 1864.

Robert Canfield, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; died Oct. 23, 1863, at Washington, D. C.

Matthew C. Clair, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 23, 1863.

Samuel J. Dunning, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, Co. A; killed Mar. 14, 1862, at Newbern, N. C.; shot through the head.

O. S. Pomeroy, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Feb. 2, 1863, for disability.

John M. Kelley, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. May 30, 1863, for disability.

John D. Pease, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Dwight L. Prentiss, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Charles L. Randall, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; died June 23, 1863, at Newbern, N. C., of typhoid fever.

Hiram Russell, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; died June 30, 1863, at Beaufort, N. C., of typhoid fever.

Jerome Smith, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. June 23, 1863, for disability.

James Starkweather, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Anson F. Stevens, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863; was afterward commissioned in State militia as 1st lieutenant, and promoted to a captaincy.

George Thayer, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Lyman J. Tower, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. June 1, 1863, to re-enl. in 2d H. Art.

John Wright, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863.

Isaac L. Percival, enl. July 20, 1863, 32d Inf., Co. F; disch. June 29, 1865. The only man drafted from Worthington that entered the army; he served his full term.

Levi J. Olds, sergt., enl. May 30, 1863, 2d H. Art.; disch. Sept. 3, 1865; had previously served full term in 46th.

Edward Meacham, corp., enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 19, 1865.

Franklin Myers, enl. Jan. 2, 1864, 34th Inf., Co. D; died Feb. 28, 1865, at Annapolis, Md.

George A. Robinson, sergt., enl. July 31, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. K; disch. June 16, 1865.

Brainard E. Taylor, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; died April 17, 1865, at Andersonville, Ga.

James F. Thayer, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; died July 23, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.

Wm. B. Watts, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.

Ansel Adams, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. K; disch. April 5, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th Regt., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863; killed at home two or three years later by the fall of a tree.

Edward P. Meacham, enl. Sept. 25, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. K; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; died Oct. 20, 1864, of consumption, at home.

Miles G. Smith, enl. Oct. 1, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. K; disch. May 3, 1862, for disability.

Martin Sherman, enl. 15th Regt., Co. D.

Clarence P. Hewitt, enl. 27th Regt., Co. H; died July 22, 1865, of disease contracted in the army, having served full term of enlistment.

John C. Adams, q.m.-sergt., enl. 86th Illinois; died at Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 19, 1863.

Wm. W. Adams, enl. 61st Regt., Co. I, N. Y. Vol.; died at Alexandria, Va., Dec. 26, 1861.

John Q. Ring, enl. 2d Regt., Mass. H. Art.; died March 13, 1864, at Beaufort, N. C.

James Meacham was in the army; pro. to a captaincy, and was killed in South Carolina.

MIDDLEFIELD.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

By what law of association Middlefield was made a part of the present county of Hampshire is a problem requiring some thought. And yet in the old times, before the era of railroads, the people of Middlefield traveled north to the Albany stage-route and then to Northampton as easily as to any other county-seat, and now by means of the railroads they reach Northampton conveniently. Middlefield is bounded north by Berkshire County and Worthington; east by Worthington and Hampden County; south by Hampden County and Berkshire County; west by Berkshire County. It is thus wellnigh surrounded by portions of counties other than the one to which it belongs. The town has a farm acreage of 13,436 acres, as stated by the census of 1875.

Middlefield was formed from portions of Worthington, Chester, Becket, Washington, Peru; to this was added the tract known as Prescott's Grant, not previously included, as it appears, within the limits of an organized town. Middlefield was therefore the result of a rearrangement of older towns, the earliest centres of town business not accommodating the settlers upon this territory. As a compromise they organized a new town upon this middle ground, and perhaps it thus received its name. The title, generally speaking, is of course traced to the same source as the towns from which the portions were taken. Prescott's Grant, from the language of the act of incorporation, must have touched the west border of the town and extended eastward. Mr. Alexander Ingham supposes it to have been a triangle of 800 or 1000 acres, the base at the west and the sharp angle extending to the east and just including the place of Mr. Charles Wright, north of the centre. Middlefield is twenty-four miles from Northampton, the county-seat.

NATURAL FEATURES.

Middlefield is a mountainous town, for the term "hilly" fails to express the facts of the surface. There are three, and it may be thought correct to say four, ranges, nearly parallel, extending through the town from northwest to southeast, and about an equal number of streams may be noted threading their way through the valleys. The west branch of the Westfield River, along which the Boston and Albany Railroad makes its way through the mountains, forms the south line of the town for some distance. Factory Brook makes a junction at the railroad station; Cole's Brook, some distance to the west. The middle branch of the Westfield River, flowing from the distant northern towns of the county, forms the eastern line of Middlefield, receiving from the town three tributaries, two of them named upon the maps, Tuttle's Brook and Den Stream. Flowing from the slopes of the central range of hills is one small brook, known by the people as "Tan-House Stream."

The geological formation is especially interesting. The serpentine deposit on the borders of Chester and Middlefield is one of the most noted in the State.

EARLY SETTLEMENT, SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

Upon the territory now constituting Middlefield, the first settlers are said to have been Mr. Rhodes and John Taggart. The former established his pioneer home where Clark B. Wright now resides. It is understood that this was in the year 1773, and that he built a grist-mill not long after, the first in the town. Mrs. Root states that her father, David Mack, soon after coming here, worked for Mr. Rhodes. The Rhodes family probably moved from town in a few years, and the place was sold to James Nooney (or Noney), and by him to the ancestor of the present Wright family. The same year, 1773, is mentioned as the date of John Taggart's settlement. He located some distance from Rhodes, in the valley of the Factory stream, and on the alluvial flats now covered by the reservoir. There is but little known concerning him. It is presumed he died at an early day. In the formation of one school district Taggart's Brook is mentioned, which was no doubt the old name for Factory stream.

This same year, 1773, is given, in the published history of Col. Mack, as the date when he purchased his land in this place. It is further stated that he came here in 1774, cleared two acres of land, and built a log house; removed the next year, and harvested a bountiful crop of grain from his two acres sowed the fall before. Mrs. Root, a daughter of David Mack, still living at the centre, says there were eight families here when her father settled. This refers probably to 1775. Besides Taggart and Rhodes, Samuel Taylor was probably here, and Josiah Leonard. The others were, perhaps, Timothy McElwain, Solomon Ingham, Joseph Blish, and Matthew Smith, and yet there may have been twenty others from whom a part of the eight should be selected.

The early town-meetings of Worthington, from 1768 to 1783, give little or no clue to names upon the present territory of Middlefield. This southwest corner was to the people of the centre of Worthington pretty much an unknown land. After the settlement of David Mack, 1775, others came in rapidly, and most of them from Connecticut. There are said to have been sixty-eight families when the town was organized, eight years later.

With so many to assist each other, the worst hardships of frontier life were soon mitigated; yet it cost labor and courage and perseverance to carve out homes for their families upon the hills and in the valleys. The howl of wild animals was still in these woods; provisions were scarce; there was little to sell and few to buy. Yet these hardy men of old successfully met all these difficulties, cleared their farms, educated their children, founded the institutions of religion, and transmitted to the present age an inheritance of Christian integrity solid as the everlasting rocks upon which their farms rested. This town, like others upon these mountain slopes, became a nursery where were trained strong men and women, who in due time moved on, like their fathers before them, to settle newer and still newer lands; carrying with them the church, the school-house, and the principles enshrined therein, and planting them all along the great highway of advancing civilization from the East to the West,—from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Some of the families remained here only a short time, and of their settlement but little is now known. Others abided in the homes they had made in the wilderness, their children succeeded them in the affairs of the church and of the town, and those of the third generation are now training their children, in some cases upon the same farms and in the same dwellings. Happy will they be who are now in the school or at the fireside of the ancestral home, if they drink in the brave, heroic spirit of these early pioneers, their earnest purpose and their Christian faith. Then will they know the sublime truth,

"That life is earnest, life is real,
And the grave is not its goal."

NOTES UPON THE FAMILIES OF THE EARLY SETTLERS.

Mr. Rhodes. Holland's "History" mentions him as one of the first two settlers, and gives the date as about 1773; homestead in the "Den," where C. B. Wright now lives. He sold out at an early day; little is known in Middlefield concerning him. John Taggart was the other settler mentioned as coming at the same date as Mr. Rhodes, in 1773. His homestead was in the valley, above the factories. John Ford is said to have built the first saw-mill, in 1780; homestead below the factories a mile, where Leach's mill stood in later years, until swept away by the freshet of 1874. Malachi Loveland, homestead two miles south of the village, on land now owned by Orrin Pease; buildings gone. Among his children were Andrus, Payne, Malachi, Mrs. William Taylor, Mrs. Campbell Chester, Mrs. Partridge Worthington. Amasa Graves, homestead south, now owned by Dwight Graves, a grandson. Children: Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Timothy Graves, Erastus, who went West; Nathan, to New York; Amasa, to Middlefield; Stephen, on the homestead; Mrs. Payne Loveland. Thomas Blossom, homestead on land now owned by Matthew Smith, east of the village. House moved, and now the dwelling of John L. Bell. Among his children were Thomas, Middlefield; Rowland, Middlefield; William, Canandaigua, N. Y.; one daughter, Mercy. Enos Blossom. His family removed from town in a few years. He opened the first tavern on the Arnold Pease place, when he soon after exchanged places with Ephraim Sheldon. Mrs. Root states that Sheldon came from Feeding Hills, and that Mr. Blossom went there.

Solomon Ingham, from Hebron, the first town clerk; homestead on land now owned by Milton Smith; buildings abandoned. Children: Solomon, Jr., Indiana; Polly (Mrs. Andrus Loveland), New York; Daniel, New York, afterward Michigan; Mehitable (Mrs. Abner Wing), Hinsdale; Tryphena (Mrs. Zera Wing), Hinsdale; Alexander, still living, eighty-two years of age, and acting postmaster at the centre. To the latter we are indebted for much valuable information embodied in this sketch of the town.

Thomas Bolton was one of the founders of the church, in 1783, but must have removed at an early day. James Dickson, homestead half a mile north of the centre, where Orrin Pease now lives. Of his children, John settled in Middlefield; Joseph, in Washington Co., N. Y.; James, in Middlefield; Alexander, in Middlefield; Mrs. Russell Gillett, Mrs. Eggleston, Mrs. Uriah Church, Mrs. Wm. Church, Mrs. Isaac Gleason, Mrs. Comstock. Eliakim Wardwell, homestead where Lewis Carroll now resides. There was one son, Dennis Wardwell. James Noney bought the farm of the first settler, Rhodes, but sold out to Nathan Wright and went to Chester. Samuel Jones, one of the first selectmen; homestead present place of George Bell. John Jones, perhaps a brother of Samuel, above mentioned. He lived at the gambrel-roofed house, afterward Dr. Coleman's residence. John Newton, homestead present place of Henry Sternagle. Of his children, William settled in Albany; Amasa went West; Milton, to Albany; Ambrose, Middlefield; Asa, a physician of Illinois; a daughter, Lucy, died young. Daniel Chapman, the first town treasurer; homestead present place of Charles Wright. Family removed to Pittsfield at an early day. Job Robbins, one of the first selectmen; from Attleborough; homestead two miles east of the present place of Jacob Robbins, a grandson. The father of Jacob was Job, Jr.

Benjamin Eggleston. He notified the first town-meeting, 1788; homestead two miles west, on land now owned by Henry Ferris, where there are the ruins of a brick house.

Among the children were Martin, Joseph, Betsey, Susanna, Chauncey, Achsah, Harriet; all went to Ohio soon after 1800. Anson Cheeseman and Abel Cheeseman were two brothers. They removed at an early day; are thought to have been natives of Hinsdale. Benajah Jones, homestead two miles south from the centre, where James Granger now lives. There was one son of the same name. The family left town at an early day.

Timothy McElwain, from East Windsor, Conn., homestead present residence of Jonathan McElwain. Children: Timothy, settled in Hinsdale; Anna (Mrs. John Shapley), New York; Jane, died young; Alexander, settled in New York; James, Ohio; George W., Middlefield; Sally (Mrs. Solomon Hatch), New York; Betsey (Mrs. John Hatch), New York; David, settled in Becket; Jennette (Mrs. Lewis Taylor), Middlefield; Jonathan, on the old homestead (father of the present Jonathan); Laura (Mrs. Reuben Smith). The family have some papers which indicate that their ancestors came in 1771, which would be earlier than the date assigned to Rhodes and Taggart by two years. The papers do not, however, decide the date of settlement clearly.

Benjamin Blish, homestead northeast part of the town. Joseph Blish, homestead at the centre, where the Widow Newton now lives. Children: Oliver, settled in Middlefield, on the old homestead, and was the well-known tavern-keeper; Joseph, in Bennington, Vt.; Amasa (father of William D., recently deceased), Middlefield; Mrs. John Smith, of Middlefield; Mrs. Little, of Peru. According to the usage of the younger families, this name is now written Blush, but the other is no doubt the family name of ancient times.

David Carrier, homestead two and a half miles south; family left town at an early day. Israel Bissell, homestead a mile or more east of the centre; removed to Hinsdale in a few years. Justice Bissell, homestead half a mile west of the Ford mill; buildings gone; land now owned by Hiram Taylor. Among the children were Justice, Blodgett, Horace, Barber, Roxy, Eunice, and Mrs. Isaiah Leach. Deacon Ingham states that Justice Bissell, Sr., was a carpenter, and framed the barn upon the old Solomon Ingham place.

Matthew Smith, in town very early; homestead now owned by M. J. Smith. Children: Azariah, Manlius, N. Y.; Matthew, Jr. (father of Mrs. Charles Wright), Middlefield; John, died young; Samuel (father of four sons, who graduated at college, and two daughters, at Mount Holyoke), Middlefield; Joseph, Manlius, N. Y.; Anna (Mrs. Clark Martin), Washington: Mr. Martin dying, she afterward became Mrs. Daniel Root, Middlefield; Asenath, died young.

Timothy Allen, from East Windsor, Conn., homestead where Henry Raymond lives, near the cemetery. Children: Noadiah, Hosea, Spencer, and David; family went to Westfield. Erastus Ingham, came in 1779, was a brother of Solomon Ingham, from Hebron, Conn.; homestead where his grandson James Ingham now lives. Children: Erastus John (father of E. J.), Middlefield; Samuel and William, twins, the former settling in New York, the latter in Middlefield, and afterward West; Mrs. Amos Mack, Middlefield; Mrs. Reuben Blossom.

Bissell Phelps, homestead east of the centre. John Spencer, homestead west, on the present Ferris farm. Children: John, of Middlefield; Samuel, went West; Selden, Hinsdale; Brainard, went West; Susan (Mrs. Little), Ohio; and another daughter, Sally. (A daughter of John, Jr., is Mrs. John L. Bell.) In the family of John, Sr., there were other children, Oliver, George, Anna.

Ebenezer Emmons, homestead where Milton Smith now resides. Children: Ebenezer, the distinguished naturalist; Polly (Mrs. Justice Browning), Lenox; Amanda (Mrs. Timothy Root); Mrs. Hamilton, of Hartford; and Mrs. S. U. Church. Josiah Leonard, homestead where the old parsonage stood before it was removed to the village; the family went West at an early day. Nathan Wright, from Chester, 1798, homestead where C. B. Wright now resides (a grandson). Children: Nathan, Jr., who settled on the old homestead; Amos, who died young; Jesse, who settled on the present place of Mr. Howe, in the same neighborhood; Mrs. Dan Pease, Middlefield; Mrs. Job Robbins, Middlefield; Mrs. Thomas Durant, Pittsfield; Mrs. Milton Johnson, Becket. Dr. William Coleman, homestead given elsewhere. Children: William, Lyman, the well-known minister and author of religious works; Sarah, married in Ohio; and one daughter unmarried.

Samuel Taylor, a very early resident, coming from Pittsfield, among probably the first three or four settlers; homestead on lands now owned by Byron Haskell; buildings gone. Children: Lewis, seven years a soldier of the Revolution; William, who settled two miles west of the centre and afterward went to Ohio; Samuel; Mrs. Malachi Loveland.

Thomas Durant, from Boston, settled where Harry Meacham now resides. Children: Nancy (Mrs. Amasa Blush), Middlefield; William, settled in Albany; Edward, in New York; Polly (Mrs. Wheeler), New York; Sally (Mrs. William Newton), Albany; Betsey (Mrs. Walter Tracy), Pittsfield; Thomas, Pittsfield; Clark, Albany and New York City. The wife of Thomas Durant, Sr., lived to be one hundred and one years and six months; she used to tell her children and grandchildren about hearing the cannon at the battle of Bunker Hill; her husband was in the army of the Revolution.

Uriah Church, homestead a mile north of the centre, where Edward Graves now resides. Children: Uriah, Jr. (father of the five brothers, Sumner U., James T., Lyman, William F., and Oliver); James, who settled on the homestead (father of Tallmadge B., Dr. James U.); Mrs. Munyan, Northampton; Mrs. John Ward, of Middlefield; William L., of Peru; Henry C., of Middlefield.

William Church, a brother of the pioneer Uriah, homestead a half mile west of the centre, on land now owned by Henry Hawes; buildings abandoned. Children: Green, settled on the homestead; William and Warren, both in Middlefield; one daughter, Mrs. Horace Bissell.

Elisha Mack was the father of Col. David Mack; he came here some eight or ten years after his son; his homestead was where Charles Combs now lives; of his children, besides "the faithful steward," may be mentioned Capt. Elisha, who settled on present place of Mr. Ferguson, and moved away at an early day; Mrs. Oliver Blush, Mrs. Abel Cheeseman, and John, the long-time merchant of Plainfield.

David Mack, the well-known merchant of whom the tract was written entitled "The Faithful Steward." Homestead the present place of Byron Haskell. His first log cabin, erected in 1774, stood at the north end of the old garden, north of the present house. His frame dwelling was erected six years later. His wife was Mary Talcott, of Hebron, Conn. Children: Mary (Mrs. Ebenezer Emmons), Middlefield; Lois (Mrs. Jacob Robbins), Warren, N. Y.; David (known as Gen. Mack), Middlefield and Amherst; Mindwell (Mrs. Ichabod Emmons), Hinsdale; John Talcott, Hinsdale; Elisha, lawyer and judge, Salem, Mass.; Anna (Mrs. Isaac Clark), Becket; Phebe (Mrs. Uriah Church, Jr.), Middlefield; Zilpha (Mrs. Azariah Smith), Manlius, N. Y.; Lucy (Mrs. Selden Spencer), Hinsdale; Hannah (Mrs. George McElwain), Middlefield; Abigail (Mrs. Wm. Elder), Homer, N. Y.; Laura (Mrs. Solomon Root), Middlefield. The latter is still living at the age of eighty-four, with intellect undimmed, a rare specimen of active, vigorous old age. To her we are indebted for many particulars respecting the history of Middlefield. She states that her father's family were probably never all at home together. She remembers the ten daughters being at home once, and all attended meeting together.

Dan Pease, homestead present place of John Williams. His father's name was Israel. The children of Dan were Dan Pease, Jr., of Worthington; Sally (Mrs. Harvey Root); Mary, died unmarried; Walter, Stephentown; Sybil (Mrs. Ebenezer Smith), Middlefield; Eldredge, Middlefield; Morgan, Middlefield; Amanda (Mrs. George Crane), Washington; Arnold, Middlefield; Harriet (Mrs. Hezekiah Taylor), Westfield; Laura A. (Mrs. Wm. Stevens), Chester.

Sergeant Thomas Root, from Somers, Conn.; homestead the present place of Wm. Alderman. Only a part of the children came to Middlefield. Solomon, homestead where Daniel Alderman now lives. Capt. Daniel Root, on his father's place. Mrs. Green Church, Middlefield; Mrs. John Metcalf, Middlefield; Mrs. John Spencer, Middlefield; Mrs. Nial Little, of Becket. The sons of Solomon were Solomon, Jr., Harvey, and Selden, Middlefield; Nathan, of Chester, and Timothy. Daughters, Mrs. Dan Pease, Worthington; Mrs. Elder, of Ohio. The sons of Capt. Daniel Root were Daniel and Sylvester, of Pennsylvania; Justin, Greenfield; Eliakim, of Middlefield. Daughters, Mrs. Asa Smith, Middlefield, and Mrs. Oliver Smith; Mrs. Daniel Alderman and Mrs. Collins, Middlefield; Mrs. Wm. Fay, Chester.

Mr. Churchill was an early pioneer; homestead in the Wright neighborhood. He was a Revolutionary soldier, and left two sons, Giles and Charles, and one died young. The family name has been identified with that section of the town to the present time.

Calvin Smith came in 1788, from East Haddam, Conn.; settled on the present Thompson place, so called. He bought a tract of 400 acres, and subsequently increased it to 1500. Children: Temperance, died young; Asa, settled in Middlefield; Hannah (Mrs. Daniel Ingham), Michigan; Orrin, Middlefield; Oliver, still living, aged eighty-five, in Middlefield (father of Clarkson Smith); Mrs. Wm. Ingham, Cato, N. Y.; Obadiah, Middlefield; Ambrose, on the homestead; Ebenezer, Middlefield. One daughter died young.

The pioneers, Calvin and Matthew, were brothers.

Intentions of marriage,—the first according to the order in which they are recorded in the town book:

Sept. 10, 1783.—These may certify all whom it doth or may concern that John Crane, of Beckett, and Hannah Bissell, of Middlefield, have been published according to law.

By me, SOLOMON INGHAM, Town Clerk.

May 24, 1784.—Then the intentions of marriage between Moses Eggleston and Mary Dickson have been published according to law, both of Middlefield.

Attest, SOLOMON INGHAM, Town Clerk.

June 6, 1784.—Then the intention of marriage between William Taylor and Priscilla Loveland, both of Middlefield, were published according to law, by SOLOMON INGHAM, Town Clerk.

The first deaths, in the order they are recorded in the town book, are the following:

May 24, 1783.—Died, Ens. Elisha Mack, in the fifty-sixth year of his age.

April 12, 1784.—Died, a child of Ephraim Sheldon and Miriam his wife, being about one day old.

Jan. 8, 1785.—Daniel Ingham, son of Solomon Ingham and Mary his wife, died.

April 1, 1785.—Samuel Robbins, son of Job Robbins and Cynthia his wife, died.

July 19, 1778.—James Bates, son of Oliver Bates and Rachel his wife.

John Taylor died July 16, 1786.

Ann Jones, wife of Samuel Jones, died May 14, 1788.

Elizabeth, wife of Benjamin Thomas, died Nov. 15, 1790.

MERCHANTS.

David Mack was the first merchant in the town. It sounds a little humorous in these times of quick transit to New York and Boston to read in the old accounts of Mr. Mack that he went twice a year to Westfield to purchase his assortment of goods, and that they were mostly transported on horseback. He was undoubtedly a man of unusual force of character, unquestioned integrity, and devoted piety. His early education was so limited that he attended school with his own children, spelled in the class with his six-year-old son, who was once very proud of getting above his father. He began life not only ignorant, but poor, yet by prudence, steady toil, and economy he amassed wealth, and expended it largely for the purposes of Christian benevolence. He wielded much influence, filled many public offices, and died at last, full of years and honors, at the ripe age of ninety-four. His history was many years ago written in the form of a tract, and has been scattered widely over the world by the American Tract Society.

Mr. Mack began in a small way at first, keeping a few goods for sale in the chamber of his dwelling-house. The statement in the tract quoted above, that he brought his goods twice a year from Westfield, must refer only to this commencement. Mrs. Root says that the goods were brought generally from Hartford. Mr. Mack built an addition to his dwelling-house, and this was his place of trade for many years. His wealth was acquired not wholly by this one store, but by "branching out," establishing stores in other towns, and doing a very large business.

A new store was built near his dwelling, where his son, Gen. David Mack, traded for some years, and perhaps David Mack, Sr., was in partnership for a time. This building was afterward removed to the corner at the village, and Gen. Mack traded there until his removal to Amherst. Solomon Root and his son, Solomon F., also traded in that building, and several others. In later years Matthew Smith was the merchant at the corner. The store is now kept by Joseph Ingham, grandson of the early pioneer, Solomon Ingham, and it is the regular successor of the David Mack store, first opened ninety to ninety-five years ago, up-stairs, at the present house of Byron Haskell. Besides this store there was the old company store, at the place where Mrs. Root now lives in the village. This was established sixty or seventy years ago, and was not very successful. It was then run for a few years by Oren Smith, a son of one of the company. Solomon Root bought this and carried on the mercantile business there for some years, his son, Solomon F. (better known as Francis), being associated with him. Mrs. Root, who is thoroughly conversant with the trade of Middlefield both through her father and her husband as well as her son, gives a glowing description of the old times before the opening of railroads. Then this now quiet village was lively with the stir of trade and business: teams coming and going, farmers from Middlefield and from adjacent towns making all their purchases here, and selling large quantities of produce to the local merchants.

There was also opened some years ago the Church store, so called, at the centre, where Mr. Geer now lives. This was afterward changed to the Factory village, and is now carried on by John W. Crane.

TAVERNS.

The first tavern was that of Enos Blossom, or if not the first it was very early, as a town-meeting was called at the "house of Enos Blossom, innholder, in 1784;" while "the house of David Mack, innholder," is not mentioned until 1786, although the dwelling-house of Mr. Mack is spoken of earlier than that of Blossom. The Blossom Tavern was where Arnold Pease now lives. David Mack built his frame house about six years after he came here,—that is, about 1781. A few years later he opened it for a tavern, and after it was repaired and improved by the addition of a piazza it was a handsome house for the old times. The well-known tavern at the centre, kept so long by Oliver Blush, was the present residence of Mrs. Newton. This was a favorite place with the public in the days of travel by stage and private conveyance, before the opening of the Boston and Albany Railroad. In the north part of the town was the tavern of Alexander Dickson, on the present Lyman Meacham place. There was also a tavern in the northeast part of the town, kept by Asa Smith. It was on a new stage-route, opened because of the destruction of the old by the work on the railroad, and which was abandoned after a short time, and the tavern closed. There has been no tavern in town for several years.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Wright was the earliest one to settle in Middlefield. He was a brother of the pioneer Nathan Wright. It is stated that the doctor lived where Arnold Pease does at the present time. He did not remain in town many years. Dr. William Coleman was the successor of Dr. Wright. He first lived in the gambrel-roofed house east of the village, and there his son was born, afterward the distinguished Rev. Lyman Coleman. Dr. Coleman afterward lived at the present place of Arnold Pease. This may indicate that he was here before the departure of Dr. Wright, and when the latter left Dr. Coleman bought his homestead. Dr. Coleman married after he came here, and practiced twenty-five or thirty years; removed to Hartford, afterward to Pittsfield, and died there. Dr. Joseph Warren was for a long time the only physician in Middlefield. He spent his professional life, extending to thirty-five or forty years, and then returned in old age to his native town, Ashfield. Dr. James Church (grandson of the pioneer Uriah and son of James) practiced for several years here in his native town. He had an extensive ride, was popular and successful. His useful and active life came to an end by accident. Riding down one of the steep hills of Peru, the harness broke; he was thrown from his wagon, his limbs broken, and so badly injured otherwise that he died in a short time.

Dr. Edwin Bidwell was a native of Monterey, Berkshire Co., and was a man of extensive education; went West, was actively engaged in Iowa, assisted largely in organizing and developing the school system of that State. Returning to Massachusetts, he practiced medicine in Middlefield, and when the late war broke out entered the army as assistant surgeon, was promoted, and served with distinction. After the war he practiced here for a time and then went to Vine-land, N. J. Dr. Underwood is spoken of as having been a physician here, for a time, of the school known as "Thomsonian;" was popular among the families that employed him, and went from here to Boston. Since the departure of Dr. Bidwell there has been no settled physician here, except that Dr. Wheeler, retiring from his former practice in other towns and locating here, occasionally practices.

These two notices are taken from old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

October 28, 1800, Titus Pomeroy, post-rider from Northampton to Middlefield, calls upon all to pay up, as he intends to discontinue his labors in this direction, another rider having established a route from Springfield to Middlefield.

David Mack, Jan. 25, 1798, calls upon all indebted to him to settle up, or the next call will be attended with cost. This is the "faithful steward" of the well-known religious tract.

ORGANIZATION.

As already shown, this town was constructed by uniting several portions of other towns. Middlefield became a necessity as the settlement of the country increased. In that portion taken from Worthington, the settlers were obliged to travel down into the valley of the Middle Branch, and out of it, climbing a series of hills to reach the place of worship or the place of business in that town. On the portion taken from Chester the people were suffering equal inconvenience; and so of the other portions. The movement to organize was evidently led by David Mack, whose enterprise and activity were contributing largely to settle this territory. He offered to undertake the work of a survey and an application to the General Court, his expenses to be refunded if he succeeded; if not, he was to pay them. The application does not appear to have been opposed; and the following records show the steps at the formation of the town. The full text of the law is given, as the boundaries and other matters stated are of considerable interest:

An act for erecting certain lands, hereafter described, into a town by the name of Middlefield, and annexing the whole to the county of Hampshire.

Whereas, the inhabitants of the southwest corner of Worthington, in the county of Hampshire, and the northwest corner of Murrayfield (now Chester), in the said county, and the northeast corner of Becket, the south side of Partridgefield, a part of Washington, and the inhabitants of Prescott's grant (so called), all in the county of Berkshire, have represented to this court the great difficulties and inconveniences they labor under in their present situation, and have requested that they may be incorporated into a town. Be it therefore enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in general court assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the said southwest corner of Worthington, in the county of Hampshire, and northwest corner of Chester, in the same county, and the northeast corner of Becket, the south side of Partridgefield, a part of Washington, and the land called Prescott's grant, all in the county of Berkshire, and bounded as follows, viz.: Beginning at an hemlock-tree standing on the river in Becket, directly south from the southwest corner of the said Prescott's grant, thence running north one thousand rods to a beech-tree, then north twelve degrees east, to the north side of the first square in Partridgefield, to a stake and stones; thence south seventy degrees east, nine hundred rods to a stake and stones; thence north one hundred and forty rods; thence east six hundred rods to the river at an hemlock-tree, a west point from Worthington meeting-house; thence down the said river to the place where the same crosses Worthington south line at an heart beam-tree; thence west, thirty-five degrees south, nine hundred and forty rods, to the place where the said river crosses Becket east line; thence up the said river to the first-intentioned bounds; with the inhabitants thereon, be, and hereby are, incorporated into a town by the name of Middlefield, and that the said town be, and hereby is, vested with all the powers, privileges, and immunities which the towns in this commonwealth do or may enjoy by the constitution and laws of the same; and the whole of the said town of Middlefield shall forever hereafter be considered as a part of the county of Hampshire; and be it further enacted, that John Kirkland, Esq., be, and he is, hereby empowered to issue his warrant to some principal inhabitant within the said town of Middlefield, requiring him to warn the inhabitants of said town, qualified to vote in town affairs, to assemble at some suitable time and place within the said town, for the purpose of choosing such officers as are necessary to manage the affairs of the said town; provided, nevertheless, that the inhabitants of the said town of Middlefield shall pay their proportionable share of such town, county, estate, and other taxes, as are already assessed on them by the respective towns to which they have belonged, and all public debts and duties which may be due and owing from the said town, until a tax shall be laid by the General Court upon the said town hereby incorporated.

This act passed March 12, 1783.

WARRANT FOR THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

To Mr. Benjamin Eggleston, of Middlefield, in the county of Hampshire, yeoman, greeting. In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are required to warn all the freeholders and other inhabitants of the said town of Middlefield qualified to vote in town affairs, to assemble and meet at the dwelling-house of Mr. David Mack, in said town, on Thursday, the 10th day of April, instant, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, in order to choose all the officers necessary to manage the affairs of said town, agreeably to an act of the General Court of said Commonwealth, passed the 12th day of March last. Hereof, fail not, and make return of this warrant with your doings thereon to myself before said meeting.

Given under my hand and seal, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, and in the seventh year of the Independence of America.

JOHN KIRKLAND, Justice of the Peace.

MINUTES OF THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

Agreeable to the above warrant, the inhabitants of said town of Middlefield met on the day above, said John Kirkland, Esq., presiding as Moderator in said meeting. The following officers were chosen: Solomon Ingham, Town Clerk; Samuel Jones, David Mack, Job Robbins, Selectmen and Assessors; Daniel Chapman, Town Treasurer; David Taylor, Constable; James Nony, William Church, Wardens; Anson Cheeseman, Amasa Graves, Tythingmen; Benajah Jones, Timothy McElwain, James Dickson, John Jones, Surveyors of Highways; Benjamin Blush, Enos Blossom, Fence-Viewers; William Church, Sealer of Weights and Measures; John Jones, Sealer of Leather; Thomas Blossom, Pound-Keeper; Elnathan Taylor, Samuel Gould, Hog-Reeves.

April 24, 1783.—Voted that the town will raise a sum of money to mend the highways. Voted that two days' work be done by each person on the roads, and an equal proportion on the estates, the year ensuing. Voted to allow those persons who have no roads to work where they expect to have roads under the direction of the surveyors. Voted that the money paid by men to get the town incorporated be refunded them on their exhibiting their accounts.

May 28, 1783.—Voted that the pound for this town be David Mack's yard, near his barn.

At a meeting first Monday in October, 1783, voted to accept grain for the remainder of the town rate, allowing rye at 3s. per bushel, Indian corn at 2s. 6d. Voted David Mack, Samuel Jones, and Daniel Chapman be a committee to receive said grain, and the collectors to receive from taxpayers receipts from the above committee.

At the first regular "March meeting," held on the first day of the month, 1784, chose Mr. David Mack, Moderator; Solomon Ingham, Town Clerk; Samuel Jones, David Mack, Job Robbins, Selectmen and Assessors; Daniel Chapman, Town Treasurer; Anson Cheeseman, Constable; John Jones, Joseph Blush,

Wardens; David Carrier, Timothy McElwain, Tythingmen; Uriah Church, John Dickson, James Nony, Amasa Graves, Surveyors of Highways; William Church, Sealer of Weights and Measures; James Nony, Sealer of Leather; Israel Bissell, Benjamin Eggleston, Fence-Viewers; Justice Bissell, Enos Blossom, Hog-Reeves; Thomas Blossom, Pound-Keeper. Voted that a pound be built near Mr. Thomas Blossom's. Voted that in future, roads laid out by the selectmen shall be three rods wide, except the road from Daniel Chapman's to Partridgefield, which is established to be four rods wide. Voted that the road between Warren Mack's and Sergeant Root's be discontinued. Voted three pounds bounty to any one who shall kill a full-grown wolf in this town, and one pound ten shillings for killing "a young or whelp wolf."

Twelve roads were approved at this town-meeting as laid out by the selectmen.

June 5, 1784, the selectmen called a meeting to consider the highway work, "as the rate laid is found to be so much that the town are not able to pay the work and carry on their farms besides." The subject of taxation and the inequality of valuation caused considerable discussion, and the selectmen were empowered, Dec. 27, 1784, "to fee a representative to represent our cause at the General Court with respect to a new valuation."

March 14, 1785.—Voted that the town will be at the expense of procuring a plan of the town to aid in the making of future valuations.

Other extracts from the records occur in the notice of churches, schools, and military.

Town-meetings were held as follows: "at the dwelling-house of David Mack;" "at the house of Mr. Enos Blossom, innholder" (July 20, 1784); "at the dwelling-house of Lieut. Blossom;" "at the dwelling-house of Mr. Joseph Blush;" "at the house of Capt. David Mack, innholder" (Nov. 2, 1786), and were continued there down to the time of the meeting-house, March 26, 1791; then they were called "at the meeting-house," for many years, and the expression was changed to "at the centre meeting-house" April 3, 1820, showing another house erected by that time.

May 11, 1846, they met "at the centre school-house," and after that, for a few months, sometimes "at the lower room of the centre school-house." Nov. 8, 1847, "at the town-hall," and have been so held to the present time. The first town-hall was a low, one-story building, 26 by 36, erected during the summer of 1847, standing between the present hall and the chapel of the Congregational Church. The present building, combining both the school-house of the centre district and the town-hall, was erected in 1872, and is a neat and substantial building.

SELECTMEN.

- 1783-84.—Samuel Jones, David Mack, Job Robbins.
- 1785.—Malachi Loveland, Timothy McElwain, Solomon Ingham.
- 1786.—Lieut. Malachi Loveland, Timothy McElwain, William Church.
- 1787-88.—Capt. David Mack, Matthew Smith, Bissell Phillips.
- 1789.—Samuel Jones, James Dickinson, Daniel Chapman.
- 1790.—Daniel Chapman, Malachi Loveland, Amasa Graves.
- 1791.—Malachi Loveland, Matthew Smith, Amasa Graves.
- 1792.—Matthew Smith, Samuel Woods, Elisha Mack.
- 1793-95.—Matthew Smith, Erastus Ingham, Elisha Mack.
- 1796-98.—Erastus Ingham, Elisha Mack, Thomas Durant.
- 1799-1800.—Matthew Smith, Uriah Church, Solomon Ingham.
- 1801-3.—Matthew Smith, Solomon Ingham, Erastus Ingham.
- 1804-5.—Solomon Ingham, Erastus Ingham, John Smith.
- 1806.—Matthew Smith, John Dickson, Ebenezer Emmons.
- 1807-10.—Uriah Church, John Dickson, Ebenezer Emmons.
- 1811-14.—Erastus Ingham, John Dickson, Capt. Daniel Root.
- 1815-16.—John Dickson, Daniel Root, John Metcalf.
- 1817.—Solomon Ingham, Daniel Root, Cyrus Cone.
- 1818.—Daniel Root, Cyrus Cone, Alexander Dickson.
- 1819-20.—Cyrus Cone, Alexander Dickson, Green H. Church.
- 1821-23.—John Dickson, Daniel Root, Matthew Smith, Jr.
- 1824.—Daniel Root, Matthew Smith, Jr., Solomon Root, Jr.
- 1825-27.—Matthew Smith, Jr., Solomon Root, Jr., Gaston Dickson.
- 1828-29.—Solomon Root, Jr., Gaston Dickson, Samuel Smith.
- 1830.—Solomon Root, Samuel Smith, James Church.
- 1831.—Samuel Smith, Erastus J. Ingham, Ambrose Smith.
- 1832.—Erastus J. Ingham, Ambrose Smith, Solomon Root.
- 1833.—Ambrose Smith, Solomon Root, James Cross.
- 1834.—Solomon Root, James Cross, Jonathan McElwain.
- 1835.—Erastus J. Ingham, Samuel Smith, Oliver Smith.
- 1836-37.—Oliver Smith, Jesse Wright, Ambrose Newton.
- 1838.—Samuel Smith, Ambrose Newton, Oliver Smith (2d).

1839-40.—Samuel Smith, Ebenezer Smith, Amasa G. Loveland.
 1841.—James Church, Daniel Pease, Jr., Horace Pease.
 1842.—Daniel Pease, Jr., Ambrose Newton, Henry Hawes.
 1843.—Daniel Pease, Jr., Samuel Loveland, Harry Meacham.
 1844.—Samuel Smith, Timothy Root, Samuel Ingham.
 1845.—James Church, Jonathan McElwain, Ambrose Newton.
 1846.—James Church, Ambrose Newton, Samuel Ingham.
 1847.—Ambrose Newton, Samuel Ingham, Samuel Loveland.
 1848.—Samuel Ingham, John L. Bell, Harry Meacham.
 1849.—John L. Bell, Henry Hawes, Jonathan McElwain.
 1850.—Henry Hawes, Jonathan McElwain, Matthew Smith, Jr.
 1851.—James Church, Samuel Ingham, Milton Combs.
 1852-53.—Henry Hawes, Jonathan McElwain, Oliver Smith (2d).
 1854.—Ebenezer Smith, Amasa Graves, Amos W. Cross.
 1855.—Amasa Graves, Jr., Amos W. Cross, Daniel Alderman.
 1856.—Daniel Alderman, Matthew Smith, Ambrose Robbins.
 1857.—Matthew Smith, Ambrose Robbins, Morgan Pease.
 1858.—John L. Bell, Ambrose Robbins, Morgan Pease.
 1859-62.—John L. Bell, Morgan Pease, Jacob Robbins.
 1863.—Matthew Smith, John W. Cross, Samuel Smith, Jr.
 1864-66.—John L. Bell, Morgan Pease, John W. Cross.
 1867-68.—John L. Bell, Morgan Pease, Hiram Taylor.
 1869.—John L. Bell, Hiram Taylor, Henry Hawes.
 1870.—Hiram Taylor, Arnold Pease, Metcalf J. Smith.
 1871-72.—Hiram Taylor, John L. Bell, M. J. Smith.
 1873.—Hiram Taylor, Morgan Pease, George W. Cottrell.
 1874.—Hiram Taylor, M. J. Smith, George W. Cottrell.
 1875.—Metcalf J. Smith, E. James Ingham, Howard Smith.
 1876.—Metcalf J. Smith, John L. Bell, Howard Smith.
 1877-78.—Metcalf J. Smith, E. James Ingham, Howard Smith.

TOWN CLERKS.

Solomon Ingham, 1783-84; Timothy Allen, 1785; Solomon Ingham, 1786-88; John Dickinson, 1789-95; Solomon Ingham, 1796-1807; David Mack, Jr., 1808-31; Matthew Smith, Jr., 1832-43; George W. Lyman, 1844-48; John Smith, 1849-53; Jonathan McElwain, 1854; Solomon F. Root, 1855; Jonathan McElwain, 1856-79.

REPRESENTATIVES.

Uriah Church, 1808; Erastus Ingham, 1809-10; David Mack, 1811-12; John Dickson, 1813-15; Daniel Root, 1816-17; Ebenezer Emmons, 1819-20; David Mack, Jr., 1821-24; George W. McElwain, 1829-31; Matthew Smith, Jr., 1832-33; Solomon Root, 1834; Daniel Root, 1835; Green H. Church, 1837-38; Samuel Smith, 1839; Oliver Smith, 1840; James Church, 1841; Ambrose Newton, 1842; Alexander Ingham, 1843; Matthew Smith, 1844; Uriah Church, 1845; Jonathan McElwain, 1846; Amos Cone, 1847; Harry Meacham, 1849; Almon Barnes, 1850; Eliakim Root, 1852; Oliver Smith (2d), 1853; Milton Combs, 1855; Wm. L. Church, 1861; Arnold Pease, 1866; Matthew Smith, 1878.

VILLAGES.

MIDDLEFIELD CENTRE

is at the original point selected a few years after the organization of the town for the location of the meeting-house. It was then decided to be the geographical centre of the town. The early Mack store was only a short distance south, and the meeting-house being built here eighty-six years ago, and the town-meetings held here continually, made it the business centre as well as the geographical. It is now one of the finest rural villages among the mountain towns of Hampshire County. Located on a commanding eminence, the view embraces a wide extent of surrounding country, hills and valleys stretching away, a mingled and varying landscape of rocky heights and gentle slopes, steep declivities and smiling meadows, cultivated fields and wood-crowned summits, while beyond all, and partially encircling all, is the blue line of the distant mountains. The public buildings are in good repair, and the private residences mostly have a neat, freshly-painted appearance, indicating that they are cared for by men of thrift and energy. The post-office was established about 1811. Postmasters have been Edmund Kelso, Gen. David Mack, Solomon Root, Bartholomew Ward, and Oliver Church. As deputy postmaster, Deacon Alexander Ingham has managed the office for twenty-three years.

FACTORY VILLAGE.

This place is situated about a mile from Middlefield Centre. Its business interests were founded by Amasa Blush, who purchased the old Herrick clothing-mill, and by Uriah Church, Jr., who, a few years later, also established a clothing-mill. These were followed in each case by the building of factories, and the founders were in each case succeeded by their sons. The village suffered severely in the disastrous flood of 1874. The chain of three reservoirs gave way (caused by the failure of the upper one), and the water poured down through the valley with immense force, demolishing the upper mill of the Church Brothers, the woolen-mill of Oliver Blush, the turning-works of Wm. D. Blush, and doing much other damage. It has been a hard struggle to recover from these losses, and it will require many years to restore the former prosperity of the place. There are included in the village the handsome private residences of Wm. D. Blush and Sumner Church, also a few others. There is a school-house, but post-office facilities and places of religious worship are at the centre village above. There is one store, kept by John W. Crane.

MIDDLEFIELD STATION

is upon the Boston and Albany Railroad, in the south part of the town. It bears also the name of Bancroft Post-Office. To a traveler looking from the windows of a passing train there only appear the small station-house and one or two other buildings. There is, however, located here a large paper-mill, built by John Mann in 1845, for the manufacture of wrapping-paper. In 1851 the Buckley Brothers, of New York City, erected another mill, for the manufacture of wall-paper. The post-office has been kept by Mr. Davison, Wm. S. Cross, James N. Cross, Joel Haskins, Chester W. Merryfield, Edwin C. Cheeseman, and G. E. Manley; the last-named is the present incumbent.

SCHOOLS.

The location of the first school-house is not determined. Probably there was but little done upon this territory either in building school-houses or establishing schools until the formation of Middlefield. The account of Mr. David Mack, as given in the tract entitled "The Faithful Steward," indicates that there were schools somewhat before that time. He came to Middlefield in 1775, and one year after his marriage. It is said he learned to read in the same school with his six-years-old son. Doubtless there were small family schools opened by two or three neighbors uniting at first. Even after the erection of the town the sums voted were for several years small. Individual exertion largely sustained the early school system. But the record then made in training up educated men and women is not one to be ashamed of, compared even with these days of intellectual progress. A town that sent out such men as Dr. Lyman Coleman and the eminent geologist Ebenezer Emmons may well have a just pride in the efforts and sacrifices of the pioneers to lay broad and deep the foundations of universal education.

The following extracts from the records show the action of the town during the first two or three years:

April 24, 1783.—Voted to raise 10 pounds for the support of schooling for the year ensuing. Voted that Joseph Blush, Benjamin Blush, Timothy McElwain, and John Jones be a school committee. Voted that the selectmen be authorized to divide the town into school districts.

March 1, 1784.—Voted to raise 20 pounds for schooling, and that it may be paid in rye, Indian-corn, flax, or oats. Voted that James Dickson, Job Robbins, Samuel Jones, and Benajah Jones be a school committee for the ensuing year.

May 2, 1785.—Voted to raise 20 pounds, lawful money, for the support of schooling the ensuing year, said money to be paid in the articles of provision or clothing. School Committee, John Taggart, Matthew Smith, David Carrier, and Ephraim Sheldon.

The report of the formation of the school districts is not recorded. One is given under date March, 1796, "that the people living west of Taggart's Brook, from the Widow Goddard's and on to the town-line northward, except Daniel Spencer, Mr. Emmons, and Widow Goddard, be a school District." School districts generally were organized in 1789, or perhaps rearranged.

The modern organization of the school system of the State dates from about 1825. That year Middlefield appointed as committee, under the new law to examine schools and teachers, Matthew Smith, Jr., George W. McElwain, and Alexander Ingham. The following spring, $300 were appropriated for schools. For many years before and after that they averaged about that sum. In later years they have been much higher.

The following statistics comprise a large amount of valuable information, comparing the past with the present:

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Nine schools; attending in the summer, 143; average, 131; winter, 156; average, 144; in town between 4 and 16, 183; summer schools, 32 months, 15 days; winter, 19 months, 7 days; summer teachers, 8 females; winter, 5 males, 2 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $17.80; female teachers, $11.36.

January, 1847.—Ten schools; attending in summer, 155; average, 104; winter, 216; average, 166; in town between 4 and 16, 193; attending under 4, 9; over 16, 28; summer schools, 32 months; winter, 32 months, 4 days; total, 64 months, 4 days; summer teachers, 9 females; winter teachers, 7 males, 3 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $19.52; female, $11.50.

January, 1857.—11 schools; attending in summer, 90; average, 71; winter, 159; average, 119; attending under 5, 10; over 15, 23; in town between 5 and 15, 166; summer teachers, 7 females, winter, 6 males, 4 females; summer schools, 22 months; winter, 29 months, 14 days; total 51 months, 14 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $21.68; female, $13.91.

January, 1867.—Eleven schools; attending in the summer, 156; average, 124; winter, 179, average, 146; attending under 5, 14; over 15, 29; in town between 5 and 15, 158; summer teachers, 9 females; winter, 3 males, 6 females; summer schools, 26 months, 5 days; average wages, male teachers, per month, $29.33; female teachers, $19.29.

January, 1878.—Eight schools; for repairs, $10; attending, 189; average, 129; under 5, 6; over 15, 27; in town between 5 and 16, 143; teachers, 5 males, 11 females, 2 of them from normal; school 50 months, 5 days; average wages, male teachers, per month, $21.54; female, $22.93; taxation, $900; expense of superintendence, $55; printing, $10; income of local funds and dog-tax, $129; 1 private school; 31 scholars; tuition, $160; town share of State funds, $220.57.

Besides the excellent system of district schools, there has usually been maintained at the village a select school during the winter season. This has offered superior advantages for obtaining a higher education. Languages and higher mathematics are taught, and young men fitted for college. The school the present winter (1878-79) is taught by Professor M. J. Smith, who has also had charge of it several previous terms. He is a citizen of the town, and has taught considerably abroad. Returning here, his school has become a favorite resort for the young people of the town, offering, as it does, equal advantages with those of more elaborate seminaries at only a fraction of the cost.

Deacon Ingham states that when Miss Mary Lyon, with the aid of Rev. Mr. Hawks, was raising money for the founding of Mount Holyoke Seminary she made her home for a time at his residence. He speaks of her as a woman of uncommon energy and devotion to her work. She secured $1000 in this town,—$500 from Col. David Mack, and $100 apiece from five other citizens.

Deacon Ingham furnishes the following list of graduates: Elisha Mack, a lawyer, and afterward a judge at Salem. Alvin Nash, son of Rev. Jonathan Nash, minister and teacher in Northern Ohio, founded a school on the Mount Holyoke plan; removed to Painesville. Ebenezer Emmons, graduated at Williams College, studied and licensed as a physician, but was too much of a naturalist to follow his profession. Dr. Lyman Coleman, the very distinguished minister, traveler in the Holy Land, author of sacred geography, etc., graduated at Amherst. Azariah Smith, educated at McGrawville; became a distinguished business-man in the State of New York; his son became a missionary to Armenia; now in Boston publishing-house. General Mack, son of David Mack, was a noted merchant; afterward Senator and councillor. William Church, one of the five sons of Uriah, went to Cincinnati; was a prominent man of Ohio; organized the State department of insurance; and was commissioner for several years, until removed by a different administration. Judson Smith, a noted professor in Oberlin Theological Seminary; he graduated at Amherst. Rev. Edward Smith, graduated at Amherst; mostly engaged in Worcester as an educator. Professor M. J. Smith, now teaching, was educated at McGrawville.

The four Smiths were brothers. Samuel Ingham, son of Deacon Ingham, graduated at Westfield Normal School; established a graded school at Norwalk; studied for the ministry and went as a missionary to the Dacotahs, and died at the Santee Agency. He had a large church, and a great work was done there. His wife was matron of the home for the education of the Indian girls. A daughter of Deacon Ingham graduated at Mount Holyoke, and became the wife of Rev. Nathaniel G. Bonney. Two daughters of Samuel Smith graduated at Mount Holyoke. One daughter of Sumner Church graduated at Mount Holyoke. The Durants and Newtons that went to Albany were eminent business-men, and various members of the Eggleston, Morgan, and other families have also become noted abroad.

In the account of the educational interests of the town there should be included a notice of the valuable work, under the lead of Deacon Alexander Ingham, among the Irish population of 1000 to 1200 that were gathered here during the construction of the railroad between 1836 and 1840. Two school-houses were opened,—one in the vicinity of the "shoddy-mill," and one near the present station. A genuine missionary work was accomplished. Children were gathered in by the hundred, and taught to read and write. The families of the laborers improved in habits; they clothed their children better, and the latter grew self-reliant and blessed in after-years Deacon Ingham's schools. With his heart full of the work, Mr. Ingham attended the State Convention, laid the matter before that body and before Horace Mann, then secretary of the Board of Education. The result was the naming of a committee, with Deacon Ingham chairman, to interest other towns in the matter, and thus the work was extended all along the line between Springfield and "State Line." As the laborers moved west to work upon the Erie Canal in New York, Deacon Ingham visited Albany and Schenectady, and interested Gov. Seward, School Superintendent Spencer, Bishop Potter, and others in the same work. Legislative action was had, and temporary instruction secured for the children of the laborers.

CHURCHES.

As in other New England towns, the records in the office of the town clerk contain the first account of church work.

At the second town-meeting, two weeks after the organization, April 24, 1783, called by the newly chosen selectmen, Voted that the town will raise 30 pounds, money to support the gospel; that it be paid in by the first of July next, and that Ens. Elisha Mack, James Dixon, Joseph Blush be a committee to procure preaching. Voted that the committee be paid for their own and horse expenses, and for the journey of said horses. Voted that Ens. Elisha Mack, John Dixon, Benjamin Eggleston, William Church, and Joseph Blush be a committee to find the centre of the town.

May 28, 1783.—Voted that Daniel Chapman be a committee to assist to procure preaching. Voted that Solomon Ingraham be a committee to procure a surveyor to find the centre of the town. Voted that Benajah Jones be a committee to assist in finding the centre.

Sept. 2, 1783.—Samuel Jones, Moderator. Voted that the town will have Mr. Smith to preach with us a certain number of Sabbaths, provided he will agree to on reasonable terms. Voted to give Mr. Smith twenty shillings per Sabbath. Voted that the town will not accept of the place proposed by the committee for a centre. Voted a committee of seven to find the most convenient and proper place for the meeting-house to stand, viz.: James Kelly, Samuel Jones, Benjamin Blush, John Spencer, Job Robbins, David Mack, and James Dickson. On the first Monday in October the committee made a report, which the town accepted, fixing a site for the meeting-house, viz.: "to stand on the main road, on the line between Mr. Joseph Blush and Widow Ford's."

Dec. 18, 1783.—Voted that the selectmen have power to settle the accounts of the committee appointed to provide preaching.

March 1, 1784.—Voted that the committee for the procuring of preaching do employ the Rev. Mr. Griswold to preach with us four Sabbaths more. The same day they voted that town-meetings be held at Mr. Enos Blossom's, and that the selectmen set up benches for the people to use on the Sabbath.

July 20, 1784.—Voted that the town will raise 30 pounds to support preaching. Voted that the town will hire Mr. Timothy Woodbridge to preach with us twenty Sabbaths on probation. Joseph Blush, Daniel Chapman, and Capt. David Mack appointed committee on preaching.

Dec. 2, 1784.—In the warrant for a meeting was the clause: "To see if the town will give Rev. Mr. Woodbridge a call for a settlement in the work of the ministry;" but it does not appear to have been acted upon.

Monday, May 2, 1785.—Voted to raise 20 pounds lawful money for the support of the gospel. David Mack, Joseph Blush, and Daniel Chapman were appointed a committee to dispose of said money.

May 2, 1785.—Voted David Mack 3 pounds for the use of his house for meetings on the Lord's day during the present year.

Sept. 6, 1785.—Voted 30 pounds for the support of the gospel.

Oct. 17, 1785.—Voted to give the Rev. Mr. Thompson a call to settle in the ministry, and offered him a salary of "50 pounds a year, to rise 40 shillings a year till it amounts to 60 pounds a year, and then to stop rising."

Thirteen voters, however, filed a written protest dissenting from the above vote, and the call evidently failed, for Dec. 12, 1785, it was voted that the committee apply "to some candidate to come and preach for us on three or four Sabbaths, and, if the town likes him, to lay in with him to preach with us next summer."

The protest mentioned above was in the following words:

"We, the subscribers, inhabitants of Middlefield, in consequence of the town's giving Mr. Thompson a call to settle in the work of the ministry, dissenting from the vote of said town, enter this our remonstrance against the proceeding of said town with regard to the said Mr. Thompson, and order the town clerk to enter this our protest on record.

"SAMUEL JONES.	JAMES TAGGART, Jr.
JAMES DICKSON.	JOHN DICKSON.
DANIEL BARCOCK.	TIMOTHY ALLEN.
BENJAMIN BARCOCK.	ELNATHAN TAYLOR.
JOSEPH DICKSON.	DANIEL MELZER.
MOSES EGGLESTON.	JOHN PINNEY.

"MIDDLEFIELD, Oct. 17, 1785."

May 4, 1786.—A warrant for a town-meeting contained the clause: "To see if the town will raise a sum of money to provide materials to build a meeting-house;" but it seems to have been passed over at the meeting.

Aug. 3, 1786.—Voted to hire Mr. Joseph Strong four Sabbaths more than what the committee have agreed with him for.

The warrant for a meeting, Aug. 15, 1786, contained the clause: "To see if the town will agree upon any method to settle the unhappy differences subsisting in said town, occasioned by different sentiments in religion;" but it was not acted upon.

Sept. 4, 1786.—Voted to hire Mr. Joseph Strong to preach the gospel in the town five Sabbaths. He was not, however, settled.

Nov. 2, 1786.—Voted to hire Mr. Robinson to preach with us.

Dec. 21, 1786.—Voted to hire Mr. Robinson eight Sabbaths more, and voted 30 pounds for preaching, and appointed a committee to treat with Mr. Robinson.

Jan. 22, 1787.—It was voted to set the meeting-house on the most convenient place, nearest the centre of the town, on the public or town highway.

June 11, 1787.—Voted to set the meeting-house on the height of land between Bissell Phillips and Justice Bissell's.

Voted to build a house 52 by 44. Voted to raise 200 pounds to provide materials to build, and to become due by the 1st of April next.

Committee appointed: William Church, Malachi Loveland, Daniel Chapman, Bissell Phillips, Matthew Smith.

Voted that all proper materials for the house shall be received in payment of the tax.

But the question where the house should stand was not yet settled.

Dec. 6, 1787.—Voted Deacon Jonathan Brewster, of Worthington, Deacon Jesse Johnston, of Chester, and Lieut. Scott, of Norwich, to be a committee to repair to this town and fix the spot for the meeting-house. A committee to notify and wait upon said committee were Matthew Smith, Samuel Jones, James Dickson, Malachi Loveland, Samuel Skinner, and Job Robbins.

March 17, 1788.—The warrant called for action on the support of the gospel, but none was taken at the meeting.

April 7, 1788.—Ebenezer Babcock's minister rates were abated from the time he joined the Baptist Church in Chesterfield, Sept. 18, 1785.

At the same meeting a committee of three was appointed to procure a place to hold meetings on the Sabbath,—Samuel Jones, Matthew Smith, Erastus Ingham.

June 6, 1788.—Voted 40 pounds for the support of the gospel, thirty pounds to be paid in money, and ten pounds in the produce of the earth.

June 16, 1788.—Voted to give Mr. Frederick Parker a call to settle in the ministry.

Aug. 25, 1788.—Voted to give Mr. Parker 150 pounds as a settlement, to be paid in neat cattle at cash price, to be paid within three years from his ordination. Salary the first three years to be 55 pounds annually, and after that 75 pounds, half cash and half in pork, beef, and grain at market rates.

Mr. Parker seems to have declined the call and left town. He had preached for some time, as board bills presented by David Mack for 17 shillings, and by Oliver Blush for 4 pounds 17 shillings and 6 pence, were allowed. The town made quite an effort to secure the return of Mr. Parker, voting that they would settle him on either Presbyterian or Congregational principles, as he might choose, and sending a committee to desire him to return.

March 2, 1789.—Voted a committee to provide a place to hold religious meetings,—Abner Clapp, Job Robbins, and Samuel Jones.

April 27, 1789.—Voted to annul the old tax authorized years before for building a meeting-house. Voted to reconsider the vote fixing the site by Cyrus Crane's house.

All this was slow progress toward either building a house or settling a minister.

Aug. 24, 1789.—Voted 300 pounds in money to build a meeting-house. Chose a committee "to pitch upon a spot" for the meeting-house, between Oliver Blush and Josiah Leonard's,—Samuel Jones, David Mack, Erastus Ingham, William Church, Benajah Jones, John Newton, and Amasa Graves.

Report of committee accepted, viz.: "on the height of land near Oliver Blush's, and west side of the highway."

Voted to divide the town into districts, to provide materials for the meeting-house.

Voted that the tax should be paid by the first of next June. Voted to invite Rev. Joseph Strong to preach as a candidate, and chose a committee to treat with him,—James Dickson, David Mack, and Bissell Phillips.

Sept. 28, 1790.—Voted to hire Mr. Joseph Strong on probation. Voted to have the assessors make the 300 pounds into "four equitable bills."

The question of site was still in dispute, as appears by the meeting of November 30th, when they voted "to reconsider all previous votes" on the subject, and then voted to "set it on the height of land near Cyrus Crane's house." Meanwhile Mr. Stephen Williams seems to have been preaching for them during the following winter and spring, for March 11, 1790, they voted money for his support, to be due December 1st; and this season the building of the meeting-house went on; but the site last mentioned above was not yet definitely selected. Six shillings a day was voted to the master workman, William Church, and five shillings a day to other workmen.

The warrant for a meeting June 30, 1790, contained the clause: "To see which of the two places the committee should set the house, at the beach staddle, as hath been voted, or on the rocks, as a committee appointed for that purpose once decided." And it was voted "to set the house on the ledge south of Oliver Blush's." Voted "to raise the meeting-house by a general invitation, and that the master workman have the liberty to pick the hands that are to go on the frame and do the work aloft." The house was raised soon after, as the next votes are with reference to covering it. Difficulty occurred about collecting the church tax of the Baptists for this Congregational meeting-house. And it does not appear just how it was settled, though the records indicate that all were taxed according to the old custom. The finishing cost much time; but it was so far finished in the fall of 1791 that the seating was provided for, being "dignified" according to the age and valuation of the persons to be seated. The house had, however, been in use for some months before, the town-meetings being called there from and after March 26, 1791, and the meetings on the Lord's day no doubt began there about the same time.

June 7, 1792, it was voted to hire Mr. Jonathan Nash to preach six Sabbaths longer than the committee had agreed with him for, on probation. A call was voted to him Aug. 2, 1792; £100 settlement; salary £60 the first year, to be paid in lawful silver money, £65 the second year, £70 the third, £75 the fourth, and this last to continue as the annual salary. This account of the pioneer church work brings us to the completion of the meeting-house and the settlement of the first pastor.

The church was constituted Nov. 16, 1783, and consisted of the following members: Sarah Taylor, Mary Mack, Elizabeth Brown, Lucy Chapman, Mary Mann, Job Robbins, Elizabeth Blush, David Bolton, Asa Brown, Anson Cheeseman, Daniel Chapman, Oliver Bates, David Mack, Berzela Wright, Joseph Blish, John Taylor. The various places where meetings were held at first are shown in the extracts from the town records. They were very largely at the house, and often in the barn, of David Mack, at the present Haskell place. The meeting-house, built in 1791, then became the place of meetings; and there they have remained ever since. The first house, repaired, improved, and considerably remodeled, is still the house of worship for this congregation. Around its portals cluster many sacred memories. From its pulpit year after year have been heard the words of solemn warning and the loving invitations of the gospel. Hither have the reverent footsteps of the fathers tended, and here the third and fourth generations now worship, abiding in the same everlasting faith that moved those noble men of old, and that animated them to make heroic sacrifices for the truth.

Like other churches this society has had times of depression and difficulty, to be followed by the brighter days of revival. Several of the latter appear in the records. In 1801-2, during a period of about thirteen months, 33 were added to the church. The year 1810 is spoken of as a time of much interest, though the actual additions do not appear to have been unusual. In 1820-21 there were 36 received, and during the great revival period throughout the Northern States, 1826 to 1832, there were 76 members received by the church of Middlefield. In 1842-43 there were 35 received. In 1857-58 about 50 were added by profession. In 1866, 33 united, 22 of them by profession. The revival of 1876-77 produced a wide and powerful influence. Thirty-seven were received at the same communion, Jan. 21, 1877.

The present ample and convenient parsonage was built in the summer of 1865, the timbers from the old parsonage on the Mack farm being used considerably in its erection. The society have a chapel for social and conference meetings. It was formerly the house of worship belonging to the Methodist Church; purchased after that society dissolved, and repaired about 1870.

The present number of communicants in this church is 127. Congregation, 100 to 120. Superintendent of Sunday-school, Jonathn McElwain.

An address by Rev. Jonathan Nash, Oct. 31, 1813, on the twenty-first anniversary of his settlement, contains the following statistics: There were about 68 families settled when the town was organized. The meeting-house was raised in July, 1790. During the twenty-one years the deaths were 205, the births about 710. Mr. Nash during this period married 124 couples; baptized 327 persons, 10 of them adults; admitted 122 members, 78 of them on profession of faith. Mr. Nash added, "Families are frequently changing, some moving into town and others out. Not less than 150 can be recollected to have removed from town in a family state during the twenty-one years."

Record of Ministers.—1st. Rev. Jonathan Nash, ordained Oct. 31, 1792. His pastoral labors extended over a long series of years. He was dismissed at his own request by reason of age and infirmities, July 11, 1832; died Aug. 31, 1834, aged seventy-four. 2d. Rev. Samuel Parker, from Ithaca, installed July 11, 1832; dismissed at his own request, May 23, 1833; went to Oregon, exploring agent for Home Missionary Society, 1835 to 1837; died at Ithaca, N. Y., March 21, 1866, aged eighty-seven. 3d. Rev. John H. Bisbee, ordained Feb. 20, 1834; dismissed at his own request, Dec. 3, 1838, to accept a call to Worthington. 4th. Rev. Edward Clark, ordained and installed June 19, 1839; dismissed at his own request, Aug. 10, 1852. 5th. Rev. Moody Harrington, installed June 27, 1854; dismissed May 12, 1857; labors continued to Nov. 1, 1857. 6th. Rev. Lewis Bridgman, date of the call Aug. 30, 1858; installed May 11, 1859; dismissed May 19, 1863. 7th. Rev. John Dodge, commenced his labors in Middlefield Oct. 22, 1865; closed June 24, 1867. 8th. Rev. C. M. Peirce, installed July 1, 1868, the present pastor, and now in the eleventh year of his labors among this people.

Record of Deacons.—Malachi Loveland, chosen (probably) Nov. 16, 1783; died Oct. 13, 1779. Daniel Chapman, chosen (probably) Nov. 16, 1783; removed to Pittsfield. David Mack, chosen Nov. 18, 1783; died March 24, 1845. Job Robbins, chosen Nov. 18, 1783; died April 23, 1829. Zachariah Field, chosen Dec. 16, 1807; removed May 25, 1823, to Peru. William W. Leonard, chosen May 1, 1828; withdrew and united with the Baptist Church. George W. McElwain, chosen May 1, 1828; removed April 23, 1848, to Hinsdale. Abner Wing, chosen May 1, 1828; removed Feb. 26, 1837, to Hinsdale. Alexander Ingham, chosen June 9, 1837; still living, having been in that office nearly forty-two years. Erastus J. Ingham, chosen June 2, 1851; died July 9, 1851. Amasa Graves, chosen June 2, 1851; one of the present deacons. Ambrose Meacham, chosen Nov. 1, 1851; removed April 1, 1855, to Hinsdale. Harry Meacham, chosen July 5, 1872; one of the present deacons.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH OF MIDDLEFIELD.

There were families of Baptist sentiments among the first settlers. This appears to be the fact at least soon after the organization of the town. April 7, 1788, the minister rates of Ebenezer Babcock were abated because he had joined the Baptist Church of Chesterfield; and at the time of the building of the meeting-house, in 1790-91, considerable discussion appears to have been had over the question of taxation, and perhaps some of the differences that arose during the eight years previous had been due to this cause. The thirteen who protested against the settlement of Mr. Thompson included perhaps these families. And it is possible that there was some prospect that they might be in the majority and establish the first church, in which case the principle of the then existing laws would have given them the benefit of universal taxation. Perhaps there is no sufficient evidence that this was the case, yet some statements in the old records may be explained upon this theory.

A Baptist Church having been formed in 1797 in Hinsdale, several from Middlefield united with that society. The pastor of the Hinsdale Church included this town within the field of his labors.

John Newton, of Middlefield, was baptized July 5, 1800, and the next year elected a deacon in the Hinsdale Church. Matthew Smith was baptized September, 1801; Calvin Smith and Solomon Root, April 25, 1802. At this time the Hinsdale Church voted that meetings should be held in Middlefield one-fifth of the time. Less than two years later, it was voted to hold them one-third of the time in Middlefield. In 1805 the same vote was repeated, Deacon Newton's house being mentioned as the place. The original law, by which all, of whatever sentiment, were taxed to support the Congregational Church "of the standing order," was modified quite early, so far that those who could produce certificates of actual membership in another church, or in a society organized to support a church, were exempted from the tax. Upon the committee of the Hinsdale Church, appointed to sign such certificates in 1803, Deacon John Newton's name appears.

The meetings continued to be held in Middlefield one-third of the time till the erection of the meeting-house in Hinsdale, 1816. The completion of the house of worship made it proper to concentrate their efforts more completely at that point. This marked a new era in the history of the Baptist work in these towns. It led to greater strength and success at Hinsdale, and to the establishment of a church at Middlefield. This latter movement received the hearty co-operation of the Hinsdale brethren, and the new church was constituted July 21, 1817, by a council composed of delegates from the churches of Chesterfield, Chester, and Hinsdale. The council met upon the invitation of a committee consisting of Deacon Newton and Matthew Smith. Elder Asa Todd, of Chesterfield, was moderator of the council, and brother Dan Daniels clerk.

The names of those received as forming the church of Middlefield that day were John Newton, Matthew Smith, Calvin Smith, Solomon Root, Levi Olds, Payne Loveland, William Taylor, Amariah Ballou, David Ballou, Clark Martin, Asa Ackadd, Asa Ides, Martha Newton, Asenath Smith, Anna Smith, Mary Root, Lucy Olds, Phebe Loveland, Priscilla Taylor, Polly Ballou, Mary Ballou, Elizabeth Skinner, Mary Ballou, Elizabeth Durant, Lucy Metcalf, Sarah Johnson, Sarah Smith, Sarah Allison, Louis Freeland,—29 in all. Thirty more joined during the next two years, and the society thus commenced its existence with a membership of considerable numbers and strength. In 1818 a substantial house of worship was erected. Calvin Smith is spoken of as a very liberal contributor to that object. The first settled pastor was Rev. Isaac Child, ordained June 9, 1818. At his ordination the sermon was preached by Rev. Thomas Rand, of West Springfield, under whose oversight and instruction Mr. Childs had pursued his studies for the ministry.

The first meeting-house, mentioned above, stood east of the centre, beyond the gambrel-roofed house where Dr. William Coleman formerly resided. In 1846 the present handsome and neatly-finished edifice was erected at the centre. The dedication took place in October of that year. The sermon was preached by Rev. Robert Turnbull, of Hartford. The parsonage was built in 1851. The present pastor, in a sketch read before the Westfield Association ten years ago, said :

"A pleasing feature of the records traced by the church in its history of half a century is the enlightened liberality with which it has aided the different objects of Christian benevolence.

"Home and Foreign Missions, Education, Bible Distribution, and the cause of human freedom, have shared freely its sympathies.

"Never wealthy, drawing its material sustenance mainly from a rugged soil, its largest reported membership never having exceeded one hundred and thirty-five, and dropping often from removals and changes to a much smaller number, it has always shown regard for the religious charities of the day, and been ever ready on occasions to utter a friendly word to its sister-churches in their time of need.

"Looking back over the period which has now passed in review, it is pleasant to notice the tokens of God's favor that have been granted to this people. No less than eight special seasons of revival have been enjoyed. These were in 1818, '29, '31, '33, '38, '42, '50, and '58.

"Many were the sheaves gathered at these seasons to replenish the waste of time and change, and much the joy and comfort of the saints. To some extent the awakening and converting influences of the Spirit have also been manifested during the intervals between revival seasons. From the organization of the church to the present time, Sept. 22, 1869, the whole number that have been baptized is two hundred and fifty-nine. This with the twenty-nine original members, fifty-seven received by letter, and two by experience, make the whole number three hundred and forty-seven. Diminution by death, eighty-four; by dismission, one hundred and fifty-three; by exclusion, eighteen; by erasure, seven, makes the present number of members eighty-five. The number who have gone from the church with letters of dismission is nearly one hundred larger than the number received on recommendation from other churches."

To the revivals mentioned in the above should be added that of 1870-71, when the records show that 6 were received by baptism January 8th, and 7 on the 14th of May. In 1876, and extending into the winter of 1877, 14 united with the church.

Record of the Ministers.—1st. Rev. Isaac Childs; ordained June 10, 1818; dismissed at his own request in 1828; died while pastor of the Goshen Church in 1842. 2d. Rev. Erastus Andrews; ordained May 20, 1829. His labors with this people were continued for two years, probably having preached for some months before his ordination. He afterward labored for many years in connection with the Baptist Churches of Central Massachusetts. During the time of the "American Party" was elected to the Legislature. A son of Mr. Andrews is president of Dennison University, Ohio. 3d. Rev. Cullen Townsend; ordained June 29, 1831. After about two years of service here (commencing some months before his ordination), he went West, and soon after died. 4th. Rev. Henry Archibald; his labors here commenced in 1832, or early in 1833, and were continued about three years. He was born in Scotland; died at Mt. Holly, Vt., Dec. 4, 1859, aged seventy-three. 5th. Rev. Orson Spencer, settled here in 1836 to 1841. He had an after-history somewhat peculiar. Becoming a convert to Mormonism, he returned to Middlefield and preached the faith of that people. He was a man of pleasing address and gentlemanly manners, and was popular while here as a pastor. It is stated as an interesting fact that, notwithstanding these winning qualities, he was not able to induce a single person here to accept his views. 6th. Rev. Foranda Bestor; settled in November, 1841, and closed his labors January, 1848; he preached afterward for several years, and later joined a son in business at Hartford. 7th. Rev. Volney Church; settled here in 1848; resigned in the spring of 1849; went West; supposed to have continued in the ministry. 8th. Rev. Orlando Cunningham; settled here in July, 1850, and continued until the spring of 1855; went to Connecticut; his health failed, and he went into the insurance business. 9th. Rev. Lewis Holmes; services commenced April, 1858, and continued to May, 1864; now residing in Plymouth, Mass. 10th. Rev. J. M. Rockwood, the present minister; commenced his labors here in May, 1865, and is therefore now in the fourteenth year of his pastorate.

Record of the Deacons.—John Newton, a deacon of the Hinsdale Church, afterward of this church, was chosen Oct. 23, 1817; died aged ninety-five. Clark Martin, chosen July 1, 1821; died in office. David Ballou, chosen July 1, 1821; died in office. Moses Gamwell, date not given; died in 1865. William W. Leonard, chosen Jan. 25, 1831; removed to Becket. Solomon Root, chosen Jan. 7, 1835; died in office. Oliver Smith, chosen Jan. 7, 1835; yet living; the senior deacon of the church. Ebenezer Smith, chosen April 13, 1856; died in office. Eldridge Pease, chosen April 13, 1856; died in office. Solomon F. Root, date not given; removed to Hinsdale. Morgan Pease, chosen Jan. 6, 1875; present deacon (1879). Harlow Loveland, chosen Jan. 6, 1875; present deacon (1879).

The clerks have been Matthew Smith, 1817-30; Solomon Root, Jr., 1830-43; John Smith, 1843-53; Solomon F. Root, 1853-55; Samuel Smith, 1856; Solomon F. Root, 1856-60; Charles Wright, 1860 to the present time (1879).

Present church committee: M. J. Smith, Morgan Pease, Wallace Pease; the last named is treasurer; superintendent of Sunday-school, Charles Wright; present number of communicants, 92; congregation, 75 to 100.

It will be of convenient reference to add at this point some notes from an address before the Baptist Association, a few years since, giving dates and facts applicable generally to western Hampshire County:

The First Baptist Church of Chesterfield was formed in 1780; those of Cummington and Plainfield, in 1821; and the Second Baptist Church of Chesterfield, in 1824. Of the First Baptist Church of Chesterfield, Ebenezer Vining was an early pastor. In 1803, Rev. Asa Todd became pastor, having left Whately for that purpose, and he continued for more than fourteen years. In 1807-8 there was a wonderful revival, and nearly one hundred persons became members by baptism. In 1811 the number of members reported was 197. It is spoken of in 1844 as sadly diminished, and needing a new house in a central position. The Goshen Baptist Church joined the Association in 1822. The Second Baptist Church of Chesterfield became a member of the Association in 1825. The Middlefield Church donated $171.93, in 1832, to the general work of the church. McCulloch, Kellogg, Eggleston, and S. S. Kingsley are spoken of as having been members of the Plainfield Church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF MIDDLEFIELD.

About 1810, or soon after, meetings of this denomination were held in the southeast part of the town. The location was in the Wright neighborhood, familiarly known as "The Den," and the school-house was the place of meeting. A class was formed, and a few years later a church was organized and constituted a part of Pittsfield Circuit. Among early families that were interested in sustaining this work were those of Thomas Ward, Jesse Wright, Nathan Wright, Ambrose Smith, Alexander Dickson, Horatio N. Dickson, and others. There were several from the neighboring portions of the towns of Chester and Worthington.

Thomas Ward was very much the leader of the movement.

He was known far and wide as "Father Ward." In the absence of a minister he conducted meetings, and was very successful as an active Christian worker. The church was connected with the Dalton Circuit a few years later; afterward it was a part of the Hinsdale Circuit; and still later this, with other churches, constituted the Middlefield and Washington Circuit. A small but neat and convenient chapel was erected about 1827 or 1828. It stood near the present residence of G. W. Howe, formerly the Jesse Wright place. About the same time, and for several years, there was an extensive religious interest in connection with this church. Large audiences attended the little rural chapel; many young men were converted. At that period the congregation is said to have been as large as that of any other society in town. In 1853 or 1854 the society moved to the centre. The house of worship was taken down and rebuilt south of the town-house. Several of the people living in the old neighborhood regretted the change, and perhaps the society lost something of its former strength by the new departure.

The ministers preaching in the older times are not easily recalled by the families now remaining. The great revival work of 1827-30 was conducted by Rev. Peter C. Oakley and Bradley Selleck. At the centre the following ministers, and perhaps others, officiated: Rev. Messrs. Shurtleff, Morgan, Boxley, Cobb, and Johns.

In 1861-62 the society was very much weakened by a large number of deaths and removals, occurring not far from the same time. The number left were too few to continue the services successfully; the society was dissolved, and the house of worship sold to the Congregational Church for a chapel, the families remaining finding in the growing liberality of modern times pleasant association with other churches.

Among the later officers of the Methodist Church were George Spencer, class-leader, and John L. Bell and Mr. Spencer, stewards. To Mr. Bell we are indebted for the facts given in this notice, as well as for other facts in the civil and military history of the town. He also furnishes the following facts relating to a period still earlier than the organization of the church above given. A class was formed in 1801 or 1802, consisting probably of Thomas Ward and wife, Daniel Falley and wife, David Cross and wife, Samuel Brown and wife, Jesse Brown and wife, also the Gilberts, Rhoades, Talcotts, Mrs. Elijah Churchill, and others, Thomas Ward being class-leader. They first held meetings in a barn standing on the east side of the brook, near the place of George W. House; afterward in the school-house, some thirty rods north.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The first action of the town is the following:

May 28, 1783.—Voted that Josiah Leonard and Joseph Blish, Jr., be grave-diggers or sextons for the ensuing year.

March 1, 1784.—Voted that the town will purchase one-quarter of an acre of land for a burying-place of Mr. Josiah Leonard. Voted to give Mr. Leonard ten shillings for fencing the said ground. Voted "if any person will clear the logs out of the burial-place it shall be deducted out of his highway tax."

The list of burial-places in town seems to include the following: 1st. The main or central cemetery, east of the village. This is now a large burial-ground, convenient of access, having been enlarged from time to time. It is in good preservation, showing considerable taste, as well as loving care, in the arrangement and beautifying of the lots. It is the principal place of burial in the town, and has some fine monuments. 2d. There is a very old burial-place in the south part of the town, near the present residence of George Bell. 3d. Near the village is the first burial-place of all. Here rests the "faithful steward," Deacon Mack, after his long and useful life. This place needs very much to be improved with new fences, and by clearing out and adorning the grounds of the beloved dead render them a place to be visited with reverent footsteps, not only by the descendants of the pioneer, but by many who have been spiritually blessed in reading the story of his active Christian life. 4th. The Wright family burial-place. This is near the present residence of C. B. Wright, at Glendale Farm. This dates back perhaps to 1800, and includes a few from other families. It is in good preservation. 5th. There is the private family burial-place of one branch of the Church family, near the residence in former years of Wm. Church, and in later times of Green Church.

TOWN SOCIETIES.

THE HIGHLAND AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.*

Aug. 28, 1856, a partial organization was made for a "cattle-show." Ambrose Loveland was chosen President, and S. F. Root Secretary. The first exhibition was held the 17th of September following. The day was fine, and stock of various kinds was on the ground at an early hour, as well as a large concourse of people. In the afternoon an address was delivered in the Congregational Church by Rev. Moody Harrington, of Middlefield. This cattle-show was so successful that it was determined to have an organized society. Jan. 3, 1857, a meeting of prominent citizens from this and different towns was held for the purpose of organizing a society. A constitution and by-laws were then adopted. Matthew Smith was chosen President; Edwin McElwain, Secretary; and S. F. Root, Treasurer. Those becoming members were required to pay one dollar each annually, and liberal premiums were offered, with the expectation that the society would pay such a proportion as its funds were equal to after paying necessary expenses. A fine pole, eighty feet in length, and of beautiful proportions, was brought from Peru, and presented to the society by Peter Geer, of that town, upon which was hoisted the Stars and Stripes, a beautiful flag contributed by the ladies. The exhibition was held September 23d, and, though the weather was unfavorable, about 400 head of cattle were on the ground, besides a fine display of horses and a fair number of sheep and swine. Among the horses were the celebrated "Lone Star," "Lone Star, Jr.," "Black Hawk," etc. Chester furnished 65 yokes of oxen and steers in one string, headed by a "sturdy bull," decorated with bells and ribbons, and ridden by a stout boy, all drawing a large wagon ornamented with a profusion of flowers and evergreens, carrying the musicians of the day, with the national flag floating over their heads. The address was delivered by Dr. T. K. De Wolf. The grounds on Agricultural Hill were donated to the society by Matthew Smith. Steps were then taken to secure life members and become incorporated. Much credit is due Matthew Smith, of Middlefield, whose untiring energy did very much toward accomplishing the desired object. An incorporation was effected in 1859, allowing the society the territory of three counties,—Berkshire, Hampshire, and Hampden. Agricultural Hall was built at a cost of $925, and the structure was completed in time for the cattle-show, and for the first ladies' fair, held a few days before.

The death of Dr. James U. Church, a young, active, enthusiastic member, and president of the society, cast a gloom over the transactions of the society that year, in a measure restraining much of the enthusiasm which would otherwise have been manifested. George H. Huntington, of Becket, was appointed in his place. On the second day Hon. George S. Boutwell delivered the address. Jan. 9, 1860, George H. Huntington was again elected president. Matthew Smith was chosen delegate to the State Board of Agriculture. Prof. Wm. S. Clarke delivered the address; subject, "The Horse." In 1861, Dr. George B. Loring, of Salem, delivered an address that greatly encouraged the society, just then meeting with discouragements. The society, subjected to a severe test, survived its troubles, was prosperous, and has from year to year increased in numbers. At one time beef and summer pasturing threatened to undermine the society, and for a little the attention of the farmer seemed centring in that direction; an effort was also made to have the society moved to some place more easy of access on the line of the railroad. After a brief struggle, that was abandoned, and the members now work together harmoniously. The literary entertainment on the evening of the first day of the annual fair is an institution peculiarly our own. It attracts a class of educated men and women of every creed, securing speeches, music, and a thorough good time.

* By Jonathan McElwain.

Presidents.—Monroe F. Watkins, 1862-63; Charles O. Perkins, 1864-65; Charles W. Knox, 1866-67; Metcalf J. Smith, 1868-69; Simon H. White, 1870-71; Orrin Millard, 1872-73; William S. Bowen, 1874-75; Charles Fay, 1876-77.

Addresses.—Dr. George B. Loring, 1862; Rev. John H. Bisbee, 1863; L. Witherell, Esq., 1864; Hon. Joseph White, 1865; Rev. Wm. N. Rice, 1866; Rev. James F. Clark, 1867; Hon. Charles L. Flint, 1868; Prof. L. Stockbridge, 1869; Rev. J. M. Rockwood, 1870; Prof. John Tatlock, 1871; Samuel B. Quigley, 1872; Alexander Hyde, Esq., 1873; Dr. Geo. B. Loring, 1874; Prof. Edward P. Smith, 1875; L. M. Gamwell, Esq., 1876; L. F. Mellen, Esq., 1877.

Delegates to State Board for Three Years.—Matthew Smith, 1860-63; Munroe F. Watkins, 1865; Geo. T. Plunkett, 1868; Jonathan McElwain, 1871; Metcalf J. Smith, 1874; Abiel K. Abbott.

LODGE NO. 68; I. O. G. T.,

organized at Middlefield, Tuesday evening, Aug. 8, 1871. The lodge was instituted by Mr. T. S. Wait, of Westfield, and Mrs. Lane, of the same place. The number of charter members was 15. The first officers were S. F. Root, W. C. T.; Mrs. Mary S. McElwain, W. V. T.; Charles Wright, P. W. C. T.; Mrs. Lydia J. Geer, W. R. S.; Dwight Smith, W. A. R. S.; John Dickson, W. F. S.; Mrs. Sarah S. Wright, W. T.; Milton Dickson, W. M.; Miss Eliza A. Smith, W. D. M.; Royal D. Geer, W. C.; Mrs. Ann S. Root, R. H. S.; Miss Elsie Wright, L. H. S.; John Metcalf, W. I. G.; Joseph Ingham, W. O. G. S. F. Root soon after was elected lodge deputy. The lodge met at the school-house, also at private houses, and, after the town-hall was complete, in that. The lodge has maintained a vigorous existence, and now has about 60 members. Charles Wright followed Mr. Root as deputy, and the present deputy is M. J. Smith. This is the only temperance organization in the place, and the lodge has wielded a strong temperance influence.

Present Officers (1879).—Azariah Root, W. C. T.; Mary Smith, R. H. S.; Vara Geer, L. H. S.; Alice Smith, W. V. T.; — Lyman, W. C.; Clara Ferris, W. S.; Mrs. Charles Wright, W. T.; William S. Wright, W. F. S.; Willis Graves, W. M.; Emma Geer, W. D. M.; Phebe Sims, W. I. G.; Cooley Graves, W. O. G.; John Bryan, P. W. C. T.

MIDDLEFIELD GRANGE, P. H.,

organized Feb. 9, 1874. Deputy Newton was present as instituting officer, and 26 members were admitted. The first officers were Metcalf J. Smith, W. M.; Solomon F. Root, W. S.; C. C. Thompson, Overseer; J. McElwain, Lecturer; Chas. Wright, Steward; Chas. M. Combs, Assistant Steward; Hiram Taylor, Chaplain; Harlow Loveland, Treas.; Elwin W. Geer, Gate-keeper; Mrs. C. M. Combs, Lady Assistant Steward; Mrs. Daniel Alderman, Flora; Mrs. C. C. Thompson, Ceres; Mrs. Amasa Graves, Pomona. The grange met at the town-hall. The meetings were very pleasant social occasions, and considerable business was transacted, but have been suspended for several months.

PLACES OF SPECIAL NOTE.

These have been noted under other heads,—the place of the first town-meeting, at the house of David Mack (the present Haskell place), and the points where the first openings were made in the forest in 1773.

The house of Samuel Jones (the present place of George Bell) was the headquarters of the "Shays men" in this vicinity during that exciting period. The Shays leaders were arrested there after Col. Mack's visit to Springfield. When the company of Shays men, 80 in number, fled from Springfield after their repulse before the armory, they were undoubtedly gathered at Samuel Jones' place when surrounded and compelled to surrender by the State troops.

The falls upon the farm of C. B. Wright are worthy of special note, and will repay well the traveler and the summer tourist for a visit. A series of rapids and successive cascades, extending for a third of a mile and descending over 200 feet, form a charming resort for the lover of nature. Were it better known, this wild, rocky glen would take rank with other places more famous, but not more beautiful.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The people of Middlefield are largely engaged in agriculture. Lumber and firewood in early times were articles of extensive sale. In later years, after the opening of the Boston and Albany Railroad, large tracts were cleared of timber for wood. The introduction of coal upon the road put an end mostly to the firewood business. Considerable charcoal was burned in former years and marketed. Maple-sugar has always been made in large quantities, and is still an important item in the business of the town. Mr. Clarkson Smith, who has a very extensive "sugar bush," sometimes makes 6000 or 7000 pounds a year. The sugar season is one of the busiest portions of the year in Middlefield, requiring close attention and the employment of extra hands.

The soil of Middlefield, though not well adapted to tillage, is well suited to grazing. Much attention was formerly given to the raising of fine wool. Every effort was made to perfect the quality of the staple. Ten thousand sheep were sometimes sheared in a single year. This business lost very much of its importance some years ago, and wool is now the lowest of the ten leading articles of production. Much attention has been paid to the rearing of fine cattle. Purity of blood, beauty of form, and color have received much care, and a writer twenty years ago stated that such efforts had been given to this department of farm business as to have banished the old native breed of cattle, and supplanted them with thoroughbred stock. This is still a leading feature of the town. The agricultural society located here, with its annual fair, has had a large influence in promoting improvement, and Middlefield has become justly celebrated among the neighboring towns for its fat cattle, its thoroughbred cattle, and its working cattle. There are a number of fine farms in this town, and many of the farm buildings are neatly painted, giving evidence of thrift and energy.

Soapstone exists in the northeast part of the town. Two extensive quarries were opened about thirty years ago. Something in the way of quarrying for local use had been done still earlier, the stone having been cut out for jambs to fireplaces and similar purposes. In 1853 "The Metropolitan Soapstone Company of New York City" was incorporated with a capital of $200,000, which was afterward increased to $300,000. This company commenced extensive operations, marketing 100 tons per week. Gen. Charles B. Stuart was president of the company. The bed is several hundred feet in length, and has an average width of 30 feet. It is of a gray color, although it is in some places slightly variegated, which is the best and handsomest quality for building purposes. The company had two mills at work for sawing this stone and grinding a portion of it into powder. They had a yard—New York City, at No. 260 West 13th Street—occupying an acre of ground, with a steam-engine, an iron building, and machinery for working of the stone. In Middlefield they employed 18 or 20 hands, and the teaming from the works to the station—four miles—afforded considerable occupation to citizens of the town. The company, however, only continued these operations for a few years, finally abandoning the whole business, 1860-61. It is understood that the operations failed to be as remunerative as was expected, owing to the expenses of quarrying, manufacturing, and shipment. There is no doubt of the abundance and richness of the deposit in Middlefield.

MILL-SITES, FACTORIES, ETC.

On the Middle Branch of the Westfield, forming the east boundary-line of the town, the water-power has not been improved by any mills upon the Middlefield side of the stream. Upon Tuttle's Brook, in the northeast part of the town, were the mills of the Soapstone Quarry Company, above mentioned. Upon the site of these, or near, was the old factory of Addison Everett, for the making of wooden bowls. Mr. Everett was an ingenious man, and devised machinery for turning bowls which almost revolutionized the business in this country, making rapidly and skillfully what had before been done slowly and imperfectly. It is said he was offered a great price for his invention, but declined to sell, and that afterward the secret of his methods was rather more privately than legally obtained, and he failed to realize any valuable result for himself. Farther up the stream a few rods was an old saw-mill, dating back to the early times.

Tracing the brook known as "Den Stream" from its junction with the Middle Branch, the first business establishment was a tannery, run for some years by Prentice & Robbins. It was given up probably 1838 to 1840. Earlier than the above firm it had been carried on by Rutherford. Above, on the Wright farm, is the site of the old grist-mill built and run by Mr. Rhodes, one of the two earliest settlers. The property next passed to Mr. Noney (or Nooney), and then to the Wrights. The grist-mill was given up sixty or seventy years ago. A saw-mill at the same point was continued till later times. Farther up this stream were the turning-works of Giles Churchill, afterward owned by L. Churchill. These were abandoned some years ago. Next above was a saw-mill, built, it is thought, by Joseph Little, afterward owned by G. & C. Churchill. This was fifty years ago or more, and the mills were given up soon after. Still above is the saw-mill of Jonathan McElwain, built by Ithamar Pelton fifty or sixty years ago. There was a saw-mill in very old times near the present residence of M. J. Smith, built by his grandfather, Matthew Smith. In the south, on "Tan-House Brook," was a large tannery at one time; John Metcalf was an early proprietor. Later the business was carried on by Mr. Dickson, and afterward by Robbins & Handy. They gave up the business 1840-42, and it has not been renewed since. On this site, or near, was located the cheese-factory, owned by a company, and continued for five years, from 1871-72 to 1876-77. The building is now used for a dwelling-house. Above was a cider-distillery, carried on first, it is said, by Dr. William Coleman, afterward by successive owners, Holcomb, Alderman, Pease. On Cole's Brook was formerly a saw-mill, operated by Theodore Coats. It was very near the town-line. Factory Stream, so called, remains to be traced. Commencing at the north, there was once a saw-mill, owned by Mr. Parish, on the present Lyman Meacham farm. This continued for only a few years.

At Factory village the earliest improvement of the water-power was probably by Mr. Herrick, who erected a fulling-mill perhaps 1790 to 1792, though it may have been earlier than that. This was bought about 1800 by Amasa Blush, and run by him for a time. He built a saw-mill upon the west side of the river about 1805, and also built a new clothing-mill for finishing custom-work. This was opposite the residence of the late Wm. D. Blush. 1815 to 1818 he followed this with an enterprise of greater magnitude, erecting a factory a little below. This, with the subsequent additions and improvements, was a building 36 feet by 80, and three stories in height. In this factory Oliver Blush and Wm. D. Blush succeeded their father about 1830, and carried on the business together for many years. The factory was destroyed by fire about 1850, and rebuilt, and the second one was destroyed at the time the reservoir gave way in 1874, the building becoming a complete wreck and broken into kindling-wood. It was owned by Oliver Blush at the time of the flood, and has not been rebuilt. Some time previous to 1874, Wm. D. Blush, retiring from the factory, established wood-turning works a little below, and manufactured spokes, shafts, felloes, and other parts of wagons. This building was also destroyed in the disastrous flood of 1874, and has not been rebuilt.

At Factory village, Uriah Church (son of the early pioneer Uriah) built a clothing-mill perhaps as early as 1808 or 1810. It stood just below the present upper mill. He carried on this business until 1823 or 1824, when he built a woolen-factory on the site of the upper mill, and manufactured broadcloth. This business was continued steadily. Mr. Church died in 1851, and he was succeeded by his sons,—Sumner U., James T., Lyman, and Oliver. This factory was burned in 1870. A new building was commenced upon the same site in 1873, but work upon it was delayed by the freshet of 1874, and it was not finished until 1875. It includes three sets of machinery, and requires the employment of about 30 hands. The line of work made is Union broadcloth.

In 1848, Uriah Church erected the lower mill, and this has been run to the present time except as interrupted by the disaster of 1874 and other damages from time to time. It includes three sets of machinery. The four brothers succeeded their father in this factory also, and the two mills have been under their united management since his death. The finishing is done at the lower mill, and about 50 hands are required there. During the war large quantities of army blankets were made at these mills. The goods of the firm are sold in New York, through the house of Van Valkenburg & Leavitt. To obtain water-power of sufficient volume and regularity, a large reservoir was built just above by the united mill-owners of the village.

This was afterward built higher. Two more were added above in later years. The breaking away of the upper one caused the great wash-out of 1874. The upper reservoirs have not been rebuilt, only the lower one being retained.

A mile below Factory village is the site of the early saw-mill and the grist-mill of John Ford. The grist-mill was abandoned a long time ago, and the saw-mill and dam were torn away by the flood of 1874 and not rebuilt. The paper-mills in the vicinity of the railroad station are not in the town of Middlefield. The "shoddy-mill," so called, a mile or more below, was just within the town. Its original business was to grind up "waste" for use in other mills, and its name was obtained in that way. Manufacturing was, however, afterward carried on. Badly damaged in the freshet of December, 1878, the proprietors decided not to rebuild, and have removed their machinery from town.

The ten leading articles of farm produce for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values stated: Butter, $6034; beef, $6502; hay, $18,018; milk, $5667; potatoes, $3749; firewood, $5431; manure, $3540; maple-sugar, $3396; pork, $1741; wool, $1552.

MILITARY.

The town was not organized until the last year of the Revolutionary war, 1783, and previous to that the settlers were attached to several other towns, and it is difficult to trace the connection which the citizens of the present territory of Middlefield may have had with that struggle for national independence. The following citizens are understood to have been in the Revolutionary army,—whether before or after the settlement in Middlefield is not determined: Timothy McIlwain, Lewis Taylor, John Smith, Elijah Churchill, Solomon

Ingham, Erastus Ingham, Amasa Graves, Sr., Thomas Durrant, Sr.

SHAYS' REBELLION.

The difficulties following the Revolution were felt in this town, and quite a number of the people favored the insurgent plans of Shays. A requisition was sent to Capt. David Mack to appear at Springfield with a certain number of his men and join the government forces. He accordingly drafted his men and gave orders for their appearance at his house the next morning prepared to march, but in the mean time the company appointed new officers and declared for Shays. Early on the morning appointed they surrounded the house of Capt. Mack, declaring him a prisoner. The captain, after exhorting to his utmost the men to abandon their disloyal course, and without avail, then as a prisoner asked for a furlough of three days, which they granted. At their request he wrote it, and, having procured the signatures of the newly-appointed officers, he put the interesting document in his pocket and hastened to Springfield. On his arrival he immediately repaired to headquarters and presented himself to Gen. Shepard, to whom he exhibited his furlough. After examining it, Gen. Shepard said, "Well, Capt. Mack, as you have no men to fight with, you may go home; we shall immediately attend to the men who have signed this paper." They were soon arrested and placed in Northampton jail.

The surrender of a large company of the insurgents took place in the town of Middlefield. After the defeat at Springfield, Jan. 25, 1787, one division, under Shays, fled to Pelham, another to Northampton under Luke Day, and a third, under Capt. Luddington, westward. This last consisted of some 80 men in 10 sleighs. They were pursued by 50 Brookfield volunteers, under Col. Baldwin, and 100 cavalry, under Col. Crafts. The men showed signs of fight even after their leader, Capt. Luddington, had yielded, but resistance was useless; they went back from Middlefield prisoners of war.

The following official action by the town appears in the records during this period of excitement.

A town-meeting was called Nov. 2, 1786, with the following clause in the warrant:

"To choose a delegate or delegates to meet other delegates from towns throughout the county, at the house of Mr. Elisha Cook, innholder, in Hadley, on the first Tuesday in Nov. next, at one o'clock P.M., for the following very necessary purposes, viz.: to choose a committee to confer with committees from other counties on the present distressful situation of public affairs. 2ndly. To choose a committee to prepare a 'nervis' petition to the Honorable General Court, with such justness, perspicuity, and suitable address as may not fail to be effective for our public relief." Voted Lieut. James Dickson a delegate to the Hadley convention.

Aug. 15, 1786.—Chose Mr. Samuel Jones and Lieut. James Dickson delegates to attend a Convention at Hatfield.

Jan. 22, 1787.—Chose James Dickson a delegate to a Convention to meet at Hadley. At this time an address from the General Court to the people of this commonwealth was read, and a petition for redress of grievances to the General Court seems to have been considered, but not acted upon.

WAR OF 1812.

In the warrant for a town-meeting to be held July 13, 1812, were the clauses:

"That the town may have an opportunity in a public manner to manifest their opinion concerning the late declaration of war by the government of the United States against Great Britain," and "To see if the town will choose delegates to meet in convention at Northampton on the 14th inst."

They voted the war inexpedient, with only seven dissenting voices. The well-known public sentiment of New England could scarcely permit any other result; but the seven who thought it right to stand by the national government and patriotically voted so are worthy to be remembered,—viz., M. Smith, Esq., William Skinner, William Church, Green H. Church, Warren Church, Lieut. A. Dickson, and Deacon J. Newton. Erastus Ingham was chosen to the Northampton Convention. The only other allusion to this matter in the records seems to be a vote to pay the expense of carrying a detachment of men from this town to Palmer in the fall of 1814, probably a part of the force that was called out for the defense of Boston. The following went to Boston, and probably others: Maj. David Mack (afterward the general), Lieut. Matthew Smith, Capt. Solomon Root, Abel Cheeseman, and Abraham Moffett.

CIVIL WAR, 1861-65.

Several meetings were held, known as "war-meetings," during the progress of the war. If they were not strictly official, their action was afterward approved and acquiesced in with the same patriotic promptness as appeared in all the towns of this section. Bounties were voted, aid provided for families, and the several quotas of the town speedily filled. From 40 to 45 citizens of the town went into the service, and 13 lost their lives. Two substitutes were killed, making the number of the dead 15. Quite a number of men were hired abroad under the direction of John L. Bell, chairman of the town board; so that Middlefield furnished 86 men in all for the war, which was a surplus of 7 over and above all demands. Two were commissioned officers. The whole amount of aid paid solely by the town was $14,490; the assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $308,332, and the population 748. The war expenses paid were equal to $19 per head of the whole population,—men, women, and children. Aid for families, afterward paid by the State, was in 1861, $146.74; 1862, $536.62; 1863, $902.80; 1864, $260; 1865, $111; total, $1957.76.

Generous contributions were privately made for the various departments of patriotic work. The ladies united in making up clothing for the soldiers, and boxes of general supplies, of considerable money value, were sent forward.

SOLDIERS' LIST.

- | | | |
|--|--|---|
| Clarkson Smith, 1st sergt., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863. | Edward L. Higgins, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863. | Wm. M. Churchill, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. G; disch. Oct. 29, 1862, for disability. |
| Wm. C. Blush, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863. | Levi J. Olds, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. June 1, 1863, to re-enl. in H. Art., which he joined in Aug. 1863; died in the service. | Edwin D. Bemis, enl. Oct. 14, 1861, 15th Inf., Co. I; re-enl. Feb. 2, 1864; trans. July 27, 1864, to 20th Inf.; disch. July 13, 1865, for disability; wounded in the head. |
| George W. Cottrell, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863. | Napoleon F. Filloo, enl. Dec. 18, 1863, 2d Cav., Co. D; disch. July 20, 1865. | Charles M. Buck, enl. Aug. 23, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. B; died March 27, 1862, on steamer "North-erner." |
| John Damon, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863. | Charles Kelly, enl. Dec. 31, 1864, 2d Cav., Co. G; disch. July 20, 1865. | Edwin C. Bidwell, asst. surg., enl. Feb. 20, 1862, 31st Inf.; pro. to surg., April 29, 1862; disch. Sept. 9, 1865; was the physician in practice at Middlefield when the war broke out. |
| Henry Dickson, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died April 8, 1863, at Plymouth, N. C.; afterward brought to Middlefield for burial. | George R. Robbins, corp., enl. Dec. 31, 1863, 2d Inf., Co. B; disch. July 14, 1865. | Seth Wait, enl. Jan. 28, 1862, 31st Inf., Co. I; disch. June 20, 1862, for disability, and died from effects of service. |
| Henry E. Dimmock, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863. | George Bliss, enl. Dec. 21, 1863, 2d Inf., Co. B; disch. July 14, 1865. | Calvin Noble, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; died Dec. 15, 1862, at Fort Lyon, Va. |
| James Espy, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. to re-enl. May 30, 1863; re-enl. Aug. 1863, 2d H. Art., Co. D. | Francis Murray, enl. May 25, 1861, 2d Inf., Co. B; disch. July 26, 1863; died soon after his return. | Henry Noble, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; died Dec. 4, 1862, at Fort Lyon, Va. |
| George Ingham, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. July 29, 1863. | Charles W. Robbins, enl. Dec. 31, 1863, 2d Inf., Co. B; died at Louisville, Ky., before joining the regiment. | Michael Stanley, enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; killed May 6, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.; substitute who lost his life for the town. |
| James Rowen, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863; disabled by rheumatism and helpless. | Robert Burns, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. G; died of wounds, May 31, 1862, at Fair Oaks, Va. | John Waters, enl. March 10, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. I; |
| Thomas A. Willson, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died May 2, 1863, at Newbern, N. C. | Uriah F. Cheeseman, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. G; disch. July 1, 1864. | |

Photo, by Moore Bros., Springfield.

Wm. D. Blush

The family of this well-known citizen was among the earliest settlers of Middlefield. His grandfather, Joseph Blush, from Colchester, Conn., located about the commencement of the Revolutionary war at what is now Middlefield Centre.

Amasa Blush, one of the sons of Joseph, was an early manufacturer in Middlefield, as shown in the general notes upon that town. His wife was Nancy, daughter of Thomas Durant, of Middlefield, formerly of Boston.

William D. Blush, whose portrait appears upon this page, was a son of Amasa, and passed his whole life in Middlefield. He was born Feb. 3, 1809, in the old family dwelling, which was torn down some years ago and replaced by the fine residence now occupied by Mrs. Blush, his widow.

He was educated in the common schools, and received a careful business training, under the supervision of his father, acquiring a thorough knowledge of manufacturing in all of its departments.

He married, June 13, 1833, Eliza Senett, of Blandford. Their children were five, of whom only one survives at the present time,—William C. Blush, of Bridgeport, Conn. Mrs. Blush died Aug. 1, 1844.

Mr. Blush married (second) Lucy Johnson, of Chester. She died May 21, 1847.

He married (third) Harriet Stone, of Chester, Mass. By this marriage there were three children, two of whom are living,—Arthur Blush, merchant, of Monson, Mass., and Harriet, wife of George K. Brown, of Middlefield.

Mrs. Blush died June 26, 1855, and Mr. Blush married (fourth) Mary W., daughter of Rufus Prentice, of Worthington, and who was the widow of George F. Fox, of Haydenville. This fourth marriage took place Jan. 3, 1856, and there were four children born to them, all of whom are living: Emma, born April 24, 1857, and now the wife of Frederick B. Hatheway, of Suffield, Conn.; Edward Durant, born Dec. 8, 1860; Agnes Ulin, born Sept. 26, 1862; Martha Sampson, born March 28, 1866.

In politics, Mr. Blush was first a Whig and then a Republican, but was averse to holding office, and unwilling to share in the excitement of political campaigns. He was a member of the Congregational Church of Middlefield, active in its support, and contributed freely to carry on its various enterprises.

Through his long business career he was known as a man of integrity, enjoyed the confidence of those who were associated with him, acquired many friends, and was esteemed by all the community. He was genial in his intercourse with others, and his home was a place of hospitality and generous entertainment. He was interesting in conversation, and could relate numerous incidents of the olden times prior to the days of railroads.

His business life was long and active, extending over a period of forty years, as given in the history of the town. He was a man of great energy, pushed his various enterprises in the face of many opposing obstacles, and, by his diligence and industry, gained a handsome competence.

When his buildings were burned, in 1850, he replaced them promptly, and continued in business. When his factory was swept away, in the flood of 1874, he was then in advanced life, and decided not to rebuild. He retired from his life-work of manufacturing, and engaged in farming, devoting his attention especially to the raising of fine stock. In these peaceful pursuits he passed the last years of his life. He died March 19, 1879, aged seventy years.

Harvey Root

HARVEY ROOT traces his ancestry on his paternal side back to John Roote. He was believed to be the son of John Roote, of Badby, Northamptonshire, England, who married Mary Russell in 1600. He was born in Badby, according to the parish records, Feb. 26, 1608. Emigrated to this country with a company of Puritans, and settled at Farmington, in 1640, being among the first settlers. Here he was a prominent citizen. Soon after the settlement he married Mary, daughter of Thomas and Frances Kilbourne. John Roote died August, 1684, in his seventy-sixth year. He had eight children, of whom Thomas was the third son. He was born about 1648, in Farmington, Conn., and removed with his brothers, John and Samuel, to Westfield, Mass., where he died Aug. 16, 1709. Thomas Roote married three times. His second wife was Mary Spencer, whom he married Oct. 7, 1675. By this union they had six children. Timothy, his son, was born Dec. 3, 1685, in Westfield, Mass., and died Nov. 2, 1743. He married, in 1710, Sarah, daughter of John Pease, of Enfield, Conn. He removed from Westfield to Enfield, and from there to Somers, Conn., about 1713, where he was one of the first settlers. He had seven children. Thomas, his second son, was born in Somers, Conn., in 1726, and married twice; his second wife being Alice, daughter of Israel and Sarah (Booth) Pease. She died Dec. 30, 1821, aged eighty-five. They first settled in Enfield, Conn., and removed to Middlefield, Mass., in 1783, where he died March 15, 1821. By this marriage there were four children, of whom Solomon was the eldest. Born in 1765, in Enfield, Conn., where he married Mary Selden, and removed to Middlefield, Mass., where he died Aug. 8, 1831, aged sixty-six. They had seven children,—five sons and two daughters. These children were Polly, Julia, Solomon, Timothy, Selden, Harvey, and Nathan. Solomon and Timothy were merchants in Middlefield. The former was a soldier in the war of 1812. Nathan is a farmer, and lives in Chester, Mass.

Harvey Root was born in Middlefield, Mass., April 26, 1795. He passed his boyhood at home, working for his father on the farm, and attending the common schools, until about his sixteenth or seventeenth year, when he left home for a time, engaging with George Blake, a contractor, of Springfield, Mass., who was delivering the stone for the floor of the present jail of the city, then in process of construction. He worked for him two winters, returning home and assisting his father during the summers. He also did other work for Mr. Blake, and, with another young man, chopped from pine trees divested of the limbs twenty-two cords in one day, the same having been measured.

Mr. Root had about this time obtained considerable experience in laying stone walls, or "walling," as familiarly known, and, there being a demand for experienced "wallers" in Connecticut, he went to Danbury, and engaged with various parties in this work. One summer he built, himself, one thousand rods. We are informed by his neighbors that Mr. Root could build eight to ten rods a day, and so smoothly and perfectly was it done that his services were constantly in demand. This was prior to his twenty-first year, and his earnings went to his father. When he had reached his majority he had saved $40, nearly all in old coppers, which he had earned by picking the wool from off sheep-pelts for neighbors. The pelts were given him for his labor, and he sold the same for ninepence apiece. This amount he loaned to a party, and it is still on interest. He worked one moonlight night at reaping, receiving a silver dollar for the same, and took up his next day's work as usual.

Mr. Root, being of age, made an arrangement with Martin Starr, of Middlefield, and together they went to Danbury, Conn., and in six months they had earned $700. They then engaged with a Mr. Tweedy, of Danbury, to chop four hundred cords of oak and chestnut wood from the stump, and they averaged eight cords each working-day, and walked a mile and a half from their stopping-place, taking their cold lunch for dinner along with them. This ended his work in Connecticut, as shortly afterward he returned to Middlefield. John Ferris, of Danbury, for whom Mr. Root had worked, bought his oxen, and paid him $50 bonus not to return to Danbury to do walling. Mr. Root then worked diligently at different places, saving his hard earnings; and, when he was twenty-eight years old, married, Jan. 24, 1822, Sally, daughter of Daniel Pease, of Middlefield. She was then nineteen years of age.

His father-in-law put Mr. Root in charge of his several farms, comprising about eight hundred acres, in Middlefield, and for this labor he was to receive one-half the profits. He continued here three years, raising cattle, keeping a dairy, and making a large amount of cheese and butter.

In 1825, Mr. Root purchased a portion of this land, and, with forty acres of woodland given him by Mr. Pease, he commenced farming for himself. He bought his present home about 1846, and has resided there since. He paid special attention to the raising of fine stock, receiving a premium from the Middlefield Agricultural Society for his cattle, and for a number of years, with the exception of two years, he took the premium for the superior excellence of his swine.

Mr. Root, by his industry and economy, has accumulated a competence, and, although in the eighty-fourth year of his age, is still active, mentally and physically.

He has never sued any man for a debt, nor has he been sued,—something few men can say. He is warm-hearted, hospitable, and his motto has always been "to live and let live." In his early years he was a member of a militia company, commanded by his brother Solomon. His political sentiments were first those of the Whig party, and since of the Republican.

Mrs. Root died Nov. 26, 1871. By this union there were eleven children: Franklin H., born Nov. 5, 1822; Solomon, born Nov. 6, 1824; Sarah A. and Mary A., born April 5, 1827; Lester, born Sept. 15, 1829; Corinth, born Feb. 13, 1832; Amanda, born Sept. 15, 1834; George, born Feb. 26, 1837; Harriet N., born May 27, 1839; Judson, born April 8, 1842; Laura, born Jan. 15, 1844. Lester and Laura, wife of George Chipman, reside in Middlefield.

Mr. Root married (second), May 28, 1873, Sarah A., daughter of Alpheus Hazelton, of Madison Co., N. Y. She was the widow of Ebenezer Smith, deceased, of Middlefield, but had been married twice, her first husband having been Jacob Hawes, and by him she had six children, all living, and by Mr. Smith four sons, three of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Root are both members of the Baptist Church of Middlefield.

killed June 17, 1864, at Petersburg, Va.; substitute who lost his life for the town.
 Anthony Frederick, enl. 15th Regt.
 Merrick Clark.
 John Donovan.
 John J. Vetter.
 Howard Collier, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. D; lost his life in the service; died at Brandy Station, Va., Feb. 9, 1864; credited to Chesterfield as Horace Collier in adjt.-general's report.
 John Morrissey, enl. June 13, 1861, 11th Regt., Co. A; disch. May 14, 1863.

Hugh McGee, enl. June 20, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. A; re-enl. Feb. 21, 1864; trans. to 37th Regt.; disch. Feb. 14, 1865, for disability.
 Edward Pease, enl. Conn. 1st H. Art.
 Dennis Galivan.
 Jerome Smith.
 Daniel Atwood, enl. Nov. 21, 1861, 31st Regt., Co. A; died Oct. 3, 1862, at New Orleans; credited to Chester in adjt.-general's report.
 Henry L. Lines, enl. Feb. 10, 1862, 31st Regt., Co. B; credited to Pittsfield in adjt.-general's report; re-enl. Feb. 15, 1864; disch. Feb. 10, '65.

Patrick McGee, enl. 46th Regt., Co. K.
 Michael Nooney, enl. 46th Regt., Co. K.
 Edward Otis, enl. July 14, 1863, 1st H. Art.
 James Wait, enl. Dec. 18, '63, 2d Mass. Cav., Co. D.
 William Lathrop, enl. Dec. 18, 1863, 2d Mass. Cav., Co. D.
 Wesley Bartlett, enl. Dec. 21, 1863, 2d Mass. Inf.
 James Kershaw, enl. 35th Regt., Co. C; died soon after his return, at Brattleboro', Vt.; credited to Boston in the report of the adjt.-general.

G O S H E N.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

GOSHEN is on the northern border of the county, northwest from the county-seat, and distant nine miles. It is bounded north by Franklin County; east by Franklin County and Williamsburg; south by Williamsburg and Chesterfield; west by Chesterfield and Cummington. It comprises an area of 6951 acres, as stated in the sum-total of the farm acreage by the commissioner of the census of 1875. The title to the soil is deducible from the direct grant of the colony of Massachusetts Bay. As explained in the sketch of Chesterfield, these lands were granted in the place of a barren township that had been given to soldiers who had served in the war against the Narragansett Indians. Such townships were classed as Narragansett Towns, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, etc. The portion of Goshen taken from Chesterfield direct was a part of that granted in lieu of No. 4. The rest of Goshen, or "Chesterfield Gore," was a second additional grant for the same reasons.

NATURAL FEATURES.

This irregularly-shaped town is, like its neighboring towns, of very uneven surface, broken into hills, rising to mountains at some points. Moore's Hill, in the northeast, is the principal elevation, 1713 feet high. The western and central portions of the town are drained by the tributaries of the Westfield River, and these supply water-power of considerable value. In the northeast part of the town, and near the centre, there are found tributaries of the Mill River, of Williamsburg. Large reservoirs have been built for the benefit of manufacturing establishments below. The rivulets that contribute to Mill River, and those that flow to the Westfield, are in the northern part of the town, almost interlocked with each other, the dividing ridge separating the two river-basins being narrow and low. This feature was shown in constructing the upper reservoir. A dyke of considerable height had to be built to prevent the pond from escaping westward and flowing to the Connecticut through the Westfield, rather than through Mill River.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The pioneers within the present limits of the town of Goshen were David Stearns and Abijah Tucker. They were from Dudley, as were many other of the early settlers upon the territory now constituting Goshen and Chesterfield. They came here in 1761, leaving their families in Northampton. They worked together, clearing a piece of land and erecting a log house. This locality is identified by the remains of the old cellar, thirty or forty rods north of the house, belonging in later years to Eleazer Hawks, and near the old boundary-line between Chesterfield and the Gore. In the fall they brought their families and passed the winter. Stearns finally settled upon what is known as the David Beals farm. These men, the first winter, were often absent seeking work in Northampton, and their families met the hardships of pioneer settlement alone for several days at a time. It is told of them that they had a cow and a horse that were pastured in the summer at the "Great Meadow;" that in the deep snow of the following winter the cow wandered off to the same ground one day, and night came on before the absence was noticed. Then neither of the women could safely go after the cow alone, nor stay with the children alone, so one woman mounted the horse and took the five children on with her. The other woman led the horse, and so they went after the cow, two miles away and back, through the snow.

In 1762 these two families were joined by others. That spring Col. Ezra May, with ten men as hired laborers, came on and began the work of clearing what has ever since been known as the Col. May farm. He brought with him "Old Mr. Corbin" and wife to do the house-work and the cooking. This party must have encamped not far from the present village of Goshen. The same year William White, from Charlton, bought 100 acres of land of Col. May, and two half lots of Gad Lyman, of Northampton, that being the homestead that was in possession of his son Benjamin White at the time of the latter's death, one hundred and eleven years afterward, 1873. Robert Webster, from Dudley, and Lemuel Lyon, also came in 1762.

During the next five or six years probably there came in the following additional settlers: Asa Grant, from Wrentham; John James, Jesse Wilcutt, and Zebulon Wilcutt, from Cohasset; Reuben Dresser and Ebenezer Putney, from Charlton; Thomas Brown and Daniel Brown, from Brookfield; Joshua Abell, from Rehoboth; Joseph Blake, of Braintree; Capt. John Bigelow, Isaac Kingman, and Joshua Packard, from Bridgewater; Dr. Benjamin Burgess, from Tisbury; John Smith, Timothy Lyman, Ebenezer Parsons, Justin Parsons, from Northampton. Two prominent men in public affairs came in only just before the incorporation of the town: Thomas Weeks, from Greenwich, in 1778, and Ambrose Stone, 1780. A very valuable list, comprising no doubt all the families living in Goshen in 1781, will be found under the subject of schools,—seventy-five in all.

The first person born within the limits of this town was Sally, daughter of Ezra May, in January, 1763. Samuel, son of David Stearns, the first male child, was born in March following. It is said the first apple-tree was set out by the wife of Capt. Webster; that the captain brought the sprout as a riding-stick from Northampton, and that with considerable effort his wife succeeded in making it grow.

The tornado of Aug. 19, 1788, was exceedingly violent and destructive; no lives seem to have been lost, but there was a universal destruction of fences; crops were destroyed, buildings in process of erection blown down, and others damaged.

Forty-six years afterward occurred another, very nearly in the track of the former; several barns were unroofed, and also the meeting-house of the Congregational Church, and much other damage was done. Mr. Cyrus Stearns and his little grandson were on the way home from Cummington when they were overtaken by the tempest. They were on the high bank of the Swift River, and with a portion of the wagon were blown over the precipice, seventy feet high. Mr. Stearns went down only part of the way, and was saved. The little boy went down into the stream, was taken out alive, but died the next day.

EARLY TAVERNS.

The tavern of Lemuel Lyon is said to have been the present house of Mr. Hunt. There was an older building perhaps on the west side of the road, above Elijah Billings, at present marked by an old cellar, where Mr. Lyon may have lived and kept a public-house. His widow certainly lived in the house of Mr. Hunt. John Williams kept a tavern, at which the first town-meeting was held. It stood on the hill above the burying-ground, and was moved down to the present Williams place sixty or seventy years ago, and is a part of the present residence. The Williams tavern closed perhaps thirty years ago. Jonah Williams, too, kept tavern where Daniel Williams now lives, two miles north on the Ashfield road. Col. Nehemiah May kept tavern in what is now the Marlon Damon House. This was an old and noted place. The "great council" that met to consider the case of Rev. Mr. Whitman was entertained there. The bill for liquors furnished the ministers was $27, as stated by Emmons Putney, who dealt out the article for them. He is also responsible for the following story. A horse for one of the ministers was brought up and hitched by passing the doubled end of the bridle-reins through the hole and then bringing it over the post above. When the minister came out, with a step unsteady and a flushed face, his eye caught the form of that doubled hitch. He stopped in amazement, gazed long and earnestly at the post, at the hole through it, the bridle-reins, and the horse. Stepping around to the other side, he looked at the post, at the hole through it, at the bridle-reins, at the horse.

"Is it possible! My horse has gone through that hole in the post! I can't get him back. There is only one way;" and he took out his knife and cut the bridle-rein, slung himself into the saddle, and went off.

May was succeeded by Jared Hawks, and the tavern closed a few years later. Elias White kept a tavern on the west side of the road, beyond Mr. Billings. The same building was in later years purchased by Maj. Hawks and is now a part of his barn. These are the older taverns at Goshen Centre. There was also an old tavern kept by Solomon Parsons, near the present place of Deacon Barrus. On the site of Maj. Hawks' Highland House Capt. Reuben Dresser built a tavern about 1823, and kept it for a time. He sold to D. W. Graves, who leased it to others. It was kept in subsequent years by Joseph White, Washburn & Nobles, Alfred Jones, Wm. Guilford, Israel Thompson, Edwards Bridgman, and Lysander Gurney. The property was bought by Maj. Hawks in 1855. The buildings were burned Oct. 31, 1867, and soon after rebuilt as at present in use.

The first postmaster of Goshen was John Williams, not far from the close of the last century. He was succeeded, in 1828, by his son Hinckley Williams. In 1854, or about that time, he was succeeded by John Godfrey for a year or two. In 1856, Maj. Hawks became postmaster, and retains the office to the present time.

EARLY STORES.

The first store in town was kept by John James and John Williams, on the well-known Capt. James place. The building stood until about 1875. The next store was perhaps a continuation of this, by John Williams, at the present place of Hinckley Williams. Col. Nehemiah May also had a store that stood just north of the present residence of Marlon Damon. He died in 1813. He was succeeded by D. W. Graves. A pretty early store was kept by George Salmon, 1810-15, on the hill above Elijah Billings; same building now the place of Elias White. In later times there was a store that stood in Maj. Hawks' present garden, or just south of the hotel. This was kept by Deacon Ebenezer Town, 1830-40; later by D. W. Graves.

Then there was no store kept for some years. Maj. Hawks put in a stock of goods for a short time. Albert Crafts, of Ashfield, bought the Widow Timothy Lyman place, and opened a store in the building now occupied by John H. Godfrey. Crafts sold to Knowlton, and the latter to the present proprietor. It is now the sole store in the place.

PHYSICIANS.

The earliest physician of Goshen was Dr. Isaac Robinson, of Brookfield. His home was on the Orcutt farm. He was here eleven years. A son, Dr. Joseph Robinson, was here for a time in 1794-95. Dr. Job Ranger was here also a short time, 1789-90. But Dr. Benjamin Burgess was the physician for a long series of years. He came from Rochester, Mass., about 1781, and his father had left him a large tract of land in Chesterfield and Goshen. He died in 1807, aged seventy. Dr. Ellis Coney came from Worcester County, and resided here only a few years, dying in 1807. Dr. Childs and Dr. B. C. Robinson were here in 1812-13. Dr. George Rogers followed for several years. Dr. Erastus Hawks practiced from 1817-24. Dr. Wm. C. Dwight, of Northampton, spent a year or two here. Dr. Fuller was here in 1820. A. W. Rockwell in 1822. Dr. George Wright for five years, 1826-31. J. W. Rockwell, 1833-34. Dr. Daniel Pierce, from Worthington, practiced from 1836 until near his death, which occurred in 1857. No physician has settled here regularly since. Goshen is too healthy a town to support a physician steadily.

FAMILY NOTES.

Nehemiah May. His homestead was the present place of Mahlon Damon. Of his children, Hannah became the wife of Jared Hawks, and Electa the wife of Cyrus Kingsbury, a well-known name in missionary annals.

John Williams. The first town-meeting was held at his house, the present place of Hinckley Williams. The pioneer house was above the burying-ground, moved down perhaps seventy years ago. Children: Isaac, John, of Ashfield; Seth, of Cummington; Levi, of Northampton; George Hinckley, still living in Goshen; Mrs. Nathaniel Tower, Mrs. Freeman Coffing, Mrs. George Markham. John Williams was the first postmaster, 1817-18.

Thomas Weeks. He was the first town clerk. Was from Brookfield. Came about 1780. Settled northwest, in the present Barrus neighborhood. Of his children, several died young. Mercy was Mrs. John Williams. Ezra and Levi settled in New York. Thomas Weeks was a surveyor. His old blaze, a crow's foot, is occasionally found in late years.

Joshua Abell. He was the first treasurer, and lived a mile or so south of the meeting-house,—present Guilford place. Several of his children died young. Joseph, Joshua, William, and George settled in Goshen, the two latter being known as captains; Asa went to Swanton; Nathaniel remained in Goshen.

Capt. William White. He was from Dudley; lived south of Joshua Abell, and his wife was a sister of Reuben Dresser. He died in 1821, aged eighty-five. Of his children several died young. William died at twenty-five, a young physician of great promise; Mary became Mrs. Thomas Adams, Hinsdale; Prudence became Mrs. John Adams, of Hinsdale; Hannah died unmarried; Joseph and Benjamin were twin brothers, and were the well-known town clerks, succeeding their father; Joseph, later in life, moved to Hinsdale.

Lieut. Lemuel Lyon. His farm was the northwest corner, opposite the present meeting-house. The lieutenant had a brother, Sylvanus, in town. Children of Lemuel: Mrs. Sylvanus Stone, of Worthington, and Silas, a graduate of Williams College. Col. Ezra May's wife was a sister of Lieut. Lyon.

Maj. Christopher Bannister, homestead a mile southwest of the meeting-house, on the road to Chesterfield. He had four brothers, John, Lemuel, Barzillai, and William, all prominent in town affairs. Thomas Brown, homestead east beyond the reservoir. Ebenezer Parsons lived on the Mollison Hill, above the burying-ground. He was an early inn-keeper. Maj. Hawks and wife, now of the hotel, lived on that farm nineteen years. Farnum White. He was one of the first tythingmen. Homestead over the hill east,—the William Tilton farm. A son, Seth White, settled in Goshen. Lieut. Timothy Lyon, homestead on the Ashfield road, where his grandson, Timothy P., now lives. Children: John C., Goshen; William, Schenectady; Col. Timothy, Capt. Francis, and Thomas, Goshen; Abigail, Mrs. Dr. Daniel Pierce.

John Smith, homestead beyond the Mollison Hill west. House gone. Children: Mrs. Cogswell, Chesterfield; Mrs. Ebenezer Putney, Ashfield; Mrs. Whitney, Ohio; Mrs. Hurlburt, Goshen; Mrs. John Williams (known as "Carpenter"); John, the missionary; Mrs. Willard Packard, Goshen; Anna, died unmarried; Mrs. Thomas Lyman. Samuel Olds lived beyond Lily Pond; Jason and Chester were sons,—lived in Goshen. Daniel Brown lived on the Cathcart place. David Stearns; elsewhere mentioned. Children: David, Lemuel, John, and Cyrus, of Goshen; also Mrs. Daniel Beals; Samuel, the first male child born in town, died young. The pioneer's wife was a sister of Capt. Joseph Burnell, of Chesterfield.

Oliver Taylor, from Brookfield, homestead the Webster farm. Children: Mrs. Gershom Cathcart; Mrs. Joseph, Putney; Oliver, Schenectady. Emmons Putney says Oliver, Sr., once carried a barrel of pork from a wagon into the house.

William Hallock, from Long Island, homestead the present Hosford place. Children were Mrs. Stephen Hosford, Mrs. Daniel Perkins, Jeremiah, Moses, and others. Mrs. Hallock, wife of the pioneer, is said upon undoubted authority, as stated by Mr. Barrus, to have brought into the country the seeds of the ox-eye daisy, to raise the beautiful star-like flowers.

John James, homestead west of the valley, present place of George Major. Children were Capt. Malachi, of Goshen, Moses, and several daughters.

Gershom Cathcart, about 1780, homestead the well-known Cathcart place. Children: Oliver T., Goshen; several died young; Wealthy, died unmarried; Mrs. William Tilton, Mrs. George Abell; John E., Minnesota.

Joshua Packard, homestead northwest part of the town; he was a soldier of the old French war, and of the Revolution. Children: Mrs. Thwing; Caleb, of Plainfield; Joshua, Goshen; Willard, Goshen (his daughter wife of Maj. Hawks); Mrs. Solomon Parsons, Mrs. Ebenezer Colson, Mrs. Versal Bannister. Calvin A. Packard, a grandson, has an old powder-horn, a relic of the pioneer's military service. Artemas Stone lived opposite the Cathcart place; one daughter was Mrs. Rufus Cushman.

Reuben Dresser, of Charlton, homestead on the hill east of the present mills. The mills and other property remain in the Dresser family to the present time. Children: Reuben, Amos, Moses, Aaron, of Goshen, Mrs. Rev. Abel Farley, Mrs. Dr. Erastus Hawks, Mrs. Eleazer Hawks. Amos was the father of the Amos Dresser, well known in Abolition circles, who was driven out from the South because he had a copy of the Emancipator wrapped around the Bibles he was selling.

Moses Dresser, another pioneer, lived on the Cole place; went back to Charlton. Adam Beals, homestead north of Eleazer Hawks. His children were Ezra, Lydia, Ruth, and Wheat. Adam Beals was one of the party that helped throw the tea overboard in Boston Harbor, and Gershom Collier, of Chesterfield, was also in that affair. Christopher Grant, homestead the Porter place. Children: John, Asa, Joseph. Justin Parsons, brother of Ebenezer, homestead a mile north of the meeting-house, Sears place, formerly Smith. Cyrus Lyon, homestead a mile south of the meeting-house,—the Dr. Pierce place.

Benjamin Burgess, the long-time physician, homestead present place of George Kellogg. Children: Mrs. Mitchell Dawes (mother of Senator Dawes), Cummington; Mrs. John C. Lyman, Mrs. Seth Williams, Cummington; Mrs. Williams, of Goshen, and, after the death of Mr. Williams, Mrs. Stephen Whitney, of Deerfield; Silas, Goshen; Mrs. Thomas Brown; Jane, unmarried.

Col. Ezra May, the early proprietor, at the northeast corner, opposite the Highland House. He died early. His widow, Margaret May, is mentioned in the negotiations for a meeting-house site. Emmons Putney understands that Col. Ezra had three brothers in town,—Caleb, Dexter, and Daniel.

Edward Orcutt, homestead northeast a mile or so from the meeting-house. House gone. Children: James, Goshen; Thomas, Buckland; Origen, Goshen; Thankful, an old-time teacher who made the boys mind. It is said of Edward Orcutt that his wife asked him to bring in an armful of oven-wood. He went out, was gone two years, and when he returned entered the house with the oven-wood.

Capt. Ambrose Stone, better known as major, homestead the present place of his grandson, Amos Stone. Children: Col. Luther, Goshen; Mrs. David Carpenter; Ambrose, Goshen; Mrs. Elias White; Frederick P., Goshen. Alvan went West, and perhaps others.

Capt. Robert Webster, homestead the present Hiram Bates place. Wm. H. Webster, a grandson, now lives in Springfield. Capt. Robert was a prominent man, and commanded the Chesterfield company of 47 that marched to Boston after the battle of Lexington.

Ebenezer Amidon, a mile and a half southwest of the centre; buildings gone. Ansel Amidon, perhaps a son of Ebenezer, had 17 children, all boys but one; all grew up, and all went to school to Emmons Putney, as the latter still delights to relate.

Joseph Blake, of Braintree, east of the old Putney farm. Children: Mrs. Elijah Wolcott, Williamsburg; Mrs. Joseph Smith, Hatfield; Silas, Goshen; Mrs. Abner Bates; Eleazer Swanton, Joseph, and Comfort died young.

Abijah Tucker was a pioneer with David Stearns, but of his family we have little or no account. Isaac Walker lived on the Chesterfield road; was a soldier of the Revolution, and died in the service, being left sick with the small-pox in a house that was soon after captured and burnt. Zebulon Willcutt. His homestead was two miles away from the centre, near the Olds place. The family is spoken of in the notes upon Chesterfield. Samuel Grimes, homestead one and a half miles west of the meeting-house.

Ebenezer Putney, of Charlton, homestead the place still known as the Putney farm. Children: Joseph, Goshen; Mrs. John Salmon, Goshen; Mrs. John Smith, Goshen; Elisha, Michigan, killed in the war of 1812; Nahum, drowned in Lake Erie; Moses, New York; John, Goshen; Amos, New York; Emmons Putney, a son of Joseph, the only grandson of the name living in Goshen.

Mr. Barrus, in his sketches, states that Ebenezer Putney was a Revolutionary soldier and a man of great daring, and Joseph could swing a barrel of rum with two fingers of one hand. Mr. Putney's second wife was the Widow Walkley, daughter of Dyar Bancroft, and a cousin of President Hayes.

Other pioneers of whom we have but little account were Daniel Wyman (1770), Joseph Maynard (1770), Edward Wing, from Warren, William Meader, from Nantucket, Stephen Grover, John P. Tucker, Jacob Barrett, and Seth Burk

Samuel Narramore, two miles west of the meeting-house. Children: Nathaniel, Capt. Joseph, Thaddeus, Alpheus, Mrs. Whitcomb, and Mrs. Dr. Kittredge. Caleb Cushman. Children: Rufus and Ralph became ministers, and Calvin, the well-known missionary; and there were five daughters,—Wealthy, Theodana, Minerva, Vesta, Polly. Jared Hawks settled in Goshen soon after the Revolution, and married the daughter of Col. Nehemiah May. Elijah Billings, the long-time blacksmith, came from Belchertown in 1816. His grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier.

William Hallock, from Long Island, settled in Goshen in 1766. He had nine children who lived to grow up, seven of them daughters. The two sons were Rev. Moses Hallock and Jeremiah Hallock.

The Fourth of July, 1806, was celebrated at Goshen, Chesterfield and Cummington uniting in the affair. An oration was delivered by Rev. Samuel Whitman. The dinner was served at the house of Maj. May. One of the toasts was, "The Government of Massachusetts: may the main pillar continue to be STRONG."

ORGANIZATION.

The people of the different portions of the town of Chesterfield and of Chesterfield Gore found it difficult to harmonize upon a common centre for either public business or public worship. The distance of Ireland Street from the northeast portions was considerable, and the long struggle over the location of Chesterfield meeting-house is not surprising when these distances are considered, and when there is also added the rough topography of the surface, rendering travel in some directions vexatious and difficult. These things soon led to a project for a new town. It was opposed for a time by Chesterfield, as is usually the case when an attempt is made to divide an existing jurisdiction. The opposition was not, however, very strenuous or long continued. The people of Chesterfield felt as if their meeting-house had been located to please the people of the Gore, and that the latter ought not to secede. But the reasons offered were sufficient to influence the General Court, and the town of Goshen was therefore incorporated and organized as shown in the following records:

ACT OF INCORPORATION.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

In the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-one.

An act for the incorporation of the Plantation called Chesterfield Gore and the Northwestern part of the town of Chesterfield, in the County of Hampshire, into a town by the name of Goshen.

Whereas, the inhabitants of the plantation called Chesterfield Gore, formerly known by the second additional grant made to Narragansett Township, No. 4, and those on the Northern part of the first additional Grant to said Narragansett Township, now included in the town of Chesterfield, aforesaid, have represented to this court the great difficulties and inconveniences they labor under in their present situation, and have earnestly requested that they be incorporated into a town.

Be it therefore enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, the plantation called Chesterfield Gore and that part of the first additional Grant to Narragansett Township aforesaid, now included in the town of Chesterfield, and bounded as followeth, viz.: Beginning at the Southeast corner of the second additional Grant, or Chesterfield Gore, thence North, bounding Westerly on unappropriated lands eight hundred and sixty-four rods to Ashfield South line; thence east nineteen degrees South on said Ashfield South line till it comes to Conway west line; thence South nineteen degrees west on said Conway west line to a bounds formerly known by Hatfield Northwest corner; thence South eleven degrees west on Williamsburgh west line to the Southeast corner of the first additional grant to said Narragansett, Number 4; thence west on the South line of said grant six hundred and fifty-four rods, including the whole of the four-tier of the original lots on the said first additional grant; thence North eleven degrees east on the west line of the aforesaid four-tier of original lots four hundred and fifty rods to the Northwest corner of the original Lot No. Twenty-nine; thence west three hundred and twenty-six rods to the Southwest corner of lot No. Ninety-four, being the Northwest corner of the Pine-timber lot so called; thence North eleven degrees East four hundred rods to the South line of the second additional grant, or Chesterfield Gore; thence west to first-mentioned bounds, be, and hereby is, incorporated into a separate town by the name of Goshen, with all the powers, privileges, and immunities that towns within this Commonwealth have or do enjoy.

And be it further enacted that Jacob Sherwin, Esq., be, and hereby is, empowered to issue his warrant to some principal inhabitant of said plantation, requiring him to call a meeting of said inhabitants, in order to choose such officers as, by law, towns are empowered to choose, in the month of March annually, provided, nevertheless, the inhabitants of that part of the first additional grant, which are included in the town of Chesterfield, shall pay their proportionate part of all such State and county taxes and town taxes, so far as respects the raising of men and supplies for the Continental army, as are already set upon them by the town of Chesterfield, in like manner as though this act had not been made.

In the House of Representatives, May 14, 1781. This Bill, having had three several readings, passed to be enacted.

CALEB DAVIS, Speaker.

In Senate, May 14, 1781. This bill, having had two several readings, passed to be enacted.

JEREMIAH RUSSELL, President.

Approved.

JOHN HANCOCK.

A true copy.

Attest,

JOHN AVERY, Secretary.

WARRANT FOR THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY, ss.:

To Mr. Nehemiah May, of Goshen, in said county, greeting: Whereas the Great and General Court of this Commonwealth did, at their session in May instant, by an act of said Court, erect the Plantation called Chesterfield Gore, formerly known by the second additional grant, made to Narragansett township No. 4, and those in the northwardly part of the first additional grant to said Narragansett Township, in said county aforesaid, into a town by the name of Goshen, investing the inhabitants thereof with all the powers, privileges, and immunities which the inhabitants of the towns within this commonwealth do enjoy, and at the same time empowered me, the subscriber, one of the justices of the peace within and for the said county of Hampshire, to issue my warrant for calling the first meeting.

These are therefore in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to require you forthwith to notify and warn the inhabitants of Goshen aforesaid, lately belonging to Chesterfield, qualified by law to vote in town-meetings, to assemble themselves together and meet at the dwelling-house of Mr. John Williams, in the town of Goshen aforesaid, on Wednesday, the 23d day of May instant, at one of the clock in the afternoon, then and there, after a moderator being chosen, to choose all such officers as are required by law to manage the affairs of said town.

Hereof fail not, but make returns of this warrant with your doings thereupon unto myself on or before said day.

Given under my hand and seal at Ashfield, this 19th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1781, and in the fifth year of our independence.

JACOB SHERWIN, Justice of the Peace.

Another warrant was issued by Jacob Sherwin, Esq., at the time, and same in substance with the above, directed to Mr. Barzillai Bannister, to warn the second additional grant.

Attest: SOLOMON WEEKS, Town Clerk.

MINUTES OF THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

At a legal Meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Goshen, held at the house of John Williams in said town on the 23d day of May, 1781, Jacob Sherwin, Esq., Moderator, said inhabitants made choice of Thomas Weeks for their Clerk; Mr. Joshua Abell, Treasurer for said town; Capt. Wm. White, Lieut. Lemuel Lyon, and Maj. Christopher Bannister, Selectmen for said town. Voted that the above selectmen be assessors for said town. Voted to choose two constables. Made choice of Thomas Brown and Ebenezer Parsons for constables in said town. Voted that Messrs. Lemuel Bannister and Farnum White serve as Tythingmen. Voted that Farnum White, Lemuel Bannister, Ebenezer Putney, Lieut. Timothy Lyman, Thomas Weeks, and Barzillai Bannister be Surveyors of Ways and Bridges. Voted that John Smith and Maj. Christopher Bannister be Fence-Viewers. Voted that Samuel Olds be Leather-Sealer. Voted that Barzillai Bannister be Deer-Reeve. Voted that John Williams be Sealer of Weights and Measures. Voted that Nehemiah May, Daniel Brown, Barzillai Bannister, and Lemuel Bannister be Hog-Reeves. Voted that the Surveyors of Ways and Bridges be Collectors of Taxes for the same. Said meeting was then dissolved.

The newly-elected selectmen immediately called another town-meeting, that assembled at the house of John Williams on Monday, the 4th day of June, 1781:

Capt. Wm. White was chosen Moderator. Voted to raise the sum of fifty pounds, silver money, for the use of Repairing the Highways in said town. Voted that the said sum of fifty pounds be laid out upon the Highways at the rate of 3 shillings per day for a man, 1 shilling 6 pence for a good yoke of oxen, and one shilling for a cart and the same for a plough for a day. On a motion whether Hogs should run at large, passed in the negative. On a motion whether the town would raise a sum of money for the use of hiring preaching, passed in the negative. Voted to raise the sum of eight dollars, silver money, for the use of purchasing a book for the records of said town and paper for the said town. On a motion whether the town would petition for a part of the State's land and the Chandler grant lying west of said town, to be annexed thereto as will best accommodate said town, voted in the affirmative, but it was afterward reconsidered and no action authorized. Voted to give Mr. Joseph Barker a call to settle with them in the work of the ministry. Voted to make proposals for the settlement of Mr. Barker, and appointed Maj. Bannister, Thomas Brown, Lemuel Bannister, Lieut. Timothy Lyman, and Ebenezer Putney a Committee to draw up said proposals. Voted to adjourn to Thursday, June 21st, at 4 o'clock p.m.

June 21, 1781.—Met according to adjournment. Voted that said town will give Mr. Joseph Barker the sum of 100 pounds as an encouragement, provided he should settle with them in the work of the ministry,—the same to be paid at the rate of rye 3s. per bushel and Indian-corn 2s. per bushel.

Voted that if he should settle with them his salary shall be forty pounds the first year, and after that to increase annually five pounds until it amounts to sixty-five pounds, and then to be stated at the said sum of sixty-five pounds annually at the rate above described.

Voted that Messrs. Lemuel Bannister, David Stearns, and Thomas Brown be a committee to wait upon Mr. Barker with the proceedings of said town with respect to the offers made him above.

Tuesday, Aug. 21, 1781.—Voted to accept the doings of the militia officers and selectmen in raising three militia soldiers for three months.

Voted to raise the sum of thirty-six pounds three shillings for the purpose of paying the bounty and wages of three soldiers for three months' service, agreeable to a Resolve of the General Court of the 30th of June, 1781.

Voted to procure five linen shirts, five pairs of stockings, five pairs of shoes, and two blankets, for the Continental army, agreeable to a resolve of the General Court passed June 22, 1781.

Voted to procure this town's proportion of beef for the army according to the act of June 22d, viz.,—2101 pounds of beef,—and to raise the sum of thirty-two pounds of money for said purpose.

Voted that Ebenezer Putney, Lemuel Bannister, and Thomas Hamilton be a committee to purchase said beef.

At a town meeting Oct. 16, 1781, Capt. Wm. White, Moderator.

Voted a committee upon preaching, viz.,—Lemuel Bannister, Thomas Brown, Farnum White, Thomas Weeks, David Stearns.

Voted to raise fifteen pounds for the above purpose.

Voted a committee to divide said town into school districts, viz.,—Ebenezer Putney, Timothy Lyman, Thomas Hamilton, Benjamin Burger, Oliver Taylor, Christopher and William Hallock.

Voted to pay one pound to John Williams for the use of his house the year past.

At a town-meeting Nov. 7, 1781, Maj. Christopher Bannister, Moderator.

Chose a committee of seven to set up a stake in the most convenient place to set a meeting-house on the hill in Lieut. Lyman's field, and another in the most convenient place for said house south of the burying-ground. The committee were David Stearns, Lemuel Lyon, John James, Lemuel Bannister, James Packard, Thomas Hamilton, Joshua Abell.

Adjourned the meeting fifteen minutes.

The committee made prompt work driving those stakes, for when the meeting assembled at the end of the fifteen minutes, it was voted "to set the meeting-house south of the burying-yard where said committee had set up a stake for that purpose."

Voted "to build a meeting-house 50 feet in length and 40 in width; the posts to be two feet shorter than Chesterfield meeting-house."

Voted to build a porch in front of said house for the accommodation of going up gallery.

Voted a committee on plan and on the sale of pews, viz.: John James, Barzillai Bannister, Ebenezer Putney, Artemas Stone, and Lemuel Bannister.

The committee were to lay out the money arising from the sale of pews in building the meeting-house.

Nov. 15, 1781.—Voted to reconsider the former action for one porch, and voted to have two porches, one at each end.

Voted to reserve the pew on the right hand next to the pulpit for the use of the town.

Voted that the pew ground on the lower floor be divided into thirty-eight equal parts, as near as may be.

Voted to raise the sum of 25 pounds for schooling.

Tuesday, Dec. 21, 1781.—William White, Moderator.

Voted that Mr. Joshua Abell be the person to receive the donations that may be given in this town to the support of the sufferers in the Southern States, agreeable to a brief from his Excellency, John Hancock, and pay the same to the gentlemen said brief directs.

Voted that the committee to hire preaching are hereby instructed to hire Mr. Abraham Fowler to preach ten Sabbaths more after the next Sabbath.

Voted to choose a committee of three to give reasons to the General Court (in behalf of said town) why a number of inhabitants of this town should not be set off to Chesterfield as best they can. Committee: Capt. William White, Maj. Christopher Bannister, and Barzillai Bannister.

Jan. 10, 1782.—Maj. Christopher Bannister, Moderator.

Voted that the town will make answer to a petition of Moses Dresser and others why the prayer of said petition should not be granted at the next sitting of the General Court.

Capt. William White, Maj. Christopher Bannister, Lieut. Lemuel Lyon were named as a committee to draft said answer.

Voted that the Selectmen be instructed to make a just representation to the General Court of the valuation to be taken from Chesterfield and set to this town.

At the first regular March meeting, held on the 4th day of the month, 1782, Mr. John James was chosen Moderator; Thomas Weeks, Town Clerk; Thomas Brown, Town Treasurer; Capt. William White, Maj. Christopher Bannister, Lieut. Oliver Taylor, Selectmen; John James, Reuben Dresser, Capt. William White, Assessors; Barzillai Bannister, Nehemiah May, Constables; Farnum White, John Smith, Tythingmen; Maj. Christopher Bannister, Farnum White, Moses Dresser, Barzillai Bannister, Artemas Stone, Ebenezer Putney, Surveyors of Ways and Bridges; James Packard, Adam Beals, Fence-Viewers; Samuel Olds, Leather-Sealer; Christopher Grant, Deer-Reeve; John Williams, Sealer of Weights and Measures; Justin Parsons, Daniel Brown, David Stearns, Capt. William White, Cyrus Lyon, Hog-Reeves. Voted to allow Thomas Weeks the sum of nine shillings for his service surveying roads in said town. Voted that each school district draw their proportion of the money granted by said town for the purpose of schooling.

At another meeting, April 1, 1782.—Voted to accept several roads laid out during the previous year by the surveyors. Voted to allow the Widow Margaret May the sum of four pounds eight shillings, for boarding Mr. Barker four weeks at 6s., and his horse do., at 2s., and boarding Mr. Fowler seven weeks, at 6s., and his horse do., at 2s. Total £4 8s.

At a town-meeting, April 3, 1782, presided over by the Selectmen, the following votes were given: For Governor, John Hancock, 11 votes; James Bowdoin, 5 votes. Lieutenant-Governor, Thomas Cushing, 13 votes. For Councillor and Senator, Noah Goodman, 14 votes; John Bliss, 14 votes; Samuel Mather, 14 votes; David Smead, 14 votes.

April 1, 1782.—Wm. White, Moderator. Voted to raise 65 pounds for repairing highways. Voted to allow 3s. per day for a man to the last day of July, and 2s. 6d. from then to the last of October. Voted that the town confirm what the assessors have done with respect to classing said inhabitants to raise two Continental soldiers, agreeable to the resolve of the General Court. John James, Oliver Taylor, and Reuben Dresser were appointed a committee to settle with the treasurer. Voted to choose a delegate to send to the County Convention at Hatfield, and elected Wm. White said delegate. Voted to raise 20 pounds for the support of preaching.

April 6, 1782.—Voted to accept the report of the committee to settle with the treasurer.

May 13, 1782.—Voted that the Ministry Committee be hereby directed to hire Mr. Fish to preach eight Sabbaths more than he is now engaged for. Voted Dr. Benjamin Burger to be a delegate to the Convention to meet at Hatfield, May 14th. Ebenezer Putney, Mr. Orcutt, Capt. White, Lieut. Taylor, and Reuben Dresser were appointed a committee to instruct said delegate.

May 20, 1782.—Capt. Wm. White, Moderator. Voted to centre said town and build a meeting-house in the centre, or the nearest convenient place thereto. Chose Reuben Dresser, Thomas Hamilton, Joshua Abell, Barzillai Bannister, and John James a committee to find the centre of the town. Voted that swine run at large the present year, yoked and ringed, as the law directs. Voted to hear the report of the agent returned from the County Convention. Voted to reconsider the vote to set the meeting-house where the timber now lies. Voted to accept the report of the committee upon the centre of the town. Voted another committee to find the nearest convenient place to the centre to set the meeting-house. Committee, Reuben Dresser, Thomas Hamilton, Joshua Abell, Barzillai Bannister, John James, Maj. Bannister, Dr. Burger, Ebenezer Putney, Ebenezer Parsons, and Lemuel Lyon. Adjourned for half an hour. Called to order again. Committee returned, and report accepted, and, as it appears, in accordance therewith, voted that the town "would set the meeting-house about ten rods North of Lieut. Lemuel Lyons' house, a stake being set up for the Southeast corner thereof."

May 21, 1782.—Maj. Christopher Bannister, Moderator. "Voted to choose an indifferent committee to affix a place to set the meeting-house in the centre of the town or the nearest most convenient place thereto." Chose Deacon Ebenezer Snell, of Cummington, Capt. Benjamin Phillips, of Ashfield, Josiah Dwight, of Williamsburgh. Voted to add three to the above committee, with the proviso that the former or either of them should fail of attending, viz., William Ward, Jacob Sherwin, and William Bodman. Voted said committee be requested to attend a meeting of said town on Monday next, at 9 o'clock. Voted that the committee be governed by plans already drawn for finding the centre of the town. Voted a committee of five to wait upon the committee from abroad, viz., Capt. Wm. White, Joshua Abell, Thomas Hamilton, Reuben Dresser, Barzillai Bannister. Voted that any person or persons should lay any papers or reasons before said committee for their consideration respecting setting or affixing a place for said house.

May 30, 1782.—Capt. William White, Moderator. Voted to set the meeting-house on the division line between Lieut. Lemuel Lyon and the Widow Margaret May's lands, on the east side of the road leading from the Widow May's to said Lyons.

This was the final decision.

One account of the selection of the name is given by Mrs. William Tilton. Her mother told her she heard Oliver Taylor say, after returning from a preliminary meeting on the subject of division, that they were going to call the new town Goshen, because it was the best part of Chesterfield, as ancient Goshen was the best part of Egypt.

Local home independence shows out strong in the following:

Sept. 22, 1783.—Voted not to pay any Continental, State, or County taxes until Congress rescind their former vote about allowing five years' pay to the officers of the Continental army.

In the warrant for a meeting, Jan. 16, 1797, one article was this:

"To see if the town will agree to let any person have the small-pox in this town by way of inoculation which have not been exposed to it, or what order the town will take upon it." And accordingly the town appointed Dr. Benjamin Burger, Ebenezer Putney, Deacon Oliver Taylor, Capt. Ambrose Stone, Lieut. Nehemiah May, Justin Parsons, Deacon Thomas Brown, Lieut. Ebenezer Parsons, a committee "to conduct the business respecting the small-pox as they shall see fit."

And thus we reach the end of one year's work by the new town of Goshen, the above account being an almost verbatim transcript of the entire records of the year found in the office of the town clerk. They show what a variety of questions the town was compelled to consider at the very outset of its official existence. It was yet unsettled whether a national government was to be established, or whether these States were again to become provinces under the dominion of his Majesty George III. Churches, schools, roads, taxes, the support of the poor,—in short, all the minute details of domestic necessities,—were to be adjusted in the very presence of the overshadowing storm of civil revolution.

Bravely, steadily they met all these responsibilities. They voted, sometimes in close connection, to furnish soldiers for the army, buy beef to feed them, procure clothing for them, hire a minister, establish schools, open roads, permit hogs to run at large if properly yoked, drive stakes to designate a site for a meeting-house, send out a committee to drive them over again in half an hour, audit a bill for the board of the minister, guard the integrity of their own territory, send agents to Boston to resist applications for a division, face the incipient troubles of the hard times that a little later culminated in Shays' rebellion,—and all this in the first year of their history! Surely the men of Goshen were men of whom any age might be proud,—men worthy to be the founders of a nation, as they were the organizers of a town.

At a town-meeting, April 1, 1805, voted to accept a grant made to the town in the will of the late John James, said grant being the sum of $100, to be placed on interest and to accumulate for one hundred years; all expense of the investment to be paid by the town, so that the revenue from the principal shall not be diminished at all by the care of the fund. At the end of one hundred years the principal and the accumulated interest are to constitute a vested fund forever, the interest of which shall be annually used for the support "of a gospel minister in said town of the Congregational standing order, so called," for the support of schools, and for the support of the poor in said town, or for the building and repairing of public buildings, as the case may be. There is a good time ahead for the Goshen taxpayers of 1905.

In the warrant for a town-meeting, to be held April 4, 1808, was the following clause: "To see if the town will forward a memorial to the Congress of the United States, praying for an explanation of their measures respecting the Embargo and redress of Grievances, or what order they will take upon it." And the town voted a committee to draft such a memorial,—Deacon Taylor, William White, Deacon Parsons, and Col. May.

The warrant for a meeting Aug. 23, 1808, contains the clause: "To see if the town will forward a petition to the President of the United States, asking for a suspension of the Embargo." This action was taken in view of a circular letter from the selectmen of Boston.

The warrant for a meeting Jan. 31, 1814, contained the clause: "To see if the town will prefer a memorial to the Legislature of this Commonwealth relative to an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and to attend to any other matters the town shall think proper relative to our unhappy situation as a nation."

At the meeting a long series of resolutions was adopted, the first three of which are as follows:

Resolved, That the present war in which we are involved is impolitic, unnecessary, unjust, and consequently wicked, and that we will not voluntarily afford any aid, directly or indirectly, in carrying it on.

Resolved, That if the war in which we are engaged were ever so just and necessary, yet the way and manner in which it has been carried on argues the weakness of the present administration to be without a parallel.

Resolved, That although we utterly disapprove of rising against Government, yet the taxes that are soon to be collected of us that have been laid by the national Government we shall pay with the greatest reluctance.

These resolutions were accompanied by a memorial to the Massachusetts Legislature.

The first intention of marriage on record in the oldest town-book is between James Hunter, of Pelham, and Widow Sarah Nelson, of Goshen, April 21, 1783; the next, between Justis Lewis, of New Hartford, and Eleanor King, of Goshen, June 30, 1783. The first births on record are those of the Samuel Grimes family, commencing with the oldest, James Grimes, born Feb. 7, 1769, at Brookfield. Then follow the families of Stephen Graves, Joseph Narramore, Cyrus Lyon, Daniel Brown, Cheney Taft, Samuel Olds, Lemuel Lyon, William Bannister, Abner Baker, Caleb Cushman, Farnum White, and many others. There is a large amount of family history in these volumes, as the custom of publishing intentions of marriage brought them all to the town clerk for record. Several pages, too, are full of the marriages solemnized by Rev. Mr. Whitman and by Oliver Taylor, Esq.

On page 73 of the second volume of town records there is a report upon the James fund, showing it to amount to $367.74 in the year 1827.

Town-meetings were held "at the house of John Williams," now the homestead of Hinckley Williams, until the meeting-house was partially finished in the winter of 1782-83, and there they continued for fifty-one years. The meeting for Nov. 10, 1834, was called at the hall over the store of Ebenezer W. Town, and there they continued for several years. The first meeting called at "the town-hall" was that of Nov. 11, 1839. A meeting for Sept. 29, 1842, was called "to meet at the Congregational meeting-house." After that they met at "Bridgman's Hall" until the meeting of Nov. 12, 1849, which was the first called at the present town-hall.

SELECTMEN.

- 1781.—Wm. White, Lemuel Lyon, Christopher Bannister.
- 1782.—Wm. White, Oliver Taylor, Christopher Bannister.
- 1783.—Wm. White, Reuben Dresser, Lieut. Oliver Taylor.
- 1784-85.—Wm. White, Reuben Dresser, Ebenezer Parsons.
- 1786.—Dr. Benjamin Burger, Thomas Brown, Christopher Bannister, Samuel Grimes, Ebenezer Putney.
- 1787.—Dr. Benjamin Burger, Deacon Oliver Taylor, Thomas Brown.
- 1788-89.—Wm. White, Thomas Brown, Oliver Taylor.
- 1790.—Reuben Dresser, Oliver Taylor, Benjamin Burger.
- 1791.—Reuben Dresser, Lemuel Bannister, Barzillai Bannister.
- 1792.—Reuben Dresser, Benjamin Burger, Oliver Taylor.
- 1793.—Oliver Taylor, Thomas Brown, Nehemiah May.
- 1794.—Oliver Taylor, Ambrose Stone, Nehemiah May.
- 1795.—Nehemiah May, Ebenezer Parsons, Joseph Narramore.
- 1796.—Reuben Dresser, Ebenezer Putney, Ambrose Stone.
- 1797.—Lieut. Nehemiah May, Joshua Abell, Jr., George Salmon.
- 1798.—Oliver Taylor, Ambrose Stone, George Salmon.
- 1799.—Oliver Taylor, Ambrose Stone, Justin Parsons.
- 1800.—Justin Parsons, George Salmon, Alpheus Narramore.
- 1801.—Oliver Taylor, George Salmon, Alpheus Narramore.
- 1802.—Oliver Taylor, John Williams, Solomon Parsons.
- 1803.—Reuben Dresser, John Williams, Capt. Joseph Narramore.
- 1804-5.—Justin Parsons, Ambrose Stone, George Salmon.
- 1806.—Reuben Dresser, Ellis Coney, John Williams.
- 1807.—Reuben Dresser, Ambrose Stone, John Grant.
- 1808.—John Grant, Giles Lyman, Gershom Cathcart.
- 1809.—John Grant, Gershom Cathcart, Timothy Lyman, Jr.
- 1810-11.—John Grant, Joshua Abell, Jr., Timothy Lyman, Jr.
- 1812.—John C. Lyman, Joshua Packard, Jr., Oliver Taylor.
- 1813.—Oliver Taylor, Ambrose Stone, John C. Lyman.
- 1814.—Maj. Stone, John C. Lyman, Benjamin White.
- 1815-16.—John C. Lyman, Joshua Packard, Jr., Benjamin White.
- 1817.—Maj. A. Stone, T. Lyman, R. Dresser.
- 1818.—Timothy Lyman, Benjamin White, Joseph Putney.
- 1819.—Timothy Lyman, Benjamin White, Robert Webster.
- 1820-23.—Timothy Lyman, Robert Webster, Luther Stone.
- 1824.—Benjamin White, Capt. John Grant, Joshua Simmons.
- 1825.—Benjamin White, Asabel Billings, Francis Lyman.
- 1826.—Benjamin White, Luther Stone, Joshua Packard.
- 1827.—Benjamin White, Joshua Simmons, Asabel Billings.
- 1828.—Timothy Lyman, John Grant, Samuel Luce.
- 1829-31.—Timothy Lyman, John Grant, Luther Stone.
- 1832.—John Grant, Asabel Billings, Horace Packard.
- 1833.—Luther Stone, Asabel Billings, Horace Packard.

1834.—Luther Stone, Asahel Billings, Franklin Narramore.
 1835.—Asahel Billings, Moses Dresser, Horace Packard.
 1836.—Asahel Billings, Barney Prentice, William Titson.
 1837.—Emmons Putney, Francis Lyman, Selah Bardwell.
 1838.—Luther Stone, Asahel Billings, Moses Dresser.
 1839.—Luther Stone, Moses Dresser, William Abell.
 1840.—William Abell, Franklin Narramore, Horace Packard.
 1841.—Luther Stone, Asahel Billings, Franklin Narramore.
 1842.—Benjamin White, West Tilton, Daniel Williams.
 1843-44.—Franklin Narramore, Luther Stone, Francis Dresser.
 1845.—Franklin Narramore, Ralph Utley, Freeman Sears.
 1846.—Ambrose Stone, Freeman Sears, West Tilton.
 1847-49.—Freeman Sears, Francis Dresser, West Tilton.
 1850.—Freeman Sears, Franklin Narramore, West Tilton.
 1851.—Franklin Narramore, Asahel Billings, George Abell.
 1852.—Asahel Billings, George Abell, John M. Smith.
 1853-54.—Asa White, Franklin Narramore, Ralph Utley.
 1855.—Freeman Sears, Asahel Billings, Reuben Gardner.
 1856.—Freeman Sears, Hiram Packard, Calvin A. Packard.
 1857.—Freeman Sears, Hiram Packard, Henry White.
 1858-59.—Hiram Barrus, Calvin A. Packard, Caleb C. Dresser.
 1860.—Freeman Sears, Hiram Packard, Ralph E. Smith.
 1861.—Hiram Barrus, Calvin A. Packard, Caleb C. Dresser.
 1862.—Calvin A. Packard, Caleb C. Dresser, Alonzo Shaw.
 1863.—Calvin A. Packard, Caleb C. Dresser, George Dresser.
 1864.—Calvin A. Packard, Alonzo Shaw, George Dresser.
 1865-66.—Calvin A. Packard, Alvin Barrus, Joshua Knowlton.
 1867-68.—Freeman Sears, Daniel Williams, Timothy D. Pierce.
 1869.—Calvin A. Packard, George Dresser, Alvin Barrus.
 1870.—Alvin Barrus, T. P. Lyman, John H. Godfrey.
 1871-72.—Alvin Barrus, John H. Godfrey, Joseph Beals.
 1873.—William S. Packard, George Mayor, Elisha H. Hayden.
 1874.—William S. Packard, Elisha H. Hayden, Lorin Barrus.
 1875-76.—William S. Packard, Lorin Barrus, John H. Godfrey.
 1877-78.—Alvin Barrus, Hiram Packard, John H. Godfrey.
 1879.—Alvin Barrus, Hiram Packard, Alonzo Shaw.

TOWN CLERKS.

Thomas Weeks, 1781-82; Wm. White, 1783-1813; Joseph White, 1814-27; Benjamin White, 1828-42; Elijah Billings, 1843-48; Hattiel Washburn, Jr., 1849-51; Elijah Billings, 1852; Benjamin White, 1853-61; Alvin Barrus, 1862; Benjamin White, 1863; Joshua Knowlton, 1864-66; Elijah Billings, 1867-80.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

Justin Parsons, 1805; Nehemiah May, 1806; Samuel Whitman, 1808; William White, 1809; Oliver Taylor, 1810-12; Nehemiah May, 1813; Oliver Taylor, 1814; Ambrose Stone, 1815; Timothy Lyman, Jr., 1816; Ambrose Stone, 1827; Joshua Simmons, 1828; Asahel Billings, 1834; Wm. Hubbard, 1836; Luther Stone, 1837; Asahel Billings, 1840; Fred. P. Stone, 1841; Franklin Narramore, 1842; Luther Stone, 1849; Wm. Tilton, 1851; Asahel Billings, 1852; Franklin Narramore, 1853; John C. Thompson, 1862; Calvin A. Packard, 1867; Hiram Packard, 1873; Alvin Barrus, 1879.

VILLAGES—LOCAL NAMES.

GOSHEN CENTRE

is the only place that has any claim to the name of a village in town. This consists of one street nearly a mile in length, extending from the cemetery and the residence of Hinckley Williams on the north, to (perhaps it may be proper to say) the place of Emmons Putney on the south. It includes quite a number of substantial private residences, some of them the old-time mansions of the last century; the meeting-house of the Congregational Church; the chapel of the Second Advent Society; the town-hall; the store of J. H. Godfrey; and the Highland House. This is a large and convenient hotel, kept by the well-known Maj. Hawks, a favorite with the traveling public, and with those summer tourists who have discovered how charming a place this mountain village is in the hot months of the year. Once located here under the care of the major, upon the highest land in Hampshire County, enjoying the purest air of the Green Mountain chain, it is no wonder that guests are loath to leave and quick to come again. Nowhere does day dawn over the eastern hills with lovelier tints, nor paint the western sky with more resplendent colors. From the wide and pleasant piazzas of the Highland House charming views greet the eye in every direction,—landscapes of unequalled beauty, comprising mountains and valleys, forests and fields, rural homes and village mansions. But this is not all. Beautiful and romantic drives are everywhere open to the tourist. Moore's Hill is but a short distance away,—a fine rounded elevation of open fields and unobstructed views, rising six hundred feet above Mount Holyoke,—with a far wider range of vision. The whole town is so elevated that to climb the highest summit is an easy affair, neither fatiguing the traveler nor requiring a perpendicular railway. The cascade, the Devil's Den, and Lily Pond are worth many a visit, while numerous unnamed localities offer abundant attractions. The geologist may gather the choicest specimens known to science, and the botanist cull flowers of rich and rare beauty.

SCHOOLS.

Prior to the incorporation of the town, schools were kept mostly in private houses. The first school-house is said to have been built near the place owned in later years by Charles Barrus, but the date is uncertain. James Richards, afterward of Plainfield, was the first teacher in that building. About the same time another school-house was built, near or on what has been known as the Putney farm, in the south part of the town.

As a part of Chesterfield there had already been schools kept within the present limits of Goshen, though we have little or no account of them. During the first six years the appropriations were small, and not regularly made. Some action was taken, however, to encourage the inhabitants to establish schools for themselves. A committee was finally appointed to divide the town into definite districts. This committee made a report, which has a double value. It shows not only the school districts, but the general location of the pioneer families; and further, it is proper to suppose that it includes all the families of the town at that date, October, 1781, and is therefore a valuable statement of early settlement complete.

Oct. 23, 1781.—Voted to accept the report of the Committee upon school Districts, as follows: That Samuel Olds, John Hatch, Deborah Narramore, James Packard, Isaac Kingman, Ezekiel Thomas, Wait Burk, Samuel Snell, Joshua Packard, James Orr, John Jepson, Moses Elwell, Ambrose Stone, Justin Parsons, Caleb Cushman, Barzillai Bannister, Sylvanus Lyon, Nathan Bigelow, and Thomas Hamilton constitute District No. 1. That John James, Oliver Taylor, Lemuel Bannister, Ebenezer Amadon, Joel Gustin, Barnabas Potter, David Stearns, Cyrel Leach, Jesse Willcutt, William Bannister, Benjamin Bourn, Christopher Bannister, Samuel Grimes, Isaac Tower, Cyrus Lyon, and Thomas Weeks constitute District No. 2. That John Smith, Ebenezer Parsons, John Williams, Lemuel Lyon, Nehemiah May, Benjamin Burger, Timothy Lyman, Artemas Stone, Widow Halbert, Reuben Lummis, Jedediah Buckingham, Stephen Grover, Thomas Brown, Daniel Brown, Dexter May, Edward Orcutt, Farnum White, Christopher Grant, Asa Grant, Adam Beal, William Hallock, Adam Beal, Jr., William Meader, and Benjamin Abell constitute District No. 3. That Joshua Abell, William White, Ebenezer Putney, Reuben Dresser, Richard Tower, Thomas Tower, Moses Dresser, John King, Daniel Wyman, Nathaniel Vinton, James Lull, Joseph Blake, Ebenezer Paine, Ezekiel White, Widow White, Noah White constitute District No. 4.

Jan. 1, 1787.—Voted to raise 150 pounds to build school-houses.

March 3, 1788.—School-house committees were appointed. For the Southwest District, Lemuel Bannister, Cyrus Lyon. For the Northwest District, Capt. B. Bannister and Abraham Stone. For the Northeast District, Nathaniel Abell and Capt. Jonathan Snow.

Dec. 8, 1789.—Voted to raise the sum of 30 pounds for schooling.

Oct. 4, 1790.—Voted to raise 30 pounds for schooling for the present year.

From 1790 to 1795 considerable change took place in the school districts. It seems to have been difficult to make a convenient arrangement adapted to all, either because of the irregular figure of the town, or the direction of the roads, or the face of the country as to hills and valleys. The four original districts seem to have been reduced to three, and then in later years changed to four again. In the earlier times appropriations do not appear to have been made every year for the support of the schools. The little given by the town was supplemented by the citizens of each district. The wages of teachers were low, so that schools were pretty well sustained for quite a portion of each year.

April 3, 1797.—Voted to raise $250 for schooling.

March 5, 1798.—Voted to raise 75 pounds for schooling.

March 11, 1799.—Voted to raise 250 dollars for schooling, and William White, Reuben Hawes, Justin Parsons, Ambrose Stone, and Moses James were appointed school Committee.

April 1, 1800, the dog tax was appropriated to the support of schools, and this year there were five districts and a committee appointed for each. In 1802 a general school committee was appointed,—Deacon Parsons, Deacon Taylor, Nathaniel Abell, Joshua Abell, and Cyrus Stearns. Each one of these probably had special oversight of a particular district. In 1803 it was voted to raise $300 for schooling; 1804, $200; 1805, $300. The school committee of 1809 were Reuben Dresser, John V. Hunt, John Cargil, Jared Hawks, Greenwood Brown. In 1812, $300 were voted for schooling, and this was the usual sum for many years.

Under the act of the General Court, "Further to provide for the instruction of youths," the town chose, April 3, 1826, the following school committee: Rev. Mr. Wright, Joseph White, Capt. Grant, Dr. G. Wright, David Carpenter, Jared Hawks, Jr., Emmons Putney. This was the commencement of the modern management of the schools, succeeded a few years later by the appointment of a State secretary of education.

Select schools were frequently taught in this town in former years, and have flourished to some extent in later years, affording to many young people a better opportunity of education than the district schools afforded. Mr. Bradford taught one in 1824. E. W. B. Canning, afterward a poet of considerable renown, conducted one in 1830; Alfred Longley in 1832; Frederick Vinton in 1836; Mr. Partridge in 1837; L. F. Clark in 1839-41; W. H. Sheldon, 1840; R. C. Allison, 1848; Hiram Barrus, 1852-58; Miss Myra Holman, 1862.

In this connection we give a list of graduates and distinguished men and women natives of Goshen. The facts are derived from Barrus' sketches of Goshen:

Rev. Wm. Hallock—not exactly a native, but coming here in 1766, six years old—became the well-known minister for forty years at Canton, Conn. He was a brother of the celebrated minister and educator, Rev. Moses Hallock, of Plainfield.

Ralph Cushman graduated at Williams College, became a minister in Kentucky. His brother, Rufus Cushman, became a minister, and preached at Fairhaven, Vt.

Levi Parsons graduated at Middlebury College, 1814, Andover, 1817; sailed for Palestine as a missionary, Nov. 3, 1819; reached Jerusalem, Feb. 17, 1821, and was engaged for a time in Bible and tract distribution. His health failed, and he died at Alexandria, Feb. 10, 1822.

Horatio Bardwell spent most of his boyhood in Goshen, though not born here; graduated at Dartmouth, 1814; ordained a missionary, Oct. 23, 1815; arrived at Bombay, Nov. 1, 1816. His health failed, and he returned to this country after a few years.

Jason Olds became a minister, and settled in Ohio. Justice Parsons became a minister late in life, and preached in Vermont, at Whiting. Erastus Parsons entered the ministry and settled in Vermont. Silas also entered the same profession. Benjamin Parsons, at first a lawyer at Chesterfield, afterward entered the ministry. Preston Taylor, like Justice Parsons, left his farm in middle life to preach the gospel. William Williams graduated at Amherst, a classmate of Henry Ward Beecher, became a professor in Lagrange College, Alabama. Benjamin F. Brown graduated at Amherst, became a minister, and went to Virginia. Ezekiel Cheever Whitman graduated at Williams, became a minister and author. E. Putney Salmon entered the ministry, and settled in Ohio.

Alvan Stone commenced a course at Amherst, but left before graduating, to enter upon an active career of religious work in Illinois, where he died at twenty-five in 1833.

Frederick W. Burgess studied at Williams, graduated at Union, died in 1838, at the early age of twenty-seven. B. Franklin Parsons graduated at Williams, became a noted teacher, also entered the ministry.

A very noted event in missionary history is the departure from Goshen, Sept. 13, 1820, of John Smith, Elijah Bardwell, Calvin Cushman, and their families, as missionaries and teachers for the Choctaws in Mississippi. Their voyage and subsequent eventful career may almost be styled a missionary romance, proving that facts—and religious facts, too—are often stranger than fiction.

Goshen has been rather famous in furnishing wives for ministers and missionaries. Rhoda Bardwell married Rev. Wm. Fisher in 1807. Laura Bardwell, Rev. Calvin Cushman, missionary to the Choctaws, and Sarah Bardwell, Rev. James Richards, missionary to Ceylon. Abigail Hallock married Rev. Joel Chapin. Esther Hallock, Rev. Josiah Hayden. Hannah Dresser married Rev. Abel Farley. Electa May, Rev. Mr. Kingsbury, missionary to the Choctaws. Hannah Putney, John Smith, of the Choctaw Mission. Prudence May married Rev. Wm. Babbitt. Electa Hawks, Rev. Wm. H. Boardman. Theodocia Stowe, Rev. Rufus Cushman. Sophia Dresser, Rev. Samuel Walley. Ellen Smith, Rev. Robert C. Alison. Clarinda B. Williams, Rev. Lucius M. Boltwood. Martha Baker Williams, Rev. Wm. Carruthers. Silas Lyon entered the profession of law, and Lyman James; Silas A. Burgess also. Wm. White, Jr., studied medicine, but died young. Araunah Bardwell became a physician, and George M. Burgess. Alfred White, a journalist.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1847.—Number of schools, 5; attending in summer, 118; average, 86; winter, 148; average, 113; in town, between 4 and 16, 134; under 4, 5; over 16, 15; summer schools, 19 months; winter, 14 months, 7 days; total, 33 months, 7 days; summer teachers, 5 females; winter, 4 males, 2 females; male teachers' average wages per month, $16.67; female, $10.24.

January, 1857.—Five schools; attending in summer, 100; average, 81; winter, 107; average, 83; under 5, 17; over 15, 15; in town, between 5 and 15, 93; summer teachers, 5 females; winter, 2 males, 2 females; summer schools, 16 months, 10 days; winter, 11 months, 3 days; total, 27 months, 13 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $28; female, $16.42.

January, 1867.—Five schools; attending in the summer, 81; average, 69; winter, 93; average, 75; under 6, 5; over 15, 11; in town, between 5 and 15, 82; summer teachers, 5 females; winter, 1 female, 4 males; summer schools, 13 months; winter, 14 months; average wages of male teachers per month, $32; female teachers, $18.

January, 1878.—Four schools; repairs, $12.29; attending, 92; average, 56; under 5, 3; over 15, 13; in town, 67 between 5 and 15; teachers, 2 males, 5 females; 2 from normal school; 25 months, 10 days of school; share of school fund, $210.14; average wages of male teachers, $24 per month; female, $22; taxation, $350; board, fuel, etc., voluntarily given, $211; superintendence, $30.50; printing, $7.00.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF GOSHEN.

Immediately after the civil organization of the town the selectmen, as already stated, called a special meeting to consider matters connected with public worship.

The call then voted to Rev. Joseph Barker did not secure him as a regular pastor, though he preached for them some time. Calls were extended to others through several years,—Rev. Abraham Fowler, Rev. Reuben Parmalee, Rev. Elisha Hutchinson, Rev. Jeremiah Hallock, Rev. Jesse Remington, and Rev. Mase Shepard. All of these preached in Goshen for longer or shorter periods, but no one of them accepted the relation of settled pastor. Before the incorporation of the town the organization of the church had taken place, Dec. 21, 1780. It was constituted by Rev. Mr. Kilburn, of Chesterfield, as it is stated, or perhaps by a council over which he presided. The confession of faith and the covenant were only signed at the outset by Thomas Weeks and wife, Lemuel Lyon, Thomas Brown and wife, Daniel Brown, John Smith and wife.

After the long series of unsuccessful "calls," mentioned above, Rev. Samuel Whitman, of Ashby, finally accepted the overtures of the church. He was dismissed in 1818, owing, it is said, to some change in his belief that seemed to be a departure from the established doctrines of the Congregational Church. The desire for a change, which in later years has made pastorates so much briefer than formerly, undoubtedly had some influence in bringing about the termination of Mr. Whitman's labors.

The installation of Mr. Whitman took place Jan. 10, 1788, and was an occasion of much interest. The council included Rev. Timothy Allen, of Chesterfield; Rev. Joseph Strong, of Williamsburg; Rev. Aaron Bascom, of Chester; Rev. James Briggs, of Cummington. It will be seen that his pastorate lasted thirty years, and his name was a household word in all the families of the town. He had buried the dead of a generation; baptized the children; united them in marriage, and pointed them all to the better life beyond.

Meeting-House.—The controversy shown in the town records of 1781–82 over the site of the meeting-house was evidently settled during the summer of 1782. Dec. 19, 1782, it was voted that John James, Capt. White, and Maj. Bannister be a committee to agree with Mrs. May and Lieut. Lyon for a quantity of land to set the meeting-house upon. At the same meeting plans for galleries and pews were considered, and the discussion over the site seems to have been ended. Committee on plan for the galleries were Artemas Stone, Barzillai Bannister, Moses Hallock, Capt. Wm. White, Farnum White. 20th of January, 1783, chose the first wardens,—William Hallock and Oliver Taylor.

The first town-meeting held at the meeting-house was Dec. 19, 1782. August 6th they had met at the house of John Williams, so the house of worship was probably completed sufficient for use between those dates; and it was located "on the division-line between the lands of Widow Margaret May and those of Lieut. Lemuel Lyon," and must have actually been erected before any complete bargain was made for the land.

It was evidently expected that Rev. Abraham Fowler would be ordained at one time, as a committee was chosen to make arrangements. He did not, however, become the settled pastor.

Mrs. May was allowed an account for boarding Mr. Elisha Fish. He was probably a minister.

Oct. 2, 1784, Farnum White was allowed £1 4s. "for riding after ministers."

July 26, 1786.—Voted to raise the sum of fifteen pounds to build a pulpit in the meeting-house.

April 1, 1793.—Voted that "the singers improve the fore seats in the gallery in the meeting-house on the Lord's day."

Propositions to remove the meeting-house began to appear in the town-meetings, 1796 to 1800.

Joshua White was an early singing-master in town.

April 4, 1818, the sum of $20 was voted to pay Rev. Abell Farley for preaching the past winter.

April 4, 1826.—Voted a Committee to procure a base Viol for the church.

From 1825 to 1830 church notices grow less upon the town-books and disappear. The latest clauses in the warrants are in the following form: "To see if the Congregational Society will raise," etc. The old order of things was passing away. The union of church and town died out under the increase of different denominations and the impulse of modern views of religious liberty.

The first meeting-house of 1782 stood nearly opposite the present one,—on what was then "the Common,"—partly in the road that opens to the east. It had neither bell nor steeple, and was probably never painted. In the great tornado of Aug. 14, 1834, it was partially unroofed, and so much injured generally that it was then rebuilt and located upon the site it now occupies. It was then provided with a bell, the gift of Col. Timothy Lyman. It was again remodeled in 1858, at an expense of nearly $1000.

Mr. Barrus, in his valuable "History of Goshen," says of the singing:

"This received early attention. It was voted, Dec. 28, 1780, that Brother Thomas Weeks read the Psalm in the church, and Bro. John Smith lead the singing. During the next year the church appears to have been disturbed by some outside influences respecting their singing matters, and they voted the church ought to govern in the worship of God, and that the church shall govern, and that we disapprove of the present mode of singing. A committee was then chosen to make a selection of tunes to be sung in public worship. It was further voted to sing in the forenoon and the first time in the afternoon, reading line by line.

"It was voted, in 1784, that the singing be performed without reading as often as the quiriters see fit. In 1786, Ebenezer White was chosen to lead; in 1789, Josiah White; in 1793, Joshua Abell, Jr., Alpheus Narramore, and James Orcutt. Josiah White—known as Uncle 'Shiah—served many years, and, like his brother Ebenezer, was an excellent musician. Calvin Cushman, Asahel Billings, and Frederick P. Stone were also leaders for various periods. Maj. Joseph Hawks was leader for thirty-two years, and connected with the choir more than forty. Elijah Billings was leader fifteen years. J. M. Smith did long and faithful service. C. C. Dresser for nearly thirty years was connected with the choir, and furnished an organ quite a portion of the time."

Among the teachers of singing may be mentioned James Richards, in the earliest times; Capt. Anderson, of Chesterfield, 1800; Capt. Frary, 1809–10; Asahel Birge, of Southamptton, a few years later; Nehemiah White, of Williamsburg, 1823–28; Asa Barr, 1837–38; Geo. W. Lucas, 1842–43; and in modern times, Prof. Jenkins.

Record of the Pastors.—1st. Rev. Samuel Whitman, installed Jan. 10, 1788; services for the church terminated in July, 1818, by an ex-parte council; he probably preached in town for some two or three years longer. 2d. Rev. Joel Wright, installed Sept. 26, 1821; dismissed September, 1828. 3d. Rev. Henry B. Holmes, settled Sept. 25, 1830; dismissed January, 1833. 4th. Rev. Stephen Mason, settled June 22, 1836; dismissed April 10, 1837. 5th. Rev. John C. Thompson, installed Oct. 4, 1837; his services closed by reason of ill health in 1842. 6th. Rev. Royal Reed, installed Oct. 19, 1842; dismissed June 15, 1847. 7th. Rev. William J. Boardman, stated supply; services closed by reason of ill health in 1849. 8th. Rev. Robert Crosset; he came soon after Mr. Boardman left; his labors closed in 1853; one of his sons is now a missionary in China. 9th. Rev. Thomas H. Rood, labors commenced in 1853; installed Jan. 31, 1855; dismissed January, 1861. 10th. Rev. J. C. Thompson, again returned to the pulpit, but his health failed in a short time; he removed to Illinois. 11th. Rev. Sidney Holman, labors commenced in the fall of 1862; closed April, 1866. 12th. Rev. H. M. Rodgers, preached during the two years following the departure of Rev. Mr. Holman. 13th. Rev. Townsend Walker, installed by a council Sept. 29, 1868; services closed January, 1874. 14th. Rev. George Juchau, labors commenced Jan. 1, 1875; closed Dec. 31, 1876. 15th. Rev. D. P. Lord, the present pastor; his labors in connection with this church and people commenced Jan. 1, 1877.

Record of Deacons.—Oliver Taylor, chosen in 1787; died May, 1826. Artemas Stone, chosen in 1787; died in 1790. Thomas Brown, chosen in 1790; died in 1801. Cyrel Carpenter, chosen in 1809; removed to Enfield, 1819. Jonathan Lyman, chosen in 1810; removed to Northampton, 1834. Stephen Parsons, chosen in 1822; removed to Buckland, 1838. Ebenezer W. Town, chosen in 1833; removed to Enfield, 1838. Asahel Billings, chosen in 1837; removed to South Hadley, 1846. Marcus Linsley, chosen in 1839; removed to Southwick, 1841. Benjamin White, chosen in 1845; died Jan. 25, 1873, at an advanced age. Francis Lyman, chosen in 1845; died July 5, 1851. Theron L. Barrus, chosen in 1858; present deacon (1878). Henry H. Tilton, chosen in 1861; removed to Williamsburg, 1865. Hiram Packard, chosen June 29, 1871; declined. Elijah Billings, chosen Jan. 4, 1872; present deacon (1878).

THE BAPTIST CHURCH OF GOSHEN.

Under date of Dec. 24, 1814, this certificate appears in the town records:

To the Town clerk of Goshen:—The following is a list of those who have joined the Baptist Society of Goshen: Ebenezer White, Josiah White, Jesse Willcutt, Joshua Packard, Joshua Packard, Jr., Caleb Bryant, Ansel Amadon, Robert Webster, Gershom Bates, Enoch Willcutt, Cyrus Stearns, Ezra Stearns, Phineas Manning, Nathaniel Abell, Alexander Miller's estate, John Williams, John Wil-Liams, Jr., Abner Damon, James Orr, Levi Vinton, Samuel Luce, Samuel Snow, Nathaniel Bates, Gordon Williams, Sanford Boies, Zebulon Willcutt.

JOHN WILLIAMS, Clerk.

A true copy.

Attest: JOSEPH WHITE, Town Clerk.

May 27, 1815, Roswell Ranney and Benjamin Gates, committee of Ashfield, certify that Jonah Williams, of Goshen, is a member of the Second Baptist Society of Ashfield. March 6, 1820, John Williams, Clerk of Baptist Society, certifies that Isaac Wing is a member. Clement Sliter is also named as a member of the Baptist Church of Ashfield.

As a curious relic of the religious controversy of those days, we give the return of Elias White, constable, upon a warrant he had executed:

"GOSHEN. March 3, 1823.

"Pursuant to the within warrant, on the 23d day of February last I left an attested copy of said warrant to be posted up at the Baptist meeting-house in said Goshen, and on the 23d day of February last past posted up myself an attested copy upon the Pedo-Baptist meeting-house in said town. Therefore I conclude that the legal voters of said town qualified as within expressed, belonging to both Congregations, have had legal notice of the time and place as therein expressed to meet for the purposes within mentioned.

"ELIAS WHITE."

There are also certified as members of the Baptist Society of Goshen, Lyman Hunt, 1821; Leonard Jenkins, 1827; Nathaniel Tower, Silas Burgess, Daniel Carpenter, and Abner Damon, Jr., 1827; John Grant and Rufus Moore, Samuel W. Hall, Otis Ingraham, Joseph Bassett, Roland Rogers, Robert Rogers, Elihu Hubbard, Jabez Bement, Eleazer Hawks, David Whitman, Gordon Williams, Jonathan Vinton, Moses Hosford, Zelotes Bates, Asa Partridge, 1824 to 1828.

Lest the casual reader may suppose that all these were positive converts to the faith of the Baptist Church, and received rite of baptism by immersion, it may be necessary to explain that, under the ancient law of Massachusetts, the whole people were required to support the preaching of the gospel, and were taxed for that as for any other town business. Of course, this made the "Regular Congregational Church of the Standing Order" a town church, and everybody was taxed for its support, whether he were Jew, pagan, or Christian, Catholic or Protestant.

This ancient rigor was relaxed quite early in this century, by the passage of an act enabling any one to "sign off" to the Baptists, to the Methodists, or to any other denomination, and then be clear of taxation to support the Congregational Church. The theory still was, every man must belong somewhere. If he could not show that he was an actual member of some other religious society, the Congregational Church still claimed him. These changes were required to be actually made, and were therefore a matter of record. It is probable that some sought escape from what they deemed oppression by joining a Baptist society, but not the Baptist Church.

The organization of the Baptist Church seems to have been as early as 1814, and probably 1806 to 1809. Elders Todd, of Chesterfield, and Keyes, of Conway, were early ministers of this denomination in Goshen; and tradition states that Elder Winans was ordained here in 1809. From 1813 to 1819, Elder William Hubbard was pastor, and he was succeeded by Rev. David Woodbury, 1820 to 1823. Rev. Orra Martin then preached six years,—half-time services. Elder Hubbard again preached, from 1831 to 1837. The last regular pastor was Rev. Isaac Childs, who died Dec. 24, 1842. Preaching was still continued by various ministers for a few years; but the church was weakened by extensive removals. The services were finally discontinued, and the society virtually disbanded. They met for several years in Williams' old store.

The meeting-house was erected in 1822, and was a comfortable place of worship. It stood near the present residence of Hinckley Williams. The last religious service held in it was the funeral of Mrs. Mercy Williams, relict of John Williams. Her family had been among the first members and the main active supporters of the church. The building was sold in 1862, remodeled into a barn, and burned on the ground where the new barn now stands.

THE FIRST CALVINISTIC SOCIETY OF GOSHEN.

This church originated to some extent—perhaps wholly—from the difficulties arising at the time of the dismissal of Rev. Mr. Whitman, in 1818. Certificates appear (1828) in the town records that Mr. Benjamin Tilton, Mr. Stephen W. Tilton, Mr. Stephen Hosford, Mr. John Fuller, and Mr. Holland Hubbard are members of "the said first Calvinistic Society in Goshen." It is evident that the unpopular laws with reference to taxation for church purposes had some influence in giving rise to this new organization. This society held meetings for a while at private houses. Owing to the omission of certain formal legal steps by the old society, there was a reasonable opportunity for the new church to claim to be the first. The new organization did not continue for many years, but it undoubtedly had an influence in effecting a separation of "church and town" and the formal organization of the parish of the Congregational Church, which took place in 1828.

SECOND ADVENTISTS.

A church of this denomination was formed in the west part of the town in March, 1858. It included members from Chesterfield and Cummington. Jared Damon and Joseph Crosby were chosen the first deacons; Abner Damon and Andrew Baker, elders. For several years they met at private houses, with an occasional preacher from abroad. They have recently removed their meetings to the village, and have erected a small, neat, and convenient house of worship.

BURIAL-PLACES.

Some items with reference to burying-grounds appear in the town records. The action the first year, 1781, respecting the location of the church, shows that a burying-place was already in use at the centre.

April 1, 1800.—Voted to raise ten dollars "to purchase a burying-cloth."

The "improvement" of the burying-ground by pasturing was occasionally struck off to the highest bidder at the town-meetings. In 1806, Elijah Bardwell gave $2 for the privilege of mowing it.

May 6, 1816.—Voted that the selectmen fence the burying-ground.

These items refer to what is still the principal place of burial, half a mile north of Goshen village. In 1877, $100 was voted to fence the ground. This burial-place is rather picturesquely situated on the southeastern slope of the hill, above the residence of Hinckley Williams. Attempts at modern improvement have been made, but the ground is so full of graves, many of them marked simply with common field-stone, and irregularly placed, that little can be done, except to right up the old monuments, smooth the turf tenderly over the sacred dust of the olden times, and let Nature with each returning spring rear above the dead her annual tribute of blade and leaf and flower, emblems of the resurrection. A large addition has recently been made to the ground, and this can be laid out in any form desired. The first burial here is said to have been a member of the Nelson family.

Among the early inscriptions are the following:

Mr. Samuel Grimes, died Jan. 6, 1789.

Mrs. Ruth Abell, died Aug. 29, 1777, aged 48.

Mrs. Elizabeth Abell, died Aug. 29, 1774, aged 40.

Joshua Abell, died Aug. 29, 1811, aged 80.

This is a singular fact, if correctly engraved and correctly copied,—three deaths the same day of the same month and so many years apart.

Daniel Nelson, died Sept. 26, 1775.

Col. Ezra May, died Jan. 11, 1778, aged 46.

Widow Margaret May, died Jan. 19, 1788, aged 56.

Samuel Narramore, Dec. 9, 1777.

There may be stones with earlier dates, as some are very difficult to read, and there were no doubt burials still earlier than these inscriptions. We mention a few others prominent in history:

Col. Nehemiah May, died Sept. 10, 1813, aged 59.

Dr. Benjamin Burgess, died Dec. 13, 1807, age 170.

Maj. Ambrose Stone, March 18, 1850, aged 93.

Capt. Thomas Weeks, April 20, 1817, aged 80.

Rev. Isaac Child, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Dec. 24, 1842.

There are said to have been a few burials upon the Beals farm, in the west part of the town, but the remains were removed. In the extreme eastern part of the town, on the road to Williamsburg, is another burying-ground of ancient date, where a considerable number of persons were buried.

The fearful pestilence of 1777 ought to be mentioned in connection with this subject. The dysentery, introduced, it is said, by a sick soldier, raged fearfully. Husbands and sons were absent to resist the march of Burgoyne, and the mothers were left to battle almost alone in the fearful struggle. Some lost all their children, often burying two in one grave. In twenty-one days there were twenty-one deaths. Other sad years of sorrow are mentioned in tradition,—the fever of 1813, of 1824, and also the scarlet fever of 1803, '4, '31, '44, and '52.

In the old cemetery is buried Mrs. Elihu Parsons, a daughter of the eminent theologian, Jonathan Edwards; no monument marks the spot. Four clergymen are buried there,—Rev. Samuel Whitman, Elder Isaac Child, Abel Farley, Frederick W. Burgess. Four physicians,—Benjamin Burgess, Ellis Coney, George M. Burgess, Daniel Pierce. Four early magistrates,—Wm. White, Oliver Taylor, John Williams, Timothy Lyman.

TOWN SOCIETIES.

In Goshen the only societies were and are now missionary organizations, sewing-circles, and similar unions that cluster around the church, and are really an effective part of its work.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

In the western part of the town have at times been found traces of Indian occupancy. In 1840 a stone gouge, that had evidently been used in tapping the sugar-maple, was found upon the farm of Col. Stone. Two miles north, the fragments of a stone kettle, surrounded by decayed fire-brands, was found several years ago, still further indicating the manufacture of sugar by the Indians.

Fragments of flint and arrow-heads are found in such quantities as to show that the Indians made their weapons in this vicinity.

It is an old tradition that a gang of counterfeiters carried on their operations in Goshen. They are said to have had a secret hiding-place in the forest that still stretches along the highway between the house of Hiram Packard and the top of the hill eastward. Certainly in these rocky fastnesses there was ample opportunity for concealment, but there seems to be no record that any counterfeiting was ever really proved.

Moore's Hill, already mentioned, is a point of great interest. Its altitude, 1713 feet, gives it a commanding view. From here the eye looks down upon Mount Holyoke and Mount Tom; Mount Monadnock in New Hampshire, and Mount Wachusett in Worcester County, are both in sight. More than thirty church-spires can be counted in a clear day. Amherst College is in full view. A good road ought to be opened to the summit, so that it might become a popular resort.

The "Great Meadow," so called, in the northerly part of the town, is supposed to have been a beaver pond at some period before the white men settled here, and it is claimed that the first settlers of Goshen saw old logs constituting the dam, distinctly showing the marks of the beaver teeth. Before the settlement of these western towns the people of Hatfield are said to have cut and stacked hay here in large quantities, and then sent their cattle to be fed while the hay lasted. This "Great Meadow" is now the basin of the upper reservoir.

Lily Pond does not seem to be as poetical a place as its name would indicate. It is described by a modern writer as a natural reservoir of mire and water. Cattle cannot cross it in safety, and the bridge which passes over it is continually sinking, so as to require repeated layers of logs and earth to bring it up to a suitable height above the water to make travel safe. Samuel Olds lowered the natural outlet twenty feet, but failed to drain the land sufficient for cultivation, as he expected. The two reservoir ponds add features rather attractive than otherwise to the natural scenery of Goshen.

The "Devil's Den" is a wild, rocky gorge, through which Mill River flows for some distance, in the south part of the town. To enjoy it travelers should descend the bank with a guide; travel down the bed of the stream, between and under the overhanging walls of granite; and tread cautiously along the rocks carpeted with the beautiful but treacherous moss, avoiding if possible an unexpected bath in some deep, dark pool.

The "Cascade" is a short distance above the upper opening of the "Devil's Den," and at some seasons of the year is really a waterfall of considerable beauty.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Agriculture is the principal business of Goshen. More or less of lumber, in the early times, and fire-wood found their way to market, as they do yet to some extent. Goshen has some fine farms. Indeed, if it is not a land "flowing with milk and honey," and if the sons of the early settlers have left their native hills for the fertile fields of other States, yet here is still many a pleasant home on the hill-side or in the valley. There are still many farms where skill, industry, and economy—those old-fashioned virtues—may yet secure a comfortable living, a reasonable competence.

MILLS AND MANUFACTORIES.

On the Dresser Brook, one of the tributaries of the Dead Branch, was located, more than a hundred years ago, the saw-mill of the pioneer Reuben Dresser. The property has remained in the family to this day. The works have always comprised a saw-mill. A broom-handle factory was added forty years ago or more. In later years the button-mold manufacture has been carried on, and is, to some extent, at the present time. The present owner is C. C. Dresser, son of Moses Dresser. About two miles above the Dresser mills, on the same stream, was formerly a saw-mill, built by Emmons Putney about 1835, and run for twenty years or more, passing meanwhile into the possession of William H. Webster. The works were abandoned several years since.

On Swift River, a tributary of the Westfield, flowing from Goshen into Cummington, was, in ancient times, a grist-mill, below what is known as Shaw's Bridge, and not far from the Cummington line, probably built by Deacon Bigelow, as early as 1800. Above, at the present mills of Amos Stone, was originally located the clothing-works, built in 1780, by Maj. Ambrose Stone. He carried on the business for many years with the aid of only hand-machinery, and had few or no competitors, even in adjoining towns. A saw-mill was built perhaps fifty years ago; the broom-handle business was also added a few years later. The works at the present time comprise a saw-mill and a brush-handle factory. They are owned by Amos Stone, a grandson of the pioneer, and have always been in the family. A short distance above the mills of Mr. Stone is said to be the site of the first grist-mill in town; some traces of the dam and the race still remain. Still farther above on the stream was a saw-mill, built perhaps forty-five years ago, by Hiram Packard. It was run for a few years and abandoned; no buildings now at that point. On the site of the present mills of Freeman Sears was an old saw-mill of early times, owned by Deacon Stephen Parsons. Near the north line of the town, on what is called the Williams Brook, a branch of Swift River, a saw-mill and a grist-mill were erected, no doubt before 1800, by Daniel Williams, of Ashfield. They were continued in the hands of various owners for many years. In later times the grist-mill was given up. The present owner, Mr. J. D. Shipman, has an establishment for the manufacture of children's wagons, and also continues a saw-mill.

Of Mill River, whose waters reach the Connecticut at Northampton, instead of through the Westfield, there is one tributary flowing down from the vicinity of Moore's Hill. On this was a saw-mill, built by Asa White, perhaps fifty years ago. It was run for a few years and allowed to go down. On the main stream was a saw-mill, built 1812 to 1815, by Ebenezer White, Elias Lyon, and another partner. It was afterward owned by Capt. Horace Packard. It was abandoned, however, many years ago. A mile below, on the same stream, about on the line of Williamsburg, was an old grist-mill, built more than a hundred years ago by Col. Nehemiah May. It was abandoned fifty years ago perhaps. The site of a dwelling-house, and even the outlines of the garden, appear, but no mills or buildings of any kind are there, not a vestige of the old timbers remaining. Maj. Hawks remembers going to mill there when he was a boy. Farther up-stream is the Emmons Putney mill-site, where he erected a saw-mill in 1839. He has continued business of some kind there nearly all the time since. In later years he has made button-molds, and does so yet to a limited extent. As showing the perfection of modern machinery, and the ease and rapidity with which the molds can be made, Mr. Putney states that he has known one girl at work for him turn off in one day 150 gross, or 21,600 molds. Farther up is found the site of the "Sumac Mill," established to make ground sumac, to export to Europe for tanning the best morocco. The mill was built by Nehemiah May and Ebenezer Putney about 1788, on land belonging to the former. It was run only a few years; the business could not be made profitable, as other materials were discovered in Europe and brought into use for the same purpose. There is little now to mark the place except some remains of the old dam. Still above, toward the reservoir, is the present saw-mill of Rodney Hawks. On the site of this was formerly an old mill, built perhaps by Washburn & Russ, thirty-five or forty years ago. Mr. Hawks rebuilt it about 1870.

Coming up to the road running east from the meeting-house, there was originally a saw-mill, built as early as, perhaps earlier than, the incorporation of the town,—probably by John Williams, known as "Carpenter John," to distinguish him from the merchant and tavern-keeper at the burying-ground. This afterward passed into the hands of Abner Moore, who established a manufactory of broom-handles, and afterward of button-molds. He added also a small grist-mill. The oldest dam was somewhat above the present reservoir-dam, and still shows in low water. All these works were bought out and given up when the reservoir was established.

At the upper reservoir, built in 1873, the dam is erected upon the site of the old dam belonging to the Lyman saw-mill, built by Francis and Thomas Lyman, 1820 to 1828; continued in the hands of the Lymans down to the construction of the reservoir, though the mills had been out of use for some time before. At Goshen Centre, lower reservoir, there were also built, about 1845, a saw-mill and plane-making works. The proprietors were Oscar Washburn and Ralph Utley. The enterprise was abandoned after a few years. The old-time cider-mills were those of Dresser, White, James, Gloyd, Lyman Parsons, Packard, and Narramore. Present cider-mills are run by Joseph Beals and by Edward C. Packard.

Other business enterprises may be noted: Levi Kingman, 1812-14, made what was known as Tuscarora socks,—a patent overshoe. Solomon Parsons and John James engaged in the manufacture of potash, and continued for many years. Oliver Taylor had a tannery on the William H. Webster farm, before the Revolution, and tanners were thought so important to the country that when he enlisted the authorities sent him home again to make leather, rather than to fight. Benjamin Tilton had a tannery for some years. In old times, Thomas Weeks, Jason Olds, Silas Olds, and Levi Stearns were the principal cabinet-makers. Spinning-wheels were made by Weeks, and at a later day by Reuben Kingman. The blacksmiths of Goshen may be mentioned as John Williams, Jonah Williams, Thomas Brown, Cyrus Stearns, Thomas W. Stearns, Asahel Billings, and Elijah Billings. The latter came here in 1816, and the ring of his hammer upon the anvil has been a familiar sound to Goshen for a long series of years. Joshua Packard, Sr., was a shoemaker in the olden times. In later years may be noted Hattil Washburn, Sr., John V. Hunt, Lysander and Spencer Gurney, and Lowell Hunt.

The ten leading articles of farm production for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values: Butter, $7529; fire-wood, $2243; maple-sugar, $2540; beef, $2475; hay, $19,058; manure, $5778; potatoes, $3689; pork, $1572; milk, $1550; eggs, $1083.

MILITARY.

The action of the town during its first year, 1781-82, is given under the head of organization.

Aug. 6, 1782.—Voted that said town will pay their equal proportion of procuring and mustering a man to serve in the Continental army three years, which hath already been procured by that part of Goshen lately set off from Chesterfield. Voted that said town will pay their equal proportion of procuring and mustering a man if required of Chesterfield Gore. Voted to raise the sum of sixty pounds, to be assessed on their polls and estates, for paying a man already procured for the Continental army for three years.

It is recorded in the case of a soldier who had deserted that his friends procured an able-bodied man to take his place, and secured thereby the honorable discharge of the defaulting man,—signed by Moses Hazen, brigadier-general, and by Lieut. Samuel Buffinton; also receipted for by Seth Bannister, captain and commandant at Springfield post; by Col. Benjamin Bonney, Nahum Eager, and William White. Certain differences with the town of Chesterfield over the furnishing of men and supplies for the army in 1780 to 1781 were submitted to arbitration.

To this official action of the town ought to be added the following notes, with reference to the men who went from this part of the town of Chesterfield before Goshen was incorporated. Of the company that marched from Chesterfield, April 21, 1775, two days after the battle of Lexington, Capt. Robert Webster of this town was in command, and Christopher Bannister was one of the lieutenants, Wm. White, first sergeant, Timothy Lyman, third sergeant, and Jonathan Nelson, corporal. The company also included the following privates from the present territory of Goshen: Tilly Burk, Benjamin Bourn, Caleb Cushman, Barzillai Bannister, Nehemiah May, Cyrus Lyon, Oliver Taylor, Artemus Stone, Reuben Dresser, Samuel Thomas, Ebenezer Parsons, Samuel Olds, Christopher Grant, Adam Beals, and Wait Burk. It is uncertain how many of these went regularly into the Continental army, but many of them are known to have done so, and been engaged in long and arduous service.

In the absence of authentic records, tradition supplies the following notes with reference to some: Christopher Bannister became captain, and was in service on Long Island. He attained the rank of major before the close of the war. Maj. Ezra May was also engaged upon Long Island. He also belonged to the Northern army, and was present at the surrender of Burgoyne, but his health failed, and, returning home, he died Jan. 11, 1778.

Timothy Lyman belonged to the army of the North during the Burgoyne campaign; was at the battle of Bennington, and also at the surrender of the British army at Saratoga. He brought home a musket of the "Queen's Arm" stamp, taken at Saratoga. It is now in the possession of the Lyman family of this town. Joshua Abell was also at the surrender of Burgoyne. Before that, at the battle of Bennington, a bullet struck his gun and glanced off, leaving him unhurt. The gun is a cherished memorial in the family of his descendants, and shows clearly where it was struck. The same gun was carried in the war of 1812.

Asa Grant served for a time in Connecticut; William Hallock and his son Moses, in New Jersey; Jeremiah Hallock, at Ticonderoga. Isaac Kingman, John Jepson, and Joseph Jepson, Caleb Bryant, David Stearns, Jr., Lemuel Stearns, and John Stearns were all in the Revolutionary service to a greater or less extent. Zebulon Willcutt was in service nineteen months. Phineas Manning served through the whole war; was acquainted with Gen. Washington, and had seen him ride between the contending lines in battle. Manning suffered severely at Monmouth; was at White Plains, at the surrender of Cornwallis, and received from Gen. Washington the "Badge of Merit." The Mannings honored their patriotic name in the civil war, as the records abundantly show. James Orcutt served at West Point, and was on duty in command of a company detailed to guard the great chain the night after Arnold's treachery. The American column sent forward for the safety of the fort and for the arrest of Arnold passed his guard in their ardor without replying to the challenge. Maj. Ambrose Stone served under Gen. Ward at Boston, and under Arnold at Lake Champlain. He was in the battles of Bemis Heights, that compelled the surrender of Burgoyne. It is said of him that as the smoke lifted during the battle, once, he found himself face to face with the enemy alone, his men having retreated to the cover of a wood. He fired his musket, leaped a rail fence, and escaped unharmed. He was at Valley Forge, and shared in the sufferings of that fearful winter. He was the last survivor of the soldiers of the Revolution from this town. He died March 18, 1850, aged ninety-three. Thomas Weeks, before coming to Goshen, had spent several years in the army. He served as commissary and as lieutenant, and was often clerk of courts-martial and other military gatherings. His papers, journals, and memorandums comprised much valuable history. He was on Long Island in important service watching the enemy.

Doubtless many others should be included in this roll of honor, but their names have not survived the lapse of years. History states that there were thirty men from Chesterfield in the army of the Revolution, January, 1776. A number of these were of course from Goshen,—perhaps the same as those mentioned above. (See Webster papers, in chapter on Chesterfield.)

The following is from the Hampshire Gazette:

GOSHEN, July 6, 1812.—At a legal meeting, voted "unanimously that it is the sense and full belief of the inhabitants of this town that an offensive war against Great Britain at this time is unnecessary, perfectly unjustifiable, and to the last degree impolitic. That it is the unanimous voice of this town (one vote only excepted) that we cannot voluntarily engage nor assist in an offensive war against Great Britain, but that we stand ready at all times, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, to defend and support the Constitution of the United States and our country against all invasion and hostile attempts of any person or persons, nation or nations, whatsoever, under heaven."

The above shows the prevalent feeling of 1812, and probably there was only one regular soldier from Goshen—John Manning—in the army during that war. The following, however, went to the defense of Boston: Capt. Timothy Lyman, Asahel Billings, orderly, Wm. Abell, Wm. Tilton, Oliver T. Cathcart, Enoch James, John Fuller, Robert Barras, Abisha Williams, Arad Hosford, and probably Moses Dresser.

It was reserved for the great civil war of 1861-65 to wake anew the patriotism of this people. Then, as elsewhere at the North, the national colors flashed out over these hills and valleys, the emblems of national life, and with passionate love of the old flag of their fathers the sons went forth to battle in its defense.

OFFICIAL ACTION DURING THE CIVIL WAR.

At a town-meeting May 6, 1861, it was voted to appropriate $200 to be expended in recruiting volunteers. C. A. Packard, H. H. Tilton, Hiram Packard, Daniel Williams, and Francis Jepson were appointed a committee to attend to the same. November 5th the provisions of the law with reference to State aid to families of volunteers were accepted, and authority given the selectmen to borrow the amount necessary for this purpose. Sept. 3, 1862, the selectmen were authorized to pay a bounty of $100 each either for three years' volunteers or for those of nine months only.

Jan. 19, 1863.—Voted to borrow $1140 to pay bounties to volunteers.

March 2d.—Voted to use $1000 of the "James Fund" to pay bounties.

April 6th.—Voted to borrow $300 to aid the families of soldiers.

April 4, 1864, a bounty of $125 each was offered for recruits to fill the quota of the town under existing calls, and June 15th the vote was made general to fill all future calls to March 1, 1865. May 22, 1865, it was voted to pay by taxation one-third of the war-bounty debt and borrow two-thirds.

Schouler's "History" states that Goshen furnished 47 for the war, a surplus of 6 above all demands. A part of these were recruits hired abroad. Thirty-four citizens of the town went, of whom 8 lost their lives. A list of these is appended.

The whole amount of aid paid solely by the town was $3374.50; the assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $157,942, and the population was 439; amount of aid to families, afterward refunded by the State, 1861, $41.92; 1862, $573.57; 1863, $768.60; 1864, $638.88; 1865, $155.45; total, $2178.42.

One family may fairly receive a special mention. Phineas Manning, in the war of the Revolution, and his son, John Manning, in the regular service during the war of 1812-15, have been already mentioned. The old heroic blood survived the long years of peace, and in 1861-65 four of the Manning name, descendants of the hero of White Plains and Yorktown, fought for the safety of the Union, and two laid down their lives in its defense. The "Badge of Merit," given by Washington to the sire, has been honored by the sons.

SOLDIERS' RECORD, WAR OF 1861-65.

John H. Godfrey, enl. Oct. 2, 1862, 52d M.V. M., Co. C; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

Abner Phelps, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M.V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863; died Sept 1st, of disease contracted in the army.

Anson W. Godfrey, enl. Sept. 2, 1864, 1st H. Art., Co. A; killed in action, Oct. 27, 1864, at the battle of Boynton Plank-Road, Va.

Lyman F. Rice, Sept. 2, 1864, 1st H. Art., Co. A; was taken prisoner at Hatcher's Run; disch. June 4, 1865.

James B. Taylor, enl. Sept. 2, 1864, 1st H. Art., Co. A; was taken prisoner at Hatcher's Run; disch. June 24, 1865.

Augustus A. Manning, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. C; had been pro. to sergt., and was wounded at Fair Oaks; disch. July 1, 1864.

George P. Manning, enl. Aug. 23, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. C; wounded Feb. 8, 1862, at Roanoke Island, N. C., and died Feb. 16, 1862.

Jonathan Burroughs, enl. Oct. 15, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. G; disch. to re-enl. Dec. 23, 1863 (Northampton).

Joel D. Manning, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. C; disch. July 3, 1862, for disability; re-enl. Sept. 2, 1864, 1st H. Art., Co. A; disch. with the regiment, June, 1865.

John H. Manning, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. C; died May 31, 1862, at Ship Island, Miss.

Austin M. Rice, enl. Feb. 11, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. C; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.

Ansel A. Roberts, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. C; disch. Nov. 19, 1864.

George F. Tilton, enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 1st Cav., Co. F; pro. orderly to Gen. Stoneman in his raid upon Richmond; wounded, and died from the effects of the wound at Alexandria, Va., Dec. 21, '63.

Lorin Barrus, enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 1st Cav., Co. F; on detached duty at Division Headquarters; disch. at the close of the term of enlistment.

Alvin Barrus, enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 1st Cav., Co. F; detailed for hospital service, serving two years or more; the last two months with his regiment in the field; discharged.

Joseph Beals, enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 1st Cav., Co. F; on detached service; disch. at the close of the term of enlistment.

Henry Parsons, enl. May, 1861, 10th Regt., Co. H; wounded at Fair Oaks; served through and disch.

Wm. Manning, enl. in the 20th Regt.; wounded twice in the battles of the Wilderness, losing a leg; discharged.

Leroy Phelps, enl. Dec. 1863, 1st H. Art., Co. A; wounded April 1, 1864, and died April 11th.
 Horace H. Packard, enl. in 29th Regt., Co. H; detailed as a carpenter for a portion of the time at Fortress Monroe; served through; disch. with the regiment.
 Joseph H. Dawes, enl. in 105th N. Y.; pro. as orderly to the colonel; served through, and disch. with the regiment.
 John H. Bessell, enl. July 23, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. D; twice wounded; in hospital only one week; served through, and disch. with the regiment.
 Joel Wing, enl. 1862, 27th Regt., Co. H; killed in the battle of Newbern, N. C., March 14, '62.
 Henry Putney, enl. in the Navy, and served out his full term of enlistment.

Charles H. Dawes, enl. Nov. 21, 1861, 32d Inf., Co. B; re-enl. Jan. 5, 1864; wounded before Richmond and four days a prisoner; disch. May 26, 1865, by order of War Department.
 Henry L. Narramore, enl. Nov. 21, 1861, 32d Inf., Co. B; trans. June 18, 1864, to Vet. Res. Corps; had been wounded; was leader of a hospital relief-party for some time.
 Timothy D. Pierce, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 32d Inf., Co. B; had been detailed for garrison duty at Fort Warren; disch. Feb. 20, 1862, for disability.
 Lyman W. Parsons, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; was detailed as teamster for regiment and then brigade service; and had charge of personal supplies for Gen. Wright and staff; disch. June 21, 1865.

Timothy P. Lyman, enl. Aug. 1861, 1st Cav., Co. E; taken prisoner at Aldie, June 17, 1863; in Libby prison; paroled; declared exchanged; re-enl. Feb. 1864; pro. to 1st lieut. and quartermaster; discharged.
 Levant Phelps, enl. Dec. 1863, 1st H. Art., Co. A; served through; disch. with the regiment.
 Thomas S. Holman, enl. in 1862, and was asst. surg. at Camp Day, North Cambridge, was taken ill, and died at Goshen, Dec. 7, 1862.
 Frederick A. Hubbard, enl. in 52d Regt., Co. F; served through, and disch. with regiment.
 Alexis R. Hubbard, enl. in 34th Regt., Co. E; served through, and disch. with regiment.
 Calvin A. Hubbard, enl. in 5th Conn. Regt., Co. E; served through, and disch. with regiment.

CHESTERFIELD.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

CHESTERFIELD is situated nearly central with reference to that portion of Hampshire County west of the Connecticut River. Its principal village is stated by air-line measurement at eleven and a half miles from the county-seat.

Those who drive over the road will find it farther than that. The town is bounded north by Worthington, Cummington, and Goshen; east by Goshen, Williamsburg, and Westhampton; south by Westhampton and Huntington; west by Worthington. The area of the original town before Goshen was incorporated was 29,640 acres. It is now stated in the reports of the census of 1875 as 16,748 acres.

The title to the soil of this town is traced back to a direct grant by the colony of Massachusetts Bay. The previous extinction of the Indian title to all this section of country is fully treated in the general portion of this history. To the 800 troops who assisted in subduing the Narragansett Indians in the King Philip war of 1675 the State granted certain townships of land. Some of these being found to be barren and scarcely worth settling, the State granted certain compensation lands, among them the present town of Chesterfield; and 7261 acres of the north part were given to the claimants or their heirs under the Narragansett grant. The State also secured to certain soldiers engaged in the Canada expedition of 1690, or to their heirs, lands in the south part of the town. A special grant of 600 acres to Mr. Coleman in the south part of the town is supposed to have been for services in connection with laying out this and perhaps other townships for the State, though the reasons for this valuable grant are not really known.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The prominent feature of this town is the valley of the Westfield River, extending very nearly north and south through the western part of the town. On each side of this and nearly parallel are ranges of hills, mostly continuous through the town, though differing considerably in elevation at various points. Farther east is a second valley, through which flows the Dead Branch, and this is also nearly north and south in its general direction. The extreme eastern portion of the town consists of a rough, hilly tract. Dead Pond, in the east, is the only body of water to be noted. Generally speaking, Chesterfield is drained by the Westfield River and its tributaries.

EARLY SETTLEMENT—SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

The town of Chesterfield was settled from 1760 to 1765. The first actual pioneer who established himself and family within the limits of this town and wintered here was George Buck. He lived in what is known as Ireland Street. It is related that, getting short of provisions, he started for Northampton to obtain a supply. He was delayed by a snow-storm, and his family were compelled to kill and eat their dog to save their lives. We have little account of his family. Several of the same family name, presumed to be his sons, appear in these sketches.

It is not easy to give the names of the other early settlers in chronological order. From the town records, rolls of highway accounts, and other papers, it is easily determined that the following located in this town, including Goshen, from 1760 to 1768: From Dudley, Joseph Burnell and David Stearns; from Scituate, Benjamin Bryant, Consider Bryant, Prince Bryant, Abiel Stetson, Abner Bates, Nehemiah Bates, Benjamin Bates, Benjamin Pierce, Thomas Pierce, Jonathan Pierce, Seth Sylvester, Nehemiah Sylvester, Luke Sylvester, Jacob Litchfield, Robert Damon, Amos Damon, Joshua Rogers, John Rogers, John Pyncheon, Isaiah Damon, and Joseph Bailey; from Cohasset, Ichabod Damon, John Stephenson, and Zebulon Willcutt; from Sutton, Jeremiah Stockwell, Benjamin Tupper, and Ansel Tupper; from Pembroke, Benjamin Bonney and Seth Taylor; from Charlton, William White and Ebenezer Putney; from Pelham, Charles Kidd, Benjamin Kidd, and Robert Hamilton; from Connecticut, Jeremiah Spaulding; from Bridgewater, several families of the Coles; from Northampton, Elisha Warner, Elijah Warner, Joel Warner, Paul King, Silas King, Justus Wright, Paul Clapp, and Amasa Clapp; from Pembroke, Gideon Bisbee and Jotham Bisbee; from various places not certain, Robert Webster, Ezra May, George Buck, Prince Cowing, Simeon Higgins, John Holbard, Aaron Jewell, Asa Grant, Charles Beswick, Everton Beswick, Archelaus Anderson, and Jonathan Anderson. The names of still others appear in the records given. John Cowing, son of Prince Cowing, is said to have been the first white child born in town. Jeremiah Spaulding was the first man who died in town, and his death was caused by sticking a nail into his foot at the raising of a house upon the place owned in later years by Bela Stetson.

The first death in town was, however, the wife of Benjamin Bonney. Her grave, according to the deed of the yard at the centre, should be found near the north line, a little east of the new Russell tablet.

FAMILY NOTES.

Archelaus Anderson, owned at the centre, the north line of the cemetery being his north line; his place became soon after the property of Rev. Benjamin Mills. Jonathan Anderson lived west of the centre; sons, David and Alanson.

Abner Bates, homestead east part of the town. Nehemiah Bates, homestead the present place of Hudson Bates. Children: Jacob, Vermont; Ephraim, Plainfield; Eliab, New York; Nathaniel, who died at twenty-one; Nehemiah, Asa, Levi, in Cummington; Gershom, Goshen; Solomon, on the old homestead; Ruth, died in infancy; Mehitable (Mrs. Jonathan Luce), Chesterfield. The wife of Solomon Bates lived to the age of ninety-five. Benjamin Bates probably lived near Sugar Hill.

Joshua Bailey, brother of the next mentioned. Joseph Bailey, homestead the present farm of Calvin Damon; Joseph Bailey, who died some fifty years ago, was probably a son, and was a merchant for many years, and a hotel-keeper, also a member of the Legislature; kept what has since been the Clapp tavern.

Benjamin Bonney settled about a mile south of the centre. He had one son, David D., who later in life moved West; two other sons were Benjamin, Jr., and Marshall.

Gideon Bisbee, homestead on "the mount." Had two sons, Gideon, of Ohio, and John, Chesterfield; daughter, Mrs. Rush Gurney, Chesterfield.

Jotham Bisbee, homestead on the present Franklin Buck property. Children: Jonathan, Asahel, and Elisha, Chesterfield; Jotham, died unmarried; Job, finally went to New York; Mrs. Seth Remington, of Chesterfield; Rebecca, died unmarried; Mrs. Luther Gere, of Worthington; Mrs. Felix Stanton, of Huntington. Oren Bisbee, of the mills, and a brother, Osman, are grandsons of Jotham, sons of Elisha.

George Buck was the first settler, but there is little account of his family, though the name is found in town in later years, and in the records of Worthington.

Charles Beswick; none of this family name in town for the last thirty or forty years. Everton Beswick, Beswick Hill. The early location, no doubt, of these families is near the Williamsburg line.

Col. Patrick Bryant, a Revolutionary soldier, settled between West Chesterfield and "the mount." Children: Zenas, Oren, Martin, and Asahel, of Chesterfield; John, New York; Nathaniel, Ohio; Mrs. Asa Gurney, of Cummington, afterward moved to Ohio; Mrs. Obadiah Skiff, of Goshen.

Joseph Burnell, homestead present place of S. C. Damon; he died at the age of eighty-two. Children: John, Chesterfield; Mrs. Reuben Dresser, Goshen; Mrs. Richard Sylvester, Chesterfield; Joseph, Chesterfield; Ephraim, Cummington; Manasseh, St. Alban's, Vt. The missionaries Thomas S. and Kingsley A. are grandsons, and sons of Rufus.

Elisha Baker, homestead on Sugar Hill, present place of Esther Baker. Children: Electa, died young; Elisha, Chesterfield (father of Deacon Baker); Fanny (Mrs. Israel Graves), Williamsburg; Mrs. Ralph Utley, Chesterfield; Andrew, Chesterfield; Sarah (Mrs. Darius Stephenson); Daniel, Chesterfield; John, Chesterfield; Alsie, died unmarried.

Benjamin Bryant, homestead where Frank H. Bryant now lives, who is a great-grandson. Of his sons, Eli and Asahel settled in Chesterfield. Eli in the latter part of his life lived at the centre, and was an extensive landholder. Consider Bryant was a brother of Benjamin; homestead the present place of Levi Bryant. Prince Bryant was another brother of Benjamin Bryant.

Isaac Buck, homestead on "the mount." Children: Nathan, West; Moses, West, and another brother also; Jesse, Abner, and Isaac, Chesterfield; Mrs. Porter; Mrs. Stephenson, Connecticut; Mrs. Silas King.

Ebenezer Cole; he had one son, Amasa. The Cole name is prominent in the west part of the town, and has included several public men in years past and at the present time.

Paul Clapp was one of that family name in town. Amasa Clapp settled on the present Erwin Rice farm. Of his children, Ira settled in Chesterfield (father of Ira, now living in town), and a daughter was Mrs. Alvin Rice.

Prince Cowing settled on Ireland Street. The following were probably sons of Prince: Calvin, went West; Thompson, went to Western New York; Samuel, died on Ireland Street.

Luther Curtis, homestead probably in the east part of the town, now owned by Asa Curtis, a great-grandson. He had two sons, Luther and Nathan. James Cox owned the mills at Bisbee's, and lived at the site of an old cellar in late years on the road west. Nathaniel Coleman lived on the present Levi Witherell place. Sons: Nathaniel, Noah, John.

Ezekiel Corban, mechanic, made the old churn owned by Joel Willcutt's mother.

Amaziah Cole, homestead on the farm now owned by Widow Smith on Ireland Street. Sons: Ebenezer, Joseph, Amaziah, Jr., settled in Chesterfield. Ephraim Cole, of Ireland Street, is a son of Amaziah, Jr. Consider Cole. Sons: Isaac, went West; Daniel, Seth, William, and Consider, Jr., settled in Chesterfield. Horace Cole, of Worthington, is a grandson.

Amos Damon came to this town in 1762; settled on what is now the Adelbert Bisbee farm. No house there now. Of his children, Amos, Jr., was in the Revolutionary war seven years, and the gun he carried is now in the possession of Calvin Damon; David, settled in Chesterfield; Nathan, in Westhampton; James and Isaac, in Chesterfield. Calvin, a son of Isaac, lives on the old tavern-site of the Damons and the Pierces. Isaiah Damon settled near the present residence of Calvin Damon. Children: Joseph, Reuben, and Jason. Ichabod Damon lived in the north part of the town. Robert Damon, still another pioneer, seems to have been no relation to the above.

John Ewell, 1779, homestead a mile south of the centre. Children: James, settled in Norwich; Malachi, Ohio; Melzar, Chesterfield; Solomon, Consider, John, Ohio; Sarah, Mrs. David Anderson; Rachel, died unmarried; Deborah, died young.

Oliver Edwards came to Chesterfield about 1775 to 1780, and settled at Sugar Hill, on the farm now owned by a grandson, Ebenezer Edwards. Of his children, Luther and Oliver settled in town; Elisha Edwards, in Springfield, and was a well-known public man. Daughters were Mrs. Wm. Pomeroy, of Williamsburg; Mrs. Ambrose Stone, of Williamsburg; Mrs. Joshua Bates, of Skaneateles, N. Y. A grandson, Oliver, the third of the same name, resides at the centre. Oliver, the second, was a merchant at the centre from 1811 or 1812 down to 1865; he died in 1874.

Robert Hamilton lived beyond Calvin Damon. Sons: Robert, Jr., Levi, Samuel, John K. Elijah Higgins was a citizen with a large family of descendants. Joshua Healey; he lived in the north part of the town; Parley Healey and Seth Healey, probably sons, lived and died in Chesterfield.

Timothy Ingram moved from Williamsburg to Chesterfield, December, 1798, and lived on the Coleman tract. Children: Timothy and Benjamin, Westhampton; Joel, now living at Chesterfield, eighty-nine years old; Nathaniel and Porter, Chesterfield; Otis, still living, Chesterfield; Mrs. Edwin Damon; Deborah, died unmarried, ninety-seven years old. Joel, Jr., son of Joel, is the present postmaster, and merchant, of Chesterfield village.

Charles Kidd; homestead was the present place of Ambrose Cudworth. Benjamin Kidd lived farther east, now known as "Kidd's Lookout," from which extensive views are obtained. Thomas Kidd was a son of Benjamin. Eleazer King; he had two sons, Isaac and Eleazer. The former was a prominent public man, and was thrown from a carriage and killed. Jacob Litchfield, homestead on the Delbert Bisbee farm. Bezar Ludden; he had one son, Bezar, who was in the regular army, war of 1812.

Daniel Littlefield, homestead near the Gate, present place of Horace Cole. Children: Daniel, Vermont; Josiah, Walter, Joshua, New York; Caleb, died young; Mrs. Peter Shaw, Vermont; Mrs. David Macomber, Mrs. Wm. Higgins, Mrs. McQuivey, Vermont.

Rev. Benjamin Mills was the first pastor, and died in Chesterfield. One son, Josiah, settled in Worthington, a man of considerable prominence. A son of Josiah, James K., was prominent in the founding of Holyoke City.

David Macomber, from Easton, came in about 1770, and settled on the place on which Alvin Macomber now lives. Of his children, Daniel, settled in Westford, Vt.; David, settled in Westford, Vt.; Eunice, died young; Jacob, settled in Westford, Vt.; Cyrus, in Westford, Vt.; Rebecca (Mrs. Moses Bates), settled in Westford, Vt.; Edmond, settled in Chesterfield; Harvey, in Westford, Vt.; Hannah, died young; Alvin, now lives on the old homestead; Melzar, Kingsville, Ohio; Sophronia (Mrs. Zenas Gurney), in Cummington, and then in Chester, Ohio.

Joseph Nichols settled, 1793, about one and a half miles from the centre, on property still owned by his descendants; was a soldier of the old French war, and of the Revolution. Children: Mrs. Wm. Whittaker, Vt.; Jonathan, Otisco, N. Y.; Joshua, Chesterfield. A son of the latter, Albert Nichols, lives at the centre, a public officer of the town for many years. He has the old historic gun of his grandfather.

Samuel Luce came from Martha's Vineyard to Williamsburg in 1776, with five children,—James, Elisha, Harvey, Joseph, and Jonathan. He soon after removed to Goshen, and he had seven more children born there,—Obed, Shubael, Nathan, Henry, Mrs. Joshua Porter, Conway; Mrs. Hartland, Conway; and Mrs. John Lomond, Montague. Jonathan Luce married Mehitable Bates, about 1801, and settled where his son, Nehemiah, now lives, and had a family of fourteen children. Mr. Bates, father of Mrs. Luce, came from Cohasset, settled on the farm north, and had ten children.

Joshua Healey lived a little south of Mr. Luce, where he was fired at in bed during the Shays rebellion. In this neighborhood Mr. Truesdell perished in early times, having lost his way returning from Northampton by marked trees. The house Mr. Luce lives in was moved two feet by the great tornado of 1786. Mr. Luce has a large collection of relics and antique curiosities.

Benjamin Pierce, homestead the present residence of Calvin Damon. Children: Benjamin, Chesterfield; Israel, died young; Mrs. John Hatch, Chesterfield; Mrs. Sylvanus Clapp, Westhampton; Mrs. Solomon Bissell, Mrs. Levi Stebbins, Mrs. Parsons. Thomas Pierce and Jonathan Pierce, two other pioneers, were perhaps brothers. John Pynchon, homestead where his grandson, Wm. Pynchon, lives. Consider Pynchon, a son of John, died in 1877, in the same room in which he was born, ninety years of age or more. The Pynchon house is more than a hundred years old. Ephraim Patch probably settled on Ireland Street. Ezra Philips south, on the Coleman tract. One son was Ezra, Jr.

Samuel Reed, homestead on "the mount," the present Shaw place. Children: Samuel, New York; Daniel, New York; Mrs. Joseph Nash, Simeon, Chesterfield; Joseph, New York; Oliver, died unmarried; Mrs. Luther Tower, Chesterfield; Mrs. Pettergill, afterward Mrs. Stearns; Mrs. Jacob N. Bates, city of New York; Alanson went as a missionary to China.

Solomon Russell, the blind merchant of Chesterfield, who kept a store at Utley's Corners, had one son, Solomon, now living (1878) in Pittsfield, and the sons of the latter are among the wealthy manufacturers of that place.

Abiel Stetson. Children: Bela, Mrs. Elias Parsons, Mrs. Nathan Healey. John Stephenson, homestead about two miles north of the centre; had two sons,—John and Nathaniel; settled in Chesterfield; the second went to Ohio afterward.

Benjamin Tupper; homestead was the present Ira Clapp place; went to Ohio, and was one of the founders of Marietta. Ansel Tupper, adjutant of regiment, went to Ohio. Seth Taylor; the Taylor homestead was about three miles south of the centre. Of his children, Seth, Stephen, and another settled in Chesterfield; one daughter was Mrs. Southwick, of this town.

James Utley, homestead at the Utley Corners. Sons: Frederick, William, Chesterfield; Ralph, Goshen; Samuel, a minister in New York; Mrs. Gershom House, Chesterfield; Mrs. Knowlton, Chesterfield; and Sally, who died unmarried.

Jesse Willcutt had been a seafaring man, and bought a tract of land in No. 5. He was here at the time of the battle of Bunker Hill, June 17, 1775, and by putting his ear to the ground heard the guns. His grandson, Joel, says he can go now to the spot where the old man used to say he stood then. The children of Jesse were Jesse, Jr., Mrs. Gustin (hers was the first death in Goshen), Mrs. Litchfield, Cohasset; another Mrs. Litchfield, Cohasset; Zebulon, who settled in Goshen. Jesse Willcutt, Jr., was himself a pioneer here probably as early as his father, having reached this town April 6, 1772, and settled at once on the place now owned by his son Joel. Children: Mrs. Asa Turner, Ashfield; Enoch, Goshen; Mrs. Luke Keaith, Mrs. Solomon Bates (who died in the fall of 1878, having sixty-one actual descendants), Mrs. James King; Jason and Warren Michigan; Alpheus, Goshen; Mrs. Eleazer Hawks; Mrs. Aaron James; Joel, now living (eighty-two years old Dec. 23, 1878); Mrs. Levi Bates, Cummington; and four died young. Joel relates the remarkable circumstance that his father, in 1778, saw the Hudson River frozen at Albany, so that soldiers crossed on the ice October 2d. Joel Willcutt states that before the Revolutionary war there was some attention to military matters, but only three at first had uniforms,—Capt. Lemuel Bannister, Lieut. Jesse Willcutt, and Ensign Ambrose Stone. Having procured them fresh and new at the same time, they agreed to go to meeting the next Sunday with them on. Two failed to come, and Jesse Willcutt found himself obliged to stand the staring of the congregation alone.

Elisha Witherell, homestead south part of the town. Three of his sons were Elisha, Jr., Nathaniel, and Joseph. Abijah Whitton, homestead the present Randall place. An only son, Abijah, went West. Daughters: Mrs. Joshua Littlefield, Mrs. Ford, Plainfield; Mrs. Alpheus Ford, New York; Mrs. Pagenwagh, New York; Mrs. Wm. Keene, New York; Mrs. Simeon Reed, Chesterfield; Mrs. Alpheus Thayer, Mrs. Briggs Cudworth, Savoy; Mrs. David Macomber, Vermont.

Nehemiah Sylvester, of Scituate, homestead on Ireland Street. His wife was a Damon. Mr. Sylvester bought his land and settled about 1762. Sons were Seth, Richard, Nehemiah, Nathaniel, Gershom. A grandson of Seth is Rev. C. S. Sylvester, of Feeding Hills, Mass. Dr. E. Ware Sylvester,* the fruit-culturist of Lyons, N. Y., is also a grandson of Seth. A. H. Laughlin, member of Congress from the Herkimer District, N. Y., and naval officer of the port of New York, was also a grandson of Seth. N. B. Sylvester, of Troy, N. Y., author of this history of the Connecticut Valley, is a grandson of Nathaniel. Another grandson of Nathaniel is Sidney Sylvester, of Lewis Co., N. Y., who has held the offices of county clerk, member of Assembly, and county school commissioner. A son of the Nathaniel who removed to Lewis Co., N. Y., also named Nathaniel, is still living there, in his ninetieth year.

Of other early pioneers, there were Ebenezer Lane, John Lyman, Seth Sylvester, Nehemiah Sylvester, Jeremiah Spalding, Elisha Spalding, Roger Sprague, Aaron Jewell, Levi Jillson, Ebenezer Truesdell, Elisha and Elijah Warner, Aaron Wright, Daniel Winter, Philip White, David and John Russell, Thomas Rogers, Timothy Rice, Joshua and John Rogers, Jonathan Russell, Hezekiah Reed, Nathan Lane, Zebulon Herrick, Thomas Halbard, Richard Humphries, John Wilder, * Died since the above was written.

Joel Warner, Justus Wright, Josiah Perry, Zebulon Herrick, Bezaliah Moffett, John, Elias, and Sterling King. But some of these, probably, belong to Goshen.

TAVERNS.

The first tavern in town was opened by Benjamin Tupper; in 1764, in a house the remains of which are still visible just east of the house occupied, in late years, by Mr. Brett. J. Wilder opened one at a very early date on land owned in later years by John Rhodes. This was probably on Sugar Hill. The William Baker house was built by a man named Hunt, for a tavern. His wife, somewhat inclined to joke, is said to have told him he would be hunted out of town if he built such a great shell of a house. This is the large brown house standing on the north side of the main road just before descending from the east into West Chesterfield. The old house on the site of the present residence of William Bancroft was a tavern. Joshua Bailey kept there, and also on the other side of the street. Paul King kept a tavern opposite the well-known Luther Edwards place. This was on Sugar Hill.

REMINISCENCES OF MRS. RICHARD CLARKE.

Her maiden name was Olive Cleveland, of Williamsburg. She was born September, 1785, and is therefore ninety-three years old past. She was married May 25, 1809, and without wasting any time or money upon a wedding trip came to Chesterfield and settled upon the farm where they ever since resided, on "the mount." Mr. Clarke died June 29, 1876, at the age of ninety years and six months, their married life having extended seventeen years beyond the celebration of their golden wedding,—sixty-seven years in all.

The year before her marriage she climbed Mount Holyoke with her future husband, going up by a foot-path. Few ever visited the mountain then. When she first came to Chesterfield, Rev. Isaiah Waters was the pastor. Families went to meeting horseback, the wife riding behind her husband and carrying the baby. She says the town was famous for large families,—ten children to where there is one now. The school-house was then opposite Mrs. Clarke's home, and she recalls the names of early teachers,—her sister, Hannah Cleveland, still living in Otis Co., N. Y., Ira Daniels, and Horace Meech. Pork and flax and other produce were taken to Boston considerably, Northampton not being much of a market. People made nearly all their cloth used. Great spinners were noted. A woman in Westhampton did all the work of a family of five, spun a day's work each week-day, except Monday, and was paid half a dollar a week, while calico was one dollar a yard. One girl kept school in Mrs. Clarke's district, who had only one dollar a week and boarded herself. There was a shoemaker at the centre,—Gaius Hammond. Mrs. Clarke's father moved to Skaneateles in 1817; died ninety years and six months old, almost to a day the same as her husband's age. Her mother, who was a Parsons, lived to be one hundred and four years and seven months, and one sister ninety-nine. As an infant of a few months, Mrs. Clarke was carried by her parents horseback to an ordination at Amherst ninety-three years ago. Rev. Edward Clarke, her son, resides with her, having returned from the work of the ministry to stay with his parents in their old age.

Nehemiah Luce states that the first frame house in town was built on his farm, and that the cellar-place and the old well are still to be seen. Just south of Mr. Luce's was the old parade-ground, familiar to those who remember the old trainings.

The following are from old files of the Hampshire Gazette:

Aug. 11, 1788.—Solomon Allen advertises various goods, at the store lately occupied by Southworth Cole:

"West India Rum by the hoghead or less quantity, New England Rum, Molasses, Salt, Sugar, Brandy, Gin, Indigo, Snuff, Crockery Ware, Felt hats; the best of Bohemian tea at 3s. 4d. per pound for cash, less by the hundred weight. Seythes, sickles, &c."

"The above articles will be sold as cheap as any store in the county. Almost all kinds of produce will be received in payment."

"Said Allen wants to purchase 2000 bushels of flaxseed; one-half he will pay in cash, the other half in goods, and the highest price given. Also wants to purchase a number of Cattle for barreling and shipping."

Oct. 2, 1793.—Samuel Huntington advertises a runaway indentured boy, William Russell: "Whoever will take up and return said boy to his injured master shall have two Bungtown Coppers, and no charges paid."

June 3, 1793.—The Blind Man of Chesterfield having lately received from New York a general assortment of goods, solicits a continuance of favors, flattering himself that their commiseration for the singularity of his circumstances, blind for years as well as his fair dealing, will induce them to multiply their favors.*

SOLOMON RUSSELL.

Dec. 11, 1801.—Benjamin Parsons, secretary of the Hampshire Musical Society, announces the next meeting at Whately, and gives the following tunes as selected for the occasion:

"A Tribute to Washington;" Anthem, "I said I will take Heed to my Way;" "Crucifixion;" "Devotion;" "Deerfield;" "59th Psalm, Psalm tune;" "Friendship;" "Jerusalem;" "Marlborough;" "No. Five;" "Norfolk;" "No. Nineteen;" "Old Age;" "Oxford;" "Redemption;" "Submission;" "Sinai;" "Denmark;" with the supplement; "Suffex;" and "Union." This is a glimpse at the music seventy-seven years ago.

ORGANIZATION.

Incorporation followed closely upon settlement in the case of Chesterfield. As already shown, there seems to be no certain information as to the exact date when the first pioneer settled within the present limits of the town. Vinton's historical address in 1862 speaks of Gideon Bisbee as coming out from Northampton in 1755-56 and clearing land, but returning every Saturday night; and the various gazetteers and histories already written are so silent upon this point we conclude that quite a portion of the first settlers came together in something of a colony,—1760 to 1762,—and sought immediate incorporation. It is stated that the town was named from the earl of Chesterfield, but the writers above alluded to fail to show any incident that led to this, and give no indication with reference to the individual who named the town in honor of the distinguished earl. We suggest the following explanation until further discoveries are made. Hospitality is genuine politeness. Politeness had its most noted instance in Lord Chesterfield. Hospitality is not only genuine but generous in this beautiful town, therefore its appropriate name is Chesterfield.

We quote from the records the facts with reference to the town organization.

July 20, 1762.—At a legal town-meeting in Chesterfield, by virtue of a warrant from one of his majesty's Justices of ye Peace, which warrant runs after ye following manner, viz.:

HAMPSHIRE Co., ss.:

To Jeremiah Stockwell, one of ye principal inhabitants of the town of Chesterfield, in said county, Greeting: Pursuant to an act made and passed, ye Great and General Court at their session in May, 1762, empowering the subscriber, one of his majesty's Justices of the Peace for and within said County of Hampshire, to issue a warrant to some principal inhabitant of Chesterfield, requiring him to call a meeting of ye inhabitants in order to choose such officers as by law towns are authorized to choose in ye month of March annually.

These are, therefore, in his Majesty's name to require you to warn and give notice to ye inhabitants of sd Chesterfield that they assemble themselves at the dwelling-house of Elisha Warner, in sd Chesterfield, on Wednesday, ye 20th day of July, instant, at 10 o'clock in ye forenoon, then and there to choose such officers as by law towns are empowered to choose in the months of March annually; hereof you are not to fail, but make return of this warrant to me ye subscriber before ye time prefixed for holding sd meeting, together with your doings therein. Given under my hand & seal this 6th day of July, in the 2nd year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the 3d, A.D. 1762.

SAMUEL MATHER.

July 20, 1762.—At a legal meeting in Chesterfield at ye house of Elisha Warner, ye inhabitants being assembled, Eleazer King was chosen moderator of said meeting; then entered upon choosing Town officers, and ye persons hereafter named were chosen & appointed to ye several offices annexed to their respective names: Eleazer King was chosen Town Clerk; Benjamin Bryant, Constable; Joseph Bernal, Benjamin Bonney, Everton Beswick, Selectmen; Elisha Warner, Town Treasurer; Seth Sylvester, Jeremiah Stockwell, Robert Welsier, Surveyors of Highways; Benjamin Kidd, Fence-Viewer; Robert Hambleton, Prince

* This store was at Utley's Corners.

Cowing, Seth Sylvester, Field-Drivers; Everton Beswick, Benjamin Bonney, Assessors; John Halbert, Jeremiah Read, Hog-Reeves.

No other business is recorded at this meeting.

The house of Elisha Warner was on a place now owned by Ebenezer Edwards, well known as Sugar Hill,—supposed to be on the site of the present house occupied by a tenant,—a little more than a mile east of Chesterfield village.

Another town-meeting, pursuant to a warrant of the selectmen, was held Oct. 15, 1762, at which Joseph Burnell was chosen moderator, and it was voted that each man should be allowed 3s. 4d. per day for working on the highways, and a proposition to build a pound was voted down,—“and so concluded.”

No other meetings were held during this first partial year, nor is there any record of other business until the regular town-meeting of March 7, 1763. This was held at the house of Elisha Warner, and the following action taken:

1st, chose Ezra May Moderator of the meeting; 2d, chose Joseph Burnell Town Clerk; 3d, chose Ezra May 1st Selectman; 4th, chose Abijah Tucker 2d Selectman; 5th, chose Benjamin Bryant 3d Selectman; 6th, chose Ezra May Constable; 7th, chose Benjamin Bonney Constable; 8th, chose Elisha Warner Town Treasurer; 9th, chose Robert Hambleton and Ezekiel Corban Tythingmen; 10th, chose Jeremiah Stockwell, David Stearns, Eleazer King, Wardens; 11th, chose Robert Webster, George Buck, Samuel Lyon, and Benjamin Kidd, Surveyors of Ways; 12th, chose Seth Burk Surveyor of Shingles, Hoops, and Clapboards; 13th, chose Elisha Warner Sealer of Weights and Measures; 14th, chose Jeremiah Stockwell and John Narramore Hog-Reeves; 15th, chose Hezekiah Reed, Ithamar Amidon, and Prince Cowing, Fence-Viewers; 16th, chose Benjamin Bryant and William White Deer-Reeves; 17th, accepted of a town road laid out by the Selectmen on the 18th of December, 1762, beginning as follows: “At a beech-staddle which stands on the south side of the county road, at the east end of the west row of lots in the town of Chesterfield, extending south from said staddle on the line which divides the west row of lots from that which adjoins it on the east, extending so far south as the lot No. 86. Said road 40 feet wide till it comes within 20 rods of Mr. George Buck’s well; then widening out until it comes to be 60 feet wide by the well, then narrowing off till it goes 20 rods beyond said well, then holding its first mentioned width to its aforesaid bounds;” 18th, accepted of an account of labor done on the highways, viz., 29½ days at 3 shillings and 4 pence per day; 19th, accepted of an account of Everton Beswick and Benjamin Bonney, viz., of the sum of 2 pounds 12 shillings and 3 pence, lawful money; 20th, voted to raise 200 pounds, lawful money, to build a meeting-house, to settle a minister, and for clearing and repairing roads; 21st, voted to allow each man for every faithful day’s work on the highways 3 shillings and 4 pence per day; 22d, allowed Jeremiah Stockwell’s account for warning a town-meeting the 20th day of July, 1762, viz., the sum of 8 shillings, lawful money.

The meeting was then dissolved.

This meeting filled all the usual town offices, and made the organization complete.

Our limits permit only a few brief extracts from the ample materials contained in the volumes of town records extending over a period of one hundred and sixteen years.

March 11, 1765.—Allowed Jeremiah Spalding’s account for 20 Lord’s-Day noons, 10 shillings.

May 12, 1766.—Voted to meet at Mr. Jeremiah Spalding’s on Lord’s Day for 2 pounds a year.

May 4, 1767.—Voted “to choose a committee of indifferent men of judgment to come and view the situation of the town, and pitch upon the most justest spot to set a meeting-house upon.”

Oct. 29, 1767.—Voted to meet on Lord’s day at the house of Lieut. Abner Brown.

May 7, 1770.—Voted that Mr. John Tucker sweep the meeting-house 12 times a year, and lock it and open it on all suitable occasions, and allow him 9 shillings for this year.

March 6, 1769, a road was accepted, described as follows:

“Beginning at a Hemlock-tree on ye county road, about six rods east of ye Rev. Benjamin Mills’ house, and thence straight by ye east end of his barn, and thence straight by ye east end of ye burying-yard, thence straight to and between ye lowermost rocky ledge and ye second ledge and Lt. Abner Brown’s lot, and thence between ye ledge to a convenient place to go down, thence straight to ye meeting-house, and ye road is four rods wide.”

June 5, 1769.—Voted “to clear the new road across Westfield River.”

This is now the old River Hill road. The date when the bridge was built is uncertain, though probably about that year. Nearly thirty years later, when the Third Massachusetts Turnpike Corporation was established, this road became a part of the turnpike. A toll-gate was kept just beyond the west end of the bridge, and the old house on the south side of the road was erected for the residence of the gate-tender. The neighborhood is still known to some extent as the Gate.

Feb. 12, 1767, Joshua Healy, Robert Webster, and Eleazer King were appointed a committee to examine the bridge built by Benjamin Bonney, near John May’s saw-mill, March 15th. Bonney’s account was allowed to the amount of £8 15s., and at a later meeting Richard Sylvester’s bill for 1388 feet of 2-inch plank sawed, £1 1s. and 10d. It is stated that “this bridge was located on the stream passing Bisbee’s mills, and about a mile below them, near the lower end of the Coleman grant, and not far from where Mr. Elisha Witherell, Sr., lived.”

Sept. 19, 1774.—Voted 12 pounds 10 shillings to buy a barrel of powder, and the remainder of the money, if any there be, in lead and flints.

Dec. 21, 1774.—Committee on resolves of the Continental Congress,—Maj. Ezra May, Lieut. Robert Webster, Capt. Benjamin Tupper, Capt. Benjamin Bonney, Mr. Ephraim Patch, Mr. Joseph Bailey, Mr. Eleazer King. Voted that the selectmen call town-meetings, and the constables warn them as usual.

The last town-meeting called “in his Majesty’s name” was March 4, 1776. Of course the phrase had been a mere form for the year previous. For a town-meeting May 20, 1776, the expression is omitted and no other used. The selectmen simply say to the constable, “You are hereby required forthwith to warn and give notice.” This was the “interregnum,” when the town of Chesterfield called its meetings in its own name, by virtue of its own sovereignty. And the constable returns, “According to the orders of the selectmen I have given notice,” etc.

June 19, 1776, the warrant for a town-meeting commences in “the name of the thirteen United Colonies.” Oct. 7, 1776, the warrant is issued in “the name of the State of Massachusetts Bay.” The successive steps are thus seen to be: 1st, royal authority; 2d, town authority (reserved inherent home rule); 3d, national authority; 4th, and finally, the STATE. This order unconsciously recognizes that the nation is supreme, and this State exists under it, and not above it.

At the meeting of October 7th the resolves of the Assembly of the State were considered, providing the steps to “erect such a constitution for this State as shall be judged most to the safety of said State in all future generations.”

The following are the instructions of the town of Chesterfield to the representative of said town, viz., Benjamin Mills, Esq., May 26, 1776:

SIR,—You are required and enjoined by your constituents to attend the following instructions relating to your representative capacity the ensuing year:

1st. That you give a general attendance upon your duty at the House of Representatives for the year ensuing, more especially at the election, and till the tax bill is passed.

2d. That you use your influence that as soon as may be a bill be passed, that no act of the General Court be valid unless a majority of the Representatives of the colony be present.

3d. That the Representatives be paid out of the public treasury as other public expenses are, and not by the particular towns they represent.

4th. That the House and Council act in conjunction, and not as two separate bodies.

5th. That every town have the privilege of registering their own deeds.

6th. That ministers pay taxes equally with other people according to their interest, and that the grants to the president and other officers of Harvard College be forever hereafter suspended.

7th. That you use your influence that the gospel be maintained by free contributions, and no other way.

8th. That every town be empowered to settle their disputes, and choose a committee to settle all debts and controversies between man and man whatsoever.

The town-meeting of June 9, 1776, was held at the meeting-house. It was called by the signatures of Benjamin Bonney and Ezra May, selectmen, and warned by Malachi Ewell, constable. The meeting is a memorable one in the history of Chesterfield, when the declaration of support to the Continental Congress was passed, twenty-three days before the passage of the Declaration of Independence. It was a brave resolution, bravely passed, pledging “their lives and fortunes,” as the members of the Continental Congress pledged theirs three weeks later.

The committee of safety and inspection, 1777, were Benjamin Mills, Capt. Benjamin Bonney, John Stephenson, Capt. Christopher Bannister, Ephraim Patch, Joseph Burnell, John Wilder, Seth Sylvester, Eleazer King, John Ewell, Joshua Healey.

Nov. 16, 1778.—Voted to choose a committee of 3 to make further provision for the clothing of the Continental men. Voted to raise 500 pounds for that purpose. Voted to choose a committee of three to procure powder and other warlike stores. Committee, John James, Nathan Lane, Ephraim Patch. Voted to raise 250 pounds for the purpose.

Jan. 21, 1779.—Voted to build a parsonage 38 by 28, and a barn 30 by 30, and clear 50 acres of the parsonage farm.

June 26, 1779.—Voted to raise 720 pounds as a bounty for six men, to be raised in said town for the Continental service.

July 5, 1779.—Voted to raise 19 pounds 16 shillings as mileage for the soldiers going to Springfield. Voted a committee to procure firearms.—Capt. Benjamin Bonney, Capt. William White, Nathan Lane.

Aug. 9, 1779.—Voted that Capt. William White and Mr. Luke Bonney be delegates to the convention to meet at Cambridge to form a new constitution. Voted to raise 750 dollars for the clothing of Continental soldiers.

March 6, 1780.—Voted a committee to care for the families of Continental soldiers.—Lieut. Everton Beswick, Lieut. Daniel Littlefield, John Rogers, Capt. Cole, Benjamin Pierce, Timothy Bannister.

Oct. 20, 1783.—Voted to send Charles Kidd and Lieut. Aaron Jewell delegates to the Hatfield Convention (Shays movement).

The letter of instructions closes with the following passage:

"Finally, relying firmly on your integrity that you will strictly adhere to the instructions of your constituents, and that you will seek the public good, our hope is that the county will unite in measures salutary to the present period and productive of future benefit to posterity."

No treason about that commission, whatever the Shays men may have attempted at a later period.

The currency question is not new to 1878. It is found in the hard times of 1784, and the warrant for a town-meeting in Oct. 25, 1784, Chesterfield, contains the clause: "To see if the town will vote that a paper currency is absolutely necessary, sufficient to defray our quota of the debt contracted by this commonwealth in the late war, and what order the town will take upon it." The town voted that it was necessary, foreign debts excepted.

Jan. 31, 1785, a general division into school districts was made; six were arranged. Feb. 14, 1786, the town voted that a new emission of paper money ought to be issued by the General Court on such principles as shall be just and honorable to the inhabitants of the commonwealth. Oct. 4, 1790, seven school districts were arranged.

Town-meetings were held as follows: 1762, at the house of Elisha Warner; 1763, at the house of Benjamin Tupper; also, 1763, at Mr. Jonathan Anderson's; 1764, at the house of Jeremiah Spalding; 1765, at the house of Benjamin Tupper; 1766, at the house of Archelaus Anderson; 1767, at the house of Jeremiah Spalding; 1768, at the house of Lieut. Abner Brown, and also at Jeremiah Spalding's; Aug. 16, 1768, "at the public meeting-house." Dec. 11, 1769, met at the meeting-house, but adjourned immediately to the Widow Spalding's. Was the meeting-house warm enough Sundays, but too cold on week-days?

The town-meetings were held at the meeting-house for many years. In later times, commencing about 1836, the people met at the old town-house, now the public-school building of the centre village. After the Methodist Church had ceased to use its house of worship that building was purchased, and now constitutes a neat and convenient town-hall, located on the southeast corner of the public square.

SELECTMEN FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

- 1762.—Joseph Burnell, Benjamin Bonney, Everton Beswick.
- 1763.—Ezra May, Abijah Tucker, Benjamin Bryant.
- 1764.—Ezra May, Abijah Tucker, Benjamin Bonney.
- 1765.—Joshua Rogers, Abijah Tucker, Benjamin Bonney.
- 1766-67.—Ezra May, Abijah Tucker, Benjamin Bonney.
- 1768.—Joshua Rogers, Eleazer King, Robert Webster.
- 1769.—Ezra May, Benjamin Bonney, Lieut. Abner Brown.
- 1770.—Benjamin Bonney, Joshua Abel, Joshua Bailey.
- 1771-73.—John Stephenson, Christopher Bannister, Benjamin Bonney.
- 1774.—John Stephenson, Abijah Tucker, Benjamin Bates.
- 1775-76.—Benjamin Bonney, Ezra May, Joseph Bailey.

1777.—Benjamin Bonney, Benjamin Mills, Esq., Ezra May, Ephraim Patch, Joseph Bailey.

1778.—Benjamin Mills, Benjamin Bonney, Roger Sprague, Ephraim Patch, Robert Webster.

1779.—Benjamin Mills, William White, Benjamin Pierce, Reuben Dresser, Daniel Littlefield.

1780.—William White, Samuel Rhoades, Luke Bonney, John Ewell, Benjamin Bonney.

1781.—Benjamin Mills, Esq., Samuel Rhoades, John Ewell, Benjamin Bonney, Richard Sylvester.

1782.—Joseph Bailey, Luke Bonney, Mr. John Russell.

1783.—Benjamin Bonney, Benjamin Pierce, Russell Kellogg.

1784.—Russell Kellogg, Paul King, Thomas Wright.

1785.—Benjamin Tupper, Benjamin Bates, Benjamin Bonney.

1786.—Benjamin Bates, Joseph Bailey, Thomas Wright, Luke Bonney, Peter Strong.

1787.—Benjamin Bonney, Benjamin Bates, Luke Bonney, Peter Strong, Charles Kidd.

1788.—Benjamin Bonney, Charles Kidd, Spencer Phelps.

1789.—Benjamin Bonney, Charles Kidd, Luke Bonney, Samuel Rhoades, Amasa Clapp.

1790-91.—Joseph Bailey, Oliver Edwards, Wm. Bannister.

1792-94.—Joseph Bailey, Oliver Edwards, Spencer Phelps.

1795-96.—Benjamin Bates, Joseph Bailey, David Macomber.

1797.—Joseph Bailey, Benjamin Pierce, Spencer Phelps.

1798.—Spencer Phelps, Thaddeus Baker, John Burnal.

1799.—Spencer Phelps, Ens. Thaddeus Baker, Joseph Rhoades.

1800.—Spencer Phelps, Oliver Edwards, Thaddeus Baker.

1801-6.—Oliver Edwards, Walter Bonney, Reuben Cowing.

1807-9.—Spencer Phelps, Walter Bonney, David Macomber.

1810.—Walter Bonney, Elias Parsons, Thomas Bush.

1811.—Walter Bonney, Thaddeus Baker, Isaac King.

1812.—Walter Bonney, Thaddeus Baker, Calvin Cowing.

1813.—Isaac King, Eliakim Sylvester, Calvin Cowing.

1814-16.—Isaac King, Calvin Cowing, Joseph S. Bailey.

1817.—Isaac King, Abijah Whiting, Capt. Asabel Kingsley.

1818-20.—Calvin Cowing, Joshua Nichols, Thaddeus Baker.

1821.—Calvin Cowing, Joshua Nichols, Samuel Davis.

1822-25.—Isaac King, Calvin Cowing, Samuel Davis.

1826.—Isaac King, Samuel Davis, Elkanah Ring.

1827.—Isaac King, Samuel Davis, Gideon Wood.

1828.—Isaac King, Ira Clapp, Timothy Phelps.

1829.—Samuel Davis, Luther Edwards, Simeon Reed.

1830.—Samuel Davis, Luther Edwards, Isaac King.

1831.—Samuel Davis, Isaac King, Horace Cole.

1832.—John Hatch, Rufus Burnell, Alvan Macomber.

1833.—John Hatch, Alvan Macomber, Ira Clapp.

1834.—John Hatch, Alvan Macomber, David Taylor.

1835.—John Hatch, David Taylor, Horace Cole.

1836.—Jonathan Ring, Horace Cole, Ralph Utley.

1837-38.—Isaac King, Horace Cole, Edsel Witherell.

1839.—Timothy A. Phelps, Samuel Davis, Hudson Bates.

1840-41.—Samuel Davis, Alvan Macomber, Hudson Bates.

1842.—Bela P. Clapp, Alvan Macomber, Hudson Bates.

1843.—Alvan Macomber, Luther Edwards, Jonathan Ring.

1844.—Alvan Macomber, Edsel Witherell, William L. Stetson.

1845-46.—Job Cudworth, Edsel Witherell, William L. Stetson.

1847.—Edsel Witherell, Varnum Nichols, Thomas K. Utley.

1848.—Edsel Witherell, Varnum Nichols, Job Cudworth.

1849.—Edsel Witherell, Varnum Nichols, John Cole.

1850.—Edsel Witherell, Charles Cudworth, John Cole.

1851.—Timothy A. Phelps, Charles Cudworth, John Pomeroy.

1852.—Timothy A. Phelps, Charles Cudworth, Paul H. Cudworth.

1853.—Charles Cudworth, Samuel C. Tinker, Patrick Bryant.

1854.—Edsel Witherell, Samuel C. Tinker, Patrick Bryant.

1855.—Edsel Witherell, Lyman Rice, Ebenezer Edwards.

1856.—Edsel Witherell, Patrick Bryant, Albert Nichols.

1857-58.—Lyman Rice, Ephraim Cole, Charles Cudworth.

1859.—Albert Nichols, Ephraim Cole, Eli A. Sylvester.

1860.—Ephraim Cole, Eli A. Sylvester, Loren L. Tower.

1861-62.—Eli A. Sylvester, Loren L. Tower, Samuel House.

1863.—Loren L. Tower, Samuel House, Ephraim Cole.

1864.—Patrick Bryant, Ebenezer Edwards, Chauncey Witherell.

1865.—Patrick Bryant, Samuel House, Chauncey Witherell.

1866-68.—Ephraim Cole, Charles Cudworth, Loren L. Tower.

1869.—Ephraim Cole, Albert Nichols, Spencer Tower.

1870.—John Cole, Patrick Bryant, Levi Baker.

1871-72.—Ephraim Cole, Levi Baker, Horatio Bisbee.

1873-75.—Ephraim Cole, Loren L. Tower, Franklin H. Bryant.

1876.—Albert Nichols, Washington I. Rice, Eli A. Shaw.

1877.—Ephraim Cole, Franklin H. Bryant, Eli A. Shaw.

1878.—Ephraim Cole, Eli A. Shaw, Washington I. Rice.

1879.—Eli A. Shaw, Washington I. Rice, Loren L. Tower.

TOWN CLERKS.

Eleazer King, 1762; Joseph Burnell, 1763-67; Benjamin Tupper, 1768-71; John Stephenson, 1772-82; John Russell, 1783; John Stephenson, 1784-92; John Russell, 1793-98; Joseph Merick, 1799-1801; Alanson Anderson, 1802-4; Thos. Mayhew, 1805-8; George H. Sylvester, 1809-15; Alvan Rice, 1816-22; Oliver Edwards, Jr., 1823; Alvan Rice, 1824-33; Timothy A. Phelps, 1834; Dyar Bancroft, 1835; Oliver Edwards, 1836-45; Quartus Ely, 1846-47; Oscar Edwards, 1848-49; Quartus Ely, 1850; Oscar Edwards, 1851; Tabott Bancroft, 1852-55; Edward Bancroft, 1856-58; Oliver Edwards, 1859; Albert Nichols, 1860-76; Orson M. Pearl, 1877-80.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

Benjamin Mills, 1775-77; Matthew Buck, 1778; Benjamin Barney, 1780; Benjamin Mills, 1781; Russell Kellogg, 1782-83; Benjamin Tupper, 1785; Benjamin Bonney, 1787-91; Thompson Maxwell, 1793; Spencer Phelps, 1797-1800; Benjamin Bonney, 1801-2; Alanson Anderson, 1804; Benjamin Parsons, 1805-8; Thomas Mayhew, 1809; Eliakim Sylvester, 1810; Oliver Edwards, 1812; Joseph S. Bailey, 1813-16; Alvan Rice, 1823; Dyar Bancroft, 1826; Alvan Rice, 1827; Dyar Bancroft, 1829-30; Samuel Davis, 1831; Dyar Bancroft, 1832-35; Oliver Edwards, 1837; Belah P. Clapp, 1838; Timothy A. Phelps, 1839; Samuel Davis, 1840; Timothy A. Phelps, 1842; Alvin Macomber, 1844; Asahel Pierce, 1845; Rufus Burnell, 1846; Hudson Bates, 1850-51; Edsel Witherell, 1852; Paul H. Cudworth, 1853; Lorin L. Tower, 1855; Albert Nichols, 1861-65; Edward Clarke, 1870; Orrin Bryant, 1876.

VILLAGES.

CHESTERFIELD VILLAGE

is delightfully situated, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding country. It contains a number of fine private residences; the meeting-house of the Congregational Church; a town-hall, formerly the house of worship belonging to the Methodist Church; one store; the old Clapp tavern, now a place of hospitable entertainment under its present proprietor, Joseph Kelso; several shops and business places. The village has many attractions. "No Mill River disaster can ever happen there," said a chance acquaintance of the writer. Swept by mountain breezes, with an enchanting prospect spread out before the eye of the traveler, it is no wonder that the people of Chesterfield are enthusiastic in their love of home, or that summer tourists linger here with delight.

This village has always been the business place of the town, merchants and professional men carrying on their business and residing here more uniformly than at any other point. The extracts from the Hampshire Gazette, already given, afford many items of interest upon these points.

The longest-continued mercantile enterprise by any one citizen was that of the late Oliver Edwards, who, commencing in business about 1812, remained in trade until 1865. Benjamin Parsons, the first lawyer of the town, resided here, and it appears that he mingled with the hard and knotty problems of the law the softer notes of music, as he held for a long time the secretaryship of the Hampshire Musical Association. Dyar Bancroft was a prominent lawyer of Chesterfield. He was born in Torrington, Conn. He studied at Yale one year, then went to Williams College, and graduated in the class of 1809; taught school in Brattleboro', Vt.; studied law with Hon. Daniel Dewey, of Williamstown, and was a tutor in Williams College a part of the time. He was admitted to the Bar at Lenox, and came to Chesterfield, Feb. 4, 1814. He married, May 25, 1815, Sallie Hayes, of Brattleboro', Vt., an aunt of President Hayes. She survives Mr. Bancroft, and is now residing in Chesterfield at an advanced age. Mr. Bancroft had a large and successful law-practice; was postmaster more than twenty-five years, and the office was established through his efforts, there being none previously nearer than Worthington. He was often a representative in the Legislature, and filled a large number of public offices. He died Dec. 13, 1866, aged eighty years and five months. One daughter, Mrs. Putney, of Goshen, died some years ago. One son, Edward, died in early life, and two sons, William and Talcott, reside upon the old homestead. Benjamin Parsons was the first postmaster. Dyar Bancroft was succeeded by Oscar Edwards, by Oliver Edwards, and by the present incumbent, Joel Engram.

Dr. Robert Starkweather was a practicing physician for more than fifty years at Chesterfield Centre. He was from Stonington, Conn., and settled here in 1790. His later residence was the present homestead of Oliver Edwards. His practice extended largely into other towns, and he was often consulted by the medical profession of the county. Of his children, Horace went to Michigan; Rodney remained in town many years, and late in life removed to Ohio. Daughters were: Mrs. Oliver Edwards (the mother of the present Oliver), and Mrs. Emmons Putney, of Goshen.

Other physicians succeeding him were Drs. Ellis, Wilson, Perry, and J. H. Richardson, who remained ten or twelve years; now resides in Medfield, Mass. The present physician, Dr. D. M. Streeter, settled at the centre in 1866, and has continued in practice since that time.

The Oliver Edwards store was the present place of Joel Ingram, Jr., who succeeded to the business of Oliver Edwards & Son, and is also postmaster.

In early times Benjamin Bryant had a store on the site of the present town-hall, and it was known as "the store on the rock." Asa White had a store at the centre for several years before and after 1800, and his business passed to Oliver Edwards.

The Clapp Tavern, now kept by Joseph Kelso, is seventy-five or eighty years old; receives its name from Amasa Clapp, who kept it for a long series of years.

Timothy A. Phelps was a noted magistrate for many years, and often practiced law.

WEST CHESTERFIELD,

as its name implies, is situated in the west part of the town, about two miles from the centre village, and on the Westfield River. It contains one store kept by Nelson A. Higgins, another by Henry Edwards. Its mills are mentioned elsewhere. There is a post-office, Nelson A. Higgins postmaster. A room is fitted up for meetings, the pastor of the centre church preaching there Sunday evening. On the river below, at the "Gate," were formerly a store and a tavern,—the latter kept by Zebulon Robinson, in the old times when the stage-route flourished, and the former by his son, Asa. Patrick Bryant speaks of the old militia-trainings which took place at that point. The post-office of West Chesterfield was established about 1850. The postmasters have been James M. Angell, Job Cudworth, Ansel Thayer, Joseph M. Tirrell, and the present incumbent.

SUGAR HILL

was the place where Elisha Warner lived, and where the first town-meeting was held, the place so long occupied in after-years by Luther Edwards. It is said to derive its name, not, as one might suppose, from the maples and the maple-sugar for which Chesterfield is famous, but from a circumstance that happened at the tavern of Paul King, opposite the Luther Edwards place. It was in the old days when New England rum was sold by the hogshead, and at country stores a barrel was easily used up at the raising of a single meeting-house. The landlord is supposed to have been a little mellow, when a thirsty traveler called for a drink. The liquor was poured out and the sugar set before the stranger. Lifting in a reasonable quantity, he waited for it to dissolve as well-behaved sugar ought to, but it refused, and actually floated. The sugar was only brown bread, hence the name.

BOFAT

is a name applied to a portion of the eastern part of the town. Tradition gives the following account: Bofat is an old-fashioned word of French origin, describing a cupboard built so as to cut off the corner of a room,—a sort of a three-sided affair. Benjamin Bryant, once having collected a tax from a citizen over toward the Williamburg line, was asked how they got along over there. "Poor as the devil's Bofat," was his reply, and the name arose from that circumstance. "They say" is our authority.

Ireland Street is the old name of the first road laid out by town authority,—already described in another place,—running north and south past Mr. George Buck's well. The road retains to the present day nearly its original course, and the old well is still visible at the roadside. It was the earliest settled portion of Chesterfield, and some of its first settlers were of Irish nationality, giving occasion for the honorable name it has borne so long.

What is now known as "Utley's Corners," north of the centre,—being the location of the meeting-house in the old times for twenty years,—was then likely to be a place of business, but the setting off of Goshen and the consequent change to the centre of Chesterfield deprived this place of its importance. Near the Westhampton line, on the Dead Branch, is something of a business point, containing a store by J. E. Witherell, and a basket-factory, of which Mr. Witherell is the proprietor. Near the Huntington line, on the Dead Branch, not far from its junction with the Westfield, is another point of business. There is a store by H. K. Weeks, and cutlery-works, of which Mr. Weeks is also the proprietor. The heights northwest of West Chesterfield village were called Mount Livermore, from the name of the first settler. Afterward his name was dropped, and the place was known as "the mount." His son lived where Rev. Edward Clarke now resides. A curious dwelling-house, built at the "Ledges" by either father or son, was called "Solomon's Temple."

SCHOOLS.

The first official action was rather negative. Dec. 21, 1767, the town voted to have a school or schools, but soon after refused to vote any money for their support. Sept. 28, 1768, it was voted to raise £9 to be expended in schooling, and three districts were determined upon. All beyond the river constituted the west district, and a line from east to west past the meeting-house divided the north district from the south. A committee of three was appointed for each district: South District, Benjamin Tupper, Everton Beswick, John Wilder; North District, Ezra May, Joseph Burnell, Robert Webster; West District, George Buck, Ephraim Patch, Seth Sylvester. They were empowered to hire "masters and dames," and to find places for them "to keep at." A memorandum among the papers of Deacon Oliver Taylor shows that he hired a dame for fifty cents a week, and that she boarded herself. May 8, 1769, it was voted to raise £12 for summer schools. The town was divided into five districts, and one man appointed committee for each, as follows: Deacon May, Benjamin Bonney, Joseph Burnell, Robert Hamilton, and John Buck. Dec. 11, 1769, they voted £18 for winter schools, and each district was authorized to build a school-house.

Dec. 11, 1769, four school districts were arranged: 1st, all west of Westfield River; 2d, all between said river and the East Branch, and south of the county road; 3d, all north of and upon the county road between Westfield River and the East Branch, and so to the north line of the town, and extended east to include Mr. Healey, David Russell, John King, and Mr. Burnell, Mr. Barrett, and Mr. Stearns; 4th, all the remainder in the northeast part. Dec. 22, 1772, they voted £24 for schools, and March 7, 1774, they appropriated £30. The progress and the condition of the modern schools are shown by the following statistics from the report of the Board of Education of this State, at intervals of ten years each:

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Ten schools; attending in summer, 273; average, 222; winter, 339; average, 289; in town between 4 and 16, 339; summer schools, 40 months, 15 days; winter, 33 months, 15 days; summer teachers, 10 females; winter, 4 males, 6 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $12.75; female teachers, $5.

January, 1847.—Ten schools; attending in the summer, 216; average, 172; winter, 250; average, 197; number of children in town between 4 and 16, 297; attending under 4, 23; over 16, 30; summer school, 38 months; winter, 28 months, 21 days; total, 66 months, 21 days; teachers in summer, 10 females; winter, 7 males and 4 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $20.57; female, $11.60.

January, 1857.—Ten schools; attending in summer, 173; average, 130; winter, 194; average, 151; attending under 5, 22; over 15, 29; in town between 5 and 15, 209; summer teachers, 9 females; winter, 6 males, 3 females; summer schools, 41 months, 12 days; winter, 27 months, 12 days; total, 69 months, 4 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $23; female, $18.66.

January, 1867.—Ten schools; attending in the summer, 155; average, 122; winter, 163; average, 131; attending under 5, 8; over 15, 35; in town between 5 and 15, 222; summer teachers, 10 females; winter, 1 male, 8 females; summer schools, 36 months, 11 days; winter, 25 months; average wages of male teachers per month, $29.40; female teachers, $22.60.

January, 1878.—Nine schools; attending, 141; average, 107; under 5, 7; over 15, 15; in town between 5 and 15, 147; teachers, 1 male, 14 females; school, 57 months, 5 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $30; female, $23; by taxation, $1100; board and fuel voluntarily given, $500; expenses of committee, $50; printing, $10; vested funds, $600; income of fund and dog tax, $47; 1 private school, 20 scholars; tuition, $175; town's share of State funds, $224.41.

No attempt to establish an academy was ever made at Chesterfield, but many select schools have been maintained. The teachers have often been students from Amherst College, and many of the present citizens enjoyed in the schools the means of obtaining the elements of higher education. The following graduates from college were natives of Chesterfield: Samuel Utley, Union College; George Waters, Amherst College; Edward Clarke, Williams College; Merrick Knight, Amherst College.

CHURCHES.

Very early arrangements for religious worship were made by the people of Chesterfield. The next year after the incorporation of the town the sum of £200 was voted "to build a meeting-house, settle a minister, and repair the roads." This may seem to the people of these modern times as blending some unlike things in one resolution; but it was one of the most important advantages of good roads that people could get to meeting by means of them. In this view the vote provided for a meeting-house, for a minister, and for roads, so that the people could go to hear him,—propositions all germane to each other, and naturally connected in one vote. Committees were appointed to carry out this vote. They were to find the centre of the town, build a meeting-house at or near that point, and provide preaching. It was several years before all this was accomplished, but the preaching was secured immediately, and meetings were held alternately at two houses in different parts of the town. Rev. Thomas Allen, afterward the well-known patriotic minister of Pittsfield, preached in Chesterfield in the summer of 1763.

We quote from the actual records some account of the transactions alluded to above:

At a town-meeting, May 9, 1763, Ezra May, Moderator, among various items of business were the following: "Chose Ezra May, Daniel Winter, Eleazer King a committee to provide preaching. Voted to build a meeting-house in the centre of the town of Chesterfield aforesaid, if it be a convenient place, and if not, the next convenient place from it. Chose Joseph Burnell, Benjamin Bonney, Ezra May, Joshua Healy, Everton Beswick a committee to build said meeting-house. Chose Benjamin Bryant, Joseph Burnell, and Lemuel Lyon a committee to find the said centre of Chesterfield. Voted to meet every other Sabbath at Mr. Robert Webster's, and every other Sabbath at Mr. Jeremiah Stockwell's."

Robert Webster's was the present farm of Hiram Bates, in the town of Goshen, and Jeremiah Stockwell's was on what is called "the mount," near, and a little north of, the present residence of Rev. Edward Clark.

Aug. 8, 1763.—"Voted to cancel and disannul all the votes that were passed at the meeting of May 9th, relating to a proper spot to set a meeting-house upon, also all the votes that were passed relating to building a meeting-house, and also for raising money to build a meeting-house."

Having thus swept away the former action, they proceeded:

"Voted to build a meeting-house. Put to vote to see if the town will set the meeting-house on the highest piece of land on Mr. Archelaus Anderson's wheat-field,—decided in the negative. Then voted to come into a method to set the meeting-house in the centre, or the nearest place to the centre that shall be thought convenient. Chose five men as a committee for said purpose,—Ezra May, Joseph Beal, Robert Hamilton, Benjamin Bonney, Seth Burk,—and made choice of Benjamin Tupper for a surveyor. Also chose a committee to agree with the owners of land to set the meeting-house upon, viz.: Benjamin Bonney, Seth Sylvester, Benjamin Bryant. Voted to build a meeting-house fifty feet wide and sixty feet long. Chose as building committee Benjamin Bonney, Ezra

May, Archelaus Anderson, Prince Cowing, and Joseph Burnell. Voted to hire Mr. Allen for a longer term to preach on probation. Voted to meet one-half of the time at Archelaus Anderson's and the other half at Joseph Burnell's."

Oct. 3, 1763.—Committee upon place reported that, by the aid of the surveyor, they had determined "the centre to be about 24 rods North of the County Road, a little east of the first slough east of Archibald Anderson's wheat-field; and that not being a convenient place, the committee agreed to set the meeting-house 16 rods Southwest, on a more convenient place." This report was accepted by the town.

March 5, 1764.—Voted to cancel the vote accepting the report of Oct. 3d; and voted, further, "that Ezra May and Joseph Burnell be a committee to find the centre of the town to build a meeting-house upon or the nearest convenient place to it, and also have the assistance of Capt. Dwight, of Cold Spring, as a Surveyor; and if it shall be judged by the aforesaid Capt. Dwight that the centre is where the former committee declared it to be, then the abovesaid Ezra May and Joseph Burnell are not to be paid for their trouble; but if the centre shall be judged to be from that place, then the town will pay the cost of finding it." Building Committee again appointed,—Benjamin Bonney, Robert Webster, Benjamin Bryant, and Joseph Burnell. Voted the meeting-house to be 45 feet wide and 58 feet long. Voted a committee to procure a minister to preach on probation,—Ezra May, Jeremiah Stockwell, and Jeremiah Spalding.

May 10, 1764.—Capt. Dwight reported as follows: "I went in company with Mr. Ezra May and Joseph Burnell, in order to find the centre of the town, and began at a certain known boundary on the north line of the town, and run 114 rods without any allowance, and came out at the foot of the hill just over the dead River. Then I added 38 rods to the measure, which carried us near the top of the hill, which is the centre of the town; and that not being a convenient place to set a meeting-house, we looked around and found a convenient place about 20 rods further southwestward, and we run to that, where we marked a beech-staddle thus, E M; J B; N D; J F;* with stones by it, which staddle stands 124 rods east of Archelaus Anderson's fence the east side of his field, where we marked a maple-staddle.

"SALMON KENTFIELD, }
"JONATHAN FOSTER, } Choir-men."

"NATHANIEL DWIGHT.

This report was accepted by the town, and we infer that Ezra May and Joseph Burnell were entitled to receive pay for their services.

This is a part of the town action. The whole is too long for this sketch, and we can only give a summary statement of the final action. It may, however, be an interesting study for the young surveyors of Chesterfield now to determine the site designated by the first committee, and also that of the second, and find the location of the "beech-staddle" and of the "maple-staddle."

It could easily be inferred from the above record that there was no meeting-house for several years. The first committee of 1763, as shown above, was succeeded by several others before the centre of the town was found and a house of worship erected. The aid of outside parties appears to have been invoked, and in June, 1767, Maj. Selah Barnard, of Deerfield, and Col. Wm. Williams, of Pittsfield, reported in favor of a site, and it was accepted by the town. But in March of the next year, in order to better accommodate the people living in "Chesterfield Gore" (afterward Goshen), the site was changed, and the town voted to remove the timber to the new site, which was about a mile north of the centre, at what is now known as Utley's Corners, and there it was at last actually built, the "raising" taking place in July, 1768. The house was used as soon as possible, while in an unfinished state, pews neither on the ground floor nor in the gallery being completed. It was not finished until some twenty years later, and soon afterward the necessity of accommodating the Gore ceased, Goshen having been incorporated and a separate church formed. This meeting-house was accordingly taken down in 1791, and the materials used to build another, on the site ever since occupied for that purpose. But, though the fathers contended earnestly for the right place to build, yet they were united in providing for religious worship somewhere, and this was not delayed by the controversy.

July 19, 1764.—Voted to give Mr. Benjamin Mills a call to settle in the ministry; voted to offer him 150 pounds settlement, lawful money, to be paid in one year, exclusive of a right of land in said town, and a salary of 42 pounds the first year, with 5 pounds to be added yearly, until the sum should amount to 80 pounds, and that to be the fixed salary. Chose a committee to lay those votes before Mr. Mills, viz.: Eleazer King, Joshua Healey, Benjamin Tupper, Ezra May, Seth Sylvester.

Oct. 22, 1764.—Chose a committee to ask the advice of neighboring ministers in a council, viz.: Ezra May, Joshua Healey, Benjamin Tupper. Same committee directed to provide for the ordination of Mr. Mills.

ACCOUNT OF EXPENSES FOR THE INSTALLATION OF REV. TIMOTHY ALLEN, AUDITED AND ALLOWED BY THE TOWN, JUNE 4-20, 1785.

By Capt. Healey:

To 5 gallons of West India rum.....	£	s.	d.
" 1 lb. of allspice.....	1	2	0
" 1 1/2 lb. of pepper.....	0	0	9
" 6 lbs. of sugar.....	0	4	6
" a journey to Northampton and expense.....	0	7	0
" 1 lb. of rice.....	0	3	0
" 1 lb. of coffee, 1s. 4d. time and expense.....	0	5	4
" sundries 11d., 5 lbs. loaf sugar 1s. 3d.....	0	7	2
" 1 lb. Bohea tea.....	0	1	9
" 2 lbs. Malaga raisins at 1s. 2d.....	0	2	5
" 1 oz. nutmeg.....	0	2	0
" 46 lbs. veal at 3d.....	0	11	6
" 25 lbs. flour.....	0	5	6
" 11 lbs. cheese.....	0	6	5
" 1 bus. French turnips.....	0	1	0
	4	1	10

By Col. Benjamin Bonney:

To 8 lbs. pork at 7d.....	£	s.	d.
" time and expense.....	0	4	8
	0	4	0
	0	8	8

By Capt. Amasa Clapp:

To 12 lbs. veal at 3d.....	£	s.	d.
" 8 lbs. butter at 8d.....	0	3	1
" time and expense.....	0	5	4
	0	4	0
	0	12	5

By John Russell:

To 7 lbs. butter at 8d.....	£	s.	d.
" 1 doz. eggs.....	0	1	8
" time and expense.....	0	0	8
	0	4	0
	0	9	4

To Mr. Thomas Rodgers for tending.....	£	s.	d.
" Mr. Quance for help to cook.....	0	5	0
" Mrs. Quance for help to cook.....	0	3	0
" Mrs. Abigail Tucker for help to cook.....	0	2	0
	0	1	0
	0	11	0
Total.....	£	s.	d.
	6	3	3

It is evident that the town made ready for a good time in the way of material things as well as spiritual.

All the preliminary movements for religious services were made by the town in its official capacity, as was the custom in New England. Church organization soon followed.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF CHESTERFIELD was formally organized Oct. 30, 1764, and the ministers assisting were Rev. Samuel Hopkins, of Hadley, and Rev. John Hooker, of Northampton. There were seven members besides the Rev. Benjamin Mills, who had received a call from the town the preceding July, had accepted, and commenced his labors. He was installed as the first pastor of the newly-formed church November 22d, three weeks after the organization. The first members were Benjamin Mills, Joseph Burnell, Joshua Healey, David Stearns, Ezra May, Robert Hamilton, Benjamin Tupper, and Geo. Buck. Their names are signed to the covenant. Ezra May and Benjamin Tupper were chosen the first deacons January 9th of the following winter. The former was afterward the well-known Maj. May of the Revolutionary times. The latter became Gen. Tupper, and, removing to Ohio, was one of the pioneers at Marietta.

The first meeting-house was repaired in 1814-15, and stood till 1835, having been in use about sixty-seven years. The new house was dedicated Nov. 18, 1835. July 4, 1838, it was voted to build a parsonage, and it was erected not long after.

Record of Pastors.—1st. Rev. Benjamin Mills, ordained Nov. 22, 1764; dismissed by reason of poor health, Dec. 21, 1774; he continued to reside in town, and became prominent in public affairs during the war of the Revolution. 2d. Rev. Josiah Kilburn, ordained Nov. 9, 1780; died while absent from the town, in September, 1781, probably about twenty-six years old. 3d. Rev. Timothy Allen, installed June 15, 1785; he had already preached one year; was seventy years old when installed; his services ceased in 1796; he remained in town, and died Jan. 12, 1806. 4th. Rev. Isaiah Waters, ordained Nov. 22, 1796; he remained for thirty-five years, when, at his request, he was dismissed. He died at Williamsburg, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1851. Rev. Benjamin Holmes supplied the pulpit for two years. 5th. Rev. Israel G. Rose, installed Nov. 18, 1835; he died while still pastor, Feb. 5, 1842, at the age of forty-three. 6th. Rev. Oliver Warner, ordained June 6, 1844; his services closed by reason of ill health, June 5, 1846. Mr. Warner, however, supplied the pulpit considerably before the settlement of another pastor. 7th. Rev. Samuel W. Barnum, ordained Jan. 25, 1853; dismissed Jan. 25, 1855, and there were services by Rev. O. M. Sears for a time. 8th. Rev. John E. Corey, stated supply, commencing, as appears by the first entry, May 1, 1856; labors closed April 29, 1859. 9th. Rev. J. W. Allen, labors commenced May 15, 1859; closed May 11, 1862. 10th. Rev. William W. Rose, stated supply, labors commenced May 25, 1862; ordained by a council that met Dec. 28, 1862; labors terminated April 30, 1864. 11th. Rev. J. A. Wilkins, May 1, 1864; services closed at the end of the year, May 1, 1865. 12th. Rev. Edward Clarke, May 1, 1865, to April 30, 1872. 13th. Rev. I. P. Smith, May 1, 1872; services continued about a year. 14th. And lastly, Rev. William A. Fobes; services commenced the last Sabbath of June, 1873, and he continues, the present pastor.

* The town record is obscure.

The list of deacons includes Ezra May, Benjamin Tupper, Benjamin Pierce, Thomas Halbert, Nathaniel Coleman, Spencer Phelps, John Russell, Benjamin Pierce, Asahel Searl, Timothy A. Phelps, Seth Healey, Rufus Burnell, Sidney S. Smead, David Healey, and William Baker. The last named is the sole acting deacon at present; he was chosen May 17, 1861. Deacon Smead removed to Sunderland; Deacon David Healey to Westfield; Deacon Rufus Burnell died at Aurora, Ill., March 7, 1875; Deacon Seth Healey died a few years since; Deacon Phelps died in South Deerfield.

The first baptism recorded, Jan. 13, 1765, Joel, son of Lemuel Lyon; second, March 10, 1765, Electa, daughter of Daniel Winter; third, April 14th, Mary, daughter of Abijah Tucker.

BAPTIST CHURCH OF CHESTERFIELD.

A number of the families of Chesterfield subsequent to the Revolution were inclined to the doctrines of the Baptist Church, and an organization was effected at an early date. The first house of worship was situated near the road where it turns on Ireland Street from the road leading by the Gate to Worthington. An accident is noted in connection with the raising: Charles Beswick, Jr., fell from the frame and was taken up apparently dead, but afterward recovered. Rev. Ebenezer Vining was ordained the first pastor, June 16, 1791. Elder Ebenezer Smith made the introductory prayer; Elder Peter Werden preached the ordination sermon, from 1 Tim. iii. 15; Elder Asa Todd made the ordaining prayer; Elders Stow, Warren, and Hamilton joined in the laying on of hands; Elder Obed Warren gave the charge, Elder Adam Hamilton the right hand of fellowship, and Elder Stow made the concluding prayer. This account is found in the Hampshire Gazette of that year. Mr. Vining was dismissed in 1802. The next year Rev. Asa Todd was installed, and continued pastor for twenty-one years.

In connection with this church it is interesting to notice that among the first settlers were some families of Baptist sentiments nearly thirty years before a church organization. Under date of July 27 and Aug. 17, 1767, there are recorded in the town books certificates signed by Rev. Ebenezer Smith, pastor of a Baptist Church in Ashfield, stating that Mr. Moses Bacon and Mr. Wm. White, of Chesterfield, "are conscientiously of the Anabaptist persuasion," and attend church in Ashfield. We infer that this certificate procured their release from church taxes in Chesterfield.

Mr. Chandler Macomber furnishes the following valuable paper in relation to the work of the Baptist Church in Chesterfield:

"According to the ancient records, the first meeting of this church was held at the house of Zebulon Robertson [Robinson], on the 22d of September, 1789, with Luke Bonney as clerk; and for a long time after, the meetings were held at private houses. Oct. 6, 1789, a committee consisting of Luke Bonney, Zebulon Robinson, and Seth Taylor was chosen to provide a teacher. Jan. 26, 1790, it was reported from this committee favoring and recommending the engagement of Brother Vining as minister, and, the report having been accepted, it was voted to raise £45 14s. 6d. by subscription to defray the expenses of ordaining Brother Vining, moving his family, and furnishing him with a suit of clothes. June 15, 1790, Elder Vining was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church in Chesterfield. In the following May it was voted to move the meetings to Mr. Stone's barn, and in 1798 we find a meeting reported as being held in the meeting-house, with Dan Daniels, of Worthington, clerk,—an office which he held for thirty years, assisted in the later years by his son, Ira Daniels. Jan. 30, 1801, Samuel Kingman, of Worthington, and William Keene, of Chesterfield, were chosen deacons to wait on the church.

"Some time during the year 1803 the name of Asa Todd appears as the second minister of the church, and in 1805, Deacon Keene having removed, Noah White was chosen deacon. Jan. 31, 1807, Deacon Kingman was dismissed. In March, 1808, David Macomber was chosen, and July, 1815, Timothy Austin was chosen in place of Noah White, dismissed. In January, 1817, the name of Job Cudworth appears as one of the deacons.

"In the year 1817, by the death of one of the brethren, a fund was left to the church for the support of the communion-table, and a committee consisting of Deacon Macomber, Deacon Austin, and Dan Daniels was chosen 'to obtain the money left to the church by our brother, Reuben Hitchcock, of Worthington.'

"Previous to this time—and, as tradition has it, long before the organization of the church—there had been a small body of Baptists in the east and northeast part of the town, holding their meetings at a house now occupied by Morris J. Thayer, and in the year 1818 they erected a meeting-house in the east part of the town, and we find records occasionally of church meetings in this house, showing that they were considered a part of the same church organization, with the same officers and minister.

"Nov. 2, 1820, Elder Todd was dismissed from the church in consequence of a dissatisfaction among some of the church members on account of his having joined the Free Masons, and also from difficulties of a more personal nature; but he continued to live in the town till July 17, 1847, when he died at the ripe old age of ninety-one.

"In June, 1822, Rev. Paul Hines was received into the church as pastor. At this date there appear about 225 names of members on the records, among which we find names not yet extinct,—of Curtiss, Hayden, Davis, Macomber, Thayer, Torry, Bisbee, Litchfield, Bryant, Cole, Todd, Cudworth, Carr, Higgins, Stanton, Tower, Metcalf, Kendall, Taylor, Cowing, Sampson, Angell, French, Kingman, Moore, Bissel, Robinson, and Bates.

"From this time forward the records are lost, and exist only—as far as known—in the memory; but the facts are fresh in the memory of many now living, though the precise dates are lacking. About 1825 the meeting-house—a large, rambling building—was taken down, condensed in its proportions, and removed from its location on 'Ireland Street' to a more central situation,—at 'the Gate,' so called; and about the same time the meetings in the east part of the town were discontinued, and Rev. Ambrose Day appears as pastor till about 1845.

"Some time during the ministry of Elder Day it appears there were three deacons,—David Todd, Job Cudworth, and Asa Robinson; but a serious difficulty having arisen in the church concerning the seniority of the deacons, in connection with the bequest of Reuben Hitchcock, Deacon Robinson, with about 40 others, was expelled from the church; the main body of the church erected a new meeting-house at the centre in 1845, and Almon Higgins was chosen one of the deacons. This meeting-house was occupied about fifteen years, with Rev. Wm. Smith, Z. Richards, F. Bestor, and Wm. S. Phillips as pastors, when, by the removal of many of the influential members and the gradual depopulation of the hill-towns, the burden became too heavy for those remaining, the meetings were given up, and in 1874 the meeting-house was taken down.

"The church still (1879) keeps up its organization, with about 30 members still living, who meet with the other churches wherever they happen to be located, and the avails of the fund left them by the late Dr. Robert Starkweather are generally given to the Congregational Society."

SECOND BAPTIST SOCIETY OF CHESTERFIELD.

Those families in the southeastern part of the town who belonged to the Baptist Church were at such a distance from meeting that they finally erected a house of worship for themselves about the year 1818. The building is still standing. A church organization was effected, lasting about seven years. In 1825, owing to a change of doctrinal views and under the leadership of Isaac King, Esq., this church became the First Liberal Baptist Society of Chesterfield, more generally known as the Free-Will Baptist.

METHODIST CHURCH OF CHESTERFIELD.

In the year 1843, several families of Methodist sentiments being resident in town, meetings were held in the town-hall.

Josiah Hayden, of Williamsburg, a licensed exhorter, and Mr. Mason, from the same place, conducted the meetings regularly for about a year. In 1844, Rev. Daniel K. Bannister, a former native of the town, was sent here by the conference. In 1845, Rev. E. A. Manning preached here, a church was formed, and a house of worship erected. The edifice is the present town-hall, and is a neat and handsome building, founded literally "upon a rock," standing at the southeast corner of the public square. Rev. Mr. Manning remained three years. In 1848, Rev. Mr. McClouth, an Englishman, officiated for one year. About that time individuals interested in the success of the church bought a parsonage near the Eleazer King (now the Nathaniel W. Ingram) farm. In 1849, Rev. Wm. Bardwell occupied it as the Methodist parsonage, remaining two years. He was succeeded for two years, 1851-53, by Rev. I. B. Bigelow. Rev. John Smith followed for two years, 1853-55; Rev. E. B. Morgan succeeded him for one year. The last pastor was Rev. Mr. Jordan, in 1856, who remained two years. At the expiration of his term Methodist preaching was discontinued. The house of worship was sold a few years later for a town-hall, and the parsonage was sold to Joel Ingram, who still occupies it. Among the members of the organization, 1843 to 1845, were Abner Damon and wife, Elisha Tilden and wife, Elisha Bisbee and wife, Joel Ingram, Jr., and wife, Andrew K. Baker, Benjamin B. Bryant, Martin Shaw and wife, Elijah Tilden and wife, John Hayden and wife, with several others from adjacent towns.

BURIAL-GROUNDS.

The wife of Benjamin Bonney was the first person who died in town, in 1764. Her grave was dug in the present central yard, by Abiel Stetson, and the boundaries of this burial-place were afterward defined as follows: "Beginning five rods west of Benjamin Bonney's wife's grave, thence running east eighteen rods by Archelaus Anderson's north line, thence south thirteen and one-third rods, thence west thirteen rods, thence north eighteen rods to the place of first beginning, containing one acre and a half." This ground was obtained as the result of the following official action, though it appears from the description that it had been used before the organization of the town,—at least, in the burial of Mrs. Bonney:

May 9, 1763.—It was proposed at a town-meeting to agree upon a place for a burying-ground, but the proposition was voted down.

May 10, 1764.—Voted a committee to purchase land for a burying-ground, and clear and fence the same.

Oct. 22, 1764.—At a town-meeting held at Mr. Benjamin Tupper's, an innholder, the committee on burying-ground reported that they had agreed with Mr. Archelaus Anderson for one acre and a half of land, laying upon said Anderson's Hill, for 2 pounds 8 shillings, lawful money.

BENJAMIN BONNEY,	} Committee.
BENJAMIN BRYANT,
SETH SYLVESTER,

Though this burial-place was purchased of Archelaus Anderson, yet the deed a year or two later was from Rev. Benjamin Mills, who must have succeeded to the farm of Mr. Anderson, either wholly or in part. The oldest inscription appears to be, "Mrs. Esther, wife of Peter Strong; died July 6, 1775, aged 37." Others are "Jemima, wife of Eleazer Strong, Feb. 17, 1787, aged 87." "Benjamin Ludden, May 23, 1789, aged 71." "Elisha Warner, Dec. 2, 1787, aged 66." Besides this central burying-ground, there are several others. One of these is in the east part of the town, known as Bofat, near the residence of Calvin Damon. Another is located in the south part of the town, on the old Torrey farm. There is a burying-ground on Ireland Street, near the residence of Mr. Ephraim Cole. Another public burial-place is in the district known as "the Gate," and near the place of Asa Todd. And yet another old cemetery is located farther north, near the residence of Rev. Edward Clarke.

Places of private family burials are quite numerous. At the extreme south end of Ireland Street was formerly a burial-place, once carefully protected by a stone wall and later by an iron fence. The remains are now all removed to the cemetery in South Worthington. A few graves may be seen on the farm of Levi Witherell, in the south part of the town. The Damon family have a private burial-place on the present farm of Moses Damon, and this is not far from another Damon burial-place in Westhampton. It is said that upon the Davis farm, so called, there are two graves, little known to the people generally, where members of the Quance family were buried many years ago. On the Ervin Rice farm two victims of the small-pox are supposed to have been buried, and there was a pest-house there many years ago, when the farm was in possession of Amasa Clapp. Still another burial-place of the Damon family may be seen on the farm of Darius Damon, where are buried Ichabod Damon and wife. On the farm of Horace Cole members of the Robinson family are buried, among them Deacon Asa Robinson.

TOWN SOCIETIES.

A few years since a lodge of Good Templars was established in town, had quite a flourishing organization for some time, and did considerable temperance work; but it was finally discontinued. A grange of the Patrons of Husbandry was also organized here, but continued its work only a few months. Considerable business was done through it in the way of purchasing implements and farm supplies at wholesale prices or at special reduced rates.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST, NOTED POINTS, CURIOSITIES.

Near the locality known as the Gate is the deep cut in the Westfield River, a rocky channel extending for thirty or forty rods in length, walled in on each side by high granite ledges. This is a rare specimen of the grand and sublime in nature. Tourists often visit the place. The old stage-road from Northampton to Albany originally crossed the north end of it by the well-known "High Bridge." The road has been changed and the descent from the Eastern Hills now made by a long grade northward to West Chesterfield. Formerly the stages thundered down the steep hill direct and over the rocky channel, coming out a little south of the old Baptist Church.

"Kidd's Lookout" is over in Bofat, in the southeast part of the town. It takes its name from the old Kidd farm. There an extensive view is obtained, including villages, forests, mountains, and cultivated valleys.

The site of the old meeting-house at Utley's Corners can hardly be otherwise than a historic spot, memorable for the home struggle over its own location, but more memorable as the place of those town-meetings where the citizens discussed the highest problems of government, where they met the crisis of 1775 with heroic action, where they pledged themselves to meet the impending storm of war with "their lives and their fortunes."

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Agriculture is the principal business of the people of Chesterfield, though various milling and manufacturing enterprises have at times received considerable attention. The town is hilly and rocky, some portions not capable of being reduced to cultivation, and the town generally is better fitted for grazing than for tillage.

Accordingly, the raising of sheep and cattle has been a leading object of the farming community.

The products of the dairy have formed a large item in the sales of produce. There is an air of thrift and enterprise about the farms and the farm buildings of Chesterfield which indicates that the people still live well upon these beautiful hill-sides, as their ancestors did before them, and attain a reasonable competence. They have not permitted Nature to fill up the old pastures with bushes and absorb the old farms as much perhaps as in some of the neighboring towns. Chesterfield is, however, greatly reduced in population, there being only about half as many people now as in 1820.

EARLY MILLS.

Joseph Burnell built the first saw-mill in town, it is supposed, and perhaps as early as 1761. The crank for the water-wheel and the irons for the rack-wheel were brought by a negro on his back from Northampton. This mill and its successors have been in the hands of the Burnell family for three generations. The man carrying the irons above mentioned took them separately, carrying one ahead and then going back for the others. It is also understood that Kidd Wright built a saw-mill about 1777, or even earlier, on the site where the Edwards mill stood in later years. Numerous families of the Wrights were in town by that time, and the name Kidd would imply that the two families were connected by marriage. Lieut. Robert Damon probably built the first saw-mill on the site of Bisbee's mills before 1773, as it is mentioned that year in a vote to provide a bridge at that point. It afterward passed into the hands of James Cox, and from him to Benjamin Pierce, who retained it until his death. The name of Lieut. Robert Damon is frequently mentioned in these records, but we have little account of him; and his family seems to have been entirely distinct from the other Damon families. The grist-mill at Bisbee's is supposed to have been built by Benjamin Pierce soon after he obtained possession of the saw-mill, as above mentioned. The old mill was upon the east side of the stream, near the present saw-mill. The Bisbees erected the present mills on the west side. The town, March 3, 1777, voted to raise £150 to build a corn-mill, but soon after reconsidered the action. It is supposed the site intended was where Maj. Littlefield built one at a later date, near the "High Bridge," so called.

The following condensed statement of all the mills in the town is given upon the authority of Patrick Bryant, of West Chesterfield. He is himself a practical builder of mills, and personally acquainted with the water-power of Chesterfield for the last sixty years. Commencing near the south line of the town, at the junction of the Dead Branch with the Westfield, we have the streams northward. At the junction of the streams there is now the saw-mill of Dexter Damon & Son, built ten or twelve years ago. A little above, on the Dead Branch, was formerly a saw-mill, shingle-mill, grist-mill, and carding-machine built by Benjamin Taylor, 1820 to 1830. The works were afterward owned by the Sampsons, and run by Artemas Weeks. The buildings went down, and the various enterprises were abandoned a few years before the Damons built at the junction. Still farther up the Dead Branch are the old works of Stephen Taylor, erected perhaps as early as 1800,—originally for cloth-dressing; afterward they became the Tilden scythe-stone works. Later they were run by the Meritts, Asa and Lucien. At the present time (1878) they are occupied by H. K. Weeks, as a cutlery establishment. Two miles or so above are the Witherell mills, comprising at the present time a saw-mill, basket-factory, and cider-mill. A building used for broom-handle business was destroyed by the fire a year or two since. The saw-mill is an old affair, its history reaching back to the early settlement. Next above are the Bisbee mills mentioned above, comprising grist-mill, saw-mill, broom-handle business, and something of the wagon-making business. A few years ago for a time scythes were made at Bisbee's. Still above, but on the East Branch, a tributary of the Dead Branch, is the site of the old Kidd Wright mill. It was in later years owned by Isaac Damon and Gershom Howe, and then by Luther Edwards, and by his son Ebenezer. The works were swept down, and not rebuilt, 1860 to 1862. On the Dead Branch, above the fork two miles or so, were the old Rogers mills, built perhaps fifty years ago. Dam swept away and not rebuilt some years later. The Burnell saw- and grist-mill were the first in town. They passed to Joseph, Jr., and to Francis, his son, then to Edwards & Baker, and are now owned by S. C. Damon. As the site of the earliest mills in town, this place has considerable historic interest.

Northward from the junction of the Dead Branch, and up the Westfield River, the first point to be noticed is the site of the Lemuel Baker saw-mill, built thirty years ago or more; now all gone and no one living near it. At the High Bridge was a very old place of mills, both grist and saw, including a carding-machine and cloth-dressing. These probably date back to the Revolution, and were built by Maj. Littlefield; soon after, the town voted £150 to assist, but reconsidered the vote. The freshet of 1835 swept these away, and they were not rebuilt. The Capt. Joel Shattuck grist-mill was a little below, and also a saw-mill built soon after the Revolution. William Williams occupied the buildings last with broom-handle works and carding-works; destroyed entirely by the same freshet of 1835, and never restored. At West Chesterfield, Elisha Bisbee built in very old times a saw-mill on Stevens Brook, where Higgins' gun-tube works are located now; successive owners were Capt. Joel Thayer, Martin Bryant, Reed and Tower Lyman, Litchfield, and Mr. Higgins.

A foundry and machine-shops were built by Mr. Litchfield, 1845 to '48, on the site of Spencer & Reed's works. They were burnt. Then Edward Thayer built a grist-mill. He had been the owner of the foundry for a time. The new building was run as a grist-mill, and passed into the hands of Wm. H. Adams, until Spencer & Reed took possession, June, 1877. They manufacture factory supplies,—picker-sticks, hat-racks, rakes, and other forms of woodwork. On the site of the present Patrick Bryant works was formerly a tannery, built about 1825, by Jonathan Burr. It was burnt; rebuilt as a tannery, and owned by Paul H. Cudworth. Of him Patrick Bryant took the property, and opened an extensive business,—wood and iron work, machine-shop, cider-mill, foundry, and distillery. All were burned except the distillery in 1866, and rebuilt for the same general purposes. Just below, Patrick Bryant erected a large new building for running a circular-saw mill and for wood-work generally, including also sheet-iron work, as sap-pans and stove-pipe. This building is now owned by B. H. Smith, and he has added the making of sieve-rims and similar hoop-work. Patrick Bryant still occupies a part of the building. Wm. Williams, after the loss of the mills below, built at West Chesterfield, a little above the site of Healey's present works, and ran a saw-mill; made broom-handles, tool-handles, etc. Dam swept away in 1845, and works abandoned. S. A. Healey, with Mr. Olds, established the mills and continued the same general business. At the present time Mr. Healey keeps the works in operation. Gideon Rhoades had rebuilt the mills after the dam was swept away, before Healey & Olds took possession. There was a tannery by Jacob Higgins, on Stevens Brook, first built by Austin Pease about fifty years ago. The building was destroyed in the freshet of 1858.

There are no further mills above on the Westfield River. On a tributary coming in from the northwest, however, there are some to be noticed. Near the place of Maj. Pierce's present residence was a saw-mill, built by Ned Kaith; carried off by a freshet in the cold summer of 1816, and not rebuilt. There was another saw-mill above, on the same stream, about forty years ago, built by Lyman Culver, and he made broom-handles. The property passed to his son Horace, and is now owned by Rufus Fisk, who includes at the present time a saw-mill, a cider-mill, and the manufacture of whip-butts. Patrick Bryant states that he made his first campaign in building mills when a young man of twenty-two, by erecting on this stream, above the Culver works, a saw-mill, which was run fifteen or twenty years, and then went down. Between Bryant's saw-mill and the Culver mills, Jerome Culver commenced some works fifty years ago perhaps, but did not complete them.

The ten leading articles of production for the year ending May 1, 1875, with their several estimated values, were as follows: Butter, $11,450; maple-sugar, $6779; firewood, $4425; beef, $6231; hay, $25,703; pork, $4071; manure, $5988; potatoes, $6451; corn, $2008; veal, $1175. Three more were very near the last,—apples, $1167; eggs, $1143; oats, $1116.

MILITARY.

Generally speaking, all trouble from Indian attacks had terminated in this part of the country before Chesterfield was settled. The early pioneers were not compelled to face the dangers of the tomahawk and the scalping-knife,—dangers that were ever present to the imagination or the actual reality of earlier infant settlements. They were, however, patriotic citizens of the commonwealth, and in the time of the Revolution, though their town organization was scarcely fourteen years old, they vied with other places in prompt action and energetic service. At the town-meetings of 1774 and 1775 they voted to purchase 400 pounds of powder, 400 pounds of lead, and 1200 flints, "the same to be kept under the pulpit in the meeting-house, guarded by a door ironed with staples and hinges." The town was represented in the Provincial Congress by Rev. Benjamin Mills and Maj. Ezra May.

When the stirring news of Lexington came over the hills to Chesterfield, Capt. Robert Webster, summoning his company of 47 Minute-Men, marched to Boston two days after the battle of Lexington, April 21, 1775. The first lieutenant was Christopher Bannister, second, Jeremiah Stockwell, and the ensign was Everton Beswick. The company was mustered into the regiment of Col. John Fellows, when their pay-roll numbered 55 men, 7 of them from other towns of the State. The selectmen borrowed seventeen muskets to assist in equipping this company.

The public enthusiasm developed rapidly in behalf of the patriot cause. Beginning cautiously at the town-meeting of Sept. 29, 1774, they voted not to send a delegate to the Provincial Congress at Concord; but two months later, December 21st, they voted to comply with the request of the Continental Congress, and a committee was chosen for this purpose, and another committee to see about arming the people who were unable to arm themselves. In the January following they were accumulating war material, and, as shown above, their soldiers hurried to Boston to meet the foe in the eventful spring of 1775. A year later, June 19, 1776, this town, secluded amid the hills of Western Hampshire, barely fourteen years from its settlement, in a solemn vote declared "that should the Honorable Continental Congress, for the safety of the United Colonies, declare themselves independent of the Kingdom of Great Britain, the inhabitants of the town of Chesterfield will with our lives and fortunes engage to defend them in this measure."

The people of the Old World may well have smiled at these offers from apparently feeble sources; but the event proved that the springs of constitutional liberty were in the town-meetings of New England,—town-meetings whose authority flowed steadily on, equally obeyed under royalty, revolution, or confederation. A people who could calmly, without a sign of civil commotion, change the warrant for their town-meeting from "In the name of his Majesty" to "In the name of the State of Massachusetts Bay," and never think of anarchy, but remain steadily obedient to local home-rule, were just the men to place their strong arms under a national government and bear it onward to victory. They were like Cromwell's men, who feared God, and therefore feared no other being.

It is related that Gideon Bisbee was a soldier in Arnold's ill-fated expedition for the capture of Quebec, and that in consequence of the hardships of the campaign and the actual danger of death by starvation, he with two others deserted, and then very nearly perished while on the way back, barely reaching the settlements alive after they had nearly decided to cast lots for one to die that the others might live. There were 30 Chesterfield men in the army of the Revolution in January, 1776.

We are permitted by the courtesy of William H. Webster, of Springfield, grandson of Capt. Webster, to make copies of the following valuable papers in his possession:

A Muster-Roll of the Eighth Company in the 8th Regiment of Foot in the Continental Army encamped at Dorchester, commanded by John Fellows, Esq., Sept. 1, 1775.

Robert Webster, captain, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Christopher Bannister, lieutenant, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Everton Beswick, ensign, enlisted April 21, 1775.
William White, sergeant, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Daniel Littlefield, sergeant, enlisted April 21, 1775.
John Holbert, sergeant, enlisted April 21, 1775.
James Cox, sergeant, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Nathan Lane, corporal, enlisted May 3, 1775.
Richard Sylvester, corporal, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Wait Burke, corporal, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Wheeler Higbee, corporal, enlisted May 3, 1775.
David Adams, drummer and fifer, enlisted May 1, 1775.
Asa Packard, drummer and fifer, enlisted April 21, 1775.
John Shea, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Richard Burke, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Josiah Brown, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Joseph Brown, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Cyrus Lyons, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Asa Spalding, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Enoch Pratt, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Zachariah Curtis, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
William Damon, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Benjamin Bourn, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Isaac Buck, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Simeon Higgins, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
William Turner, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Ebenezer Cole, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Jabez Cowles, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Samuel Thomas, private, enlisted Aug. 7, 1775.
Eleazer Ring, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.
Jonathan Hill, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.
Peter Price, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.
Bezabiel Moffett, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.
Bartholomew Cheever, private, enlisted May 15, 1775.
Ansil Tupper, private, enlisted May 24, 1775.
Christopher Grant, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Thomas Pierce, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Tilly Burke, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Adam Beale, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Nathaniel Tyler, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
George Mills, Jr., private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Benjamin G. Ball, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Timothy Rice, private, enlisted May 10, 1775.
Stephen Tyler, private, enlisted May 24, 1775.
Luke Sylvester, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
George Mills, private, enlisted May 11, 1775.
Barnabas Cole, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.
David Johnson, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.
Samuel West, private, enlisted May 5, 1775.
Samuel Marks, private, enlisted July 1, 1775.
William Stephenson, private, enlisted July 1, 1775.
Robert Damon, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Samuel Olds, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Samuel Leach, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Amos Crittenden, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
Josiah Clark, private, enlisted April 21, 1775.
John Vergson, private, enlisted May 3, 1775.

The last four were transferred to the artillery June 8th.

Reported as away upon the Quebec expedition, Wait Burke, Tilly Burke, George Mills. In some other accompanying papers Eleazer Ring is reported as from Worthington, and also Wheeler Higbee; from Northampton, David Adams; from Bridgewater, Asa Packard; from Hadley, Samuel West; from Pelham, Timothy Rice. This muster-roll is for Sept. 1, 1775, after about five months' service. It differs somewhat from the roll of "Minute-Men" who marched for Boston April 21st. Some did not join the actual company, and become a part of Col. Fellows' regiment. In the roll of "Minute-Men" there are the following additional names: Timothy Lyman, Elijah Warner, both sergeants; Justice Wright, Jonathan Nelson, Charles Kidd, corporals; Edward Converse, drummer; Aaron Jewell, Caleb Cushman, Nehemiah May, Jonathan Russell, Oliver Taylor, Artemas Stone, Reuben

Dresser, Jonathan Pierce, Josiah Perry, Ebenezer Parsons, Samuel Niles, Wm. Turner, Nathan W. Tyler, Ebenezer Putney, Prince Cowing. Three of these—Justice Wright, Charles Kidd, and Josiah Perry—are reported as having returned in three days. Others doubtless returned soon. Some may have joined other companies besides Capt. Webster's, and remained longer in the service than the above would indicate. All of these names upon the master-roll of September 1st are found upon a pay-roll of Feb. 26, 1776, showing continued service.

Another paper gives the value of the guns borrowed, from whom, and for whom:

Borrowed of	Value. £ s.	Lent to
Maj. Ezra May	2 14	Erish Pratt.
Rev. William Lyman	1 5	Warr Bark.
Jonathan Russell	2 2	David Johnson.
Jonathan Nelson	1 13	Christopher Grant.
Caleb Cushman	2 2	Peter Price.
Aaron Jewell	1 4	Bozali Mottett.
John Jenson	1 4	Bartholomew Cheever.
Justice Wright	2 8	Nathan Lane.
Maj. Ezra May	1 14	Benjamin Burn.
Maj. Ezra May	1 18	Benjamin G. Ball.
Benjamin Ramey	2 5	Tilly Barker.
David Russell	1 18	Daniel Littlefield.
William Buckingham	1 10	Barnabas Cole.
Joshua Bailey	1 16	Wheeler Hibber.
Maj. Ezra May	1 00	Samuel Thomas.
Jeremiah Stockwell	2 2	James Cox.
James Cox	1 10	Jonathan Hill.

In the Shays rebellion the people of Chesterfield were favorable to the cause of the insurgents,—so much so that when Capt. Joseph Burnell was ordered out to suppress the insurrection, he reported that if he could find nineteen more men to go, they, with himself, would make twenty. There seems to be no record, however, in the published accounts of that exciting period that Chesterfield men really marched to assist Shays. But popular sentiment was strong for resistance. It is said three balls were fired at the house of Joshua Healey, who was against the rebellion, one lodging in the yarn-beam of a loom, and still preserved. Capt. Jewel, David Macomber, and Henry Myers were prominent among the Shays men.

The war of 1812, exceedingly unpopular as it was in Massachusetts, evoked no enthusiasm, but there were seven regular soldiers from Chesterfield who enlisted at that time in the army, according to the statement in Vinton's address. The following are given by Oliver Edwards and others as those who went to Boston, at least, in connection with that war. Perhaps the list includes the seven above mentioned: Parley Healey, Consider Cole, Elijah Tower(?), Oswin Tower, Zachariah Shaw, Isaac Buck, Seth Healey, Lot Drake, John Hatch, John Pittsinger, Lewis Damon, Nathaniel Engram, Zenas Damon, Job Cowing (substitute), Abner Buck, Jesse Buck, Amasa Clapp, Field Beswick. These men went to Boston. In the regular army were Bezar Ludden, Joel Litchfield, Lot Litchfield, Clark Litchfield. Many others were enlisted or drafted as Minute-Men, but did not leave town. Joel Willcutt states that he saw them start for Boston from the village.

For the Florida war Chesterfield is said to have furnished one soldier, Joseph Buck, who died in the service.

The Mexican war was participated in by one citizen from this town, Avery Bryant.

Alvin Macomber, Joel Willcutt, and others recall the following names of Revolutionary soldiers: Patrick Bryant, David Macomber, Gideon Bisbee, Abijah Whitton, Joseph Burnell, Benjamin Bryant, George Buck, Prince Cowing, Joshua Healey, Simeon Higgins, Capt. John Halbord, Aaron Jewell, Charles Kidd, Benjamin Kidd, Samuel Utley, Levi-ather Vinton, Levi Vinton, Luther Pomeroy, Timothy Engram, John Ewell, Jesse Willcutt, Jr., Zebulon Willcutt, Joseph Jipson, Ambrose Stone, Lemuel Bannister, Josiah Perry, Phineas Manning, James Orcutt. Some of these names are in the Webster papers, already given.

CIVIL WAR, 1861-65.

No votes appear to have been passed in 1861 by the town in relation to the war, but enlistments took place without official action, eight or ten men joining the army that year. In 1862 a special town-meeting was held August 5th. It was then voted to pay a bounty of $100 to each volunteer who would enlist either for three years or nine months, when mustered in and credited to the quota of the town. The selectmen were authorized to borrow money to pay the same.

The popular enthusiasm was developed, not checked, by the defeat before Richmond, and 30 or more citizens enlisted during the year.

At a meeting held on the 17th of January, 1863, Samuel House, one of the selectmen, was appointed to visit Boston and obtain information in regard to the number of men the town was to furnish to complete its quota.

Other citizens continued to enlist, but many foreign recruits were obtained.

On the 2d of April, 1864, the town voted to pay a bounty of $125 to each volunteer who shall enlist and be credited to the quota of the town; also to raise $875 to repay citizens money which they had advanced for recruiting purposes. This bounty was continued to the end of the war.

At a meeting held on the 22d of May, 1865, it was voted to raise by taxation $6769 to pay citizens money which they had advanced for recruiting purposes, "one-half to be assessed this year and the balance next year."

Schouler's "History of Massachusetts in the Civil War" states that Chesterfield furnished 95 men, which was a surplus of 10 over and above all demands. Nason's "Gazetteer" says the town sent 56 of its own citizens, of whom 9 lost their lives, and the town also furnished 35 substitutes.

The adjutant-general's published reports give 68 names actually credited to Chesterfield, but some of these are re-enlistments, lessening the number nearly to that given by Nason. The list following is prepared by a comparison of these statements, together with the record in the town clerk's office, aided by the suggestions of various citizens acquainted with the facts. It is intended to exclude substitutes hired abroad, and include only residents. The whole amount of money appropriated and expended by the town on account of the war, exclusive of State aid, was $14,662. The assessed valuation of the town in 1860 was $415,746, and the population 897.

The town also raised for aid to soldiers' families (the amount, however, afterward being repaid by the State), 1861, $36.30; 1862, $644.30; 1863, $1689.21; 1864, $1477.70; 1865, $1165.50. Total, $5013.01.

The ladies of Chesterfield were active in the patriotic cause, contributing during the war $375 in money, besides clothing and other valuable material for the soldiers.

SOLDIERS' RECORD, WAR OF 1861-65.

Orange C. Smith, enl. Oct. 22, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; disch. June 1, 1863, to re-enl. in H. Art.; served through to July, 1865.
John H. Richardson, asst. surg., enl. Nov. 19, 1862, 52d M. V. M.; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Lucius C. Taylor, 1st lieut., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Levi Baker, corp., enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Calvin Bryant, musician, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.

Edgar Bryant, musician, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Henry H. Torrey, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1862.
Job E. Torrey (2d), enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1862.
Joseph H. Main, enl. Dec. 30, 1863, 1st Batt. L. Art.; trans. March 12, 1865, to 9th Batt.; disch. June 6, 1865; was first a member for nine months of the 52d.
Andrew M. Sturtevant, enl. Aug. 28, 1863, 1st Batt. L. Art.; trans. March 12, 1865, to 9th Batt.; disch. June 6, 1865.

Nelson A. Higgins, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Fayette L. Oids, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
George W. Skiff, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Reuben S. Smith, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Emerson S. Stetson, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Emerson W. Torrey, enl. Sept. 24, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 30, 1865.

- Alden Culver, enl. Oct. 6, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. K; disch. March 28, 1865, for disability.
- Hugh Frain, enl. Feb. 19, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. G; died of wounds March 6, 1865.
- Daniel E. Barker, corp., enl. Jan. 2, 1864, 36th Inf., Co. G; trans. June 8, 1865, to 56th Inf.
- Edwin Bates, enl. July 18, 1863, 20th Inf., Co. I; disch. Dec. 8, 1865, for disability.
- Nathan E. S. Collier, enl. Aug. 23, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. C; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864, 36th Regt.; trans. to 56th Regt., June 8, 1865.
- James H. Damon, enl. Aug. 23, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. H; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864, pro. to corp.; trans. to 36th Inf.; pro. to sergt.; trans. June 8, 1865, to 56th Inf., Co. F; disch. July 22, 1865.
- Timothy T. Warren, enl. Aug. 5, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. H; disch. July 18, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. Aug. 22, 1865, 2d H. Art., Co. D; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
- Lewis Adams, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- John E. Bisbee, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Willard C. Bryant, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Oliver J. Damon, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- George C. Gleason, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Festus Hayden, enl. Oct. 11, 1862, 52d M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
- Wm. J. Nichols, corp., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died May 30, 1864, at Washington, D. C., of wounds received in battle of Wilderness.
- Sylvanus C. Bryant, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died of wounds, May 19, 1864, at Fredericksburg, Va.
- Daniel G. Collier, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. Sept. 2, 1864, for disability.
- Horace Collier, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; died Feb. 9, 1864, at Brandy Station, Va., Camp Sedgwick.
- Thomas Collier, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. Jan. 24, 1863, for disability.
- Samuel E. Eddy, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 9, 1865.
- Ephraim W. Pittsinger, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; disch. June 21, 1865.
- Thomas Porter, Jr., enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; pro. to q.m.-sergt., Sept. 5, 1862; disch. June 21, 1865.
- John D. Smith, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. D; killed May 6, 1864, at Wilderness, Va.
- Orange S. Sampson, enl. 21st Regt., Co. I; pro. to captain.
- Henry W. Sampson.
- Horatio O. Tower, enl. 21st Regt., Co. G; died in the service.
- E. W. Tilden, enl. 34th Regt., Co. D; disch. April 5, 1863.
- Benjamin F. Whido, enl. 31st Regt.
- Edwin J. House, enl. March 6, 1864, 1st Cav.
- Isaac M. Collier.
- Charles Hillman, enl. 52d Regt., Co. I; died March 3, 1863.
- Elbridge F. Hayden.
- Chandler T. Macomber, assistant paymaster U. S. Army.
- James H. Macomber, navy surg.; died at Port Royal, S. C.
- Orange S. Pomeroy, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A; disch. Feb. 2, 1863.
- Stephen S. Robbins, enl. 21st Regt., Co. C; disch. Dec. 7, 1862.
- Abraham Robbins, enl. 6th N. H.
- James M. Stowe, enl. Aug. 1861, 10th Regt. Co. F.
- Dwight Bryant, enl. 1861, 27th Regt.
- John Roach, enl. 27th Regt.; trans. to Cav.
- Talcott Bancroft, enl. 37th Regt., Co. D; disch. Sept. 2, 1862.
- James M. Hayden, enl. March 6, 1864, 1st Cav.
- George A. Bisbee, enl. 37th Regt., Co. D; disch. Sept. 2, 1862.
- De Witt C. Bates, enl. 52d Regt.; died at Baton Rouge, La., about the 25th of July, 1863.
- Samuel J. Dunning, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A; killed in the battle of Newbern.

HUNTINGTON.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

HUNTINGTON belongs to the southern tier of towns in Hampshire County, if the term can be used with reference to a county of such irregular and jagged outlines as Hampshire. The town is southwest from the county-seat, and distant from it in air-line measurement fourteen miles. Huntington is bounded north by Chesterfield; east by Westhampton, Southampton, and Hampden County; south by Hampden County; west by Hampden County and Worthington. The farm acreage of the town amounts to 13,334 acres, which may be considered the net area, after deducting highways, beds of streams, and perhaps other small exceptions. The town of Norwich was a part of Murrayfield, and the title to the soil is derived direct from the province of Massachusetts Bay, the township being No. 9 of the series sold by order of the General Court, June 2, 1762. The present town of Huntington includes a portion of Blandford, and the title to that dates back to an earlier day, as fully shown in the history of that town elsewhere given. Certain special tracts are named in the act incorporating Norwich, as "Ingersoll's Grant" and "Chadler's Division." These names refer to local purchases of considerable extent at an early day.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The East Branch of the Westfield River flows through the entire length of the town from north to south, diverging slightly to the west. It receives the Middle Branch above Norwich Bridge, so called, and the united stream makes its junction with the West Branch just below Huntington station, on the Boston and Albany Railroad. In this town, therefore, converges to a centre the whole system of streams through which, with slight exceptions, flow all the waters of the seven western towns of Hampshire County and of a large territory besides. In times of freshet the Westfield River at this point displays great force, and the town often suffers severe damages to its bridges and highways. There are several small tributaries of the East Branch in this town, as Little River, Pond Brook, and others. Roaring Brook flows south into Hampden County before uniting with the Westfield. Massasoit Pond, formerly called Norwich Pond, is a fine sheet of water in the east part of the town, and has its outlet through Pond Brook. It was made the reservoir of the Massasoit Company, and raised 12 feet a few years since.

In the southeast part of Huntington are a portion of the sources of another distinct "river system,"—that of the Manhan. Some of the mountain rivulets of the two diverging systems find their springs very near each other. Horse Hill constitutes the water-shed between the two valleys, in the southeast corner of the town. There are several of the hills having local names. Mount Pisgah, in the northeast, next to Westhampton, is a highly-rocky tract, scarcely settled at all at the present time. Across the valley, to the west, is Walnut Hill. West of Massasoit Pond is Norwich Hill. Opposite, on the west border of the town, is the range known as Goss Hill. South of these heights is another elevation, an extension of Goss Hill. A second "Norwich Hill" is also noted, a little southwest of the old meeting-house. Near Roaring Brook, below, is Deer Hill, and along the diverging west line of the lower part of the town are two elevations, known as Little Moose Hill and Big Moose Hill. Add to all these the numerous hills encircling the beautiful valley of Huntington village, and there is a sum-total of mountain scenery, interspersed with pond and stream and river-valley, sufficient to tempt the traveler to linger long amid these varied attractions.

EARLY SETTLEMENT—SUBSEQUENT GROWTH.

As to the date of the first settlement upon the present territory of Huntington, it is stated in Holland's "History" (and Nason's "Gazetteer" repeats the statement,—no doubt after careful examination) that "an Indian family by the name of Rhoades made the first settlement in 1760, about two miles above the Pitcher Bridge, on Westfield River." Rev. J. H. Bisbee, writing in 1876 with the advantage of local residence, his birthplace not far off, and leisure for careful investigation, declines to repeat this statement of the older historians, and we are inclined to believe that it rests on very uncertain tradition, and that the "Indian" portion of it has little or no probability. If Mr. Rhoades settled there he removed before the town was organized, as his name is not in the list of ratable polls in 1773; but thirteen years leaves ample time for several removals, especially if the blood of the untamed tribes of the forest flowed in the veins of the family.

It is not easy to decide either the exact date of the first settlement or the order in which the first settlers came in. There seems to have been quite a group of families from Norwich, Conn., who undoubtedly moved here somewhat in company. It is the tradition of the Kirkland family that their ancestor was about as early as any one. Holland's "History" states his removal as occurring in 1767, but his son Ralph was born in Connecticut, Jan. 26, 1768. The family removed probably the following season, and Mr. Kirkland may have been here himself in 1767. His daughter, Mary, was born at Murrayfield Dec. 14, 1770. So the date of settlement is reduced to pretty close limits, if not actually determined.

The same method of investigation indicates that Samuel Knight came in 1769 or 1770; but the old town record of births only assists in a few instances, for, generally, the place of birth is omitted, and a family seem to have entered upon the town records the birth of children born before removing here.

Caleb Fobes, Wm. Miller, David Scott, Isaac Mixer, John Rude, and some others settled on the eastern part of old Murrayfield still earlier, as shown elsewhere. Fortunately there is preserved in the oldest volume of the town records the assessment-roll of 1773, and we thus determine with great exactness who were here at that date, only four years after the settlement of the Kirklands and the Knights. It is of so much value we copy its names in full: Christian Angel, Solomon Blair, Thomas Crow, James Crow, David Crow, William Carter, Asa Carter, John Crow, Caleb Fobes, William Fobes, Elijah Fobes, Zebulon Fuller, James Fairman, Samuel Fairman, William French, John Griswold, James Gilmore, David Holbard, Jabez Homes, Nathaniel Bennett, John Barnard, Solomon Holiday, Daniel Dana, John Crosssett, Ebenezer Freeman, Solomon Holiday, Jr., Patrick Buckle, John Kirkland, Ebenezer King, Samuel Knight, Daniel Kirkland, Isaac Mixer, Isaac Mixer, Jr., Ebenezer Meacham, William Miller, David Palmer, John D. Palmer, David Palmer, Jr., Capt. E. Geer, Elijah Geer, Mace Cook, Zeb Ross, John Rude, David Scott, Joseph Stanton, John Tiffany, Miles Washburn, Peter Williams, Daniel Williams, Isaac Williams, Isaac Williams, Jr., Charles Williams, Jabez Story, James Clark, Jehial Eggleston, Jonathan Ware, B. Peter Bunda. The above list shows that there were 46 owners of real estate in 1773, 6 other persons having some personal estate; and 10 with neither real nor personal estate. This gives fifty-six names, and must be supposed to include all the male inhabitants at that time, except 8, who are counted as additional polls in the various families, as sons or hired men.

FAMILY NOTES.

Christian Angel. Families of this name resided in the north part of the town. Epaphras Arnold moved to Norwich in 1774, but owned no real estate that year. James Bentley came in 1774, but owned no real estate that year. Solomon Blair. Families of this name were frequent in Blandford and Chester, but it is difficult now to locate them in Huntington. Peter Bunda left town probably in 1773 or '74, as his name is not on the second assessment-roll. The name was found in Montgomery. Thomas Crow settled in town in 1767-68. John Crow. It is the opinion of older citizens that the Crow families lived in the southeast part of the town, near the Montgomery line. William Carter. His name first appears in Murrayfield assessment-roll, Aug. 20, 1771. Perhaps resided in what is now Russell.

Pearly Cook came from Preston, Conn., and settled here soon after the Revolution, where Pearly B. Cook now lives. Children: Linus H., John, Jr., Huntington; Philetus, East Chatham; Edward W., Hartford; Mrs. Daniel Pitcher, Boonville; Mrs. Edward A. Clark, Easthampton. The wife of Pearly Cook was a daughter of Noah Burt, of Southampton.

James Clark. He was elected a tythingman in Murrayfield, March 11, 1766; a surveyor of highways, May 3, 1768. He was a prominent man. John Cook supposes his place to have been the present farm of Joseph Castner, over the line in Chester. Jehial Eggleston settled in town in 1767-68.

Caleb Fobes. His homestead was the present Bradley place, in the valley, a short distance above Norwich Bridge. His name appears in the assessment-roll of Murrayfield, April 19, 1768; and he was elected one of the selectmen of that town, May 3, 1768, and William Miller with him, the majority of the selectmen being thus located upon the territory afterward Norwich. William Fobes, homestead on the Deacon Artemas Knight place, about a mile south of the Congregational church, now owned by Abner Peck. Elijah Fobes, probably the father of the two noted citizens above.

Zebulon Fuller settled 1767-68. James Fairman settled 1767-68; homestead the present Fairman place. Samuel Fairman settled 1767-68; homestead west of the meeting-house, where Austin Fairman now lives. Ebenezer Freeman owned no real estate, probably left town 1773 or '74; lived near Norwich Hill. Jonathan Frost came in 1774, but owned no real estate that year. It is presumed he lived on "Pisgah Street," so called, where more than 25 families once lived, a portion of the town now deserted. John Griswold settled in 1771, homestead two miles south of Norwich Hill. Capt. Ebenezer Geer settled in 1768-69, east part of the town.

James Gilmore, from New Hampshire. His name is in the Murrayfield assessment-roll for April 19, 1768, showing him to have been an early settler; homestead a mile above Huntington village; buildings gone. Three sons went to Geauga Co., O., about 1811,—James, Edmund, and William. They went out with ox-teams. There was a large gathering to see the colony start. Gen. Gilmore, of the army, was from this family. Isaac Gates settled in 1774. Solomon Holiday. His name first appears in Murrayfield assessment-roll Aug. 20, 1771. The Holiday family were located in Montgomery, as older settlers suppose. Jesse Joy moved to Norwich in 1774, but owned no real estate that year; lived east of the Hill, near Westhampton line.

John Kirkland came about 1768; homestead where his great-grandson, C. H. Kirkland, now lives. It has been in the family ever since the first occupancy. First log house was farther east, near Roaring Brook, and first frame house some twenty rods east of the present one. Samuel Kirkland, the noted missionary of Central New York, was a brother. Daniel, another brother, settled in Norwich. Their father was Rev. Daniel Kirkland, of Lisbon, Conn. The children of John Kirkland were Joseph, who died young; Martin, who settled in Norwich (father of the well-known Harvey Kirkland, of Northampton); Samuel Kirkland, who settled on the old homestead (grandfather of C. H. Kirkland); Ralph and John, who went to Clinton, N. Y.; Jabez, who moved to Whitesboro', N. Y.; Mary (Mrs. Dr. Hophni Clapp), Easthampton; Sarah, who died unmarried; Judith (Mrs. Isaac Clapp), Easthampton; Anna (Mrs. Jonathan Ware), Norwich and Conway.

Samuel Knight settled in 1768-69. Among the children were Sylvester (father of Lieut.-Gov. Knight, of Easthampton), Artemas, and Milton. Ebenezer King settled in 1765-66. He was a town officer March 11, 1766; chosen a deer-reeve May 3, 1768.

Isaac Mixer, homestead near Norwich Bridge, where Horace Taylor now lives. He came in probably 1763-64. March 11, 1766, he was chosen sealer of timber and lumber in Murray-field. Isaac Mixer, Jr., a son of the above, and his name is found among the early town officers of Murrayfield.

Ebenezer Meacham settled in 1764 or '65. He was a town officer of Murrayfield, March 11, 1766. He was a prominent man, and chosen to many places of public trust. Timothy Mann settled in 1774. Several of the same family name were here, or somewhere in old Murrayfield, as shown by the list of ratable polls, April 19, 1768.

John D. Palmer seems to have left town 1773 or 1774, as his name is not on the second assessment-roll. Zebulon Rose (or Ross) settled in 1767. John Rude, homestead north part of the town,—Norwich Hollow so called. His name first appears in Murrayfield assessment-roll, September, 1770. Elias Rude (2d) now occupies the farm. Joseph Stanton, homestead three-quarters of a mile northwest of Norwich Bridge, where O. T. Griswold now resides, or farther north, on Goss Hill. Children: Joseph (who went West), Daniel, Peleg, Asher, one daughter (died unmarried). Jabez Story; his name first appears in the assessment-roll of Murrayfield, Aug. 20, 1771. Peter Williams, name appears Sept. 14, 1769, in Murrayfield assessment-roll. Miles Washburn, settled near Norwich Centre, 1768. Jonathan Ware, east part of the town.

Wm. Miller came to this town in 1763, some years earlier than the most of the Norwich colony. His location was in the north part of the town, near the Worthington line. He spent his first night in town on a small island near the present school-house, in the "Hollow," to be safe from the prowling wolves. His children were William, Jr., settled on the homestead; Nathaniel, in town; and Mrs. Crosby.

Mr. Rhoades is supposed by some to have been the first settler, and that the date was as early as 1760. His homestead is stated to have been two miles above Pitcher's Bridge.

David Scott settled in town as early as 1767. He built the first framed house; had a hundred acres given him to build the house. It stood where H. Willard Munson now lives.

Jonathan Pitcher, an early settler, but somewhat later than the others given above, as his name is not found in the rolls of 1773-74. His homestead was not far from Knightville. The united ages of himself and wife reached two hundred years.

TAVERNS.

The old Mixer tavern at Norwich Bridge has already been mentioned. Albert Henry kept a tavern at the present place of Garry Munson, 1815 to 1820, or about that time; still earlier than that kept by Rabin Sackett. Hatch also kept one opposite the Munson place, 1825 to 1840. There was once a tavern at the present Bradley place.

PHYSICIANS.

Bisbee's history, 1876, names the following list of physicians who have practiced in this town: James Holland, Leonard Williams, Martin Phelps, Caleb H. Stickney, S. D. Brooks, Charles Holland, John H. Gilbert, William Dwight, Noah S. Bartlett, William O. Bell, Charles K. Crossett, Harlow Gamwell, J. H. Goddard, William Elder.

LAWYERS.

Asahel Wright, who graduated at Williams College in 1803, practiced law at Falley's Cross-Roads, and afterward removed to Chester Centre, where he died in 1830. Samuel Johnson practiced at Chester village (Huntington) for many years, and is described as a man of unique characteristics,—physically, mentally, professionally, and oratorically. He removed to the West. Homer Clark, Daniel Granger, A. M. Copeland, and E. H. Lathrop practiced here for short periods.

FROM THE TOWN RECORDS OF OLD MURRAYFIELD.

June 20, 1768, the warrant contained the clause: "To see if the town will vote a place or places for to meet for public worship." They first voted they would; then reconsidered, and voted the preaching should be all at the meeting-house.

Isaac Mixer was one of the committee to supply the town with preaching. Oct. 14, 1768, it was voted to have half the preaching at Reuben Walworth's or Jonathan Webber's, and the other half at Mr. John Lator's. Nov. 20, 1768, the above vote was rescinded; and "the six first Sabbaths' preaching" was voted to be held at the dwelling-house of Israel Rose (or Ross), and three Sabbaths out of seven shall be there through the year. March 21, 1769, it was voted to accept a road laid out by the selectmen, "beginning at the Northampton west line, at their road, then westerly by Mr. John Kirkland's, across the river at the ford-way by Mr. Fobes," etc.

At the Murrayfield town-meeting, March 21, 1769, Ebenezer Meacham was moderator, and he was also one of the selectmen chosen at that meeting. Caleb Fobes was made Town Treasurer; Isaac Mixer, Tythingman; David Scott, Warden; Ebenezer King, Deer-Reeve; Isaac Mixer, Surveyor of Highways; John Crow, Hog-Reeve; Isaac Mixer, Sealer of Leather; William Fobes, Fence-Viewer; and John "Kirtlin" was placed on a committee to settle with the treasurer,—the first advent of the Kirklands to public office in this section. It was "voted that town-meetings be warned by setting up copies of the warrant at Isaac Mixer's, Malcolm Henry's, and the grist-mill."

April 13, 1769, William Miller was one of the signers to a protest against the town "recovering cost of Timothy Smith." John Kirkland was moderator at that meeting. May 11, 1769, it was voted to have half the preaching at the barn of Ebenezer Webber, the other half at the meeting-house. June 19, 1769, the warrant contained the clause: "To see if the town will discover how they approve of the performance of Rev. Mr. Bascom since he has been in town." At the meeting a committee of "indifferent men" was chosen to advise about the place of preaching,—Capt. Nathan Leonard, of Worthington; Lieut. Nathaniel Kingsley, of Becket; and Deacon Benjamin Tupper, of Chesterfield. The committee reported July 9, 1769, "two-thirds of the time at the meeting-house, one-third at Mr. Isaac Mixer's, for three years next ensuing." The town had voted beforehand that they would abide by this decision, and they probably did. July 11, 1769, John Kirkland was on the committee to present to Mr. Bascom the call of the town to the ministry. The same year there is recorded a list of roads surveyed by John Kirkland.

Oct. 12, 1769, Caleb Fobes was moderator of the town-meeting that made arrangements for the ordination of Mr. Bascom. At the town-meeting held at Isaac Mixer's, "innholder," Nov. 14, 1769, John Kirkland was appointed moderator. Dec. 5, 1769, a committee was appointed to invite a council; John Kirkland was a member of this committee. Jan. 25, 1770, John Kirkland, moderator, it was voted John Kirkland eighteen shillings for making valuation. March 22, 1780, John Kirkland was chosen town clerk, and Caleb Fobes town treasurer. Two of the selectmen were David Scott and John Kirkland.

March 22, 1770, Isaac Mixer was chosen one of the two constables; James Clark and James Fairman two of the three tythingmen; William Fobes, Ebenezer Meacham, and James Clark, three of the nine surveyors of highways; Caleb Fobes, Fence-Viewer; Isaac Mixer, Sealer of Leather; John Crow, Jr., Ebenezer King, Hog-Reeves. It was voted that warrants for meetings should be posted at "Landlord Mixer's," at "Landlord Henry's," and at Wait's grist-mill.

April 2, 1770, Isaac Mixer and Caleb Fobes were two of a committee of seven to see the work done that was promised in settlement of Mr. Bascom.

Jan. 21, 1771, it was voted that John Kirkland apply to Mr. Hawley, of Northampton, and Mr. Strong, of Amherst, for advice respecting getting the unimproved lands taxed for roads and bridges. This was, however, reconsidered on the 28th. March 4, 1771, Lieut. James Clark was chosen one of the constables; Samuel Knight, Warden; Surveyors of Highways, Caleb Fobes, Ebenezer King, James Clark, David Scott, Daniel Kirkland.

March 4, 1771, Daniel Kirkland and David Crow were chosen Deer-Reeves; Isaac Mixer, Jr., Hog-Reeve and Surveyor of Lumber. April 22, 1771, it was put to vote to see if the town would build a boat to carry men and horses over the river at Landlord Mixer's; negatived. Aug. 19, 1771, it was voted in the negative not to grant any money toward helping Mr. Isaac Mixer in carrying on a lawsuit with Mr. Ebenezer Meacham, for said Isaac taking said Meacham's cart for taxes. It was voted not to do anything toward hindering the river wearing against the bank on Mr. David Scott's land, and Mr. Meacham's.

At the town-meeting held in March, 1772, John Kirkland was chosen one of the Selectmen; David Scott, a Constable; John Griswold, a Tythingman; Asa Carter and Caleb Fobes, Wardens; Daniel Kirkland and Isaac Mixer, Sealers of Leather; Capt. Ebenezer Geer, a Deer-Reeve; Lieut. James Clark, a Hog-Reeve; the latter and Samuel Knight, Fence-Viewers; Isaac Mixer, Jr., Surveyor of Lumber. The meeting adjourned to Isaac Mixer's for March 6th, and then to the 25th. David Scott was on a committee to see why the constables have not collected the taxes.

July 21, 1772, it was voted that Mr. Bascom should not preach any more at the river at Mr. Mixer's. Sept. 18, 1772, it was voted not to raise any money for preaching at the east end of the town. Voted to have no part of the town-meetings at the river any more. Dec. 14, 1772, it was voted not to raise any money for preaching at the east end of the town.

With all these negatives, they voted to agree to a division, and appointed a committee to examine the matter, and named John Kirkland as a member of it.

ORGANIZATION.

The town of Murrayfield was incorporated Oct. 31, 1765, and included the territory of what afterward constituted Norwich. A few settlers soon located upon the eastern part, and in a few years they were numerous enough to ask for a separate organization. They were successful in their plan, and were incorporated as a district by the following act of the General Court, approved June 29, 1773.

John Kirkland and his neighbors, who had settled in the eastern part of Murrayfield about 1769, were from the town of Norwich, Conn., and very naturally they desired to have the old ancestral name transplanted with their families to this new plantation, so the district was called Norwich. The "District" became a town by the operation of the law of March 23, 1786.

ACT OF INCORPORATION.

"Ann. Regni Regis Tertii et Decimo Tertio.

"In Act for erecting the east part of Murrayfield, in the County of Hampshire, into a separate District by the name of Norwich: Whereas, the inhabitants of the easterly part of the town of Murrayfield, in the County of Hampshire, have made it appear to this court that they labor under great difficulties by reason of their not being a separate District; therefore, be it enacted by the Governor, Council, and House of Representatives, that the tract of land lying in the easterly part of the town of Murrayfield, described as follows, to wit: beginning at the southwest corner of Ingersoll's grant, so called, and thence extending on the west line of said grant until it comes to lot No. 1, in the second division of lots owned by John Chadler; from thence, a straight line to the southeast corner of lot No. 16; and from thence, running on the east line of said lot, and on the east lines of lots Number 15, 28, and 29, until it comes to the southwest corner of Chesterfield, be, and hereby is, erected into a separate District by the name of Norwich."

The act then further conveys all the rights, privileges, and immunities of a town, excepting the right of representation in the Legislature; this last is to be enjoyed in connection with the town of Murrayfield; also that

"The said District shall pay their proportion of all the town, County, and Province taxes already set on or granted to be raised, assessed, levied, and collected in said town as if this act had not been made; provided, nevertheless, that the inhabitants of said District shall retain and enjoy the same right and share to all the ministerial lands in said town, and the improvements and profits thereof as they would have had if this act had not been made."

Joseph Hawley, Esq., was empowered to issue his warrant to some principal inhabitant requiring him to warn the first town-meeting.

The town of Murrayfield was required to allow Norwich their proper share of all moneys already levied and collected, and Norwich was to continue to pay its fair share toward the support of all poor persons already a town charge. Further, until a new valuation should be made Norwich was to pay one-third of the province tax levied upon the united territory of Murrayfield and Norwich.

Holland's history states that the boundary lines given in the act are unintelligible. But change the word southwest to southeast before "corner of lot No. 16" (as we have done), and then suppose the act to give only the line of separation from old Murrayfield, and the difficulty seems to disappear.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING, JULY 14, 1773.

Mr. David Scott, Moderator; John Kirkland, District Clerk; John Kirkland, Caleb Fobes, David Scott, Selectmen and Assessors; Miles Washburn, Constable; David Scott, District Treasurer; William Miller, Caleb Fobes, Tythingmen; David Palmer, William Carter, Wardens; Elijah Fobes, Daniel Kirkland, Hog-Reeves; Miles Washburn, Daniel Kirkland, Peter Williams, John Rude, Surveyors of Highways; Ebenezer Meacham, William Fobes, Deer-Reeves; Samuel Fairman, William Fobes, Fence-Viewers; Isaac Miner, Jr., Surveyor of Timber and Lumber; Peter Williams, Sealer of Weights and Measures; Jonathan Ware, Sealer of Leather.

NORWICH, Aug. 12, 1773.—At a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of Norwich regularly assembled, chose Mr. Ebenezer Meacham Moderator, David Scott, John Kirkland, Ebenezer Meacham, Samuel Fairman, Samuel Knight, committee to examine the estate of the town, and our right by incorporation. Voted 30 pounds for the charge of the district the present year. Voted 10 pounds of the above sum for the support of the gospel; 10 pounds for the schools in the district; voted 15 pounds of the above sum to be paid into the treasury by the first of January next, and the other 15 pounds to be paid in by the first of May next. Voted Isaac Mixer committee-man to examine Ebenezer Meacham and Samuel Fairman's charge in going to court, and make report to the next meeting. Voted Capt. Geer, David Scott, Caleb Fobes, Samuel Fairman, Miles Washburn, committee to examine into the highway that the river damages against Mr. Meacham, and make report. Voted district meetings to be held at Mr. Fobes'; the constable to warn the meetings by setting up a copy of the warrant at Mr. Isaac Mixer's grist-mill. Voted to build a pound by John Kirkland's, provided the inhabitants build it on their own cost; Caleb Fobes and John Kirkland to be pound-keepers.

Oct. 26, 1773.—Heard the report of the committee to adjust matters with the town of Murrayfield, and voted not to comply with the report of the committee of Murrayfield. Voted further on said report, if said town of Murrayfield will pay to Norwich what they paid toward Mr. Bascom's settlement, and what we paid toward the repair of the meeting-house, or the treasurer of said town to give obligation on interest to the treasurer of Norwich, till it is paid, for the sums of the proportions above mentioned, the district consents to refer the justice of our demand respecting what was paid toward Mr. Bascom's salary from July 4, 1772, to the 20th of December following to indifferent men chosen by a committee from said town and district. Voted, in case Murrayfield don't comply with the above proposal, that a course of law shall be taken; John Kirkland, Samuel Fairman, David Scott to make this report to Murrayfield and carry the matter through according to the best advice they can obtain.

Voted to fortify the bank against Mr. Meacham's land according to the commissioners' report, Capt. Geer and Mr. Caleb Fobes to be a committee to attend to it. Voted John Kirkland £14 14s. 6d., charges going to Boston to procure the act of incorporation.

March 31, 1774.—Voted to lay out a highway for Mr. Griswold.

At the regular meeting, two weeks before, they voted three days' work on the poles for the highways, two days to be worked in May and June and one day in October. Voted £30 upon the estates, one-half to be worked out in May and June, the other half in October, the former to be estimated at 3s. per day, and the latter at 2s. per day.

Voted the district meetings to be held at Landlord Mixer's the present year, and that the constable warn the meetings by posting a copy of the warrant at Mr. Isaac Mixer's grist-mill. Voted, swine to be shut up from the first of May to the first of October. Voted the highway according to the survey taken by the selectmen from the Northampton line.

June 19, 1774.—Voted 7 shillings; 6 pence for a "treasury and Clerk book." Voted that the selectmen lay a road from the hill south of Landlord Mixer's by the river through Norwich bounds.

March 20, 1775.—Voted the road laid for Mr. John Griswold to the county road that goes by Mr. Caleb Fobes' to Northampton, with recourse to the survey bill, and also the highway by the east bank of Westfield River from the county road below Mr. Isaac Mixer's to Glass Line with reserve of Isaac Mixer to keep gates or bars, two pair only across his land, with recourse to the survey bill.

In 1776 there were several petitions for a change of town-lines. Norwich voted "to be willing to receive John Smith and others of Westhampton." "Not willing to receive a portion of Blandford." "Willing to receive Abel Partridge and others from Murrayfield."

The town of Norwich thus organized continued with nearly or quite the same territory for about eighty years. A radical change then took place. The movement began at Chester village, so called, a thriving business place, which had grown up on the line of the Boston and Albany Railroad. The people of that village were in a very peculiar condition as to town and county lines. The line between Blandford and Chester passed through one meeting-house and through a dwelling-house, so that a tenant who lived in a corner room went to Chester to vote, and the others in the house went several miles the other way, and there were other cases nearly as ludicrous and inconvenient. Local jurisdiction was badly mixed. It was pretty easy to change one's location from town to town, and even from county to county. Officers were sadly perplexed to find their "precepts" sometimes just failing, while the expected prisoner stood only a few rods or feet away. The people first endeavored to secure the erection of an entire new town. When this movement failed they then looked around for the next best thing to be attempted, and they asked to be annexed to Norwich. This was successful, receiving the assent of the people of Norwich and the authority of the Legislature.

When the annexation was effected the town became so much of a new affair that there was some reason in desiring a new name, and there was very soon a movement for that purpose. It was not immediately accomplished. There was either no great activity in the matter or considerable opposition was felt. The following notes from the town records show the steps taken both in the annexation and the change of name. The new name was finally adopted in honor of C. P. Huntington, Esq., of Northampton, the well-known and distinguished attorney, who had assisted in the preliminary movements and before the Legislature. It will be seen that he gracefully acknowledged the compliment.

RECONSTRUCTION—INCREASE OF TERRITORY.

In the warrant for a town-meeting Dec. 13, 1852, there was inserted the following clause:

"To see if the town will concur in the effort now being made by the inhabitants of Chester village residing in the towns of Chester and Blandford, to be set off from their respective towns and annexed to the town of Norwich, and pass any vote on the same."

At this meeting Aaron B. Dimock was chosen moderator, and the project received an ample consideration, and the motion to concur was passed by a large majority.

The territory was annexed, and the old town of Norwich was thus enlarged by a handsome addition upon the south, including the thriving place then known as Chester village.

The old name, Norwich, was not entirely satisfactory to the people of the annexed territory, and a movement to secure a new name commenced not long after the reconstruction of the town-lines.

In the warrant for a meeting Nov. 14, 1853, there was the following clause:

"To see if the town will petition the Legislature for a change of name, or take any action in relation to the matter, and pass any vote on the same."

On that day a committee of seven was appointed to consider the matter,—Wm. Taylor, W. Stevens, E. B. Tinker, Joseph Stanton, G. S. Lewis, Wm. Lindsey, J. B. Williams. The committee reported Nov. 22, 1853. The town first voted not to accept the report, but a motion to reconsider was carried. The question was then divided, and it was voted "to accept so much of the report as relates to the petitioning of the Legislature for a change of name." Voted to strike out the word Stanley and accept the remainder of the report. Voted to choose a committee of three to draft and forward a petition to the Legislature for a change of name. Melvin Copeland, Wm. Taylor, A. B. Dimock. Voted that the committee be instructed to fill the blank caused by striking out the name Stanley with the name Huron.

In the warrant for the March meeting of 1854 there was the clause: "To see if the town will pay to certain individuals any portion of money expended by them in procuring the annexation of a portion of Blandford and Chester;" but it does not appear from the record to have been acted upon.

In the warrant for the March meeting of 1855 there was inserted the clause, "To see if the town will accept the name of Huntington," and "To see if the town will reimburse the inhabitants of Chester village for their expenses incurred in bringing about the annexation." At the meeting it was voted not to accept the name Huntington, and to pass over the article in relation to reimbursing the inhabitants of Chester village.

At the adjourned annual meeting held March 26, 1855, M. Copeland reported the following act of the Legislature:

"COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS:

"An Act to authorize the town of Norwich to change its name.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

"SEC. 1st. The town of Norwich, in the County of Hampshire, shall take the name of Huntington.

"SEC. 2d. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1855.

"Passed to be enacted.

"DANIEL C. EDDY, Speaker.

"IN SENATE, March 6, 1855.

"Passed to be enacted.

"HENRY W. BENCHLEY, President.

"March 9, 1855.

"APPROVED. HENRY J. GARDNER.

"A true copy.

"Attest: E. W. WRIGHT, Secretary of the Commonwealth."

And the town seems to have received the report rather in silence, for the sole entry below is:

"Voted to adjourn.

LYMAN DIMOCK, Town Clerk."

The following letter from C. P. Huntington is entered in the town records:

"NORTHAMPTON, Oct. 23, 1855.

"DEAR SIR,—The multiplicity of my engagements has prevented my saying what I wished to say several days ago; and before you call your town-meeting for November I wish to offer to my namesake-town one hundred dollars, as the foundation for a public town library under the statute of 1851, if they will vote as much more as they please, or to any voluntary association of your citizens or young men, if they will associate for a library or institute, and raise as much more, with a provision for an annual subscription of a dollar or two on a share. I was hoping I might have seen you some leisure moment, and inquire whether you had anything of the kind. I can think of nothing else by which a couple of hundred dollars can so much benefit your people (especially the young), and afford so much permanent enjoyment and instruction as a library, started and kept up under good auspices and efficient management. I should be glad to render any aid I can in the selection of books, or otherwise, if the suggestion strikes favorably those interested.

"Yours, truly,

C. P. HUNTINGTON."

Upon this proposition a committee was appointed,—G. Munson, W. Stevens, Elkanah Ring, Jr., James Jones, William Henry. The committee reported favorably at the annual meeting, March 10, 1856, and in accordance therewith the town voted to accept Mr. Huntington's proposition, and appointed a committee to take the necessary steps to carry out the same,—Garry Munson, W. Stevens, E. Ring, Jr., James Jones, Wm. Henry.

At the April meeting of the same year the following votes were passed, completing in due form the establishment of the library:

Voted to establish and maintain a public Library within the town for the use of the inhabitants thereof.

Voted to appropriate for the foundation and commencement of said Library the sum of one hundred dollars.

Voted to appropriate annually for the maintenance and increase of said Library the sum of fifteen cents for each ratable poll of said town.

Voted to accept of the donation of one hundred dollars made by Charles Huntington, late of Northampton, according to the terms mentioned in his offer.

The appointment of a librarian was given to the school committee of the town, and further regulations were adopted for the safety of the books and the care of the library.

The school committee for the time being were also made virtual trustees of the library, with control in the purchase of books, their care and loaning, and the location of the library.

It was kept in a store, on the site of the present store of Myron L. Church. The store was burned about 1859, and the library was burned with it, and the valuable public institution thus came to a sudden disastrous and final end.

The first town officers chosen after the reconstruction, March 11, 1854, were A. B. Dimock, Moderator; Lyman Dimock, Town Clerk; E. B. Tinker, Edward Williams, Jabez Stanton, Selectmen; Whitman Knight, Treasurer; Rev. Townsend Walker, Dr. N. S. Bartlett, Charles M. Kirkland, School Committee; John Parks, Constable; Washington Stevens, E. B. Tinker, Edward Williams, Overseers of the Poor; G. S. Lewis, Collector (at 25 cents on the $1000); Salmon Thomas, F. H. Axtell, Homer Clark, Horace Taylor, Elias Rude, C. H. Stickney, Field-Drivers; Garry Munson, H. B. Dimock, Wm. T. Miller, Fence-Viewers; Daniel Granger, Esq., Jabez Stanton, G. S. Lewis, Whitman Knight, A. S. Rollins, Surveyors of Lumber; Seth Porter, Sealer of Leather; C. H. Stickney, E. S. Ellis, Wm. T. Miller, Joseph Stanton, Sextons; Garry Munson, H. B. Dimock, Pound-Keepers; Daniel Granger, James Jones, Jabez Stanton, George Merritt, Whitman Knight, Measurers of Wood and Bark.

The new territory received the town clerk's office, and it has ever since been kept at Chester village, or Huntington as since known.

There was something of a struggle over the location of the town-meetings. It was decided by a sharply-contested vote—115 to 70—at the March meeting of 1861 to move them to the village. To some in the northern part of the town it no doubt seemed as if Chester village had annexed the town of Norwich and captured its records and its meetings; but as the railroad village is really the business place of the town, it no doubt accommodated a large majority of the people better than before.

PLACE OF TOWN-MEETINGS.

Town-meetings have been held as follows: the place of the first one is not given. After that they were held "at the house of Mr. Caleb Fobes" and "at the dwelling-house of Mr. Isaac Mixer, innholder," and perhaps at one or two other places during the first eight years. The town-meetings were held "at the meeting-house" from April 2, 1781, to April 19, 1841, inclusive, a period of sixty years. A meeting for Aug. 9, 1841, was held "at the centre school-house." The meeting of March 1, 1842, seems to have been the first one held "at the town-house."

This house had been built pursuant to votes passed at the annual March meeting of 1841, as follows: Voted to build a town-house near Knightville. Voted that said house be 24 feet wide by 34 feet long, 12-feet posts, to be finished in a good, plain, workmanlike manner inside and out, and painted on the outside white. Voted a building committee,—A. B. Dimock, Horace Taylor, Ashley Lyman. The house cost $347.93, and the sum was taken from the United States surplus revenue belonging to the town.

A proposition was made before the house was built to change the location from the site first chosen, but does not appear to have been acted upon at any town-meeting. This "town-house" began to be called the "town-hall" in a few months.

In 1852 an effort was made to sell the town-house and build another "near Norwich Bridge," or "within two hundred rods of the meeting-house," but the town-meetings voted to "pass over" all such clauses in the warrant, or adjourned "without day."

Soon after the annexation of Chester village the meetings were changed to a hall in that place. This was hired by the town. It was burned in 1862. The present town-hall (so called) in Huntington village was built at an expense of $1500. An association of individuals paid $1000. The town appropriated $500 toward the building, and in consideration therefor have the free use of it for all town business.

SELECTMEN FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE TOWN.

1773.—John Kirkland, Caleb Fobes, David Scott.

1774.—David Scott, Samuel Knight, Samuel Fairman.

1775.—Samuel Knight, Asa Carter, James Fairman.

1776.—Jonathan Ware, Wm. Miller, Wm. Carter.

1777-79. Records appear to be lost from the old book.

1780.—Samuel Knight, Daniel Kirkland, David Scott.

1781.—John Kirkland, Esq., David Scott, Daniel Kirkland.

1782.—Samuel Fairman, Wm. Fobes, James Conyers.

1783.—Samuel Knight, Josiah Willard, Darius Webb.

1784.—Samuel Knight, Darius Webb, Wm. Fobes.

1785-86.—Samuel Knight, Wm. Fobes, Jabez Bill.

1787.—Samuel Knight, Wm. Fobes, Darius Webb.

1788.—Joseph Wight, Wm. Fobes, Silas Pomeroy.

1789.—Moses Montague, Wm. Fobes, Joseph Wight.

1790-91.—Jabez Bill, Samuel Knight, Jesse Joy.

1792.—Samuel Knight, Samuel Kirkland, Walter Fobes.

1793.—Jonathan Ware, Walter Fobes, Samuel Fairman, Samuel Kirkland, Jesse Joy.

1794.—Jonathan Ware, David Scott, Jesse Joy.

1795.—Aaron Hall, Samuel Kirkland, Lemuel Fobes.

1796.—Aaron Hall, Lemuel Fobes, Samuel Knight.

1797.—Aaron Hall, Zenas Clark, Levi Dewey.

1798.—Zenas Clark, Wm. Fobes, Samuel Kirkland.

1799.—Aaron Hall, Giles Lyman, Eliakim Sylvester.

1800.—Aaron Hall, Wm. Fobes, Samuel Warner.

1801.—Aaron Hall, Walter Fobes, Samuel Knight.

1802.—Stephen Tracy, John Ellis, Zachens Burrow.

1803.—Aaron Hall, Wm. Fobes, Elizar Talcott.

1804.—Aaron Hall, Jesse Joy, Jonathan Pitcher.

1805.—Aaron Hall, Jesse Joy, Levi Park.

1806-8.—Aaron Hall, Samuel Kirkland, Levi Park.

1809.—Aaron Hall, Stephen Munson, Sylvester Knight.

1810.—Aaron Hall, Samuel Kirkland, Jesse Joy.

1811.—Aaron Hall, Samuel Kirkland, Levi Park.

1812.—Aaron Hall, Levi Park, Martin Kirkland.

1813.—Samuel Kirkland, Samuel Knight, Titus Doolittle.

1814.—Samuel Kirkland, Samuel Knight, John W. Stanton.

1815-16.—Samuel Kirkland, Samuel Knight, Levi Park.

1817.—Martin Kirkland, Aaron Hall, Jesse Joy.

1818.—Martin Kirkland, Aaron Hall, Jabez B. Sackett.

1819-20.—Martin Kirkland, Levi Park, Joseph Stanton.

1821.—Samuel Kirkland, Joseph Stanton, Azariah Lyman.

1822.—Samuel Kirkland, Joseph Stanton, Levi Park.

1823.—Samuel Kirkland, Erastus Knight, J. B. Sackett.

1824.—Samuel Kirkland, Joseph Stanton, Silas Warner.

1825-26.—Joseph Stanton, Samuel Knight, Oliver Clark.

1827.—Samuel Knight, Francis Harwood, Daniel Axtell.

1828-29.—Francis Harwood, Daniel Munson, Amzi Allen.

1830.—Francis Harwood, Daniel Munson, Augustus Clapp.

1831-32.—Augustus Clapp, Abner Sampson, Elisha Leffingwell.

1833.—Joseph Stanton, Horace Taylor, Horace B. Dimock.

1834.—Horace Taylor, Francis Harwood, Silas Warner.

1835.—Horace Taylor, Abner Sampson, Samuel M. Kirkland.

1836.—Horace Taylor, Aaron B. Dimock, Harmon Stanton.

1837.—Aaron B. Dimock, Harmon Stanton, Washington Stephens.

1838.—Aaron B. Dimock, Daniel Sanford, Lyman Dimock.

1839.—Abner Sampson, Washington Stephens, Salmon Thomas, Jr.

1840.—Washington Stephens, Seth Porter, Dearborn Randall.

1841.—Daniel Sanford, Seth Porter, Joseph Kirkland.

1842.—Joseph Stanton, Dearborn Randall, James H. Williams.

1843.—Joseph Stanton, Dearborn Randall, Washington Stevens.

1844.—Francis Harwood, William Taylor, Samuel S. Stowell.

1845.—William Taylor, Garry Munson, Ashley Lyman.

1846.—A. B. Dimock, Garry Munson, Ashley Lyman.

1847.—William Taylor, Daniel Sanford, Harmon Stanton.

1848.—Daniel Sanford, Mortimer L. Higgins, Harmon Stanton.

1849.—Daniel Sanford, Samuel S. Stowell, Ashley Lyman.

1850.—Daniel Sanford, Henry Stanton, Samuel S. Stowell.

1851.—Harmon Stanton, Seth Porter, E. B. Tinker.

1852.—A. B. Dimock, E. N. Woods, Henry Stanton.

1853.—E. N. Woods, Washington Stevens, E. B. Tinker.

1854.—E. B. Tinker, Edward Williams, Jabez Stanton.

1855.—Washington Stevens, Edward Williams, Melvin Copeland.

1856.—Washington Stevens, John Park, James Jones.

1857.—Garry Munson, Eli L. Edwards, S. S. Stowell.

1858-60.—John Parks, C. H. Kirkland, Moses M. Lyman.

1861-62.—C. H. Kirkland, G. S. Lewis, Wm. P. Miller.

1863.—Daniel Fry, Jairus J. Lyman, E. B. Tinker.

1864.—John Parks, Charles H. Kirkland, Jairus J. Lyman.

1865.—John Parks, Benjamin R. Coit, Ashley Lyman.

1866-67.—John Parks, Benjamin R. Coit, Wm. A. Little.

1868.—E. V. Lilly, C. A. Dewey, N. M. Merritt.

1869.—G. Munson, E. V. Lilly, Dexter Lyman.

1870.—E. N. Woods, B. R. Coit, H. Heath.

1871.—E. N. Woods, Wm. P. Miller, Henry Heath.

1872.—E. N. Woods, Wm. P. Miller, Wellington Sheldon.

1873.—E. N. Woods, Wm. P. Miller, Wm. S. Gibson.

1874-75.—E. N. Woods, Wm. P. Miller, John Parks.

1876.—E. N. Woods, A. S. Sylvester, David Smith.

1877.—E. N. Woods, Wm. P. Miller, John Parks.

1878.—E. N. Woods, Benjamin R. Coit, E. D. Rude.

TOWN CLERKS.

John Kirkland, 1773-76; records lost four years; Wm. Fobes, 1780; Samuel Knight, 1781-92, died in office; Aaron Hall, 1792-97; Titus Pomeroy, 1798-99; Eliakin Sylvester, 1800; Rodolphus Knight, 1801-5; Samuel Knight, 1806-12; Wm. Hooker, Jr., 1813-15; Artemas Knight, 1816-20; Richardson Hall, 1821-26; George Dunlap, 1827-30; Aaron Dimock, 1831-35; Oliver Clark, Jr., 1836-37; Nathan Harwood, 1838-41; Henry Stanton, 1842; H. D. Knight, 1843-44; Henry Stanton, 1845-49; Edward Williams, 1850-53; Lyman Dimock, 1854; Daniel Granger, 1855-56; E. N. Woods, 1857; Alfred M. Copeland, 1858; A. J. Stanton, 1859-62; E. N. Woods, 1863-65; Wm. S. Tinker, 1866-79.

REPRESENTATIVES TO THE GENERAL COURT.

Ebenezer Meacham, 1774; David Scott, 1777; John Kirkland, 1779-83; Jonathan Ware, 1785; David Scott, 1788; Aaron Hall, 1805-12; Jesse Joy, 1813-16; Aaron Hall, 1817; Samuel Kirkland, 1823-29; Joseph Stanton, 1830-32; Silas Warner, 1833; Aaron B. Dimock, 1834; Augustus Clapp, 1835; Horace Taylor, 1836-37; Joseph Stanton, 1838; Aaron B. Dimock, 1840; Lyman Dimock, 1841; Francis Harwood, 1842; Garry Munson, 1844; Ebenezer B. Wright, 1849; Salmon Parsons, 1850; Wm. Taylor, 1851; Henry Stanton, 1852; Thomas Ring, 1855; Charles H. Kirkland, 1860-64; Edward H. Lathrop, 1868; Elijah N. Woods, 1873.

Those who think the exemption of United States bonds from taxation a modern affair, and suppose it due to the action of Congress during the civil war, will be reminded that it is a question far older than that by reading in the town records of Norwich that in 1848 a clause was inserted in the warrant for a town-meeting:

"To see if the town will petition the Legislature to invoke the attention of Congress upon the injustice of a law whereby United States stocks are exempted from taxation in the hands of their owners in the several States."

There must have been "bloated bondholders" somebody was "going for" in Norwich at that time.

VILLAGES—SPECIAL OR LOCAL NAMES.

NORWICH HILL

is the name by which the old business point in the town was known in the early times, and it bears the same designation yet. It is rather divided into two portions: the northern part, where are mills, shops, school-house, and the post-office; the southern part, where is located the Congregational meeting-house, a school-house, and a few dwelling-houses. Together, this is the "Norwich" of old times,—the residence of the Kirklands, the Knights, the Hannums, and, not far away, the Fairmans, Fobes, and others, of 1773.

NORWICH HOLLOW.

This is an old name not belonging to any village, but applied to the valley in the north part of the town, and the central, as distinguished from the "Hill." It included the homesteads of those early settlers, Rude and Miller and Pitcher. From the latter comes the name "Pitcher's Bridge," an old and familiar term in this section of country.

KNIGHTVILLE

lies a little northwest of "Norwich Hill," in the valley of the east branch. Whatever there is of the village grew up around the shops and mills, and the improvement of the water-power generally. Its name, of course, is derived from the Knight family in the town.

NORWICH BRIDGE

is an old point in the history of the town. Here were located the inn and the grist-mill of Isaac Mixer. The early town-meetings were warned by posting the warrant at Mixer's grist-mill. Here was the preaching-place of Rev. Mr. Bascom, of Murrayfield, before the organization of Norwich. Here boarded the first minister, Mr. Butler, preaching in Norwich.

HUNTINGTON (FORMERLY CHESTER VILLAGE).

This, with its surrounding hills, constitutes the territory annexed to Norwich in 1853, and is so much a specimen of civil mosaic work—a gathering together of town fragments—that its history is difficult to trace. It was originally known as Falley's X-roads. It was on the old stage-route,—Boston and Albany, via Springfield. It was very nearly at the intersection of the lines of four towns,—Montgomery, Blandford, Chester, Norwich. When the Boston and Albany Railroad had finally wound its devious pathway up the valley of the Westfield River, this was known as Chester village, the point of the station being within the lines of that town; and the village seven miles west was known as Chester Factories. After the reconstruction of 1853-55, the name was changed to Huntington to correspond with that of the town, while the village west became simply Chester. These three successive names have also applied to the post-office, the latter having been established early in this century. At first the mail was only twice a week each way, and a little later three times a week. There was also a mail-route at one time from Northampton to Falley's Cross-Roads, by way of Norwich Hill. The citizens north hope to re-establish that old line daily at the next letting of contracts.

Daniel Falley and Richard Falley came in some time before 1800, and opened a tavern and a store, about on the site of the present hotel. One of them lived near where Pease store now stands. Daniel moved to New York State 1801 to 1805, or near that time.

The Falley tavern passed to Collins about 1807, and the latter kept it for many years. Near the Baptist meeting-house was the tavern of Wm. Lindsey.

In Huntington village, at the present time, is the plane-factory of George M. Lindsey. The other mills and improvement of water-power are spoken of elsewhere.

The store opened by the Faleys was continued by Daniel Collins. The Dwights, of Springfield, opened a store under the management of Wm. Wade. His widow and sons continued it for some time. Following the Wades were several proprietors,—Augustus Jessup, Dimock & Hannum, Pomeroy, Dewey, Pease & Sloan. The Collins store was continued by J. B. Williams, and in later years by L. B. Williams.

Day carried on the hat business opposite the Esquire Wade place. Elijah Rice was a blacksmith early in this century. Mr. Williams, from whom we obtain many of these items, remembers Rice shoeing horses all one Sunday for the army, in the war of 1812. Ebenezer Williams was an early shoemaker; shop where the Congregational Church now stands, after that opposite Daniels' factory. Peter Whitney was an early tailor.

In the later years of Huntington village the name of Melvin Copeland has been identified with every public interest. He came to this place from Hartford in 1842. He was from a family recognized for nearly two hundred years for their great probity, moral worth, and intellectual power. Mr. Copeland's influence in Huntington contributed largely to the social and moral elevation of the community. He enjoyed the confidence of the people in a high degree, and was elected to many prominent offices. He was county commissioner for three years, and a magistrate during nearly his whole residence in Huntington. He died in 1866, aged sixty-nine years.

There is now a thriving trade at Huntington village. The place took its most important advance from the opening of the railroad, that made this the business centre for quite a large section of country.

The Bolton Grant, so called, of early times, covered the present site of Huntington village, and his house stood a little north of the present station.

The first postmaster was Daniel Falley. He was succeeded by Charles Collins, Lewis Collins, Daniel Collins, Jr., Israel D. Clark. The name was then changed to Chester village, and the postmasters were Lyman Dimock and Jabin B. Williams. The office was then named Huntington, and the postmasters since have been Lucien B. Williams, Samuel T. Lyman, and Edward Pease. The last named is the present incumbent.

SCHOOLS.

At the first town-meeting following that of the organization, £10 were voted for the support of schools. The vote was reconsidered Oct. 26, 1773, of the same year, and only £4 allowed. March 31, 1774, voted £8 for the support of schools, a vote for £17 pounds the 14th of March having been reconsidered. April 3, 1776, the following school districts were arranged:

One "beginning Northeasterly corner of Welker's Grant; thence running on the North line of said grant to Murrayfield line; thence on said Murrayfield line to the South line of Deacon Sparge's grant, exclusive of Capt. Ebenezer Geer and Mr. Elijah Geer, to Southampton line; thence on Southampton and Northampton line till parallel with the first-mentioned bound; and thence to the said first-mentioned bounds, including arael aerd and holbard and Mr. John Griswold."

We copy that last clause verbatim et literatim.

Another district (it is not the same) is said to consist of David Palmer, Nathaniel Ormsby, Moses Cook, Samuel Fairman, Jonathan Ware, Solomon Blair, Samuel Wood, with a committee of John Kirkland and Samuel Knight. Another, "Mr. James Fairman's district includes Capt. Geer and Elijah Geer, and south to Mr. Washburn's, and 'perrelel' across the town, bounding north on the hill district." Another, "Mr. William Carter's district bounds north on Mr. Fairman's district, and enclosing all to the south end of the town." Another, Deacon Miller's district from the north of the hill district to the north bounds of the town.

These four names stand in the record as if constituting another district, or else are the inhabitants in the last mentioned above, or finally are a committee that reported the above plan,—Mr. Carter, John Kirkland, James Fairman, David Scott.

September, 1782, five school districts were arranged. About £20 were usually voted for schools for some years. In 1790, £30 were voted; in 1792, £45 were voted.

The modern school system dates from the enactment of the law of March 4, 1826. Norwich chose the first school committee under that law at the March meeting of 1827,—Rev. B. R. Woodbridge, Silas Warner, George Dunlap, Erastus Knight, and Joseph Stanton. At this time, and generally from 1800 down, there was usually voted $300 for the support of schools.

The law was rather inoperative until 1829, when it was amended and made more effective.

After the annexation of Chester village, a rearrangement of districts took place. The subject having been referred to a committee, of which E. B. Tinker was chairman, his report dividing the town into seven school districts was adopted at the March meeting of 1854. The same year the school committee made a sweeping attack upon the school-houses of the town in their annual report. We extract the following sharp passage:

"While men are making their dwellings more pleasant, comfortable, and healthy, improving their farms, making their land more productive, the barns for their cattle and horses more neat and commodious, their hen-roosts more tasty and elegant, and bestowing much labor and care upon their hog-houses and barn-yards, there is one thing which seems to be totally disregarded and left out of this list of improvements, and this slighted and uncared-for thing goes by the name of school-house. Instead of our school-houses being made better, we are compelled to say that they rather grow worse. Just step into one of them some cold day, and there you will find a climate embracing that of every zone. Scholars whose seats are at a certain distance from the stove are blessed with the delightful temperature of the temperate zones; others situated nearer the stove are suffering all the intolerance of the torrid clime; while those more remote are undergoing all the severities of the frigid zone.

"Several of our school buildings are so shabby, antiquated, and dilapidated that they are good for nothing save as curious relics of dark ages, and should be preserved only as such. We might give a history of our life during the months spent in four of them, and tell of being roasted in one, frozen in another, smoked in a third, and sickened in the impure air of a fourth.

(Signed)

"E. B. WRIGHT.

"W. TAYLOR.

"S. S. STOWELL."

The appropriation for schools was made $600 this year, instead of $400 as in 1852 and 1853, due perhaps to the eloquence of the school committee.

The quarter of a century following this date has seen a marked change for the better in the town, as the several schoolhouses are now in at least a fair condition. Very liberal sums have been voted in some subsequent years, occasionally rising to $1500 and $1600. For 1878 the sum of $1300 was voted.

To this notice of the schools it is appropriate to add a list of the graduates who have gone out from this town, as well as others who have entered the various professions without completing a full course at college: Edward Kirkland, graduated at Amherst College in 1831; entered the profession of law; settled at Brattleboro', and died there Jan. 6, 1866. Henry B. Taylor, Williams College; entered the ministry. Henry B. Lewis, Amherst College; his health failing, he left without graduating; afterward studied law, and settled at Westfield. Homer B. Stevens, Williams College in 1857; became a lawyer, and settled at Westfield. Alfred J. Taylor, Yale College, 1859; entered the profession of law, and settled in New York City. Alfred M. Copeland became a lawyer, and settled in Springfield. Myron A. Munson, Harvard University, 1860; entered the ministry. Harvey Porter, Amherst College, 1870; now a professor in the Protestant College, Beirut, Syria. Oscar D. Thomas, Newton Theological Seminary; entered the ministry, settled at West Springfield. Asahel H. Lyman, Amherst Agricultural College. Others who have gone into the medical profession from this town are Luke Stanton, Alden Samson, Edward Ellis, Horatio G. Stickney, Charles D. Stickney, Theodore G. Wright, Ellsworth S. Ellis, Harlow Fisk. Many others have filled important public positions for many years, as Harvey Kirkland, long-time register of deeds at Northampton. From the families of Falley, Collins, Munson, and Kirkland have gone out men who have become prominent in business of various kinds.

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

January, 1837.—Eight schools; attending in the summer, 99; average, 80; winter, 150; average, 125; in town, between 4 and 16, 180; summer schools, 25 months; winter, 21 months; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 5 males, 2 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $18.60; female, $8.77.

January, 1847.—Eight schools; attending in summer, 172; average, 128; winter, 198; average, 143; in town, between 4 and 16, 197; attending under 4, 10; over 16, 15; summer schools, 25 months, 14 days; winter, 23 months; total, 48 months, 14 days; summer teachers, 7 females; winter, 5 males, 2 females; average wages of male teachers per month, $17.40; female, $10.11.

January, 1857.—Nine schools; attending in summer, 258; average, 197; winter, 264; average, 213; attending under 5, 10; over 15, 12; in town, between 5 and 15, 260; summer teachers, 9 females; winter, 2 males, 7 females; summer schools, 26 months, 2 days; winter, 24 months, 3 days; total, 50 months, 5 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $25; female, $15.36.

January, 1867.—Eight schools; attending in the summer, 221; average, 179; winter, 219; average, 174; attending under 5, 13; over 15, 36; in town, between 5 and 15, 238; summer teachers, 9 females; winter, 2 males, 7 females; summer schools, 29 months, 15 days; winter, 24 months, 10 days; average wages of male teachers per month, $30.13; female, $23.22.

January, 1878.—Seven schools; repairs, $21.08; attending, 221; average, 139; under 5, 4; over 15, 15; in town, between 5 and 15, 194; teachers, females, 9; from normal school, 2; school, 56 months; average wages of female teachers per month, $28.04; taxation, $1600; expense of superintendence, $124.25; printing, $21.30; income of local funds and dog tax, $78.46; 1 private school; 19 scholars; tuition, $104.83; town's share of school fund, $229.48.

CHURCHES.

Rev. Aaron Bascom was settled as the first minister of Murrayfield in 1769. The inhabitants of that part of the town which was afterward formed into Norwich District were, of course, required to pay their share of the expenses. They insisted that preaching should be held among them a part of the time. This was granted after some discussion, and perhaps dissension. Mr. Bascom preached one-third of the time for about three years at the inn of Isaac Mixer, near Norwich Bridge. The arrangement was not satisfactory, however, and the desire for a separate church and for the full service of a settled pastor undoubtedly had considerable influence in leading the people to petition for a special civil organization. This having been obtained, immediate steps were taken to provide for the support of the gospel in the new district.

Rev. Mr. Butler preached in Norwich for some months, but was not settled. This was in 1773 and 1774. Others were employed, but their names do not appear in the town-book. The records for 1777-79 are also missing, and the next name appearing is that of the first settled pastor.

The following notes from the records show the above facts, and also bring out many interesting particulars as to names, dates, and places :

Aug. 12, 1773.—Voted the preaching to be held on the Sabbath at John Kirkland's, Caleb Fobes', and Ebenezer King's. Voted 3d Sabbath at Mr. Fobes', 2d at Mr. Kirkland's, and 1st at Mr. King's.

Nov. 23, 1773.—Voted to give Mr. Zebulon Butler a call to preach on probation for a season.

Nov. 29th.—Appointed Isaac Mixer, Caleb Fobes, David Scott to treat with Mr. Butler, "and in case Mr. Butler don't tarry with us," to provide preaching any way for the money subscribed.

March 31, 1774.—Voted that the selectmen shall introduce and obtain occasional preaching as they have opportunity till the District meeting. Voted 2 dollars to Landlord Mixer for keeping Mr. Butler the year past. Voted that the selectmen shall provide a place or places for whatever ministers we shall have to preach with us to board, and bring in an account for the same.

June 9, 1774.—Voted 20 pounds for the support of preaching the present year. Voted Landlord King, David Crow, Isaac Mixer, Caleb Fobes, and Deacon Miller a committee to proportion the preaching to three several places, viz., at the house of Caleb Fobes, Ebenezer King, John Kirkland, "according to the estates and polls for the expending the above sum." Ministerial committee instructed to dismiss a minister "if ten men that are proper inhabitants make a sufficient objection against him, and try another." Voted 2 pounds 19 shillings 3 pence to settle with Mr. Butler for preaching last spring.

NORWICH, Jan. 3, 1775.—Considering the broken state of government, and the public distresses, we are still desirous of enjoying the gospel, and for the subscribers to appoint the place for preaching, and the persons to preach, and set a time for paying the subscription. In witness whereof we have set our hands. The time of payment is ten months from date. Caleb Fobes, £1 10s.; David Palmer, 15s.; Isaac Williams, £1; John Kirkland, £2; Wm. Carter, 10s.; David Scott, £1 10s.; Samuel Fairman, £1 4s.; Daniel Kirkland, £1; Jonathan Ware, £1; David Crow, 8s.; Zebulon Ross, 15s.; John Griswold, —; James Fairman, 12s.

March 6, 1781.—Voted to accept of Mr. Stephen Tracy's answer. Voted that Wednesday, the 23d day of May next, be appointed for the installation. Voted a committee of five to make the necessary arrangements,—John Kirkland, David Scott, Jonathan Ware, Caleb Fobes, Samuel Fairman.

This vote was reconsidered, and the third Wednesday of March agreed upon.

March 19, 1781, the town-meetings were voted to be held at the meeting-house. It must have been finished, so far as to be occupied, about this time. The first town-meeting being held there April 2, 1781, religious meetings no doubt commenced there about the same time. The question of a new meeting-house was agitated somewhat in 1782, it seems, from the appointment of a committee to look up a place. This was December 4th, and the same day the procuring of Mr. Tracy's firewood was struck off to William Fobes at £3 8s. A dwelling-house was built for Mr. Tracy in the fall of 1783.

The first log house stood near the poplar-tree, a few rods east of it. The first church edifice, erected in 1780-81, as above shown, was on the hill, on the present site of the First Congregational Society. It was located near where the school-house now stands, and is described by a recent writer as "A one-story building, rudely constructed, unsightly in exterior, and uncomfortable within; the adornments of modern times were wanting, but it answered for purposes of devotion; the prayers and praises there were as acceptable to God as though offered within marble walls beneath a gilded spire."

The site of this house was not satisfactory to all, and an early effort was made for a new house in a new place. This was only two years after the erection of the first.

A second house was finally built in 1790. It was the occasion of many meetings, much discussion, and no doubt considerable irritation. It was at last located where the present one stands, and, as a compromise, some of the most disaffected were relieved from their proportionate share of the expense.

"The building erected was a plain, two-story edifice, without any steeple; a porch on one side formed the entrance below, with a stairway for the gallery; the pulpit was on the side opposite the entrance; over the pulpit was suspended a large sounding-board; galleries were on three sides, with seats for the singers in front and pews in the rear for the young people. The pews on both floors were square pens with seats on at least three sides; no man claimed to own a pew; the people were annually seated by the selectmen of the town. It was used in the coldest weather without any heating apparatus except the foot-stoves of a few old ladies; these were sometimes passed around the pew for the benefit of all its occupants. The knocking of men's boots together to keep the feet warm often made considerable clattering."

This second house stood about fifty years, and was the place where the older people of the present time went to meeting in their childhood. The third house, and the one in present use, was built in 1841, and dedicated Feb. 10, 1842, the sermon being preached by Rev. E. Davis, of Westfield. It is in modern style, with steeple without and suitable means of heating within. The congregation, with good judgment, have deemed it better to keep this in repair with due economy than to imitate more ambitious places and build a house "with all the modern improvements," including a mortgage.

The church was organized in July, 1778, composed (as stated in Bisbee's history of Huntington) of the following persons: "William Miller and Elizabeth, his wife; Samuel Knight and Betsey, his wife; Thomas Converse and his wife; John Kirkland, Samuel Warner, Joseph Parks, Jonathan Ware, John Griswold, Edward Bancroft, and others whose names are not preserved." This was the "Congregational Church of Norwich," changed in later years to the "First Congregational Church of Huntington," in accordance with the new name of the town. The first deacons chosen were John Kirkland and Jonathan Ware.

Record of Ministers.—1st. Rev. Stephen Tracy, installed May 23, 1784; dismissed Jan. 1, 1799; resided in town for some years after his dismission. 2d. Benjamin R. Woodbridge, installed Oct. 17, 1799; his pastorate continued more than thirty years; he resigned June 28, 1831, and removed to South Hadley. 3d. Rev. Samuel Russell, settled Sept. 3, 1832; dismissed Jan. 1, 1835, and died on the 27th of the same month. 4th. Rev. Alvah C. Page, settled Jan. 1, 1835; dismissed July 20, 1836. Temporary supplies, Rev. Vinson Gould, Rev. Sereno D. Clapp, Rev. Mr. Pomeroy. 5th. Rev. Ebenezer B. Wright, settled Feb. 20, 1842; dismissed May, 1848; afterward chaplain of the State Almshouse, in Monson; he returned to Huntington, and died Aug. 19, 1871. 6th. Rev. John R. Miller, installed May, 1848; dismissed Dec. 19, 1853; died at Williamsburg, Nov. 2, 1869. 7th. Rev. John H. M. Leland, settled June 15, 1854; dismissed Nov. 13, 1855; has since resided in Amherst. 8th. Rev. Henry A. Austin, ordained and installed Nov. 6, 1856; dismissed July 20, 1859. The subsequent ministers, employed for short periods as stated supplies, have been Rev. Edward Clarke, Rev. Wm. E. B. Moore, Rev. F. Hawley, Rev. E. S. Tingley, Rev. C. W. Fifield.

The pulpit is now supplied (1879) in an acceptable manner by Wm. D. Clapp, of Northampton, who has for some years been engaged in active Christian labors, as well as actual pastoral work, though not ordained.

UNION RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS AT HUNTINGTON VILLAGE.

In the early times there were but few settlers at or near this point, and it is said that from 1810 to 1815 there was not a professor of religion among the men living at Falley's Cross-Roads. There were, however, three women who could not rest with this state of things existing. They were Mrs. Dr. Williams, Mrs. Daniel Collins, and Mrs. Wm. Wade. One of them was a member of the Baptist Church, another of the Methodist, and a third of the Congregational. In the period from 1818 to 1820 these three women held meetings at the school-house. They had some assistance from younger ladies in the district, and occasionally some help from abroad, but the three were the pioneers who, with prayer and active labor, laid the foundation of all subsequent religious work at this village. Under their efforts the old district school-house was often crowded full, with larger audiences than perhaps either of the churches here now secures.

In 1821, Miss Barnes, of Boston, came into this part of the State, working as an evangelist, holding meetings and assisting churches in revival work. She came upon invitation to this place, and remained during the winter of 1821-22. A great revival work took place. Several leading business-men experienced religion. The women no longer stood alone. They had sown in weakness and tears, but the glad harvest hour had come. Older citizens still recall one meeting of peculiar interest, when the somewhat eccentric lawyer alluded to elsewhere arose and, with a trembling voice, told of his previous skepticism, and of the great change that had now taken place in his feelings.

After this for a year or two Rev. Giles Dayton, of Russell, a Methodist, but not fully recognized by that church as an adhering minister, preached in the school-house regularly, and conducted the meetings. After this the Methodist Conference sent their regular circuit ministers here for a few years, and a class and church were formed of that denomination. The movement was, however, promptly supported by families of other sentiments. The chief work throughout these and subsequent changes was of a strong union character. All denominational preferences were held to be of no consequence compared to the establishment of religious meetings somehow and by somebody, the preaching of the gospel, and the reformation of the community. A movement to build a meeting-house soon followed, and the union house (now known as the Baptist Church) was erected about 1836. Each denomination was to have the use of the house in proportion to the amount contributed to build and support the movement. Not long after the building of the house, the families of Baptist sentiments became largely reduced in numbers by death and removal, and they ceased to claim their share of the time. The movement was then continued by the Methodists and the Congregationalists. Rev. Cyrus Culver, who had spent his life as a Methodist minister, settled here in the later years of his life, and preached for this congregation, and the Methodist Conference ceased its oversight of this appointment.

This union movement now described really includes what there is of Methodist Church history at Huntington village. The circuit ministers who were here from time to time are stated as Messrs. Moulton, Robbins, McLauth, Father Taylor, Wm. Taylor, Wm. A. Braman, Rice Clark, Dayton, Marcy, and Cook. The meeting-house above mentioned was on the town-line, a portion of the building being in Blandford until the territory was annexed to Norwich, in 1853.

About 1840, Melvin Copeland came here from Hartford and entered upon extensive business. His arrival, and that of others, together with families of Congregational sentiments within a mile or two around, seemed to indicate the propriety of establishing a church of that faith. It was not done immediately, all still uniting in the general work under Rev. Mr. Culver. About this time families of Methodists removed, and there were several died, until that denomination pretty nearly ceased to claim the use of the house.

A Congregational society, preliminary to the formation of a church, was organized Jan. 12, 1846, and, to avoid all entangling questions which might arise, it was proposed to build a new house for themselves, and relinquish to others the union house free. This was done, except perhaps certain pew-rights were sold by individuals afterward. To conclude this notice of the union movement, it is proper to add that when, a few years later, the number of Baptists in the place rendered it desirable to organize a church, they came regularly into possession of this house of worship through the old pew-rights held by Baptists through others, surrendered or donated to them, and through the purchase of some by individual members. It is still a neat and convenient building, kept in repair, and wisely retained, rather than to attempt the building of a more costly edifice at the risk of debt and embarrassment.

SECOND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF HUNTINGTON (AS NOW KNOWN).

This church was organized Aug. 26, 1846. The members received that day were the following: from the church in Norwich, Lyman Dimock, Mrs. Catherine Dimock, Caleb W. Hannum, Mrs. Minerva Hannum, Harvey Hannum, Widow Hepzibah Hannum, Francis Harwood, Mrs. Mary Harwood, Milton Knight, Mrs. Caroline Knight, Daniel Ludden, Miss Lucy Steele, Garry Munson, Mrs. Harriet Munson; from the Fourth Church in Hartford, Mrs. Mary G. Barber; from the First Church in Hartford, Melvin Copeland, Mrs. Lucinda Copeland, Miss Maria L. Lindsey; from the church in Montgomery, Edward M. Taylor, Miss Julia Taylor, Mrs. Dolly Taylor; from the church in Castleton, Vt., Mrs. Araminta D. Ludden; from the church in Chester, Widow Elizabeth Munson; from the church in Southampton, Mrs. Eliza Ann Phelps; from the church in Becket, Mrs. Lydia W. Williams; admitted by profession, Mrs. Laura M. Hannum, Widow Emeline Lindsey; place not designated in the record, Edward Taylor,—28.

At the council there were present the following ministers: Emerson Davis, Ebenezer B. Wright, John H. Bisbee, Edward Clark, Francis Warriner.

The first house of worship was erected in pursuance of the action of the society at a meeting held Nov. 18, 1847. They voted then to raise $2500 for that purpose. They were more successful than was expected, and raised finally about $4000. The house was built the next year and dedicated the first Wednesday in January, 1849.

The society met with a serious loss by the burning of this edifice at the fire of Jan. 12, 1863, which destroyed the old town-hall and the school-house. A vote to erect a new one was passed within twelve days after the fire, and the present large and convenient house was completed the same year, costing about $7000. A fine chapel was erected in 1869, at an expense of $2000. Of this sum $1500 was the gift of Miss Julia Taylor.

As an evidence of the harmony existing in the community and the liberal views of those who founded this church, it is stated that the minister appointed to address the congregation at the organization was specially requested to be careful and not say anything which would in the least reflect unfavorably upon any other denomination, or imply any hostility or antagonism to any branch of the household of faith.

There have been several seasons of special revival work in the history of this church. Among these may be mentioned the year 1850, when 14 new members were received by profession; 1858, when 8 were added; 1865-66, when 12 united; 1870-71, when 18 were received; and 1876, when quite a number united by profession.

A Sunday-school was begun immediately upon the organization of the church, and has been continued to the present time. It has a library of 300 volumes, and the superintendent the present year (1879) is David Smith.

Record of the Ministers.—1st. Rev. Perkins K. Clark, ordained as an evangelist by the same council which constituted the church, and labored here for several years, preaching also during the same period a part of the time at Chester. His services here closed early in 1853. 2d. Rev. Mr. Eggleston, for several months. 3d. Rev. Townsend Walker, installed Dec. 27, 1853. His health failing, he was dismissed, Aug. 2, 1865. He died at Goshen, July 31, 1873. 4th. Rev. James A. Bates. He was a returned missionary, and preached in Huntington one year. 5th. Rev. John H. Bisbee, installed April 10, 1867. Labors here closed May 1, 1877. He resides now at Westfield. 6th. Rev. Henry A. Dickinson. He had labored previously at Chester Centre for ten years. His labors commenced with the church at Huntington, Nov. 1, 1877, and he is the present stated supply of the church (1879).

Record of the Deacons.—Melvin Copeland, chosen Sept. 28, 1846; died April 5, 1866. Edward M. Taylor, chosen Sept. 28, 1846; removed to Michigan. Garry Munson, chosen Feb. 4, 1856; still in office (1879). E. N. Woods, chosen Nov. 26, 1866; died June, 1878. S. T. Lyman, chosen Nov. 26, 1866; moved to Holyoke in 1875. W. S. Tinker, chosen April 1, 1877; one of the present deacons of the church. Samuel S. Stowell, chosen March 3, 1877; one of the present deacons. The present clerk is John J. Cook.

Additional Items.—Of the original 28 members only two united by profession; the rest by letters from other churches. In 1850, 14 were added after a few weeks of special religious interest; in 1858, 8; in 1865-66, 12; in 1870-71, 18; and in 1876 several united.

Miss Julia Taylor, who donated largely toward the building of the chapel, died March 13, 1870. She was a lady of devoted Christian character, full of good deeds, but modest and unassuming. Were she living, the historian would hardly be permitted to record even the fact of the donation. Her name will be long cherished with affectionate gratitude by this church and community.

BAPTIST CHURCH OF HUNTINGTON.

In addition to what has been given in the account of the union religious movement, we add the following account from Rev. Mr. Bisbee's Historical Address, a sketch expected from the pastor of the church not having been received. A Baptist Church was gathered in what is now Huntington village in 1852. It was composed of members from different localities, especially from the church previously existing in Chester. At a meeting held for the purpose the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That we, John Green, Joseph Stanton, Leartus Porter, Eli F. Cady, Sarah P. Clark, and Laura Porter, after prayerful deliberation, and relying on the great Head of the Church for divine wisdom and support, do now this seventh day of October, A.D. 1852, in the fear of God declare ourselves a visible Baptist Church in the faith and fellowship of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in Chester village, Mass."

In November of the same year, Rev. John Green was invited to become their minister; the invitation was accepted. Joseph Stanton, who had for many years served as deacon in the church of Chester, was elected to the same office in the new organization; this office he held until his death, which occurred in March, 1870. In 1855 it was voted that this be called the Huntington Baptist Church. Between 1854 and 1864 several preachers were employed; among these were Rev. Mr. Goodwin, Allard, Wheeler, and Hopwood.

Rev. Horatio L. Sargent was called to the pastorate Dec. 26, 1864; he continued his active labors until May 6, 1866, when, on account of failing health, he was, by vote of the church, kindly released; a few weeks after this he died, universally beloved and lamented by his church and congregation. He was succeeded by Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, who commenced his labors in August of the same year; he was a native of Wales, in Massachusetts, a graduate of Brown University and of the Theological Seminary at Rochester, N. Y. He resigned his pastorate in 1867, and is at present settled over a church in Lowell, Mass. The next pastor was Rev. E. A. Goddard; he was a native of Boston, and was educated at Harvard University; he was first settled in Stamford, Vt., from whence he came to this place; he closed his labors here in 1873. Since that he has been settled in Palmer. He was succeeded, for little more than a year, by Rev. Daniel Rogers, who was educated at Madison University; he is now laboring as a missionary in the Indian Territory. Rev. S. D. Ashley next received and accepted a call, and commenced his labors June 1, 1875; he is the present pastor of the church. The present membership in this church is 100. The church have the old union meeting-house as their place of worship.

CATHOLIC CHURCH OF HUNTINGTON.

The first Catholic resident was John Rouch, in 1846; then followed John Gorman, Patrick Kelly, and Philip Smith, to 1848; then Edward Kelly, John Doyle, David Doyle, and these persons went for services once a year to Chester (then called Chester Factories). In 1850 services were attended at the house of Patrick Nugent, in Russell Paper-Mill village. The clergyman or priest was Father Cuddihea, who resided at Pittsfield. In 1853 services were held in Huntington (then Chester village), at the houses of Doyle and Moore, and this clergyman was succeeded by Father Blenkinsop, who held services in the houses of his people, and was followed by Father Percell, of Pittsfield, who held services in the town-hall once every six weeks, and was occasionally assisted by Father Lynch. They were succeeded by Father McCarroll, of Westfield, and in 1863 the town-hall was burned, and for a time services were held in what was known as the basket-factory. The next pastor was Father Maglinico, of Westfield, and during his administration a site for a church was bought on what was called the Smith lot, in the south part of the village, which has since been abandoned for that purpose, and a location on Maple Avenue is now purchased, with a fair prospect of occupancy soon. The pastor's assistant was Father Thomas Sullivan, also of Westfield. Father Maglinico was succeeded by Father Smith, also assisted by Father Sullivan, which last was succeeded by Father Dermet, who are the present clergy of the parish, and now hold services here three times a month, and when five Sundays occur they hold services four times a month. The Catholic population of the parish, which includes all of that denomination in Huntington and the adjoining towns who come here for worship, number about 450 persons.

BURIAL-PLACES.

First may be mentioned the ancient one on Norwich Hill. It is situated on the old Shirkshire road, east of the meeting-house. It is in good preservation, and shows much care on the part of the living for the memory of the dead. There is another burial-place on the west side of the East Branch, above Knightville, near the residence in later years of E. Rude. At Indian Hollow, so called, was an ancient burial-place. Bodies were probably removed, or, if not, the ground was washed away by the floods. In Huntington village a little above the plane-factory, on the place of Mrs. Joslyn, are two graves, a monument marking the spot. As important as any perhaps is the cemetery at Norwich Bridge. This was an ancient affair. Upon the old time-stained plat in possession of John J. Cook are the names of Ebenezer Williams, Duty Underwood, Leonard Williams, Pliny Dewey, Charles Culver, Titus Doolittle, Jesse Farnum, Lemuel Raymond, Ebenezer Meacham, Joseph Stanton, Erastus Lyman, Stephen Munson, Electra Johnson, Dr. Martin Phelps, John Ellis, Abel Stanton, Wm. Wade, Moses Herrick, Elijah Rice, Salmon Thomas, Daniel Collins, Grove Winchell, Roger Gibson, Zaaan Sackett, Robert Lindsey, Levi Dewey, Elisha Leffingwell, Apollos Stowe.

Early inscriptions are James Geer, died 1789; Phineas Mixer, 1793; Walter Fobes and child, 1786-87; Caleb Fobes' wife, 1793; Walter Fobes and two children, 1795 and 1803; Ebenezer Stowe, Jr., 1793; John Lindsey, 1794; Silas Hubbard, 1783.

This ground, originally a half-acre, is situated on the west side of the river, on the road bearing northwesterly from the Norwich bridge up the valley of the Middle Branch. A few years since, through the efforts largely of John J. Cook, this was thoroughly cleared up of the heavy wild growth of ivy and larger bushes, enlarged by the purchase of six or seven acres, and transformed into a handsome modern cemetery. All this was at first by individual effort. Later an act of incorporation was obtained. The whole expense has been over $3000.

TOWN SOCIETIES.

A Masonic lodge was organized in 1867 at Huntington village; its charter dated December 13th. The number of charter-members was 20. The several Masters of the lodge have been A. M. Copeland, B. H. Kagwin, Edward Pease, Charles Fay, M. L. Church, and the present presiding officer, James Phillips. It has a pleasant hall and is in a flourishing condition, the present membership being 95. Other societies in town have existed from time to time, for social and literary improvement, for benevolent, temperance, and religious work. Most of them were, however, of so brief duration as to furnish little material for the historian.

PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

Indian Hollow was a favorite resort for the aborigines of the forest, not only before the advent of the white man, but for many years after the first settlement of the valley. Massasoit Pond, formerly known as Norwich Pond, is a fine sheet of water, embosomed in a pleasant landscape. The site of Mixer's mill and the old fording-place are associated with some of the earliest incidents of pioneer life.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

"In the early times agriculture was the leading business of the people of Norwich. Men with resolute hearts and strong arms removed the forests and cultivated the soil. From the earth they drew their sustenance. Corn, rye, oats, and potatoes were the staple vegetable productions for food. Seeds were sown and crops harvested, not, as now, by machinery, but by hand. Mowing-machines, horse-rakes, and various other modern implements of husbandry were then unknown. Beef, pork, and mutton, produced by themselves, furnished them with meat, while from the mountain streams their tables were liberally supplied with delicious fish. What is now the West, furnishing the East with bread and meat, was then a vast wilderness, or broad, uncultivated prairie. Instead of depending upon New Orleans or the West Indies for sugar and molasses, they tapped the maple and drew the sap from which by their own labor they procured a supply for domestic use, and often a surplus to exchange for other necessities. Flax was a product of much importance in those days; this, together with the wool from the sheep, furnished the clothing for the people; the women manufactured the cloth from these articles without the aid of machinery propelled by either water- or steam-power. They carded, spun, and wove the linen and the wool by hand; the great and the little wheel, as well as the loom, were found in nearly every dwelling, and all the women knew how to use them; they were better players on these than on the piano or the melodeon. . . . Some other branches were necessarily pursued. The carpenter found employment in the erection of needed buildings, and the blacksmith in making and repairing the rude implements of husbandry. These were mainly of domestic manufacture, and generally coarse and clumsy compared with those now in use. Some farmers made nearly all the tools used by them in their employment."

Saw-mills and grist-mills were an early necessity, and in a few years the water-power of the streams was improved for a variety of other purposes.

The following detailed account of the mills and factories shows more fully these different enterprises.

MILLS, FACTORIES, ETC.

Upon one of the branches of the Manhan, which, rising southeast of Norwich Hill, flows for a short distance in this town, there was formerly a saw-mill. It was owned by Loamni Hall, and was abandoned ten or twelve years ago. Upon Roaring Brook, at the present place of M. M. Lyman, there was a saw-mill, a pretty old affair, erected by the Lyman family of early times. It has been abandoned for many years. A little below, near the present Theodore Lyman place, was a clothing-mill; abandoned perhaps thirty years ago, and built probably twenty years earlier than that.

In the northwest corner of the town, on Little River, so called, was a saw-mill of early times; near the present place of the Merriitts, given up many years ago. The whetstone works of the Merriitts (father and son) were begun about thirty years ago, and have been carried on down to the present time. The works suffered considerable damage in the freshet of Dec. 10, 1878. Just over the line of Chesterfield, whetstones were made some years earlier than at the place of the Merriitts.

Upon the main stream (East Branch of the Westfield), in the north part of the town, near the present place of E. Rude (2d), was a saw-mill, and also a grist-mill. These were in the early years, and abandoned long ago. For some distance below, the water-power has never been improved. At Knightville was first the saw-mill of Sandford, erected perhaps in 1830.

About 1840, Porter Knight changed the business to that of turning-works. After his death, Elkanah & Thomas King, from Worthington, established there an extensive business, making children's cabs, wagons, and carriages. Thomas King died. Fire and freshet both damaged the buildings, and practically ruined the enterprise. Somewhat later than the Kings, Henry Stanton built a saw-mill, and also a grist-mill, and there was considerable business done at that point about 1850, and for several years afterward. The mills are now all given up.

Upon Pond Brook, the outlet of Norwich Pond, and a tributary of the East Branch, the first enterprise below the pond was a mill for grinding bark, run by Seth Porter, 1830 to 1840, or somewhere near that time. Mr. Porter's tannery was at the village of Norwich Hill. Near it was an ancient grist-mill, owned and run for many years by Whitman Knight. The building was afterward turned into a factory for the making of whip-stocks, and there was also a wheelwright shop there. The business in later years has been carried on by O. E. Knight.

Just below was the well-known axe-making establishment of Caleb Hannum, an old affair, and quite celebrated from 1815 to 1825, perhaps. His sons, Caleb W., Harvey, and Nathan, succeeded him at his death, in 1825, and they continued the business there until they removed it to Huntington village, about 1845-46, and Moses Hannum carried on the business at the old place for several years.

Half a mile below the Hannums, on Pond Brook, was the saw-mill of Willard White, also numbered among "the things that were, but are not." Somewhat below has been a cider-mill in later years.

Below the junction of Pond Brook with the East Branch, the water-power of the latter has not been improved until we reach Norwich Bridge and come to the site of Isaac Mixer's grist-mill, the first mill in the town of Norwich. By referring to the old records of Murrayfield, we find that at the town-meeting of 1769 they voted to warn future meetings by posting the warrant "at Isaac Mixer's, at Malcom Henry's, and at the grist-mill." This would indicate that Mixer's mill was not then built, but in 1773 the town-meeting of Norwich voted to warn meetings by posting the warrant at Mixer's grist-mill. Between 1769 and 1773 was the date of this old mill. It stood nearly on the site of the present unused factory, near Horace Taylor's. It was no doubt run for many years, as "Mixer's" was an important point even earlier than there was any structure to be called "Norwich Bridge." After the Mixers, the property seems to have passed to Moses Herrick, who ran at the same place, perhaps in the same building, clothing- and carding-works. It afterward passed into the hands of Clapp & Taylor; Clapp withdrew and Mr. Taylor remained. The building has now stood idle some time. Wooden bowls were once manufactured there, as early as 1820, perhaps.

On the Middle Branch, emptying in above Norwich Bridge, are the wooden-bowl works of Parley Hultchins. They were preceded by a grist-mill and a saw-mill, built by Amasa Gibson and Horace Smith, 1840 to 1850. On the Butolph Brook, uniting with the Westfield from the west, below Norwich Bridge, was once erected a saw-mill, or at least a dam was built, timbers procured, and everything ready, and then the enterprise abandoned. On this stream was a distillery,—1800 to 1819,—carried off in the great freshet of the latter year. It is related that a barrel of wines floated down the stream to Westfield, and was found in good condition and secured by a family there. They drank so much and so often that their condition revealed the prize they had found, and it was recovered in part by the owner. In view of the rapids and the sharp, abrupt falls, it was a wonderful trip for a barrel of liquor. Below the mouth of Butolph Brook is the Edge-Tool-Factory of W. P. Williams, built in 1875. Just below and joined to the factory is the grist-mill, and also the saw-mill, built about ten years ago by Henry Stanton. They are now carried on by W. P. Williams in connection with his tool-factory. On the site of the paper-mill at Huntington village was a saw-mill ten years or more before the paper business was introduced. Opposite the paper-mill also was one of the earliest saw-mills in this part of the country,—went down by 1820 probably. The paper-mill was built in 1852 by O. H. Greenleaf and Lewis H. Taylor, and other stockholders. It was opened for business the following year, and was run for several years under the firm-name of Greenleaf & Taylor.

Printing-paper was the first line of work made, but for some years past the mill has been devoted to the production of fine writing-paper. Its capacity is about a ton and a half per day. At present it belongs to the Massasoit Paper Company, of Springfield, and is carried on under the name of the Chester Paper Company. At the village also was an early tannery, established by Lindsey & Cooley, dating back to 1800 probably. It was opposite Daniels' present factory. There was another small tannery just above the present site of Daniels' factory. The first water-wheel used at Huntington was in propelling a bark-mill just above this small tannery.

Upon the site of the Daniels factory, known as the Highland Mills, there was first the cotton-factory of Collins & Wade; this was 1830 to 1840. About this last date, Melvin Copeland purchased the property and changed the business to the manufacture of planes. Afterward Alfred Copeland made bedsteads there, carrying on an extensive business, requiring large quantities of maple-timber. It was next changed into a woolen-mill by Little & Stanton. They made bedspreads in large quantities. They claimed to have been the first in this country to manufacture the Marseilles spread by power-looms. They were aided in this work by German operatives, especially by a family named Steiger, who had been trained to this work in their own country. Little & Stanton lost their buildings by fire, and rebuilt them. They were again burned out, and again built, but soon after gave up their business here. Clarence Whitaker ran the works for a time, making cotton yarn. Fire put an end to this enterprise also. The Highland Mills were built, in 1870, by a stock company, and run by the same for a short time, when they passed into the hands of Frost & Daniels. They are now run by Nathan Daniels. The line of work consists of flannels and robes of superior quality.

At Huntington village was also the basket-factory of R. S. Bartlett and L. B. Williams, firm-name Bartlett & Williams. This was soon after the railroad was opened. The business was afterward transferred to Northampton. Melvin Copeland's plane-making business included carpenters' and joiners' tools in general. The same line of business is now carried on, and has been for some years, by James F. and George M. Lindsey. Samuel T. Lyman was for several years a manufacturer of tin-ware, and also sheet-iron pans, for the use of farmers in making maple-sugar. His successor in this business is Edward A. Allen.

Elisha B. Cole has manufactured baskets at Huntington during the last few years on an improved plan, for which he received a patent. E. N. Woods, recently deceased, carried on the manufacture of boots and shoes for some years. Charles Pomeroy was also in similar business. The Hannum brothers removed their axe business to Huntington village about 1848, and continued it for several years. John Collins had a wagon-shop for several years at Huntington village.

The ten leading articles of farm produce for the year ending May 1, 1875, were as follows, with their several values: Butter, $8911; milk, $12,000; beef, $8203; potatoes, $3464; hay, $20,682; manure, $4586; fire-wood, $5967; pork, $2970; maple-sugar, $2281; corn, $2161.

MILITARY.

THE REVOLUTION.

Sept. 23, 1774.—Samuel Knight, Moderator. The resolves of the County Congress were read and considered. The people voted their satisfaction with them.

Voted to choose a committee to make return to the Provincial Congress of the sentiments of this district respecting public distresses of this province. Voted that the selectmen procure 50 pounds of powder, 100 pounds of lead, and 25 dozen flints for a stock for the district, and a drum. Voted that Capt. Ebenezer Geer be desired to attend on Thursday, the 6th of October, to lead the inhabitants to the choice of military officers, and the meeting adjourned to that day. Then by adjournment met at the house of Isaac Mixer, innholder, and voted to send a delegate to the Provincial Congress at Concord, to meet on the second Tuesday of October. Mr. Ebenezer Meacham appears to have been the delegate, as the above acts and resolves were voted to be delivered to him. Officers were chosen for the military as above provided, as shown by the following certificate:

"NORWICH, Oct. 6, 1774.—At the desire of the inhabitants of Norwich, I attended and led them to the choice of the following military officers: John Kirkland, capt.; David Scott, lieutenant; Ebenezer King, ens.

"Certified: EBENEZER GEER."

The following agreement was signed:

"NORWICH, Oct. 6, 1774.—We subscribers, inhabitants of Norwich, view it expedient at this critical day to form ourselves into a 'militar artillery' company for the improvement of military skill, and come into the following agreement and government, viz., that the officers we shall choose we will treat with proper respect as if put in by authority, and those gentlemen, householders and others, that don't choose to sign the above articles, we desire their voice in the choice of officers."

The record adds this was signed by thirty-six; but, unfortunately, stops at that point, and does not give the names. Little conscious of the sublime heroism of these acts, they did not look down the vista of one hundred years and see historians eagerly scanning these old books to gather the name of every Revolutionary soldier. Here was a district only one year after its formation calmly organizing an army, and providing war materials, in its own local sovereignty, without regard to any higher authority. The compact signed by these thirty-six is similar in dignity and historic fame to the one signed in the cabin of the "Mayflower" by the Pilgrim Fathers themselves. Surely it is proper to reiterate the proposition that the system of New England town-meetings has carried constitutional liberty across the continent.

In January, 1775, it was voted to defend and assist the constable in collecting the money that is already assessed or granted to be assessed during this unhappy state. It is evident the fathers were determined; still, they moved cautiously, for they negatived the laws of government "got by Mr. Meacham at the Congress." Yet they chose a committee of correspondence and safety: JOHN KIRKLAND, EBENEZER MEACHAM, WILLIAM CARTER, DAVID SCOTT, JONATHAN WARE, DANIEL PALMER, CALEB FOBES. This committee, according to the practice of those times, had wellnigh dictatorial powers, but, mindful of the rights of individuals, the town "enjoined" the committee, while they took "all possible methods to suppress disorders," yet that every person "shall be fairly heard before he is condemned, that we may enjoy our interests and property peaceably and live as Christians."

Jan. 31, 1776, the committee of correspondence and inspection was continued: JOHN KIRKLAND, DAVID SCOTT, SAMUEL FAIRMAN, WILLIAM CARTER, EBENEZER MEACHAM, EBENEZER KING, JONATHAN WARE. At the same time to Ebenezer Meacham, Caleb Fobes, David Scott, and John Kirkland was voted the sum of 39s., money they had lent to the soldiers of Norwich. Three years of town records, 1777, 1778, and 1779, are missing from the old volume.

July 7, 1780, it was voted that the men raised by virtue of the several orders of court of June last, which have been procured and hired by individuals, shall be assessed on the town at large, having respect to past service done by individuals. Voted to appoint a committee to procure men under further calls,—John Kirkland, Daniel Kirkland, Wm. Fobes, David Scott, Caleb Fobes, Jacob Fellows, Stephen Holbard.

July 25, 1781, it was voted to give the soldiers raised, agreeable to the orders of the General Court of June 30, 1781, £4 per month for the time they shall be in the service. Voted £26 to purchase 1245 pounds of beef for the Continental army.

Aug. 16, 1781, it was voted to request of Oliver Phelps, Esq., that he would not "strain" this town for the last requisition of beef. Voted to give Capt. Daniel Kirkland and Mr. Joseph Park £60 for their engaging to do three years' service in the Continental army for this year.

The names of the Revolutionary soldiers from this town or who settled here soon after the war are difficult to obtain. The "History of Huntington," published at the expense of the town in 1876, only gives the following, doubtless after careful inquiry: HALSEY SANDFORD, STEPHEN ANGEL, ISAAC COIT. On the authority of a vote already given, it would seem proper to add DANIEL KIRKLAND and JOSEPH PARKS. Stephen Munson was a Revolutionary soldier; settled in Norwich about 1800, near the place now owned by his grandson, Garry Munson. Ebenezer Williams, of Worthington, was a Revolutionary soldier. His son, Dr. Leonard Williams, settled in Huntington village about 1810. He had three sons, William, Ebenezer, Eliphalet.

It is inferred that the town of Norwich had but little sympathy with the Shays rebellion. A party of insurgents entered the town at one time and seized the old Revolutionary veteran, Capt. Kirkland, and held him for a time, perhaps as a hostage. The only trace of this exciting period to be found in the records is the following:

March 25, 1782, Mr. Ebenezer Meacham and Mr. Abel Partridge were chosen delegates to the convention called to meet at Hatfield in April next. At a subsequent meeting their expenses were allowed them.

WAR OF 1812.

A town-meeting was called July 13, 1812, "to take into consideration the momentous and alarming situation of the country and to pass any vote that may be considered to be expedient on the said subject." Capt. Levi Dewey was chosen moderator, and they "voted and made choice of Dr. William Fobes and Dr. Jesse Joy as members to meet and assemble with a convention to be convened at Northampton to consult on measures for the good of the country."

At a town-meeting, April 4, 1814, the warrant contained the clause: "To see if the town will choose a committee to draft a memorial to the General Court against war and the restrictive measures of the general government, and pass any vote concerning the same." Accordingly, Samuel Kirkland, Aaron Hall, Titus Doolittle, Stephen Tracy, and William Hooker, Jr., were appointed such a committee.

Direct taxes for the support of the war were of course unpopular in New England in view of the public opinion of this section upon the war itself. Jan. 23, 1815, it was voted that Aaron Hall, Stephen Tracy, and William Fobes be a committee to report to the town such instructions as ought to be given to our representative in the General Court with regard to taxes. The committee reported the following resolutions, which we give as illustrating the public sentiment at that time, and also to show that public officials were denounced as severely then as now, and that political warfare was as vindictive between parties then as now:

1st. Resolved, In the opinion of this meeting, that the whole course of measures pursued by the general government, with regard to commercial restrictions and the present war with Great Britain, meets our most unqualified contempt and disapprobation.

2d. Resolved, That we feel deeply alarmed at the unconstitutional, tyrannical, and oppressive measures now in power; that if carried into effect, the dear-bought privileges of our common country, which we hold far dearer than property or life, are erased and gone forever.

3d. Resolved, That in our opinion the grossest falsehoods and deception have been practiced by the members of the general government, or the people would never have forborne with their measures: that a continuance of the war, the annihilation of our commerce, the extravagant and unparalleled expenditure of public property among their favorites and supporters, without the least benefit to their country, have led us to believe that they have rather sought to aggrandize themselves and the Western States on the ruins of New England.

4th. Resolved, That we have no confidence in such men, nor in any men who shall seek to betray the liberties of their country; nor who would abandon our whole Atlantic frontier to the mercies of the enemy, and exhaust our resources in the wilds of Louisiana, or in the more than wild attempts at the conquest of Canada.

5th. Resolved, That we highly prize liberty and our constitutional privileges; that we have borne and forborne until our patience is exhausted; that forbearance hitherto has only tended to increase our burdens, our taxes, and encourage our oppressors; that thus tamely to surrender our liberties without a struggle would be the blackest ingratitude to our ancestors who have procured our independence at the price of blood, and would be an incalculable injury to generations yet to come.

6th. Resolved, That we place the fullest confidence in the Governor and Legislature of Massachusetts, and in the State authorities of New England, and that to them, under God the Great Governor of the world, we look for aid and direction; and that for the present, until the public opinion shall be known, we will not enter our carriages, pay our continental taxes, or aid, inform, or assist any officer in their collection.

For the defense of Boston, when called out by Governor Strong, the following persons are understood to have gone, and probably others. Perhaps these were not all within the present town-lines: Lieut. Samuel Lyman, Ens. Wait, John Ladd, Salmon Belden, Samuel Henry, Samuel Sanderson, Harvey Stone, Russell Smith, Perkins S. Pitcher.

OFFICIAL ACTION, CIVIL WAR 1861-65.

A special town-meeting was held in September, 1861, at which action was simply taken to furnish State aid to the families of volunteers, as provided by law, it evidently not being deemed necessary to offer any bounty then on the part of the town. Without waiting for any official action, quite a number of citizens volunteered in the spring and during the summer.

July 19, 1862, the calls by the President for 300,000 men led now to prompt action. A bounty of $100 each was voted to volunteers to fill the quota, and $1800 appropriated for that purpose; and August 23d this bounty was extended to those enlisting for nine months only, instead of three years. A large number enlisted under these resolutions, and the roll of Huntington soldiers rapidly filled up. In 1863 the arrangements already made seem to have been sufficient without any action, and nothing was done in town-meeting. But the war dragged its slow length along, and greater sacrifices of men and money were called for.

April 4, 1864, the selectmen were fully authorized to hire the number of men necessary to fill the quota of the town, and to pay each man a bounty of $125. June 6, Garry Munson and E. W. Lathrop were appointed to procure volunteers to the credit of the town, to fill the present demand, and all future demands which may be made upon it; also, to pay a bounty of $300 to each citizen of the town who has been or may be drafted into the military service to fill the quota of the town. July 30th it was voted to pay a bounty of $50 to each volunteer for one year, $80 for two years, and $100 for three years. The treasurer was authorized to deposit $500 with the treasurer of the commonwealth to pay bounties of volunteers furnished for the town by the State. It was voted to raise by subscription, "in one week's time," $2000; also to assess a tax of $2000, and to borrow $1000. All these steps were promptly taken. The war committee named above were active and efficient, and had the confidence of the people.

Jan. 2, 1865, the recruiting committee were directed to continue the enlistment of volunteers, and the treasurer was authorized to borrow not exceeding $2000 for bounty purposes. May 24th, the town voted to refund the money contributed by citizens for military purposes in 1864.

The long agony was over. The flag of the fathers once more waved in triumph over every foot of the Union. War-stained heroes came back to these homes and firesides, but there were 24 who had fallen in the fight, and would hear no more the signals of battle or the salutes of peace. Huntington furnished 137 men for the war, according to Schouler's history,—a surplus of 8 over all demands. Five were commissioned officers. The entire amount of aid paid solely by the town was $12,000. The assessed valuation of the town for 1860 was $442.651, and the population 1216. The aid to families, refunded afterward by the State, was, in 1861, $229.69; 1862, $227.12; 1863, $3248.99; 1864, $3112.71; 1865, $1550. Total, $10,368.51. Of the men furnished by the town, a number were recruits hired abroad. Those from the town itself, with their record, are appended to this sketch.

SOLDIERS' RECORD, WAR OF 1861-65.

Charles R. Copeland, enl. Sept. 25, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; disch. Feb. 13, 1863, for disability.
 Charles H. Ferry, enl. Sept. 25, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; disch. Nov. 7, 1864.
 William A. Filley, enl. Oct. 19, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; di-ch. Jan. 13, 1865, for disability.
 Charles H. Gardiner, enl. Sept. 25, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; disch. July 18, 1862, for disab.; died at Huntington, Aug. 16, 1862, of consumption.
 Frederick Taylor, enl. Sept. 14, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; killed at Malvern Hill, July 28, 1864.
 Joseph Underwood, enl. Oct. 10, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; disch. Jan. 18, 1863, for disability.
 Harlow Gamwell, asst. surg., enl. Jan. 10, 1863, 2d Cav.; res. April 27, 1864.
 Edwin F. Giddings, corp., enl. Jan. 27, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. F; disch. July 21, 1865.
 Joseph R. Giddings, corp., enl. Jan. 27, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. F; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 James S. Patterson, enl. Jan. 27, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. F; disch. Nov. 14, 1865.
 Charles M. Otis, enl. June 21, 1861, 10th Inf., Co. E; disch. Nov. 8, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. 2d H. Art., July 23, 1863; disch. Sept. 3, 1863.
 Austin T. Hancock, corp., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Henry Beach, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 David H. Coit, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died June 22, 1863, at Newbern, N. C.
 Dudley Driscoll, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Jason H. Fisk, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Marshall O. Fisk, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Henry A. Stewart, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps, Aug. 15, 1863.
 Edwin H. Coit, corp., enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; trans. Aug. 21, 1863, to Vet. Res. Corps.
 Watson E. Carr, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. D; died of wounds, Oct. 7, 1864, at Washington, D. C.
 Asa P. Merritt, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; disch. March 24, 1863, for disability.
 Edward N. Smith, enl. Sept. 26, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863; disch. June 26, '65.
 Julian A. Wing, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. F; died Sept. 1862, at New Orleans, La.
 Calvin Porter, enl. Aug. 26, 1861, 20th Inf., Co. D; killed Oct. 21, 1861, at Ball's Bluff, Va.
 Wm. H. Decker, enl. Aug. 23, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. B; died Nov. 19, 1862, at Washington, D. C.
 Wm. H. Allard, enl. June 18, 1862, 32d Inf., Co. G; disch. Nov. 26, 1862, for disability.
 Gilbert W. Brauning, enl. May 29, 1862, 32d Inf., Co. G; re-enl. Jan. 5, 1864; disch. June 29, 1865.
 Erastus V. Lilley, sergt., enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; pro. to 2d lieut., Sept. 1, 1864; to 1st lieut., Nov. 25, 1864; wounded at Piedmont, June 5, 1864; disch. May 15, 1865.
 Rufus H. Fisk, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Roland M. Kingsley, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; died April 12, 1863, at Plymouth, N. C.
 James D. Middlebrook, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th Inf., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Harvey Porter, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Burwell Seymour, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Andrew Lacey, enl. Aug. 18, 1862, 27th Inf., Co. H; re-enl. Jan. 2, 1864; died July 18, 1864, at Andersonville, Ga.
 Henry Gouch, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. K; disch. Oct. 13, 1862, for disab.; re-enl. 2d Cav., April 14, 1863.

Esbon J. Burt, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Feb. 19, 1862, for disability.
 Marcus E. Lyon, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; died June 8, 1862, at New Orleans, La.
 Caleb H. Stickney, enl. Nov. 20, 1861, 31st Inf., Co. B; disch. Jan. 19, 1863, for disab.; re-enl. June 6, 1863, 1st H. Art., Co. D; disch. Sept. 12, 1865.
 Appleton Vadakin, enl. Aug. 4, 1861, 2d H. Art., Co. C; disch. May 30, 1865.
 Isaac C. Blanchard, enl. Oct. 23, 1861, 1st Cav., Co. F; disch. Sept. 13, 1862, for disability.
 Myron A. Munson, enl. July 28, 1864, 60th M. V. M., Co. I; disch. Nov. 30, 1864.
 John Hurley, enl. Oct. 15, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. E; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Charles H. Kirkland, sergt., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; pro. to 2d lieut., June 9, 1863; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Eleazer Bryant, sergt., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Moses W. Hannum, corp., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Roswell B. Merritt, corp., enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Charles E. Roach, corp., enl. Feb. 9, 1864, 31st Inf., Co. D; disch. Nov. 2, 1864, for disab.; had previously served in the 6th Cav. a full term.
 Darius N. Weeks, enl. Nov. 1861, 31st Inf., Co. I; re-enl. Feb. 9, 1864; disch. Sept. 9, 1865.
 Edgar F. Kyle, corp., enl. May 29, 1862, 32d Inf., Co. G; pro. to sergt., Jan. 5, 1864; disch. June 29, 1865.
 Wm. L. Crossette, enl. June 23, 1862, 32d Inf., Co. G; pro. to corp., Jan. 5, 1864; disch. June 5, 1865, by order of War Department.
 Corvella E. Lewis, enl. May 29, 1862, 32d Inf., Co. G; pro. to corp. at re-enl., Jan. 5, 1864; died of wounds, May 20, 1864.
 Samuel Rust, enl. May 27, 1862, 32d Inf., Co. G; disch. Nov. 7, 1862, for disab.; pro. to corp. at re-enl., Feb. 17, 1864; disch. June 20, 1865.
 Wm. Cady, corp., enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 16, 1865.
 John N. Moore, corp., enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 16, 1865.
 Wm. N. Otis, corp., enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. May 17, 1865.
 Francis H. Axtell, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; died July 22, 1864, at Stanton, Va.
 Emerson H. Chapman, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; died Nov. 13, 1864, at Salisbury, N. C.
 Asa N. Elder, enl. Aug. 4, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 16, 1865.
 Ralph Joslyn, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 16, 1865.
 Alanson C. Lewis, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. Feb. 22, 1865, for disability.
 Jonathan A. Lilley, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. May 13, 1865, for disability.
 Rufus E. Lyman, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 16, 1865.
 Levi Phelps, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.
 James B. Lewis, enl. July 20, 1864, 8th M. V. M., Co. H; disch. Nov. 10, 1864.
 Henry E. Stanton, enl. July 20, 1864, 8th M. V. M., Co. H; disch. Nov. 10, 1864.
 George A. Walker, enl. July 20, 1864, 8th M. V. M., Co. H; disch. Nov. 10, 1864.
 Clarence Bartholomew, enl. July 16, 1864, 42d M. V. M., Co. H; disch. Nov. 11, 1864.
 George Brackett, enl. July 16, 1864, 42d M. V. M., Co. H; disch. Nov. 11, 1864.
 James T. Decker, enl. July 16, 1864, 42d M. V. M., Co. H; disch. Nov. 11, 1864.
 Orange S. Sampson, sergt., enl. Aug. 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. I; pro. to 2d lieut., Sept. 2, 1862; to 1st lieut., Oct. 30, 1862; to capt., April 26, 1863; killed Sept. 30, 1864, at Poplar Grove, Va.

Phineas F. Knight, corp., enl. Aug. 19, 1861, 21st Inf., Co. I; killed Sept. 1, 1862, at Chantilly, Va.
 Henry A. Weeks, enl. Sept. 9, 1861, 22d Inf., Co. G; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Henry A. Beech, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Sept. 27, 1864.
 David G. Hannum, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. Oct. 1, 1861, for disability.
 Albert Holbrook, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Inf., Co. A; disch. to re-enl., Dec. 23, 1863.
 Joseph Stanton, Jr., enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 34th Inf., Co. B; disch. June 7, 1865.
 George F. Horton, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, 34th Inf., Co. H; trans. June 14, 1865, to 24th Inf.
 Leander J. Beals, enl. Aug. 30, 1862, 37th Inf., Co. H; disch. April 27, 1863, for disability.
 Joshua Hathaway, corp., enl. Jan. 25, 1864, 57th Inf., Co. E; killed May 6, 1864, in Wilderness, Va.
 Benjamin Barker, enl. Aug. 31, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. not given.
 Charles H. Reinhart, enl. Aug. 31, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. not given.
 Dwight Strong, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. July 29, 1863.
 Milo Wing, enl. Sept. 25, 1862, 46th M. V. M., Co. F; disch. to re-enl., May 30, 1863; re-enl. July 28, 1863, 2d H. Art., Co. A; disch. Sept. 3, 1865.
 Benjamin F. Hall, enl. Oct. 22, 46th M. V. M., Co. K; trans. to Co. E, Oct. 1862.
 Harvey H. Billings, enl. April 14, 1863, 2d Cav.; app. veterinary surg.
 John B. Lyman, Jr., enl. Dec. 21, 1863, 1st H. Art.; wounded in the Wilderness; died of wounds, May 22, 1864.
 Wilson G. Stevens, enl. Dec. 1863, 1st H. Art.; died at home from effects of wounds, June 25, '64.
 William James, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, 5th Cav.
 Edward N. Smith, enl. 27th Regt.; re-enl. as a veteran.
 Charles H. Weston, enl. Jan. 4, 1864, 34th Regt.
 Charles F. Randall, enl. Jan. 5, 1864, 4th Cav., Co. E; died Dec. 6, 1864, at Hampton, Va.
 Charles E. Hathaway, enl. Jan. 11, 1864, 34th Regt.
 Robert Canfield, enl. 27th Regt., Co. A.
 Lewis Samuels, enl. June 22, 1861, 62d N. Y.; pro. to 1st sergt. and 2d lieut.
 Albert B. Rude, enl. June 3, 1861, 62d N. Y.; died at Newport News, Va., Sept. 10, 1862.
 James Coleman, June 6, 1861, 62d N. Y.
 Horace N. Weeks, enl. 31st Regt.
 Albert Thomas, enl. Oct. 7, 1861, 8th Conn.; re-enl. Dec. 24, 1863.
 Calvin Porter, Jr.
 Lindsey J. Niles, enl. Aug. 1, 1862, 37th Regt., Co. H; disch. April 27, 1863, for disability.
 Isaac C. Drake, enl. Aug. 1862, 46th Regt., Co. F; died at Newbern, June 27, 1863.
 Wm. T. Withington, enl. Aug. 31, 1864, Vet. Res. Corps; disch. for disab., Jan. 27, 1865.
 George W. Filley, enl. 1861, 1st Cav.
 John A. Decker, enl. in 10th Regt., Co. I.
 Austin Richards, enl. in 10th Regt.
 Timothy Coleman, enl. June 10, 1861, 1st Cal.; died at Camden Street Hospital, Baltimore, Aug. 3, 1862, of wounds received.
 Henry W. Strong, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A; died Oct. 17, 1862, at Washington, D. C.
 Hugh B. Laidley, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A.
 John Quinn, enl. Sept. 20, 1861 (probably), 27th Regt., Co. A.
 Nelson Knight, enl. Sept. 20, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. A; died in the service.
 Daniel F. Knight, enl. Oct. 17, 1861, 27th Regt., Co. G.
 Horace H. Gorham (Bisbee's history).
 Lorenzo Brown (Bisbee's history).

The great-grandfather of Mr. Munson was a resident of the State of Connecticut, and emigrated with his family, in 1772, and settled in the famous Valley of the Wyoming, in Pennsylvania. Here he and his family had to contend with all of the disadvantages incident to a new country. The Indians, too, were at times troublesome, and in 1778 occurred the massacre of the whites. Among those who were compelled to flee from their homes was the family of Mr. Munson, including Stephen Munson, a son, and the grandfather of Garry Munson. The nurse in the family took another son, and, embarking in a canoe, tried in this way to escape. The Indians overtook them, and they were carried away captives. Years after, Stephen Munson recognized the brother, as he supposed, with a tribe of Indians, but there was no recognition on his brother's part. Many of the most valuable household utensils, brass kettles, etc., were buried in the ground before the flight. Stephen Munson was born in Connecticut about 1758, and was fourteen years of age when his father removed to Pennsylvania. He was a Revolutionary soldier during the last years of the war, and after the expiration of his term of service he settled at Waterbury, Conn., or in the vicinity, and married Elizabeth Andrews. At the time of his marriage he had no property save a little Continental money, so much depreciated at that period (1782) that it was of but nominal value.

About 1790 he removed to Westfield, Mass., and thence, probably in the year 1800, to Huntington (then Norwich). Here he died in 1824.

His widow survived him a few years, and received a pension from the government. He had three children, two sons and one daughter,—Daniel, Garry, and Orlinda.

Daniel Munson was born in Connecticut, Jan. 22, 1786. He married Jerusha Fowler, daughter of Deacon Ebenezer Fowler, of Westfield, Mass. By this marriage there were five children, four sons and one daughter,—Garry, Stephen, Daniel, Charles, and Cleora Fowler.

Garry Munson is a well-known citizen of Huntington, and was born in that town (then known as Norwich) Dec. 29, 1810. He spent his boyhood at home on the farm, attending the common schools, and in his fifteenth year the Westfield Academy, receiving instruction at the latter five terms in all. When he was eighteen years of age, having a preference for a mercantile life, his father started him in business, opening a general store in Chester Centre. When he was twenty-one years old he extended his business, becoming a manufacturer of twist buttons (hand-made), and the following year (1832) he added the making of lasting buttons. His business increased rapidly, and in 1835 he was employing over two hundred persons. In the spring of 1837, owing to the introduction of machinery in the manufacture of buttons, he discontinued this branch of business in consequence of competition.

Garry Munson

In the great panic (1837) Mr. Munson went to Marlboro', Conn., and engaged in the manufacture of colored cotton goods. There he remained one year, and then removed to Springfield, Mass., and went into the dry-goods business with Galen Ames, of that city, under the firm-name of Ames & Munson. This copartnership existed for three years, when Mr. Munson returned to Huntington, and at Norwich Bridge opened a general store, at the same time paying some attention to farming. He closed the store in 1847, and paid special attention to farming for one year. He then erected a building at the Huntington Railroad station, and engaged in merchandising. He continued four years, when he disposed of building and stock to his father. Since that period Mr. Munson has been a farmer, varying his labors by the buying and selling of wool.

In his political sentiments he was a Whig and is now a Republican. He has held different offices; was a selectman for years, also assessor and town treasurer; is also a trial-justice. In 1844 he represented his district in the Legislature.

Mr. Munson was united in marriage, Nov. 6, 1833, with Harriet Lyman, daughter of Deacon Samuel Lyman, of Chester, Mass. There were born to them seven children,—Rev. Myron A. Munson, pastor of the Congregational Church in Fairhaven, Vt.; Ed. G. Munson, stockinette manufacturer, in Cohoes, N. Y., with whom his father has been associated for the past six years; H. Willard Munson, farmer, in Huntington; H. Wilson Munson, a twin-brother, merchant, in the same town; Samuel L. Munson, linen collar manufacturer, Albany, N. Y.; Emma H. Munson, deceased; Cleora Fowler, married to John K. Judd, of Holyoke, Mass.

Mrs. Munson died Aug. 18, 1860. Mr. Munson, for his second wife, married, Aug. 14, 1861, Mrs. Paulina Corning, daughter of Rufus Smith, of Worthington, Mass.

Both are members of the Congregational Church of Huntington, and Mr. Munson has been a deacon for nearly twenty-five years, and was one of the original incorporators of the church and society, and, of the original male members, he is the only survivor living in the town.

JABIN B. WILLIAMS.

Among the early settlers of Worthington, Mass., was Ebenezer Williams, who removed there from Canterbury, Conn., before the war of the Revolution. In that pioneer period roads were few and difficult, and Mr. Williams was obliged to transport his family on horseback to their new home, threading their way through the forest by the aid of "marked trees."

Leonard Williams, son of Ebenezer, became a physician of note, and settled in Chester (now Huntington) village. There he was prominent in his profession as well as in public affairs. His son, Jabin B. Williams, whose portrait appears upon this page, was born Jan. 5, 1800, in Worthington. The removal of his father to Chester took place when he was four years old. There he passed his early life. He received a good education, and when he was twenty-one years of age he removed to Becket, Berkshire Co., Mass. There he resided twenty years, after which period he returned to Huntington, where he died, May 31, 1859. Mr. Williams is remembered beyond his own immediate family for his true-hearted manliness, for his sterling integrity, and for his fidelity to his trusts and engagements.

He had the respect and the esteem of the community in which he lived, and during an active business life of over forty years, he always, and with great punctuality, fulfilled all his obligations, and left to his family an unsullied reputation.

Photo. by Moffitt.

Jabin B. Williams

His political sentiments were strongly in accord with those of the Democratic party, but he was averse to holding office or to public recognition.

He was early appointed a magistrate, and held that position throughout his life. He was the accepted and recognized legal and friendly counselor for his neighbors and the community, and in his judgment and integrity they had full confidence.

For years in Berkshire County he was the agent for the payment of pensions to the Revolutionary soldiers in his vicinity. At his store, in Becket, it was no uncommon sight to meet thirty or forty of these veterans, on the 4th of March or the 4th of September, assembled there to receive the bravely-earned bounty of the government they had helped to found. They indulged in reminiscences of those times "that tried men's souls," and fought over again the battles of that stormy period. Mr. Williams was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1853.

BELCHERTOWN.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THIS town is situated in the eastern part of the county, twelve miles east of the Connecticut River and fifteen from Northampton, and is bounded on the north by Pelham, on the south by Palmer and Ludlow, Hampden Co., on the east by Ware and Enfield, and on the west by Granby and Amherst, Hampshire Co. The town ranks among the largest in area in the State, and is about twelve miles in length north and south, and has an average width of about five miles.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface is rocky and somewhat difficult of cultivation, but fairly productive. The south part, being more level than the other sections, contains the best land, although some very good land exists in the north. The town is hilly throughout its entire extent. Great Hill, in the northeast part, is a prominent landmark. Turkey Hill, formerly known as Fisher's Knob, lies southwest of the centre. It is capped by "Rock Rimmon," so named by the students of Amherst College in 1854. This is a granite boss, not important enough to be called a mountain, but forming the highest point in the town.

Water-courses are quite abundant. Swift River forms the eastern boundary for a considerable distance, and affords two excellent water-privileges, which have never been utilized to any great extent or for any length of time. Jabesh Brook, which is more particularly referred to elsewhere, has its rise in Pelham, and flows in a southerly direction through Belchertown, joining the Swift River in the south part of the town, near Barrett's Junction. It is a stream of considerable importance, and furnishes several water-privileges, which have been utilized from its earliest settlement by various minor manufacturing enterprises. Other streams exist in different parts of the town, chiefly flowing in a westerly direction. Of these Batchelor's Brook is one which, flowing westward into Granby, becomes a stream of some note in that town and Hadley. Another is Fort River, which also flows westerly to the Connecticut through Amherst and Hadley.

The only natural bodies of water of importance are what are known as Upper, Middle, and Lower Ponds, in the north part of the town, which are also the sources of Batchelor's Brook and Fort River.

RAILROADS.

The Amherst and Belchertown Railroad Company was incorporated in 1851, with authority to construct a road from the depot of the New London, Willimantic and Palmer Railroad, crossing the Western Railroad at Palmer, and extending northerly through the towns of Belchertown, Amherst, Leverett, Sunderland, and Montague to the Vermont and Massachusetts Railroad, at a point the most convenient to intersect the latter in Montague. The company was organized June 30, 1851, and Luke Sweetser, Edward Dickinson, Ithamar Conkey, Myron Lawrence, Joseph Brown, Thomas H. Williams, and Andrew C. Lippitt were chosen directors, the first mentioned being elected president. John S. Adams was chosen clerk and treasurer. The work of grading the first section of the road from Palmer to Amherst was commenced in 1852, and that section was opened to use May 9, 1853, and was operated by the New London, Willimantic and Palmer Railroad Company under a lease, until Nov. 5, 1853, when it was operated by the Amherst and Belchertown Company. The section from Palmer to Amherst is a fraction less than twenty miles in length. The total cost of its construction, including land, damages, fences, and equipments, was $280,000. It is now controlled by the New London Northern Railroad Company. It has three stations in the town, one at Barrett's Junction, in the south part of the town, where it is crossed by the Springfield, Athol and Northeastern Railroad, one at Belchertown (village), and one at Dwight's Station, in the north part of the town.

The Springfield, Athol and Northeastern Railroad passes laterally through the southeastern section of Belchertown, having a station at Barrett's Junction.

SETTLEMENT.

The tract of country from Shutesbury to Chicopee River was formerly distinguished as the best hunting-ground in this section of the State. The hunters were accustomed to encircle a large tract of land by a line of fire, which, burning in every direction, gradually encompassed the game in a circle so narrow that they became an easy prey to their pursuers. In course of time the native forests which had covered the land were in a great measure consumed by this process. But the lands that had been thus burnt over were soon covered with a species of wild grass, affording excellent pasturage for cattle, and for many years great numbers of cattle and horses were annually sent out from Northampton and Hadley to graze upon these hills during the summer season. The tract of land thus burnt over included the territory of the present town of Belchertown, and the practice of burning over the lands continued for a considerable time after the first settlement.

The town was at first known by the name of "Cold Spring." It took its name from a noted spring, which still exists, on the Cyrus S. Bartlett farm, near the path that was formerly traveled from Northampton to Brookfield and Boston. After leaving Hadley, there was, for many years, no house nearer than Brookfield, and this spring, midway between the two towns, afforded a convenient place for refreshment to the traveler in his solitary journey through the wilderness. As the communication between the towns upon the river and the eastern section of the State grew more frequent the spring became a celebrated watering-place for travelers, and finally gave the first name to the township.

The same territory was also included in what became known as the "Equivalent Lands," the history of which is well known, and is more fully considered elsewhere in this work. These lands comprised the territory afterward included in the towns of Belchertown, Pelham, Prescott, Ware, and part of Enfield. At the time they were granted to the State of Connecticut no grants had been made to individuals within their limits.

In 1727 the State of Connecticut sold its rights in the territory of Belchertown to seven individuals residing in and near Boston in six equal divisions; the first division to Paul Dudley, two-thirds, and Col. John Wainright, one-third; second division, one-sixth to John Caswell; third division, one-sixth to Col. Thomas Fitch; fourth division, one-sixth to Adington Devenport; fifth division, one-sixth to Jonathan Belcher, Esq.; sixth division, one-sixth to William Clark's heirs. During the months of October and November of that year the territory was surveyed and platted by Col. Timothy Dwight, of Northampton. Col. Dwight was much employed in his day in surveying and platting towns in this section of the country, and was the grandfather of Rev. Timothy Dwight, D.D., afterward president of Yale College. Col. Dwight's survey embraced an area of 27,390 acres of land, but at the time of the incorporation of the town, June 30, 1761, its boundaries included an addition of 12,000 acres, on the north, a part of which now comes within the lines of Enfield.

No sooner had these purchasers obtained the Connecticut title to this territory than an attempt was made to establish a settlement. The earlier settlers in the towns on the Connecticut River had used the land as a hunting-ground, and game in abundance was to be found there; cattle were driven in herds from those places to browse through the forests during the summer season; temporary settlements were made for the purpose of boxing the pines and gathering the turpentine, and, perhaps, for securing a competent supply of candle-wood.

An order was passed by the town of Northampton in 1699, that no more candle-wood should be collected for use within seven miles of the meeting-house, on penalty of forfeiture of the same, and another order was made, by the same authority, in the year 1700, prohibiting the boxing of pine-trees for turpentine within three miles; these sources of gain must be sought beyond these limits, if sought at all.

As a means of bringing forward the settlement of "Cold Spring," the proprietors proposed to make gratuitous grants of lands to the settlers in the older towns on the river, upon condition of their removal and permanent settlement upon the granted lands. The proposals were acceded to, and several families from Northampton, Hatfield, and Hadley removed to the lands in July, 1731. No records of the transactions of the first settlers prior to 1739 are extant. From a petition on the files of the General Court in the State archives, dated December, 1737, signed by the settlers, they say "they had twenty families, and more expected soon;" they pray the General Court to grant them a land-tax to aid them, "for they are about settling a minister and building a meeting-house."

In another petition presented to the General Court, dated November, 1738, the petitioners say:

"We have agreed with Mr. Noah Merrick to settle with us in the gospel ministry, and pray for the privileges of a township."

The arrangement was never consummated, for, in June, 1741, Mr. Merrick was ordained as the first minister of the town of Wilbraham. In January, 1739, another petition was presented to the General Court praying for the same privilege. In still another petition to the General Court, dated November, 1740, the petitioners say:

"They "are greatly in debt for building a meeting-house, outside covered and glazed, and a minister settled; we are but twenty families, and owe Judge Dudley and others over two hundred pounds for lands for our minister's settlement, and to our minister between two and three hundred pounds for salary and settlement; we have sustained preaching five or six years, and have advanced the estates of the proprietors more than our own by settling Cold Spring."

They followed with a prayer for a land-tax. In another petition a little later they say:

"Three-quarters of the township is in the hands of five or six or a few more proprietors, who have drawn us into difficulties, and now seem to cut us off. Some of us who own 150 acres of land only have been rated in a single rate over twenty pounds. Some proprietors (non-resident) own thousands of acres around us, and pay not a penny."

They prayed the government to allow them to raise a tax on lands of non-resident proprietors; this petition was dated in 1741, and drawn by Col. Timothy Dwight, of Northampton, who was the first signer; it was not at that time granted, but they persevered in their requests. In May, 1742, they followed with another petition of similar import. In that they say:

"This township is a part of the equivalent land, so called. The whole was owned by a few children, who bought it of Connecticut, and four-fifths of it or more is now in the hands of these gentlemen or others, that hold under them, and live at a distance. About twenty of us have actually removed to this place with our families, and have settled a minister, raised, covered, and glazed a meeting-house. The minister's settlement is but half accomplished, nor has the cost of finishing the meeting-house been yet expended (paid). The minister's house which we undertook is neglected, and may rot down half finished; this is all discouraging. Our minister must leave us if we cannot have aid."

This petition prevailed, and leave was given to tax "all lands in the township one penny an acre, to fulfill the contract with the minister and finish the meeting-house." The embarrassed condition of the settlers referred to in these petitions retarded the growth of the settlement.

There was very little, if any, increase of population from 1736 to 1742. After the power was granted to tax the property in just and equal proportions to sustain their religious institutions, the settlement advanced and success attended them. Some of the means which they took to secure and perpetuate success appear in their votes. One was an increase of the minister's salary, that his labors may not be lost. Another vote was passed to appoint a committee to see that there should be no disorderly conduct upon the Sabbath. The population for ten years next following 1742 more than doubled; in 1752 there were more than 50 families. The particulars of the early religious affairs of the town—the central thought around which clustered the fondest aspirations of the first settlers of New England—are elsewhere considered.

THE FIRST SETTLERS.

Three families first settled on the new territory in July, 1731,—Samuel Bascom, — Hooker, and Benjamin Stebbins. Soon after, and the same year, Aaron Lyman came from Northampton, and John Bardwell from Hatfield the year following. They made their selections and locations. Bascom settled near where Ebenezer Bridgman afterward lived. He built a small house some twelve or fifteen rods from where Mr. Bridgman's dwelling stood, nearly in a westerly direction. This was the first dwelling erected in the town, and also the first tavern, as Bascom was licensed to keep an inn in 1733. Bascom's selection of 500 acres comprised the Moses Hannum farm, some of Mr. Bridgman's, some afterward owned by Mr. Chandler, the Gates farm, and perhaps others adjoining.

Hooker took his 500 acres near the subsequent location of Root's mill, easterly and southerly, and included the land in that section afterward owned by the Roots, Sabins, and others.

Stebbins made his selection in the northwesterly part of the town, comprising lands afterward owned by Col. Zenas Stebbins, Henry Stebbins, Capt. Gilbert, and others.

Aaron Lyman settled in Blue Meadow, and took lands afterward owned by Ralph Owen, Alden, and others.

John Bardwell made his selection in the south part of the town, where his descendants have lived for several generations.

Of these first settlers Hooker soon afterward moved away, left his lands, and was probably succeeded in their ownership by Hezekiah Root. So far as known, he derived little or no benefit from the sale of the remainder. Bascom remained on his grant about thirteen years, and then moved away. Stebbins lived and died in the town, making improvements upon his lands, and was the grandfather of Col. Zenas Stebbins. The family is still represented in the town. Deacon Aaron Lyman remained as a permanent settler, raised a family, and died June 12, 1780, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. His son, Josiah, afterward of Goshen, was born March 9, 1736, and was the second male child born in the town,—a son of Nathaniel Dwight (Elijah, who died young) being the first. Susanna Lyman, born Nov. 16, 1734, and daughter of Aaron Lyman, was the first. Deacon Lyman left a number of descendants.

About 1732 a man by the name of Jabez came into the place and built a small house on the west side of the brook, and near to it, a little north of Mason's Mill, on land afterward owned by Charles Dunbar. He never laid out his 500 acres, but soon moved away. The stream near which he located took its name from him, but has become transformed into Jabesh, by which it is now known. The people gave the name of Gilead to the smaller stream crossing the road a little distance beyond Root's early mill. These together constitute the name of Jabesh-Gilead, a city of some note in Palestine, belonging to the children of Manassah.

The next permanent settlement was made by Col. Timothy Dwight, who located in the centre of the town, and came from Northampton. He was proprietor of a tract of land extending nearly a mile each way from the centre. He remained but a short time, and then returned to Northampton. His son Nathaniel remained, however, and during his long and useful life was prominent among the first settlers, and died March 30, 1784, in the seventy-second year of his age.

The following names occur with great uniformity in the early settlement: John Smith, Joseph King; William, Samuel, and Moses Hannum; Abner Smith, Benjamin Stebbins, Ebenezer Warner, Moses Warner; Thomas, John, and Jonathan Graves; Benjamin Morgan, Ebenezer Bridgman, Joseph Bridgman, Samuel Bascom, Hezekiah Root, Robert Brown, Stephen Crawford, Israel Towne, Benjamin Billings, Thomas Graves, Walter Fairfield, Nathan Parsons, Eliakim Phelps, Joseph Bardwell, Israel and John Cowles, Thomas Brown, Nathaniel Dwight, Daniel Worthington, James Walker, Elihu Lyman, and Aaron Lyman. Of these, Phelps, Lyman, Root, Dwight, the Hannums, the Bridgmans, Stebbins, and Bascom were from Northampton; the Cowles, Bardwell, and the Graves were from Hatfield; the Smiths and Warner from Hadley.

Particular mention can be made of but few of these and other early families.

John Smith was the son of Joseph Smith, and grandson of Joseph Smith, who came from England and settled at Hartford, Conn., about 1651. He married Elizabeth Hovey, of Hadley, in 1709, and removed to Hatfield in 1711, where he was chosen deacon of the church. He settled in Belchertown in 1736, and was chosen first deacon of the church at its organization in 1737. He was a prominent actor in the religious and civil affairs of the town, and was authorized by the General Court to call the first meeting ever called by legislative authority of the settlers of Belchertown for police purposes, raising money to support the gospel, and for other prudential affairs. The church records say of him, "A valuable man in his day." He died in 1777, at the age of ninety-one. Several of his sons settled in town.

Deacon Aaron Lyman (formerly spelled Limon) was a grandson of John Lyman, of Northampton, whose name occurs there as early as 1661. He settled in Belchertown in 1731, and married Eunice, daughter of Nathaniel Dwight, the following year. He was chosen deacon in the church at its organization, and died in 1780, at the age of seventy-five. His descendants have disappeared from the town.

Ebenezer Bridgman was a native of Northampton, and came to Belchertown in 1732. His father was John Bridgman, of Northampton, whose father, James, was one of the Pilgrim Fathers, and settled in Hartford, Conn., in 1640, and afterward in Springfield. Ebenezer Bridgman married Mary Parsons in 1710, and passed his life in Belchertown, dying in 1760, at the age of seventy-four. Several of his descendants are still citizens of the town.

Benjamin Stebbins, a native of Northampton, was a descendant of Rowland Stebbins, who came to this country from England, in the ship "Francis," in 1634. He settled in Belchertown in 1731, and is said to have been the first actual settler of the town. He remained through life, raised a family which is still represented in the town, and died in 1789, at the age of seventy-eight.

Nathaniel Dwight was a native of Northampton, and a son of Nathaniel Dwight, who located at Northampton in 1689. His great-grandfather, John Dwight, came from England in 1636, and located at Dedham. Nathaniel settled in Belchertown in 1732, married Hannah Lyman, a sister of Aaron Lyman, and was a prominent man in all civil and religious affairs. He served as a captain in the French-and-Indian war, 1755-60, was active and useful in the Revolutionary war, and did much to advance the interests of the town. He died in 1784, at the age of seventy-two. The family is still represented. A second branch settled about 1775, in the person of Henry Dwight, from Western (now Warren), Mass.

Eliakim Phelps was born in Northampton in 1709, and was a descendant of Nathaniel Phelps, one of the first settlers of that place, and of William Phelps, who was one of the first settlers of Windsor, Conn., in 1640. He was the sixth settler in Belchertown, in 1731 or 1732. He lived an honorable and useful life, and died, leaving descendants, in the year 1777, at the age of sixty-nine. For his first wife he married Elizabeth Rust, of Northampton, who bore him six children, and died in 1752 at the age of forty; and for his second, Elizabeth Davis, of Springfield, who died in 1778, aged sixty-four, and by whom he had several children.

John Bardwell was a son of Robert Bardwell, who came from London to Boston about the year 1670. He settled in Belchertown in 1732, and was one of the first settlers. He had three sons, Martin, Joseph, and Jonathan, who came with their father. The family has been active and influential, and is still represented in the town. Bardwell village bears their name.

Moses and Ebenezer Warner were brothers, sons of Ebenezer Warner, of Hatfield, and grandsons of Daniel Warner, one of the first settlers of Hatfield in 1684. Moses, the eldest, was born in 1717, and Ebenezer in 1729. The former married Sarah Porter in 1739, and died in 1759, at the age of forty-two, leaving descendants. Ebenezer married Dinah Phelps, and died in the year 1812, at the age of eighty-three. Moses settled in the town about 1747; Ebenezer in 1752.

William and Samuel Hannum were brothers, and came to Belchertown with families in 1732. They were sons of John Hannum, and grandsons of William Hannum, one of the earliest settlers in Northampton. William was born in 1690, and died in 1756, leaving three sons. Samuel Hannum died in 1780, aged eighty-eight, leaving two sons.

The Graves family settled prior to 1735, in the persons of Thomas, John, and Jonathan, who came from Hatfield, and were lineal descendants of Thomas Graves, one of the first settlers of that place. Jonathan was born in 1702, and passed his life in Belchertown, dying in 1787 at the age of eighty-six, leaving descendants. Thomas and John were brothers, and sons of Samuel Graves. The former married a daughter of Isaac Graves, a cousin, and died in 1784, at the age of eighty-two. The latter was born in 1719, and died in 1798, at the age of eighty. The family is not now represented in the town.

Israel and John Cowles, sons of John Cowles, were natives of Hatfield, and born, the former in 1726, and the latter in 1731. They settled in Belchertown about the year 1752; both engaged in the French-and-Indian war, and went to the relief of Fort William Henry in 1757. Israel died in town in 1797, aged nearly seventy-one, leaving two sons. John died in 1811, aged eighty.

The Towne family are descended from William Towne, who came to this country and settled at Salem about 1640. Israel, son of Israel, purchased a farm in Belchertown, and settled in 1749, being then twenty-two years of age. He married Naomi, daughter of Benjamin Stebbins, in 1754. He died in 1805, aged seventy-eight, and his wife in 1827, aged ninety-two. They left a family of ten children, of whom a number settled in the town, and intermarried with some of the oldest and best families. The family is still represented.

Walter Fairfield, a native of Lenox, or Ipswich, was an early settler; located about 1742, and died in 1756, at the age of eighty-three.

Nathan Parsons settled about 1746, and was a brother of Rev. David Parsons, the first settled minister in Amherst. He raised a family, and died in 1806, at the age of eighty-six.

Hezekiah Root was a native of Northampton, and a lineal descendant of Thomas Root, one of the first settlers of Northampton. He settled prior to 1736, married, and raised a family. His brother Orlando also settled, and died in 1805, at the age of seventy-two, leaving descendants. Hezekiah died in 1792, at the age of seventy-eight.

Benjamin Morgan settled probably in 1750, passed his life in Belchertown, and had three sons, Benjamin, Titus, and Gad, and one daughter, Sarah, who married Benjamin Billings. Morgan was the last survivor of those who acted in town at the time of the settlement of Rev. Mr. Forward, in 1756. He died Aug. 21, 1812, aged ninety-three. His descendants are still represented in town.

Benjamin Billings was born in Hatfield in 1704, and was one of the first settlers in Belchertown. He married Mary Hastings, passed his life in the town, where he raised a family, and died in 1782, at the age of seventy-eight.

Stephen Crawfoot, from Northampton, was an early settler, before 1737. He served in the French war from Belchertown, and died in 1765, at the age of fifty-five.

Daniel Worthington, a native of Colchester, Conn., settled in town in 1753. He was a soldier in the French war, and went out in Capt. Nathaniel Dwight's company for the relief of Fort William Henry in 1757. He died at Woodstock, Vt., in 1830, at the age of ninety-eight.

Capt. James Walker was born in Weston, in November, 1732, and was a son of Nathaniel Walker. He settled in Belchertown in 1755, was twice married, and had eight sons, of whom James, Hezekiah, Silas, Jason, and Nathaniel lived to advanced ages in town. He served in the French war in 1757, and died in 1806, aged seventy-four.

TAVERNS.

The first house of public entertainment was by Samuel Bascom, one of the first settlers of the town. He was licensed to keep it in 1733, two years after the first settlements were made. It was probably a small affair, and was designed principally to accommodate the incoming settlers. Perhaps, also, it received some patronage from the travelers passing through the town from Northampton to Brookfield, and from those persons who came into the town after candle-wood, or for the purpose of boxing pine-trees for turpentine, for hunting purposes, or to attend the large herds grazing there.

Doubtless other early taverns existed near the same time, of which tradition does not speak. Nathaniel Dwight kept an inn for many years, as early as 1750, and through the Revolutionary war. Landlord Pliny Dwight is mentioned in the town records in 1781.

Elijah Dwight kept a tavern as early as 1783, on the south end of the town common. It was torn down a few years ago.

Henry Mellen kept one soon after, and for a good many years. James H. Clapp then followed for twenty years or more, and was a prominent man. After Clapp it was kept by various persons, including Ephraim and John Allen, Lyman Gates, a man named Topliff, Thomas Marshall, R. A. White, and Austin and John White. The building was taken down by Everett Clapp.

Jonathan Dwight had one opposite Mellen's, and kept it during a portion of the time that Mellen kept his. All these were kept in the central village.

Two taverns were kept in "Federal Street" a great many years ago, probably in the latter part of the last century. Capt. Asel Dunbar had one, and across the road from him Elisha Warner kept another. Dunbar was succeeded by Obed

Smith. Cotton Smith followed in the ownership, and finally men named Mellen and Warner. Increase Sikes now occupies the house as a dwelling. Warner's tavern is occupied as a residence by Wellington Walker.

A man named George Gilbert had a tavern as early as 1812, about three miles north of the central village, on the road to Northampton. Henry Dwight kept one early in the present century in the northeast part of the town, where Guy Allen now lives.

In the south part of the town there have been several. Samuel Shaw erected a public-house near Cold Spring at an early day, and it was first kept by a man named McKinney. Samuel Dougherty kept one near "Blue Meadow" about sixty years ago. About the year 1800 a man named Howe kept a tavern of some repute on the farm now owned and occupied by A. H. Bartlett, which was east of the centre, and near the present village. The stage-lines of that early day passed by the tavern, and the waters of "Cold Spring" were eagerly sought after by travel-worn wayfarers.

The hotel now known as the Belcher House, situated in the central village and the only one in the town, was originally occupied as the Belchertown Classical School. It was transformed into a hotel by Adolphus Strong, who became its first proprietor. It passed into the hands of various persons, among whom have been Col. Darling, Burnett & Cook, and Willard Owens. John L. Bacon, the present proprietor, purchased the house April 1, 1875, and has kept it since, with the exception of a short period when Walker & White conducted it. It is a well-kept and deservedly popular house.

STORES.

The stores that have been kept in the town have been so numerous that no attempt will be made to mention them all in this work. It is probable that trading-posts existed as early as 1750, but by whom kept has not transpired.

The first stores of consequence that existed were kept after the opening of the present century. Of these the first is said to have been kept by Caleb Clark, better known as "Squire" Clark. During the war of 1812 there were five stores in the town. Of these, Philo Dickinson had one in the building adjoining the present post-office. Where the post-office is Morris & Clark had another. Henry Mellen kept one on the corner, and Wright Bridgman had one where his descendants have since continued in trade. Another was on "Federal Street," then quite a noted locality, and was kept by Jonas Holland, who was afterward succeeded by Seneca Holland. For many years these, under different proprietors, were the principal stores in the town. Eldad Parsons had a store in the southeast part of the town sixty years ago. E. P. Killam was in trade in 1827, and Killam & Longley traded where the post-office now is. Elihu Root occupied the Mellen store about forty years ago, and about the same time Samuel Foster traded in the post-office building, but moved from that into the brick store on the road to the depot. D. Graves & Co. were prominent traders in 1830. At the same time S. & C. H. Dwight made saddles, bridles, valises, portmanteaus, and the like, and traded where Hamilton's shoe-shop now is. W. Reed & Son engaged in the tailoring business in 1830. Calvin White traded at "Slab City" in 1835. John Thurston had a store about twenty years ago under the old Baptist Church.

Those in trade now are E. R. Bridgman, T. R. Green, E. S. Bridgman, Edward S. Hopkins, G. W. Longley, William E. Bridgman, and Enoch Burnett. Besides these, there is a drug-store, and a number of small enterprises chiefly limited to one line.

PHYSICIANS.

The first to engage in the practice of medicine was Dr. Estes Howe. He is first mentioned on the records in 1770, but had then probably been in practice for a number of years. He served one campaign in the French-and-Indian war, and accompanied his father, Capt. Samuel Howe, to Ticonderoga. Upon the news of the conflict at Lexington he went to Roxbury and joined the troops there. He served in the Massachusetts line, and was commissioned surgeon in the regiment commanded by Col. Brewer. He afterward engaged in the Continental service, and was attached to the regiment commanded by Col. Putnam. He was with Gen. Gates at the surrender of Burgoyne, and continued with the army until the contest seemed to be at an end, when the wants of a growing family compelled him to return to practice. He was a prominent and useful man, and filled many offices of responsibility in the town. He died in 1825, at the age of seventy-nine.

The next physician was Dr. Amasa Scott, who is mentioned in the records in 1786. He lived in the east part of the town, and occupied the "old Fenton house," which stood near the old burying-ground. Dr. Martin Phelps succeeded him as early as 1798, and occupied the same house. Dr. Israel Trask came from Brimfield, Mass., in 1796, was here in 1802, but soon after returned to Brimfield.

Dr. William Bridgman resided where Worcester Longley now lives, and is referred to in the town records in 1815. He practiced a great many years, and finally removed to Springfield.

Dr. William Holland was in practice as early as 1819. He built the house where Edward Towne now resides. He also lived near where James H. Clapp formerly resided. In 1832 he removed to Canandaigua, N. Y.

Dr. Augustine Paine came from Granby in 1814, built the house now owned by Harrison Root, and died soon after.

Dr. Oliver S. Taylor, a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1809, commenced practice in Belchertown in 1814, and left in 1817.

Dr. Anson Moody, a graduate of Yale in 1814, studied medicine and practiced in 1826 in Belchertown, and was a successful and popular physician. He removed to Ware village in 1829, and from thence to Connecticut.

Dr. Horatio Thomson commenced practice in 1826 or 1827, and continued many years. In 1834 he married Lucy M., daughter of Hon. Mark Doolittle. He resided where his son, Dr. George Thomson, now lives, and after a long and successful professional life died Oct. 5, 1860, aged fifty-eight. His son, Dr. George F., succeeded him in practice, and is still successfully engaged in the discharge of the active duties of his profession.

Dr. Benj. Rush Palmer was a contemporary of Dr. Thomson for a short time, and removed to Woodstock, Vt., about 1830.

Dr. Orrich Willis was a native of the town, but never engaged in active practice in the place. He removed to Hardwick, changed his name to William H. Willis, and afterward engaged in practice at South Reading.

Dr. Charles Robinson was in practice about 1840, and for several years. He subsequently went to Kansas, and became governor of that State. He married Sarah, a daughter of Myron Lawrence, Esq., of Belchertown, who published a history of Kansas after their settlement in that State.

A number of other physicians have been in practice in the town,—Dr. Allen, Dr. Loren Allen, and Dr. Bement, for a number of years; Dr. Temple, for a considerable time; Dr. Bassett, Dr. Roberts, Dr. Bottom, and others.

The only physician besides Dr. Thomson now in practice is Dr. William Robinson, who has practiced in the town for the past three years.

LAWYERS.

The town has had a good supply of lawyers. The first to practice was Joseph Bridgman, many years ago. The next was Mason Shaw, for a few years.

Hon. Mark Doolittle graduated at Yale College in 1804, studied law, and soon after settled in Belchertown. He was in practice for many years, and was a prominent, useful, and active man. He filled many public offices of trust and responsibility, and was the author of an historical sketch of the Congregational Church of Belchertown, one of the most exhaustive treatises in print. He died several years ago.

Hon. Myron Lawrence was another strong member of the profession who practiced in Belchertown. He studied with Mr. Doolittle, commenced practice about 1820, and continued until his death, in November, 1852, at the age of fifty-three. He was a large man, of commanding appearance and impressive manners, and possessed that peculiar organism which is calculated to control and govern others. He was prominent and popular, not only in the town, but in the State, and was identified with various popular movements. He repeatedly represented the town and county in both branches of the Legislature, and was a member of the Senate at the time of his death. He was president of the State Senate, and filled the position with great ability. As a lawyer he took high rank.

S. W. E. Goddard studied law with Mr. Lawrence, and engaged in practice from about 1856 to 1863. He was the last regular practitioner the town has had.

Franklin D. Richards, now of Ware, practiced for a short time before removing to that village. Edward Clark practiced for a brief period, about 1840.

STAGE-ROUTES, ROADS, AND POUNDS.

The principal stage-route through the town was that from Northampton to Boston, which was established at the opening of the present century. It was owned from Northampton to Belchertown by James H. Clapp, and from the latter place to Ware by William Phelps. The ownership frequently changed. An opposition line was started by Cotton Smith and a man named Mellen, and run for a time. They owned from Northampton to Ware.

Probably the first road laid out in the town was what was known as the "Great Road," passing from Hadley to Brookfield. It existed in 1756, and was the one which these stage-routes followed, entering at the northwest corner and passing southeasterly through the town. For a long time after the settlement nothing but "bridle-paths" existed. In 1762 the town "voted to choose a committee to lay out a road for Thomas Graves to get to meeting and mill." This was the first vote upon the subject. At a later day Henry Dwight built a turn-pike from Belchertown to Greenwich Plains, and established a toll-gate. It was afterward controlled by his son, and finally passed into the hands of his grandson.

The first pound was voted, in 1758, to stand near the meeting-house. A new one was voted, Dec. 24, 1773, to be of stone, 40 feet square and 6 feet high, and to occupy the same place as the old one. Thaddeus Fairchild built it for £5. In 1792 it was voted to sell the pound and build a new one.

THE POST-OFFICE

at Belchertown Centre was established about 1812, or a little earlier, and the first postmaster was Philo Dickinson. He was followed by Mason Shaw. Joshua Longley probably came next, and was followed by Phineas Bridgman. Samuel W. Longley, the present incumbent, was appointed during the first administration of President Lincoln.

MEN OF DISTINCTION.

Rev. Horatio Bardwell was a native of the town, and a son of Capt. Elijah and Sarah W. (Smith) Bardwell. He was ordained a missionary to India in 1815, and the same year sailed in company with Messrs. Richards, Warren, Meigs, and Poor, under the patronage of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, for the island of Ceylon. After remaining at Ceylon a short time, by direction of the Board, he joined the mission at Bombay, where he labored as missionary of the Board until 1821, when his health became so impaired as to make it necessary for him to resign and return to his native land. In 1823 he became the settled pastor at Holden, Mass. In 1831 he accepted an appointment as general agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and in 1836 was again settled in the ministry at Oxford, Mass.

Rev. Amasa Smith, a brother of Revs. John and Eli Smith, and son of Deacon Joseph, was born in Belchertown, Feb. 24, 1756. He was elected deacon in 1795; married Sophia Lyman in 1787; was a major in the militia, and carried on the business of farming until 1802. He then left town, studied theology with Rev. O. Crosby, and was ordained in the ministry at North Yarmouth, Me., May 23, 1804. He was dismissed, and subsequently settled at Cumberland, Me., where he spent the remnant of his days in usefulness. He died there March 9, 1847, at the advanced age of ninety-one.

Rev. Eli Smith was also a son of Deacon Joseph, and was born in Belchertown, Sept. 17, 1759. He pursued a course of classical study, and graduated at Brown University in 1792. He studied theology with Rev. Dr. Emmons, and was ordained and settled in the ministry at Hollis, N. H., Nov. 27, 1793. He was dismissed Feb. 28, 1831, and died at Hollis, May 12, 1847, at the age of eighty-seven.

Prof. John Smith was a son of Deacon Joseph Smith, and born in Belchertown, March 5, 1766. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1794, studied theology, and settled in the ministry at Salem, N. H., Jan. 4, 1797, where he continued until Nov. 21, 1816, when he was dismissed. He was installed as pastor of the church in Wenham, Mass., in 1817, and in 1819 received the appointment of Professor of Sacred Literature and Theology in the Divinity School at Bangor, Me., which position he accepted, and where he remained in the faithful discharge of its duties until his death, April 14, 1831, at the age of sixty-five. He possessed good powers of mind, was diligent in his calling, and successful in his ministerial labors. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College before his death. He attained distinction in classical and theological science, and for years was in prominent standing among the divines of New England.

Rev. Ethan Smith was a son of Deacon Elijah Smith (brother of Deacon Joseph), born in Belchertown, Dec. 19, 1762. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1790, studied theology with Rev. Dr. Burroughs and Rev. Dr. Burton, and was ordained and settled in the ministry at Haverhill, N. H., Jan. 25, 1792. He was dismissed June 23, 1799, and installed in the pastorate of the church at Hopkinton, N. H., March 12, 1800. He remained there till Dec. 16, 1817, when he was dismissed and installed over a church at Hebron, N. Y., Feb. 26, 1818. He was dismissed from that charge Aug. 29, 1821, installed at Poultney, Vt., Nov. 21, 1821, and dismissed Dec. 29, 1826. He was installed at Hanover, Mass., May 16, 1827, and dismissed about 1832. Subsequently he acted as city missionary in Boston, and as an agent for various Bible societies, continuing his active labors in the ministry until his death, Aug. 29, 1849, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. He published several works,—one "On the Prophecies" and another, "A Key to the Revelations,"—which were favorably received.

Rev. Josiah Towne, son of Amasa Towne, was born in Belchertown, Dec. 13, 1787. He graduated at Middlebury College, Vermont, in 1812, studied theology with Rev. Mr. Griswold, and was ordained in the ministry at Hanover Centre, N. H., June 22, 1814. He continued there eighteen years and five months, and died May 3, 1855, at the age of sixty-seven.

Rev. Giles Lyman, son of Josiah Lyman, was born at Belchertown, March 16, 1802. He graduated at Amherst College in 1827, at Andover Theological Seminary in 1831, and was ordained at Jaffrey, N. H., Jan. 11, 1832. He was dismissed May 3, 1837, and installed at Marlboro', N. H., in December, 1840. He remained there until 1867, and died Nov. 11, 1872, aged seventy.

Rev. Lewis Sabin, D.D., was born at Wilbraham, Mass.,

April 9, 1807; came to Belchertown with his father, Thomas Sabin, Jr., when but six years of age, and passed his early life in town. He graduated at Amherst College in 1831, and was valedictorian of one of the largest and best classes of that institution. He was four years principal of Hopkins Academy, studied theology, and was ordained in June, 1836, as a missionary to Canada. Was installed pastor of the church in Templeton, Mass., Sept. 21, 1837, and continued there until Sept. 24, 1872, when the relation was terminated at his own request. He was for many years trustee of Amherst College, and frequently taught the classics to private pupils.

One of the most eminent men whom the town has produced is Dr. Josiah G. Holland, son of Harrison Holland, who was born in the north part of the town, and passed the first ten years of his life there. His wide reputation as a writer of both prose and verse, and his high standing as an author and editor in the literary world, render a fuller reference to his career unnecessary.*

Prof. William L. Montague, of Amherst College, is a native of the town, and a son of Deacon Ephraim Montague; also Prof. Elihu Root, of the same institution, son of Deacon Harrison Root, of Belchertown. The former is professor of the modern Romanic languages; the latter of physics. Other citizens of the town have adorned the various walks of life, and attained to eminence and distinction.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION.

The first meeting of the settlers of Cold Spring, held by legislative authority for police purposes, for choosing precinct officers, for raising money to support the gospel, and for other prudential affairs, was convened April 28, 1740. The precinct continued until the incorporation of the town. As early as 1757 measures were taken to obtain an act of incorporation, with town privileges, but did not meet with success for several years. At a precinct meeting, held Dec. 29, 1760, a committee was appointed to present a petition to the General Court for an act of incorporation as a town. In March, 1761, the petition was presented, and on June 23d following an act was passed incorporating the town by the name of Belcherstown, in honor of Jonathan Belcher, formerly a large owner of the territory of the town and Governor of the Province of Massachusetts from 1730 to 1740. The letter "s" has since been dropped from the name. The right of choosing a representative to the General Court was not confirmed by the act of incorporation.

A warrant was issued by the General Court for calling the first town-meeting to Eleazer Porter, Esq., one of his Majesty's justices for the county of Hampshire, and the meeting was duly convened Sept. 30, 1761. Nathaniel Dwight was chosen Moderator and Clerk; Deacon Aaron Lyman, Lieut. Abner Smith, and Joseph Bridgman, Selectmen and Assessors; Nathaniel Dwight, Treasurer; Joseph Graves and James Walker, Constables and Collectors; Sergt. Hezekiah Root and Sergt. Daniel Smith, Wardens; Joseph Smith and Israel Cowles, Surveyors of Highways; Joseph Bardwell and Moses Hannum, Tythingmen; Benjamin Morgan and Ebenezer Warner, Fence-Viewers; Lieut. Abner Smith, Clerk of the Market; Joseph Bridgman, Sealer of Leather; Benjamin Morgan, Deer-Reave; and Caleb Clark and John Cowles, Hog-Reaves.

The following is the list of the principal precinct and town officers, so far as furnished by the records of the town, together with the list of representatives to the General Court:

COMMITTEE OF THE PRECINCT.

- 1742.—John Smith, Aaron Lyman, Nathaniel Dwight.
- 1743.—John Smith, Samuel Bascom, Nathaniel Dwight.
- 1744.—John Smith, Aaron Lyman, Nathaniel Dwight.
- 1745.—John Smith, Jonathan Graves, Nathaniel Dwight.
- 1746-48.—Joseph Bardwell, Walter Fairfield, Joseph Smith.

* See biography in this work.

Photo. by J. L. Lovell, Amherst.

JOSEPH R. GOULD.

- 1749.—Walter Fairfield, Moses Hannum, Joseph Smith.
 1750.—Stephen Crowfoot, Benjamin Billings, Abner Smith.
 1751-52.—Abner Smith, Joseph Bardwell, Aaron Lyman.
 1753.—Elijah Smith, Joseph Bardwell, Hezekiah Root.
 1754-55.—Nathaniel Dwight, Abner Smith, Joseph Bridgman.
 1756.—Nathaniel Dwight, Abner Smith, Elijah Smith.
 1758.—Nathaniel Dwight, Thomas Chapin, Nathaniel Thwing.
 1759.—Abner Smith, Hezekiah Root, Caleb Clark.
 1760.—Joseph Bardwell, Joseph Smith, Moses Hannum.
 1761.—Jonathan Bardwell, Joseph Smith, Moses Hannum.

SELECTMEN.

- 1761.—Aaron Lyman, Abner Smith, Joseph Bridgman.
 1762.—Aaron Lyman, Joseph Bridgman, Daniel Smith.
 1763-66.—Nathaniel Dwight, Joseph Bridgman, Daniel Smith.
 1767.—Nathaniel Dwight, Joseph Bridgman, Jonathan Bardwell.
 1768.—Nathaniel Dwight, Elijah Smith, John Cole.
 1769.—Nathaniel Dwight, Daniel Smith, Samuel Howe.
 1770.—Nathaniel Dwight, Elijah Smith, Israel Cows.
 1771.—Nathaniel Dwight, Daniel Smith, Joseph Smith, Samuel Howe, James Walker.
 1772.—Nathaniel Dwight, Joseph Bridgman, Israel Cows, Samuel Howe, Daniel Smith.
 1773-74.—Nathaniel Dwight, Samuel Howe, Daniel Smith, Jonathan Bardwell, Joseph Graves.
 1775.—Nathaniel Dwight, Nathan Kingsley, Daniel Smith, Israel Cows, Joseph Smith.
 1776.—Nathaniel Dwight, Caleb Clark, Benjamin Morgan, Daniel Smith, Zachariah Eddy.
 1777.—Nathaniel Dwight, Caleb Clark, Daniel Smith, Joseph Smith, Deacon Clough, Zachariah Eddy, Henry Dwight.
 1778.—Joseph Smith, Israel Cows, Jacob Wilson, Henry Dwight, Samuel Worthington.
 1779.—Nathaniel Dwight, Daniel Smith, Samuel Howe, Joseph Williams, Elijah Chapin.
 1780.—Israel Cows, Joseph Smith, Henry Dwight.
 1781.—Joseph Smith, John Cows, Isaac Stacy, Josiah Lyman, Reuben Barton.
 1782.—Joel Green, Estes Howe, Jonathan Flint.
 1783.—Estes Howe, James Walker, Josiah Lyman.
 1784.—Henry Dwight, Gideon Stebbins, Henry Smith.
 1785.—Estes Howe, Josiah Lyman, Edward Smith.
 1786.—Josiah Lyman, Estes Howe, James Walker.
 1787.—James Walker, Josiah Lyman, Henry Dwight.
 1788.—Ebenezer Warner, Estes Howe, Simeon Bardwell.
 1789.—Ebenezer Warner, Justus Dwight, Thomas Wilson.
 1790.—Justus Dwight, Estes Howe, John Cows.
 1791.—Justus Dwight, Ebenezer Warner, Thomas Wilson.
 1792-93.—Park Holland, Henry Dwight, Justus Dwight.
 1794.—Henry Dwight, Justus Dwight, Eleazer Clark.
 1795.—Estes Howe, Amasa Smith, Eleazer Clark.
 1796.—Park Holland, Justus Dwight, Thomas Wilson.
 1797-98.—Park Holland, Thomas Wilson, Martin Phelps.
 1799.—Justus Dwight, Thomas Wilson, Jonas Holland.
 1800.—Estes Howe, Justus Dwight, Eliakim Phelps.
 1801.—Justus Dwight, Eliakim Phelps, Robert Dunbar.
 1802.—Justus Dwight, Eliakim Phelps, Eleazer Clark.
 1803-4.—Eliakim Phelps, Eleazer Clark, John Gilbert.
 1805-6.—Eliakim Phelps, Eleazer Clark, Thomas Wilson.
 1807-8.—Eliakim Phelps, Eleazer Clark, Jonas Holland.
 1809.—Eliakim Phelps, Jonas Holland, Eldad Parsons.
 1810.—Wright Bridgman, Jason Walker, Zenas Stebbins.
 1811-13.—Eliakim Phelps, Wright Bridgman, Jonas Holland.
 1814.—Wright Bridgman, Jason Walker, Bela Barber.
 1815-16.—Jonas Holland, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., Justus Forward.
 1817.—Eliakim Phelps, Wright Bridgman, James Whitman.
 1818.—Wright Bridgman, James Whitman, Jonathan Dwight.
 1819.—James Whitman, Jonathan Dwight, Eneas Clark.
 1820.—James Whitman, Jason Walker, George Gilbert.
 1821.—Jonathan Dwight, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., Henry Mellen, Smith Barrett, Theodore Bridgman.
 1822.—Jonathan Dwight, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., Henry Mellen, Smith Barrett, Jonas Holland.
 1823.—James Whitman, Smith Barrett, Reuben Cook.
 1824.—Smith Barrett, Reuben Cook, Mark Doolittle.
 1825.—Smith Barrett, Mark Doolittle, Daniel Wilson.
 1826.—Justus Forward, Jonas Holland, Jonathan Olds.
 1827-28.—Jonathan Olds, Enoch Burnett, Joseph Bridgman.
 1829.—Mark Doolittle, Eneas Clark, Reuben Cleveland.
 1830.—Smith Barrett, Israel Towne, William Bridgman.
 1831.—Justus Forward, Israel Towne, William Bridgman.
 1832.—Justus Forward, Israel Towne, Leonard Barrett.
 1833-34.—Justus Forward, William Bridgman, Gideon Ames.
 1835.—Gideon Ames, Israel Towne, Samuel Perry.
 1836-37.—Gideon Ames, Israel Towne, Simeon Pepper.
 1838.—Gideon Ames, James H. Clapp, Simeon Pepper.
 1839.—Gideon Ames, Israel Towne, James H. Clapp.
 1840.—Gideon Ames, William Phelps, James H. Clapp.

- 1841-42.—Gideon Ames, William Phelps, Jonas Holland.
 1843.—Israel Towne, Roderick Dorman, Jonas Holland.
 1844.—Gideon Ames, George Abbey, Harrison Root.
 1845.—Gideon Ames, Leonard Barrett, Francis Forward.
 1846.—Israel Towne, Humphrey T. Filer, Henry Bridgman.
 1847.—Israel Towne, Henry Bridgman, George Chandler.
 1848.—Israel Towne, Calvin Bridgman, William Phelps.
 1849.—Calvin Bridgman, Harrison Root, Roswell Allen.
 1850.—Roswell Allen, George Chandler, Leonard Barrett.
 1851.—Calvin Bridgman, Humphrey T. Filer, Roderick Dorman.
 1852.—Myron Lawrence, Henry Bridgman, Harrison Root.
 1853.—Henry Bridgman, Augustus L. Gates, George Chandler.
 1854.—Ebenezer Warner, George Chandler, Amos L. Mason.
 1855.—Ebenezer Warner, Luther Holland, Jesse Morse.
 1856.—Luther Holland, Samuel A. Shaw, Phineas Bridgman.
 1857-58.—Wright Bridgman, John T. Thurston, Butler Barrett.
 1859.—Wright Bridgman, John T. Thurston, Wareham C. Gilbert.
 1860.—Jonathan Webber, Harrison Root, Sewall Randall.
 1861-62.—Joshua G. Longley, Martin Sedgwick, Henry J. Chandler.
 1863.—Leonard Barrett, Joshua G. Longley, Wright Bridgman.
 1864-65.—Joshua G. Longley, A. R. Owen, Henry J. Chandler.
 1866.—J. G. Longley, A. R. Owen, Samuel D. Cowles.
 1867.—Thomas R. Green, Addison Burnett, F. M. Bardwell.
 1868.—Amasa Town, Addison Burnett, Elliot Bridgman.
 1869.—Elliot Bridgman, Joshua G. Longley, Amasa Town.
 1870.—Joshua G. Longley, A. R. Owen, Asahel H. Dorman.
 1871.—J. G. Longley, Asahel H. Dorman, Dexter Davis.
 1872.—A. R. Owen, Leonard Barrett, Nathaniel Dwight.
 1873.—Nathaniel Dwight, Abner D. Hitchcock, A. R. Owen.
 1874.—Franklin Dickinson, D. V. Fuller, Martin Sedgwick.
 1875-77.—Franklin Dickinson, Enoch Burnett, Martin Sedgwick.
 1878.—Franklin Dickinson, Enoch Burnett, J. R. Gould.
 1879.—A. Wells Stacy, William Henry Bridgman, Joseph R. Gould.

PRECINCT CLERKS.

- 1742, Nathaniel Dwight; 1746, Moses Hannum; 1748, Abner Smith; 1755, Nathaniel Dwight; 1759, Caleb Clark.

TOWN CLERKS.

- 1761, Nathaniel Dwight; 1778, Joseph Smith; 1779, Nathaniel Dwight; 1780, Elijah Dwight; 1782, Dr. Estes Howe; 1783, Elijah Dwight; 1784, Josiah Lyman; 1785, Justus Dwight; 1786, Elijah Dwight; 1787, Dr. Estes Howe; 1789, Oliver Bridgman; 1791, Estes Howe; 1796, Elisha Warner; 1799, Eleazer Clark; 1809, Justus Forward, Jr.; 1815, Philo Dickinson; 1818, Joseph Bridgman, Jr.; 1819, William Bridgman; 1824, Philo Dickinson; 1826, J. D. Lyman; 1827, Philo Dickinson; 1830, Wright Bridgman, Jr.; 1846, Henry A. Longley; 1857, E. R. Bridgman; 1873, Nathaniel Dwight; 1874, Charles L. Washburne.

REPRESENTATIVES.

- 1780, Joseph Smith, Daniel Smith; 1781-83, Caleb Clark; 1784, '85, '87, Joseph Smith; 1788, Justus Dwight; 1792-94, 1796-98, Park Holland; 1799, Eleazer Clark; 1800, Park Holland; 1801-4, Eleazer Clark; 1805, Eliakim Phelps, Joseph Bridgman, Jr.; 1806, Eleazer Clark, Eliakim Phelps; 1807, Eliakim Phelps, Eldad Parsons; 1808, Eleazer Clark, Eliakim Phelps, Joseph Bridgman, Jr.; 1809, Eliakim Phelps, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., Eldad Parsons; 1810-11, Eliakim Phelps, Wright Bridgman, Eldad Parsons; 1812, Eliakim Phelps, Wright Bridgman, Phineas Blair; 1813, Eliakim Phelps, Wright Bridgman, Justus Forward, Jr.; 1814, Eliakim Phelps, Wright Bridgman, Mark Doolittle; 1815, Eliakim Phelps, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., Mark Doolittle; 1816, Joseph Bridgman, Jr., Eliakim Phelps; 1817, Joseph Bridgman, Jr.; 1818, Eliakim Phelps; 1819, Philo Dickinson; 1820, Justus Forward; 1821, Joseph Bridgman, Jr.; 1822-23, James Whitman; 1824-25, Mark Doolittle; 1826, Dr. Wm. Bridgman; 1827-28, Joseph Bridgman, Myron Lawrence; 1829, Jonathan Olds, Justus Forward; 1830, Joseph Bridgman; 1831, Justus Forward; 1832, Jonathan Forward, Jonathan Olds; 1833, Justus Forward, Wm. Bridgman, Daniel Phelps; 1834, Justus Forward, Jonathan Olds, Wm. Bridgman; 1835, Israel Towne, Daniel Phelps; 1836, Israel Towne; 1837, Israel Towne, Samuel Strong; 1838, Israel Towne; 1839, Rev. Chester Tilden, James H. Clapp; 1840-41, James H. Clapp; 1843, Gideon Ames; 1844, Henry A. Bridgman; 1845, Roderick Dorman; 1846, George B. Woods; 1847, Harrison Root; 1848, Henry A. Longley; 1849, Myron Lawrence; 1850, Leonard Barrett; 1851, Henry A. Longley; 1852, Calvin Bridgman; 1853, Henry A. Longley; 1855, Ebenezer Warner; 1856, Samuel A. Shaw; 1858, Charles L. Washburne; 1859, Samuel D. Cowles; 1861, Luther Holland; 1862, William N. Fay; 1864, Harrison Root; 1866, Joshua G. Longley; 1868, Henry B. Blake; 1870, Phineas Bridgman; 1872, Addison Burnett; 1874, W. E. Bridgman; 1877, Thomas R. Green.

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

BELCHERTOWN POST-OFFICE

is the principal village in the town, situated at the geographical centre. It is ranged principally along the road leading from Northampton to Ware, and is about a mile in length. It comprises three churches, a town-hall, a public-house, a number of stores and mechanics' shops, and a large number of dwelling-houses. The inhabitants are cultivated and refined.

* The town was fined for not sending a representative in 1786.

In the centre of the village is a beautiful common. This was presented to the town, together with the land upon which the Congregational Church stands, by Col. Elijah Dwight, by deed dated April 1, 1791. It was neatly fenced by the Belchertown Park Association, in 1873, and presents a pleasing and attractive appearance. The village was the site of the earliest municipal enterprises of the town, and has always been the chief point of interest.

BARDWELL VILLAGE

is a place of some consequence situated in the southeasterly part of the town, and has been the site of a considerable manufacturing business. The Methodist Church formerly stood near there. It derives its name from the Bardwell family.

DWIGHT'S STATION is the name given to a small hamlet in the northwestern part of the town, named in honor of the Dwight family.

SLAB CITY, formerly known as "New Mills," is a small hamlet in the eastern part, on Swift River, and marks the site of the best water-privilege in the town.

BARRETT'S JUNCTION, in the south part of the town, is where the Springfield, Athol and Northeastern Railroad crosses the New London Northern.

EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS.

There is no record of any money appropriated by the town for educational purposes prior to its incorporation. Whatever was done before that time was by individual effort.

The first mention of money for a school was at a precinct-meeting, held Nov. 18, 1756, when Nathaniel Dwight, Treasurer, was by vote authorized to receive of Edward Pyncheon, County Treasurer, for the support of a school, the money "granted out of Sheffield's fine."

An article was inserted in the warrant for the March meeting, in 1762, to argue upon some measure for setting up and maintaining a school in the town. Accordingly, on March 3d of that year the town

"Voted to raise 6 pounds, lawful money, for the paying a schoolmaster the next winter season to teach children to read and write. Chose Joseph Bridgman, Caleb Clark, Jonathan Baidwell, Benjamin Morgan, and Isaac Coles a committee to get a schoolmaster, determine what time next fall he shall begin the school where he shall keep in each quarter, who shall board him, and what wages he shall have."

In December of the same year it was voted that the school be moved to the several places ordered by the committee.

Dec. 20, 1762, Joseph Bridgman was "voted four shillings for going to Amherst for a schoolmaster."

Dec. 19, 1763, it was

"Voted to raise 12 pounds, to be sequestered to the use of a school or some other necessary use that the town shall see fit to put it to."

In 1764 the sum of £8 was appropriated for a school, and in 1766 the amount was increased to £10. Dec. 5, 1767, Hezekiah Root, Moses Hannum, and Israel Cowles were chosen a committee "to pitch upon three places to set school-houses to accommodate the town and report;" and they reported "one to be set on the plain at the top of the pine hill, this side of Hannum's; one on the road between 'Jabesh' and 'Gilead,' and one near to Mr. James Walker's."

The town voted to accept the report of the committee, and Moses Hannum, James Walker, and William Kentfield were appointed a committee to get the timber for the houses. The whole vote was afterward reconsidered.

In 1776, £25 were appropriated for schools, and in 1780 "£1000 to support a school,"—an apt illustration of the state of the times at that period and the condition of the finances. In 1783, £60 was appropriated to be laid out in schools, and a committee of seven was chosen to district the town. This was done in 1784, and each district was authorized to build a school-house. The names of the districts at that time were New State, No. 1, Middle of the Town, Dark Corner, Turkey Hill, West Side of Great Hill, East Side of Great Hill, North End of Great Hill, and Loggtown. In 1796, £100 were appropriated for schools; in 1802, $500; in 1806, $600; in 1810, $700; in 1812, $1100; and in 1815, $800.

At the present time there are 18 schools in the town, including a high school and grammar school. The number of scholars in attendance upon them is 572. The average attendance for the year 1878 was 363; number of teachers, 27; aggregate length of all the schools, 142 months and 15 days. The appropriation for school purposes in 1878 was $3500, and the addition of other funds raised the cash resources of the schools for that year to $5662.44. The appropriation for 1879 was $3500.

Some of the early teachers in the town have been Horatio B. Haskett, James B. Hadley, Eliza Burk, Mary A. Burk, and Laura Abbey. In the Cold Spring district the following persons taught from 1816 to 1825 inclusive: Roderick Dorman, Ambrose Edson, Ellis C. Scott, Austin Russ, Wm. H. Whittemore, Orin Carpenter, Leonard Lewis, Calvin White, Wm. J. Sherman, Ira Stacy, Loren Cleveland, Diana Phelps, Mary Newell, Azubah Hamilton, Elizabeth Whitman, Emily White, and Eliza Burk.

SCHOOLS.

Besides the public schools, a number of private schools of great excellence have been taught, prominent among which was the Belchertown Classical School, which was incorporated in 1836, and which had an attendance of 60 pupils the year following.

NEWSPAPERS.

A newspaper entitled the Hampshire Sentinel and Farmers' and Manufacturers' Journal was started in Belchertown, in the year 1826, by J. R. Shute. The first number was issued in November of that year. Mr. Shute died March 21, 1828, at the age of twenty-eight years, and was succeeded by C. A. Warren, who carried on the business for three months, and was in turn succeeded by Warren & Wilson. Their first number was issued Aug. 6, 1828.

This firm published the paper until Sept. 8, 1830, when it was published by S. W. Andrews, as the Hampshire Sentinel, for certain owners whose names did not appear in the columns of the paper as proprietors. The last number of the paper was issued May 4, 1831, when it was consolidated with the Northampton Courier, at that time owned by Atwell & Turner. At the time of the union the Sentinel had about 500 subscribers, but was never a paying enterprise.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL.

As in most of the New England towns, the first denomination of Christians to establish themselves in Belchertown was the Congregational. This church was for many years the sole religious body in the town, and to its support each of the inhabitants were compelled to contribute, as to any other town institution.

No sooner had the first permanent settlements been made than the work of organizing a church and settling a minister was begun. The precise date of the establishment of the former is not known. No church records are extant anterior to Feb. 26, 1756, but the church was probably organized in the spring of 1737.

The subject of erecting a meeting-house was brought up in that year. A year after, the building was ready for use, though not actually finished until 1746, when it was "done in a manner suited to their embarrassed circumstances." Their first building erected as a place of public worship stood on the westerly side of the road leading south from the centre, and about seventy-five rods south of the present house.

The first male members of the church were probably Samuel Bascom, Benjamin Stebbins, Aaron Lyman, John Bardwell, Jonathan Graves, John Smith, Ebenezer Bridgman, Moses Hannum, Eliakim Phelps, Jos. Bardwell, Nathaniel Dwight, Oliver Smith, Joseph Bridgman, Thomas Graves, Benjamin Billings, Stephen Crawford, Joseph King, and Robert Brown, who have been already referred to as the pioneer settlers of the town.

The early struggles of these men to establish religious worship in the town have already been referred to, and the petitions sent by them to the General Court in the first years of their settlement indicate, to some extent, the serious obstacles and discouragements which they were compelled to encounter.

During the excitement which occurred about 1825, in relation to the institution of Freemasonry, the church was divided, and a separate organization, denominated the "Brainerd Church and Society," was established on Sept. 30, 1834. The two churches were reunited on Aug. 31, 1841, and the beautiful house of worship which the Brainerd Church had erected in 1834 passed into the hands of the Baptist denomination.

The house of worship now occupied by the society was erected in 1789, but was not dedicated until Sept. 12, 1792. In 1828 it was much enlarged and the interior entirely reconstructed at an expense of over $3000. Again, in 1850, it was remodeled and better adapted to the wants of the minister and congregation. It was put into its present condition in the summer of 1872, being reconstructed and refurnished at a cost of $7000. It was rededicated Sept. 12, 1872, on the eightieth anniversary of its first dedication. The exercises of the occasion included a sermon by the pastor, Rev. P. W. Lyman, an historical address by Rev. G. A. Oviatt, and dedicatory prayer by Rev. H. B. Blake, former pastors.

Pastors.—The first pastor of this church was Rev. Edward Billing, a native of Sunderland, and a graduate of Harvard College. He accepted the call in a letter dated Feb. 22, 1739, and was probably ordained in April, 1739. He was dismissed in April, 1752. In 1754 he became the first pastor of the church in Greenfield, where he died about the year 1757.

Rev. Justus Forward, the second pastor, was born in Suffield, Conn., May 11, 1730; graduated from Yale College in 1754; taught school in Hatfield, where he studied theology; was licensed to preach in the fall of 1755, and was ordained Feb. 25, 1756. He was sole pastor till March, 1812, when a colleague was settled. He died March 8, 1814, in the fifty-ninth year of his ministry, and the eighty-fourth year of his age, having followed to the grave more than 900 of his people. During his ministry 380 members were received into the church, of whom 294 joined on profession of faith. Several revivals of religion occurred during his connection with the church, the most remarkable of which was in the years 1785-86.

Rev. Experience Porter, the third pastor, was a native of Lebanon, N. H.; graduated from Dartmouth College in 1803; was tutor in Middlebury College one year; studied theology with Rev. Asahel Hooker, in Goshen, Conn.; was ordained over the church in Winchester, N. H., Nov. 12, 1807, and settled over this church early in 1812. He retained his pastorate till March 9, 1825. During these thirteen years 425 persons were received into the church, 345 of them on profession. This number was about equal to the whole number added during the previous eighty years. Two remarkable revivals occurred during his ministry. In 1813, 107 persons were added to the church upon profession, and from the fall of 1818 through 1819, 208 persons united with it. Mr. Porter died Aug. 25, 1828.

Rev. Lyman Coleman, the fourth pastor, was born in Middlefield, June 14, 1796; graduated at Yale College in 1817; taught three years in the Latin Grammar School at Hartford, Conn.; was a tutor in Yale College four years and a half. While there he studied theology, and was ordained here Oct.

19, 1825, and was dismissed in September, 1832, having received 178 persons into the church, of whom 133 were upon profession of faith. Since his dismissal he has been principal of Burr Seminary, Vermont, also of the English department of Phillips Academy, in Andover, a teacher in Amherst, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., professor of German in Princeton College (from which he received the degree of D.D.), and now of Hebrew and German in Lafayette College, Easton, Pa. He is the author of several valuable works upon sacred geography and subjects connected with Christian antiquities.

Rev. Jared Reid, the fifth pastor, was born in Preston, Conn., February, 1788; graduated at Yale College, 1817; studied theology at Andover; licensed to preach April, 1822; was settled in the ministry at Reading, Nov. 20, 1823; dismissed in 1833; installed here Sept. 4, 1833; was dismissed here Jan. 6, 1841. He was afterward at Tiverton, R. I., but is now deceased.

Rev. George A. Oviatt, the sixth pastor, is a native of Bridgeport, Conn.; graduated at Yale College, 1835, where he also studied theology. He was ordained pastor of the Brainerd Church, in this place, Aug. 28, 1838, when (upon the resignation of Mr. Reed) the two churches were reunited. He was invited to become their pastor, and was installed over this church Aug. 31, 1841. He was dismissed July, 1845, and took the pastorate of the Suffolk Street Church, Boston; afterward of the churches in Chicopee, Somers, Conn., and Talcottville, Conn., and is at present the pastor of the church at Sudbury.

Rev. John Clancey, the seventh pastor, graduated at Middlebury College, 1818; studied theology at Andover; settled in the ministry at Charlton, N. Y., twenty years. He was installed here Feb. 25, 1846, and remained until March 27, 1849, when, having been dismissed, he returned to Charlton.

Rev. Samuel Wolcott, the eighth pastor, was born in what is now South Windsor, Conn., July, 1813; graduated at Yale College in 1833; completed theological study at Andover in 1837. For two years afterward he assisted the secretary of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions. Nov. 13, 1839, he was ordained, and went to Syria as a missionary. He continued his labors in that region till January, 1843, when, on account of the death of his wife and the unsettled condition of affairs in Syria, he returned to America. In August, 1843, he became pastor of the church in Longmeadow, from which he was dismissed in December, 1847. He was installed over this church Oct. 2, 1849, and dismissed March 29, 1853. At that time he became pastor of a church in Providence, R. I., where he remained six and a half years; then spent two years in connection with the New England Church in Chicago, Ill. For a number of years he was settled over a church in Cleveland, O., where he now resides, and is secretary of the Ohio Home Missionary Society. A noteworthy revival visited the church during the first year of his ministry in Belchertown, and 100 were added to the church,—89 on profession of faith.

Rev. Henry B. Blake, the ninth pastor, was born in Winchester Centre, Conn., May 20, 1817; united with the church in 1832; graduated at Williams College in 1841; studied theology at East Windsor, Conn., and graduated in 1844. He was ordained at South Coventry, Conn., Jan. 1, 1845; dismissed in May, 1855; installed here June 26, 1855, and dismissed at the end of ten years, June 26, 1865. He went to Wilmington, N. C., as an agent of the American Missionary Association, in 1868. He was then chairman of the County Board of Examiners and superintendent of the city schools of Wilmington, and also employed in the training of colored preachers. He is now the acting pastor of the church in West Springfield, Mass.

Rev. W. W. Woodworth, the tenth pastor, was born at Cromwell, Conn., Oct. 16, 1813; graduated at Yale College in 1838, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1841. He was pastor at Berlin, Conn., 1842-52; at Waterbury, Conn., 1852-58; stated supply at Mansfield, O., 1858-60; at the Olivet Church, Springfield, 1860-62; at Plymouth, 1862-64; at Painesville, O., 1864-66; pastor of this church, 1866-70. Since then has been pastor at Grinnell, Iowa, and is now pastor at Berlin, Conn.

Rev. Payson W. Lyman, the present pastor, was born at Easthampton, Feb. 28, 1842; graduated at Amherst College, 1867, and at Union Theological Seminary, New York, in 1870; was ordained and installed over this church, May 10, 1871, having previously preached a short time in Ashfield. He takes great interest in historical matters, and is the author of a history of Easthampton, published in 1866. He also delivered a centennial address in 1876 at the same place, which has also been published.

Deacons.—The following persons have served the church in the office of deacon since its organization: John Smith, chosen 1737; died 1777. Aaron Lyman, chosen 1737; died 1780. Elijah Smith, chosen 1761; died 1770. Joseph Bridgman, chosen 1770; died 1773. Joseph Smith, chosen 1770; died 1803. Edward Smith, chosen 1781; removed 1793. Elijah Dwight, chosen 1793; died 1795. Amasa Smith, chosen 1795; removed 1802. Eliakim Phelps, chosen 1803; died 1824. James Walker, chosen 1804; resigned 1827. Oliver S. Taylor, chosen 1816; removed 1817. Daniel Phelps, chosen 1816; resigned 1854. John M. Spooner, chosen 1827; removed 1846. Anson Moody, chosen 1827; removed 1829. Henry A. Bridgman, chosen 1828; resigned 1850. Israel Towne, chosen 1829; died 1853. William Phelps, chosen 1838; resigned 1850. Elisha Abbey, chosen 1841; died 1863. Elijah Amidon, chosen 1841; resigned 1850. Ephraim Montague, chosen 1850; resigned 1873. Amasa Towne, chosen 1854; died 1871. Wareham C. Gilbert, chosen 1854; died 1859. Harrison Root, chosen 1859. Lyman Sabin, chosen 1863. Charles L. Washburn, Heman E. Moody, chosen 1871, Tertius Cowles, chosen 1873, acting deacons.

At the time of the union of the two churches in 1841, Daniel Phelps, John M. Spooner, Israel Towne, and Wm. Phelps were the officiating deacons in the First Church, and Henry A. Bridgman, Elijah Amidon, and Elisha Abbey in the Brainerd Church. After the union they all officiated until 1850, when all resigned, and the church then chose Daniel Phelps, Israel Towne, Elisha Abbey, and Ephraim Montague.

About 1700 persons have been members of the church since it was founded. The present membership is 277; Sabbath-school, 260; number of volumes in the library, 750; Superintendent, Henry E. Dorman; Librarian, George H. Bruce; Secretary and Treasurer, Fred. L. Stebbins.

BAPTISTS.

The Baptist Church in Belchertown was organized June 24, 1795. The original members were sixteen in number, including seven females. For a quarter of a century a considerable portion of its membership consisted of persons belonging to the neighboring towns.

Rev. Samuel Bigelow, one of the original members, is supposed to have been principally instrumental in gathering the church. He performed pastoral services, more or less, for ten or twelve years. During this time the number of members gradually increased.

In 1806 serious difficulties arose which threatened the continued existence of the church. A council was called for their adjustment in 1808, and was happily successful. A revival followed, in which from 70 to 80 persons were admitted to the church by baptism. The ministry of Rev. David Pease commenced about this time. He was ordained pastor of the church June 10, 1810. Hitherto, the church for want of better accommodations had worshiped in school-houses and private dwellings, and, when the number of persons required it, in barns and in the open fields. Efforts were now made to secure a meeting-house, which proved successful. The house was dedicated March 14, 1814, and is still standing on the south side of the road leading from the centre to the depot, being used as a tenement.

Mr. Pease's labors closed in 1818, and he was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Marshall, who continued his services four or five years. Near the commencement of his labors there was a revival of religion, which resulted in quite a large accession to the membership of the church.

After this the number of members became much reduced, partly in consequence of the organization of Baptist churches at other points, where a portion of the members found themselves better convenience. A number of ministers supplied the desk at different times, among whom were Rev. Henry Archibald and Rev. Jubal Wakefield, each of whom successively acted as pastor, devoting at the same time half of his services to the neighboring church at Three Rivers, in Palmer. Other ministers who performed pulpit services for longer or shorter periods were Rev. Messrs. Stephen S. Nelson, Cyrus P. Grosvenor, John Holbrook, Benjamin Putnam, Thomas Rand, and Alvin Bennett.

In 1838, Rev. Chester Tilden became the pastor, and continued in that capacity four years. The next pastor was Rev. Moses Curtis, who commenced his labors in 1842. The church had now occupied their house of worship for nearly thirty years. Of ample dimensions and highly creditable to the enterprise of the society when it was erected, it had come to need at their hands substantial repairs. Just at this time the reunion of the Congregational Churches, already referred to, was effected, and the house of worship of the Brainerd Church was left vacant. It was purchased by the Baptists, who made it their house of worship and began to occupy it with the commencement of Mr. Curtis' labors. The house is still occupied by the society, although it has undergone considerable remodeling and repairing in their hands, notably in 1869 and 1875.

In 1849, Mr. Curtis resigned his charge, and was soon after succeeded by Rev. Joseph M. Rockwood, who in turn resigned in January, 1856. Rev. William N. Fay succeeded him in February, 1856, but was really settled as pastor in June of that year. He remained until December, 1866, when he resigned on account of ill health, much to the regret not only of the society, but of the entire community. He went to Bloomington, Ill., and there died soon after. By his own request his body was brought to Belchertown and interred among the people he had loved.

Rev. G. W. Gates received a call to the pastorate in March, 1867, but declined. On Aug. 21, 1867, Rev. D. Donovan, a graduate of the University of Vermont, and of Newton Theological Seminary, was called, and became the pastor of the church. He remained less than two years, and was succeeded in June, 1869, by Rev. J. B. Reed, whose pastorate terminated April 1, 1872.

The church then employed supplies until the ordination of Rev. Wm. R. Warner, in August, 1872, who became the next pastor. He withdrew in August, 1873, and was succeeded in November of the same year by Rev. Mr. Battell, whose pastorate was terminated in March, 1875. In May, 1875, Rev. Philip Barry commenced preaching, and was installed in July following. He remained until April, 1877.

The present pastor, Rev. B. F. Tuck, commenced his labors July 1, 1877. The deacons of the church are Abraham Weston, aged ninety, Henry Graves, and Daniel Sawin.

The church is in a prosperous condition and has a membership of about 75. The membership of the Sabbath-school is about 50; number of volumes in library, several hundred; Superintendent, Nelson Barrett.

METHODISTS.

This denomination first established itself in the south part of the town, near Bardwell village, but afterward consolidated with the church at Thorndike, in Palmer.

The first Methodist preacher stationed at Belchertown Centre was Rev. William Gordon, from the Conference held in Cambridge, Mass., commencing March 29, 1865. The first meetings were held in the town-hall.

The lay members engaged in starting the enterprise were Theodore Blodgett and Thomas Haskell. P. Rich and Francis A. Talmadge assisted in carrying it forward.

The membership at the beginning was about a dozen. Rev. Mr. Gordon remained two years. At the end of the first year there were 22 members in full connection and 30 probationers. At the close of the second year there were 34 members in full connection and 3 probationers.

The next pastor was Rev. C. H. Vinton, whose pastorate was very successful, and large numbers were added to the church.

The successor of Mr. Vinton was Rev. E. J. Stevens, a local preacher, appointed to supply March 30, 1869, and who remained only until December of the same year, the remainder of the Conference year being filled out by students from the academy at Wilbraham.

Rev. H. S. Booth, the next pastor, was stationed in Belchertown in the spring of 1870. Under his pastorate a large and successful revival occurred.

In the Conference year of 1871, Rev. N. J. Merrill was appointed to the charge, now for the first time united with Granby. At the Conference of 1872, Rev. S. McLaughlin was appointed to the charge. Early in his pastorate measures were instituted looking to the erection of a church edifice.

In the month of June, 1873, land was purchased for the erection of a church, and during the same year the society purchased of the Union Street Methodist Episcopal Church of Springfield their church building, at a cost of $400, paying $150 additional for the organ, and $200 for the cushions, carpets, and settees. The building was taken down, removed to Belchertown, and rebuilt at a further cost of $5700. The corner-stone was laid August 13th of the same year, and the new house was dedicated Feb. 11, 1874. It is a handsome and comfortable structure, and now occupied by the society.

The pastors since Mr. McLaughlin have been Rev. S. O. Dyer, for one year; Rev. E. S. Best, for one year; and Rev. John Capin, for two years. Rev. Erastus Burlingham, the present pastor, commenced his labors in the spring of 1878.

The church is free from debt, and has a membership of 113. The membership of Sabbath-school is 125; officers and teachers, 18; library, 500 volumes; Superintendent, Merrick M. Morse; Librarian, J. V. Thompson.

BURIAL-PLACES.

There are a number of burial-places within the limits of the town, most of which have been devoted to such uses without the town taking any action upon the matter, and probably were designed simply to accommodate the residents of the locality in which they are located.

The earliest recorded action of the town upon the subject was at a precinct-meeting, held Jan. 3, 1743, at which Deacon Stephen Crawfoot, Aaron Lyman, Nathaniel Dwight, and Eliakim Phelps were appointed a committee to "lay out a burying-yard for to accommodate the southeast part of the town."

The committee made a return of a place "east of the county road, north of the swamp, at or near the south end of Mr. Billing's lot, which was bought of Judge Dudley."

This is the oldest ground in the town, and is known as the "Old" or "Forward Burying-Ground." It lies about a mile southeast of the central village, and contains the remains of a large number of the first settlers of the town. Among the inscriptions of interest are the following:

"Sacred to the memory of Rev. Justus Forward, pastor of the church in Belchertown, who, skilled in evangelical doctrine, exemplary in Christian duty, prudent in council, valiant for the truth, faithful and successful in labors, after a long and useful ministry, in which, with reputation to himself and to the spiritual benefit of his flock, he served God and his generation, fell asleep March 8, A.D. 1814, in the eighty-fourth year of his age and the fifty-ninth of his ministry. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

"In memory of Capt. Nathaniel Dwight, who died March 30, 1784, in the seventy-second year of his age. He was one of the first settlers of this town, and was esteemed and employed in public business in town and county through his whole life.

"Come, honest sexton, with your spade,
And let my grave be quickly made;
On Heaven's decree I waiting lie,
And all my wishes are to die.

"Thou I must die and turn to dust,
I hope to rise among the just,
Jesus my body will refine,—
I shall with him in glory shine."

The next reference to burial-places in the town-records is on Dec. 8, 1766, when it was "voted to purchase some land to bury their dead." "Voted to purchase two acres in each place that we have used for burying, viz.: one down by the road against Forward's lot, and one near the Nine-Mile Pond." "Voted that Capt. Nathaniel Dwight and Capt. Samuel Howe be a committee to see to the buying the two pieces of land above mentioned, for the benefit and privilege of burying-places."

This indicates the next oldest burying-ground to be the one near the pond, about two miles northwest of the central village. It was probably laid out soon after the first one, and of course not later than 1766. No others existed for a number of years, and on March 11, 1771, the town appropriated £30 for the purpose of fencing each of these grounds with stone.

Beside these two ancient ones, there are several others: one at Dwight's Station, which is quite old; one on Great Hill, which has been in use for upward of a hundred years; two in the south part of the town (one the "Olds Burying-ground," probably nearly a century old, and one at Bardwell village, about forty years old); one in "Dark Corner," in the western part of the town, which has been used over sixty years; and one at "Blue Meadow," near "Slab City," in the eastern part of the town.

The principal ground in the town at present is Mount Hope Cemetery, in rear of the Congregational Church, at the central village. It was laid out about 1846, and contains many handsome monuments.

NOTES FROM THE RECORDS.

Dec. 20, 1762.—"Voted to Samuel Hannum, Jr., 3 shillings for going from Boston to Milton to carry a letter."

Dec. 20, 1765.—"Voted that the surveyors shall see to it that men come to the work of the highways seasonably in the morning, and work diligently all the day till the ordinary time at night men commonly leave work that are hired to labor; and whoever works but a part of the day shall be rewarded in such proportion as they work, in the judgment of the surveyor."

March 19, 1770.—"Voted to excuse the west part of the town from any charge in purchasing the burying-place in or near Mr. Forward's land and that by the pond, upon condition they provide a place for themselves."

March 3, 1777.—"Voted to Deacon Joseph Smith and Lieut. Joseph Graves 24 shillings each for going to Brookfield to carry the missionary interpreter and six Oneida Indians or chief warriors."

1784.—A bounty of 6 pounds was set on each wolf killed within ten miles of M. House, or if track was taken within those limits.

1785.—"Voted to choose a committee of three men to correspond with some neighboring towns to come into some measures to destroy the wolves."

March, 1796.—"Voted that hogs shall run on the common yoked and ringed, as the law directs."

In 1820, Eliakim Phelps and Philo Dickinson were chosen delegates to the convention to revise the State Constitution.

Jan. 8, 1823.—"Voted not to employ Doct. Sylvanus Fansher to inoculate the inhabitants of the town for the kine-pock."

EARLY MARRIAGES AND BIRTHS.

The earliest marriages recorded are those of Abner Smith, son of Deacon John Smith, of Cold Spring, to Mary King, April 14, 1741. Rev. Edward Billing, the first minister of the town, to Lucy Parsons, daughter of David Parsons, on Aug. 12, 1741. Joseph Smith, son of Deacon John Smith, to Eunice Bascom, daughter of Samuel Bascom, on Aug. 28, 1743. On the same date Samuel Bascom, Jr., was married to Mary Warner, daughter of Ebenezer Warner. Hezekiah Root, son to Hezekiah Root, of Northampton, was married to the widow Mary King, daughter of Ebenezer Bridgman, Nov. 17, 1743. No other marriage is recorded for nearly five years.

The first birth recorded is that of Susanna Lyman, daughter of Aaron and Eunice Lyman, who was born Nov. 16, 1734. The first male birth recorded was that of Elijah Dwight, son of Nathaniel and Hannah Dwight, who was born Nov. 30, 1735, and died January 19th of the following year. Josiah Lyman, son of Aaron and Eunice Lyman, was born March 9, 1736, and is the next male birth recorded.

EARLY ASSESSORS' VALUATION.

The most ancient valuation of estates to be found in the town is that made in the year 1743, and was as follows: Hezekiah Root, land, £20; housing, £4; personal estate, £16 6s. Aaron Lyman, land, £36 10s.; faculty, £5; housing, £5; personal estate, £16 10s. Eliakim Phelps, land, £14; faculty, £5; housing, £2 10s.; personal estate, £5. Thomas Brown, land, £5; house, £1; personal estate, £4 6s. Joseph Phelps, land, £7; housing, £4; personal estate, £16. Nathaniel Dwight, land, £32 10s.; faculty, tavern, etc., £18; housing, £4; personal estate, £35 8s. Samuel Bascom, land, £46; faculty, £5; housing, £5; personal estate, £11 4s. Nathaniel Cowles, land, £2 10s.; housing, £1; personal estate, £7 10s. Daniel Smith, £2; housing, £1; personal estate, £3 10s. Jesse Warner, land, £3 10s.; housing, £1 5s.; personal estate, £3. Ebenezer Warner, land, £30; housing, £4; personal estate, £12 15s. Moses Warner, land, £7; housing, £1 10s.; personal estate, £9 8s. Walter Fairfield, land, £5; housing, £1 10s.; personal estate, £8 10s. Benjamin Stebbins, land, £25; housing, £5; personal estate, £35. Nathaniel Parsons, land, £12; housing, £4; personal estate, £6 6s. Benjamin Billings, land, £10; faculty, £3; housing and mill, £3 5s.; personal estate, £6 18s. Joseph Bardwell, land, £12; faculty, £5; house, £1 5s.; personal estate, £6. Thomas Graves, land, £15; house, £1 5s.; personal estate, £9 6s. Stephen Crawfoot, £12; faculty, £9; house, £1 5s.; personal estate, £8. Ebenezer Bridgman, land, £17; housing, £3; personal estate, £7. Joseph Bridgman, £16; housing, £3 10s.; personal estate, £4 6s. Jonathan Graves, land, £28; faculty, £9; housing, £4; personal estate, £21 12s. Joseph Smith, land, £0; personal estate, £1 10s. Mary King, land, £0; personal estate, £3 10s. Samuel Bascom, personal estate, £1 10s. Robert Brown, land, £7; housing, £1 5s.; personal estate, £8 10s. John Smith, land, £22; faculty, £9; housing, £6; personal estate, £19 10s. Stephen Fairfield, personal estate, £2. Mehetable Dwight, building, £1 5s.; personal estate, £1 10s.

SOCIETIES.

VERNON LODGE, A. F. AND A. M.,

was chartered in the year 1869, as Mount Vernon Lodge, and the first regular communication was held on June 23d of that year. Prior to that time the lodge had worked under a dispensation. The year following the word "Mount" was dropped from the name. The charter-members of the lodge were Oscar F. Morse, Joseph M. Towne, Calvin Bridgman, White H. Hawks, Phineas Bridgman, Henry M. Jepson, Samuel W. Longley, Reuben A. White, Joshua G. Longley, William A. Chapin, Levi Arnold, Jason Blackmer, George C. Sandford. The present officers of the lodge are William H. Bridgman, W. M.; Loman A. Smith, S. W.; Eugene Bridgman, J. W.; William E. Bridgman, Treas.; E. A. R. Fairchild, Sec.; S. M. Warren, Chap.; William F. Carter, Mar.; E. M. Shaw, S. D.; W. H. Hawks, J. D.; C. L. Kibbee, S. S.; Calvin Childs, J. S.; D. Winter, I. S.; Guy C. Allen, T.

Past Masters.—O. F. Morse, 1870; Levi Arnold, 1871-73; W. E. Bridgman, 1874-76; J. M. Towne, 1877.

BANKS.

THE FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' BANK

formerly existed in Belchertown. It first occupied the building where Sheppard Parsons now resides. The building now occupied by William Bridgman was erected by the bank during Gen. Lafayette's visit to this country, and was used by them for banking purposes. The institution lasted about ten years.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Agriculture has constituted the principal pursuit of the citizens of Belchertown, although some attention has been paid to other branches of industry. The principal of these has been the manufacture of carriages, for which the town has been noted for many years. The first wagon ever made in the town was made the first part of the present century by Mason Abbey, and Harrison Holland "striped" the first wagon painted in that style in the town. The Belchertown Carriage Manufactory existed for a long time on "Federal Street," and was composed of Abbey, Pepper, Holland, and others. Jonathan Bardwell and Simeon, his son, also made wagons and carried on the blacksmithing business at "Bardwell Hollow" half a century ago. Joseph Woods also manufactured them in the same locality. Nehemiah Smith engaged in the manufacture of wagons near the present high-school about thirty years ago. Stephen Packard, Saul Shumway, Joel Packard, Seth D. Griggs, Humphrey J. Filer, Park Holland, and others have also engaged in the same business, to a greater or less extent. The industry is still the most prominent in the town, the principal manufacturers being Tertius and Samuel D. Cowles, and Maynard Leach.

The Belchertown Woolen Company, at Bardwell village, formerly carried on quite a business in the manufacture of satinets, and Bugbee & Tirrell formerly manufactured paper-hangings, and J. & S. Clark wrapping-paper.

A small "shoddy" factory formerly existed at "Slab City," and a large number of saw-mills and several grist-mills have utilized the various water-privileges. The Boston Duck Company, whose mills are situated near the south line of the town, at Bondsville, in the town of Palmer, contemplate establishing another mill on the Belchertown side of the river.

MILITARY.

The part which the town took in the earlier wars cannot, with accuracy be ascertained. Nathaniel Dwight went into the French war with a captain's commission, Aug. 9, 1757. He received an order from Col. Williams, of Hatfield, then a militia captain, to muster and march his company, without delay, for the relief of Fort William Henry, near Lake George, which was attacked by a French-and-Indian army under Montcalm. The company, under marching orders, met the regiment at Westfield, proceeded to Kinderhook, received intelligence that the fort had capitulated, were discharged, and returned home. Doubtless a large number of Belchertown men were in this company. Among these were Daniel Worthington and Capt. James Walker. Stephen Crawfoot also served in the French war from Belchertown, and William Kentfield, son of Ebenezer, died in the army, near Lake George, in 1756. Capt. Elijah Smith was a captain in 1755.

THE REVOLUTIONARY RECORD

of the town is especially noteworthy. From the beginning to the close of that memorable struggle the highest patriotism and most self-sacrificing devotion was manifested by the citizens. The odious "Port Bill" was met by the following vote of the town:

"Voted and chose ten men to inspect the town and see that there is not any goods exposed to sale in Belchertown that were imported after the 1st day of December last."

In the month of September, 1774, the people, in public meeting assembled, affixed their signatures to the following compact:

Photo. by J. L. Lovell, Amherst.

DEACON LYMAN SABIN.

Deacon Lyman Sabin was born in Belchertown, Aug. 15, 1813. His father, Thomas Sabin, now in his ninety-sixth year, was born in Ellington, Conn., Dec. 22, 1783, and March 20, 1806, married Abigail Durfey, who was born July 3, 1787, and died March 10, 1846. He bought a farm in Wilbraham, Mass., for $800, which, after seven years, he sold for $1700, and bought the present one, April, 1, 1813, for $2000.

Deacon Sabin married Lucy C. Stebbins, daughter of Samuel H. Stebbins, Oct. 10, 1839, who was born Nov. 2, 1812. Their children are Maria Dickinson, born Aug. 24, 1840; married T. G. Longley, of Belchertown. Abigail Durfey, born July 13, 1842; married Lewis K. Williams, of Kent, Ohio. Laura Sophia, born Dec. 3, 1844. Their only grandchild, Marion Sabin Longley, was born Oct. 15, 1874.

Deacon Sabin's responsibility in farm management dates from his marriage, at which time the assessor's valuation was,—real estate, $2150; personal, $295. May 29, 1840, the house and some out-buildings, with most of their contents, were burned; insurance $600, of which $200 canceled a debt. The remaining property was $400 insurance, 150 acres of land, much of which was in a rough, uncultivated state, and no buildings except inferior barns. Good farm buildings are now on the premises, the fields are substantially walled, lowlands drained and made productive, while five acres of prime orcharding swell the farm products. Some years since the Hampshire Agricultural Society awarded this farm a premium as the best-managed farm in Hampshire County. Assessed valuation 1860,—real, $5300; personal, $1000. Assessed valuation 1878,—real, $6500; personal, $1385. Increase from 1840, $5440. During this period $2000 have been paid to those who have left the homestead, besides educational expenses; while within ten years not less than $1000 have been given for exceptional church expenditures, besides liberal annual payments for current church expenses and charities.

These acquisitions have not been made regardless of domestic comfort, neither as life's end and aim, nor without ordinary reverses of fortune, though a good Providence is gratefully acknowledged. They are mentioned here simply as showing that New England farming may be made profitable even in hill towns, and in the hope to counteract a little the tendency of young men to leave the farms.

On the fertile soil of the river-towns the gains might have been greater. Yet the salubrious air and fine scenery here enjoyed are regarded as more than a compensation. Deacon Sabin wishes his experience to suggest to young men "that it is not necessary to leave New England, or to seek city homes, in order to secure a competency."

The subject of this sketch is a Republican in politics. He has been a member of the Congregational Church here since 1835, and a deacon since 1863. He is a man of unquestioned integrity, of generous impulses, one of the foremost financial supporters of the church with which he is connected, and a Puritan pillar in society.

Photo. by Moffitt.

HENRY GRAVES, JR.

Henry Graves, Jr., now living in Belchertown, was born in South Hadley Falls, July 21, 1819. At the age of five he removed with his parents to Chicopee, whence after a stay of one year he went to Ware, and, remaining there six years, removed in 1830 to Ludlow, of which place he remained a resident until 1853. On the 15th of December of that year he became a citizen of Belchertown, locating on the place now his residence.

Oct. 9, 1844, he was married to Hannah, daughter of Jonathan Wales, of Belchertown, and became the father of a son, Moses W.

Mrs. Graves died April 17, 1863, and May 8, 1866, he married Nancy, daughter of Joseph Witt, of Granby. Aug. 7, 1862, Mr. Graves enlisted in the 37th Massachusetts Regiment, and served through the war of the Rebellion, participating in all the battles in which the regiment was engaged, including the conflicts at Gettysburg, Fredericksburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and Winchester, at which latter he was wounded in the head, and subsequently confined in the McClellan Hospital at Philadelphia for five months. During his entire three years' term he was absent from his regiment on but two furloughs, once to bury his wife, and once to vote for President Lincoln.

Upon being mustered out of the service, he returned home and resumed his agricultural pursuits, which he has followed to this time. He has never sought political preferment. Early in life he was a Democrat, but the war made him a Republican, and with that party he has since affiliated.

At the age of fifteen, experiencing religion, he joined the Congregational Church at Ludlow; but church dissensions led to his withdrawal and subsequent attendance at the Baptist Church, which organization he joined at Three Rivers in 1842, and later joined the Baptist Church at Belchertown. Since 1858 he has served the church as deacon.

Mr. Graves' father was born Aug. 19, 1793, in Williamsburg, Hampshire Co. Nov. 6, 1817, he married Selima, daughter of Lieut. Philip Smith, of Chicopee. Their children were four in number,—Sophia S., William, Austin Lyman, and Henry, Jr.

"We declare that we will take no unreasonable liberties or advantage from the suspension of the course of law; but we engage to conduct ourselves agreeable to the laws of God, of reason, and of humanity; and we hereby engage to use all prudent, justifiable, and necessary measures to secure and defend each other's persons and families, their lives, rights, and properties, against all who shall attempt to hurt, injure, or invade them; and to secure and defend to ourselves and our posterity our just and constitutional rights and privileges."

In the County Convention, held about this time, the town was represented by Col. Caleb Clark, Joseph Smith, and Nathaniel Dwight. The latter was then town clerk, and records the fact that delegates were present from every town in the county (Old Hampshire) but Charlemont, and that

"They spent the day in considering the distressed state of the government, as the port of Boston is shut up by the King and Parliament, and eight or ten regiments stationed there upon the Neck, and digging trenches and fortifying them against the country; and a number of men-of-war are round about Boston, in order to oblige the province to acknowledge the right of Great Britain to tax North America at their pleasure."

Capt. Samuel Howe represented the town in the First Provincial Congress, in 1774, and in the Second Congress, the year following.

On Nov. 7, 1774, the people of the town convened at the meeting-house for the purpose of organizing a military company. Caleb Clark was chosen captain; Joseph Graves, first lieutenant; John Cowles, second lieutenant; Elijah Dwight, ensign; and Oliver Bridgman, clerk. Dec. 12, 1774, the town voted 10s. 8d. to Capt. Zachariah Eddy "for his horse's journey to Providence to fetch powder for the town's use."

The town chose committees of safety throughout the war, and gave them active support.

May 22, 1775, Nathaniel Dwight was chosen a member of the Provincial Congress called to meet at Watertown. The town voted "That said Nathaniel Dwight shall go armed cap-a-pie, as there is every day danger of an invasion by the King's troops that are now stationed at Boston, viz., about 4000 men, and the government, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire, have 30,000 men that are stationed round about Boston."

The records contain still further evidence of the patriotism of the town, of which the following is a fair sample:

"At a full meeting of the inhabitants of Belchertown, held at the meeting-house, June 25, 1776, Deacon Aaron Lyman was chosen moderator. The question was put by the moderator, whether should the honorable Continental Congress, for the safety of the United Colonies in America, declare their independence of the kingdom of Great Britain, they, the said inhabitants, would solemnly engage, with their lives and fortunes, to support them in the measure; and it passed in the affirmative by a universal vote."

Men and supplies were regularly furnished in support of the war.

For purposes of drill and enlistment the town had two militia companies, known at home as the East and West Companies. They were the Third and Ninth Companies of the 4th Hampshire Regiment. Of the Third, which was the West Company, Jonathan Bardwell, Aaron Phelps, and Henry Dwight were in command, and of the Ninth, Elijah Dwight, James Walker, and Edward Smith.

A large number of Belchertown citizens served at various times in the Continental army. Capt. Josiah Lyman, with his company, went on the expedition to Canada, in 1776. His brother, Maj. Elihu Lyman, a native of the town, was also an officer in the war, and started with Benedict Arnold on the expedition through Maine to Canada, but was deputed to carry back sick and disabled members of the command. He was then a captain, and not a resident of Belchertown at the time.

The following is the list of those who are known to have performed actual service in the army: Elijah Dwight, Pliny Dwight, Joseph Reed, Asaph Kentfield, James White, Samuel White, Thomas Fuller, Wm. Hannum, Reuben, Asa, and Whitney Shumway, Elijah Parker, Moses Cowles,* Stephen Darling, Joseph Towne, Caleb Stacy, Salmon Kentfield, Nath. Dodge, Nath. Doakes, Luther Clough, Enos Smith, Joel

* Moses Cowles' house was burned in October, 1776, while he was serving in the war, and three of his children were burned to death in the conflagration, the eldest being five years of age.

Greene, Eb. Chapman, Elijah Walker, Samuel Pollesey, Benj. Burden, Zeph. Sturtevant, John Hamblen, Jonathan Bardwell, Moses Howe, Josiah Lyman, James Walker, P. Gilbert, F. Davis. A large number of others are supposed to have rendered personal service in the army, but the lists do not indicate whether they so served, or by proxy. Twenty of the citizens of the town are believed to have lost their lives in the struggle.

After the close of the war the town

"Voted that this town will at all times, as they have done to the utmost of their power, oppose every enemy to the just rights and liberties of mankind; and that after so wicked a conspiracy against those rights and liberties by certain ingrates, most of them natives of these States, and who have been refugees and declared traitors to their country, it is the opinion of this town that they ought never to be suffered to return, but to be excluded from having lot or portion amongst us."

SHAYS' REBELLION.

The town records contain the following names of those who participated in the Shays rebellion:

"A list of the names of several persons that were concerned in the late rebellion, who lived in Belchertown, and took and subscribed the oath of allegiance before Caleb Clark, Esq.: Jonah Hunting, Samuel Ward, Walter Eaton, Obadiah Ward, Sewell Abbott, Seth Warner, Mark Stacy, John Stacy, Ephraim Hunatt, Daniel Shaw, John Coal, Jr., Solomon Hannum, John Woods, David Converse, Nathan Davis, Ebenezer Bliss, Thomas Hulett, Nathan Kinsley, Calvin Kinsley, Elijah Parker, Justin Olds, Amos Ackley, Samuel Ackley, Enoch Thayer, James Smith, John McMullin, Sava's Rand, Isaac Livermore, Samuel Ackley, Jr., Thomas Thurston, Benjamin Clough, Ebenezer Chapman, Luther Clough, David Bartlett, Jr., Ephraim Clough, Jonah Drake, Silas Lovel, Josiah Whitney, Benj. Burtham, Zebulon Dagg, Abel Clough, Thomas Brown, Benjamin Billings, John Ward, Jr., Daniel Kneedham, Joseph Ramsdill, Barnabas Fay, Jacob Wilson, Israel Robinson, Thomas Wilson, Nathaniel Goodale, Stephen Thurston, Thomas Torrance, John Saurin, John Sumner, Nathaniel Perry, Jr., Mason Hulett, Cyril Leach, Erastus Kentfield, Asahel Hulett, David Town, Wm. Town, Christopher Patten, Thomas Wheeler.

"Attest: E. DWIGHT, Town Clerk"

WAR OF 1812.

With the war of 1812 the town had no sympathy, but passed resolutions strongly condemnatory of it. The following citizens are among those who served in the army at Boston: Simeon Pepper, Horace Walker, Samuel H. Stebbins, Hezekiah Walker, Jr., Salem Fisher.

WAR OF 1861-65.

The patriotic part that the town bore in the late war is matter of recent fame. Suffice it here to record that Belchertown contributed nobly to the preservation of that Union which her sons had so bravely struggled to create in the earlier days of the republic. The following names are from the adjutant-general's report:

Perez R. Brown, 42d Mass. Regt.; Myron P. Walker, Chas. H. Atwood, Benton Barrett, Wm. R. Barrows, Chas. Benson, Oliver Hyde, Reuben S. Robbins, David K. Shumway, Frank B. Smith, George Strong, Frank Wiley, Nelson O. Willey, Benj. F. Brady, all in 10th Mass. Regt.; Martin V. B. Brown, John H. Parker, James H. Pratt, Dwight Barrett, Stillman D. Clark, James H. Montague, Chas. A. Pettingill, Edwin H. Atwood, Lyman J. Bennett, Solomon Roads, Augustus D. Alden, Thomas H. Dewey, Samuel J. Filer, Elisha J. Griggs, Edwin C. Hayes, George F. Shumway, Dwight Sloan, E. P. Warner, all in 27th Mass. Regt.; Chas. B. Jackson, George M. Abby, Wm. L. Bishop, Jerome Draper, Richard F. Underwood, Warner Pratt, Wm. L. Ayers, Wm. L. Bishop, Wm. Blodgett, Edwin C. Chapin, Lyman Chamberlain, Frederick Cutler, George A. Goodwin, John Henry, Lucas B. Jenks, Thomas Jenks, Henry M. Kentfield, Lemuel S. Mason, Truman C. Munsell, Wm. J. Peeso, Amos M. Ramsdell, Richard Ramsdell, Daniel B. Richardson, Chas. S. Robbins, Joseph D. Richardson, Russell A. Robbins, Chas. O. Thomas, Francis B. Thomas, Harrison D. Towne, Richard F. Underwood, all in 31st Mass. Regt.; Thomas Shannon, Reuben S. Robbins, Wm. McDowell, Albert C. Allen, Wm. Bell, Francis Bishop, Hiram Blackmer, Dwight B. Chamberlain, Norris Chamberlain, Daniel B. Dwight, Raymond C. Flowers, Emulus B. Gillett, Philo Hogeney, Lorenzo Joslyn, Lorenzo Leech, David Leman, Andrew B. Owen, Horace C. Ramsdell, Lyman A. Shaw, Frederick E. Smith, John H. Smith, Monroe Snow, Jerry W. Squires, Jonas H. Thayer, John McLaughlin, James Whittaker, all in 37th Mass. Regt.

Acknowledgments are due to Chas. L. Washburn, town clerk, Rev. Payson W. Lyman, Austin Billings, S. W. Longley, Daniel Sawin, Cyrus S. Bartlet and wife, and other citizens of the town. "Doolittle's Sketches," and the Easthampton Centennial Address of Rev. P. W. Lyman, have also been found useful.

GREENWICH.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THE town of Greenwich is situated in the northeastern corner of Hampshire County, and is bounded on the north by the town of Prescott, in the same county, on the south by the town of Ware, in the same county, on the east by the towns of Dana and Hardwick, in Worcester County, and on the west by the towns of Prescott and Enfield, in Hampshire County. The average length of the town is about eight and a half miles, and the average width about two and three-quarter miles. It contains 12,402.8 acres of land, 450 acres of pond and streams, and 216.5 acres of roads, the length of the latter being forty-two and a quarter miles.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The township is situated in a valley, running north and south, and skirted on either side by a range of hills. The landscape is pleasantly diversified by several hills of prominence, by the east and middle branches of Swift River, which traverse the town throughout, and by numerous ponds scattered over its surface. Mount Pomeroy lifts its peculiar conical form just north of the village of Greenwich Plains, and probably attains an altitude of 700 or 800 feet. Mount "Liz," or "Lizzie," lies about a mile and a half south of Mount Pomeroy, and south of the village, and probably attains about the same altitude as the former. The origin of their names is elsewhere referred to. Cooley's Hill, also quite elevated, lies farther south, near the Enfield line. The two branches of Swift River afford a number of fine water-privileges, several of which are not utilized. The east branch discharges its waters into Moose Pond. The outlet of this pond unites with the middle branch and passes on to the Chicopee River. Numerous small affluents of the river drain the different sections of the town, of which the principal is Sunk Brook, in the south part of the town. The principal ponds are Warner, in the north part of the town, Curtis, about a mile farther south, East or Moose Pond, lying east of the geographical centre of the town, and Davis Pond, south and west of Greenwich Plains.

The soil of Greenwich is fertile, producing the cereals, with the exception of wheat, in abundance, but is unfavorable to the production of grass. Being comparatively free from rocks and stones, it is not difficult of cultivation. The geological formations of the town are not of special importance, conforming to the general description of them elsewhere given in this work. Two rocky boulders on the Blackmer farm, in the southerly part of the town, have attracted considerable notice. They are of many tons in weight, and rest upon a flat rock. A slight degree of power applied serves to set them in motion.

STATISTICAL.

The present population of the town is given at 606. By the census of 1776 it was 890. The highest population ever reached in the town was in 1800, when it was 1460. Since that time the town of Enfield has been set off from Greenwich, accounting largely for the difference in population. By the census of 1875, the total products of the town are placed at $117,363. The assessor's report for the year 1878 furnishes the following; Number of polls, 187; of dwelling-houses, 141; of horses, 144; of cows, 297; of sheep, 157; of acres of land taxed, 11,107; value of personal property, $72,090; of real property, $200,000; rate per cent. of total taxation, 1.65.

RAILROADS.

The Springfield, Athol and Northeastern Railroad passes through the town from north to south, and was first opened to traffic in 1873. It has two stations, one at Greenwich Plains, and the other at Greenwich Valley.

The Massachusetts Central Railroad, yet in an unfinished condition, proposes to enter near the upper village of Enfield, and pass in a northeasterly direction through the town, having stations at the two villages.

MEN OF DISTINCTION.

Among the men of distinction which the town has produced may be mentioned E. E. Marcy, M.D., editor and author; Gen. Amiel W. Whipple, born in 1817, died from wounds received at Chancellorsville, May 7, 1863,—a brave and able officer; Hon. James E. Cooley, of New York City, a former State Senator of that State; and Albert White, M.D., author of a volume of poems.

INDIAN OCCUPATION AND RELICS.

Undoubted evidences of the occupation of the soil of Greenwich by the Indians are to be found within the town. The chief traces of savage occupancy are found in the southern part of the town, in and around Davis Pond, and near the junction of the east and middle branches of Swift River. The remains of an Indian, apparently buried in a sitting posture, are said to have been found on the old Cooley farm many years ago; and on the farms of William R. Hale and Lorenzo Davis have been found many Indian relics, consisting of pestles, broken utensils, arrow- and spear-heads, parts of tomahawks, and other unique remains. The former gentleman has a specially valuable collection of these trophies, and takes great interest in accumulating them. Mr. Davis also has a few of rare interest. One stone, owned by Mr. Hale, apparently of Pelham granite, contains on one side the head of an Indian squaw, and on the other a bow and arrow, fixed ready for shooting, both of which were probably carved by savage hands. Mount Pomeroy and Mount Liz also testify to the presence of the Indians. The former is said to have derived its name from the fact that a man named Pomeroy was burnt at the stake by the savages, and there buried.*

Mount "Liz" is said to have been named after Elizabeth Rowlandson, an unfortunate Indian captive, who was put to death there by the savages. She was a daughter of the Rev. Mr. Rowlandson, the minister at Lancaster, Worcester Co., whose house was burned and his family either killed or carried captive in the memorable attack on that place, on the 10th day of February, 1676, by the Wampanoag, Narragansett, Nipmuck, and Nashaway Indians, led by King Philip.†

SETTLEMENT.

The territory at present comprising the town of Greenwich, as well as that of Enfield, was formerly known as Quabbin.‡

* Another less authentic story is that Pomeroy killed a bear there.

† Barber's Historical Collections, pp. 575, 576.

‡ The name of every Indian usually has a signification, and the translation of the name Quabbin has been given as "Many Waters," a name that would be appropriate to the tract of land which bore that early name.

This name was given to it in honor of King Quabbin, an Indian sachem, or chief of a tribe, whose headquarters lay near the junction of the two branches of the river, in the southern part of Greenwich.

On June 30, 1732, the General Court granted seven townships of land, each six miles square, to the descendants of the soldiers who destroyed the Narragansett fort, on Dec. 19, 1675. The number of soldiers was 840. This gave a township of six miles square to each 120 soldiers. These grants were made on condition that each township should settle at least 60 families on its territory within seven years after the grant, settle a learned orthodox minister, and lay out a lot of land for him and one for the school. If these conditions were not complied with the grant was to be void. On the 6th of June, 1733, the proprietors met on Boston Common, at two o'clock in the afternoon, when they voted that the grantees should be divided into seven societies, one township to be given to each society. Narragansett township, No. 4, was first laid out in New Hampshire, at a place called Amasskeage,* but, that land proving unsatisfactory, a committee was appointed Nov. 17, 1735, to search out better land in exchange. Quabbin was the tract of land chosen, and is described as "bounded north by Salem Town, easterly by Lambstown (now Hardwick), southerly by the Equivalent Land, and westerly by Wm. Reed's land." The meetings of the proprietors were held for a good while at Rehoboth, in the county of Bristol. This is accounted for by the fact that many of the original grantees never actually entered upon their lands, but resided in the eastern part of the State. Hence the meetings were held at the most convenient place. The names of some of the first grantees were Joseph Allen, 2 rights; John Foster, 3; Benjamin Coppee, 2; Edward Shove, 14; Shubael Conant, 6; Ebenezer Mun, 1; James Redaway, 1; John Robbins, 1; Timothy Ide, 1; John Butterworth, 1; Thomas Dickens, 1; Isaac Dagget, 1; Joseph Whetton, 1; Samuel Childs, 8; Thomas Macumber, 1; Comfort Carpenter, 1; John Reed, 1; John Hill, 1; and John Woodward, 19.

On Jan. 14, 1736, the General Court granted the territory of Quabbin to Narragansett, Township No. 4, specially granting 1200 acres of it to James Patterson, Robert Fenton, Edward Miller, James Wheeler, John Patterson, Andrew Turner, Thomas Powers, Arthur Cary, Robert Evans, Robert Carlile, — Thorp, and — Holden, to each of them 50 acres for a house-lot, to be laid out by a committee of the General Court, and the remaining 50 acres to be included in the general division.† The conditions of the grant were that they severally dwell thereon with their families for four years, put 10 acres under good cultivation, and grant 300 acres to the first settled minister, the same to the second, and another for a school-lot.

On May 12, 1737, the proprietors appointed a committee, consisting of John Foster, Shubael Conant, Samuel Childs, Samuel Tildake, and Ebenezer Mun, to lay out and allot the land in Quabbin. The same committee were directed to lay out 10 acres of land for a meeting-house and burying-ground, highways, and a lot of the contents of 60 acres to each proprietor, besides ministry- and school-lots.

After surveying Quabbin, it was found considerably less than six miles square; so the General Court granted a tract of land, lying west of and adjoining Hatfield, sufficient to make up the full amount of territory to which the grantees were entitled. This tract is now embraced within the boundaries of Chesterfield, in the county of Hampshire.

It is largely a matter of conjecture who the first settler of the territory of Quabbin was. The inscription on a tombstone in the town of Enfield indicates the fact that David Patterson was the first man born within the town of Greenwich, and was born in the year 1735. It is probable that he was a son of the John Patterson whose name has already been mentioned, and who is supposed to have lived in the south parish of Greenwich (now Enfield), about a mile south of the village of Enfield, on the Josiah W. Flint farm. It has also been claimed that families by the name of Gibbs, Hinds, Powers, Rogers, and Cooley located in Quabbin about or before that time. But the records of the proprietors, and the parish and town records, do not support the assertion. These names appear prominently a little later, and it is probable that these families were among the first permanent settlers on the soil; but some of those mentioned in the original grant doubtless preceded them.

The name of Gibbs first appears in the year 1740, in the person of Thomas, who after that time filled positions of honor and trust in the town, and was one of its leading settlers. A little later Jeremiah and David Powers appear, together with William Carpenter, Simon Davis, John Rea, John Townsend, Nathan Fisk, Abraham Gibbs, John Harwood, and Timothy Ruggles. Later still appear Hopedill Hinds, Benjamin Cooley, James Nevins, James Wright, James Whitcombe, William Rogers, Luke Hitchcock, and — Holmes.

These were the names of those who were most prominent during the first thirty years of the settlement of the town. It thus appears that among the first actual settlers were John and James Patterson, who located in the south part of the town. The Hinds family, for many years thereafter prominent in the history of the town, located in the west part of the present town of Greenwich, along what is known as the "West Street," and near the then centre of the town. The Gibbs and Powers families, whose representatives still live in the town, and who have always been identified with its growth and development, settled, the former along the "West Street," and at the plains, and the latter farther north, in and around the "village." The Cooleys settled along the east branch of Swift River, and formerly owned the greater part of the land east of the "plains." They were active and industrious tillers of the soil for many years.‡

The Whitcomb family located in the northwest part of the town, near the Prescott line, and is still represented in the town. Later families of prominence have been the Hales, Cutlers, Ayres, Blodgetts, Walkers, Shumways, Davises, Marcys, Trasks, Sprouts, Richards, Sears, Blackmers, Vaughns, Roots, Fullers, Haskells, Hookers, Fields, Robinsons, Douglasses, Jordans, Stones, Warners, Snows, Doaks, and Earles.

The oldest houses now standing in the town are the old Hale homestead, the old Rogers house, opposite the depot, the Fletcher Sears house, in the northwest district of the town, the east part of the Northam house, and the Whitcomb house, each of which is said to be over one hundred years old.

TAVERNS.

Among the taverns that have existed Dr. Trask is said to have kept one of the first, in the last part of the last century, on the Marcy place. About the same time Timothy Hinds kept one on the old Ayres place, and these two were the only ones in town for a long time. The next prominent place of public resort was kept for a great many years, about the first part of the century, by Col. Thomas Powers, on the old Powers place at Greenwich village. It was afterward kept, either in the same place or on the site of the present hotel, by Edmund Raymore, "Squire" Mun, West Page, James Danforth, M. & E. Gibbs, Strickland Alexander, George T. Gibbs, Haskell Sears, John O. Carter, Charles Hastings,

* So designated in the proprietors' records.

† It is probable that these twelve men were those who were already on the soil of Quabbin, some of whom were pioneers from Brookfield and Connecticut, and some from the North of Ireland.

‡ One hundred and sixty acres of this land was first granted to Edward Shove, on condition that he would erect a mill on the east branch of Swift River. Failing to comply with the condition, it was conveyed to Benj. Cooley, on June 5, 1754.

Charles Thrasher, Horace Miller, Robert Hay, Warren T. Crombie, Oliver E. Herrick, and finally by Alfred A. Whitney for a year past. It is now known as the "Village Hotel."

A man by the name of West had a tavern where John W. Keith now keeps—the Greenwich Hotel," at the "plains"—about seventy years ago. Some of his successors have been Nathaniel Powers, Charles Negus, Luke Earle, Nelson D. Barrel, John A. Weld, Salem Newton, and others. Having been partially burned recently, it is now undergoing repairs, and will soon be reopened by John W. Keith. Ozias Cone also kept a tavern about fifty years ago on the Barnard place.

STORES.

A few of the stores that have been kept in the town are worthy of notice. One of the earliest was kept by a man named Nichols, upward of one hundred years ago, where Samuel B. Esty now lives. The building is still standing in which it was kept, and is used as a store-house. Jabez Colburn was in trade about seventy years ago at Greenwich Plains. Wyatt Boyden succeeded him, then Amos Howe, and then Roger West. The store stood back of the meeting-house, near the horse-sheds. Amos Tinney kept a store a good many years ago, where A. L. Doak now lives. He was succeeded by Salem Newton.

Timothy Packard, of Monson, built the present store at Greenwich Plains, more than fifty years ago. A man named Allen first kept it two or three years; then Pliny Allen followed in company with Packard. It has been since kept by a number of persons for different periods, among whom have been Joshua Shaw, Capt. Thos. Smith, James Hanks, Samuel Warren, G. R. Dickinson, Lorenzo S. Blackmer, Sylvester F. Root, H. C. Longley, and F. O. Bliss. The present proprietor is Edward T. King.

Lucius R. Blackmer has had a drug-store about half a mile south of the church for the last fifteen years.

Of the stores at Greenwich village, Col. Thomas Powers had one of the first in the Charles Record house, over seventy years ago. About the same time Deacon Raymore kept one farther down in the village. Thomas and Elias Smith succeeded Raymore, and failed. Then Ira Haskell ran the store for a good many years. Different firms and persons have traded there since, including Smith & Hodgkins, Morton & Blackmer, Jonathan Smith, who at one time owned two stores in the village, Calvin Richards, Blackmer Bros., Fuller & Blackmer, Alonzo Flag, and Thayer Bros.

S. S. Greenleaf had a store about 1839, under the building known as the "Masonic Temple," at the village. It was afterward kept by Elias Smith, then Smith & Son, and then by Smith & Hodgkins. H. M. Brown and Brown & Root followed soon after. The store was then remodeled by Robert Hay, the present owner, and is now kept by Charles Hodgkins.

Henry M. Brown opened the store opposite Record's blacksmith-shop about five years ago. He kept it four years, and then sold out to Levi N. Chamberlain, the present proprietor.

PHYSICIANS.

The earliest physicians who practiced in Greenwich were Drs. Wm. Stone, Trask, and Robinson. They were in practice the early part of the century, or earlier. Dr. Stone lived in the south part of the town (now Enfield). Dr. Trask resided on what has since been known as the "Marcy place." Other physicians who have practiced in the town have been Drs. Rufus Stone, Clesson, Cobb, Elliott Beckwith, Elmer, Davis, J. W. Goodell, Norman Smith, J. R. Greenleaf, Mason C. Darling, Levi Chamberlain, and Dr. Albert White, who was also an author. There is now no regular practicing physician in the town.

LAWYERS.

The only lawyer who ever lived and practiced in the town was Laban Marcy. He commenced practice as early as 1812, and was prominent in town affairs until his death, on Oct. 12, 1860.

STAGE-ROUTES.

Before the introduction of railroads, two prominent stage-routes passed through the town, one running from Keene, N. H., to Palmer, Hampden Co., and another from Northampton to Worcester.

ORGANIZATION.

An act of the General Court incorporating the inhabitants of Quabbin into a parish was passed June 29, 1749, and Thomas Gibbs was authorized to convene the first meeting. By the provisions of the act the inhabitants were empowered to call a minister, and levy a tax for his support.

Gibbs issued his call Nov. 4, 1749, and the first parish-meeting was held on the 20th day of the same month. Gibbs was appointed moderator, and the following officers were chosen: Clerk, William Carpenter; Prudential Committee, Thomas Gibbs, Jeremiah Powers, and David Powers; Assessors, John Townsend, Wm. Carpenter, and Nathan Fiske; Collector, Abraham Gibbs. At the same meeting it was voted to give the Rev. Pelatiah Webster a call to settle in the ministry among them. The particular circumstances attending the call and acceptance are elsewhere referred to.

At a public vendue held at Quabbin on Sept. 5, 1750, the following lots were sold for taxes: No. 1, originally drawn by Edmund Howard, to James Wright for £32. No. 3, originally drawn by John Reed, to Samuel Robinson for £30. No. 42, originally drawn by Thomas Buffington, to Simon Davis for £133. No. 41, originally drawn by Benj. Chamberlain, to Edward Winslow for £53. No. 8, originally drawn by Isaac Winslow, to Noah Ashley for £98. No. 17, originally drawn by John Johnson, to James Wright for £120. No. 38, originally drawn by Richard Jennings, to Noah Ashley for £57. No. 77, originally drawn by Josiah Denney, to Benjamin Sheldon for £106. No. 54, originally drawn by John Daggart, to Samuel Robinson for £56 10s. No. 72, originally drawn by Ebenezer Hill, to Samuel Robinson for £31. No. 75, originally drawn by Sampson Mason, to Josiah Wood for £37. No. 78, originally drawn by Isaac Dunham, to Wm. Train for £45 10s. No. 4, originally drawn by Benj. Washburn, to Abraham Gibbs. No. 82, originally drawn by Abigail Hubbard, to Jeremiah Powers for £40 10s. No. 85, originally drawn by Joseph Brown, to Thomas Gibbs for £36. No. 86, originally drawn by Henry Brown, to Jacob Gibbs for £36. No. 88, originally drawn by John Briant, to David Powers for £40. Nos. 42, 77, 54, 75, 4, 85, 86, and 88 were afterward redeemed.

On March 2, 1752, the parish voted to build three bridges,—"one over the east branch of Swift River, between Mr. Webster's and Mount Lizzie; another over the middle branch, over by Thomas Gibbs', where the road is laid out; and another at Pine Bridge."

On Dec. 2, 1752, the parish voted the sum of £10 "to be put into a Rate to Repair the breach made in the meeting-house Cosed by the hearry Caien." The same day they "voted to send a Portion to the Grate and General Cort to prevent the Provence Rates levying here for Several yers to Com; furthermore, If this our Request Can't be obtained, we 2dly vote that thier be a portion Given into the Said Cort to try If we may have Town Privileges." This meeting broke up before all the articles in the warrant had been gone through with, because, it growing dark, the moderator asked the ayes on a question to go out-doors, and he would come out and count them. The vote caused dissatisfaction, being considered irregular and void, and so the moderator withdrew, and a new one was chosen.

On Dec. 17, 1753, the parish chose Abraham Gibbs agent to the General Court to get them incorporated as a town. The result of his efforts was that on the 20th of April, 1754, the town of Greenwich was duly incorporated and endowed with all the rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by the other towns of the commonwealth. The territory thus incorporated also included the present towns of Dana and Petersham, in Worcester County. The name of the town was conferred in honor of Gen. Greenwich.

The first town-meeting was held at the meeting-house in Greenwich, on Thursday, Aug. 15, 1754, by virtue of a warrant issued Aug. 12, 1754, by John Worthington. This gentleman acted as moderator of the meeting. The following town officers were chosen: Clerk, Nathan Fisk; Selectmen, Jeremiah Powers, James Nevins, Benjamin Cooley, John Rea, and John Townsend; Assessors, Nathan Fisk, Abraham Gibbs, and Benjamin Cooley. The usual minor officers were chosen, such as constables, surveyors of highways, tithing-men, fence-viewers, hog-reeves, deer-reeves, and a sealer of weights and measures.

The inhabitants of the town immediately proceeded to the work of organization. Many of the measures undertaken to that end are elsewhere treated. A few notes taken from the town records will best manifest the manners and customs of the people, their method of transacting business, and their management of town affairs.

In the month of October, 1754, the town voted to build a log pound 25 feet square, at the "northwest corner of the ten acres of land sequestered for the town, where the meeting-house stands." On the same day, Simon Davis and Nathan Fisk were chosen to prefer a petition to the General Court for leave to tax all the land in the town a penny and a half per acre for the period of five years, in support of the gospel in the town. The sum of £8 was voted at the same meeting to provide a town stock of ammunition.

On Oct. 23, 1755, the town voted to "shut, bolt, and bar the doors of the public meeting-house in Greenwich, and not to be opened by any man without the order of the selectmen of Greenwich."

On March 10, 1760, the town "voted to Capt. Powers 4s. 6d. for 3 Quarts of Rum he provided for perambulating lines at sundry times; also, 7s. 6d. for 5 Quarts of Rum he provided for the Raising of Hind's Bridge in the County Road."

On March 8, 1762, Rev. Robert Cutler was chosen an agent to present a petition to the General Court for the annexation of part of the equivalent lands and part of Hardwick to Greenwich.

On April 5, 1764, the town "voted to give Dr. Stone four Dollars to enable him to git ye east part of Belchertown annexed to Greenwich." Notwithstanding the expenditure of so little money, the General Court responded to the wishes of the inhabitants, and by an act passed Feb. 6, 1765, annexed part of the territory of Belchertown to Greenwich.

A penny tax on all land was granted in the year 1767, for the relief of Rev. Robert Cutler, the minister of the town at that date.

On Oct. 3, 1774, John Rea was chosen a delegate to Concord. On May 22, 1775, Joseph Hendrick was chosen a delegate to Watertown. On Aug. 2, 1779, Barnabas Sears was chosen a delegate to the convention at Cambridge.

In the month of January, 1787, Nehemiah Stebbins was chosen an agent to the General Court to prevent the south end of the town from being set off. On February 3d, of the same year, Nathaniel Whitcomb was chosen for the same purpose. Their efforts proved abortive, however, for the south parish of Greenwich (now Enfield) was duly incorporated June 20, 1787.

In the year 1797 a bounty of $2 was offered for each wild-cat killed in the town, provided satisfactory evidence were offered that it was started within town limits.

On June 7, 1802, a pound 30 feet square was erected a few rods south of Nathaniel Eaton's place.

On Dec. 28, 1813, Abijah and Thomas Powers were chosen as agents to the General Court to oppose the division of the town. The following year Laban Marcy was chosen for a like purpose.

On Dec. 16, 1823, it was "voted to dissolve the meeting-house," and this was the last town-meeting held within the walls of the first edifice.

On Oct. 6, 1865, Hon. James E. Cooley, of New York City, a native of the town, deeded to the town part of the Azariah Cooley farm, situated in the south part of the town, and comprising about 110 acres of land, for the use of the poor. The deed provides that it shall always be known as "Cooley's Home for the Poor," and contains a provision relative to the support of one James Cooley, and restricting the amount of timber cut. The donation has proved of great benefit to the town.

The appropriations voted by the town for the year 1878 were as follows: Highways and bridges, $900; schools, $750; contingent expenses for schools, $150; support of the poor, $900; town officers, $200; abatement of taxes, $50; interest on town debt, $600; State aid, $200; contingent expenses, $300; total, $4050.

The following persons have filled the principal offices in the town:

PROPRIETORS' COMMITTEE.

- 1733.—Capt. Redaway, Josiah Conant, Samuel Marrik, Josiah Keith, Edward Shove.
- 1742.—Timothy Ruggles, Shulael Conant, Ebenezer Hartshorn, Daniel Lewis, Jr., John Foster, Joseph Wheton, Thomas Gibbs.
- 1744.—Samuel Childs, Ebenezer Hartshorn, Josiah Converse, David Nevins, John Foster, Daniel Lewis, Jr., Thomas Gibbs.

PRUDENTIAL COMMITTEE OF PARISH.

- 1749.—Thomas Gibbs, Jeremiah Powers, David Powers.
- 1750.—Thomas Gibbs, Simon Davis, David Powers, Jeremiah Powers, John Townsend.
- 1751.—Thomas Gibbs, Simon Davis, Jeremiah Powers, John Townsend, David Powers.
- 1752.—Thomas Gibbs, Jacob Osborne, Simon Davis.
- 1753.—Thomas Gibbs, Simon Davis, Hopestill Hinds.

SELECTMEN.

- 1754.—Jeremiah Powers, James Nevins, Benj. Cooley, John Rea, John Townsend.
- 1755.—Jeremiah Powers, John Rea, Wm. Fisk, Benj. Cooley, Abraham Gibbs.
- 1756.—Jeremiah Powers, Simon Davis, Nathan Fisk, James Nevins, Nehemiah Hinds.
- 1757.—Thomas Gibbs, Benj. Cooley, John Rea, Abraham Gibbs, Jeremiah Powers.
- 1758.—Thomas Gibbs, Nathan Fisk, John Rea.
- 1759.—Stephen Fisk, Thomas Gibbs, Jeremiah Powers, Benj. Cooley, Nathan Fisk.
- 1760.—Thomas Gibbs, Stephen Fisk, Abraham Gibbs.
- 1761.—John Rea, Jeremiah Powers, Benj. Cooley.
- 1762-63.—Stephen Fisk, John Rea, Jeremiah Powers.
- 1764.—Luke Hitchcock, Thomas Gibbs, Wm. Rogers.
- 1765.—Jeremiah Powers, John Rea, Simon Stone.
- 1766.—Luke Hitchcock, John Rea, Simon Stone, Nehemiah Hinds, Benj. Cooley.
- 1767.—Luke Hitchcock, John Rea, Benj. Cooley.
- 1768.—Abijah Powers, Isaac Powers, Nathaniel Whitcomb.
- 1769-73.—Isaac Powers, James McClure, Abijah Powers.
- 1774-75.—Isaac Powers, Joseph Hooker, Nathaniel Whitcomb.
- 1776.—Isaac Powers, Abijah Powers, Nathaniel Whitcomb.
- 1777.—Isaac Powers, Abijah Powers, Thomas Tufts.
- 1778.—Isaac Powers, Abijah Powers, Simon Stone.
- 1779.—Isaac Powers, Barnabas Sears, Simon Stone.
- 1780.—Caleb West, Abijah Powers, Joseph Hinds.
- 1781.—Isaac Powers, Barnabas Sears, Simon Stone.
- 1782.—Isaac Powers, Barnabas Sears, Simon Stone, Jr.
- 1783-84.—Isaac Powers, Joseph Hinds, Simon Stone, Jr.
- 1786.—Isaac Powers, Nehemiah Stebbins, Nath. Whitcomb.
- 1787.—Isaac Powers, Ezra Alden, David Swetland.
- 1788.—Isaac Powers, Reuben Cooley, Nathaniel Whitcomb.
- 1789.—Elias Haskell, Robert Field, Reuben Cooley.
- 1790.—Elias Haskell, Daniel Hayward, Reuben Cooley.
- 1791.—Robert Field, Joseph Hendrick, Timothy Hinds.
- 1792.—Elias Haskell, Simon Stone, Joseph Hendrick.
- 1793.—Isaac Powers, Robert Field, Thomas Powers.
- 1794.—Isaac Powers, Robert Field, Abijah Powers.
- 1795.—Isaac Powers, Robert Field, Abijah Powers, Reuben Colton, Roger West.
- 1796.—Isaac Powers, Robert Field, Roland Colton, Reuben Colton, Abijah Powers.
- 1797.—Isaac Powers, William Stone, Roland Clark.
- 1798.—Isaac Powers, Reuben Colton, Roger West.
- 1799.—Isaac Powers, William Stone, Roland Clark.

1800.—Isaac Powers, Reuben Colton, Elias Haskell.
 1801.—Isaac Powers, Roger West, Benjamin Harwood.
 1802.—Isaac Powers, Benjamin Harwood, Elias Haskell.
 1803-4.—Elias Haskell, Benjamin Harwood, Roger West.
 1805.—Isaac and Thomas Powers, Benjamin Harwood.
 1806-7.—Isaac Powers, Stephen Tilsin, Elias Haskell.
 1808.—Elias Haskell, Elijah Atwood, Reuben Colton.
 1809-10.—Thomas Powers, Benjamin Harwood, Abel Walker, Jr.
 1811.—Thomas Powers, James Richards, Abel Walker, Jr.
 1812.—Thomas Powers, William Stone, James Richards.
 1813.—Thomas Powers, James Richards, Ezra Ayres.
 1814.—Thomas Powers, James Richards, Jesse Fobes.
 1815.—James Richards, Nathan Powers, Benjamin Townsend.
 1816.—Thomas and Clark Powers, John Tuttle.
 1817.—Thomas Powers, John Northam, Ezra Ayres.
 1818-19.—John Fuller, John Northam, John Warner.
 1820.—John Fuller, John Warner, Ezra Alden.
 1821.—Laban Marcy, Clark and Thomas Powers.
 1822-24.—Laban Marcy, John Northam, Thomas Smith.
 1825.—Laban Marcy, John Warner, Joseph W. Estey.
 1826.—Laban Marcy, John Warner, Philip Davis.
 1827.—Laban Marcy, Clark Powers, Warren J. Wing.
 1828-29.—Laban Marcy, John Warner, Jonathan F. Sears.
 1830.—Laban Marcy, John Warner, John Northam.
 1831-32.—Jonathan F. Sears, Clark Powers, Thomas Smith.
 1833.—Laban Marcy, Jonathan F. Sears, Daniel Cutler.
 1834.—John Northam, Salem Newton, Joseph W. Estey.
 1835.—Clark Powers, Jonathan F. Sears, Cullen Warner.
 1836.—Cullen Warner, Thomas Smith, Samuel Hale.
 1837-38.—John Northam, John Warner, Esick Dexter.
 1839-41.—Ira Haskell, Laban Marcy, Jonathan F. Sears.
 1842.—Ira Haskell, Laban Marcy, Andrew H. Sears.
 1843.—Ira Haskell, Andrew H. Sears, Erastus Blodgett.
 1844.—Laban Marcy, Erastus Blodgett, Ezra Gibbs.
 1845.—Laban Marcy, Erastus Blodgett, Elias Smith.
 1846-48.—Laban Marcy, John Warner, Andrew H. Sears.
 1849.—John Warner, Shubael Vaughan, Eben W. Bailey.
 1850.—Shubael Vaughn, Ezra S. Gibbs, Luke Earle.
 1851.—Laban Marcy, John Warner, Luke Earle.
 1852.—John Warner, Luke Earle, Erastus Blodgett.
 1853.—Luke Earle, Erastus Blodgett, Ziba Snow.
 1854.—Erastus Blodgett, Ziba Snow, James Hanks.
 1855.—Ziba Snow, A. L. Doak, Charles N. Powers.
 1856-58.—James Hanks, John T. Warner, Luther B. Fuller.
 1859.—John T. Warner, Linus Tourtelotte, Nathaniel Topliff.
 1860.—John T. Warner, Thomas S. Gilmore, Dr. J. W. Goodell.
 1861.—Thomas S. Goodell, J. W. Goodell, Lyman Tourtelotte.
 1862.—Ziba Snow, A. D. Doak, Luther D. Fuller.
 1863.—John T. Warner, Luke Earle, Luther D. Fuller.
 1864.—John T. Warner, Marvin Bond, Linus Tourtelotte.
 1865-66.—Calvin W. Richards, Marvin Bond, Linus Tourtelotte.
 1867-68.—Ziba Snow, Marvin Bond, Lindall Whipple.
 1869-71.—Ziba Snow, S. F. Root, A. Hunter.
 1872.—Ziba Snow, Henry M. Brown, Elisha Moody.
 1873-74.—J. P. Vaughan, L. D. Fuller, Robert D. Bussey.
 1875.—J. P. Vaughan, A. L. Sprout, Austin Hunter.
 1876.—J. P. Vaughan, A. L. Sprout, D. S. Cutler.
 1877.—Joseph P. Vaughan, Anson F. Newcomb, Hiram Newton.
 1878.—Hiram Newton, Warren P. Sloan, Clark R. Sibley.

PROPRIETORS' CLERKS.

1732-33, Edward Shove; 1742, Joseph Wheton, Jr.; 1744, Daniel Lewis, Jr.; 1750, Paul Mandall; 1765, Joseph Moffett; 1767, Wm. Rogers; 1768, William Rogers.

PARISH CLERKS.

1749, Wm. Carpenter; 1751, Abraham Gibbs.

TOWN CLERKS.

1754, Nathan Fisk; 1758, Stephen Fisk; 1764, Isaac Powers; 1780, Thomas Powers; 1791, Simon Stone; 1792, Elias Haskell; 1794, Robert Field; 1795, Calvin Eaton; 1797, James Fisk; 1798, Asaph Newcomb; 1799, Reuben Colton; 1800, Nathaniel Eaton; 1804, Abi Walker, Jr.; 1811, Silas Newcomb; 1812, Ebenezer Rich; 1813, Laban Marcy; 1815, Ephraim Richards; 1816, Laban Marcy; 1821, Amos Howe; 1823, John Warner; 1825, Joseph H. Elmore; 1827, Dr. Mason C. Darling; 1830, Pliny Allen; 1831 (Nov. 14), Stephen Douglas, Jr.; 1832, Dr. Mason C. Darling; 1837, John Haskell; 1838, John T. Warner; 1840, Dr. Levi Chamberlain; 1841, Samuel Hale; 1844, Cullen Warner; 1845, Samuel Hale; 1848, N. P. Vaughan; 1850, Oren Towne; 1850 (Nov. 11), Thomas Smith; 1853, James Hanks; 1861, J. P. Smith; 1862, David Allen; 1877, Robert D. Bussey.

REPRESENTATIVES.

1775, Joseph Hendrick; 1776, Nehemiah Stebbins; 1777-81, Caleb West; 1788-89, Nehemiah Stebbins; 1792-96, James Fisk; 1798-99, Thomas Powers; 1801-4, Robert Field; 1805-6, Abijah Powers; 1808-9, Reuben Colton; 1810-11, Thomas Powers; 1812, Robert Field; 1813-14, Abijah Powers; 1816, '17, '18, '19, '24, '26, '27, '28, '30, '40, '41, '48, Laban Marcy; 1829, John Warner; 1832, Thomas

Smith; 1833, Dr. Mason C. Darling; 1834-35, Jonathan F. Sears; 1837, John Northam; 1838-39, 1842, Ira Haskell; 1843, Samuel Hale; 1844, Cullen Warner; 1850, Luke Earle; 1851, Ezra S. Gibbs; 1853, Ira Haskell; 1854, Benjamin House; 1860, Elias Smith; 1864, Albert L. Doak; 1866, John T. Warner; 1870, Sylvester F. Root.

VILLAGES.

The town contains two villages; of these,

GREENWICH PLAINS,

as it is designated, is situated south of the geographical centre of the town, between Mount Pomeroy and Mount Lizzie. It contains the Congregational Church, the old cemetery, a store, a post-office, a hotel, a plating-shop, a railroad depot, and a number of dwelling-houses. The post-office is supposed to have been established about the year 1810, and a large number of persons have filled the office of postmaster, including William Marcy, Laban Marcy, Selim Newton, Dr. Levi Chamberlain, Dr. Mason C. Darling, Pliny Allen, Joshua Shaw, Thomas Smith, James Hanks, Samuel Warren, G. R. Dickinson, Lorenzo S. Blackmer, Sylvester F. Root, H. C. Longley, and F. O. Bliss. Edward T. King is the present incumbent.

GREENWICH VILLAGE,

situated in the northeasterly section of the town, is more extensive, containing several stores, a hotel, blacksmith-shop, saw-mill, post-office, and a larger number of dwelling-houses. It is pleasantly situated along the east branch of Swift River, and at the base of a considerable range of hills. The post-office is said to have been established about the year 1807, and the first postmaster is said by some to have been Warren P. Wing, and by others to have been Gen. John Warner. The office has since been filled by a large number of persons, among whom may be mentioned Ira Haskell, David Allen, Sylvester F. Root, Henry M. Brown, and Levi N. Chamberlain, the present postmaster, who was appointed in 1878. The mail was carried from Northampton on horseback for many years by an odd character by the name of Chas. Hannum.*

SCHOOLS.

The cause of education received early attention in the town. As early as 1737 a committee was appointed by the original proprietors to lay out a lot for a school, and provision was made for the establishment and support of schools in the original grant of land.

After the incorporation of the town, the regular and systematic support of schools began. In the month of January, 1759, it was "voted to raise £9 for the support of a school for this town;" also, "voted that there be three men chosen a committee to divide the town into three parts, in order for the school to be kept in."

The committee chosen in accordance with this vote divided the town into three districts, as follows: "All north of the county-road leading from Hardwick to Pelham to be one part, and all south of the aforesaid road to William Fisk's, and across that into Mr. Benjamin Cooley's, to be a second or middle part, and those south of said line, be the other or third part." This division of the town continued for many years.

Various appropriations for the support of the schools have been made from time to time. On Oct. 11, 1761, £10 was appropriated. The same amount was appropriated the following year, and a committee was appointed to locate school-houses. In 1764 the sum of £20 was appropriated, and the same amount the following year.

In the month of November, 1765, the committee appointed to locate school-houses reported as follows: "1. In the south quarter, on the south side of the road, by a little brook, to the west of John Rea's. 2. At the meeting-house in Greenwich. 3. In the north part, near widow Wright's house. 4. At the north end of the old field south of Isaac Powers'."

* Hannum also acted as a sort of express and general purchasing agent for the community, and is said to have carried a cross-cut saw on horseback from Northampton to Greenwich, for twenty-five cents.

In 1793 the town voted £60 for schools; in 1795 this had increased to £100, and the same year the town was re-districted and divided into eleven school-districts. In 1798, $400 was appropriated for schools, and that sum remained the amount of the annual appropriation for several years. In 1814, $500 was appropriated; in 1856, $700; in 1867, $800; and in 1878, $900. In 1870 the town was divided into seven school-districts, which division is still in force, the number of scholars in attendance being about 100.

One of the first schools in the town was kept in an old barn that stood on the "old Ayres place." The school in the "middle district" was kept in an old house near Samuel Hale's, and was taught by a man by the name of Hogan for a time. The school in the south district was near the road leading from Enfield to Bond's village, in Palmer.

The first school-house at the "village" was part of the present residence of Mrs. Selina Morse. The next was a brick building that stood half-way between the old and present tavern stand, where Charles Record's blacksmith-shop is.

Of the early school-teachers mention may be made of Relief Sears, Elsie Marvin,—who is also said to have established and taught the first Sabbath-school, about 1816,—Daniel Knight, Daniel Lindsey, a Mr. Foster, and a Mr. Davenport.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL.

This branch of the Christian Church, known also as the "Orthodox," or "Standing Order" of Christians, was the first to become established, and for many years received direct town support. Provision for the establishment of a church and the settlement of a "learned orthodox minister" was made in the original grant of land, 300 acres of which were to be reserved for the first settled minister, and a like amount for the second.

The proprietors of Quabbin met on the 14th day of May, 1740,* and voted to build a meeting-house 40 by 30 feet in ground dimensions and 20 feet between the joints. It was subsequently, Nov. 27, 1744, changed to 35 by 45 feet, but the house was not finished until 1745, because boards could not be procured, as there was no saw-mill in the settlement prior to that date. The house was built upon, or near, the spot where Capt. N. Powers' house afterward stood, near the corner of the old grave-yard. Each proprietor was taxed forty shillings to defray the expenses of preaching for twelve months. This meeting-house, which is said to have had its acoustic properties greatly enhanced by the addition of an immense "sounding-board," remained in use until 1824, when the present one was dedicated, it having been erected in accordance with a vote of the town passed Dec. 16, 1822.

Meetings were held as early as 1745, different ministers officiating. On Oct. 31, 1745, John Patterson, Timothy Ruggles, and others protested in writing against paying money to support an "unorthodox minister," and demanded that whoever preached should be first "approbated" by Rev. Messrs. Cheney, of Brookfield; Edwards, of Northampton; White, of Hardwick; Woodbridge, of Hatfield; and Williams, of Hadley. The same date the sum of 50s., old tenor, was voted to James Wright, for "victuals and lodging provided at the raising of the meeting-house." On Oct. 4, 1749, the sum of £60 each was voted to Amos Monson and Benjamin Dickinson for preaching. John Searl preached in 1747.

On Nov. 4, 1749, the parish voted a call to the Rev. Pelatiah Webster as their first regular minister, offering him £500, old tenor, for his settlement, and a like sum for his first year's salary, and afterward the equivalent of 200 bushels of Indian corn, 100 bushels of rye, and 75 bushels of wheat. Webster accepted, provided that after the first year's salary they should pay him the equivalent of 180 ounces of silver, current money, or passable bills of public credit. The terms being mutually satisfactory, Mr. Webster was installed the first regular minister of the church Dec. 20, 1749. He was a graduate of Yale College, of the class of 1746, and remained pastor of the church for a period of nine years, during which time quite serious difficulties occurred between him and the parish, mainly upon points of church government and discipline. The town, in October, 1754, voted not to accept the "articles of church discipline drawn up by Mr. Webster." He was dismissed in October, 1755. On Feb. 15, 1757, a call, which was not accepted, was extended to the Rev. Philip Payson, of Walpole. Rev. Belcher Hancock then supplied the pulpit for a time, and received a regular call Aug. 16, 1758, which, for some reason, he did not accept. July 5, 1759, the town voted "to hire Robert Cutler to preach 6 Sabbaths on probation." He seems to have satisfied the people, and was regularly called Sept. 4, 1759, being offered at first £54 settlement and £50 salary. £12 13s. 4d. was afterward added to the settlement, and he was duly installed as the second regular pastor Feb. 13, 1760. Mr. Cutler was a graduate of Harvard College, in the class of 1741, served a long and useful ministry, and died "in the harness," Feb. 24, 1786, at the age of sixty-eight, and in the fortieth year of his ministry. His remains lie buried in the ancient burying-ground of the town.

Mr. Cutler was succeeded by Rev. Joseph Blodgett, of Stafford, Conn., who was settled Nov. 8, 1786, and who died Nov. 26, 1833, at the age of seventy-six. Rev. Joseph H. Patrick was settled as colleague pastor Nov. 17, 1830. He was a graduate of Brown University in 1817, and a native of Warren. After the death of Rev. Joseph Blodgett he remained pastor of the church until Dec. 21, 1842, when he was dismissed. Rev. Edward P. Blodgett, the present pastor, a graduate of Amherst College, in 1838, was installed July 5, 1843. He has filled the pastoral office with great fidelity and success for a period of nearly thirty-six years. The church is in a prosperous condition spiritually, though somewhat in need of a new meeting-house, the storms of over fifty winters having visibly affected its ancient frame. The society embraces a membership of 128 persons; the average attendance upon the Sabbath-school is 67; number of volumes in the Sabbath-school library, 200; superintendent of Sabbath-school, J. B. Root.

METHODISTS.

This denomination began to exist in the town about fifty years ago. The first established minister was Rev. Mr. Stoddard. Among those who followed him have been Rev. Messrs. Harwood, H. Morgan, J. Knight, Philetus Green, Philo Hawks, J. Lewis, and others. Meetings were held alternately in the "Masonic Temple," so called, at Greenwich village, and in the meeting-house on the "plain," a division of its use having been made between the Congregationalists, Methodists, and Unitarians. For some unexplained cause the movement finally died out, and no regular society has existed in the town for the past twenty-five years.

UNITARIANS.

The believers in the unity of the Deity are said to have been quite numerous at one time. In the year 1829, and about that time, the society divided the use of the meeting-house with the Congregationalists and Methodists. As they have no present organization in the town, the names of the pastors, if any, who have regularly officiated for the society cannot be given.

* The proprietors present at this meeting were Jedediah Emmons, John Kidder, Kenelin Winslow, Thomas Gibbs, Enoch Flines, John Hardwood, John Nevins, Elijah Fitch, Jonathan Burt, James Wheeler, Timothy Ruggles, John Brayman, Samuel Morris, Jr., Wm. Rand, Edward Shove, John Foster, Robert Fenton, Gershom Keyes, David Nevins, John Robbins, James Redaway, Josiah Perry, and ——— Reed.

BURIAL-GROUNDS.

The town is fortunate enough to have but one place of public burial within its limits. This is the "Old Burying-Ground" at Greenwich Plains. The one which formerly existed in the south part of the town is within the town of Enfield.

The ground was laid out by a committee appointed by the proprietors of Quabbin May 12, 1737, consisting of John Foster, Shubael Conant, and Samuel Childs. Ten acres of land were set apart for the meeting-house and burying-ground. On May 20, 1772, it was voted to "fence the burying-ground with stone fence, the yard to be 20 rods square." On Nov. 25, 1822, it was "voted to make a good board fence for the burying-ground, to be painted."

Most of the early settlers, especially of the north part of the town, are buried in this cemetery, although some were never honored with tombstones, and those erected to the memories of others have crumbled away. The oldest stone in the yard at present is a small one on which are inscribed these words:

"In memory of Deacⁿ James Wright, who Dec'd July 7th, 1754, in the 51st year of his age."

Mr. Wright was among the very first settlers of the town, but from the fact that he died so early, both in respect to time and age, no trace of him can be found save this stone.

Other inscriptions in the yard are the following:

"Spe Salvis Aeternae.—Rev. Robert Cutler, Feb. 24, 1786, in the 65th year of his age, & 40th of his ministry."

"Elizabeth Cutler, wife of Rev. Robert Cutler, died of an apoplectic fit, Sept. 2, 1774, aged 43."

"Roland Sears, who died March 23d, 1851, aged 88. A Revolutionary Soldier under Washington."

"Moses Robinson, who died May 22d, 1839, aged 82. A Revolutionary Soldier under Washington."

"Lieut. Jacob Gibbs, who died Nov. 13th, 1777, aged 51."

"Mrs. Ruth, wife of Capt. Joseph Hooker, who died April 7th, 1804, in her 79th year."

"Rhoda, daughter of Lieut. Jacob Gibbs, who died Feb. 7th, 1767."

Two unique inscriptions are the following:

"Miss Dolly Poor, who died Nov. 28th, 1808, in the 36th year of her age.

"Delicate she look'd & fair,
Open, generous, and sincere,
Like an angel did she seem,
Lovely, artfull, and serene,
You'd joyn with me had you her seen;
pity fill'd her tender breast,
of every virtue she profest.
O may the heavens befriend her there,
Renowning blessings ever more."*

"Sacred to the memory of the dead,
And the pride of the living,
Of Mary, wife of Andrew Harwood."

The ground is in good condition, and contains a number of handsome stones and monuments.

Danforth Trask has had charge of it for many years, succeeding his father.

SOCIETIES.

KING HIRAM ROYAL ARCH CHAPTER OF MASONS

and a lodge of Knights Templar are said to have existed at Greenwich village about 1827 or 1828, and to have been established chiefly through the instrumentality of Gen. John Warner, Wm. Walker, Warren P. Wing, and John T. Jordan. The chapter was afterward removed to Ware. The building known as "Masonic Temple" was erected by these Masons, and some exciting experiences are reported to have occurred within its walls. No regular organized body of the order now exists in the town.

The only surviving members of this early enterprise are said to be Horace Hunt and Henry Fobes, of Enfield, and John T. Jordan, of Greenwich.

* The author of these lines is said to have been Dr. Nehemiah Hinds, an early physician of Prescott.

FRIENDSHIP GRANGE, NO. 55, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY, was established May 22, 1874. It is in a flourishing condition, and meets in the "village." The present officers of the society are J. H. Morgan, Master; Pliny Clifford, Overseer; Joseph P. Vaughn, Sec.

GRANITE LODGE, NO. 36, I. O. G. T., was organized in 1876, and meets weekly at Farmer's Hall in the "village." The present officers are H. H. Vaughn, Worthy Chief; William Carrick, Sec.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

The records of the town contain the following minutes:

"1806, June 16th.—Total eclipse of the sun. It was viewed with admiration; the darkness was so great that candles for lighting the rooms was necessary; stars appeared brilliant."

"1816.—The summer of this year was remarkable, what is generally known or call'd the cold summer. Grass was very light, and the crops, except English grain, was universally cut off through the country. English grain was remarkable heavy and good, commanded from $1.50 to $2 per bushel; much suffering ensued."

On May 22, 1876, a severe hurricane passed through the town, unroofing several buildings including the town-house, carrying the roof one hundred rods away. "Bailey's Grove" received great damage.

Jan. 9, 1878, the depot of the Springfield, Athol and North-eastern Railroad, at Greenwich village, was destroyed by fire.

In early times every man had a certain "mark" for his cattle, which he had recorded in the books of the town, and by which they could be identified as his property. A record of "strays" was always kept in the town books. The following is the record of one of the earliest:

"Taken up and strayed by Jeremiah Powers, of Quabbin Parrish, a year and untide steer marked with the toop of his left Ear Cut of, and is of a Cherry Brindle, with a leetel white spot In his fore head and his two hinde feet white.

"Quabbin, November the 27th, 1752.

"ABRAHAM GIBBS.

"Parish Clerk."

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The principal industrial occupation of the town has always been agriculture. Other branches of industry have, however, flourished to a greater or less extent, the splendid water-power of the town being especially utilized at Greenwich village.

In the early part of the present century, Gen. John Warner established a factory for the manufacture of scythes at that point. He was afterward joined by David Allen, his son-in-law, who finally succeeded him. The factory was burned about 1858, but was afterward rebuilt, and the business resumed for a short time. Work was then stopped, and the machinery removed to Warren.

About 1818, Ezra Ayres engaged in the manufacture of pewter buttons at the old "Ayres place." The building in which the enterprise was pursued was afterward moved into Greenwich village, and is now a dwelling-house, owned by Dwight Johnson.

One of the first blacksmiths at the "village" was Gad Wright, whose shop was near Warner's scythe-factory.

About fifty years ago, Warren P. Wing engaged in the manufacture of "cards" at the "village." Somewhat earlier, Nathan Powers had a woolen-mill at the place where David Parker's saw- and grist-mill now is.

The business of braiding hats has been quite a branch of industry since the first part of the century, being followed by both sexes, but principally by females. A large number are still made in the town.

The first saw- and grist-mill was built about the year 1745, by a man named Holmes, near or on the spot where David Parker's mill now stands, at Greenwich village. Holmes also erected one of the first houses in the town, which stood where the tavern now is in 1768. "Capt. Hitchcock" owned the mill.

JOHN H. MORGAN.

An extract from the genealogical record of Rev. John C. Morgan, late of Naples, N. Y., which he compiled when eighty-one years of age:

Miles Morgan was a son of William, of Landaff, Glamorganshire, Wales. Miles emigrated from Wales to Bristol, England, and from there to America, and settled at Springfield, Mass., May 14, 1636. Soon after his arrival in Boston, William Pyncheon, Esq., with a number of families, removed from Roxbury, and settled the town of Springfield. He joined these emigrants in their enterprise, and on their arrival at their place of destination the land upon what is now the main street in Springfield was divided into shares, and distributed by lot among the settlers. The tract of land which was allotted to Morgan extended on the south side of Ferry Lane, now known as Cyprus Street, from the main street to the river. It is a rich and beautiful tract, the house being about twenty rods from the river.

In the first records of the town of Springfield we find that, in 1646, he was taxed nine pounds sixpence for thirty-four and one-half acres of land. From 1647 to 1656 he was surveyor for the upper part of the town. In 1657 was chosen one of the selectmen of the town, and held the office for many years. As one of the selectmen he signed a contract with William Pyncheon, Esq., for the building of a grist-mill upon Mill Brook for the grinding of corn.

Supposed to have been born in 1615. Was married in 1643, at the age of twenty-eight, to Prudence Gilbert. Miles became acquainted with Prudence on his voyage to the "New World," and subsequently corresponded with her. In 1643 he engaged two of his intimate friends and an Indian guide to accompany him to the town of Beverly, where she lived, they taking with them an old horse to convey the furniture of the bride to her future habitation, and their muskets, with which they might "turn to flight the armies of the aliens," who might molest them in their pilgrimage to and from the land of the people of the East. Prosperity attended the journey of our patriarchal ancestor, and on his arrival the hymeneal torch was kindled. The matrimonial contract having been ratified in "due form," the old horse received his destined burden, the bridegroom and his companions shouldered their muskets, and thus escorted the bride to Springfield, who walked the entire distance from Beverly to that place, that is, about one hundred and twenty miles. By this marriage Miles had eight children, as follows:

2. Mary, born 1644. 3. Jonathan, born 1646. 4. David, born 1648. 5. Pelatiah, born 1650. 6. Isaac, born 1652. 7. Lydia, born 1654. 8. Hannah, born 1656. 9. Mercy, born 1658.

Prudence, wife of Miles, died Nov. 14, 1660. Miles (1), or Sergt. Miles Morgan, as he was then called, married Elizabeth Bliss, Feb. 15, 1669, and had one son, Nathaniel (10). Miles Morgan (1) died May 28, 1699.

Nathaniel (10), born June 14, 1671, married Hannah Bird, Jan. 19, 1691, when in his twentieth year. He settled in West Springfield, on Chicopee Street, where he lived to the age of eighty-one years, and died Aug. 30, 1752. He had seven sons and two daughters. All of his sons and one daughter lived to the age of seventy years, and some of them attained a still greater age. They all married, and settled in the first parish of West Springfield. Their names were:

30. Nathaniel, Jr., born February, 1692. 31. Samuel, born 1694. 32. Ebenezer, born 1696. 33. Hannah, born 1698. 34. Miles, born 1700. 35. Joseph, born Dec. 3, 1702. 36. James, born 1705. 37. Isaac, born 1708. 38. Elizabeth, born 1710.

They possessed some of the finest farms in that town, but their descendants are scattered, and none remain to tell the places of their fathers' sepulchre.

Sic Tempora Mutant.

Joseph (35), fifth son of Nathaniel, married Mary Stebbins, daughter of Benjamin Stebbins, of West Springfield, in 1735. In 1751 they removed to the north parish, now called Holyoke, and settled on land opposite South Hadley Falls, one mile northwest of the city of Holyoke, where they spent the remainder of their lives, and saw their children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren settled around them on the old plantation. The children of Joseph (35) were:

44. Joseph, Jr., born February, 1736. 45. Titus, who died young. 46. Titus, second, born July 19, 1740. 47. Lucas, born 1743. 48. Elizabeth, born 1745. 49. Judah, born 1749. 50. Jesse, twin of Judah. 51. Hannah, born 1751.

Mr. Joseph Morgan, Sr. (35), died of phthisis, Nov. 17, 1773, aged seventy-two years. Mary, his wife, long survived him. She died Dec. 7, 1798, aged eighty-six. Of the other sons of Nathaniel (10) or their posterity little is known.

Titus (46), son of Joseph, married Sarah Morgan (41), May 19, 1763, at West Springfield. They were both great-grandchildren of Miles (1) in two distinct lines. An extract from Sarah's (41) genealogy:

Miles (1), the son of William.

David (4), Miles' second son, married Mary Clark in 1673. Their children were: 16. Prudence, born 1674. 17. Pelatiah, born 1677. 18. David, born 1679. 19. Abigail, born 1681. 20. John, born 1682. 21. Jonathan, born 1685. 22. Mercy, born 1688. 23. Ebenezer, born March 7, 1692. 24. Benjamin, born 1695.

David (4) died in 1731, aged eighty-three years. Ebenezer (23), fifth son of David, married Mary Horton, in 1719. She died in 1736, and he married, in 1737, Sarah Warner; she (Sarah) was born Feb. 2, 1710. Their children were:

39. Ebenezer, Jr., born 1738. 40. Samuel, born 1740. 41. Sarah, born 1742.

John H. Morgan

42. Catharine, born 1744. 43. Chloe, born 1746.

Titus (46) and Sarah (41) were married May 19, 1763. Their children were:

84. Erastus, born 1764. 85. Gaius, born 1766. 86. Quartus, twin of Gaius. 87. Julius, born 1768. 88. Plinney, born 1780. 89. Archipas, born 1772. 90. Titus, Jr., born 1776. 91. Sally, born 1779. 92. Hiram, born 1781. The most of these had large families.

Titus (46), with his four brothers, all settled on the old plantation of their father, Joseph (35), about a mile southeast of Mount Tom. I well remember sixty years ago (1811) they were surrounded by their descendants of the second and third generations, but now (1871) not one of the name remains in the parish. Sarah (41) died at the age of seventy-seven years. Titus (46) died at the age of ninety-four years and six months.

The first utilizing of the waters of the Connecticut River for manufacturing purposes at Holyoke was a saw-mill built by Titus Morgan and Erastus Morgan, his son, a little over a mile above the Holyoke dam.

Erastus Morgan was a Revolutionary soldier. In the olden times, when shad and salmon were plenty, Erastus Morgan, in company with five men, caught in one night six thousand shad and ninety salmon; the average weight of the salmon was thirty pounds. The shad they sold for one penny (two cents) per shad, and the salmon they divided and carried home with oxen and cart.

Erastus (34), their eldest son, married Clarissa Chapin, Dec. 31, 1789. Their children were:

129. John Calvin, born 1790. 130. Clarissa, born 1793. 131. Joseph Warren, born 1796. 132. Louis Segar, born 1801. 133. Huldah, born 1803. 134. Quartus Miles, born 1810.

Here ends the extract.

Joseph Warren married (by Rev. Thomas Rand, Sept. 14, 1820) Emma Wolcott, third daughter of Noah Wolcott, of West Springfield. She was born Oct. 11, 1800. Their children are:

Cordelia A., born July 18, 1821. Joseph W., Jr., born Dec. 9, 1822. Hiram A., born May 9, 1825. John H., born Oct. 29, 1829. Emma E., born Oct. 22, 1831. Lucy Torrey, born Sept. 15, 1838; died April 7, 1839.

In 1839, Joseph Warren Morgan removed with his family from West Springfield to North Dana, and resided there until April 18, 1854, when he removed to Greenwich, and in company with his youngest son, John H. Morgan, engaged in general farming and lumbering until his death, June 17, 1873, aged seventy-six years and nine months.

Cordelia A. Morgan married Edward S. Estey. Resides in New Salem. Has three children:—Joseph W., Caleb B., and Clara Ellen, the wife of Frederick Rice, of Sunderland.

Joseph W. Morgan, Jr., married Clementine Titus, who died in June, 1866. Has one child:—Frank J. Morgan. His second wife was Clara J. Morgan, of Naples, N. Y. Resides in North Dana.

Hiram A. Morgan is a Baptist clergyman. Resides in Middletown, Conn. Married Jane E. Bailey, of Middletown, Conn. Has one child:—Mary J. Morgan.

Emma E. Morgan married Luther D. Fuller. Has five children:—Charles, Frederick, Clara, Etta, and Edward. Resides in Belchertown.

John H. Morgan was born in that part of West Springfield now known as West Street, Holyoke. Removed with his father's family to North Dana in the spring of 1839. Attended the district school of North Dana in the winter, and assisted on the farm in summer, finishing his school-boy days in the academy at New Salem.

In the spring of 1854, in company with his father, they purchased a farm in the north part of Greenwich, and engaged in farming, and cutting and drawing wood and lumber to Ware. Was married, Oct. 10, 1855, to Sylvia L. Smith, of Winchester, N. H. They have one son (adopted), Henry S. Morgan, born April 6, 1871. In politics, temperance Republican, and a detester of the use of tobacco. A member of the Congregational society, of which society he was parish clerk from 1873 to 1878. Was chosen one of the assessors in 1869, also in 1873 and 1874. In 1866 was made a Master Mason by Bethel Lodge, Enfield. In the spring of 1874 was one of the charter-members of Friendship Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, and in January, 1875, was installed its Master, which office he has filled to the present time. He is interested in the advancement of a new and better agriculture, and the development of the resources of our own soil. For the advancement of this object, he was one of the organizers of the Swift River Valley Farmers' Club, its first vice-president, and takes an active part in all its discussions. Is particularly interested in the improvement of the grass crop and of sheep husbandry; also, a firm believer in the recuperative ability of New England soil.

Sylvia L. Smith Morgan is a descendant of the Rev. Henry Smith (1), who came from England to Charlestown in 1636. Settled in Wethersfield, Conn., in 1640; had ten children; died in 1648. Samuel (2), son of Henry, born in 1639; married in Northfield in 1666; moved to Hadley in 1679; died in 1703; had eight children. Preserved (3), son of Samuel, born in 1677; had eight children; died in Hadley in 1713. Samuel (4), son of Preserved, born in 1705; was deacon of the church in Northfield; had eleven children; died in 1799, aged ninety-five years. Elisha (5), son of Samuel, born in 1734; settled in Winchester, N. H.; was deacon of church in Northfield; had thirteen children. Noah (6), son of Elisha, died in 1853, aged eighty-seven. Leonard (7), son of Noah, born in 1798; married Sally Lyman in 1820; had four children; died at the age of thirty-eight. Henry S. Smith, born in 1822; died in December, 1864. Rebecca S., born in 1824; died in March, 1851. Sylvia L. Smith (8), born Jan. 31, 1829. Sarah C. Smith, born Jan. 18, 1836; married to Henry W. Richardson.

Photo. by Moffitt.

S. P. BAILEY.

S. P. Bailey, youngest son of Eber W. Bailey and Elizabeth Powers Bailey, was born in Worcester, Mass., Feb. 13, 1818. The other members of the family were Eber O., Adeline E., Stephen P., Mary A., and Sophronia R. The family remained here until young Bailey was six years of age, when they removed to Greenwich, Mass. The education of the subject of this sketch was obtained at the common schools, but, being diligent in his studies, he secured a fund of knowledge that well qualified him for his subsequent successful career as an active business-man. The early part of his life was spent at agricultural pursuits in connection with lumbering. He found the business of lumbering both pleasant and profitable, and since the age of thirty has given his time with great success to that industry.

June 24, 1852, he united in marriage with Lydia Ann Haskell, of New Salem, youngest daughter of Benjamin and Lydia Haskell. They had one child, Addie E., who died, aged seven months. Mrs. Bailey died Oct. 4, 1857. Mr. Bailey was married the second time, April 21, 1863, to Mrs. Abbie L. Wetherell, of Warren, Mass.

RES. OF ESTES SHUMWAY, GREENWICH, MASS.

LYNUS TOURTELLOTT.

RESIDENCE OF LYNUS TOURTELLOTT, GREENWICH, MASS

The business of silver-plating, pursued at Greenwich Plains, has been one of the most prominent industries for a great number of years. It was first established about the year 1818, by Stephen Douglas, nearly opposite the present store. Mr. Douglas subsequently united with him in business Messrs. Jason Blackmer and Reuben Haynes, the firm being known as Douglas, Haynes & Co. After the expiration of ten or twelve years, they were succeeded by the firm of Douglas & Doak (A. L.). Mr. Douglas afterward withdrew, and the firm became Doak & Topliff. William S. Douglas, a son of Stephen, then entered the business. Soon after, Mr. Topliff died, and the firm became again known as Douglas & Doak, and remains so at present. The principal articles plated are coach and saddlery hardware, and the enterprise affords employment, in good times, to about 14 men. The present shop stands between the residences of William S. Douglas and Robert D. Bussey, at Greenwich Plains, and was moved there about forty years ago.

At Greenwich village a large number of smaller enterprises are now pursued. A factory for the manufacture of dry-goods and other boxes has been in operation for the past fifteen years, and is owned by S. P. Bailey, who employs several men. Charles S. Record has a blacksmith-shop in the centre of the village. John H. Jordan manufactures carriages and sleighs, and furnishes employment for several men. He has been engaged in the business for a number of years. Marshall J. Wheeler has a broom-factory, and employs several hands. The saw- and grist-mill has been run for the past twenty years by Daniel Parker, who succeeded David Allen.

Collis W. Vaughn manufactures picture-frames and moldings at the centre of the town, and Wm. R. Manly has an excellent saw-mill in the west part.

MILITARY.

In the trying days of the Revolution the town manifested the most striking patriotism. As evidence of this fact, witness the following extract from the records: "At a Loyal Town-Meeting held at the public meeting-house, in Greenwich, on February, y^e 23 Day of August, 1774, at one o'clock in the afternoon," it was voted, "To provide a stock of ammunition. To provide two barrels of powder. To provide 200 weight of lead for the town stock. To provide 400 flint locks, and to chose a committee of eleven on correspondence." The committee chosen were Isaac Powers, Josiah Wilson, Jacob Gibbs, Nehemiah Stebbins, John Rea, Joseph Hooker, John Gibbs, Samuel Colton, Nehemiah Hinds, Simon Stone, and Jeremiah Powers, Jr. Other extracts could be given, manifesting the active support which the town gave the cause of liberty. Of those who served in the Continental army may be mentioned David Blackmer, Charles Bruce, Roland Sears, Moses Robinson, Barnabas Rich, Giles Rider, and — Pratt. Samuel Hale, who settled in the town about 1816, served from Enfield, Conn.

In the Shays rebellion the record of the town is less patriotic, the citizens, as a general thing, taking an active part against the government. The following persons are shown by the records to have taken the oath of allegiance after the suppression of the uprising, many of them being the first citizens of the town: Wm. Powers, Charles Bruce, Isaac Hunter, Samuel Wheeler, Barnabas Sears, Benj. Furnis, Jr., John Rogers, Cornelius Cannon, Levi Town, Stephen Darling, Witt Taylor, Isaac Town, Jr., Oliver Harris, John Brown, Benj. Harwood, Darius Rice, Wm. Morton, Robert Blackmer, Solomon Hinds, Robert Sears, Andrew Sears, Luke Powers, Walter Powers, Nathan Powers, Silas Jones, Nathaniel Jackson, Jeremiah Powers, Jr., John Walker, David Blackmer, Jonathan Lawson, Benj. Watson, Solomon Town, Jeremiah Powers, David Lawson, Joseph Fobes, Jr., John Rea, Eliphalet Gray, Daniel Shaw, Phinehas Thayer, Abijah Powers, Jr., Natt Garfield, Eben Cutler, Roland Blackmer,

David Furnis, Emerson Gibbs, John Lamson, Silas Hayward, John Hunt, Isaac B. Spring, James Monson, John Elwell, Nathan McIntosh, Simeon Cafford.

To the war of 1812 the town sent Andrew Harwood, Luther Root, Ezra Sprout, Chester Hale, Daniel Tourtellott, Benj. Rider, Henry Fobes, Samuel Barton, Daniel Eddy, Ichabod Pope, and Kingsley Underwood.

In the suppression of the late Rebellion the following persons served from the town:

Lorenzo L. Billings, Stephen H. Wyatt, Zenas Toleman, Erasmus C. Davis, Asa P. Wheeler, Elmer M. Sprout, Andrew Young, Marshall Alden, Ellbridge C. Howard, Theodore W. Foley, James O. Foley, George B. Caswell, Samuel P. Robbins, Joseph H. Stephens, Abner Mott, George S. Chapin, David Wyatt, George W. Richardson, Metcalf Marsh, Henry Tiffin, Francis A. Green, Joseph F. D. Newcomb, David H. Newcomb, Marshall Richards, Patrick McGowen, John L. Grout, Lewis J. Upton, Chas. L. Johnston, Henry T. Pomeroy, Arthur H. Pomeroy, Sylvester F. Root, Levi P. Root, Rufus F. Bond, Geo. L. Winter, Henry M. Brown, Stephen A. Gilmore, Nathaniel E. A. Powers, Wm. Oaks, Alphonzo Oaks.

In compiling this history the writer is chiefly indebted for assistance and kindly co-operation to Robert D. Bussey, town clerk, and to Lorenzo Davis, Wm. S. Douglas, Danforth Trask, Hiram Newton, Wm. R. Hale, B. M. Whitcomb, Charles Record, Joseph P. Vaughn, and Rev. P. Edward Blodgett. Other citizens of the town are also entitled to thanks.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

LYNUS TOURTELLOTT.

Abraham Tourtellott, a native of France, emigrated to this country at a very early day, and settled in Rhode Island. Michael Tourtellott, one of his sons, was born Feb. 4, 1840, and afterward removed to Thompson, Conn., where he continued to reside until the time of his death. He had twelve children, all of whom are dead except Daniel Tourtellott, a veteran and pensioner of the war of 1812, who now resides in the town of Greenwich, Hampshire Co., at the ripe age of ninety years. He was married Aug. 28, 1812, to Miss Sarah Sly, and moved to Greenwich in June, 1816. He raised a family of nine children,—Marcus, Merrick, Lynus, Vesta, Lucien, Urilla, Mason, William (who died in infancy), and William (2d). Of this family all are dead except William, Urilla, and Lynus. A portrait of the latter appears in this work. He was born in Greenwich, March 11, 1820; was married to Miss Catherine M. Powers, daughter of Stephen Powers, Jr., of Greenwich. By this union there were four children,—Vesta C., Uri L., Alvin D., and Abbie M.,—all of whom are deceased. Mr. Tourtellott is essentially a self-made man, having had no book education except that obtained in the common schools of his native town. He has devoted his life to work at the carpenter's bench and farming; has been selectman of his town three years, and overseer of the poor. In politics Mr. Tourtellott has always been a Democrat.

He enjoys the reputation among his fellow-townsmen of being an upright man in all his dealings, and commands the good-will and esteem of all who know him.

CHARLES S. RECORD was born in Barre, Mass., Jan. 26, 1819, and lived there until he was seven years old. He then went to Antrim, N. H., where he remained three years, and was then apprenticed to Gen. John Warner, of Greenwich, Mass.,—distinguished in military and Masonic circles,—to learn the trade of scythe-making. He remained in Gen. Warner's family twenty-one years, until the general retired from business. With the exception of one year spent at Athol, Mr. Record has made

Greenwich his home to the present time, and for the last twenty-five years has carried on the business of a blacksmith at Greenwich village. He was married to Maria L., daughter of Cyrus and Louisa Loud, of Greenwich, Jan. 24, 1850, and town office for many years, and at different times been appointed to various offices of trust and responsibility, and discharged the duties of the same with intelligence and fidelity, and to the general acceptance of all. Liberal and in-

Photo. by Moffitt.

C. S. Record

has, as his only child, one daughter, Clara L., born Oct. 9, 1853, and married to Ambrose E. Walker, a native of Greenwich, and resident of Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 16, 1878. Mr. Record has been a very active and energetic citizen, has held dependent in his theological views and always judging for himself, he has the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Politically, Mr. Record is a Republican.

GRANBY.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THE town of Granby is situated south of the centre, in the eastern part of the county, and is bounded on the north by Amherst, on the south by the towns of Ludlow and Chicopee, in Hampden County, on the east by Belchertown, and on the west by South Hadley, Hampshire Co. Its lines are comparatively regular. Its area comprehends about 16,591 acres of land.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface is quite level, broken by small, scattered hills, known by the names of Turkey, Baggs', Raves', Fox, and Cold Hills. Besides these there are numerous small elevations. A large swampy plain extends through the town from Ludlow on the south, the soil of which is sandy and covered by thick growths of small trees. In the other portions the soil is productive, particularly in the northern and eastern sections. Porter's Swamp and Pitchawam (contracted from the Indian Pitchawamache) Swamp are also quite extensive, in the north-western portion of the town.

The water-courses are not abundant. Batchelor's Brook is a considerable stream, which passes through the northern section of the town from east to west, fed by various small affluents, some of which rise in Belchertown. Forge Pond, in the east part of the town, is formed by the waters of several small streams, and by the back-waters of Batchelor's Brook. Other small streams exist in the southern portion of the town, of which the principal is Muddy Brook, which rises near the centre of the town, and flows south into Ludlow. A stream of some importance enters the town from Hampden County, at its northwest corner, and after being joined by small affluents in Granby, flows westerly into South Hadley.

Along the north line of the town extends the Holyoke range of mountains, the highest point of which in Granby is known as Hilyar's Knob.

SETTLEMENT.

The first grant of land by the town of Hadley (of which Granby originally formed a part), south of Mount Holyoke, was in February, 1675, when Thomas Selden had six acres at the mouth of Dry Brook. In 1682, Timothy Nash had a grant of a parcel of land between Batchelor's Brook and Stony Brook, adjoining the great river, "at the southernmost part of our bounds." This land was afterward owned by Emerson Bates and H. Moody. In 1680 the town granted 20 acres each to David Hoyt, Thomas Wells, and Joseph Hovey, "beyond Mount Holyoke, on Batchelor's Brook," and in 1688, John Lawrence had a grant of three or four acres toward Batchelor's Brook. The grants to the four men last named seem to have become void. In 1684 four men had liberty to set up a saw-mill at the falls of Batchelor's Brook, below the former grant, with the frame and right to timber. What mills were erected under these grants is not known. In the proprietors' records, in 1721 and 1722, the "old mill-place," on Batchelor's Brook, is mentioned, which was above the subsequent site of Allen's paper-mill, also the "old mill-pond" on Stony Brook below Smith's grist-mill, and a saw-mill below the pond.

On Jan. 25, 1720, Hadley voted to lay out the land on the south side of Mount Holyoke according to the list of estates and polls, taken in the same month. Various votes were passed distributing the lands. Meadow-land was voted in February, 1722, and was laid out the same year in six meadows, named Stony Brook Meadow, Chapin's Meadow, Great Meadow, Little Meadow, Longmeadow, on Taylor's Brook, and Pitchawamiche Meadow. Most of these meadow-lands were within the present limits of Granby, and some were swampy. There were similar mowing-lands on Batchelor's Brook.

The territory now comprised within the limits of the town of South Hadley was settled somewhat earlier and faster than that of Granby, so that in the year 1731 the taxable inhabitants of South Hadley numbered thirty-seven, while those of Granby numbered but eight.

The southeast part of Granby was added to Hadley in response to a petition of 21 persons, which was presented to the General Court in 1727, asking for the land between an addition that had been laid out in 1715 and the Equivalent Lands, afterward Belchertown. This tract was four miles long and two wide, or eight square miles, and was called "The Crank" in old land records and deeds. The land was not considered valuable, and in 1736 nine proprietors sold their individual rights to Capt. James Bowdoin, of Boston.

The first settlers of Granby, from 1727, the date of the first settlement, to 1763 inclusive, were, in 1727, Ebenezer Taylor, John Smith, Ephraim Nash, and John Lane; from 1727 to 1731, Timothy Nash, Joseph Nash, William Dickinson, Jr., Nehemiah Dickinson, and Thomas Taylor; from 1731 to 1740, Stephen Warner, Sr., James Smith, Noah Ferry, Samuel Moody, John Moody, and Hezekiah Smith; from 1740 to 1750, William Eastman, Aaron Nash, Phineas Smith (1st), Seth Clark, Noah Clark, John Preston, Experience Smith, Eleazer Nash, Martin Nash, Hezekiah Smith, Jr., Jonathan Selden, and Samuel Dickinson; from 1750 to 1763, Eleazer Warner, Jr., Benjamin Eastman, John Rowe, John Lane, Jr., Stephen Warner, Jr., Samuel Ayres, Eliphalet Green, Timothy Burr, Josiah Montague, Joseph Montague, Nathan Smith, Israel Clark, Jacob Taylor, Ithamar Amidown, Elisha Nash, Seth Smith, James Smith, Waitstill Dickinson, Ezekiel Barton, Rev. Simon Backus, Asaph Stebbins, Ebenezer Taylor, Jr., William Dickinson, Timothy Smith, Peter Domo, Samuel Elmer, Asahel Smith, Thomas H. Moody, Charles Ferry, David Barton, Experience Smith, Ebenezer Bartlett, Samuel Vinton, John Giddings, William Negus, Elisha Barton, James Giddings, Stephen Chapin, Samuel Moody, Jr., Benjamin Smith, James Patrick, Jeremiah Chapin, John Moody, Jr., Elisha Moody, Reuben Moody, Joseph Hillyer, Moses Smith, and John Camp. The descendants of many of these first settlers have disappeared from the town, but a few are still represented there, and are among the most substantial citizens of the town. After the year 1763 the settlement of the town increased more rapidly, so that in the year 1776 Granby had a population of 491 persons.

In 1771 the men who had the largest estates in Granby were Deacon William Eastman, Jacob Taylor, John Moody (son of Deacon John, deceased), Deacon Nathan Smith, Benjamin Eastman, Moses Moody, Phineas Smith, and Ebenezer Bartlett.

TAVERNS.

It is probable that the conveniences of a tavern were afforded at the houses of the early settlers in an informal way from the earliest period. Timothy Nash, who kept a tavern in the town from 1741 to 1749, was the first innkeeper in the town. Levi Smith kept a regular tavern in the early part of the present century, for many years, in the west part of the town.* About 1821 a tavern was established by Alpheus Ferry at the "centre." He kept it for several years, and was succeeded by Wm. J. Patrick. H. H. Stearns established the "Pitchawam House," near the post-office at the "centre," for a year or two, but abandoned it for the more profitable pursuit of tailoring. John Preston, who was a descendant of one of the earliest settlers of the region, kept a tavern in 1825 at the present residence of Charles S. Ferry, in the north part of the town. After his death it was kept for a few years by his relatives. Thomas Moody opened a public-house at the Five Corners, on the Holyoke road, about 1829, and ran it two or three years. David Kellogg kept one, about 1845, and for ten years thereafter, at the "centre."

STORES

have always been kept, to a greater or less extent, in different parts of the town. One of the earliest was by Levi Smith, the first part of the century, in the west part of the town. Asa Moody, a one-legged man, kept one for a good many years, about the same period, on a corner opposite to Levi Smith's. Still another was on a third corner opposite, by David Smith. "Marchant" Scranton is mentioned as serving in the Continental army in 1782. He may have been the first in the town. Eldad Smith succeeded Levi Smith, and also engaged in the manufacture of buttons. The first store at the East Centre was by Aretus Ferry, about 1821, and continued for about ten years. A Mr. Bridgman, from Belchertown, opened one soon after. He was succeeded in 1830 by Charles S. Ferry, who erected the structure now occupied by Walter Kellogg as a dwelling-house, and kept store therein until 1835. Milo Taylor, a Mr. Brown, Dexter O. Dickinson, and Philo Chapin have since kept there. The latter has been in trade for about twenty years. William Belcher erected a store at the "centre" about 1825, near the meeting-house, and kept it for a good many years in the building which Dr. Marsh afterward occupied as a dwelling, since destroyed by fire. A. E. Thayer followed soon after in the business, and was succeeded by Daniel E. Belcher.

PHYSICIANS.

Of early physicians the first was Dr. Samuel Vinton, who was born in Leicester about 1737, and practiced in the town as early as 1762. He is mentioned in the town records in 1771, and again in 1780. Dr. Daniel Coit is mentioned in 1790 and later years. Dr. Chester Cowsls commenced practice in 1796, and continued until 1815 or 1820, and then removed to Amherst. Dr. Perez Chapin also practiced early in the town prior to the year 1800. Dr. Augustin Paine practiced about 1810 or 1811. Dr. Enos Smith practiced in 1797. Dr. Porter Davis came from Palmer about 1823; he died in 1825, and was succeeded by Dr. Timothy Dimmock, who remained for some time. Dr. Charles S. Thompson practiced in 1830 and 1831. Dr. Perry was in practice about 1820. Dr. Elisha B. Chapin came to Granby from Chicopee Falls in 1835, and died in 1842. He was followed soon after by Dr. L. B. Monroe, who practiced for a number of years, and then returned to Medway, his former home. Dr. John Seabury was in practice at the same time. Dr. C. N. Chamberlain practiced for a number of years, and removed to Northampton about 1857. Dr. L. S. Marsh soon after engaged in practice, and continued during the war of the Rebellion. Dr. Cyrus B. Smith, at present one of the leading citizens of the town, engaged in practice previous to the war. He enlisted in the service, and after an honorable career returned to Granby, where he is now in practice.

* Town-meetings were frequently adjourned to Timothy Smith's, in the west part of the town, east of the meeting-house. This may have been a tavern. It was quite customary in early days to adjourn town-meetings to taverns.

LAWYERS.

The legal profession is said never to have been represented save by Epaphras Clark, who resided in the west part of the town for a short time, but afterward removed to Enfield, where he practiced for a number of years, and where his descendants still live.

CIVIL ORGANIZATION.

The town of Granby, with South Hadley, originally formed a part of the town of Hadley, being known as the South or Second Precinct of Hadley. The Second Parish of South Hadley was incorporated in 1762, the division into two parishes being occasioned by difficulties regarding the location of a meeting-house. A meeting-house was erected in 1762, in what was afterward known as the "West Parish" of Granby, on a spot near where Levi Smith subsequently resided, and near the south end of a tract of swamp or meadow-land, called by the first settlers "Pitchawamache." The meeting-house was erected on land given by Samuel Moody for that purpose. A deed for the land was given to the town after Mr. Moody's death by his sons Samuel, Thomas Hovey, Reuben, Simeon, and Enos. The deed was dated "the 10th day of July, in the ninth year of his Majesty's reign, Anno Domo, 1769."

The Second Parish of South Hadley was incorporated as the town of Granby, June 11, 1768. Difficulties regarding the boundary lines of Granby and South Hadley have frequently occurred, and have received considerable attention from the Legislature. The line was changed June 12, 1824, June 20, 1826, and June 16, 1827. Part of South Hadley was annexed to Granby, March 6, 1792.

The following persons have filled the principal town and representative offices of Granby :

SELECTMEN.

- 1769.—Aaron Nash, Samuel Moody, John Moody, Waitstill Dickinson, Stephen Warner, Jr.
- 1770.—Phinehas Smith, Experience Smith, Eleazer Nash, Jacob Taylor, Eleazer Warner.
- 1771.—Benjamin Eastman, Thomas Hovey Moody, Aaron Nash, Asaph Stebbins, Samuel Vinton.
- 1772.—Phinehas Smith, Eleazer Nash, John Moody, Asahel Smith, Israel Clark.
- 1773.—Phinehas Smith, Aaron Nash, Benjamin Eastman, Waitstill Dickinson, Timothy Smith.
- 1774.—Stephen Warner, Jr., Asahel Smith, John Moody, Samuel Vinton, John Ayres.
- 1775.—Phinehas Smith, Stephen Warner, Jr., Israel Clark, Waitstill Dickinson, Ebenezer Burt.
- 1776.—John Moody, Eleazer Warner, Benjamin Eastman, David Barton, John Ayres.
- 1777.—Reuben Moody, Ebenezer Bartlett, Aaron Ayres, Joseph Lane, Joseph Dickinson.
- 1778.—John Moody, Asahel Smith, Josiah Montague, Jeremiah Chapin, Stephen Warner.
- 1779.—Phinehas Smith, Waitstill Dickinson, Benjamin Eastman, John Preston, David Barton.
- 1780.—John Moody, Elijah Kent, Israel Clark, Aaron Moody, Samuel Moody.
- 1781.—David Barton, John Preston, Reuben Moody, Daniel Rowe, Simon Moody.
- 1782.—Stephen Warner, Jr., Jeremiah Chapin, Samuel Vinton, David Church, Ebenezer Bartlett.
- 1783.—John Moody, Benjamin Eastman, Samuel Clark, John Preston, Elijah Kent.
- 1784.—Josiah Montague, Experience Smith, Reuben Moody, Eli Dickinson, Daniel Rowe.

- 1785.—John Moody, Joseph Dickinson, John Preston, Benjamin Eastman, Samuel Clark.
- 1786.—John Ayres, Perez Cook, Aaron Moody, Josiah Montague, Experience Smith.
- 1787.—Benjamin Eastman, John Moody, Phinehas Smith, Joseph Dickinson, John Ayres.
- 1788.—Elijah Kent, Samuel Clark, Eli Dickinson, Benjamin Eastman, Perez Cook.
- 1789.—Benjamin Eastman, John Moody, Reuben Moody, Nathan Smith, David Barton.
- 1790.—Phinehas Smith, Samuel Clark, Benjamin Eastman, Eli Dickinson, Aaron Moody.
- 1791.—John Moody, Reuben Moody, David Barton, Joseph Dickinson, Ezech Smith.
- 1792.—Phinehas Smith, John Preston, Eli Dickinson, Aaron Moody, Perez Cook.
- 1793.—John Moody, Levi Smith, Eleazer Nash, Reuben Moody, Enos Moody.
- 1794.—Aaron Moody, John Preston, Phinehas Smith, Perez Cook, Samuel Clarke.
- 1795.—John Moody, Eli Dickinson, Levi Smith, Joseph Dickinson, David Barton.
- 1796.—Samuel Clark, Phinehas Smith, Oliver Bartlett, Enos Moody, Ithamar Taylor.
- 1797.—David Nash, Reuben Moody, Joseph Eastman, Nathan Smith, Jr., David Barton.
- 1798.—Asa Smith, Charles Ferry, Jr., Joseph Witt, Phinehas Smith, John Mandeville.
- 1799.—David Barton, John Preston, Joseph Eastman, Noah Clark, Gideon Moody.
- 1800.—David Smith, John Mandeville, Samuel Kent, Samuel Taylor, Samuel Smith.
- 1801.—Samuel Clark, Enos Moody, Phinehas Smith, Israel Clark, William Eastman.
- 1802.—Reuben Moody, Asa Smith, David Barton, Levi Smith, Gideon Moody.
- 1803.—Joseph Eastman, Eli Dickinson, Charles Ferry, Jr., Phinehas Smith, Samuel Kent.
- 1804.—Nathan Smith, Gideon Moody, Noah Clark, Joseph Witt, David Smith.
- 1805.—Jotham Clark, Enos Moody, Charles Ferry, Aaron Smith, Nathaniel Nash.
- 1806.—Phinehas Smith, Ebenezer Smith, Asa Smith, Gideon Moody, Noah Clark.
- 1807.—Eli Dickinson, Samuel Kent, Eleazer Nash, Charles Ferry, Eleazer Ayres.
- 1808.—Joseph Mason, Aaron Smith, Joseph Witt, Gideon Moody, William Snow.
- 1809.—Eli Dickinson, William Eastman, Charles Ferry, Nathaniel Smith, Jr., David Clark.
- 1810.—Aaron Smith, Samuel Clark, William Snow, Joseph Mason, Luther Ferry.
- 1811.—Enos Moody, Ebenezer Smith, Samuel Kent, Gideon Moody, Christopher Pratt.
- 1812.—Aaron Smith, William Eastman, Jotham Clark, Joseph Mason, Nathan Smith.
- 1813.—Aaron Smith, Samuel Kent, Gideon Moody, Enos Moody, Eleazer Nash.
- 1814.—William Eastman, Jotham Clark, Aaron Smith.
- 1815.—Jotham Clark, Luther Ferry, Giles Montague, William Eastman, Azor Moody.
- 1816.—Jotham Clark, Gideon Moody, Giles Montague, Aaron Smith, Waitstill Dickinson.
- 1817.—Jotham Clark, Luther Ferry, Aaron Smith, Giles Montague, William Eastman.
- 1818.—Enos Moody, Aaron Smith, Jeriel Preston, Jotham Clark, Zebina Smith.
- 1819.—John Stebbins, Aaron Smith, Samuel Ayres, William Snow, John Preston.
- 1820.—Joseph Witt, Waitstill Dickinson, Orlando Chapin, Luther Ferry, Elihu Clark.
- 1821.—Gideon Moody, Jotham Clark, Eli Warner, Aaron Carver, Levi Taylor.
- 1822.—William Snow, Jotham Clark, Heman Stebbins, Alpheus Bartlett, Abner Ferry.
- 1823.—Gideon Moody, Waitstill Dickinson, Orlando Chapin, Elihu Clark, Levi Taylor.
- 1824.—Gideon Moody, Jotham Clark, Waitstill Dickinson, John Filer, William Carver.
- 1825.—Luther Ferry, Orlando Chapin, John Smith (2d), Medad Smith, Rodney Ayres.
- 1826.—Medad Smith, Chester Ferry, Israel Clark, Jr.
- 1827.—Israel Clark, Jr., Abner M. Dickinson, Reuben R. Eastman.
- 1828.—Israel Clark, Jr., Samuel Town, Chester Smith.
- 1829.—Israel Clark, Jr., Chester Smith, Abner M. Dickinson.
- 1830.—Abner M. Dickinson, Rodney Ayres, Harry W. Gridley.
- 1831.—Samuel Ayres, Jeriel Preston, William Carver.
- 1832.—Harry W. Gridley, Benjamin Witt, Lucius Ferry.
- 1833.—Chester Smith, David Church, Harry W. Gridley.
- 1834.—Israel Clark, Jr., Benoni Preston, Samuel Ayres.
- 1835.—Rodney Ayres, Wm. B. Dickinson, Chester Smith.
- 1836.—Israel Clark, Jr., Jeriel Preston, Park Warner.
- 1837.—Reuben R. Eastman, Thomas H. Moody, Perez Cook, Jr.
- 1838.—Israel Clark, Jr., Levi Taylor, Chester Ferry.
- 1839.—Israel Clark, Jr., Augustus Eastman, Henry A. Dickinson.
- 1840.—James M. Barton, Levi Taylor, Henry A. Dickinson.
- 1841.—Israel Clark, Jr., Wm. J. Patrick, Lucius Ferry.
- 1842.—Wm. J. Patrick, Rodney Ayres, James M. Barton.
- 1843.—Israel Clark, Jr., James M. Barton, Samuel Smith, Jr.
- 1844.—Samuel Smith, Jr., Lucius Ferry, James M. Barton.
- 1845.—Rodney Ayres, Levi Taylor, Chester Smith.
- 1846.—Henry A. Dickinson, Medad Ferry, Samuel Smith.
- 1847.—Israel Clark, Levi Taylor, Andrew White.

1848.—Israel Clark, Andrew White, Thomas H. Moody.
 1849.—Israel Clark, Levi Taylor, Urbane Carver.
 1850.—James M. Barton, Samuel Smith, Cyrus Stebbins.
 1851.—L. S. Nash, Medad Ferry, Park Warner.
 1852.—Lucius Ferry, Wm. B. Dickinson, L. S. Nash.
 1853.—Wm. B. Dickinson, Philo Chapin, Augustus Moody.
 1854.—Augustus Moody, Langdon Ayres, Frederick Taylor.
 1855.—Benjamin De Witt, Christopher C. Aldrich.
 1856.—Albert Moody, Andrew White, Simeon C. Stebbins.
 1857.—James M. Barton, Park Warner, Charles F. Clark.
 1858.—James M. Barton, Israel Clark, C. C. Aldrich.
 1859.—Charles F. Clark, C. C. Aldrich, Wm. A. Smith.
 1860.—Park Warner, Frederick Taylor, Andrew White.
 1861.—Andrew White, Park Warner, P. D. Barton.
 1862.—Andrew White, William W. Ferry, Simeon C. Stebbins.
 1863.—Simeon C. Stebbins, Francis E. Taylor, James M. Barton.
 1864.—Andrew White, C. C. Aldrich, C. F. Clark.
 1865.—Andrew White, James M. Barton, Frederick K. Taylor.
 1866.—Frederick K. Taylor, E. D. Witt, Charles Clark.
 1867.—Frederick K. Taylor, E. D. Witt, Newton W. Pease.
 1868.—Philo Chapin, William W. Ferry, John Tilley.
 1869.—Albert Moody, James H. Barton, George Carver.
 1870.—Charles F. Clark, Samuel M. Cook, James H. Barton.
 1871.—S. M. Cook, C. F. Clark, Andrew White.
 1872.—S. M. Cook, A. S. White, J. J. Lyman.
 1873.—A. S. White, J. J. Lyman, S. C. Smith.
 1874.—S. C. Smith, E. J. Aldrich, W. W. Ferry.
 1875.—Andrew White, E. J. Aldrich, Dexter Preston.
 1876.—Andrew White, Frederick Taylor, James H. Barton.
 1877.—Frederick Taylor, James H. Barton, Monroe Keith.
 1878.—Spencer Clark, Wm. D. Barton, Chester Kellogg.

TOWN CLERKS.

1769-81, Nathan Smith; 1781-86, Phinehas Smith, Jr.; 1786-89, Reuben Moody; 1789-1811, Simeon Moody; 1811-Sept. 26, 1825, Charles Ferry; Sept. 26, 1825-29, Gideon Moody; 1829-32, William Belcher; 1832-34, Lowman A. Moody; 1834-40, William Belcher; 1840, Elisha B. Chapin; 1841-46, William Belcher; 1846-58, William J. Patrick; 1858-66, Philo Chapin; 1866, D. E. Belcher; 1867-69, Philo Chapin; 1869-79, Charles S. Ferry.

REPRESENTATIVES.

1774, Josiah Pierce; 1774-75, Phineas Smith; 1777-87, Phineas Smith; 1787-89, Benjamin Eastman; 1796, Elijah Kent; 1797-98, Dr. Enos Smith; 1800-8, David Smith; 1809-13, Eli Dickinson; 1814, David Smith; 1815, Eli Dickinson; 1816-17, '19, David Smith; 1820-21, '24, Eli Dickinson; 1825, Charles Ferry; 1826-27, Enos Smith; 1828-29, William Belcher; 1831-36, Samuel Ayres; 1837, Enos Smith; 1838, Samuel Ayres; 1839-40, 1842-43, Rev. Eli Moody; 1844-45, Levi Taylor; 1848-49, Charles S. Ferry; 1850, Lucius Ferry; 1851, Chester Smith; 1853, Park Warner; 1858, Lorenzo S. Nash; 1862, Samuel Smith; 1867, Philo Chapin; 1871, Cyrus B. Smith; 1875, Monroe Keith.

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

Near the geographical centre of the town is located Granby Centre, which is the nearest approach to a village in the town. One store with the post-office, the Congregational Church, the town-house, the common, and a few dwelling-houses constitute the village. The common included about six acres of land. In 1821, John Montague gave to the first parish by deed three acres of land, to serve as the location of a meeting-house and a common. In 1845, Joseph Montague, the only son of John, gave by deed, for the purpose of enlarging the common, an additional piece of land, containing about two acres and a half. In 1840 the first parish built a parsonage directly opposite the meeting-house, at an expense of about $1500. In 1841 a building, to be used as a lecture-room and high-school, was erected on the parish common, north of the meeting-house.

In the western part of the town, at the crossing of two roads, is a small hamlet which approaches to the dignity of a village. This was formerly the West parish, and has always been an influential and progressive section of the town.

EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS.

Reference is made to the first establishment of education in the town in a later chapter. After the "hireing" of the "school-marsters," in 1774, regular appropriations were made for the support of the schools. In 1785, £23 were thus appropriated, and the following year it was "voted to divide the town into districts or schools." In 1792, £35 were appropriated; in 1793, £40; in 1795, £60; in 1796, £65 for schooling and £250 for building school-houses. In 1802, £250 were appropriated, and the following year a school committee, consisting of three from each district, was first chosen. In 1805 the appropriation was $300; in 1811, $330; in 1814, $450; in 1845, $750; in 1847, $850; in 1872, $1500.

At the present time there are eight school districts in the town, besides a grammar school, the latter situated at the centre. The number of pupils in attendance is about 150. The schools are under the control of a committee of three persons, one being chosen each year for three years. The present committee consists of S. M. Cook and Dr. C. B. Smith, the third member having removed from the town.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The long contest which existed between South Hadley and Granby at the time they formed the south or second precinct of Hadley, regarding the location of a meeting-house which should equally accommodate each section, resulted in a division and the establishment of a separate church organization in Granby.

The original church edifice was erected and the church organized in 1762, and, in October of that year, Rev. Simon Backus, of Norwich, Conn., and a graduate of Yale College in 1759, was settled as the pastor. Mr. Backus continued pastor until March, 1784, when he was dismissed. He was succeeded in February, 1790, by Rev. Benjamin Chapman, of Plainfield, N. H., and a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1784. He was dismissed in January, 1797. Rev. Elijah Gridley, of Berlin, Conn., a graduate of Yale College in 1788, succeeded him in the following May.

In 1820, during the ministry of Mr. Gridley, it became necessary to build a new meeting-house. The eastern part of the town had now increased in importance, and a disagreement arose between the two sections regarding the location of the structure. The result was a division of the church and parish, and the erection of two meeting-houses. The eastern part became the first parish, and western, the second parish. A council was called which effected a division of the church also. The East Church comprised 144 members, and the West Church 130. Mr. Gridley, adhering to that portion of the church which was connected with the second parish, was dismissed by the first parish, and retained by the second until his death, which occurred in 1834. Rev. Eli Moody was settled as the colleague of Mr. Gridley in 1830.

Rev. Chester Chapin was settled over the East Church and parish in 1822, and dismissed in 1829. Rev. Joseph Knight, who succeeded him, was installed in 1830. In 1836 a project for uniting the two societies was consummated. Most of the members of the west, or second parish, agreed to leave their own place of worship and unite with the first, or east parish, upon the understanding, as the principal condition, that Rev. Eli Moody should be the pastor of the union church and parish. This resulted in the dismissal of Rev. Mr. Knight the same year (1836). A few members of the second parish refused to come into the union arrangement, and retained the property of the parish for a time. The meeting-house was afterward sold and taken down for use elsewhere, and the land connected therewith was sold also.

Rev. Eli Moody was installed as pastor of the first parish immediately after the union, in 1836, and dismissed on account of ill health, in 1839. Rev. James Bates succeeded Mr. Moody, and was installed in 1840; he was dismissed in 1851, and died at Granby in 1865. Rev. Henry Mills was ordained pastor Nov. 23, 1854, and dismissed Feb. 24, 1863. He was followed by Rev. Henry S. Kelsey, who was ordained Oct. 28, 1863, and dismissed Oct. 21, 1866. Rev. John P. Cushman was next employed by the parish, without settlement, from January, 1867, to May, 1870. Rev. Rufus Emerson was installed pastor March 1, 1871, and dismissed April 23, 1874. Rev. R. Henry Davis commenced preaching for the parish Jan. 1, 1875, and was installed pastor Feb. 16, 1875; he terminated his pastoral relations in June, 1878, to engage in missionary work in Japan. The pulpit is at present supplied by Rev. Frank R. Wait. The church is in a prosperous condition, comprising a membership of over 200. The average attendance upon the Sabbath-school is upward of 100; number of volumes in the library, about 400.

No other regular religious organization exists in the town. A small Methodist movement was undertaken in the north part of the town in the year 1850, but never assumed any great strength. A few members of that denomination meet on Sabbath evenings at the school-house in that section of the town, and receive occasional religious instruction from local supplies.

The Second Adventists also meet in the same place on Sabbath days, and are ministered to by different persons. Their meetings are often quite well attended, although no regular church organization exists.

BURIAL-PLACES.

There are two places of public burial in the town. Of these the oldest is what is known as the "Old Cemetery," situated about a mile west of the centre. As originally laid out it contained an acre of land, for which a deed was given to the town by James Smith, July 10, 1769, in consideration of "respect and affection." It was given for the purpose, as expressed in the deed, of "accommodating them with a convenient burying-place for the dead." A child of the first settled minister, Rev. Simon Backus, is said to have been the first interred in the ground.

The North burial-ground contains tombstones of older date than the "Old Cemetery."

The stone bearing the most ancient decipherable date, at present standing, is that of John Moody, who died Oct. 6, 1769, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Some of the stones are old, crumbled, and illegible. Some others bear testimony to the death of the following persons: "John Chapin, who was killed in the service of his country at Fort Stanwix, by the savages, Oct. 19, 1780, in his twenty-ninth year;" Ebenezer Bartlett, who died April 17, 1794, aged seventy years; Deacon John Smith, who died June 17, 1774, in his seventy-sixth year; Benoni Kellogg, who died Jan. 7, 1784, in his thirtieth year; Thomas Hovey Moody, who died Sept. 8, 1772; Ebenezer Nash, who died May 19, 1775, in his fifty-fifth year; Nathaniel Ferry, who died July 15, 1794, aged eighty-six; Benjamin Eastman, who died Nov. 28, 1792, in his sixty-seventh year; William Eastman, who died July 20, 1793, in his seventy-fifth year; Moses Moody, who died June 13, 1774, aged thirty-seven years; and others, including some of the earliest and most substantial citizens of the town.

A large addition has recently been made to the ground. It is well fenced, filled with attractive evergreens, and presents a gratifying appearance. It contains five or six acres.

The "North Cemetery" is situated near "School No. 4." It was laid out over one hundred years ago, and contains stones bearing dates as early as 1764. It is not as large as the "Old Cemetery," containing only a little over an acre of ground. It presents a neat appearance, and contains the remains of some of the first and most influential residents of Granby. Among the oldest inscriptions are the following: Levi Clark, who died Jan. 14, 1764; Ruth Clark, daughter of Seth, who died June, 1767; Noah Clark, who died Dec. 20, 1789, aged seventy-two.

NOTES FROM THE RECORDS.

A large number of roads were laid out in 1770, the principal one being from the County road, by Stephen Chapin's, across into the "Crank" road, at Jacob Taylor's lot. Pounds are first referred to in 1771, and the same year the subject of education began to receive attention. It was voted that the sum of £20 be appropriated for schooling, "and to spend it by having school." In 1772 the same sum was appropriated, and the same the year following. In 1774 it was "voted that the £20 above voted for schooling shall be spent in hiring school-marsters."

Oct. 3, 1774, Phinehas Smith was chosen delegate to the "Provincial Congress," to be "holden at Concord, on the second Tuesday of October." May 22, 1775, the town joined with South Hadley in the choice of a delegate to the "Provincial Congress," to be "holden at Watertown on the last Wednesday of May, 1775." Phinehas Smith was the delegate chosen from Granby, and Noah Goodman from South Hadley.

Luther Ferry is said to have brought the first one-horse wagon into Granby, in the early part of the present century. Soon after Charles Ferry purchased one at Belchertown, and dragged it home behind an ox-team, driven by Charles S. Ferry, the present town clerk.

The town voted, Oct. 3, 1776,

"That this town do give their consent that the present House of Representatives of this State, together with the Counsel, make or enact a Constitution and form of Government for this State. That this town do direct that the said Constitution or Proposed form of Government be made Publick, for their Inspection and perusal before the ratification thereof."

In September, 1779, Phinehas Smith was chosen a delegate to the Cambridge convention. In 1786 it was voted to divide the town into school districts. In 1786, Benjamin Eastman was elected a delegate to a county convention, held at Hatfield, and was chosen a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, at Boston, the following year.

In 1790 and '91, and for a few years following, a large number of persons, with their families, were "warned" to leave the town. Judging from the earnestness manifested by the fathers in this labor, they feared depopulation less than prospective pauperism.

In 1807 it was "voted to raise y^e sum of 60 dollars for y^e purpose of encouraging singing;" also "to choose a committee to see to it that the sum be prudently expended." In November, 1810, the sum of $90 was appropriated for the same purpose. In 1815, $50 was appropriated. The same year the Rev. Elijah Gridley, the pastor of the town at that time, was compelled to pay a fine of $182 for unlawfully uniting two parties in marriage in the adjoining town of Ludlow. The action against him is said to have been animated by malicious motives. The town passed resolutions strongly condemnatory of the proceedings against their minister, and voted an appropriation of $100 in his behalf.

In 1830 a vote was had upon the question of preparing a petition for presentation to the Legislature, asking annexation to the county of Hampden, and was lost by 21 to 19.

The town appropriations for the year 1878 were $700 for the support of the poor; $1500 for the support of schools; $700 for highways; and $500 for contingent expenses.

The following extract from the town records is worthy of note, illustrating, as it does, the method of transacting such business in early days, and the remarkable fidelity of the office-holders of the present day, especially under the "fee system," to the recorded precedents of their honored forefathers:

"Taken up Damage feasant, by William Negus, Hog-Reeve, a white barrow Hog or Swine, about one year old, marked with a crop of the left year and a slit in the end of the same ear. The swine above described was taken up on the twelfth Day of July, 1771, and was posted in this Town as the Law Directs, and Entered with the Town Clerk on the 13th day of July, 1771, then sold by two men under oath, in manner as the Law Directs. The Swine above described was sold for £0 15s. 0d. The bill of Cost for Takeing up and Keeping and Making Sale of the Swine above described is as follows, viz.: The Hog-Reeve's Bill for Takeing up and Posting, £0 7s. 7d. 0f. Ebenezer Dawin's bill for Keeping the Hog for Sale, £0 4s. 9d. 2f. Samuel Warner's and Doct. Vinton's Bill for making Sale of the Hog, £0 1s. 9d. 2f. Town Clerk's Bill for entering and Giving oath to the men to make Sale of the Hog as the Law Directs, and Recording to os. 10d. 0f.

"Test: NATHAN SMITH, Town Clerk."

The father of this gentleman was the Rev. Elijah Gridley, who was born at Farmington, Conn., March 27, 1760, and graduated from Yale College in 1788, and in 1789 settled as pastor of the Congregational Church in Mansfield, Conn. In 1797 he was installed as pastor of the Congregational Church in Granby, Mass. He died there June 10, 1834, aged seventy-four. He married, April 29, 1789, Ruth White, daughter of Hon. Ebenezer White, of Chatham (now Portland), Conn. Mrs. Gridley was born Nov. 11, 1767, and died May 13, 1851, aged eighty-three.

There were nine children, two only of whom survive,—Deacon H. W. Gridley, of Ottawa, Ill., and Addison Gridley, of Granby, Mass.

The Rev. Elijah Gridley served the church in Granby for nearly forty years. The following letter from Mr. Cook, who was for many years one of his officiating deacons, will give a better insight into his character, as well as some idea of the esteem in which he was held, than any words of ours :

“ I take much pleasure in sending you some reminiscences of your honored father's character as minister and friend for thirty years. I can, of course, select but few of the more prominent of his endearing qualities. His address was in every respect that of the accomplished gentleman of the ‘old school,’—frank, cordial, and familiar, with a natural and graceful dignity. His acquaintance with human nature was profound and extensive. His energy and decision of character were prompt and efficient. In discipline, his church was seldom the scene of discord and dissension.

“ His physical habits were those of an industrious and enterprising husbandman, according to the customs of that period. His frequent pastoral visits among a widely-scattered people were usually made on horseback, and many a smile reflected back his own, as, with uncovered head, he acknowledged the deferential respect of the children gathered around some humble school-house or by-way.

“ His punctuality was proverbial in the pulpit, as well as in business appointments and social engagements. His preaching was eminently plain and practical ; doctrines were clearly explained and enforced, but seldom formed the principal basis of a discourse. His manner in the desk was animated and energetic, commanding and retaining universal attention, especially as his sermons were brief as well as earnest and convincing. His labors for the spiritual prosperity of the people were crowned with abundant success. He had the pleasure of witnessing several powerful revivals of religion, at which seasons he was unusually zealous and devoted to the great work in which his whole soul seemed absorbed ; and we believe multitudes have been saved through his instrumentality, who will shine hereafter as stars of the first magnitude in the Kingdom of Heaven.”

Photo. by T. R. Lewis, Holyoke.

Addison Gridley

Addison Gridley was born in Granby, Mass., Dec. 18, 1801, and in the house into which his father moved when he accepted the call of the church, it having been occupied as a parsonage by the two preceding clergymen, and is still Mr. Gridley's home, having been rebuilt.

Mr. Gridley received his education in the schools of his native town, has led the life of a farmer, and is highly respected by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

In 1827 he married Sybil, daughter of Chester Ayers, Esq., of Granby, by whom he had five children, only one of whom is living,—Charles Addison, born Oct. 27, 1845, now a merchant in South Hadley. Mrs. Gridley died Nov. 14, 1845.

March 2, 1847, Mr. Gridley married Maria, daughter of Thomas Burnham, Esq., of Lisbon, Conn., and has one son by this marriage,—Edward White, born Sept. 20, 1852, now in the drug business at Holyoke, Mass.

Mr. Gridley has been a member of the Congregational Church for more than fifty years, toward the support of which he has largely contributed. He was a “dyed-in-the-wool” Abolitionist in early life, but a Republican since the organization of that party.

Wm. P. Clark

Samuel Smith

Photos. by T. R. Lewis.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The industrial pursuits of the town have never attained any special prominence, and at present are of a minor order. The waters of Batchelor's Brook, have been utilized to a greater or less degree, since the earliest date, for various purposes.

"John Preston's mill" is mentioned on the town records as early as 1771. It stood on Batchelor's Brook, in the north part of the town, about half a mile west of the present residence of Charles S. Ferry. It was possibly both saw- and grist-mill.

There was an iron forge in the east part of the town the early part of the present century, and was run by Elijah Kent. About 1812 there were four distilleries in the town, each consuming, when in operation, from thirty to forty bushels of grain a day. The increasing number of them, and the temperance reformation, made the business unprofitable, and it was abandoned.

In 1836, Samuel Ayres, Jeriel Preston, and Levi Taylor established a woolen-factory on Batchelor's Brook, where a successful business was prosecuted under the superintendence of Levi Taylor. He was a man of great energy, exerted a commanding influence in his native town, was several times elected to the Legislature of the State, and represented the county of Hampshire in the State Senate two years. After his death the manufacturing business was carried on by Samuel Ayres and Christopher C. Aldrich for a time, and finally by the latter alone. It was destroyed by fire in 1870, and has not since been rebuilt. A grist-mill adjoining was destroyed also, which is now (1878) being rebuilt by Mr. Aldrich.

About the time of the establishment of the last-mentioned mill Israel Clark had a fulling- and dyeing-mill on the same brook, and, after changing it to include the manufacture of satinet, continued the business for a number of years. He rebuilt his establishment in 1850. There is at this point at present a saw- and grist-mill operated by Samuel C. Smith, who succeeded Smith & Carver.

In 1837 there were two woolen-mills in the town; 26,200 yards of cloth were manufactured, valued at $26,200; 10 male and 10 female operatives were employed.

Anson Brown and Frederick Taylor engaged in the manufacture of paper on Batchelor's Brook about 1853. Their mill was situated about forty or fifty rods from the woolen-mill, but was burned several years before the latter, and not rebuilt.

George Carver is engaged in the manufacture of "reed-ribs" in the southeast part of the town, and has pursued that occupation for several years with some profit. He also has a grist-mill in the same locality. D. D. Chapin has a saw-mill in the north part of the town, on Batchelor's Brook. Carriages and wagons have also been manufactured to some extent.

MILITARY.

The military history of Granby is such as to reflect the highest credit upon the town. Its record in the earlier wars is necessarily identical with that of Hadley, of which it formed a part, and will be found treated of under that town.

The citizens of the town who served in the French-and-Indian war were, in 1755, Asaph Stebbins, John Moody, Jr., Francis Green, Gideon Moody, Josiah Montague, and Nehemiah Dickinson; in 1756, Samuel Lane, Benjamin Eastman, William Negus, Stephen Warner, Timothy Smith; in 1758, William Negus, Jr., and Waitstill Dickinson; in 1760, Joseph Dickinson, Ebenezer Taylor, Elisha Barton, Ezekiel Barton, Asahel Smith, Thomas H. Moody, Eleazer Warner, John Negus, and Ithamar Amidown.

The Revolutionary record is particularly interesting. During all the changes of that dark period its inhabitants stood firm and remained faithful to the cause of independence, and contributed practical co-operation and support. Among the inhabitants of the town who served in the Continental army may be mentioned Eleazer Warner, Robert Owens, Nathaniel Butterfield (in Capt. Reuben Dickinson's company and Col. Woodbridge's regiment), Levi Woodworth, "Marchant" Scranton, Hezekiah Bush, and John Chapin. The following votes recorded at the time illustrate the patriotic spirit of the people:

Sept. 20, 1774. "Voted to increase the town stock of ammunition, and provide the town with a sufficiency of arms."

"Voted that the Treasurer shall pay the money which was proportioned to this town, to bear the expenses of the committee appointed to go to the Continental Congress at Philadelphia."

"Voted and made choice of Mr. Phineas Smith to appear at the Provincial Congress, to be holden at Concord, on the second Tuesday of October, 1774, to hear, consider, and determine on all such matters and causes as shall then be thought necessary in this critical, dark, and distressing day."

June 20, 1776. "Voted that we of this town will support the independence of the American Colonies with our lives and fortunes, Provided the American Congress shall declare these Colonies independent of the kingdom of Great Britain."

The vigilance and jealous patriotism of the inhabitants is illustrated in the following vote:

Feb. 15, 1775.—"Voted to call Capt. Eastman, Lieut. Eleazer Nash, and Ens. Experience Smith to account to the town for their conduct in holding commissions which they received under Gov. Hutchinson, and which have since been established to them by Gen. Gage, who is now endeavoring to enforce the late acts of Parliament on the Province of Massachusetts Bay."

These men were among the most influential in the town. In response to the expressed desire of their fellow-citizens they came before the town in open meeting, and, although they refused to resign their commissions, they each, in turn, declared it to be their intention to observe the advice, direction, and resolves of the Continental Congress; that they had no desire, intention, or design to act from any authority by virtue of their commissions, and, further, that they never would. The vote, taken by yeas and nays, upon the question whether what they had said was satisfactory to the town, was decided in the negative. What further was done, if anything, is not noted on the records.

The events preceding and attending the rebellion of Daniel Shays are only referred to on the town records in the election and sending of delegates to the several conventions assembled by the sympathizers with that movement. The names of soldiers who participated on either side are not given; neither is any special note made of the war of 1812 and the Mexican war.

In the war of the Rebellion the town took an active part, and by every patriotic effort assisted in its prosecution. As early as 1861 the sum of $1000 was voted to pay the soldiers while drilling, and for the support for the space of one year thereafter of the families of such as should lose their lives in the contest. Other measures follow closely on the records during the continuance of the war.

The following is a list of soldiers who served during the Rebellion:

George N. Fletcher, 21st Mass.; Samuel A. Chapin, Elliot P. Ferry, Lucien E. Robinson, Wm. W. Lind, Christopher Hudson, Chas. Batchelor, Frederick Batchelor, Edwin Smith, Albert Whiting, James D. Haskins, Morris Starks, John C. Messinger, Henry N. Green, George W. Cone, 27th Mass.; Andrew J. Converse, Danforth L. Converse, Lemuel Warner, Orlando Wilson, 31st Mass.; James McCafferty, Christopher T. Welden, V.-t. Res. Corps.; Cyrus B. Smith (surgeon), 11th Mass.; Wm. Bartlett, Wm. B. Clark, Wm. F. Pease, Robert M. Smith, Chapin Warner, Loren E. Goldthwait, Marvin Onderdonk, 34th Mass.; Alexander P. Cook, Wm. H. Cook, Monroe Snow, Joseph K. Taylor, Michael O'Neil, 37th Mass.; Edward Rose, 59th Mass.; George S. Stebbins, Dwight A. Barrett, Frederick P. Converse, Charles A. Rhodes, 46th Mass.; Hiram Tilley, 8th Mass.; Curtis H. Brown, Chas. W. Fletcher, 2d Mass. H. Art.; Dixon Palmlee, 1st Mass. H. Art.; John Holland, 11th Mass. L. Art.; John C. Doran, Edward D. Welch, Wm. S. Pease, 1st Mass. Cav.; Oscar P. Jordan, Wm. Riley, 2d Mass. Cav.; John Warner, 4th Mass. Cav.; Edward H. Goff, 19th Mass.; James Foley, 20th Mass.; John Johnson, John Kiernan, Chas. Duffie, John Bedard, Henry J. Squires, John Sullivan, 32d Mass.; George Allen, Malcolm Bridgman, Asaph P. Barton, Charles H. Bates, David Casey, Samuel B. Dickinson, Francis H. Gardner, Chas. W. Hunter, Edwin N. Hunt, Dwight C. Morgan, Dwight Preston, Samuel C. Smith, Wm. A. Smith, Chas. Spooner, Sylvester H. Taylor, John Tilley, Frank H. Stearns, Chas. H. Church, 52d Mass.

Acknowledgments are due to Philo Chapin, Charles S. Ferry, S. M. Cook, and other citizens of Granby for valuable assistance rendered the writer of this sketch of the town.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

DEACON SAMUEL SMITH

is a descendant, in the sixth generation, of Lieut. Samuel Smith, who, with his wife, sailed from England April 30, 1634, and landed at Wethersfield, Conn. He remained there until 1660, when he removed to Hadley, Mass. He died in 1680, aged seventy-eight years. His son Chileab was born at Wethersfield in 1635, and died at Hadley in 1730, aged ninety-five years. Ebenezer, son of Chileab, died some years before his father, aged about sixty years. John, son of Ebenezer, died in 1774 or '75. Nathan, son of John, was born in 1731 and died in 1811. Samuel, son of Nathan, was born in 1775 (married Mehitable Burnett, 1799) and died in 1869, aged ninety-four.

His children were Maria, Mabel, Amanda, Mabel (2d), Martha, Samuel, Cyrus, Eliza, Eliza (2d), Harriet, and Finley.

Samuel was born Dec. 22, 1808, and is now living on the farm in Granby where his great-grandfather settled, and where three generations have lived. Dec. 7, 1835, he married Maryett White, daughter of Luther and Abigail (Preston) White, of Granby. Their children were Eliza Thayer, born Dec. 29, 1836. Robert Morrison, born Sept. 10, 1838, who enlisted in Company K, 34th Massachusetts Volunteers, July 31, 1862. He was slightly wounded at New Market, Va., in May, 1864; and at Piedmont, Va., he received a severe wound, which disabled him for field service, but he was retained in hospital and on light detached duty until the time of his discharge, June 15, 1865. Lucretia Maria, born May 19, 1841; died Aug. 26, 1842. Marietta, born June 1, 1843. Henry Neal, born May 21, 1845; died Dec. 27, 1848. Samuel Finley, born July 17, 1847. The latter received a medical education and diploma at Michigan University, Ann Arbor, 1873, and is now a successful practicing physician at Indian Orchard, Mass. Abby White, born Nov. 2, 1849. Henry Martin, born May 31, 1852; died Oct. 24, 1853. Emma Clarinda, born Sept. 3, 1854.

Deacon Smith has filled various town offices; was a member of the school committee for twenty years, and, in 1863, represented his town in the Legislature of the State. He has been active in church affairs, was a deacon in the Congregational Church of Granby for twenty years, and was superintendent of the Sabbath-school for seven successive years.

He is well and favorably known in the community in which he lives.

CAPT. WILLIAM BARDWELL CLARK,

born in the town of Granby, Mass., Jan. 20, 1838, was the son of Erastus Clark and Lucy Ferry, daughter of Charles Ferry, Esq., of Granby. Capt. Clark prepared for college at Easthampton, and graduated from Yale College in the class of 1861. On July 30th of the same year he enlisted, and the next day was mustered into the United States service in Co. K, 34th Massachusetts Volunteers. On the 7th of August he married Eliza, daughter of Deacon Samuel Smith, of Granby, and immediately joined his regiment, which was soon moved to the field. Feb. 1, 1863, he was promoted from corporal to sergeant, at Fort Lyon, near Alexandria, Va., and was on active duty with his regiment up to Jan. 20, 1864. Soon after, while at Harper's Ferry, Va., he was commissioned a captain in the 22d Regiment United States Colored Infantry, and January 26th he left for the camp in Philadelphia, where he took command of Company K of that regiment.

In the month of February, 1864, the regiment was transferred to the seat of war in Virginia, and was engaged in the series of battles before Petersburg in the following summer. In one of these he was slightly wounded in the breast by a spent ball. He was also struck by a ball in the battle of September 29th, which, passing through his haversack, broke his inkstand, and another struck him on the temple with sufficient force to break the skin. The 27th of October he received a mortal wound, this being the last battle in which the regiment was engaged. His body was not recovered. We take the following notice from the Springfield Republican of Dec. 21, 1864, as showing the esteem in which he was held by his comrades in arms, as well as by his friends at home:

"All his friends can testify to the truthfulness of a brother captain's estimate who writes of him thus: 'I have ever found him the same under all circumstances,—a kind, generous, noble-hearted, brave, and Christian man. He combined the two qualities of bravery and prudence in a remarkable degree.' And again: 'His kindness of heart, modesty of manner, his unyielding principle, and Christian spirit ever exerted a constant, though silent, influence over his brother officers.' Of the same tenor is the testimony of his townsman, Surgeon Pease, who writes: 'He was very much liked, both by the officers and men of his regiment, was always perfectly cool and brave, and always led his men into action.' Few have had a better record. None could have had a more honorable death. His end is the crowning of a victor, rather than the loss of a brother, husband, or son."

PELHAM.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THE town of Pelham makes one of that range of towns which forms the irregular northern boundary of the county of Hampshire. It is situated in the northeastern section of the county, and is bounded on the north by the town of Shutesbury, in Franklin County; on the south by the towns of Belchertown and Enfield, in Hampshire County; on the east by the town of Prescott and on the west by the town of Amherst, both in the same county. Its northern, eastern, and western lines are comparatively straight, but its southern is broken and irregular. The average length of the town is five and a quarter miles, and average width three and a half miles, comprising an acreage of about 15,207.

It is distant seven miles from Northampton, twenty from Springfield, ninety-five from Boston, and one hundred and fifty from New York.

NATURAL FEATURES.

Pelham may be fitly characterized as one of the hill towns of the county. In its northwestern corner rises the lofty peak of Mount Orient, attaining an elevation of about one thousand feet above the level of the sea, and affording from its summit a surpassingly grand and unique view,—vying with Mounts Holyoke and Tom on the south, Sugarloaf and Toby on the west,—and exhibiting in the distance no less than seven villages scattered over the beautiful surface of the broad valley of the Connecticut. Mount Lincoln, in the south part of the town, rears its peculiar conical head to a height of about eight hundred feet. Pine Hill, near the original centre of the town, also reaches a considerable elevation. Other hills and mountains cover the northern, eastern, and western sections of the town, the south part of the town being more level.

Numerous streams traverse the different sections of the town. Fort River rises near the northern boundary, and, flowing in a southwesterly course through what is termed the "valley," enters the town of Amherst, and finally joins the Connecticut at Hadley. The west branch of Swift River furnishes the eastern boundary line between Pelham and Prescott. Its principal affluent from Pelham is Purges Brook, rising north of the centre of the town, and flowing in a southeasterly course to the river. Smaller streams exist in the other parts of the town.

Several valuable springs, containing useful medicinal qualities, exist near Mount Orient, and attract many visitors in the summer-time to the town.

The soil is fertile and productive, though difficult of cultivation in certain portions of the town.

The geologic characteristics are of some interest. Considerable granite, of a peculiar grayish tint and known as "Pelham granite," has been quarried in the eastern and western parts of the town. In the southwestern part large quantities of asbestos have also been mined.

MEN OF DISTINCTION.

Forth from the hills of Pelham have gone many men who have contributed largely by their industry, energy, and strength of character to the moral and material advancement of other communities. Their ancestors were the hardy Scotch-Irish settlers of the town, their birthplace its ranging mountains and sloping hills, their stock in trade robust constitutions, and the high mental and moral characteristics of their fathers. It is safe to say that few towns of its size in the State have produced more men who have risen to posts of honor and distinction.

Among these have been Ithamar Conkey, afterward a resident of Amherst, and for many years judge of Probate for Hampshire County; Dr. Daniel and Dr. James Thompson, brothers and partners in professional business at Northampton; the Messrs. Southworth, the widely-known paper-manufacturers of West Springfield; Dr. Harkness, one of the pioneer railroad men of California, who drove the first spike into the Pacific Railroad, and a world-wide traveler; Nathaniel Gray, of Sacramento, Cal., one of that city's wealthy citizens; and others who have adorned the various walks of life in which they trod.

SETTLEMENT.

The territory of Pelham originally formed a portion of the "Equivalent Lands," an accurate account of which is given in the history of Ware. It was sold by the State of Connecticut to Colonel John Stoddard and others of Northampton, and was at first popularly denominated "Stoddard's Town." The lands, while in a wild condition, were much injured in timber and soil by the burnings to which they were subjected by hunters, and by those on the Connecticut, who by this means secured a favorite pasturage for their cattle.

Sept. 26, 1738, Robert Peibles and James Thornton, of Worcester, conceived the idea of purchasing the territory of the township of John Stoddard and establishing a settlement therein, and entered into a contract of purchase on that date with Stoddard. An agreement entered into between Peibles and Thornton on the 20th of the following October will best show the plan of the purchase and the nature and character of the proposed settlement. It was as follows:

"Articles of Agreement Indented and made this Twentieth day of October. Seventeen hundred thirty-eight, Between Robert Peibles, of Worcester, in the County of Worcester and Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, Blacksmith, on the one part, & James Thornton, of Worcester, aforesaid, yeoman, on the other part, Witnesseth: That whereas, on the 26th day of September last past, the said Robert Peibles and James Thornton have jointly covenanted and contracted with the Honorable John Stoddard, of North Hampton, in ye County of Hampshire, Esq., for one-fourth part of that Tract of Equivalent land lying Eastward of Hadley (except Eight hundred acres), which he bought of the executors of Dame Mary Saltonstall, Late of Boston, Decd., which land was laid out by Mather Allen, Roger Wolcott, and Ebenezer Pomeroy, Esqrs, for Twenty-nine Thousand eight hundred & Seventy-four acres, and also for one-eighth part of said Tract of Land, which the said John Stoddard purchased of Capt. Roswell Saltonstall, of Brandford, in the County of New Haven, and also for one-eighth part more of said Tract of land which fell (or does belong to) said Stoddard by Division, making the whole ye one-half of said Tract of Land (excepting eight hundred parts of land), fourth part which ye said Stoddard Purchased of the Executors of Dame Mary Saltonstall, as aforesaid.

"And whereas, they have covenanted to pay for the same as follows, viz.: Fifteen hundred pounds within Twelve months from the Twenty-Sixth day of September, as aforesaid, & Three thousand pounds more in Eighteen months from said Date, and both sums to said Stoddard, and also the Sum of Nine hundred pounds to Josiah Willard, of Boston, Esq., and the other Executors of said Dame Mary Saltonstall, aforesaid, Deceased, on or before ye 30th day of June, 1739, and the fourth Sum of Nine hundred pounds more to said Executors on or before the 30th day of June, 1740, Together with Lawfull Interest from the 30th day of June last past, and also the sum of five hundred to ye aforesaid Roswell Saltonstall, at or before the Seventh day of September next ensuing, and the further sum of five hundred pounds, on or before ye Seventh day of September, which will be in the year of our Lord, 1740, Together with lawfull Interest therefrom the Seventh of September last past, all said sums of money amounting unto ye sum of seven thousand and three hundred pounds, and are to be paid in Bills of Credit of ye old Tenor, & for which the said Robert Peibles and James Thornton are, within six months from the said twenty-sixth day of September last past, to procure and deliver him, Said Stoddard, Good and Sufficient Bonds, Executed by Persons of Sufficient Estate, and such persons whose bonds shall be to said Stoddard's Acceptance as per a certain Instrument of That well Executed (and Called an Indenture) under the hands & seals of ye said John Stoddard, Robert Peibles, and James Thornton will fully and at large appear, reference thereto being had.

"And whereas, the said Robert Peibles & James Thornton, being fully determined to bring forward the Settlement of said by Settling forty families Thereon in the Space of Three years from ye Date hereof, viz't: each of them Twenty families. And in order to proceed thereon with the more dispatch, as well as the better to enable them to Raise the money for which they are Joyntly to pay for the Purchase as aforesaid, and for the building and Erecting a House for the Publick Worship of God, and Settling of a minister and Laying out of Sutable and Convenient Highways, and for making all needfull Bridges, Causeways, and Roads in Said Settlement. They do by these presents, each one for himself and for his heirs, executors, and adms^r, absolutely Covenant and Engage to ye other in ye way and manner following, That is to say,—

"Imprimis. The said Robert Peibles, for himself and for his Heirs, Executors, and Adms^r, Engages to procure proper Security in the time, way, and manner as aforesaid to said Stoddard's acceptance for the one-half of all ye aforesaid sums of money. And the said James Thornton, for himself and for his Heirs, Executors, and Adms^r, Engages to procure proper security in ye time, way, and manner as aforesaid to said Stoddard's acceptance for the other half of all the aforesaid sums.

"Secondly. That They will forthwith, or with as much speed as conveniently they can, have said land measured and well bounded, and then proceed to lay out Sixty-one Lots of one hundred acres each, so as best to accomodate them for settlements, in the doing of which they will lay out needfull and convenient Roads & ways, all which Lots shall draw an Equal proportion in all after Divisions, till the whole of said Tract shall be laid out.

"Thirdly. That one of said Lots shall immediately be sequestered and sett apart for ye settled ordained minister in said Plantation with all future drafts, and the same is hereby Ratified to him, his heirs and assigns forever, and to be laid as accomodable as the same may be, and they oblige themselves to Ratify and Confirm ye same to ye person who shall be first settled and ordained as aforesaid for the Incouragement of those persons they shall admit as Partners or Settlers with them.

"Fourthly. That as soon as ye said minister's Lott shall be sett of, That then the said Robert Peibles shall have the Liberty of Choosing Two lots such as he sees cause without draft, and when he has so done, Then the said James Thornton shall have Liberty to Choose Two Lots as he sees cause without draft. That the Remaining Lots shall be numbered and drawn for by said Partys, or those they shall admitt as Partners or Settlers with them, so that each party shall have, with those who shall hold under them, thirty lots.

"Fifthly. That all the charges arising in said Plantation by the Surveying and Bounding out of ye whole of said Tract & laying out the Lots as aforesaid, and all the after Divisions, all needfull ways & Roads, making Bridges and Causeways, Roads & ways, the Settling of a minister, and building and finishing a meeting-House, and all unforeseen Charges for perfecting and Compleating what is afore-mentioned shall be born by the persons owning said sixty Lots, viz't: one lott to pay one-sixtieth part, and so proportionably for what each party shall own.

"Sixthly. The said Robert Peibles engages for himself and for his heirs, Executors and adms^r To Have with himself Twenty families of Good Conversation settled on the premises, who shall be such as were Inhabitants of the Kingdom of Ireland, or their Descendants, being Protestants, and none to be admitted but such as bring good and undeniable Credentials or Certificates of their being persons of Good Conversation and of the Presbyterian Persuasion as used in the Church of Scotland and conform to ye Discipline thereof, unless they shall otherwise agree hereafter; said families to be actually settled on the premises in three years from the date hereof, each to have a House of at least eighteen feet square and seven feet studd, well Inclosed and made Habitable and upon one of said hundred-acre Lotts, and have three acres, part thereof, improved by plowing and mowing; and the said James Thornton Engages for himself and for his Heirs, Executors and admrs To Have with himself Twenty families settled on the premises in the time, way, and manner in all Regards as are described as aforesaid, nothing Excepted or Reserved, and who shall each one perform as to building and Improving as aforesaid, vizt, as is to be done on the part of the said Robert Peibles.

"Seventhly. That each party have liberty in his own name and Right to dispose of his Share and Interest in the premises as he sees cause, to Inable him fully to comply with what they Respectively have engaged to do, as herein is already expressed.

"Eighthly. That in the first and all future Divisions all persons who shall be admitted as Partners or Settlers shall have a vote in Proportion to his Right in all meetings hereafter to be called, unless debarred by some previous contract.

"Ninthly. They each one engage for themselves and all those who shall hold under them that none of them shall take any cattle to Feed in ye woods in ye bounds and Limits of the designed Settlement in the lands aforesaid but what are Bone Fide their own property, unless ye Settlers hereafter shall agree to the same.

"And, Finally, That they will with Convenient speed procure Legall meeting of ye Proprietors of said lands as soon as they have admitted of all or part of their settlers, and in the Proprietors' Book enter the foregoing articles of agreement as ye foundation of their Lott Count and future proceeding, hereby covenanting for themselves severally, and for their several and Respective Heirs, Executors, and admrs, that they will proceed agreeable to what is aforesaid written, on the Forfeiture of five Thousand pounds by him who shall fail, to be paid to the other, besides Threeble Damages.

"In witness whereof, the parties To these presents have hereunto affixed their hands and seals the day and year aforesaid.

"It is agreed, notwithstanding what is above written, That Peibles shall choose one of his Two Lotts, then Thornton one, then Peibles his Second, then Thornton his second.

"ROBERT PEIBLES. [SEAL.]

"THOMAS THORNTON. [SEAL.]

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of us,

"MATHEW GRAY, JUNR.

"JOHN CHANDLER, JUNR."

"WORCESTER, October 21, 1738.

"WORCESTER, ss.: Robert Peibles & James Thornton, the Subscribers, Personally appearing, and Respectively acknowledged the foregoing Instrument, containing seven pages, to be their act and Deed, before me.

"JOHN CHANDLER, JUNR, Jud. Pacr."

Soon after the making of this contract, measures were taken to organize a body of proprietary settlers, and take possession of the lands. These so far met with success that on the 31st of the following January a deed was given to a company of persons by Col. Stoddard, of which the following is a copy :

"To all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting: Know yee that John Stoddard, of North Hampton, in ye County of Hampshire, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, for and in Consideration of the sum of seven thousand three hundred pounds, in bills of Public Credit of ye old Tenny in hand already Received of the Persons hereinafter named, the Receipt whereof he doth hereby acknowledge, and himself thereby fully satisfied and Contented, hath given, granted, bargained, and sold, and by these presents doth fully, freely, clearly, and absolutely Give, grant, Bargain, Sell, Release, convey, and confirm unto them, their heirs, and assigns forever, one-half (excepting eight hundred acres) of that Tract of Equivalent Land, lying and being in ye County of Hampshire, bounded Westerly on Hadley, Southwardly on another Tract of Equivalent land, commonly called Cold Spring Township, Eastwardly on land called Quobbin, North on land now called Well's Town, which Tract of land was laid out by Mathew Allin, Roger Woodcott, and Ebenezer Pomroy, Esqr., for Twenty-nine Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-four acres, a more particular Description of which land does appear by their Return, entered in ye Secretary's office at Boston, wch half part (excepting Eight hundred acres, as aforesaid), by a Division lately made by the owners or proprietors of said Equivalent land, is laid in severalty, and contained in ye first lott, and does contain ye whole of said Lott (excepting Thirty-eight acres Two Roods and thirty-three perch, which belongs to Mr. Elisha Williams Doct., of Yale Colledge), which Lott Lyeth on the north part of said Equivalent Land, and is bounded north by ye north Line of said Equivalent Land, and from said Line Extends south one Thousand and Eleven Rods and Eleven feet, to monuments Raised at Each end, and does extend from Hadley bounds on the West to the east bounds of said Equivalent land, a more particular description of which lott may be seen in ye Deed of partition, bearing Date ye seventh day of September, 1738, which said half (excepting as aforesaid) The said John Stoddard doth hereby sell and Confirm, as aforesaid, to the following persons, and in ye following proportion (vizt): To Robert Peibles, five-sixtieth parts; To Patrick Peibles, one-sixtieth part; To Andrew McFarland & Mathew Gray, Junr, Three-sixtieth parts; To Robert Lothridge, Two-sixtieth parts; To Robert Barber and William Johnson, Three-sixtieth parts; To William Gray, Junr., one-sixtieth part; To John McConkey, one sixtieth part; To James McConkey, one-sixtieth part; To Alexander McConkey, one-sixtieth part; To Alexander Turner, one-sixtieth part; To John Stinson, one-sixtieth; To James Wood, one-sixtieth part; To Adam Johnson, Two-sixtieth parts; To Ephraim Cowan, one-sixtieth part; To George Cowan, one-sixtieth part; To Samuel Gray, two-sixtieth parts; To John Gray, Jr., three-sixtieth parts; To Thomas Dick, one-sixtieth part; To John Dick, one-sixtieth part; To John Alexander, one-sixtieth part; To James Alexander, one-sixtieth part; To James McAllach, one-sixtieth part; To Samuel Thomas, one-sixtieth part; To James Taylor, two-sixtieth parts (all the above-named persons are of Worcester, in the County of Worcester, except George Cowan, who is of Concord, in the County of Middlesex); To John Fergusson, of Grafton, one-sixtieth part; To James Gilmore, of Boston, two-sixtieth parts; To Adam Patterson, of Leicester, in ye County of Worcester, one-sixtieth part; To Thomas Lowdon, of Leicester, one-sixtieth part; To John Chandler, of Worcester, Esq., one-sixtieth part; To John Johnson, of Shrewsbury, one-sixtieth part; To Adam Clark, of Worcester, one-sixtieth part; To James Thornton, of Worcester, fourteen-sixtieth parts.

"To have and to hold the aforesaid half part of said Equivalent Land (except the Eight hundred acres, as before excepted), and in that part Thereof above described, with ye appurtenances and privileges thereto belonging to them, the above-named persons, their heirs and assigns, forever, according to their several and Respective proportions as before expressed, To their severall and Respective proper use, benefit, and behoofe for evermore. And the said John Stoddard for himself, his heirs, &c., doth covenant and engage to and with the before-named persons, their Respective heirs and assigns, that before and untill the ensembling hereof he was ye true, sole, and lawfull owner of the premises, and stood seized thereof in his own right, in Fee Simple, and had in himself good right, full power, and lawfull authority to grant, largain, sell, alien, release, convey, and confirm the same, as aforesaid, and that free and clear and clearly executed, acquitted, and discharged of and from all former and other Guifts, grants, Bargains, sales, leases, mortgages, wills, entails, Joyntures, Thirds, Executions, and Incumbrances whatsoever; and the said John Stoddard doth hereby further covenant and engage the before-granted premises with ye appurtenances to them the before-named persons and their Respective heirs and Assigns forever, to warrant same and defend against the Lawfull Claims and demands of any and every person and persons whatsoever.

"In Witness whereof, he hath hereunto set his hand seal this thirty-first day of January, in the twelfth year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George of Great Britain, &c., King Anno. Dom. 1738-39.

"JOHN STODDARD. [SEAL.]

"Signed, sealed, & delivered in presence of us, witnesses,

"ELISHA MARSH.

"CORNEA WALDO."

"WORCESTER, ss.:

"WORCESTER, Feby 2, 1738.

"John Stoddard, Esq., ye suscriber to the foregoing Instrument, personally appearing, freely acknowledged The same to be his Act and Deed Before me, WILLIAM JENISON, Justice of the Peace."

"HAMPSHIRE, ss.:

"SPRINGFIELD, Feby 3, 1738-39.

"Recd and Recorded in ye Records of Deeds for the County of Hampshire, Lib^o L, fol^o 220, &c.

"Pet Wm. PYNCHON, JUN^r, Reg."

The persons named in this deed, together with a few others, became the first settlers and proprietors of the soil. A petition for the issuing of a warrant to call a proprietors' meeting was addressed to John Stoddard, Feb. 1, 1739, by the following persons: Robert Barber, Robert Lothridge, John Dick, Patrick Peibles, John Chandler, James Thornton, Robert Peibles, William Johnson, John Stinson, and Samuel Gray. It was acceded to, and Patrick Peibles was authorized to convene the first meeting, which was held Feb. 26, 1739, at the house of Capt. Daniel Heywood, in Worcester.

John Chandler, Jr., was chosen moderator and clerk; Andrew McFarland, Robert Lothridge, and Samuel Gray were chosen a committee, with a surveyor, to take an exact survey of the whole tract of land, to lay out the same into six equal ranges, the range lines to run east and west, and between each range to leave two perches wide for a highway, except between the central ranges, where they were to leave four perches wide for a highway. In the centre of the tract they were to lay out ten acres for a meeting-house, burying-place, and training-field. From these ten acres was to be laid out a highway four perches wide, to run north and south from the north and south bounds of the whole tract. They were further to lay out 61 home-lots, of 100 acres each, and to proportion the lots "quantity for quality," so as to make them as equal as possible. One of these lots was to be set apart for the first minister, as near the meeting-house as possible, and between every three lots there was to be a highway two perches wide. Such was to be the general arrangement and disposition of the land. The compensation of the committee was to be nine shillings per day, and of the surveyor, Wm. Young, fourteen shillings per day.

The survey was duly returned May 1, 1739, and the first division of lots was made. At this meeting it was also voted that the sum of £15 be allowed and paid toward making a road to the meeting-house (so called), and from thence to East Hadley, viz., a bridle-road. It was also decided to separate the remaining lots into two divisions, each lot to contain 40 acres, and to be 61 lots in each division. The second and third divisions were drawn Nov. 5, 1739.

The following table shows the names of those who drew the original lots, and the numbers of those lots in each division:

	No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.		No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.
Minister's Lot.....	1	56	6	James Layton.....	34	51	29
Robert Peibles.....	2	52	13	Adam Johnson.....	34	51	19
Robert Peibles.....	3	11	23	James Hood.....	35	13	27
James Thornton.....	4	16	1	William Thornton.....	36	55	20
James Thornton.....	5	49	4	Samuel Thomas.....	37	25	16
John Dick.....	6	17	44	James Thornton.....	38	3	14
Patrick Peibles.....	7	45	7	And. McFarland.....	39	39	5
John Gray.....	8	27	34	James Brackenridge.....	40	54	24
John Gray.....	9	8	50	Nathan Thornton.....	41	58	45
John McConkey.....	10	61	35	Ephraim Cowan.....	42	24	52
William Gray.....	11	60	48	Samuel Gray.....	43	9	26
James Thornton.....	12	42	38	Robert Barber.....	44	9	33
James Thornton.....	13	22	55	Robert Barber.....	45	29	22
James Thornton.....	14	12	58	Wm. Johnson.....	46	39	12
Thomas Dick.....	15	18	8	Alexander Turner.....	47	37	11
Robert Peibles.....	16	6	42	John Gray.....	48	21	18
James Gilmore.....	17	41	56	John Ainson.....	49	46	61
Matthew Gray.....	18	26	25	James Alexander.....	50	47	21
James Thornton.....	19	14	9	John Ferguson.....	51	1	30
George Cowan.....	20	10	41	Adam Johnson.....	52	15	32
James Thornton.....	21	34	57	James Thornton.....	53	5	43
Adam Patterson.....	22	23	51	James Thornton.....	54	57	2
James Gilmore.....	23	31	36	Alex. McConkey.....	55	53	3
Adam Clark.....	24	30	53	James Taylor.....	56	20	29
John Chandler.....	25	59	39	Robert Lothridge.....	57	38	16
John Alexander.....	26	49	17	Thomas Lowden.....	58	2	59
John Johnson.....	27	43	54	Samuel Gray.....	59	28	23
James McAllan.....	28	22	15	Alex. McFarland.....	60	44	47
Robert Lothridge.....	29	7	40	Matthew Gray.....	61	48	60
John Chandler.....	30	4	31
James McConkey.....	31	35	37
William Johnson.....	32	50	10

The meetings of the proprietors continued to be held in Worcester until Aug. 6, 1740, when the first meeting was held on the new territory, at the house of John Ferguson. The name of "Lisburne," or "New Lisburne," was conferred upon the tract, and by this name, with its variations, it continued to be known until the incorporation of the town with its present name.

May 16, 1743, the settlers purchased the land owned by Elisha Williams, referred to in the original deed, for £38, old tenor.

The first settlers of Pelham are among those whose names have been set forth in the foregoing draft of lots. Some of them, such as the McConkeys (afterward Conkeys) and the McMullens, and some of the Grays lived in the territory now comprising the south part of Prescott. Just who was the first to locate on the land is not definitely known. It is probable that they removed from Worcester about the same time, erected houses, and took possession of the land. It seems that John Ferguson had a house erected in 1740, and doubtless most of the other settlers were as well provided for. Rev. Robert Abercrombie, the first minister of the town, located in 1742, and it is probable that the house which he occupied, still standing, near the store on Pelham Heights, was erected soon after that date.

It is possible that some of those who drew the original lots never actually settled in Pelham. Among those who are positively known to have taken up their land, and established themselves thereon, may be mentioned Alexander Conkey, Robert Peibles, John Alexander, John Gray, James Taylor, Robert Lothridge, James McCulloch, Thomas Dick, Adam Petteson, Ephraim and George Cowen, James Hood, James Thornton, William Gray, John Ferguson, Adam and John Johnson, Samuel Thomas, Alexander Turner, and others. Other families of influence came in a little later. John Hunter appears to have been there in 1749, and John Clark and John Stinson some time before. The Crossett family, still represented in Prescott, came in about 1750. In 1752 appear John Savage, Patrick Peibles, and John Blair. The Hamilton family, afterward one of the most prominent in the town, appeared in the person of Thomas Hamilton about the same time, and the house that one of them occupied is still standing near Pelham Hollow. A little later came David Thomas and James Harkness. The Berry family put in an appearance about 1755, along with John Crawford, David Houston, and David Cowdan. Then appear in rapid succession the Mecklams (some of whom lived in Prescott), the McMullens, Halberts, Hollands, Thompsons, Livermores, and others. The Kingman family, who were identified with the growth and development of the town for several generations, came in at the opening of the present century, and the Southworths a little later. Samuel Arnold, father of Savannah Arnold, and grandfather of S. F. Arnold, still living in the town, located in the first part of the present century. Nathaniel Gray settled in Pelham at an early day. His son John, father of Horace Gray, living in the west end of the town, was born in 1778. Oliver Smith came from Walpole, and settled eighty-one years ago on the "old Smith place," now occupied by Arba Randall, who married his daughter, Esther N., still living in the town. The Fales family, living in the west part of the town, is also one of the oldest now living in the town, having settled there the first part of the present century, being first represented by Daniel and Sewell Fales,—the latter the father of Abijah. The Newell, Jewett, Stratton, Dodge, Ward, Cook, and Brewer families are also among the oldest and most influential now living in the town. Benjamin Randall was born in Belchertown, and settled in Pelham about fifty years ago. Wyatt Richardson, who married an Abercrombie, settled in 1835, and is still living there. Arba Randall, living in the south part of the town, located on his present farm forty-five years ago.

Alexander Keith came from Easton and settled in Enfield, near the Pettingill bridge, in the last part of last century. He moved to Belchertown and there died. Ariel C. Keith, the present town clerk of Pelham, is descended from Daniel, son of Alexander. He was born June 15, 1816, in Enfield, afterward lived successively in Ludlow, Chicopee Falls, Belchertown, and Palmer, and finally settled in Pelham, in March, 1856, where he has pursued the occupation of a farmer, acquiring wealth and influence.

TAVERNS.

One of the first houses of public entertainment was kept by Thomas Dick, about the year 1760. A man named Bruce kept one somewhat later, which stood about where Adam Cole now lives, on Pelham Heights. A man named Ketch kept one there in 1815. Walter Eaton succeeded soon after, then Eliphaz Packard, and finally William Smith, about 1820. Smith died, and his wife, Rebecca (Abercrombie) Smith, continued the business for a time. Martin Kingman erected the building now occupied by Ariel C. Keith, early in this century, and kept store and tavern there for upward of twenty years. He was succeeded by Calvin Eaton and others.

STORES.

Of early stores mention may be made of one kept by a man named Armiston, in the last part of the last century, on the "heights." Marston Eaton kept a store in an old building that stood about where A. C. Keith now lives, early in the present century. He was succeeded by Martin Kingman, who erected the present building. Calvin Eaton succeeded Kingman about 1820. Job Miller had a store about the same time where M. E. Boynton now lives, following Chancellor Wheeler, and being succeeded by William Conkey and E. S. Richardson. M. E. Boynton has had a store at the same place for a few years past.

At Packardsville a man named Ramsdell had a store where the Widow Stevens now resides, about forty-five years ago. After several years he was succeeded by James Hanks, who kept the store for ten or twelve years, and was followed for short periods by a man named Whitney and Abraham Stevens. Mr. Stevens died, and no store has been there since.

At the west end of the town, Lewis L. Draper had a store which stood opposite the Methodist meeting-house about fifty years ago. He was followed in turn by a Mr. Hemingway and a Mr. Hill. Barrows & Gaskell last traded there, about twenty years ago.

PHYSICIANS.

The town of Pelham has had a full supply of physicians. One of the earliest was Dr. Nehemiah Hinds, who lived within the present territory of Prescott, and practiced as early as 1785. Dr. Abiah Southworth was a contemporary of Dr. Hinds, but did not commence practice until about 1819. Dr. King engaged in practice soon after. With him studied Dr. Daniel Thompson, who subsequently engaged in practice. Dr. Olney Potter lived in the west part of the town, and practiced in the first part of the present century. He subsequently removed to Amherst. Dr. Eaton practiced about thirty-five years ago, and was succeeded by Dr. Adam G. Craig, who was succeeded by Dr. Code. Dr. George W. Rhodes, Dr. Beers, and Dr. M. Heed have been physicians in charge of the Orient Springs House, in the west part of the town, the latter of whom is still there.

ORGANIZATION.

The town of Pelham was incorporated by act of the General Court, passed Jan. 15, 1743, with the following bounds :

" Bounding easterly on a tract of Land Commonly Called Quabbin, Granted to a Number of Canada and Narragansett soldiers, southerly on a lot of Equivalent Land, so called, belonging to the Rev^d Mr. Edwards and Mrs. Rebecca Hanley, Westerly on ye east bounds of the town of Haddley, and Northerly partly on the New Township commonly called Readtown, and partly on a New Township commonly called New Salem."

April 5, 1743, Robert Peibles, one of the "principal inhabitants," was empowered to convene the people of the town for the first meeting. This was held on the 19th of the same month. John Stoddard acted as moderator of the meeting, and among the officers chosen were Alexander Conkey, Robert Peibles, John Alexander, John Gray, and Robert Lothridge, Selectmen; William Gray, Clerk; John Stinson, Treasurer; James Taylor, John Conkey, John Johnson, Ephraim Cowan, Surveyors. Tythingmen, constables, fence-viewers, hog-reeves, assessors, and deer-reeves were also chosen.

The following votes were passed by the town at the same meeting :

" Voted that there be a committee chosen to Invite three ordained neighboring ministers to keep a day of fasting and prayer with us, and to consult with ye same Whome we shall Call to be our Minister.

" Voted that there be a Committee Chosen to Provide Glass, and to Glass the meeting, and to Build a Pulpit, and to finish ye under Pining of ye meeting-house at ye charge of ye town, and said Work to be Done Before Winter.

" Voted that ye aforesaid Committee for Building a Pulpit is to Build a Pulpit for Dignitie Like unto haddley third Precinct Pulpit.

" Voted yt ye Selectmen are Directed to Provide Sutable Cloath and have it made up to Covire Coffens with in Buring of our Dead at the Charge of ye town."

The various measures taken by the town toward the work of organization are elsewhere detailed.

The following persons have filled the principal town offices, and served as its representatives to the General Court :

SELECTMEN.

1743.—Alexander Conkey, Robert Peibles, John Alexander, John Gray, Robert Lothridge.

1744.—Conkey, Peibles, Gray, James McCulloch, Thomas Dick.

1746.—Alexander Conkey, James McCulloch, Adam Petteson, John Clark, Robt. Mecklem.

1747.—George Cowan, Wm. Gray (3d), James Thornton, James McConel, Ephraim Cowan.

1748.—James Thornton, George Cowan, Ephraim Cowan, James McConel, John Clark.

1749.—Thomas Dick, John Ferguson, John Johnson, John Hunter, John Dick.

1750.—Ephraim Cowan, James McCulloch, James Conkey, William Crosset, John Conkey.

1751.—Ephraim Cowan, James McCulloch, John Conkey, James Conkey, William Crosset.

1752.—John Savage, Patrick Peibles, John Johnson, John Blair, Thos. Johnson.

1753.—Patrick Peibles, Thos. Johnson, John Savage, John Blair, George Cowan.

1754.—Thomas Hamilton, Alexander Turner, John Ferguson, William Conkey, David Thomas.

1755.—Thomas Hamilton, Alexander Turner, Wm. Conkey, John Ferguson, David Thomas.

1756.—John Ferguson, David Thomas, Thomas Johnson, John Blair, James Harkness.

1757.—Archibald Crosset, Wm. Crosset, Patrick McMullen, Thomas Hamilton, James McConel.

1758.—William Harkness, Alexander McCulloch, John Hunter, John Crawford, William Conkey.

1759.—William Crosset, James Berry, William Clark, David Cowdan, Robert McCulloch.

1760.—James Harkness, Thomas Johnson, William Ferguson, Thomas Dick, Robert Lothridge.

1761.—Thomas Dick, David Houston, David Cowdan, Robert McCulloch, John Dick.

1762.—Hugh Johnson, James Cowan, Robert Mecklem, George Petteson, Isaac Gray.

1763.—Robert Mecklem, Hugh Johnson, George Petteson, Isaac Gray, James Cowan.

1764.—Isaac Gray, William Crosset, Alexander Conkey, Thomas Johnson, John Crawford.

1765.—Wm. Crosset, Daniel Gray, Patrick McMullen, Thomas Cochran, James Hullbert.

1766.—John Crawford, Thomas Johnson, George Petteson, Thomas Dick, James Cowan.

1767.—James Halbert, Archibald Crosset, Robert Mecklem, Wm. Conkey, James Harkness.

1768.—William Conkey, Robert Hamilton, Archibald Crosset, John Dick, David Cowden.

1769.—James Halbert, David Cowden, John Crawford, Robert Hamilton, George Petteson.

1770.—Robert Hamilton, David Cowden, George Petteson, James Berry, Archibald Crosset.

1771.—James Berry, Robert Hamilton, George Petteson, John Dick, James Halbert.

1772.—John Hamilton, John Dick, Hugh Holland, Robert Hamilton, William Crosset.

1773.—William Harkness, Daniel Gray, John Crawford, John Thompson, Robert Hamilton.

1774.—Thomas Cochran, David Cowden, Daniel Gray, Hugh Johnston, John Crawford.

1775.—Daniel Gray, Hugh Johnston, Robert Hamilton, George Petteson, John Crawford.

1776.—William Harkness, James Dunlap, Jonathan Gray, Hugh Johnston, John Thompson.

1777.—Isaac Gray, George Petteson, James Cowan, Matthew Clark, Ebenezer Gray.

1778.—Josiah Packard, Daniel Gray, James Taylor, Jonathan Hood, Abraham Livermore.

1779.—Hugh Johnston, George Petteson, William Dunlap, Jonathan Hood, Daniel Packard.

1780.—Samuel Hyde, Hugh Johnston, Jacob Edson, John Rinken, Thomas Johnson.

1781.—Joseph Packard, Daniel Gray, Nehemiah Hinds, David Cowden, Caleb Keith.

1782.—Aaron Gray, Joseph Hambleton, Jonathan Hood, William Dunlap, Thos. McMullen.

1783.—Aaron Gray, Jonathan Hood, William Dunlap, Joseph Hamilton, Thomas McMullen.

1784.—Joseph Hamilton, Nathaniel Sampson, Timothy Packard, John Peibles, James King.*

1816.—John Rankin, Jr., Henry Kingman, John Taylor, David Miller, James Crosset.

1817.—John Rankin, Jr., Jesse F. Peck, Luther Chapin, Moses Gray (2d), Constant Ruggles, Esq.

1818.—John Rankin, Jr., Luther Chapin, Jesse F. Peck, Moses Gray (2d), Barna Brigham.

1819.—Henry Kingman, Dr. Abiah Southworth, John Gray, David Mellen, Joseph Pierce.

1820.—Samuel Clark, Oliver Smith, David Conkey, Jr., Moses Gray, Barna Brigham.

1821.—Oliver Smith, Jr., David Conkey, Jr., Daniel Fales, Barna Brigham, Josiah Pierce.

1822.—Oliver Smith, David Conkey, Jr., Daniel Fales.

1823.—Henry Kingman, Samuel Hall, Luther Chapin.

1824-25.—Oliver Smith, Ezra Brown, Reuben Westcott.

1826-27.—Oliver Smith, Jr., Ezra Brown, Reuben Westcott.

1828.—Ezra Brown, Cyrus Kingman, Pliny Hannum.

1829.—Cyrus Kingman, Ziba Cook, Rufus Grant.

1830.—Rufus Grant, Samuel Clark, Jr., Benjamin Randall.

1831.—Oliver Smith, Reuben Westcott, David Conkey.

1832.—Reuben Westcott, Martin Kingman, Ezra Brown.

1833.—Oliver Smith, Martin Kingman, Ezra Brown.

* For some reason, there seems to be an hiatus in the records from 1784 to 1816.

1834.—Ezra Brown, Asahel Aldrich, Whipple Cook.
 1835.—Ezra Brown, Rufus Grout, Luther Chapin.
 1836.—Luther Chapin, John Harkness, James Thurston.
 1837.—Luther Chapin, Cyrus Kingman, Joseph Barrows.
 1838.—Luther Chapin, Levi B. Hall, Jared T. Westcott.
 1839.—Jared T. Westcott, Cheney Abbott, Levi Gates.
 1840-41.—George B. Pitman, Nehemiah W. Aldrich, James Thurston.
 1842.—Cyrus Kingman, Asahel Aldrich, James Thurston.
 1843.—Cyrus Kingman, Asahel Aldrich, Benjamin Randall.
 1844.—Cyrus Kingman, Asahel Aldrich, Wyatt Richerson.
 1845.—Cyrus Kingman, Ziba Cook, John T. Thurston.
 1846.—Cyrus Kingman, Levi B. Hall, Joel Packard.
 1847.—Levi B. Hall, Cheney Abbott, George B. Pitman.
 1848.—Calvin D. Eaton, Thomas Thurston, Austin W. Conkey.
 1849.—A. W. Conkey, Thomas Thurston, N. W. Aldrich.
 1850.—Austin W. Conkey, Nehemiah W. Aldrich, Horace Grey.
 1851.—Calvin D. Eaton, Nehemiah W. Aldrich, David Abercrombie.
 1852.—Nehemiah W. Aldrich, Monroe Eaton, Lemuel H. Newell.
 1853.—Ansel A. Rankin, Moses L. Ward, Philo D. Winter.
 1854.—Ansel A. Rankin, P. D. Winter, Emery Ballou.
 1855.—Thomas Thurston, N. W. Aldrich, Philander Bartlett.
 1856.—Thomas Thurston, Philo D. Winter, David Abercrombie.
 1857.—Thomas Thurston, Isaac B. Barrows, Marcus Grout.
 1858.—C. D. Eaton, M. C. Grout, H. Gray.
 1859.—Calvin D. Eaton, James M. Cowan, Lemuel H. Newell.
 1860.—Lemuel H. Newell, James M. Cowan, John Jones.
 1861.—James M. Cowan, Warren Randall, Asahel Gates.
 1862.—James M. Cowan, Lemuel H. Newell, Philander Bartlett.
 1863-64.—John Jones, Dexter Thompson, Alfred Taylor.
 1865.—John Jones, Alfred Taylor, Aretus J. Cadwell.
 1866.—John Jones, Alfred Taylor, Philander Bartlett.
 1867-68.—Marcus C. Grant, Albert Finman, Ansel A. Rankin.
 1869.—Marcus C. Grant, Sanford Byden, Ansel A. Rankin.
 1870.—M. L. Ward, Lewis Dodge, Samuel R. Davis.
 1871.—Moses L. Ward, Thomas W. Stratton, Samuel B. Davis.
 1872-74.—Sylvester Jewett, T. W. Stratton, Alonzo C. Randall.
 1875.—Sylvester Jewett, James Hanks, Israel Taylor.
 1876.—Sylvester Jewett, James Hanks, Thomas W. Stratton.
 1877.—Sylvester Jewett, T. W. Stratton, A. C. Randall.
 1878.—Sylvester Jewett, T. W. Stratton, John Jones.

TOWN CLERKS.

1743, William Gray; 1746, John Dick; May 18, 1781, Ebenezer Gray; 1782, William Conkey, Jr.; * 1816, Ithamar Conkey; 1819, Dr. Abia Southworth; 1820, David Abercrombie; 1827, Samuel Clark, Jr.; 1830, Martin Kingman; 1831, Daniel Thompson; 1833, Cyrus Kingman; 1836, Lemuel C. Wedge; 1837, Rufus Grout; 1839, Asa Tomson; 1840, Calvin D. Eaton; 1845, Lyman Jenks; 1849, Francis Kingman; 1850, Lyman Jenks; 1852, William Conkey; 1853, Erastus P. Boyden; 1854, E. P. Boyden; 1854 (April 9), A. G. Craig; 1855, Lyman Jenks; 1858, David Abercrombie; 1861, Calvin D. Eaton; 1867, Lyman Jenks; 1868, Calvin D. Eaton; 1871, G. W. Shepard; 1872, A. C. Keith.

REPRESENTATIVES.

1780, Capt. John Thompson; 1783-84, Thomas Johnston; * 1816, Capt. Henry Kingman; 1819, Isaac Abercrombie; 1824, Oliver Smith; 1827, Ezra Brown; 1828, Cyrus Kingman; 1829-32, Ziba Cook; 1832-33, Lewis Draper; 1834, Whipple Cook; 1835-36, Luther Chapin; 1838, Joseph Barrows; 1839, David Abercrombie; 1840, John Palmoter; 1841, George B. Pitman; 1842, James Thurston; 1843-47, Calvin D. Eaton; 1850, Nehemiah W. Aldrich; 1851, David Abercrombie; 1853, Thomas Buffum; 1854, Rufus Grout; 1865, John Jones; 1869, Sylvester Jewett; 1873, Asahel Gates.

In this connection it will prove of interest to consider a few as illustrative of the manners and customs of the people and their methods of conducting town affairs.

NOTES FROM THE RECORDS.

On April 16, 1754, the town voted to petition the General Court for permission to levy a tax of a half-penny per acre on the lands of the non-resident owners.

Feb. 11, 1765, "Voted that the whole body of the meeting-house is to be made in Plain Puews."

Feb. 26, 1766, "Voted that Thomas Dick is allowed one shilling and two pence for one Quart of Rum."

As the use of strong drink was common in those early days, especially upon all public occasions, such as the raising of a meeting-house, the building of a bridge, and the "perambulating" of the town-lines, this appropriation was probably for some such service.

May 13, 1819, "Voted not to set off the East Parish as a separate town." This opposition was of no avail, as Prescott was duly incorporated Jan. 28, 1822.

Jan. 31, 1854, "Voted to surrender this town's Charter according to the Warrant calling this Meeting;" 73 in favor, 36 against. "Voted to choose three Committee to Carry the same into effect." Chose Minor Gold, Isaac B. Barrows, and Grove W. Hannum. "Voted to choose a special Committee of Four to visit adjoining towns to circulate Petitions."

This attempt to divest themselves of town privileges is believed to be without precedent in the State. It failed of success, and on March 15, 1870, it was again voted to surrender the charter of the town, and, dividing the town into two divisions, merge one-half in Belchertown or Enfield, and the other half in Amherst. This movement likewise failed.

VILLAGES.

There are no regular villages in the town. The two largest settlements are on "Pelham Heights" and at the "west end" of the town. The former was the original "centre" of the town, where was erected the first meeting-house, and where the "minister's lot" was laid. The ancient frame of the first meeting-house still stands there, performing duty as a "town-house," and is a unique and formidable structure yet, and excites much interest. Here also stands its successor. Besides these, there are a store, a post-office on the "heights," and 12 or 15 dwelling-houses.

The post-office has been in existence many years, the exact date of its establishment not being known. It was probably near 1810. One of the first postmasters was Martin Kingman. He was followed by Calvin Eaton, and he by Enos S. Richardson. M. E. Boynton, the present postmaster, has filled the position for several years. The west end of the town is the most thickly settled, although the houses are somewhat widely scattered, and are ranged along the road leading to Amherst. Here is the Methodist Church, a manufactory of fishing-rods, a saw- and planing-mill, and the Orient Springs House (a noted health institution), besides a large number of dwellings. The inhabitants of this part, being distant from the village of Amherst only two miles, transact the most of their business at that place.

PACKARDSVILLE is a small hamlet in the southeast corner of the town, adjoining the towns of Enfield and Belchertown. It sprang up about fifty years ago in connection with the Baptist Church which formerly existed at that point. It now comprises a Congregational Church and a few dwelling-houses. A store formerly existed there.

SCHOOLS.

The first formal vote passed by the town in behalf of education was on April 26, 1744, when it was "voted that their be a Schole Kept in town For ye space of two Months, one moneth at ye Dwelling-house of Ephraim Cowans; one month at ye Dwelling-house of William Grays." From that time on the subject received yearly attention from the town. May 14, 1745, it was "voted that their be a Schoole Kept in town this Present year; ye time for Keeping said Schole is in ye months of august and Sept., and ye Place is at ye meeting-house of said Pelham." April 15, 1746, it was also "voted yt there be a Schol Kept in ye town ye six months Insuing, or as soon as Conveny Will allow. Voted that ye Schole be Kept two months at ye meeting-house, two months at Ephraim Cowans and two months at Alexander Conkeys." Thirty-six pounds were appropriated at the meeting to "Pay a Schole master for keeping Schole." On March 19, 1747, it was voted to have school for six months of that year, commencing with June 1st, "to go no Further East than ye Nole Betwixt James Taylors and Alexander Conkeys, and two months att ye meeting-house, and to go No further West than ye Bridge at Ephraim Cowans."

On April 16, 1754, the town was divided into three parts for schooling purposes, and the sum of £8 was appropriated for a school. The following year £6 was appropriated for schools, and they were kept at the meeting-house, at the "east hill" and the "west end." The same year it was also "voted that there be a Scoble House Built at the meeting-house, at the West End and at the East Hill." On March 24, 1756, £40 was appropriated for schools, and the town was divided into five parts for schooling purposes. In the year 1760 a committee to select a location for the erection of new school-houses was chosen, and in the following year £40 was granted for erecting the same. In the year 1816, $500 was appropriated for schools; in 1818, $600. The town was redistricted in 1823, 1846, and 1861, there being at the latter date eight school districts. In 1870 the appropriation was $1000.

* For some reason, there seems to be an hiatus in the records from 1784 to 1816.

At the present time there are four public schools in the town, having in attendance about 100 pupils. They are under control of a board, one member of which is elected each year for three years.

CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN—CONGREGATIONAL.

As we have seen in the paragraph on the settlement of the town, the first settlers were of Irish descent, and in religious matters, of the Presbyterian persuasion, according to the Church of Scotland.

No sooner were the people located on the lands than measures were immediately taken to provide public worship according to that faith. At a proprietors' meeting held Aug. 6, 1740, it was voted to build a meeting-house, to raise £100 toward building it, and choose a committee to agree with a workman to raise the house, and provide for the settling of a minister. The meeting-house was to be 46 feet in length, 36 feet wide, and 25 feet high between the joints. The committee appointed in accordance with the vote were James McCullough, James Thornton, and Samuel Gray. Subsequent to the first vote £220 were raised in two instalments, for the erection and completion of the structure. As in most of the new towns, it was several years before the edifice was finished. In 1818 it was removed a few feet from its original location, and thoroughly repaired. It was again repaired in later years, and removed a few feet farther back. It is now used as a town-house, and bears evidence to its antiquity in its unique architecture and ancient form. The records of the church are extremely meagre.

In the year 1740 the sum of £30 was appropriated for preaching. A Rev. Mr. Johnston, of Londonderry, was first called to settle as pastor, but the call was not accepted. On March 5, 1744, a call was extended to Robert Abercrombie to become the pastor. He was certified to by Rev. Messrs. Jonathan Edwards, David White, David McGregore, and David Persons, Jr., and had acted as supply to the church since the summer of 1742. The call was accepted by Abercrombie, he to receive the minister's lot and an annual salary of £50, new tenor, for eight years, and he was ordained on the 30th of August following. On the following day a protest against the proceedings of the meeting that called him was entered by James Gilmore, William Ferguson, Samuel Ferguson, Adam Petteson, John Gilmore, Thomas Dick, James Thornton, James McCulloch, Alexander McCulloch, Hugh Gray, Robert King, William Thornton, John Sterling, James Gilmore, Robert Ferguson, John Ferguson, Robert McCulloch, James Ferguson, James Dunlap, Thomas Petteson, George Petteson, and John Dick.

Rev. Mr. Abercrombie was a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, and was there educated. He was a profound scholar, and possessed a library surpassed by few in its time, which is now in the possession of one of his descendants. The exact date of his dismissal is not recorded, but it was probably in the year 1754. In the year 1755, Rev. Messrs. Dickeson, Clintock, and John Houston preached. Rev. Richard Crouch Graham was installed as the second pastor of the church, July 8, 1763, on a settlement of £100. He was a young man of ability, and died in the pastoral relation, Feb. 25, 1771, in his thirty-second year. His remains were interred in the old burying-ground adjoining the meeting-house. After the death of Mr. Graham, the pulpit was filled by different persons, including Rev. Mr. Mordak and Rev. Andrew Bay.

On Nov. 23, 1774, a call was voted to Rev. Nathaniel Merrill, on £70 settlement and £80 salary, and, it being accepted, he was installed soon after. He remained in that relation until about 1783, when, certain difficulties arising in the church, he withdrew from the town. In the interval succeeding his departure, the notorious Stephen Burroughs appeared, under the name of Davis, and supplied the pulpit for nineteen Sabbaths.*

The next regular pastor of the church was Rev. Andrew Oliver, who was called Dec. 10, 1792, and installed soon after. Rev. Solomon Spalding had been previously called. Mr. Oliver sustained the pastoral relation until the year 1804, when he ceased to officiate,—for what reason the meagre records of the town and church fail to indicate.

The next pastor, Rev. Elijah Brainard, was installed in the spring of 1805, and was dismissed Oct. 17, 1811. On Jan. 2, 1815, Rev. Winthrop Bailey was called as the next pastor, and installed soon after. He was dismissed by council in the fall of 1825.

The church now seems to have undergone a decline, interest in religious matters ceased, and the ordinances of the gospel were almost entirely suspended.

A reawakening does not seem to have occurred until the year 1837. On October 25th of that year a council was convened by letters missive, at the house of Nathaniel Pratt, in Pelham, and measures were taken for the reorganization of the society. Unfortunately, the records of the revived church are in worse condition than those of the first. It is difficult to trace the history of the church at this point.

The first minister of the new church seems to have been Rev. Frederick Janes, but when he was installed, and when dismissed, is uncertain. His apparent successor, Rev. A. C. Page, was installed in January, 1848, but when he ceased his labors is not stated. The church had no settled pastor in the year 1855.

In the year 1861, Rev. W. H. Dowden was pastor, but when he became so, or when he was dismissed, we are not informed.

In the year 1866, Rev. Matthew Kingman, of Amherst, was stated supply. He was succeeded for a time by Rev. William K. Vaill; and in September, 1874, Mr. Vaill, pastor of the Union Congregational Society of Packardville, became the acting pastor of the church, and still sustains that relation.

It will thus be seen that this church has passed through various transmutations, beginning as a Presbyterian Church and becoming—for what purposes, at what time, or by what means we are not informed—a Congregational Church. It is probable that the Rev. Elijah Brainard was the last Presbyterian pastor, and that Rev. Winthrop Bailey opened the era of Congregationalism; but this is mere conjecture. A second meeting-house was erected about the year 1838, and, standing near its ancient predecessor at the "old centre," is still in use. The present membership of the church is 29, and a Sabbath-school is connected therewith. A Sabbath-school library is also owned by the society.

BAPTIST.

In the year 1831 a petition was addressed to the First Baptist Church of Belchertown, by a number of persons residing in the north part of that town, and in the adjoining towns of Enfield and Pelham, asking leave to organize a distinct society at Packardville. Previous to that time meetings had been held for a great many years in private residences in Belchertown, under the oversight of the First Baptist Church.

* See Notes and Incidents.

The application was favorably received, the society was formed, and a church edifice was soon after erected at Packardsville. The movement flourished more or less for a period of some thirty years, under the pastorate of Rev. Messrs. Bigelow, Burt, Vaughan, Smelledge, Snell, Emerson Hill, and others, but finally experienced a decline.

THE FIRST UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH was organized at Packardsville, July 24, 1859, being composed of those who had been connected with the Baptist Society and other evangelical Christians in that locality. The new society occupied the Baptist meeting-house, and were ministered to frequently by students from Amherst College. The meeting-house was destroyed by fire in the spring of 1869. In the mean time the

UNION CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY, of Packardsville, was organized, Dec. 4, 1868, by the following persons: Albert Firmin, Oren Sikes, Philander S. Knight, Ziza A. Hanks, Lorenzo W. Miller, Asahel B. Shaw, David Randall, Ansel C. Shaw, George S. Calkins, Horton B. Ward, Ebenezer Ward, George W. Knight, and A. A. Howard. The church formed by this society was duly recognized Jan. 5, 1869. The meeting-house used by the society, and now standing at Packardsville, was erected in the summer of 1869, at a cost of about $6500, upon the original site of the Baptist meeting-house, and was dedicated June 28, 1871. The church-bell was presented by one of the classes of Amherst College. On the same day the first regular, and the present, pastor of the church, Rev. Wm. K. Vaill, was installed. Mr. Vaill is a son of Rev. Joseph Vaill, D.D., for many years pastor of the churches at Brimfield and Palmer, in Hampden County. He was born at Brimfield, was subsequently in attendance at Amherst College, and when called to his present pastorate was sustaining the relation of pastor to the church at Shutesbury, in Franklin County. Under his care the new society has prospered, and now comprehends a membership of 30 persons. A flourishing Sabbath-school is connected with the church, of which Darius Chickering is superintendent.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

The beginning of permanent Methodist worship in Pelham was in the spring of 1831, when Rev. Isaac Stoddard was invited to preach. Previous to that, meetings of a general character had been held in the town. Mr. Stoddard was formally settled as pastor by the Conference of 1831.

In 1832 the society had grown to a membership of 125. In 1834, Pelham and Greenwich were connected together under the same pastoral charge. In 1836 the society occupied the old meeting-house on Pelham Heights, near the town-house. Between 1838 and 1843 the present Methodist meeting-house in the west end of the town was erected. The deed of the land was given to "the Proprietors of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Pelham," by Augustus Webster. The deed for the original parsonage at the west end was made by Emory Ballou, July 5, 1847, "for the benefit of such men as shall be employed by the Methodist Episcopal Church to preach in the west part of Pelham," to the following trustees: Rufus Grout, David Newell, Lemuel C. Wedge, Horace Gray, Zadoc Preston, Ansel A. Rankin, and John Sisson. This parsonage was used by the various ministers who have been in charge, until Aug. 11, 1875, when it was sold, and a new one erected, at a cost of $1050, on land given for that purpose by Russell Whipple.

The following ministers have served as pastors of the society: Isaac Stoddard, 1831-32; John W. Case, 1833; Erastus Otis, Wm. Gordon, 1834; Onesiphorus Robbins, 1835-36; James Dean, 1837; Joseph W. Lewis, 1839; John Cadwell, 1840; Wm. P. White, 1841-42; Windsor Ward, 1845-46; J. B. Bigelow, 1847; Judah Crosby, 1850-51; B. W. Wright, 1852-53; Franklin Fisk, 1854; John Jones, located 1855-57; John W. Lee, 1858-59; J. L. Esty, 1860; L. A. Bardwell, 1861; Gilbert R. Bent, 1862; John H. Gaylord, 1863; John Cadwell, 1864-65; O. W. Adams, 1866-67; John Noon, 1868-69; George Hews, 1870-71; N. H. Martin, 1872-73; W. H. Adams, 1874; Nathan A. Soule, 1875; Jonathan Neal, 1876-77; Geo. E. Chapman, 1878-79.

The society is in a prosperous condition, having a pleasant Sabbath-school in successful operation, with a membership of 60 and a library containing 300 volumes. The superintendent is S. F. Arnold.

Rev. George E. Chapman, the present pastor, was placed in charge of the church in 1878, and is now in his second year.

The stewards for the present year are L. H. Newell, B. Allen, Amasa Allen, J. R. Powell, Hugh Anderson, J. G. Ward, Russell Whipple, D. Presho, Hollis Dodge, H. B. Brewer, Timothy Sabin.

A SOCIETY OF FRIENDS

formerly existed in the town at the west end, and was supported by the Kelly, Cook, Buffum, and other families. It was never strong, and has not been in active existence for more than forty years. The meeting-house used by the society is now the barn of J. Willis.

THE UNITARIANS

also flourished for a time, worshiping in the present town-house, and the movement manifested considerable strength, but no regular society is now in existence.

THE BURIAL-PLACES

of Pelham are quite numerous, most of them, however, being small and devoted to private uses.

The first ground laid out in the town for that purpose was what is known as the "Centre Burying-Ground," situated at the present town-house.

In 1739 ten acres of land situated in the centre of the town were set apart for a meeting-house, burying-ground, and training-field, and during that year this yard was laid out and used for burial purposes for many years.

It has not been in use for a period of sixty years. Many of its oldest graves have sunken and disappeared from sight, leaving but a crumbled stone, on which the inscription is illegible, to mark the spot where they existed. Some of the oldest settlers of the town repose beneath its sod. The most ancient stones now standing are those of David Houston, who died Oct. 29, 1765, in his forty-fifth year, and his wife, Mary, who died March 18, 1766; Rev. Richard Crouch Graham, who died Feb. 25, 1771, in his thirty-second year; and John Peibles, who died Jan. 1, 1780, in his seventy-sixth year.

The next oldest burying-ground laid out within the present limits of the town was what is now known as the "West Burying-Ground," situated in the western part of the town, near the "Valley School-house." The exact date of the appropriation of that spot to burial purposes is not indicated on the town records. In the year 1819 the fencing around the "East, West, and Centre Burying-Grounds" was sold at auction, and $65 granted to repair the yards, and it is probable that the west yard was laid out as early as 1760. The yard contains the graves of some of the first settlers of the town, and many old tombstones, the inscriptions upon which cannot be deciphered.

The "Valley Cemetery," situated on the "Valley road," in the west end of the town, near the Gates place, was laid out about the year 1848. It is still in use, and is an attractive and beautiful spot.

The cemetery at the west end, near the Orient Springs, was laid out about 1830, William Harkness being the first person interred there. It is small, and contains but few graves.

The "Quaker Cemetery" was laid out in the first part of the present century, at the west end, near J. R. Sibley's. No stones were ever erected there, and it is seldom used.

The cemetery in the south part of the town, near the farm of Arba Randall, was laid out about 1843, and is owned by James Smith, Daniel Holbrook, and Arba Randall. It contains but few graves.

There is another small private burying-ground near the residence of Philander Knight, in the south part of the town.

At Packardsville there are two burying-grounds, the larger one being just over the line, and within the town of Enfield. The smaller one adjoins the Congregational Church at that place, and was probably established and first used by the Baptists about fifty years ago.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS.

From the records of the town we learn that the earliest marriages which took place in Pelham were as follows:

"August ye 25, 1746.—Then joyned in marriage Robert McKee & Mary Gray, both of Pelham."

"Sept. ye 25, 1746.—Then joyned in marriage John Dick & Jean Mc'ulloch, both of Pelham."

"Nov. ye 10, 1746.—Then joyned in marriage Ephraim Whiler & Hannah Marks, both of Quaben, so Called."

The name of "Pelham" was conferred upon the town in honor of Lord Pelham, of England, who passed through the State about the time of the incorporation of the town. In recognition of the compliment, Lord Pelham presented the church with a bell, which was made in England and shipped to Boston for the town. The charges for freight and storage being so heavy, and the difficulty of getting the bell to Pelham being great, the bell was sold to the Old South Church, in Boston, and never reached Pelham.

That the custom of using intoxicating beverages was universal in early times cannot be denied, and many are the stories that are narrated in regard to that indulgence. Ministry and laity alike practiced and encouraged their use. One of these stories is laid in Pelham, and, whether true or not, seems to illustrate the prevailing tendencies of the times. The records of the town indicate that difficulties arose between the town and their first minister, Rev. Robert Abercrombie, and that he was dismissed and compelled to sue the town for a portion of his salary. The foundation of all this trouble is confidently asserted to have been the too frequent use of the cup by the minister, and the story is told that upon one occasion a committee, of which Deacon McMullen was one, was appointed to confer with the pastor upon his shortcomings. The committee repaired to the house of the reverend gentleman, and were received with great hospitality, some excellent West India rum being immediately set before them. The result was the committee lingered through the night without disclosing the purport of the visit, and concluded the next morning to make a report to the church that Mr. Abercrombie had given them Christian satisfaction. They are said to have made such a report, and the matter was thus amicably adjusted.

Pelham was the scene of the pastoral labors of the far-famed Stephen Burroughs. He made his advent in the town about the year 1784, after the withdrawal of Rev. Mr. Merrill, having previously preached one Sabbath in the town of Ludlow, Hampden Co. Burroughs was the son of Rev. Eden Burroughs, of Hanover, N. H., and came armed with a few old sermons of his father's, and bringing a letter from the Rev. Mr. Baldwin, of Palmer, to Deacon Gray, of Pelham. Burroughs arrived in Pelham under the assumed name of Davis, and was favorably received by the people. He was first engaged to preach four Sabbaths, and after them sixteen more. During this time he was suspected of preaching sermons not his own. To test the matter, the people determined to select a text from which he was to preach, giving him notice of the request just before the time that church was to assemble. The text selected was the first clause of the fifth verse of the ninth chapter of Joshua, the words being, "And old shoes and clouded upon their feet." Burroughs acquiesced in the request, and succeeded in delivering such an excellent discourse from so poor a text that he silenced all carplings upon that point. Things went along swimmingly until the time for which he was hired had nearly expired, but one Sabbath remaining. But his career in Pelham was now ended. The news of his character and duplicity reached the town, and he was obliged to flee in the night. He was discovered in his flight through Greenwich by a young man named Powers, of that town, and was followed by the enraged inhabitants of Pelham, and overtaken in the town of Rutland. Here, after laying Dr. Nehemiah Hinds senseless with a stone, he took refuge in a hay-mow, from whence, after a long parley with the people, they all adjourned to a tavern kept by one Wood, and enjoyed "Christian satisfaction" at Burroughs' expense. Trouble again arising, the latter fled to a swamp, pursued by the people, but was not again overtaken.

THE INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS OF PELHAM, aside from agriculture, have never assumed any great importance. The cultivation of the soil and the cutting and selling of lumber have occupied the principal attention of the town.

Some manufacturing, however, has been done in the west end of the town, along the Fort River, and on the Swift River, at the eastern border.

At the west end saw- and grist-mills existed at an early day. Nathan Jillson, father of Amasa and Riley, moved into Pelham in the year 1806, and purchased both the water-privileges at the west end. At that time a saw- and grist-mill was in operation at that point. For a time also John Parmenter had a fulling-mill at the lower site, and George Macomber engaged in the manufacture of clothing.

The Jillsons utilized these privileges for some time. A grist-mill was erected at one privilege about the year 1826, and it was used for that purpose until 1845, when it was purchased by Robert Cutler. Part of it was then converted into a saw-mill. Buffum & Ward succeeded Cutler. In 1863 the site was bought by Horace Gray, who, in company with his son, engaged in the manufacture of jointed fish-poles, made of ash and maple wood, until the year 1874, when the business was sold to J. Ward & Co., who are still engaged in that manufacture.

The other site was used as a saw-mill for many years, and in the year 1828 the mill was used in turning bobbins. In that year a heavy flood swept down the river, carrying the improvements at both places with it. Horace Gray purchased this privilege also in the year 1835, and engaged in the manufacture of bedsteads and other general wood manufacture. In the year 1860 it was used in the manufacture of fishing-poles. Andrew Mitchell afterward ran it as a saw-mill. In the year 1867 it came into the hands of Darius Eaton, who now runs it as a saw- and planing-mill.

The east privilege was also in use at an early day, being first utilized for the use of a saw-mill. About the year 1850, Dwight and Henry Hill engaged in the manufacture of spools. That business was carried on until the burning of the mill, a few years ago.

Among the early blacksmiths of the town, mention may be made of Thomas Harlow, who had a shop near the Methodist meeting-house, in the west part of the town; David Hannum, who had one near the residence of Horace Gray, also in the west end; and Nathaniel Dodge, who had one the last part of last century, near the residence of his son, Ellison Dodge, in the south part of the town. He was succeeded by his son, Ellison Dodge, who, though at an advanced age, still prosecutes the business to some extent.

The quarrying of "Pelham granite" has also been engaged in by the inhabitants. The first stone taken out was by John Gray, over fifty years ago, in the west part of the town. Levi B. Hall next engaged in business there, who finally sold out to J. G. Ward, who still owns and conducts the business. The stone is of a peculiar grayish tint, and has been much used in the surrounding towns. The Amherst College chapel is built of it. Stone has also been quarried in the east part of the town.

Considerable quantities of asbestos have also been mined in the southwest part of the town. This work was first undertaken by Lemuel H. Newell about eight years ago, the deposit being on his farm. Mr. Newell subsequently disposed of the business to a Hartford man. About 1871, Rev. John Jones engaged in the enterprise, and took out considerable material. Two years later it was opened by James H. Murray on a royalty. It is now owned by A. F. & J. Jones, and is not much worked at present. The quality of the asbestos is said to be good, and it meets a ready sale in the Boston and New York markets.

At Packardsville, Joel Packard and John Thurston engaged in the manufacture of wagons and carriages about 1830. The business was afterward removed to Belchertown.

The business of braiding palm-leaf hats has constituted an extensive branch of industry for over fifty years, especially on the part of the females of the town. Other small industrial and manufacturing enterprises have existed elsewhere in the town.

MILITARY.

The town has taken an active part in the various wars that have agitated the country since its incorporation. There is every reason to believe that numbers of its citizens took part in the earlier Indian wars, though the only name mentioned in the records of the town in that connection is that of James Ferguson in 1747, who was released from taxation because he was "in the war."

THE REVOLUTIONARY RECORD

of the town is eminently characteristic. On Nov. 9, 1773, in response to the circular letter that had been issued by the Committee of Correspondence at Boston, the town voted a long and philosophical reply, breathing the spirit of patriotism, and nearly covering three closely-written pages of the records. Something of its spirit may be judged from the following extract:

"And if things should ere long Proceed to an Unhappy Rupture Betwixt the mother Country and these Plantations, Which Heaven forbid, we are not at present much intimidated with that pompous boasting on the other side of the waters, viz., that Great Britain could blow America into atoms, as we consider the sighs of the oppressed and Good Wishes of millions in the mother Country to the Liberty and Weal Both of themselves and their own flesh, their Beloved Americans."

Committee, Robert Hamilton, John Hamilton, Thomas Cochran, David Cowden, and George Petteson.

Throughout the war the town contributed its full share of men and supplies to the Continental army, and on June 20, 1776, thirteen days before the declaration of independence, passed the following:

"Voted by unanimous vote that We are willing to Come under Independency from under the yoke of the King of Great Britain, Provided the Continental Congress see fite, in their Wisdom, to Establish Independence in the Colonies for their Safety."

It is said that nearly all the male residents of the town served in the cause of independence. Among these may be mentioned Oliver Smith, whose principal service, however, was performed upon the water, privateering. He assisted in the capture of two ships. Nathan Jillson, a resident of the town in later years, also served in the army. Daniel Shays, afterward the leader of the rebellion which bore his name, served in the Revolutionary war from Pelham. At the battle of Bunker Hill, at the storming of Stony Point and the capture of Burgoyne, he did gallant service, attaining the rank of captain, and carried to his grave an honorable scar received in fighting the battles of his country.

SHAYS' REBELLION.

In this rebellion the people of Pelham took an earnest and active part. In the first place, the leader of the insurrection lived in their midst, and aroused the inhabitants by personal exhortation to that point of indiscretion where they were willing to take up arms in the endeavor to obtain that relief from the manifest burdens of the times that should properly have been sought by constitutional methods. In the next, they had just passed through a struggle involving, to some extent, the same principles, and had imbibed a warlike spirit and been blinded by success. So it was that almost the entire town actively co-operated with Shays in his movements, and its hills at one time sheltered the entire insurgent force. The records of the town from 1787 to 1816 having been lost, it is impossible to give the names of those who served in the rebellion.

To the war of 1812 the town contributed, among others, the following persons: Capt. John Taylor, John T. Conkey, Grove Hannum, Luther Thompson, Sydney Hannum, Henry Hannum, Luther Lincoln, James Smith, Amasa Jillson, and Leonard Blue.

To the late war the town contributed liberally in money and means in support of the preservation of the Union. The following persons served in the army:

Henry E. Wheeler, Otis Griffin, George A. Griffin, Erastus S. Southwick, Stephen Rhoads, Charles R. Cleaveland, Sanford M. Lovett, Joseph F. Bartlett, Salmon Rhoads, Manly Jinson, Harrison Z. Horr, Chas. H. Horr, John Shaw, Otis B. Hill, Patrick Bailey, Henry Barrows, Otis Kimball, Franklin Bramble, John T. Nichols, Joseph E. Boynton, Joseph D. Whitney, Frederick Dane, Stillman Abercrombie, Joseph D. Allen, Dexter R. Barnes, Daniel Cook, Edmund S. Elsbree, Amos D. Leonard, William P. Montgomery, Amaziah Robinson, Nelson Watt, Charles S. Sawyer, Thomas Linds, James D. Moore, Joel Cutting, Francis A. Blodgett, John O. Rhoads, George A. Gardner, George W. Allen, Truman Squires, Thomas Ferisson, Garrett O'Neal, Philander Pike, Charles Griffin, Salmon Rhoads, Franklin Bramble, John T. Nichols, Joseph F. Bartlett, Charles Griffin, William O. Kimball, George Wethell, Henry Wood, Madison L. Fales, Norman Fales, James Heal, George M. Gungle, Charles Steward, George A. Gardner, Simeon Gilbert, Charles A. Abbott, Henry Wood, Madison L. Fales, Frederick Grover.

For assistance rendered in compiling the foregoing history the writer is indebted to A. C. Keith, Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Arba Randall, Horace Gray, Ellison Dodge, Rev. John Jones, Rev. W. K. Vaill, Albert Firmin, and other citizens of the town.

P R E S C O T T.

GEOGRAPHICAL.

THE town of Prescott is in the northeast corner of the county, and is bounded on the north by the town of Salem, Franklin Co.; on the south by the towns of Enfield and Greenwich, Hampshire Co.; on the east by the towns of Dana, in Worcester County, and Greenwich, in Hampshire County; and on the west by the towns of Pelham, Hampshire Co., and Shutesbury, Franklin Co. The town is shaped in the form of an inverted L, and is about six miles long, four and a half miles wide in the widest part, and two and a half in the narrowest, and contains 12,706 acres of land, 187 acres occupied by roads and 322 covered by water.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is somewhat rugged in aspect, especially in the southern and western parts. In the centre is a pleasant valley, which contains many good farms nestled among the hills. The scene from Prescott Hill, in the west part of the town, is grand, a fine view being afforded of the surrounding towns, and the range of vision is only limited by lofty mountains in the distance. Mount Ell, in the northeast part of the town, is the marked feature in that section, and attains a considerable elevation. Rattlesnake Mountain, in the west part, rises abruptly to an altitude of about three hundred feet, and almost perpendicular for half that distance. At the base of this rocky bastion a den or cave has been formed by the débris from above, in which ice is present the year round. This den was once the favorite hiding-place of large numbers of rattlesnakes, and is known as "Rattlesnake Den," whence also the name of the mountain. Other hills exist in different parts of the town.

STREAMS.

The west branch of Swift River forms the western boundary of the town, and derives several small affluents from its territory. The middle branch of the same river passes through the extreme eastern part of the town for a short distance. Russ' Pond, in the northeastern section, is the only natural body of water of any consequence in the town. Several smaller ponds and streams exist in different parts.

The soil of Prescott is good and capable of easy cultivation, producing the cereals, with the exception of wheat, in fair abundance, and varying from a gravelly to a clayey loam. The geology of the town is not of a character to require special notice here. Stone of a granitic character has been quarried in the eastern part of the town. The Springfield, Athol, and Northeastern Railroad, crosses a corner in the eastern part of the town.

SETTLEMENT.

Much of interest relating to the first settlement of the town of Prescott will be found in the histories of the towns of Pelham and New Salem (in this volume), from which the present town was formed.

It is altogether probable that the south part of Prescott, which was taken from Pelham, was first settled, as the latter town contained forty families in the year 1742, a date when the town of New Salem had but just commenced to receive settlers.

Among the first to settle in the present town of Prescott were the McConkeys (now Conkeys), McMullens (now Mel-lens), Grays, Berrys, Crossetts, and Peirces. Of the Conkeys there were brothers,—John, William, Alexander, and Thomas. The last three settled along the banks of the river, near "Bobbinville." John lived on Prescott Hill, near the present location of the Congregational parsonage. The old house used by William Conkey is still standing near the old "east cemetery," and bears upon the heavy stone which overhangs its ancient fire-place the inscription, neatly chiseled, "William Conkey, June ye 21st, 1776."

The McMullen family settled in the southeast part of the town, in what is now known as "Mellen Hollow." John Mellen lived there in the first part of the present century. These two families were probably the first to settle in the territory of Prescott, and are still represented in the town. The date of their settlement was about 1740.

The Berry family settled in the town about 1755. Their first settlement was made at Deerfield, in Franklin County, but they were compelled to leave there on account of the Indian troubles which attended the first settlement of that town. They then removed to Rutland, Mass., and finally settled on the old farm occupied by Betsey Berry, a descendant. The great-grandfather of the present John Berry was a cloth-weaver as well as a farmer, and had four sons,—James, Alexander, and two others, who went West. Alexander located on the old farm, and James on the Gilbert place. Alexander had four sons,—John, James, Locker, and Alexander. John settled on the old Berry place, and died there in January, 1873, at the age of eighty-four. John and Betsey, his children, still live in town, and are the only representatives of the Berry family left in the place.

William and two other members of the Crossett family came from the North of Ireland and settled in Pelham about the year 1750. One of them settled in the north part of the town, and William in the valley in the south part, now in Prescott. James Crossett, father of Liberty, now living in the town, passed his life on the original Crossett place, and was a man of influence and worth.

Daniel Gray was an early settler, and lived where Alden Reed now resides. He was a descendant of John Gray, who at an early date located in the west part of Pelham, and was one of the original proprietors of that town. Moses and Aaron Gray lived at an early day where George H. Allen now resides.

The Peirce family, now more numerous represented in the town than any other, is also one of the oldest. David Peirce came from England at an early day, and became one of the first settlers of the north part of the town. He served in the Revolutionary war from New Salem, which then included the north part of Prescott, and died in 1779, on his return from the army, before he reached his home. He was carried four days on a bier by his companions before he expired. He left four boys,—Alden, John, Caleb, and Alexander. John and Alexander removed to Maine; both afterward returned, Alexander dying soon after, and John going to Ohio. Alden removed to Leverett, but subsequently settled in Ohio.

Caleb was born about the year 1775, and lived in the old Peirce house. He was a farmer by occupation, and had a family of sixteen children,—four girls and twelve boys,—becoming the progenitor of a large number of the Peirce family of the present day. He was one of the agents appointed to secure the incorporation of the town of Prescott. Of his children, Appleton (2d), Madison, Clesson, David F., Pomeroy, and Caleb settled in the town, the first four of whom are still living there, and the other two being represented by their descendants.

John Pierce, of another family from Middlebury, settled in the closing years of the last century, and lived where H. N. Grover now lives. He was the father of Appleton Peirce (1st), now living at an advanced age.

Peleg Peirce, a half-brother of John, located in Prescott about 1812-15, and resided where John Vaughan now lives.

Simeon Pierce (still another family) was also one of the first settlers, and lived where Park Hannum now resides. A number of his descendants still live in the town.

A few of the other early settlers of the town deserve special mention:

Obadiah Cooley lived where F. B. Paige now resides, the first part of the present century, and John Mecklem, a descendant of one of the original proprietors of Pelham, lived, at the same time, where West C. Paige now resides.

Seth Peibles settled at an early day where Henry Grover now lives. His widow married a Mr. Savage, who lived near the original No. 4 school-house, that stood twenty rods east of the present main road, on the Jarva Shaw road.

Peleg Aldrich was born in New Salem, and settled in Prescott in the early part of the present century, where Wales Aldrich now lives. His sons, B. Whitman Aldrich and Wales Aldrich, still reside in town.

Jotham, Levi, and Amasa Leach also settled early, and lived on the Daniel K. Vaughan farm.

Buenos Ayres came to Prescott at an early date, and lived on the C. H. Gray farm. A Mr. Wright, father of Gad and Gaius Wright, also settled early, and lived where Madison Peirce now resides.

James Hathaway lived where Nelson Whittaker now resides, in the early part of the present century, and was a farmer. Roswell Jennings, from Middlebury, lived on the present David F. Peirce farm, about the same period; also John Atchinson, in "Atchinson Hollow," who also had one of the first four-wheeled wagons in town.

Jacob Sampson lived where J. N. Shaw's barn now stands, in the last part of the last century, and removed, in 1826, to Stamford, Vt. About the same period Timothy Upton, father of Samuel, Timothy, and Isaac, lived where David B. Lawless now lives.

Paul Haskins was one of the first settlers, and lived where L. H. Gaylord now resides. A number of his descendants still live in the town. Shadrack Haskins, also one of the first settlers, lived where G. L. Johnson now resides. Luke Haskins was here early, and settled where Uzziel Haskins now resides. His father, Joseph, lived where Elder Jones now resides.

Sylvester Titus came from Middlebury, and settled early where Algernon Peirce now lives. His son, Lucian, is still living in the town, at an advanced age.

Nathaniel Fish, also from Middlebury, settled at an early date where John Abbott now resides, and is also said to have had one of the first four-wheeled wagons ever used in the town. His descendants are still residents.

Amos Thomas was one of the first settlers, and lived where Eli W. Chapin now resides. John Lawless settled in the last part of the last century, and lived where Ira Alden now resides. Andrew Newhall settled in the north part of the town early, and lived where Ellis White now resides.

Barna Brigham was also an early and prominent settler, and lived on Prescott Hill, where Edwin Paige now resides. He was a justice of the peace, and in that capacity married a great many people; was also one of the agents appointed to procure the incorporation of the town.

Nymphas Stacy lived a little south of where John Woods now lives, in the last part of the last century, and was one of the first settlers. Jacob Gibbs also lived where Leonard Lincoln now lives, at an early day.

Moses Gray lived where George Allen now lives, as early as 1800. Simon Stockwell lived about the same time where W. C. Aldrich now resides.

The Eddy family settled at a very early day on the present Berry farm. The old house which they occupied was afterward moved to Prescott Hill, and occupied by John Atchinson. An old cellar marks its site.

Eden Briggs settled very early on the present farm of J. H. King, and Stephen Powers, at an early day, where Jason Powers now lives.

Nathan Vaughan came from Middlebury in the latter years of the last century, and settled near B. Franklin Vaughan's. His son Josiah was born about 1794, and lived on the place now owned by John Wood. He died at an advanced age. His descendants still reside in the town.

James and Shipman Shaw came from Middlebury, and settled, Shipman where Varnum E. Vaughan now lives, and James where Addison D. Thayer now lives.

Thomas Vaughan came early, and settled where Samuel Thrasher now lives. David Sloan located where Dr. George H. Lee afterward lived.

Amos Blackmer settled in Prescott about 1810, and located on the Daniel Gray farm. He died in 1820. His sons, Daniel and Peter, are still residents.

David Hunt was born in Worcester, and went from Heath to New Salem about 1808, and settled near the present Prescott line. He had three sons and a daughter, who reached maturity,—Samuel, Luther, Lorena, and Horace. Samuel lived in Prescott, where the "poor-farm" now is, at an early date, and now resides in Athol, at the advanced age of ninety years. Luther and Lorena remained in New Salem, and the latter now lives at Holly, N. Y. Horace was born Jan. 15, 1801, in New Salem, and resided there for thirty-six years. He lived in Prescott for nine years, engaging in store-keeping, and finally removed to New Salem, but retained his store in Prescott, and carried on business there for many years. He now resides in Enfield, and has attained a ripe old age.

Abel Gilbert came from Brookfield, and settled where Henry Grover now lives, about 1818-20.

TAVERNS.

Of the early taverns that have been kept in the town, mention may be made of a few. Probably the first was kept by William Conkey, in the old "Milo Abbott house," which is still standing near "Bobbinville." It was during the Revolutionary war and the Shays insurrection, and the latter commander, then a resident of that part of Pelham (now in the town of Prescott), is said to have mustered his first recruits at this ancient inn. The house was conveniently fitted for the purposes for which it was used, being two stories high, with capacious apartments, and has doubtless been the scene of many convivial gatherings.

Tradition says that another early inn was kept where the Congregational parsonage now stands, but by whom or at what date we are not informed. One of the first that existed in the north part of the town was kept by Capt. Jacob Sampson, where J. N. Shaw's barn now stands. Nathan Felton kept one for a good many years, in the first part of the present century, where L. S. Johnson now lives, on Prescott Hill. He was succeeded by a Mr. Hinds and Charles Scott.

About the same time Joseph Warren Hamilton kept a tavern on the hill, where Edwin Page now lives, and was succeeded for a short time by Noble Weeks.

The tavern kept longest in the town was one by John Atchinson, at "Atchinson Hollow," where Cheney Abbott afterward lived. He commenced soon after the incorporation of the town, and continued for many years. There is none now in town.

STORES.

The first stores were probably little better than trading-posts, no regular stocks being kept constantly. As the population and the necessities of the people increased, the more dignified "country store" sprang into existence. One of the first of these was by Peleg Canada, in the last part of the last century, near the present residence of Edwin Paige. Isaac Conkey kept one there some time after, then Joseph Warren Hamilton, and Hamilton & Brigham.

Robert and Samuel Crossett had a store in the "old Henry place," in the first part of the present century, and were succeeded by Samuel Henry, who kept it many years.

Stacy Lindsey had a store on Prescott Hill prior to the year 1820, and was succeeded by the firm of Brigham & Lindsey, who traded many years. Joseph Hodgkins came next, trading several years, and was succeeded by Charles Hodgkins, he by W. E. Johnson (now of Enfield), and he by Liberty Crossett, the present proprietor, in 1868.

John Atchinson had a store in the Cheney Abbott house, at the "Hollow," about 1823-24, and kept it a number of years. Allen Beaman also had one in Aldrich Hall, at the "Hollow," about 1852, and was succeeded by Eliakim Hill, Enos S. Richardson, and J. W. Adams.

At North Prescott, Elbridge Shaw had a store about 1830, and was succeeded by Alpheus Thomas, he by Thomas & Partridge, they by Thomas alone, and he by Frank Sampson until 1877, when L. K. Baker, the present proprietor, came in.

Horace Hunt erected and opened a store in 1837, about a mile west of North Prescott, and kept it until 1869.

PHYSICIANS.

Of the physicians who have practiced, the first was Dr. Nehemiah Hinds, as early as 1786, and into the present century. He erected, and for a long time occupied, the red house that stands opposite the store of Liberty Crossett, on Prescott Hill. His son Leonard practiced with him for a while, and continued after his death. A contemporary of Dr. Hinds was Dr. Isaac Powers, who lived in "Mellen Hollow."

Dr. Hubbard Vaughan was next in practice, and lived about the year 1819 where Joseph Stone now lives.

Dr. George H. Lee practiced about 1826, for a period of ten years, and lived south of the centre. He was a man of influence, and filled various positions of trust. Dr. David Hale practiced about 1855 for a short time, and was the last regular physician who resided in the town. Physicians from New Salem and other towns have often supplied the town.

MEN OF DISTINCTION.

Among the men of distinction which Prescott has produced are Judge Peleg Aldrich, of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, who was born here, and Hon. E. A. Thomas, also a native, who served in both branches of the Legislature with distinction. His brother, Rev. Chauncey Boardman Thomas, another native, is a church pastor in Vermont.

THE CIVIL ORGANIZATION.

dates from Jan. 28, 1822, when a tract of land about three miles long was taken off the south part of New Salem and added to the east parish of Pelham, and incorporated as the town of Prescott. The boundaries were described as follows:

"Beginning on the west line of New Salem, at the southwest corner of the lot No. 23, in the third division, now owned by Samuel Wood; from thence running east by the south line of that lot and the south line of Ebenezer and David C. Vaughan's farm to the southwest corner of David and Luther Hunt's farm; thence eastwardly on the line between said farm and Samuel H. Hunt's land, and on the south line of William Walker's land and the south line of the farm now occupied by Winslow Packard to the west line of Nathaniel Bangs' farm; thence southwardly and eastwardly by his line to Amos Martin's west line; thence south and east by the west and south line of his farm to the west line of the farm lately owned by Ebenezer Lincoln (now owned by Nymphas Stacy); thence southwardly by the west line thereof to the southwest corner; thence eastwardly on the south line until it comes to the highway that runs eastwardly on the south side of said farm; thence along the middle of said highway eastwardly and southwardly to the southwest corner of land owned by Varney Pearce; thence east on the south line to the southeast corner; thence north to the southwest corner of the lot on which Samuel Linzie now lives; thence east on the south line of that lot and on the south line of the lot on which Rufus Stacy lives to the east line of New Salem; then south and west, following the line of New Salem to the northeast corner of Pelham until it comes to the stream called the west branch of Swift River, being the line between the two parishes in Pelham; thence northwardly along the middle of said stream to the first-mentioned boundary on the west line of New Salem."

The name Prescott was conferred in honor of Col. William Prescott, of Peperell, who commanded the American forces at the battle of Bunker Hill.

The warrant for the first town-meeting was issued by Barna Brigham, a justice of the peace, Feb. 13, 1822, in compliance with the written request of Samuel Henry, Caleb Peirce, Nathan Felton, Abel Gilbert, Josiah Heminway, Proctor Peirce, Charles Staples, Stacy Lindsey, Chester Gray, Brigham Mills, and Joseph Hodgkins.

The meeting duly convened at the meeting-house March 4, 1822. Josiah Peirce was chosen moderator, and Chester Gray clerk. Barna Brigham, Caleb Peirce, and Nymphas Stacy were chosen selectmen, and Moses Gray, Henry Haskins, and Josiah Peirce assessors. At an adjourned meeting, held April 1st, minor officers were chosen.

The following persons have filled the principal town offices, and served as representatives in the General Court:

SELECTMEN.

- 1822-23.—Barna Brigham, Caleb Peirce, Nymphas Stacy.
- 1824.—Caleb Peirce, Josiah Peirce, Jacob Gibbs.
- 1825.—Caleb Peirce, Moses Gray, Henry Haskins.
- 1826-28.—Nathan Felton, Samuel Henry, Josiah Miller.
- 1829.—Stephen Snow, Henry Haskins, Jacob Gibbs.
- 1830.—James Crossett, Jacob Gibbs, Henry Haskins.
- 1831.—James Crossett, Danforth Abbott, Thomas Conkey.
- 1832-34.—Danforth Abbott, Jacob Gibbs, Nathan Felton.
- 1835-37.—Roswell Allen, Joel Fish, Thomas Conkey.
- 1838.—Jacob Gibbs, Andrew Newhall, Elisha Haskins.
- 1839.—Joel Fish, David Mellen, Nathan Vaughan.
- 1840.—Joel Fish, John Gilbert, Josiah Miller.
- 1841.—Joel Fish, John Gilbert, Alpheus Thomas.
- 1842.—John Gilbert, Nathan Vaughan, Thomas Conkey.
- 1843-44.—Roswell Allen, Christopher Paige, Ansel Oaks.
- 1845.—Andrew Hyde, Alfred W. Gray, Ellis Thayer.
- 1846.—Andrew Hyde, Eli W. Chapin, Josiah Heminway.
- 1847.—Eli W. Chapin, Ansel Oaks, Solomon Sibley.
- 1848.—Josiah Miller, Alonzo W. Freeman, David Lincoln.
- 1849.—David Lincoln, Josiah Heminway, Jr., Jason M. Hanson.
- 1850-51.—Andrew Hyde, James W. Hunt, Ansel Oaks.
- 1852.—Andrew Hyde, James W. Hunt, Joseph P. Vaughan.
- 1853.—James W. Hunt, Alonzo W. Hunt, Ellis Thayer.
- 1854.—Ellis Thayer, James W. Hunt, Alonzo W. Freeman.
- 1855.—Alonzo W. Freeman, Ellis Thayer, Edward S. Estey.
- 1856.—J. W. Hunt, Cheney Abbott, Liberty Crossett.
- 1857.—Joel Fish, Christopher Paige, E. A. Thomas.
- 1858-59.—Joel Fish, E. A. Thomas, A. W. Freeman.
- 1860.—Eli W. Chapin, Roswell H. Allen, Joseph P. Vaughan.
- 1861.—Eli W. Chapin, R. H. Allen, E. A. Thomas.
- 1862.—William H. Winter, J. M. Piper, C. H. Gray.
- 1863-66.—William H. Winter, F. B. Paige, C. H. Gray.
- 1867.—C. H. Gray, F. B. Paige, O. J. Powers.
- 1868.—Eli W. Chapin, Lucian Titus, Leonard Lincoln.
- 1869-70.—Eli W. Chapin, Lucian Titus, J. D. Barnes.
- 1871.—C. H. Gray, V. V. Vaughan, L. S. Johnson.
- 1872.—V. V. Vaughan, J. M. Harrington, Nelson Whitaker.
- 1873-74.—C. H. Gray, M. W. Abbott, George L. Johnson.
- 1875.—J. M. Harrington, G. M. Webber, E. Goodman.
- 1876.—C. H. Gray, G. L. Johnson, L. S. Johnson.
- 1877.—Warren M. Aldrich, H. N. Grover, L. H. Gaylord.
- 1878.—L. H. Gray, L. S. Johnson, V. V. Vaughan.

TOWN-CLERKS.

1822, Chester Gray; 1824, Josiah Peirce; 1827, Chester Gray; 1828, George H. Lee; 1829, David Mellen; 1833, Simon Stockwell; 1833, Samuel Henry; 1841, Alfred W. Gray; 1846, David Mellen; 1849, Alpheus Thomas; 1850, Samuel Henry; 1855, E. S. Haskins; 1868, H. B. Hodgkins; 1869, Fred. N. Peirce.

REPRESENTATIVES.

1824, Josiah Peirce; 1829-30, Samuel Henry; 1831, Simon Stockwell; 1832, James Crossett; 1833-34, Danforth Abbott; 1835-36, David Mellen; 1837, Samuel Henry; 1838-39, Roswell Allen; 1840, Joseph Hodgkins; 1842-43, B. W. Aldrich; 1847-48, Andrew Hyde; 1850, Rev. Nelson B. Jones; 1851, Liberty Crossett; 1852, Lucian Titus; 1854, Wm. H. Winter; 1858, L. Crossett; 1872, Wales Aldrich.

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

PRESCOTT POST-OFFICE

is situated on what was known as the "East Hill" of Pelham. Here was the centre of the east parish of Pelham, where was located the first meeting-house within the present limits of Prescott. The village consists of a few dwellings, the Congregational Church and parsonage, and a store and post-office. The latter was established about 1822 or 1823, and the first postmaster was Barna Brigham. He was followed in turn by Stacy Lindsey, Dexter N. Richards, Chas. Hodgkins, W. E. Johnson, and Liberty Crossett, the present incumbent, who was appointed in 1868.

NORTH PRESCOTT POST-OFFICE

is situated in the north part of the town, and lies partly within the limits of Prescott and partly in New Salem. It consists of a Methodist Church and parsonage (which are in New Salem), a Baptist Church, which has been recently devoted to trading purposes, a store and post-office, and several dwellings. The post-office was established in 1844 or 1845, and Horace Hunt was the first postmaster, and kept the office for a number of years in his store, which stood about a mile west of North Prescott. He was succeeded for a short time by S. L. Haskins, and subsequently held the office again. It was finally removed to North Prescott, and E. A. Thomas became postmaster, and was followed by Frank Sampson and L. K. Baker, the present appointee.

ATCHINSON HOLLOW is a hamlet in the northwest part of the town, of some importance. It consists now of a few dwellings only, but in times past has been the seat of a tavern and several stores.

THE EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS

of the town were for a time identified with those of the mother-towns, and reference is made to those towns for much of interest relating to the early schools of Prescott. The first school-house built in the town was probably in 1754, in accordance with a vote passed at that date. Its location was on "East Hill," now Prescott Hill. School had been kept as early as the year 1746, at the dwelling of Alexander Conkey, near "Bobbinsville."

Another early school-house stood about where School No. 1 now stands, early in the present century. It was destroyed by fire sixty years ago. Some of the early teachers were Caleb Peirce, Tristram Aldrich, James Kellogg, Josiah Peirce, James Ballard, Polly Smith, and Polly Hathaway, the latter of whom is said to have taught ex-President Franklin Pierce his A, B, C's.

At the present time there are five school districts, and the old "district system" is yet in vogue. The whole is under the control of a committee of three, one of whom is elected annually for three years. The number of scholars in attendance is about 100, and the amount of the last annual appropriation was $500.

CHURCHES.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The inhabitants of the south part of the town were connected with the Established Church at Pelham Heights for a long time after the first settlement, and those in the north part worshiped with the New Salem church. But the great distance which the people were compelled to go to attend divine worship induced a division, and on June 28, 1786, the eastern part of Pelham, with a portion of New Salem, was incorporated as the east parish of Pelham.

A church was organized soon after and a meeting-house erected, but the records are meagre. The articles of faith of the new church were first signed by Moses Gray, John Lindsey, Aaron Gray, Patrick McMillen, Daniel Gray, John Hamilton, Alexander Berry, William Berry, James C. McMillen, John McMillen, and Thomas McMillen. Other members of the church, a little later, were Isaac Baker, Jeremiah Gray, James Lindsey, William Lindsey, Joel Gray, Israel Crossett, and their respective families.

The first regular minister was Rev. Matthias Cazier, a graduate of Princeton College in 1785. He was installed March 23, 1794. Prior to that time the church had been ministered to by supplies, and by the pastors of the west parish of Pelham. On the date of the installation of Mr. Cazier, a protest against the same was presented to the council by William Conkey, Minonder Conkey, William Cowan, Thomas Conkey, Joseph Aiken, Daniel C. Gray, Joel Conkey, and Samuel Sloan, the reasons assigned being "want of acquaintance, difference of religious sentiment, and lordly ways." Mr. Cazier seems to have had a stormy time, for on June 22, 1795, charges were preferred against him by Dr. Nehemiah Hinds for untruthfulness and profanity, the latter consisting in his saying that, under certain circumstances, he would say, as another man did, "O Lord! damn such damnable doctrines." After some years of controversy, Mr. Cazier was dismissed by council on March 14, 1798.

The second pastor of the church is said to have been Rev. Sebastian C. Cabot, a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1797, but the records do not indicate either the date of his installation or dismissal.

About this period for some years the society remained inactive. It was not revived until after the incorporation of the town, when a new church was formed at the house of Christopher Paige on Jan. 15, 1823, the first deacon being John Sears.

No minister was settled for several years after the reorganization. Rev. Ebenezer Brown, of Brimfield, Mass., was the first pastor of the revived church. He was a graduate of Yale College, in the class of 1813, was installed Oct. 17, 1827, and dismissed by council March 25, 1835. During his ministry an extensive revival occurred, and the church was greatly enlarged. His successor was Rev. Job Cushman, who was installed Oct. 28, 1835, and dismissed Oct. 1, 1839. At the same time his successor, Rev. Francis Wood, was installed, and was dismissed by council March 8, 1848. The church then remained several years without a pastor.

Rev. Solomon B. Gilbert was next installed, Feb. 23, 1853, and dismissed by council Jan. 25, 1854. The next pastor was Rev. David Bancroft, who commenced his labors Jan. 1, 1858, and, after a long, faithful, and popular ministry, died "in harness," March 11, 1875. The present pastor is Rev. T. S. Norton, who commenced preaching regularly July 1, 1875, and has been employed for stated periods since. The present membership is 49; of the Sabbath-school, about 50; number of volumes in library, several hundred; superintendent of Sabbath-school, L. S. Johnson.

The original meeting-house was used on its first site for many years, and was afterward moved to the location of the present one. It was taken down and the present edifice erected in the spring of 1848, and dedicated in June following.

BAPTIST.

This denomination was first established Jan. 24, 1772, when a society was formed about the same time. They erected a church edifice opposite the "cemetery on the hill," in the north part of the town. This building was taken down early in the present century and removed to New Salem, near the town-line, and about sixty rods north of the late location of the Baptist Church. It was taken down about 1834-35, and another one erected on the border between the two towns, and called the "New Baptist Church." The building is now devoted to mercantile uses.

The society disappeared as an organization in 1876. The first pastor was Ebenezer Smith. Others have been Rev. Samuel Bigelow, Josiah Orcutt, Joel Butler, Paul Davis, Calvin Orcutt, Asa Niles, Stephen S. Nelson, Thomas Rand, — Dwyer, George Daland, John Shepardson, Alden B. Eggleston, Elijah Fish, — Baker, and the regular pastor, Wm. A. Worthington, who officiated about 1863.

THE METHODISTS

worship with those of New Salem. The meeting-house is within the borders of the latter town. The church was formed in the year 1829.

UNITED BRETHREN.

This denomination was established in the east part of the town about 1855-56, and held meetings in the meeting-house that had been erected there about 1838 by Jason Powers, and in which occasional Methodist services had been held.

A church was organized, and flourished until 1865 or '66. Of the pastors and preachers there have been D. S. Caldwell, who officiated for about two years, and a Mr. Briggs.

BURIAL-PLACES

The oldest burial-place is situated in the west part of the town, near "Bobbinvile," is still in a good state of preservation, and contains the remains of many of the earliest settlers. It was laid out in 1744, in conformity to a vote passed on April 26th of that year, to the following effect:

"Voted that there be one acre of land Fenced With a Good Stone Wall, and also that Robert Pebels, Samuel Gray, and Robert Lothridge over see ye Building of ye sd Wall att their own Charge."

That vote was rescinded, and in its place it was

"Voted yt ye Buring Place be fenced With Good five Rail fence, ye Reals ten feet Longe, and twelve Lengths to Each Quarter."

This was probably the first fence put around the yard, and was built by John Conkey for £5 10s.

Among the tombstones are those of John McCrelis, died 1767; William Conkey, Nov. 5, 1788, aged seventy years; Margaret Taylor, 1781; John Conkey, April 15, 1784, in his seventy-sixth year; James Berry, 1782, in his sixty-seventh year, a "ruling elder;" Joshua Conkey, son of Capt. John Conkey, April 12, 1790; Robert Maklem, Oct. 5, 1780, in his sixty-seventh year; Andrew Maklem, Sept. 25, 1783, in his eightieth year; James Peebles, March 6, 1787; and Capt. Isaac Gray, Sept. 9, 1786.

To the left of the principal entrance is interred the Rev. David Bancroft, one of the pastors of the Congregational Church. His monument bears the following inscription:

"REV. DAVID BANCROFT, for twenty years pastor of Cong'l church in Willington, Conn., and of the Cong'l church in Prescott for sixteen years.

"Born Feb'y 10, 1809. Died Mar. 11, 1875.

"A workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Tim. ii. 15."

The next ground in point of age lies on the hill above the mill of Eli W. Chapin, in the north part of the town. It was probably first used by the Baptists when they established themselves near that point, in 1772. It now comprises about an acre and a half of land, and contains but few stones, of which the oldest are those of Silas Haskins, died 1788; Jacob Trask, 1794; and Joseph Packard, Oct. 25, 1800, in his seventy-third year.

The burying-ground in the rear of the town-house, comprising about one and a quarter acres, was laid out about 1838 or 1839, and is still in use. The first person buried there was Eliza Ann Titus, who died March 4, 1840.

The ground near the brick meeting-house contains about an acre, and was accepted by the town, April 5, 1847.

NOTES.

After the incorporation of the town, a long contest ensued between the north and the south parts in relation to the proper place for holding town-meetings. In 1826 it was voted to hold one-half of the town-meetings at "the hall of John Atchinson, innholder, in Prescott." In 1833 a committee of non-residents was chosen to find the town centre, and to locate the place for the erection of a town-house. The committee found the centre "to be Rounceville Peirce's land, about twenty rods east of the town road that leads by Moses Gray's, and about twenty rods north of the line formerly between New Salem and Pelham," and as the proper place for the location of a town-house, "at the guide-post at the corner of the road north of John Berry's, on the north side of the road leading to New Salem." The report of the committee was not adopted, but after a few years of controversy the present neat town-house was erected in the fall of 1838. In 1846, John Atchinson presented the hearse-house to the town.

"The "poor-farm" was purchased about 1863 of Euclid Owen for $1800. It is situated in the north part of the town.

The oldest houses now standing in the town are those of Jason Powers, the Milo Abbott house (old Conkey place), Nathan Vaughan house, and the poor-farm house (early occupied by Gilbert Dean). The oldest persons living are Betsey Vaughan, aged ninety-five; Widow John Thrasher, aged ninety; John P. Peirce, over eighty-two years of age; Appleton Peirce (No. 1), aged eighty-two; B. Whitman Aldrich, aged eighty-one; and Appleton Peirce (2d), aged seventy-six.

INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The principal occupation of the inhabitants of the town has been agriculture. Various pursuits of a mechanical and manufacturing nature have, however, been followed from time to time.

John Hoar had one of the first saw-mills on the Swift River, two miles north of "Bobbinvile," and a grist-mill stood where Joseph N. Shaw's blacksmith shop now stands, run by Amos Thomas, at a very early day. Josiah Heminway also had one of the first mills, south of where Uzziel Haskins now lives. A man named Cannon also had a grist-mill in the east part of the town, the last part of last century, and Asa Moore manufactured batting in the grist-mill. Dexter and David Hathaway manufactured carriages early in the present century, near where Nelson Whittaker now lives. Gregory Ellis and Samuel White also engaged in cloth-dressing about the same time where Joseph N. Shaw's blacksmith shop now is.

About 1826, Heminway & White erected a grist-mill in the north part of the town, and operated it many years. Eli W. Chapin succeeded to the business for several years, then Asa Moore, James Fitz, Alonzo Percival, and finally Moore again.

Pomeroy Peirce built the saw-mill now owned and run by Eli W. Chapin, in the north part of the town, about 1828, and ran it until his death, in 1855. The proprietors since have been Alden Peirce, his son, the widow Pomeroy Peirce (run by Wm. H. Winter), and Mr. Chapin, who has run it for upward of ten years.

In 1836, Appleton Peirce (2d) and Madison Peirce established a saw-mill opposite the present residence of the former, and ran it together until 1848, since which time it has been operated by Peirce & Son, Fred. N. Peirce, the present town clerk, having joined his father, Appleton (2d), in the enterprise. In 1864 a circular saw was placed in the mill, and it now turns out 100,000 feet of lumber annually.

A number of other enterprises also exist. Theodore F. Cook has a saw-mill at "Pelham Hollow," which was erected in 1878 to supply the place of one destroyed by fire in the same year. F. B. Paige is successfully engaged in making vinegar on an extensive scale in the south part of the town. A cheese-factory also exists in that section which has been in operation for ten years. In the east part of the town are Barrow's Mills, owned by Mr. Osgood, who has a grist-mill and soap-stone factory. A new mill was erected in 1878. In the same part of the town Foster Brown has a saw- and planing-mill, and is engaged in making boxes of various kinds. Bailey & Goodman are engaged in quarrying granite.

THE MILITARY RECORD

of Prescott, as a distinct town, comprehends but few of the early wars. Of those who went to the Revolutionary war may be mentioned Alexander Conkey, Capt. Isaac Gray, Joel Gray, David Peirce, John Atchinson, Stephen Powers, and Jesse Aldrich (who served at Ticonderoga).

With the Shays rebellion the people of the town are said to have been in sympathy, and many of them participated in the insurrection. Jacob Sampson was one of the principal of these. At the time of the uprising Daniel Shays, the recognized leader of the movement, lived within the present limits of the town, occupying the house where Ansel Johnson now lives. Here the first councils were held, and the first troops were mustered at the inn of William Conkey, near "Bobbinville," now best known as the "Milo Abbott house."

To the war of 1812 there went from the present territory of Prescott, Jno. T. Conkey, Samuel Sampson, Caleb Peirce, Isaac Upton, Andrew Newhall, Chester Gregg, Levi Davis; and Samuel and Luther Hunt from New Salem, near the Prescott line.

In the late Rebellion the town made a distinct and creditable record, promptly furnishing men and means. The following persons served in the army:

Lucian M. Titus, Dexter M. Vaughan, Daniel Lombard, John Abbott, F. William Fawcett, Henry S. Upton, John W. Upton, William A. Stockwell, Collis W. Vaughan, Fannum Lindsey, James P. Little, William E. Caswell, Dexter Oaks, Isaac Powers, William H. Oaks, Alphonso Oaks, Whitman A. Aldrich, Horace Lindsey, Henry A. Peirce, Simon M. Stockwell, David J. Oaks, Marcus E. Vaughan, Jason B. Cowan, James J. Woodard, William Akers, Henry O. Oaks, Martin S. Vaughan, Lyman Gibbs, Augustus Upton, Levi G. Osborn, Darbey Fakey, Lawrence McCarthy, Frederick Clapp, Charles Saunz, Merrick C. Bliss, Simon Gilbert, Orin S. Oaks, William T. Upton, J. E. Smitherly, Charles F. Warner, William M. Tourtelott, George H. Upton, Almon A. Powers, Forest E. Hanson, Oscar A. Titus, James P. Little.

For assistance rendered, the writer desires to return thanks to Appleton Pierce, first and second, B. Whitman Aldrich, Horace Hunt, John Berry, D. G. Blackmer, F. N. Peirce, Liberty Crossett, John W. Vaughan, and other citizens.

THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY
MASSACHUSETTS
WINTER ILLUSTRATIONS